Also used in real-time for law enforcement to view the details concerning issued protection orders. Cases in OPOR receive unique case numbers which tie all documents relating to a particular order together. An OPOR case entry is not an official copy of the protection order, which are printed orders with a judge's signature and retained at the court in accordance with each court's retention schedules. Judges and law enforcement will periodically refer to an OPOR case to identify any recent, expired orders when dealing with repeat protective order cases. Agency Web Link: <hr/> <table border="0"> <tr> <td style="width: 50%;">Confidential Description</td> <td style="width: 50%;">Vital Description</td> </tr> <tr> <td> </td> <td> </td> </tr> </table> <hr/> <table border="0"> <thead> <tr> <th style="text-align: left;">Media</th> <th style="text-align: left;">Retention Period</th> <th style="text-align: left;">Retention Justification</th> <th style="text-align: left;">Method of Disposal</th> </tr> </thead> <tbody> <tr> <td>Machine Readable</td> <td>5 years after expiration or cancelling of the protective order.</td> <td>Follows in line with Federal records-keeping practices for protection orders and NCIC databases.
