It is extremely unfortunate that the records of the state dental board should fail to show the facts in relation to this transaction. Section 1318 provided that a record of its proceedings should be kept, which record, at all reasonable times, shall be open to public inspection. There is nothing contained in the record in relation to the filing of the application, the meeting of the board and the granting of this license, except the payment of the $5.00 fee, and if it were not for the license itself, together with the information given by affidavits and otherwise from members of the board, we could arrive at but one conclusion and that is that no license had been granted. However, from all the above, and particularly from the fact that the license purports absolute verity upon its face and from the affidavits and statements made by the members of the board present at the time the license was granted, I must conclude that the license is a valid existing one.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—LIMITATION OF THE AMOUNT OF BONDS THAT MAY BE ISSUED BY SUCH BOARD FOR THE PURPOSE OF OBTAINING OR IMPROVING SCHOOL PROPERTY—DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MINERVA VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The amount of bonds that a board of education of a school district may issue in any current year under section 7629 General Code for the purpose of obtaining or improving school property is limited to a tax at the rate of 2 mills upon the tax duplicate valuation upon which the school taxes of the district for the previous school year were extended and collected; and therefore, an issue of bonds provided for by a resolution of a board of education of a school district under said section under date of February 23, 1917, is limited as to the amount produced by a tax at the rate of 2 mills on the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property of the school district for the year 1916.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Minerva village school district for the purpose of completing, furnishing and equipping the new high school building erected within said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Minerva village school district relating to the above bond issue.

The only question touching the validity of this bond issue is as to whether the amount of said issue, on the facts disclosed by said transcript, does not exceed the maximum limitation as to the amount prescribed by section 7629 General Code under authority of which said bond issue is provided.

Section 7629 General Code authorizes the board of education of a school district to issue bonds for the purpose of obtaining or improving school property without a vote of the electors of the school district, subject to limitation as to amount prescribed therein, as follows:

> "provide that no greater amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, for the year next preceding such issue."

The transcript shows that the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property of said school district for the year 1917 is $2,098,680, and that the tax duplicate valuation of the school district for the year 1916 was $1,822,430.

Inasmuch, as disclosed by the transcript, it appears that the board of education of this district has not provided for the issue of any bonds during the current school year, other than those here under consideration, it is apparent that the question whether or not the amount of this bond issue exceeds the maximum as to amount prescribed by section 7629 General Code, depends on whether we are required to consider the tax duplicate valuation of the school district for the year 1917 or the tax duplicate valuation for the year 1916 in computing the amount of the maximum limitation.

My predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, in an opinion rendered by him November 8, 1909, on this question, upon consideration of the above quoted statutory provisions, then found in section 3994 Revised Statutes, as well as other statutory provisions touching the question, says:

> "I conclude from all the foregoing that the 'preceding year' referred to in section 3994 R. S. is the year ending on the 31st day of August next preceding the date of the contemplated issue of bonds. For similar reasons the year in which boards of education are prohibited from issuing bonds exceeding in amount a tax of two mills, etc., is the year beginning on September 1, the day following the expiration of the year for which the tax, upon which the two mills is to be estimated, was levied. The duplicate which is to be employed in estimating the two mills is that certified to the county treasurer in the October preceding the thirty-first of August above referred to."

The conclusion reached by Mr. Denman with respect to the construction of the above provision of section 7629 General Code, if correct, required the board of education of Minerva school district to limit the amount of the bond issue according to the tax duplicate valuation of that school district for the year 1916.

I am of the opinion that Mr. Denman was correct in the conclusion reached by him with respect to the construction of the statutory provisions here under consideration. Since Mr. Denman rendered the above opinion, the supreme court has held that the "year" within which boards of education may issue bonds under section 7629, subject to the limitation therein prescribed, means the school fiscal year beginning September 1, of a given calendar year and ending on the 31st day of August of the succeeding calendar year.

Rabe v. Board of Education, 88 O. S. 403, 415.

The word "year" having been used more than once in the above quoted language of sec 7629, and in the same connection, it is to be presumed that the word was used in the same sense in both instances.

Rhodes v. Weldy, 46 O. S. 234.

The issue of bonds here under consideration is provided for by a resolution of the board of education of Minerva village school district, adopted by the board of education at a regular meeting under date of February 23, 1918, during the current school year which began September 1, 1917, and which ends August 31, 1918. The limitation of two mills prescribed in section 7629 is therefore to be computed upon the tax duplicate valuation for the school fiscal year beginning September 1, 1916, and ending August 31, 1917; that is, upon the duplicate valuation upon which taxes for the school year 1916-17 were extended and collected. This duplicate is the one which was transmitted to the county treasurer in October, 1916. A tax computed at the rate of two mills on the tax duplicate valuation of the school district for the year 1916 produces the sum of $3,644.86 as a maximum amount which under section 7629 General Code the board of education of Minerva village school district is authorized to issue bonds under section 7629 General Code during the current school year.

The amount provided for in the resolution of the board of education of this school district is in excess of the legal maximum, and the bonds thereby provided for are to the extent of this excess illegal and void. Inasmuch as the resolution providing for the purchase of these bonds does not indicate any intention on your part to purchase any less amount of bonds than the whole amount thereof provided for in the resolution of the board of education, I do not deem it necessary to discuss the question whether or not under this resolution bonds may be issued and sold by the board of education up to the legal maximum amount above noted, and under the circumstances I have no discretion to do otherwise than to advise you not to purchase the above issue of bonds. For the reasons above stated, said bond issue should therefore be rejected.

The transcript is herewith returned. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO ERECT HOSPITAL FOR THE TREATMENT OF PERSONS SUFFERING WITH TRACHOMA EITHER UNDER THE LAWS RELATING TO THE INDIGENT POOR OR CONTAGIOUS DISEASES—DUTY OF TOWNSHIP AND MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES.

1. When viewed from the standpoint of the indigent poor, the county commissioners would have no authority to provide a temporary hospital to treat persons suffering from a disease known as trachoma, for the reason that the relief needed is temporary in nature and not permanent.

2. When viewed from the standpoint of a contagious disease, the county commissioners seem to have no authority in law to provide a temporary hospital to treat persons suffering from a disease known as trachoma. This duty rests upon the township and municipal authorities.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1918.

HON. CHAS. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 25, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Recently it developed that there was an epidemic of trachoma in the schools of the Waverly village.
> The village board of education employed a physician and nurse under the provisions of section 7692, General Code.
> Now, it develops further that there are numerous cases of trachoma among older people, and some scattered throughout the whole county, and the conclusion is that this disease cannot be entirely stamped out unless the cases of older persons, as well as school children, are cured.
> A few days ago a representative of the national department of health and a representative of the state department of health visited us, and a proposition was made that the national department would furnish a physician, and the state department furnish a nurse and the necessary equipment and medicines, if the local authorities would furnish a temporary hospital. It was stated that a suite of about four rooms would be needed, these to be furnished with beds, or cots, and the necessary tables, chairs, etc., and provision made to feed the patients during the time of treatment.
> Now, the question arises as to the authority of the local authorities to appropriate the money for this temporary hospital.
> It is, of course, not proper for the Waverly school board to assume the entire burden, as many cases are outside the district.
> Queries:
> 1. Can the board of county commissioners, in any manner, assume and pay any part of the expense of such temporary hospital?
> 2. Can the board of commissioners and board of education jointly pay the expense of such temporary hospital?
> 3. I presume the state board of health might direct each township and village to take steps to combat this disease, under section 1237, General Code; but it is now desired to establish this temporary hospital at the central point, and have all cases brought there; but as townships are always short of funds, it is hardly practicable to proceed in that way. If the county could pay the expense, it would be most practicable."

Your question is, whether under the circumstances stated by you your board of county commissioners would be authorized under the law to provide a temporary hospital and equip the same, to take care of those persons suffering with trachoma.

It is doubtful if our statutes are broad enough to enable your county commissioners to provide a hospital and equip the same for said purposes or to assume and pay any part of the expense of such temporary hospital. Of course under the provisions of sections 3127 et seq. G. C., the county commissioners have authority to erect a hospital and levy a tax to provide for the same, provided the matter is first submitted to a vote of the people, but this in nowise takes care of the matter you have under consideration.

As a fundamental principle it can be stated that the furnishing of support or relief to the needy poor rests upon the townships and municipal corporations of which the needy poor are residents. Section 3476 G. C. makes such provision and reads as follows:

> "Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it."

When we note section 3480 G. C. we find that this principle applies not only to the needy poor in general, but to those who are in need of the services of a physician or a surgeon. The first sentence of this section reads:

> "When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief, or the services of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. * * *"

The provision of this chapter in the first instance controls in the furnishing of relief to the needy poor. However, it is to be further noted that the townships and municipal corporations may be relieved of the duty of furnishing relief to the needy poor, under section 2544 G. C. This section reads as follows:

> "In any county having an infirmary, when the trustee of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

This section provides that in the event the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that a certain person shall become a county charge, "they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease."

Under the phrase "or otherwise," the county commissioners have authority to furnish what is usually called outdoor relief; that is, making such provisions that the persons becoming county charges may be taken care of, not in the county infirmary proper, but in some manner outside the county infirmary.

Therefore, under section 2544 G. C., if the persons suffering with trachoma could be placed under the jurisdiction of the county, it would undoubtedly be possible for the county commissioners to make provision for a temporary hospital, in order that they might care for said persons outside the infirmary proper.

The question now to be considered is whether the persons mentioned by you could be taken over by the county under section 2544, supra, and the township be relieved from furnishing relief to them. This section is peculiar, in that it makes provision for the superintendent of the infirmary to pass upon the qualifications of a person for whom application is made by the township trustees to become a county charge, and yet does not state under what conditions a person may become a county charge upon an application by the township trustees.

However, I believe section 3488 G. C. indirectly throws some light on this question. Said section reads as follows:

> "When the trustees of a township in a county having no county infirmary, are satisfied that a person in such township ought to have public relief they shall afford such relief at the expense of their township as in their opinion the necessities of the person require. When more than temporary relief is required, they shall post a notice in three public places in the township, specifying a time and place at which they will receive proposals for the maintenance of such person, which notice shall be posted at least seven days before the day therein named for receiving proposals."

While this section does not particularly relate to admitting persons as county charges, yet it indicates that so long as merely temporary relief is needed, the township trustees or the proper officers of the municipal corporation must furnish relief, and that a person would not be entitled to become a county charge unless something more than temporary relief is required.

If this view be correct, the persons in your county needing relief would not be such as could be made county charges under section 2544, supra, and therefore what might be termed outdoor relief could not be furnished them by the county commissioners, under said section. So we are compelled to look elsewhere for authority, if any, to the county commissioners to equip and maintain a temporary hospital.

If your county has a corporation or association organized for charitable purposes, the county commissioners might proceed under section 3138-1 G. C. (103 O. L. 67), which reads in part as follows:

> "That the board of county commissioners of any county may enter into an agreement with a corporation or association, organized for charitable purposes, * * * for the care of the indigent sick and disabled, * * * upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between said commissioners, * * *."

Section 3138-2 G. C. provides for the levying of a tax to take care of the expenses incident to such an arrangement.

I might also call your attention to section 2502 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Except in counties containing hospitals supported by public funds, the commissioners of any county, in their discretion, may pay to a hospital organized or incorporated for purely charitable purposes, in which the indigent poor of the county may receive free of charge needed medical and surgical treatment, a sum not to exceed twenty-five hundred dollars each year. * *. *"

However, it is hardly likely that your county commissioners could come under this section.

In an opinion rendered by me to Hon. Harry D. Smith, prosecuting attorney, Xenia, Ohio, on August 10, 1917, and found in Vol. II of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 1468, I discussed the provisions of this section, and therefore refer you to said opinion if you should desire to consider whether or not your county commissioners might be able to take advantage of its provisions.

Of course if your county commissioners are authorized, under any of the provisions above set forth or under any other provision of the General Code, to take the steps set out by you, they would then have authority to provide for the necessary cost and expense of the same under section 2530 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "When in any county the funds applicable for the support of the poor are insufficient, the county commissioners may levy for such purpose in addition to those otherwise authorized any rate not exceeding six-tenths of a mill on the dollar of valuation."

The provisions of law above noted apply merely to the indigent poor, and even though, under any of the above provisions, the county commissioners could proceed to carry out the matter set out in your communication and pay for the same from the funds of the county, it would only be for the benefit of the indigent poor of the county and not for those who might be able to pay for the services of a physician.

In the opinion above referred to, I made some observations as to who might be considered indigent under our statutes relating to indigent poor.

Thus far I have viewed the question from the standpoint of relief furnished to the indigent poor of a county. It might be considered in the light of a contagious disease, inasmuch as the disease mentioned by you is contagious. But when viewed from this angle, we find no provisions in the statutes that would warrant the county commissioners in paying out money for a temporary hospital.

Section 4428 G. C. provides for a hospital or place of confinement and reads as follows:

> "When complaint is made or a reasonable belief exists that an infectious or contagious disease prevails in a house or other locality which has not been so reported, the board shall cause such house or locality to be inspected by its health officer, and on discovering that such infectious or contagious disease exists, the board may, as it deems best, send the person so diseased to a quarantine hospital or other place provided for such persons, or may restrain them and others exposed within such house or locality from intercourse with other persons, and prohibit ingress and egress to or from such premises."

This section applies merely to cities and villages.

In the decision rendered by the circuit court in Turner v. City of Toledo, 15 C. C. 627, we find the following in the second branch of the syllabus:

> "The board of health of a city, or its health officer with the approval or ratification of the board, may enter into a lawful contract for nursing and caring for the sick and for the use of premises occupied as a temporary hospital."

Under the provisions of said section 4428 G. C. and the decision of the circuit court above referred to, the board of health of a city can equip a temporary hospital and the municipality is liable for the expenses thereof.

Section 3394 G. C. makes provision in reference to township boards of health as follows:

"Township boards of health shall have the same duties, powers and jurisdiction, within the township and outside of any municipality as by law are imposed upon or granted to boards of health in municipalities, * * *."

Under this section it appears that township boards of health can provide a temporary hospital and the township trustees are liable for the cost and expense thereof.

Section 1237 G. C. provides that the state board of health, now the commissioner of health, may make and enforce orders in local matters when emergency exists. But this section further states:

"* * * In such cases the necessary expense incurred shall be paid by the city, village or township for which the services are rendered."

Hence viewing this matter in the light of the disease being a contagious one, there seems to be no provision whereby the county might equip and maintain a temporary hospital and pay for the same from a county fund. The reasoning herein would apply to the county commissioners' acting jointly with the board of education in equipping and maintaining a temporary hospital.

I am aware that the suggestions herein made are not very satisfactory in the way of taking care of the situation which confronts your county, but they are as definite and certain as it is possible for me to make them under the provisions of our statutes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY AND D. W. McGRATH.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department for approval the contract entered into on April 25, 1918, between D. W. McGrath and the board of trustees of the Ohio state university for the construction and completion of an addition to Lord hall and Kiln house on the Ohio state university campus, as covered by items 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 16, 17 of the form of proposal, dated April 3, 1918, submitted by said D. W. McGrath, in the sum of $18,382.00. At the same time you submitted a bond securing said contract.

Finding the contract to be in compliance with law and having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there is money in the state treasury available for the purpose of said contract, I have this day approved the same and filed the same, together with the bond in the office of the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—EFFECT OF NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS THAT BUILDING MATERIAL IS TO BE CHANGED.

A notice given to taxpayers that the authorities are about to change the material provided for in a contract for a road improvement, from waterbound macadam to brick, and setting a day upon which objections to said change may be offered, will not bind the taxpayers of the county, for the reason there is no statutory provision for giving such a notice. This would especially be true in reference to those taxpayers who would not actually read the notice so given or have it brought to their attention.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 26, 1918, in which you enclose a set of resolutions adopted by the county commissioners of Coshocton county, relative to a certain improvement in progress of completion, and ask my opinion as to whether these resolutions are legal.

I have heretofore rendered an opinion pertaining to this same matter, but the legal questions raised by the resolutions adopted by the county commissions go further than the questions raised in your former request for opinion. The matter has to do with the improvement of section "D," I. C. H. No. 407, Coshocton county.

The state highway commissioner entered into a contract with Thomas Norman & Son, for the construction of this improvement, the specifications calling for 24,889 square yards of waterbound macadam and 4,107 square yards of monolithic brick. The brick part of the improvement is completed and the grading for the other part is practically completed.

The question is whether the contractors could be released from their present contract and the plans and specifications so changed that brick could be used for the 24,889 square yards, instead of waterbound macadam.

In the opinion above referred to, rendered on January 7, 1918 (No. 919), I informed you that after a contract was once entered into for the construction of a highway, there is no provision of law by virtue of which the plans and specifications may be changed, so that the contractors might use a material different from that provided for in the original contract. I held in that case to do so would release not only the surety on the bond of the contractors, but would lay such foundations that any taxpayer of the county might enjoin the county and the state from paying the contractors for work done.

However, the set of resolutions adopted by the county commissioners go to a different point and it will be necessary, therefore, for me to note the questions therein raised. The resolutions are too lengthy to quote in full, but the part which is vital reads as follows:

> "Therefore, be it Resolved, That the clerk of this board be directed and he is hereby directed to give not less than ten (10) days' notice by advertisement in the Coshocton Tribune, a newspaper of general circulation in Coshocton county, Ohio, to the taxpayers of Coshocton county, Ohio, that protests against the proposed change of materials and contract will be received by the said board of county commissioners at their office at a date not less than ten (10) days after the publishment of said notice;

Be it Further Resolved, That provided there are no protests made against such proposed change in materials and contract, up to and including the date of meeting heretofore provided for, and further provided that the state highway commissioner of Ohio approves of said change, that then and in that event said board of county commissioners of Coshocton county, Ohio, shall proceed to change the type of said improvement from waterbound macadam to brick paving;

Be it Further Resolved, That in the event that such change of materials and contract is accomplished as herein proposed, that the additional costs of the improvement caused by the changing of the type of improvement from waterbound macadam to brick paving be assumed in the following proportions: The abutting property owners to assume ten per cent (10%) of such additional cost; the township of Lafayette to assume fifteen per cent (15%) of the additional cost; and the county of Coshocton to assume seventy-five per cent (75%) of such additional cost."

From a paragraph of the resolutions you enclose, not herein quoted, it will be seen that the county commissioners, township trustees, abutting property owners and the state highway commissioner are willing that the material may be changed from waterbound macadam to brick, and that the state has been relieved from the payment of any part of the additional costs arising by virtue of the substitution of brick for waterbound macadam, the county, township and abutting property owners having agreed to assume the total increased cost.

From the resolutions I gather that the contractors are to be released from the present contract and that the county commissioners expect to take charge of the remaining part of the improvement, and enter into a contract with Thomas Norman & Son for the same. As said in my former opinion, this would release the present sureties of Thomas Norman & Son. However, he could give a new bond in connection with the new contract which is entered into, and this would remove the difficulty relative to the bond.

The only other question that remains to be considered is that of the rights of the taxpayers in the contemplated change. To remedy this matter the county commissioners have provided for the publishing of a notice for ten days in the Coshocton Tribune, giving the taxpayers the opportunity to appear before the board of county commissioners and offer objections, if any, to the proposed change of material. The commissioners have further provided that in the event there are no objections made against such proposed change in materials, said board of county commissioners will proceed to change the type of said improvement from waterbound macadam to brick. The only point to be considered is as to the sufficiency of this notice. The statutes do not make provision for such a procedure. The law is clear to the point that when a notice, not provided for by law, is given by publication, no one is bound by said notice. The notice receives its force and effect from the fact that the statute makes provision for same and that the parties shall be bound by the notice as set out in the statute.

Of course those taxpayers who actually read the notice and thus had the matter brought directly to their attention, might be estopped from raising an objection after the change in material was made, if they would not appear before the board of county commissioners on the day set and make their protest or objection. However, I doubt if a court would go to this extent. But those taxpayers who did not actually read the notice and thus have the matter brought to their attention, would not be bound by the notice proposed to be given. Hence, as stated in my former opinion, they would have the right to an injunction, because the county commissioners and township trustees are paying out public money for an improvement not authorized by law, and in a greater amount than that which was called for in the contract which was entered into according to law. Such I take it is the law.

Of course the parties interested might proceed to the end of the improvement they are contemplating, without interruption, inasmuch as no taxpayer might care to assert the rights which he would have in law; but if the authorities proceed in the manner mapped out, they do so under the risk of being enjoined from paying out money under the new contract entered into with Thomas Norman & Son or with any other person, provided there should be a lower bidder than said Thomas Norman & Son.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF STATE IS CUSTODIAN OF BONDS PURCHASED OUT OF STATE INSURANCE FUND—HOW INTEREST COLLECTED—LIABILITY OF BANK WHEN INTEREST COLLECTED BY THAT METHOD.

The treasurer of state is designated by law as custodian of bonds purchased out of the state insurance fund; and it is made the duty of the treasurer of state to collect the interest on such bonds, as the same becomes due and payable, and also the principal thereof, and to pay the same when so collected into the state insurance fund. The method by which such collections shall be made is not prescribed by law and therefore the treasurer of state should follow the method in making such collections that would be followed by a prudent business man under similar circumstances.

If such collections are made through banks, the banks in the absence of an agreement to the contrary are not chargeable with interest until the money due on the bonds, either as principal or interest, is collected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted the following request for my opinion:

> "The treasurer of state requests your advice regarding his rights and privileges concerning the collection of bonds and interest on same, which he holds as custodian of the state industrial commission funds.
> Quoting from section 11-103 O. L. 76, concerning state insurance funds in bonds.
> 'And all such bonds so purchased forthwith shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of state, who is hereby designated as custodian thereof, and it shall be his duty to collect the interest thereon as the same becomes due and payable, and also the principal thereof, and to pay the same, when so collected, into the state insurance fund.'
> The following procedure for the collection of matured bonds and interest on bonds for the state insurance fund has been observed by this department since the treasurer of state has had such duties imposed upon him by statute:

The treasurer of state, acting as custodian of the funds of the state industrial commission collects bonds, when matured, also interest on bonds when due. Bonds and interest coupons representing these collections are deposited in the active depository banks as cash items, and are credited as such, by the said banks, on the same day when such deposits are made.

A matured bond is deposited and credit taken as above. Several days afterward the bank informs the state treasurer that payment on said bond has been refused: 'For want of funds.' Meanwhile the bank has been unjustly charged with interest on the amount of the bond deposited, as such interest is computed on a daily balance settlement between the bank and the treasurer of state.

The enclosed copy of two letters of the date of April 13, 1918, from an active depository for state industrial funds, refers to similar circumstances as pointed out above, and the bank asks this department to deposit such items on a collection account, i. e., that credit shall not be given by the bank on these items until the bank receives payment for same.

Question 1. Should the treasurer of state establish such an account for collecting maturing bonds and interest on bonds?

Question 2. If the collection account cannot be established, in what manner shall the treasurer of state proceed to collect such overdue bonds and interest; also how shall he adjust his balance with the active depositories, which have credited this department with the bonds and interest which were subsequently returned to them unpaid?

Question 3. May the treasurer of state hereafter, send maturing bonds and interest coupons for collection direct to the established office for payment of same, crediting the funds of the industrial commission, when payment is received by him? If this is done, from what appropriation should the expense of collection be paid, as this expense would have been incurred by the treasurer of state as custodian of state insurance funds and this department has no specific fund for that purpose? This expense consists of postage, registry and insurance and are now borne by the active depositories."

The letters which you enclose, show two instances, which I take it are illustrative of the situation, that on April 1st you deposited certain bonds and coupons aggregating $1,716.68 and were credited as if that amount had been deposited in cash, that on April 13th, $641.48 of said amount had not been paid so that the bank from the date of the deposit and up to April 13th was chargeable with interest on $641.48 not on deposit with it; the other instance shows a deposit of bonds and credit on April 1st, and no proceeds received by the bank up to April 13th, as no funds were available to the political subdivision owing the bonds with which to pay the same—so that the bank at least up to April 13th, was chargeable with interest on funds not on deposit with it.

I understand that all checks, drafts and other items collected by or sent to you calling for money due to the state insurance fund, are deposited in active depositories as cash items and bear interest from the date of deposit; in the same manner as checks, drafts and other items for moneys due the funds of the state.

The state insurance fund is accumulated "to provide an adequate fund for the compensation provided for in this act (Workmen's Compensation act), and to maintain a state insurance fund from year to year." It can be used for no other purpose.

Section 1465-56 G. C. provides that the treasurer of state shall be custodian of this fund and that all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon proper voucher.

Other sections of the act provide for the payment to the treasurer of state of amounts due from employers to the state insurance fund.

Section 1465-57 provides for the deposit of this fund and reads as follows:

> "Sec. 1465-57. The treasurer of state is hereby authorized to deposit any portion of the state insurance fund not needed for immediate use, in the same manner and subject to all the provisions of the law with respect to the deposit of state funds by such treasurer; and all interest earned by such portion of the state insurance fund as may be deposited by the state treasurer in pursuance of authority herein given, shall be collected by him and placed to the credit of such fund."

The interest referred to in this section means the interest earned by the funds deposited and paid by the depository.

Section 1465-58 provides for investment by the liability board of awards (Industrial Commission) of the surplus or reserve of the state insurance fund in certain bonds, and for the duties of the treasurer of state in regard to the same. This section reads:

> "Sec. 1465-58. The state liability board of awards shall have the power to invest any of the surplus or reserve belonging to the state insurance fund in bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or of any county, city, village or school district of the state of Ohio, at current market prices for such bonds; provided that such purchase be authorized by a resolution adopted by the board and approved by the governor; and it shall be the duty of the boards or officers of the several taxing districts of the state in the issuance and sale of bonds of their respective taxing districts, to offer in writing to the state liability board of awards, prior to advertising the same for sale, all such issues as may not have been taken by the trustees of the sinking fund of the taxing district so issuing such bonds; and said board shall, within ten days after the receipt of such written offer either accept the same and purchase such bonds or any portion thereof at par and accrued interest, or reject such offer in writing. and all such bonds so purchased forthwith shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of state, who is hereby designated as custodian thereof, and it shall be his duty to collect the interest thereon as the same becomes due and payable, and also the principal thereof, and to pay the same, when so collected, into the state insurance fund. The treasurer of state shall honor and pay all vouchers drawn on the state insurance fund for the payment of such bonds when signed by any two members of the board, upon delivery of said bonds to him when there is attached to such voucher a certified copy of such resolution of the board authorizing the purchase of such bonds; and the board may sell any of said bonds upon like resolution, and the proceeds thereof shall be paid by the purchaser to the treasurer of state upon delivery to him of said bonds by the treasurer."

This section makes it the duty of the treasurer of state to collect the interest on bonds owned by the state insurance fund when due and also the principal when due and to pay such collections into the state insurance fund. The method by which he is to make such collections is not prescribed, nor is any appropriation made to cover the expense of such collections. In the absence of statutory direction it is the duty of the treasurer of state to make such collections in the most practicable and economical way. He cannot deposit the bonds or coupons as a part of the fund, but it is his duty to deposit the proceeds of such bonds or coupons in the fund. I know of no way in which a bank can be compelled to treat these bonds or coupons as cash and pay interest on the same when deposited by the treasurer of state for collection, and it is especially difficult to imagine any theory upon which a bank could be legitimately asked to pay interest on such items prior to the time the collection is actually made. Of course if the banks are willing to do this, there is every reason, in the interest of the insurance fund, to allow them to do so. But they cannot be compelled to do this, and, unless there is an express stipulation in their bids for deposits, they do not agree to pay interest on bonds and coupons deposited with them for collection, irrespective of whether the same are collected or not.

Answering your questions in their order—

1. The treasurer of state may establish a so-called "collection account" for collecting such coupons and bonds, if it is made certain that collections as soon as made, are turned into the state insurance fund. That is, he can deposit such bonds and coupons with a bank for collection, in the same manner as such items are collected through banks in the usual course of business. The duty of collecting is placed by law upon the treasurer of state, and it is also his duty to pay all such collections when made into the state insurance fund; how he shall make the collections is not prescribed—therefore he can adopt this method if he deems it best. I cannot determine whether he should adopt this method or not—that is for the treasurer of state to decide.

2. I have held, in answer to your first question, that such collection can be made through banks and this obviates answering the first part of your second question. Answering the second part of your second question—credit should be given a bank for principal and interest charged against it when the principal was not paid and consequently nothing was deposited with the bank.

3. The treasurer of state could, if he so desired, send matured bonds and interest coupons direct to the debtor, or to the established office for the payment of the same. It must be remembered, however, that it is the duty of the treasurer of state to collect such bonds and coupons and he is responsible therefor—if loss occurs on account of his negligence in the attempt to collect the same he would be responsible, and it is incumbent upon him to take every precaution in the manner of collection as well as the method adopted that would be taken by a prudent business man under similar circumstances.

The expenses incurred in such collections would have to be met out of the current appropriations for the use of the treasurer of state.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TEACHERS ENTITLED TO SALARY FOR TIME LOST ON ACCOUNT OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASE, WHEN.

Where a board of education employs a teacher for a fixed term at a definite salary and there is nothing in the contract or in the rules of the board on the question of absence on account of sickness, and such teacher is compelled to be out of school with a contagious disease, and subsequently resumes teaching work for the board, the teacher is entitled to be paid for the time so necessarily lost on account of such sickness.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 8, 1918.

HON. S. L. GREGORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wilmington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you say:

> "One of the teachers in the New Vienna school of this county was out of school sick with a contagious disease for the period of 26 days. The school board requests me to write you for an opinion, and desires to know whether this teacher is entitled to pay for the time she was out of school, and, if not, whether or not the teachers who did her work during the time are entitled to receive her pay or the pay which would have gone to her."

Two questions are contained in your inquiry: First, are teachers who are compelled to miss school on account of being sick with a contagious disease entitled to pay for the time they are off? Second, can substitute teachers be paid from the wages which would have been paid to regular teachers had they taught?

A contract between a board of education and a teacher is one for personal service. It is a general rule of law that where a person contracts to perform personal services, he cannot recover upon said contract for services which he failed to perform. This rule settles your first question unless it is modified by a different rule in Ohio. The statutes in relation to the employment of teachers in Ohio may have some bearing upon said rule and they and the decisions applicable thereto will be next considered.

General Code section 7690, as amended in 107 O. L. 47, reads in part as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. * * * Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished, during the term for which the appointment is made. The teachers must be paid for all the time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity.

Section 4752 G. C. provides in part:

> "A majority of the members of a board of education shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Upon a motion to adopt a resolution * * * to employ a superintendent or teacher, janitor or other employe * * * the clerk of the board shall publicly call the roll of the members composing the board and enter on the records the names of those voting 'aye' and the names of those voting 'no.' If a majority of all of the members of the board vote aye, the president shall declare the motion carried. * * * Boards of education of township schools may provide for the payment of teachers monthly if deemed advisable upon the presentation, to the clerk, of a certificate from the director of the subdistrict in which the teacher is employed, stating that the services have been rendered and that the salary is due; * * *"

Section 7691 G. C. reads:

"No person shall be appointed as a teacher for a term longer than four years, nor for less than one year, except to fill an unexpired term, the term to begin within four months of the date of the appointment. In making appointments teachers in the actual employ of the board shall be considered before new teachers are chosen in their stead."

Section 7705 G. C. provides in part:

"The board of education of each village and rural school district shall employ the teachers of the public schools of the district for a term not longer than three school years, to begin within four months of the date of the appointment. * * *"

Section 7595 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 623, provides in part:

"No person shall be employed to teach in any public school in Ohio for less than fifty dollars per month. * * *"

It may be claimed from the above quoted sections and parts of sections that the intent of the legislature was to make the contract between the board of education and the teacher "entire," as far as it was possible for it to do so. That is, when the legislature provided that no contract should be entered into for less than one year, except to fill an unexpired term, and that no contract should be entered into for the employment of teachers for a term longer than three years, and that no person shall be employed to teach for less than fifty dollars per month, and that the board might by resolution arrange for the payment of the salary of the teacher monthly, and that teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools are closed in which they are employed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity, and that the salary of a teacher may be increased but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made, it indicated as clearly as legislative intent could indicate that the contract was intended to be an entire one when entered into between the board and the teacher.

An entire contract is defined by Bouvier to be:

"That which is not divided; that which is a whole. When a contract is entire it must, in general, be fully performed before the party can claim the compensation which was to have been paid to him; for example, when a man hires to serve another for one year, he will not be entitled to leave him at any time before the end of the year and claim compensation for the time unless it be done by the consent or default of the party hiring."

And, likewise, when a contract has been entered into for a term certain, and nothing is said with reference to the time when payment thereunder shall be made, nothing is due until the contract is completed. The term "entire contract" is sometimes spoken of as a contract in "entirety" and where the said term "entirety" is hereinafter used, if used at all, it is meant to refer to the term "entire contract." That a contract for wages in Ohio may be an entire contract is clearly settled.

In the old and frequently cited case of Larkin v. Buck, 11 O. S. 561, B agreed to work for L on his farm "for six months certain, at $11.00 per month," no time being specified in the agreement when payment was to be made. B left the service of L at the expiration of the first month without cause, and against the wish of L, and brought suit to recover of L for the month's service: Held,

> "That the contract was entire, and that suit could not, under the circumstances, be maintained by L for such partial performance."

In that case it was contended that because payment was to be made at so much per month it was a contract from month to month instead of an entire one. The same contention, however, would be pertinent to our question because the term of hiring under the statute would be for one year and at not less than fifty dollars per month, and the payment of the salary, under the contract, may be made "by the month." Peck J., delivering the opinion of the court in Larkin v. Buck, supra, says on page 565:

> "The court below seems to have regarded such a contract as severable into months, or as six contracts, each for one month's service, in regular succession, and not as one entire contract for service for six months; * * * The court deduce this severable quality of the agreement from the words 'at the rate of $11 per month,' used in prescribing the compensation for the service; * * *
> The question, therefore, depends upon the effect which should be given to a stipulation of a specified rate per month, in an agreement to serve another for a fixed period of time. This is a mere question of construction as to the intention of the parties, and is to be gathered from the language employed, and the subject matter of the contract. The term of service is, itself, entire. It was 'for a period of six months certain' and also for a period of six months immediately thereafter, if the plaintiff did not go to Pennsylvania. It was for labor upon a farm, where the value of the service, and the amount of the compensation, vary with the season and the character of the work required, and a pro rata stipulation appended to an agreement, to render such service for six months or a year, could hardly have been intended as a precise and reasonable equivalent for any one month of that period, separate and disconnected from the other months; but would rather seem to have been stated, as an agreed average of the whole term, if fully served out. In other words, not as a stipulation to pay or receive that precise sum for any one month, but as a means of ascertaining the aggregate compensation for the whole term, expressed in a form simple, easily comprehended, and requiring no effort to compute or understand it."

After citing and commenting upon

> Lantry v. Parks, 8 Cow 63;
> Wright v. Turner, 1 Stewart (Ala.) 29;
> Decamp et al. v. Stevens, 4 Blackford 24;
> Badgley v. Heald, 4 Gillman (Ill.) 64;
> Mullen v. Gilkinson, 19 Verm. 503;
> Miller v. Goddard, 34 Maine 102;
> Davis v. Maxwell, 12 Metcalf 286.

the court on page 567 of said report says:

> "In all these cases, and in others which might be cited, the agreement was held to be entire, and not severable, even though there was a rate per month specified in the contract for compensation for the labor to be performed. In the case last cited (12 Metcalf 286), Hubbard, J., in delivering the opinion, says: 'The plaintiff has argued that it was a contract for seven months, at twelve dollars per month, to be paid at the end of each month. But, however reasonable such a contract might be, it is not, we think, the contract proved. There is no time fixed for the payment, and the law, therefore, fixes the time; and that is, in a case like this, the period when the service is performed. It is one bargain; performance on one part, and payment on the other; and not part performance and full payment for the part performed. The rate per month is stated, as is common in such contracts, as fixing the rate of payment in case the contract should be given up by consent, or death or casualty should determine it before its expiration, without affecting the rights of the party. Such contracts for hire, for definite periods of time, are reasonable and convenient, are founded in practical wisdom, and have long received the sanction of the law.'"

It is said in LaBatt's Master and Servant, section 519, that the doctrine above mentioned is "unsatisfactory for the reason that in numerous instances it must operate unfairly either for the employer or the employee." But while admitting the truthfulness of the author's statement, our courts in Ohio have not accepted it because the doctrine set forth in Larkin v. Buck has been followed many times by our Ohio courts.

In Stein v. Steamboat Prairie Rose, 17 O. S. 471, the first syllabus reads:

"Where the captain of a steamboat hired a barge and executed to the owner thereof a contract in the name of the boat, 'for the sum of ten dollars per day, until delivered back in Cincinnati, in like good order as received,' but no time was mentioned when the barge should be returned, or the money paid, held: That the barge was to be returned in a reasonable time under the circumstances of the service for which it was hired; that the amount due for the hire of the barge would then be payable; that the contract is entire and not divisible; and that a recovery in an action brought thereon, after the expiration of such reasonable time, for the amount then due for the hire of the barge at the rate specified in the contract, is a bar to a subsequent action on the same contract for the hire of the barge, accruing after the period embraced in the judgment recovered in the former action."

In Goldsmith v. Hand, etc., 26 O. S. 101, a contractor entered into a written contract with a lot owner to build a house on his lot. Trouble arose in relation to payment therefor and Gilmore, J., delivering the opinion of the court in that case, referred to the case of Larkin v. Buck, as follows:

"In Larkin's case Judge Peck states the question to be: 'Whether a contract for service upon a farm for six months certain, at a specified rate per month, no time being expressed therein for its payment, confers upon him who renders the service the legal right to sue for a partial performance, when he voluntarily abandons such service, without justification or excuse, at the end of the first month.'

"The principle of law recognized by these cases is this: That the courts will not encourage the violation of agreements by relieving the defaulting party from the intentional and unjustifiable breach of his agreement, and allowing him to recover pro tanto for the part performance of a contract that is entire; where the other contracting party is not in fault, and has waived a full performance by acceptance or otherwise."

In Koums v. Reiniger, 14 Cir. Dec., 116, the syllabus reads:

"Proceedings in aid of execution before justices of the peace, under section 6680-2 Rev. Stat. et seq., reach only to those debts that, whether due or not, are owing at the time of the service of process on the debtor of the judgment debtor and not to those subsequently arising and subsisting at the time of the hearing."

Summers, J., delivering the opinion of the court, on page 118 of said report says:

"It is well settled that the judgment debtor's right to recover the installment payable February 28 was conditioned upon his remaining until that time in the service of his employer. Larkin v. Buck, 11 Ohio St. 561."

Other cases might be cited showing that, without exception, whenever the said case of Larkin v. Buck has been mentioned by our courts, it is always with approval of the principle above quoted therefrom. The language used by Judge Peck is most applicable to our case.

Applying the same we have the following matters very similar to that case, viz., a contract for one year at a rate of service of not less than $50.00 per month, and it was for services to be performed as a teacher in the public schools. As the term proceeded, it was reasonable to presume that the services were of different value and would vary. The $50.00 per month was simply an agreed average per month for the whole term, not a stipulation to pay or receive said precise sum for any one month, but as a means of ascertaining the aggregate compensation for the whole term expressed in a form simple, easily comprehended and requiring no effort to compute or understand it. In other words, it was not within the contemplation of the board of education or the teacher, when the contract to teach was entered into, that the teacher should only teach for one month and that a new or another teacher might be employed for the next month, and so on during the entire school year, for the very necessities of the case demand that a teacher contract for a term certain and being the entire year, because the course of study which is arranged for the pupils and the manner in which the school work is planned demands that there shall be as little break as possible in the teaching force during said term. It takes some little time for teachers and pupils to be able to work together and with each other. If, at the end of each month of school, a new teacher was hired, it would be impossible for the school to progress along the outlined line of work in the same manner as with the same teacher remaining throughout the whole school year.

It is said in Labatt's Master and Servant, section 521:

"In order to entitle a servant to recover compensation under an entire contract, he must show that he had substantially performed his part of the agreement. But he need not prove that his health was such, during the whole of his term, as to enable him to devote all of his time actively to his employer."

Where a contract is not an entire one, it is conceded that a servant, who resumes work after having been temporarily disabled by sickness, is entitled to recover only a proportionable part of the stipulated wages in respect to the services rendered by him before he fell sick. In other words, the master can demand some allowance on account of the absence of the servant because of sickness. But, it is held to be the rule in some of the older English text-books and decisions, that if a servant falls sick, or is otherwise disabled by the act of God, the master must not abate any part of his wages during the time in which he was incapacitated. The later authorities, however, show that this doctrine is frequently held to be subject to some limitations, as will be hereinafter noted.

In the case of Cuckson v. Stones (1859), 1 Ellis & Ellis, 248, plaintiff agreed to serve the defendant for the term of ten years in the capacity of a brewer. In consideration of the premises, and of the due, full and complete service of the plaintiff, the defendant agreed to pay him 20 pounds on execution of the agreement, to furnish him with a house and coals during the whole of the term of ten years, and to pay him the weekly sum of two pounds and ten shillings during the term. Some years after entering the service the plaintiff became ill and was confined to his room for about six months. His wages were paid for about three months and then suspended. After he was able to attend again personally to business, he was paid as before under the agreement. To an action by the plaintiff to recover wages for the period during which he had been ill, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was not, during any part of the time for which such wages were claimed, ready and willing or able to render, and did not, in fact, during any part of such time render, the agreed or any service. On showing cause against a rule to enter a verdict for the plaintiff on the plea, it was held that the averment, that the plaintiff was not ready and willing or able, was not supported by his physical inability, for a time only, and not through his own default, to attend personally to the business; and that, the contract not having been rescinded, the defendant was not entitled to suspend the weekly payments during that time; and the plaintiff was therefore entitled to the verdict. Lord Campbell, Ch. J., said:

> "The plaintiff could not be considered incompetent by illness of a temporary nature; but if he had been struck with disease so that he could never be expected to return to his work, we think the defendant ought to have dismissed him, and employed another brewer in his stead. Instead of being dismissed, he returned to the service of the defendant when his health was restored, and the defendant employed him and paid him as before. At the trial the defendant's counsel admitted that the contract was not rescinded. The contract being in force, we think that here there was no suspension of the weekly payments by reason of the plaintiff's illness and inability to work. It is allowed that under this contract, there could be no deduction from the weekly sum in respect of his having been disabled by illness from working for one day of the week; and while the contract remained in force, we see no difference between his being so disabled for a day, or a week, or a month."

In Warren v. Witringham, 18 Times L. R. (1902), the plaintiff entered the defendant's service for a period of five years at a yearly salary, the plaintiff undertaking to devote the whole of his time to defendant's business. During the period the plaintiff became temporarily ill and was in consequence prevented from performing his work. Held:

> "That the plaintiff was entitled to salary during the time of his illness."

Mr. Justice Bruce said on page 509 of said report, and in commenting upon the case of Cuckson v. Stones, supra, that:

> "He could not find that that decision had ever been questioned. In the present case the plaintiff was ready and willing to perform his work, and was only prevented by temporary illness. There must, therefore, be judgment for him for the amount claimed with costs."

In Dartmouth Ferry Commission v. Marks, 34 Can. S. C. 366 (1904), an action was brought by the plaintiff, a widow, as executrix of the last will and testament of her husband, the late John H. Marks, deceased. The said John H. Marks was, during his lifetime, in the employ of the Ferry Company, as captain of one of the Ferry steamers. He became ill after he had served as such captain for near two years, from which illness he died. Suit was brought for the amount of his wages from the time of his illness up to the time of his death. Davies, J., on page 374, uses the following language:

> "The law permits the latter (temporary sickness) on the ground of common humanity to be offered as an excuse for not discharging duty temporarily, and suffers the disabled party to recover wages for the time he is temporarily away from his work."

In Goode v. Downing, 5 Terr. L. Rep., 505 (1904), a bartender was employed by a hotel keeper at a monthly salary and he became temporarily incapacitated through illness on the 5th day of the month and returned to work on the 10th. He made claim for his wages from the 5th to the 10th but was refused. Suit was brought and it was held on appeal that he "was entitled to be paid the wages during the time he was temporarily ill."

In Hughes v. Toledo, Scale and Cash Register Co., 112 Mo. App. 91, it was laid down broadly, without any special reference to the length of the absence from work in the given instance (6 weeks out of a term of one year), that a person hired for a definite period is not entitled to recover wages for the time during which he is sick and unable to fulfill his contract. Commenting upon the above rule, Labatt, in his work on Master and Servant, Vol. 2, page 1499, note 4, says:

> "The general rule thus formulated was clearly opposed to the weight of authority. The case upon which the court relied (Patrick v. Putnam, 27 Vt. 759) was one in which plaintiff had left altogether after working thirty days out of the year for which he was hired, and was therefore not in point."

The same author says, on page 1502:

> "A servant whose contract covers a definite period is under no obligation to continue working after the expiration of the term in order to make up for time lost by reason of illness or conditions of weather which rendered it impracticable to perform his duties."

Many cases may be found which hold that where an employe loses time on account of temporary illness, he himself has a right to recoup any damages or deduct the sum required to remunerate himself for the amount necessary to employ a substitute. The principle upon which recovery is permitted in those cases is upon quantum meruit or assumpset. But in our state, as noted above, it is settled that where there is a special contract, there can be no recovery in quantum meruit.

Upon what theory can failure to pay be justified for temporary illness, where the contract is entire. Sickness of an employe is regarded as an act of God which excuses performance, so that a recovery may be had for services actually performed. 25 Cyc. 1044, citing many cases. It was no fault of the teacher that he became ill with a contagious disease any more than it would be his fault if the schoolhouse would burn down or if the same should be destroyed by a storm or any other casualty which might exist and which is considered an act of God and excuse part performance. I believe the legislature intended that such teacher should be paid as long as the contract was not rescinded by the board. The teaching profession is one in which the employment begins and ends at definite periods and if a teacher is not to be paid during temporary illness—in other words, if temporary illness is excuse sufficient to warrant a board in breaking the contract as to payment—then it would be sufficient to warrant the breaking of the contract as to teaching. The latter proposition surely would not be claimed; that is, it would not be claimed that because a teacher was temporarily ill for a few days that such teacher should, on that account, be permitted to break the contract and compel the board to get another teacher for the remainder of the term. The contract being an entire one, the teacher is held the same as the board would be and therefore if the contract cannot be broken by the teacher, its terms as to payment cannot be broken by the board.

Another observation might be made right here. It is a matter of much comment, and has been expressed in judicial opinions, that the teaching profession is one of the poorest paid professions we have; that in the ordinary case, the amount that is paid a teacher for his services is needed by him for the support of himself and his family. The legislature no doubt realized this condition when it enacted that part of section 7691, which reads that teachers' salaries "may be increased but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made." If the legislature had intended that the salary could be diminished by the amount of time lost on account of temporary illness, it could have said so just the same as what it did say.

In opinion No. 278, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1912, Vol. 1, page 226, one of my predecessors had under consideration this same question. The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, in its request, said:

> "Mr. A. was paid for the full time he was out. * * * Was the payment illegal? * * *"

That official held on page 228:

> "As to teacher 'A,' if the board of education granted him full pay for his term, the effect of it in law was an increase in salary, and no finding can be made against him. While the action of the school board in allowing full compensation is to be carefully scrutinized, yet, when they act within reason and with evidence of good faith, it is the opinion of this department that no findings are to be made."

In Elliott on Contracts, Vol. 3, section 1903, the author says:

> "While sickness is generally an excuse for non-performance of such a personal contract, still the sickness must generally be such as could not have been foreseen and provided against. Thus where a contract was made for the personal services of a man and his wife for the period of one year, at a specified sum, and four months thereafter the wife left the service in anticipation of her confinement, it was held that she could have provided against this contingency, which could have been foreseen, and that the employer was justified in discharging both without pay. * * * But the inability of an apprentice to work caused by sickness without his fault has been held no breach of his father's covenant in the indenture of apprenticeship that he "well and faithfully serve them and give and devote * * * his whole time and labor * * * to his master; nor is it ground for abatement or diminution of wages, which, in consideration of such a covenant, the master agreed to pay him weekly during the whole term of apprenticeship."

The contract of a teacher to teach a school for a given term of several months at a given rate per month is an entire contract and if the teacher leaves before the term is finished, without sufficient cause, there can be no recovery for services up to the time of leaving.

Voorhees on Schools, section 64.

While the inquiry does not disclose the language of the contract of employment of the teacher in question, nor whether the board of education has adopted any rules regarding absence with or without leave, I assume that there is a total absence of any such rules and that the contract in question is the ordinary form, contracting for the teacher's services in conformity to law. Such a contract I think must be conceded to be an entire contract, for in the Ohio law the term of service could not be for less than one year nor more than three years.

Our statutes further prescribe that the salary of teachers shall not be less than fifty dollars per month, which may be made payable monthly, and further that such compensation shall not be decreased during the term of service.

While a teacher's contract is such as to make employment purely contractual, and while the parties are governed by the terms of their contract, their rights and duties being obtained and enforced under the law as other contracts, still it is plainly evident that the legislature has recognized the profession and services of teaching as of a somewhat special character, in that it has prescribed the minimum and maximum term, as well as the minimum salary, and provided that such salary, while it might be increased, could not be diminished during term of the service.

The Ohio constitution, in the bill of rights, among other things lays down the proposition that knowledge being essential to good government, a duty devolves upon the legislature to pass suitable laws to encourage schools and the means of instruction. The legislature has passed such laws and has evidenced a recognition of the fact that education is a state and not a municipal function.

School teachers have been favored, possibly, but there is a reason for such concession. The members of this profession as a class are compelled to undergo a long and thorough course of preliminary training. They are obliged to meet severe qualifying tests and to pass the prescribed examinations, before a certificate to teach will be issued.

It can be readily seen that it is of utmost importance to the state that such public servants, once entering upon such vocation, should remain and make that service to the state their life's work. Common knowledge tells us that with added experience comes higher efficiency, and the continued service of a teacher makes her or him more valuable to the welfare and training of the pupil, as well as to the state itself.

This, then, is the reason that inducements are held out to them; that they are granted in a measure a permanency of tenure; that teachers' pension laws are enacted and that they receive protection otherwise, under special laws passed for the benefit of the teaching profession.

Coming then to a specific answer to the question, and confining my opinion to this case or cases closely allied, it is my view that this entire contract should receive a liberal construction and that this teacher, who was out of school temporarily, by reason of contagious disease, should receive pay for the time so absent.

Inasmuch as it is my opinion that the teacher is entitled to pay for the time lost by reason of sickness, there is no necessity of my answering your second question as to whether or not the substitute teacher is entitled to receive the pay which would have gone to the regular teacher. Assuming that the board has a contingent fund out of which to provide for emergencies, the compensation for such emergency employe should be taken from that fund, in case there is not sufficient money in the tuition fund to pay same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW DISTANCE MEASURED FROM PUPIL'S RESIDENCE TO SCHOOL HOUSE—RIGHT OF WAY—WHERE SAME MAY BE ACQUIRED.

Distance from the residence of pupils to the school house to which they are assigned may be measured along public highways, rights of way, lanes, paths or walks, if they are at all times practicable, that is, serviceable, and accessible to such pupils.

Rights of way can only be acquired from public highways to school house grounds and not from school house grounds across private property to the residence of the various pupils.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 9, 1918.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

"On the twenty-fifth day of May, 1916, you rendered an opinion found in volume 1, page 1622, of the Attorney-General's Reports, in reference to the right of a board of education to acquire rights of way through private property for the use of pupils who are required to be transported, and on the nineteenth day of March, 1917, in opinion No. 123, you rendered me an opinion upon practically the same subject-matter.

These opinions were in reference to section 7731 of the General Code and this section being amended in volume 107, Ohio Laws, at page 625, I desire now to ask you what effect this amendment has upon the question involved in those two opinions, especially when you construe this section with section 7620 of the General Code."

Upon my request for additional information you say:

"There are many cases in the several school districts of our county where the pupils must be transported to school if the distance from the residence to the school must be measured by the public roads, while if the boards of education have the power to acquire convenient rights of way over private property, then the pupils will be within the two mile limit and the boards of education will thus save considerable expense in transporting such pupils."

The question propounded in opinion No. 1622, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. 1, page 930, reads as follows:

"May a board of education of a rural school district expend school funds in acquiring a 'right of way' through private property for school children, thus relieving the district of transportation charges for pupils attending the public schools of such district?"

The conclusion reached by my predecessor in said opinion is found in the syllabus, as follows:

"The board of education of a rural school district may not expend the funds of the district in acquiring a 'right of way' through private property for the use of pupils residing in the district and living more than two miles from the nearest school in said district, for the purpose of relieving itself of the duty of providing transportation for such pupils under provision of section 7731 G. C., 104 O. L. 140."

Your request upon which my opinion No. 123 was rendered to you on March 19, 1917, and found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 295, reads as follows:

"Section 7731 of the General Code and the opinions of your office relating thereto are to the effect that boards of education must provide transportation for pupils who reside more than two miles from the school house to which they are assigned, measured along the most direct public highway.

We have several instances in our county where, by reason thereof, boards of education are required to transport pupils, yet such pupils live much less than two miles from such schools by crossing private premises.

Has a board of education the power to obtain a private right of way across private premises for such pupils where it can be done at a cost less than the costs of transportation, and thus avoid the costs of transportation or save money by so doing?"

The conclusion reached by me, in answer to the above request, and as found in said opinion No. 123, is "that the distance being measured by the most direct public highway route, the board of education has no power to deprive pupils of the means of conveyance if a private way could be obtained across private premises."

I am satisfied that the conclusion reached in both of said opinions above mentioned is correct, for at the time said opinions were rendered the statute governing the same, viz., General Code section 7731, as enacted in 104 O. L. 133, read in part as follows:

> "In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such schools. Transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house, by the most direct public highway, shall be optional with the board of education. * * *"

The fact that it was necessary to measure the distance "by the most direct public highway" made it impossible, under the language quoted from said section, for the board of education to consider any route of travel for the pupils to the schools of a district other than by a public highway route, and thus relieve itself of transportation expenses. Hence the conclusion reached in both of said opinions seems to me to have been irresistible.

But, on March 31, 1917, and after my opinion to you (No. 123), the legislature amended section 7731 to read in part as follows:

> "In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school. The transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house, by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils, shall be optional with the board of education."

There were other parts of said section amended, but nothing, I think, which would affect the matter under consideration.

It will thus be noted that the material change made by the last legislature, and which would affect your inquiry, is the substitution of the words "by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils" instead of "by the most direct public highway" as it existed theretofore. In the construction of said statute both this department and the court have given consideration to the fact that it was necessary to make measurements in calculating the distance a pupil lived from school by the "public highway" route. Now that those words are changed and that the measurements may now be made by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils, can it be said that it was the intention of the legislature to permit such route to be measured by a right of way, path or lane through private property instead of along a public highway? Ordinarily, when we speak of the word "travel," we mean public travel. To travel means to go from place to place. In this instance the route for travel would be the route over which the pupils pass from their several homes to the school house and return. If there were more than one route, the distance would be measured by the "nearest practicable" one. That is, it must not only be the nearest route, say "as the crow flies," but it must be a route practicable for travel and accessible to such pupils for travel to and from the school. It may be either a route that is open to the public for travel or a practicable route of travel accessible only to such pupils.

There is a question, however, whether or not a board of education, in determining the distance which pupils live from the public schools, can, under any circumstances, compute such distance over routes other than public highway routes. Some light in relation thereto may be gathered by a consideration of section 7735

G. C. and the decisions in relation thereto, for the question of what shall be considered the "nearest" school has been considered by said decisions. Said section provides that:

> "When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the schools to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or, if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district in all grades below the high school."

In Board of Education v. Board of Education, 23 O. D. 698, the plaintiff sought to recover from the defendant compensation by way of tuition for three pupils who resided in the district of the defendant and who, for a series of months stated in the petition, attended the school maintained by the plaintiff. The agreed statement of facts disclosed that the distance from the school house to the home of the children "as the crow flies" is less than one and one-half miles, but that the distance from the school house to said home, measured along the most direct public highway, path or lane, is more than one and one-half miles, and the question was, which route should be taken in calculating the distance from the nearest school to the residence of said pupil. Woodmansee, J., on page 699, says:

> "It would not be proper to measure the distance on a straight line 'as the crow flies,' across the fields, as the children, without the consent of the owners of the fields, would thereby become trespassers. Besides, under the provisions of the statutes of Ohio, children who reside in school districts in the country, living more than one-half mile (now one and one-half miles) from the school, and residing at not a greater distance than one-half mile from a public highway (now one-half mile from the entrance to the premises) are entitled to be carried to school in a public conveyance, at the expense of the school fund in the district. Necessarily they would be carried thus along the highway. And, whether the children go by public or private conveyance, or whether they walk to and from school, they are expected to go by the most direct and convenient highway, and the length of that course determines the distance from home to school."

It is thus noted that the reasoning of the court turns upon the question of transportation and that because in that instance the child would be entitled to transportation along "the most direct public highway," the court holds that the distance must be measured by the same route in determining the nearest school. If section 7731 had read at the time of Judge Woodmansee's decision as it now reads, viz., by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils, in other words, if the said section instead of containing the words "by the most direct public highway" had contained the words "the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to the pupils," it is very doubtful if the conclusion would have been reached that the measurement should have been made along public highways, because the court also says that said measurement shall include any distance which the pupils are compelled to travel by path or lane. So that, if a path or lane would be a practicable route of travel from the home of said pupil to the school and the section on transportation then had read as it now reads, I am quite sure that whatever path, lane or private right of way the pupil could have used to make the route the nearest practicable route, would have been the course of measurement in ascertaining the distance to the nearest school. Said case is also reported in 34 O. C. C. Rep. 213, wherein the court says:

"In determining the distance a pupil of a public school must travel under General Code section 7735, the measurement should be made from the door of the school house along the center of the most direct public highway to the nearest point of the curtilage of the pupil's residence, including in said measurement the distances from the school house door and said point in the curtilage respectively, BY THE MOST DIRECT WALK, LANE or PATH to the center of the highway."

Here the court makes it plain that whatever path, lane or walk is used by the child must be taken into consideration in figuring the distance from its residence to school.

The same view was taken in the case of Board of Education v. Board of Education, 15 O. C. C. (n. s.) 521, later affirmed in 88 O. S., the syllabus of which case reads:

"In assigning pupils to the public school nearest to their residence, the distance should be measured by the most direct path from the school house door to the middle of the highway and then to said residence."

If, then, distance in tuition cases, or under section 7735, is to be measured by the most direct private right of way, lane, walk or path, it would also seem to follow what distance under section 7731 should be measured in the same manner if such private right of way, path, lane or walk is the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils.

Reasoning from the above, then, I must conclude that distance from the residence of pupils to the school house may be measured not only along public highways, but along rights of way, lanes, paths or walks, provided such rights of way, lanes, paths or walks are practicable for travel and are accessible for the use of such pupils. The word "practicable" is defined as "that which is used for an intended purpose; serviceable; as, a practicable route." It cannot be said that a path or walk which would lead through dangerous woods or across flooded fields would be practicable. It must be such a route which can be used at all times by the pupils in as serviceable a manner as they could use a public highway.

Another and more difficult question probably now arises and that is, has a board of education a right to provide a right of way across private property and thus establish a route for pupils to and from school. Boards of education are permitted to acquire, hold, possess and dispose of real and personal property (section 4749 G. C.) and under certain circumstances are permitted to appropriate private property for the use of the school. The section which permits such appropriation is section 7624 G. C., which reads:

"When it is necessary to procure or enlarge a school site, or to purchase real estate to be used for agricultural purposes, athletic field or play ground for children or for the purpose of providing an outlet to dispose of sewage from a school building or school grounds, and the board of education and the owner of the property needed for such purposes, are unable to agree upon the sale and purchase thereof, the board shall make an accurate plat and description of the parcel of land which it desires for such purposes, and file them with the probate judge, or court of insolvency of the proper county. Thereupon the same proceedings of appropriations shall be had which are provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations."

It is clear that under the provisions of said section the board could not establish a right of way across private property and appropriate the same for that purpose. But, suppose a right of way can be secured by the board without resorting to the appropriation thereof, that is, suppose the board could enter into a contract with the owner to permit a right of way to be established across his property, from the residence of the pupil to the school house, keeping always in mind that the same must be made practicable and that it must be accessible to the pupils.

Section 7620 provides that a board of education has the right, among other things, to purchase or lease rights of way to school houses and to make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. Said section reads:

> "The board of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor, or rights of way thereto, or purchase or lease real estate to be used as play grounds for children, or rent suitable school rooms, provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. It, also, shall provide fuel for schools, build and keep in good repair fences inclosing such school houses, when deemed desirable, plant shade and ornamental trees on the school grounds, and make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts."

The question as to whether or not the above provisions are sufficient to permit a board of education to secure a right of way across private property has been considered by this department several times. For instance, in opinion No. 777, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General, 1914, Vol. 1, page 247, the question was as to whether or not the board of education could construct a bridge on a private road which led to a school house, and after finding that such bridge could not be constructed by the county commissioners and township trustees, it was held that the power conferred upon a board of education by section 7620 G. C. is a very broad one and specifically includes that to "furnish * * * rights of way" to school houses and to make "all necessary provisions for the schools under its control," and this authority is further supplemented with "to make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts." And, in Opinion of the Attorney-General found in the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1907, page 249, it was held that the board of education may construct a foot bridge for the convenience of pupils under authority of section 3987 R. S., which is now section 7620 G. C.

In both the aforesaid instances the "rights of way" led "to the school house;" that is, from the public highway to the school house grounds. The statute does not say that the board of education may purchase rights of way generally, but that it may purchase or lease "rights of way thereto," meaning to the school house. To illustrate, if a school house is located on a public highway, I do not understand by the language of said section that the board could provide a right of way to said school house other than along the public highway, but if a school house is located off a public highway, or if the public highway upon which a school house is located should be abandoned, then and in that event the board of education could purchase or lease a right of way thereto.

Answering your several questions, then, I advise you that:

(1.) Distance from the residence of pupils to the school house to which they are assigned may be measured along public highways, rights of way, lanes, paths or walks, if they are at all times practicable, that is, serviceable, and accessible to such pupils.

(2.) Rights of way can only be acquired from public highways to school house grounds and not from school house grounds across private property to the residences of the various pupils.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—WHEN SURETY COMPLETES THE WORK FOR PRINCIPAL IT IS ENTITLED TO THE RIGHTS AND PRIVILEGES OF PRINCIPAL IN THE PAYMENTS BASED UPON ESTIMATES MADE BY HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER FROM TIME TO TIME.

When the state highway commissioner decides to take over a contract under section 1209 G. C. (107 O. L. 126) and the surety of the contractor elects to complete the work for the principal contractor and proceeds so to do, the surety is entitled to payments based on estimates made from time to time by the state highway commissioner, just as the principal would have been entitled to the same had he completed the work in accordance with the terms of his contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 11, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of April 23, 1918, in which you request my opinion on the following question:

> "When a contract for any reason is turned over to the bondsmen for completion, to whom shall estimates be paid which may become due from time to time as the work progresses?"

The answer to the question suggested by you is to be found in the consideration of sections 1208, 1209 and 1212 G. C. (107 O. L. 126-127), together with the application of one equitable principle. While the answer would be the same, whether based upon these sections as they existed in the Cass highway act or as found in the White-Mulcahy law, I shall quote from the sections as they appear in the White-Mulcahy law.

Section 1208 provides in part as follows:

> "* * * Before entering into a contract the commissioner shall require a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned that the contractor will perform the work upon the terms proposed within the time prescribed, and in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof, * * *."

This provision of course would be embodied in the contract of suretyship signed by the surety company.

Section 1212 G. C. provides in part as follows:

> "* * * The payment of the cost of the construction of such improvement shall be made as the work progresses upon estimates made by the engineer in charge of such improvement, and upon approval of the state highway commissioner. Except as hereinafter provided no payment by the state, county or township, on account of a contract for any improvement under this chapter shall before the completion of said contract exceed eighty-five per cent of the value of the work performed to the date of such payment, and except as hereinafter provided, fifteen per cent of the value of the work performed shall be held until the final completion of the contract in accordance with the plans and specifications. In addition to the above payments on account of work performed, the state highway commissioner may also, if he deems it proper, allow and pay to a contractor a sum not exceeding eighty-five per cent of the value of material delivered on the site of the work but not yet incorporated therein, provided such material has been inspected and found to meet the specifications. * * *"

Under this section it is the duty of the state highway commissioner to pay the contractor upon estimates allowed by him from time to time as the work progresses, not to exceed eighty-five per cent of the value of the work done at any particular time, and also, if he deems it best, eighty-five per cent of the value of the material delivered upon the site of the work but not yet incorporated therein.

"If, in the opinion of the state highway commissioner, the contractor has not commenced his work within a reasonable time, or does not carry the same forward with reasonable progress, or is improperly performing his work, or has abandoned, or fails or refuses to complete a contract entered into under the provisions of this chapter, the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and complete said improvement either by contract, force account or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public, paying the full costs and expense thereof from the balance of the contract price unpaid to said contractor, and in case there is not sufficient balance to pay for said work, the state highway commissioner shall require the contractor or the surety on his bond to pay the cost of completing said work. * * *"

We will consider the steps which may be taken in an improvement. First, the contractor of course proceeds with the improvement and is paid under section 1212 G. C.; but under section 1209, if the contractor does not commence his work within a reasonable time or does not carry the same forward with reasonable progress, or is improperly performing his work, or has abandoned it or failed or refuses to complete a contract, the state highway commissioner has authority to enter upon and complete said improvement.

If the state highway commissioner should decide that any of the conditions set out in section 1209 G. C. obtain and it is his opinion he should proceed with the completion of the contract as provided in said section, then in fair treatment to the contractor he should so notify him of his determination to proceed to complete the work, and state his reasons for so doing.

It is also my view that before entering upon said work to complete it under section 1209, the state highway commissioner should also give notice to the person or persons or company obligated as surety upon the bond of the contractor for the faithful performance of the contract in accordance with the plans and specifications, and by so doing give the surety the right to complete the contract, in accordance with the plans and specifications, if it should so desire to do. If the surety on the bond proceeds with the completion of the contract according to the plans and specifications, the state highway commissioner would not proceed to complete it under section 1209 G. C.

If the surety company simply steps into the place, as it were, of the original contractor, and completes the work according to the plans and specifications, to whom shall the estimates, that are made from time to time and approved by the state highway commissioner, be paid? Shall they be paid to the original contractor with whom the state has contracted, or to the surety company which takes the place of the contractor and is completing the work under the terms of the contract?

Without discussing the matter at any great length, it is my opinion that the surety company would be subrogated to the rights of the original contractor in the matter of the estimates allowed by the state highway commissioner from time to time, and that these estimates should be paid to the surety company in the same manner they would have been paid to the original contractor had he proceeded to complete the contract according to its terms and specifications; that is, from time to time estimates would be made of the work done by the surety company and eighty-five per cent of the work so done at any time would be payable to the surety company. If the surety company performs the work for the principal on the bond, it is entitled to the rights and privileges of the principal in the payments based upon estimates made by the state highway commissioner from time to time.

In arriving at this conclusion I am considering only those cases in which the surety on the bond steps into the place of the original contractor who is principal on the bond, and completes the work as the agent of the principal on the bond, and thus renders it unnecessary for the state highway commissioner to complete it under section 1209 G. C.

To be sure, if the state highway commissioner should complete the work in accordance with section 1209 G. C. and in so doing should enter into a contract with the surety on the bond, as he might do under said section, then the rights of the surety would be entirely controlled by the terms of the new contract so entered into and section 1212 G. C. would not apply as to payments.

I am not passing upon the rights of the contractor and the surety in and to the fifteen per cent of the contract price which must be retained by the state highway commissioner until the final completion of the contract, but simply upon the rights of these parties in the payments based upon estimates made from time to time during the progress of the work. I am not considering whether the surety would be entitled to all or a part of the fifteen per cent of the contract price so retained by the state highway commissioner, inasmuch as your question does not cover same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 15, 1918.

HON. LEWIS F. HALE, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

Within the time fixed by the statute a petition was circulated and filed with the clerk of the village, containing the names of more than ten per cent of the voters, asking for a referendum vote on said ordinance at the time of the regular election. This petition was kept ten days by the clerk and then certified to the election board of Logan county, Ohio.

Another petition was circulated and filed with the village clerk subsequent to the filing of the petition above referred to, and containing the names of more than twenty per cent of the electors, asking for a referendum vote upon said ordinance at a special election.

The statute specifies the fifth Tuesday after the filing of the petition for such special election. Ten days have not yet expired since the filing of this second petition with the clerk, consequently it has not been filed with the election board.

If this second petition is certified to the election board under which petition shall the election board prepare for an election?"

The two referendum petitions in question were filed by virtue of the provisions of sections 4227-2 et seq. G. C. Section 4227-2 provides:

> "Any ordinance * * * shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance * * * shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been * * * passed by the council in a village, except as hereinafter provided.
> When a petition signed by ten per cent of the electors of any municipal corporation shall have been filed with the * * * village clerk * * * within thirty days after any ordinance * * * shall have been * * * passed by the council of a village, ordering that such ordinance * * * be submitted to the electors * * * such * * * village clerk shall, after ten days, certify the petition to the board of deputy supervisors of elections * * * and said board shall cause to be submitted to the electors * * * such ordinance, * * * at the next succeeding regular or general election, in any year, occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of such peition. * * *"

One of the referendum petitions first referred to in your statement of facts was filed under the provisions of the above quoted section and upon its certificate to the board of deputy supervisors of elections it would be the duty of the election board to submit the question of approval or rejection of such ordinance to the electors at the next succeeding regular or general election occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of the petition.

When the act providing for a referendum in municipal corporations was first enacted by the legislature, as found in 102 O. L. 521, section 2 of the act (section 4227-2 G. C.), provided for a single referendum when a petition signed by fifteen per cent of the electors petition for same, and the only time for election provided was at the "next regular election," provided that a thirty-day notice was given.

In 103 O. L. 211, certain sections pertaining to the initiative and referendum in municipal corporations were amended and in that act the legislature provided that a referendum petition might be filed with ten per cent of the electors thereon and that the election on the question should be submitted at the next succeeding regular or general election occurring subsequent to thirty days after the filing of the petition. This act likewise only provided for one referendum on an ordinance, to wit, a petition signed by at least ten per cent of the electors of the municipality.

In 104 O. L. 238 et seq., certain sections pertaining to initiative and referendum in municipalities were amended, and while section 4227-2 continued to provide for a referendum on petition signed by ten per cent of the electors, and for a submission of the question of the rejection or approval of the ordinance at the next succeeding regular or general election occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of a petition, a revision was made in newly amended section 4227-5 for another and different referendum upon a petition of twenty per cent of the electors.

The reason for such legislative action is readily apparent. Under the provisions of section 4227-2, the election upon the referendum was postponed until the next succeeding regular or general election after the filing of the petition. If the electors only to the extent of ten per cent were interested in this matter, the legislative idea was that it was not of such importance as to call for the submission at an election prior to the next regular or general election. But as frequently the matters sought to be referended were of such importance as to require a sooner settlement, the legislature provided that whenever twenty per cent of the electors petitioned therefor, an ordinance might be submitted at a special election.

So under the law as it now stands an ordinance can be submitted to referendum in either of the two ways: A ten per cent petition can be filed and the question voted on at the next regular or general election occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of the petition; likewise a twenty per cent petition can be filed and under the law the question of the rejection or approval of the ordinance must be submitted at a special election.

The mere fact that the ten per cent petition is filed would not militate against the right to file the twenty per cent petition. Both provisions of the law are available to the electors of the municipality. When, as in the instant case, a ten per cent petition has been filed and subsequently a twenty per cent petition is filed, then, if all the requisites of the law are fully complied with, the clerk after ten days should certify the same to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections and it becomes the duty of such board to submit the question at a special election to be held on the fifth Tuesday after the petition is filed, provided no regular or general election will occur within ninety days after the petition is filed.

So answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the election in question should be held upon the second petition; that is, the twenty per cent petition, provided, of course, that such petition is regular under the law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPLICATION FOR DENTAL EXAMINATION MAY NOT BE FILED BY PERSON UNDER TWENTY-ONE YEARS OF AGE.

No person less than twenty-one years of age is permitted to file an application for an examination to practice dentistry in the state of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 15, 1918.

HON. R. H. VOLLMAYER, Secretary State Dental Board, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

> "I am enclosing a letter I received this morning from Dr. H. M. Semans. I have had two other letters from other schools asking the same question. Our examination takes place the week of the 24th of June, but our preliminary practical examinations start the 20th of this month."

The letter from Dr. Semans, to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "We have four students in the senior class who will complete in a very satisfactory manner the requirements exacted of them, but will probably not be granted a diploma owing to the fact that they will not yet be of age. One of them, Mr. S., becomes of age on June 29. * * * Can your state board grant to him the practical examination in May and the written examination the end of June, provided we verify his graduation? This leaves three who will not be of age until after your July session is over. One of these, Mr. K., becomes of age on October 26, and his situation in relation to the October board meeting is the same as Mr. S.'s is for the May board. These three men have taken the course recognizing that diplomas would not be given to them until they became of age. * * *"

The question in short is, can the state dental board file an application and grant examination under same to a person who is under twenty-one years of age and who is not a graduate of a state dental college or at least received his diploma therefrom?

Section 1321 G. C. provides:

> "Each person who desires to practice dentistry within this state shall file with the secretary of the state dental board a written application for a license and furnish satisfactory proof that he is at least twenty-one years of age, of good moral character, and present evidence satisfactory to the board that he is a graduate of a reputable dental college, as defined by the board. Such application must be upon the form prescribed by the board and verified by oath."

That is to say, before a person is permitted to take an examination before the state dental board for a certificate or license to practice dentistry in this state, such person must file with the state dental board an application therefor. In said application he must state that he is at least twenty-one years of age and of good moral character, and he must also present evidence satisfactory to the board that he is a graduate of a reputable dental college, as such colleges are defined by the board. There is nothing ambiguous about said language. To give it a meaning other than what it says would simply be usurping the authority of the legislature, for it is not intended in the use of said language that the person should be almost twenty-one years of age, or nearly twenty-one years of age, or in his twenty-first year, but that he shall be at least twenty-one years of age, and he must not only declare in the application that he is twenty-one years of age, but he must furnish satisfactory proof of the same to the said board. He must not only declare that he is twenty-one years of age and furnish satisfactory proof of the same, but upon the form prescribed by the board he must make an oath that he is twenty-one years of age. What has been said with reference to his being of age applies also to the fact of his graduation.

I must therefore advise you that, as a matter of law, no person less than twenty-one years of age is permitted to file an application to take an examination to practice dentistry in this state.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY NOT, WHEN A FINDING HAS BEEN MADE AGAINST TOWNSHIP CLERK, PAY SUCH CLERK THE SAME AMOUNT FOR JANITOR SERVICES, WHICH WERE NEVER PERFORMED—OFFICES COMPATIBLE—TOWNSHIP CLERK AND JANITOR OF PUBLIC BUILDING.

Where a finding is made by an examiner of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices against a township clerk for a certain amount illegally drawn for services, it is unlawful for the board of township trustees to pay the same amount to the said clerk as janitor services, which said clerk never performed, in order to return to him the same money which he paid under said findings.

There is nothing incompatible between the office of township clerk and the position of janitor of a public building.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 15, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your request for my opinion reads:

> "We are requesting your written opinion upon the following matter:
> We are calling your attention to opinion of the attorney-general, page 869, of 1915 annual reports, under authority of which we made findings for recovery against a township clerk, which findings were further upheld by your opinion No. 429 of 1917. We are informed that the township trustees are considering the plan of having the clerk repay the amount into the township treasury and then make up bills for services as janitor and thereby enable the township trustees to again turn the money over to the township clerk, being purely a plan to circumvent the law as laid down and embodied in such findings under authority of attorney-general's opinion. We are calling your attention to section 286 G. C., in part as follows:
> 'No claim for money or property found to be due to any public treasury or custodian thereof in any such report shall be compounded or compromised, either before or after the filing of civil action, by any board or officer or by order of any court unless the attorney-general shall first give his written approval thereof.'
> Question 1. Would such payment for janitor services in this case described be legal?
> Question 2. Can a township clerk receive compensation for janitor services in addition to compensation fixed by law as clerk?"

Opinion No. 415, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 1, page 869, holds:

> "For the services rendered by the township clerk in the performance of duties required by the statutes governing the aforesaid plan (road improvement matters), said clerk is entitled to a reasonable compensation not to exceed $100.00 in any one year, to be allowed by the township trustees under authority of section 6999 G. C., and said compensation is in lieu of any allowance for said services under authority of section 3308 G. C., and is subject to the limitation of $150.00 a year provided by said section."

And in opinion No. 429, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 2, page 1176, it is held:

> "The township clerk is entitled to receive as his compensation for any one year the sum of not to exceed $150.00. An amount received over and above $150.00 by the township clerk should be returned to the township treasury."

In your request you say that in order to compromise the finding which was made by your examiner, the township trustees are ordering the same amount to be paid to the clerk, as janitor services; that is, the same amount which the examiner found had been illegally drawn from the township treasury by said clerk. In other words, the clerk had performed no janitor service but simply to find a way for him to receive said amount of money the board orders him paid said amount for services performed as janitor. This, of course, would be illegal. The board of trustees is endeavoring to do indirectly what they are not permitted to do directly, but the act of allowing a voucher for something never received is the grossest kind of fraud on the part of any board.

Answering your first question, then, I advise you that under such circumstances the payment for janitor services would not be legal.

In your second question you ask if a township clerk may receive compensation for janitor services in addition to compensation fixed by law as clerk. There is nothing incompatible between the two positions. As clerk he can only receive the sum of $150.00. If he performs services as janitor under a proper contract, he may be paid for such services.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF FAIRFIELD TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, HURON COUNTY—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Fairfield township, rural school district, Huron county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of enlarging, repairing and furnishing the high school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Fairfield township, rural school district, Huron county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings as corrected to be in substantial conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said school district payable according to the terms thereof.

The bond form submitted with and as a part of the transcript of the proceedings relating to this bond issue is not entirely satisfactory to me, and I am therefore accordingly holding the transcript submitted until a satisfactory bond form of the bonds covering this issue is submitted for my approval.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—WHEN BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY ISSUE BONDS WITHOUT VOTE OF ELECTORS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SCHOOL PROPERTY.

Boards of education have authority to issue bonds to improve school property without a vote of the electors of the school district if the amount to be raised for such purpose does not exceed that amount which could be raised by a levy of two mills upon the tax duplicate of such district for the year next preceding such issue.

If the amount of money to be raised from a bond issue for the improvement or repair of school property exceeds two mills on the tax duplicate of the district for the year next preceding such issue, the question of so issuing such bonds must first be submitted to the electors of such district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. T. R. ROBISON, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

> "A state inspector condemned and ordered certain repairs to be made on a certain school building in the village of Shelby, this county. The board has not sufficient funds to make said repairs and must issue bonds.
> Question: Have they the authority to do this without first submitting same to a vote of the people?"

The funds for improvements or repairs to be made on school buildings are provided in one of two ways: First, by a levy and collection of taxes, and, second, by the sale of bonds therefor. Bonds may be sold with or without a vote of the electors, depending upon the circumstances in each individual case.

Section 7625 G. C. provides that when the board of education of any district determines that for the proper accommodation of the schools of such district it is necessary to repair a school house and that the funds at its disposal, or that can be raised under the provisions of section 7629 are not sufficient to accomplish that purpose, and that a bond issue is necessary, then the board shall make an estimate of the probable amount of money required for such purpose and submit to the electors of the district the question of issuing bonds for the amount so estimated, at a general election or at a special election called for that purpose.

Section 7629 G. C. provides that the board of education of any school district may issue bonds to improve school property and in anticipation of income from taxes for such purpose, levied or to be levied, it may from time to time, and as the occasion requires, issue and sell bonds under the restriction and bearing a rate of interest as specified in section 7626 and section 7627 of the General Code, provided, however, that no greater amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of tax at the rate of two mills for the year next preceding such issue. So that, if the board determines that it is necessary to repair said building as is suggested in the order of the deputy inspector of public buildings, and there is not sufficient money in the treasury for that purpose, then the board must first look to section 7629 G. C. and ascertain if sufficient money can be raised under the provisions of that section. That is, if it will take more than the amount which would not exceed a two mill levy calculated on the tax duplicate of the year next preceding such issue. If the amount of the estimate does not exceed that which would be the amount of two mills calculated on the tax duplicate of the year next preceding, then the bonds may be issued without a vote of the people. But, if the amount does exceed an amount of two mills on the duplicate for the year next preceding, then it is necessary to proceed under section 7625 et seq. of the General Code.

Answering your question then, I advise you, first, that if the estimate of repairs is less than the amount of two mills upon the tax duplicate for the year next preceding, no vote is necessary; second, if the amount of the estimate is more than two mills for the year next preceding the issue, including any money for that purpose which is in the treasury, then a vote must be taken. It might be suggested, however, that if a vote is taken and the order of condemnation is placed by the chief inspector of workshops and factories, the provisions of section 7630-1 could be incorporated in the resolution and the same is then proper within the emergency statutes, so-called, and the tax may exceed the fifteen mill limitation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY CONTRIBUTE TO MAINTENANCE IN VILLAGES.

Under section 7467 G. C. the board of county commissioners of a county may contribute toward the maintenance and repair of the roads located within a village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 29, 1918, in which you enclose copy of opinion rendered by you to the county commissioners of your county. You wish to know whether I agree with the opinion as rendered by you. Said opinion is to the effect that under section 7467 G. C. the board of county commissioners may contribute either money or stone toward the maintenance and repair of roads within a village, but not within a city, and that the contribution toward the maintenance and repair of the roads of a village should be limited to what is strictly known as roads within a village and not to those highways which were laid out and established by the village as streets.

I have carefully examined this opinion and in the main consider it to be correct. However, there are a few statements therein made about which some question might be raised. You suggest that the commissioners of your county may contribute, either in money or stone, to the repair and maintenance of the roads within the village of Bluffton. This may be correct, but it is my view that the contribution provided for in section 7467 G. C. would be money, rather than stone or any other material. This would enable the officers of the village to assume entire control and oversight of the work, while if the commissioners furnished stone, instead of the funds with which to purchase same, questions might arise between the commissioners and the village authorities. However, I do not consider this to be so very vital.

You state in a postscript attached to your opinion that sections 6949 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 107) pertain merely to a permanent improvement. This may be applying a rather strict construction to section 6949.

I have held in a number of opinions that sections 6949 to 6953 inc. G. C. (107 O. L. 107-109) are merely a part of the general scheme of road building by county commissioners, which begins with section 6906 and runs on through to and including section 6953. In considering section 6906, it is seen that the general scheme of road improvement by county commissioners includes constructing, improving, reconstructing or repairing any existing public road or part thereof.

But even with this suggestion you are mainly correct, in that a proceeding as set forth in these sections is formal; that is, step after step must be taken in reference to the improvement, the steps all being provided for in said sections; while the mere maintenance or repair of roads as provided in section 7467 would not be carried on under the steps set out in sections 6906 et seq. G. C.

I believe the conclusions you have drawn are correct, and the above suggestions are merely limitations upon some of the reasoning you have used in arriving at your conclusions, with the possible exception of the suggestion as to the contribution of the county commissioners being in money rather than in stone.

I am enclosing copy of opinion No. 723 rendered by me on October 18, 1917, to Hon. Sumner E. Walters, prosecuting attorney at Van Wert, which to some extent relates to the same question you have under consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BEQUEST TO THE ELYRIA MEMORIAL HOSPITAL NOT SUBJECT TO SAME.

A bequest to the Elyria Memorial hospital generally or to it to be held as a part of its endowment fund, not subject to the collateral inheritance tax, as such institution is one of public charity only.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. H. C. WILCOX, Probate Judge, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of April 27th you ask me to advise you as to whether or not the Elyria memorial hospital is "an institution in this state for purpose only of public charity" within the meaning of section 5332 of the General Code, so that a bequest to it generally or to it to be held as a part of its endowment fund, the income to be used for its general purposes, would be exempt from the collateral inheritance tax.

It appears that the Elyria memorial hospital is a corporation not for profit organized under the laws of Ohio, and that according to a declaration of principles promulgated at the time of its dedication it is open to all sick, injured or disabled persons residing in Elyria or Lorain county, without distinction as to race, nationality, color, sex or religious opinion, subject to reasonable rules and regulations to be adopted by the board of trustees. That these rules provide that patients who are able to pay are charged and those who are unable to pay are cared for free of charge; and that the hospital is actually operating at a loss on account of the large percentage of charity patients or those cared for at reduced rates, the deficiency being raised by donation.

Of course, I may remark that if it should happen actually to run at a profit for a time the case would not be altered, as the profits could not be distributed.

Unquestionably this institution is one of public charity only, and bequests of the kind described would be exempt from the collateral inheritance tax.

The only point requiring any consideration is the fact that the benefits of the hospital are limited to residents of a given area. This point does not change the charitable nature of the institution.

SINGLE COUNTY DITCHES—SALARY OF CHAINMEN, RODMEN AND AXEMEN WORKING ON SUCH DITCHES.

There is no provision of law which would warrant the payment of a greater sum than two dollars per day to chainmen, axemen and rodmen in the construction of single county ditches.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 24, 1918, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "I wish to have your opinion on section 6530 of the General Code. Conditions have arisen which make it next to impossible for efficient men to be employed for the services mentioned in the section of the code at the price therein named, and this condition has become so serious in this county as to necessitate a suspension of ditch work unless some method is devised to overcome it."

I find as much difficulty in coming to a solution of your problem as you seem to have had in attempting to solve it. It is my opinion there is no remedy for the unfavorable situation, other than that which can be granted by the legislature.

The statutes providing compensation to chainmen, axemen and rodmen, in the construction of single county ditches, are so plain and specific that it leaves no opportunity for placing a construction thereon other than that which plainly appears upon their face.

Section 6523 G. C. provides:

> "For services actually rendered under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners, each, shall receive three dollars per day. All other officers and persons shall receive compensation for such services as provided in this subdivision of this chapter."

Section 6530 G. C. is very explicit and provides as follows:

> "Each chainman, axeman and rodman shall receive two dollars per day for the time actually employed."

Section 6535 G. C. provides:

> "Fees under this chapter shall be paid out of the county treasury as soon as the bill of items thereof is examined and allowed by the county commissioners, and the auditor shall issue orders therefor on such allowance. * * *"

Not only are fees specifically and definitely mentioned, but the county commissioners must pass upon the same before they are paid by the county treasurer.

There is no other provision of the General Code, with which I am familiar, that would make it legal to pay a greater sum than that provided in section 6530 G. C.

Therefore, as hereinbefore stated, I am of the opinion that the only body which can render any aid in the matter is the general assembly of the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY ENTER INTO AN AGREEMENT FOR EMPLOYMENT OF COUNTY AGENTS AND CONTRIBUTIONS FOR CO-OPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK—EFFECT OF SAME.

County commissioners are authorized by section 9921-1 et seq. of the General Code to enter into an agreement for the employment of county agents and contributions for co-operative agricultural extension work, which has the effect of binding them to make contributions for more than one year. Such statutes are therefore inconsistent with section 5660 of the General Code, and being of later enactment than said section the latter does not apply to the agreement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. W. O. THOMPSON, President Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of a letter from Mr. O. M. Johnson, leader of county agents, requesting my opinion upon certain questions raised by Hon. Dean E. Stanley, prosecuting attorney of Warren county, relative to the operation of the sections of the act passed in 1915 providing for co-operative agricultural extension work to be participated in by the Ohio state university and the several counties, etc. With Mr. Johnson's communication he encloses copy of proposed memorandum of agreement for the employment of a county agricultural agent in Warren county. This agreement recites that its object is to promote the agricultural interests of the county through demonstrations and other educational means planned by the executive committee of the county farm bureau association and the county agricultural agent in conference with the agricultural college extension service of the Ohio state university; that this object shall be furthered by a county agricultural agent giving his full time to work in Warren county under the supervision of the Ohio state university, it being his duty to assist in carrying out plans made by the executive committee of the county farm bureau association in conference with a representative of the Ohio state university.

The memorandum proceeds to witness that it is understood by the parties to the agreement that each shall contribute annually to the support of the work the cash sums, the supplies and the services indicated by a schedule, which schedule pledges the county farm bureau association to bear $300.00 of the expenses of the service, the board of county commissioners the sum of $1,500.00 toward salary and expenses "to be placed in next budget," and the Ohio state university the sum of $1,600.00 toward salary and expenses, together with supervision, publications, special lectures, expert advice and assistance, franking privilege and envelopes.

The memorandum is intended to be signed by the county agent leader, the chairman of the board of county commissioners, the president of the county farm bureau association, and the director of agricultural extension service of the Ohio state university.

The questions raised by Mr. Stanley are as follows:

> "The board of county commissioners of Warren county, Ohio, has before it for consideration the question of appropriating money as provided by section 9921-4 of the General Code for the maintenance, support and expenses of the county agricultural agent. No levy was made for this purpose in 1917 and it was not included in the general appropriations made on the first of March, 1918.
> 1. Can the county commissioners enter into the usual form of contract with a county farm bureau association and the Ohio state university involving the expenditure of $1,500 on the part of the county at the present time or does section 5660 G. C. prohibit such a contract?
> 2. If a levy were made by the county commissioners this June, how soon thereafter could a contract be entered into by them for this purpose?
> 3. What effect would a resolution passed by the board of commissioners at the present time, stating an intention to make such a levy, have?
> 4. Would the following be a proper form for such resolution (if one should be passed)?
> 'Be it resolved by the board of county commissioners of Warren county, Ohio, that
> Whereas it is the desire of said board of county commissioners to cooperate as provided by law in the matter of maintenance, support and expenses of a county agricultural agent for Warren county, Ohio, and
> Whereas funds for that purpose are not now in the treasury of said county,
> Be it resolved that said board of county commissioners hereby declare it to be their intention to levy taxes at the rate which will produce $1,500 on the 1918 tax duplicate for such purpose and further declare it to be their intention to appropriate such funds, to wit, said $1,500, so to be levied at the proper times for such purpose.'
> 5. If such a resolution is passed, how soon would it be legal for an agent to be appointed and could this be done before the funds provided by such contemplated tax levy became available?"

I may say that while I have examined the federal act approved May 8, 1914, providing for co-operative agricultural extension work between the agricultural colleges of the several states and the United States department of agriculture, I am convinced that nothing in that act bears in any way upon the questions now raised.

Section 9921-1 G. C., as enacted in the act of May 25, 1915 (106 O. L. 356), provides that the federal moneys received under this act of congress shall be set aside in the state treasury as "the agricultural extension fund" and used in accordance with the provisions of this act for the extension service of the college of agriculture of the Ohio state university.

Section 9921-2 as therein enacted provides as follows:

> "From moneys appropriated by the state for the employment of agricultural agents, not to exceed three thousand dollars in any one year, shall be expended for any county that shall raise at least one thousand dollars for the support of an agricultural agent for one year, and shall give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of the Ohio state university that a like sum shall be raised for a second year, or shall establish and maintain a county experiment farm as provided in the statutes. To secure this aid from the state, the board of county commissioners of any county shall agree to the employment of an agricultural agent approved by the dean of the college of agriculture of the Ohio state university."

Section 9921-4 provides:

> "Each and every county of the state is authorized and empowered to appropriate annually not to exceed fifteen hundred dollars, for the maintenance, support and expenses of a county agricultural agent, and the county commissioners of said county or counties are authorized to set apart and appropriate said sum of money and transmit the same to the state treasurer who shall place it to the credit of the agricultural extension fund to be paid for the purposes aforesaid, on warrant issued by the auditor of state in favor of the Ohio state university. If for any reason it shall not be used as contemplated in this act before the expiration of two years, it shall revert to the county from which it came."

Section 9921-5 provides for referendum vote of the electors of a county in the event that the county commissioners of any county shall not make provision for an agricultural agent; an affirmative vote is to have the effect of requiring the commissioners to make the necessary appropriations for the employment of an agent. The section concludes with the following paragraph:

> "After having established this county agent work in any county, the county commissioners of such county shall continue to make such annual appropriations for said work as the trustees of the Ohio state university may direct, not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars annually, for a period of five years."

It is apparent from a consideration of these provisions that the act of the county commissioners which binds the county to co-operate with the Ohio state university in its extension service is that described in section 9921-2, as follows:

> "To secure this aid from the state, the board of county commissioners of any county shall agree to the employment of an agricultural agent approved by the dean of the college of agriculture of the Ohio state university."

On the other hand, the same section requires that in order to justify the expenditure of state and federal moneys in the county it must "raise at least one thousand dollars for the support of an agricultural agent for one year, and * * * give satisfactory assurance to the trustees of the Ohio state university that a like sum shall be raised for a second year, or * * * establish and maintain a county experiment farm as provided in the statutes."

The last paragraph of section 9921-5 seems to give to this initial action the effect of binding the county commissioners to make annual appropriations for the work for a period of five years. The position in which this provision is found might give rise to the belief that the five-year provision does not apply unless the county agent work is established by a referendum vote. I think, however, that the contrary is the case, and that the arrangements which the statute contemplates are to cover a period of five years. I reach this conclusion in spite of the fact that section 9921-2 refers to "a second year" only. The law is somewhat confused at this point, to be sure, and I do not attempt in this opinion to decide this subordinate question finally either way. It is sufficient to state that the commissioners of a county are expressly authorized to enter into an arrangement which will bind them and their successors to make appropriations for not less than two nor more than five years, and to point out that the law does not contemplate a new contract or agreement for each year.

This being the case, it is difficult to see how section 5660 of the General Code can apply. This section in effect invalidates all contracts, agreements or other obligations involving the expenditure of money and resolutions for the expenditure of money made, entered into or passed by county commissioners, unless the auditor of the county first certifies that the money required to discharge the agreement on the part of the county is in the treasury and not appropriated for any other purpose. It is an old section which has not been recently amended. It has not the force of a constitutional provision. If, therefore, a statute subsequently passed expressly authorized the making of an agreement by the county commissioners which would bind them to make appropriations in a succeeding year, it is manifest that such statute would be wholly inconsistent with section 5660, because at the time of making the agreement so authorized it could not be certified that the money required to perform the agreement on the part of the county is in the treasury and not appropriated for any other purpose. In other words, we have the case of an agreement expressly authorized by statute and involving the expenditure of moneys in future year or years.

This being the case, I come to the conclusion that none of the points raised by Mr. Stanley presents any serious difficulty. The later statute, being inconsistent with the earlier one, must prevail, and to the extent of such inconsistency must be regarded as constituting an exception to the general rule laid down in the earlier law.

The scope of the exception is such that the county commissioners may, in my opinion, enter into the agreement authorized by section 9921-2 of the General Code, whether they have any money in the treasury which can then be appropriated or not.

The commissioners should indeed, as suggested by Mr. Stanley, act by resolution duly passed and spread upon their journal. The resolution as drafted by him would, however, be open to criticism, in that it binds the county commissioners to make but a single levy, whereas under the law they are required to make at least two annual contributions, and possibly five. The resolution should recite an agreement on the part of the commissioners to the employment of an agricultural agent approved by the dean of the college of agriculture of the Ohio state university, and an assurance on their part that the county will raise the agreed sum for one year and a like sum for a second year, or so long as the co-operative agreement shall remain in force under the law. I have indicated merely the general outlines of the agreement without attempting to dictate its phraseology. Such agreement may be entered into at any time and has the effect of a binding agreement.

In passing I may say that I am unable to find any statutory warrant for the existence of a "county farm bureau association." The scheme of co-operative agricultural extension outlined in sections 9921-1 et seq. of the General Code does not provide for any such agency, nor for the participation on the part of voluntary associations of individuals in the scheme of co-operative extension. Some authority to co-operate with voluntary associations seems to be conferred upon the university by section 7974 of the General Code, as amended 107 Ohio Laws 559. Inasmuch as my opinion is not invited as to this point, however, I express none upon it.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JOINT SCHOOL SYSTEM—BOARD OF EDUCATION OF OHIO CANNOT UNITE WITH AN INDIANA BOARD TO OPERATE.

A board of education in Ohio cannot unite with a board of education in Indiana for the operation of a joint school system.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you say:

> "Union City is situated partly in Ohio and partly in Indiana. Two separate school systems are being maintained.
> Can these two systems be legally consolidated into one system?"

The public school system of Ohio is solely one of statute. Article 1, section 7 of the Constitution, provides that knowledge being essential to the government, "it shall be the duty of the general assembly to pass suitable laws * * * to encourage schools and the means of instruction." The general assembly has passed laws as intended by said constitutional provision and under the laws so passed the schools of Ohio are being operated. There is no law in Ohio which permits a union of a board of education of this state and a board of education of another state or a union of school districts for the operation of the schools located on or along the state line. Boards of education have only those powers which are specifically granted or those which are necessary to carry into effect those specifically granted, and therefore having no authority to so unite, I must advise you that the Union City board of education of Ohio cannot unite with the board of education of the city of the same name in Indiana in the operation of the schools.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRAFFIC LAWS—DEPUTY SHERIFF MAY PATROL IMPROVED ROAD OF COUNTY TO ENFORCE.

Under the provisions of section 2833 G. C. a deputy sheriff can be assigned by the sheriff to the duty of patrolling the improved roads of a county, with a view to arresting on sight those whom he finds violating the traffic laws of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. JOHN L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 24, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner and the commissioners of Pickaway county, last fall, resurfaced and repaired the pike leading from Columbus to Chillicothe, Ohio. It was put in very good shape, but ever since that it has been used, very largely, as a speed way and over speeding is being practiced daily by many persons using large and heavy automobiles and motor trucks, which are doing much damage to the highway in making it almost impossible to keep this highway in good condition. The same is true of other highways in the county on which the county commissioners have expended much money and put in good condition.
> The county commissioners want to employ a motor patrolman and put him on the highways of the county to stop this over speeding and save and maintain the good condition of our pikes and roads. They would like to employ a patrolman, at a fair salary, by the year.
> Please inform me the method of procedure to employ such patrolman and clothe him with sufficient police authority and pay him a sufficient salary for his work. Under what sections of statute shall we proceed?"

There is no provision in our statutes, with which I am familiar, which directly authorizes the employment of a patrolman by the county commissioners of a county, the duties of said patrolman being to patrol the improved roads of a county with a view to preventing the misuse of the same by motor vehicles.

Section 1221 G. C. (107 O. L. 131, 132) contains a provision permitting the state highway commissioner to employ patrolmen for the maintenance and repair of intercounty highways and main market roads of the state, but said patrolmen therein provided have not the duties referred to by you in your letter.

Hence it will be necessary for us to ascertain whether any other officer of the county already provided for would be authorized to perform the duties which you have in mind. From your request I take it that it is the desire of the county commissioners to place a patrolman upon the improved roads of your county, to arrest upon sight those persons whom he finds violating the traffic laws of the state. It is my opinion that the sheriff or his deputies would have such authority.

Section 2833 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "Each sheriff shall preserve the public peace and cause all persons guilty of breach thereof, within his knowledge or view, to enter into recognizance with sureties to keep the peace and to appear at succeeding term of the common pleas court of the proper county and commit them to jail in case of refusal. He shall return a transcript of all his proceedings with the recognizance so taken to such court and shall execute all warrants, writs and other process to him directed by proper and lawful authority. * * *"

From this section it is fairly evident that the sheriff or his deputy would have authority to arrest, upon his own knowledge or view, those persons whom he finds violating the traffic laws of the state. From the provisions of this section it is my opinion that the sheriff could place a deputy of his office upon the highways of your county, instructing him to patrol the same, with a view to the arrest and punishment of those who violate the traffic laws.

To be sure, this would require additional deputies and would necessitate a greater allowance by the county commissioners for the sheriff's office, than he would otherwise need. But if the commissioners are desirous, as you suggest, of having the improved roads of the county patrolled, it is fair to assume that they will be willing also to grant the sheriff a sufficient allowance to enable him to employ a deputy for the purposes set out in your communication.

There is no provision, other than that found in section 2833, supra, with which I am familiar, that would authorize any officer to patrol the improved roads of a county for the purpose of arresting those persons who are found violating the traffic regulations of the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BLUE SKY LAW—PERJURY—VENUE.

Under section 6373-20 the offense of making "a false statement of fact in any statement or matter of information required by this act to be filed with the commissioner" is completed when such statement or matter of information is actually filed with the commissioner, and the venue of such offense is therefore in Franklin county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 25, 1918, you addressed the following communication to this office:

"Following you will find an inquiry from the prosecuting attorney of Miami county addressed to this department.

'I have been requested to bring to the attention of the grand jury on April 29, the question of indicting a man who filed with your department a statement of the condition of his company, which these men claim to be false, and the question that arose in my mind was whether or not the offense was committed in the county where the affidavit was made or whether it was necessary for the same to be filed before the offense was completed, in other words, whether the venue would be in Miami county where the affidavit was made or in Franklin county where it was filed.

Are you able to state whether or not the question has ever been raised and determined? I do not find any construction of the section covering that point.'

Kindly advise us in the premises so that we will be able to reply to Mr. Kerr's letter."

The section of the blue sky law fixing penalties for its violation is 6373-20, which is as follows:

"Whoever knowingly makes any false statement of fact in any statement or matter of information required by this act to be filed with the 'commissioner,' or in any advertisement, prospectus, letter, circular or other document, containing an offer to dispose or solicitation to purchase, or commendatory matter concerning, such securities or real estate, with intent to aid in the disposal of the same, or whoever knowingly violates any of the provisions of sections 12, 14 or 15 of this act, or for the purpose of aiding in the disposal of any security or real estate, knowingly makes any false statement or representation concerning any license or certificate issued under the provisions hereof, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the penitentiary not more than one year, or both; and whoever violates any of the other provisions of this act shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, or imprisoned in the county jail or workhouse not more than sixty days, or both."

The penalties above described are provided for a number of different acts, most of which, like any ordinary offense against the laws, might be committed in any county in the state. It seems different, however, with the particular one about which you inquire, which is a "false statement of fact in any statement or matter of information required by this act to be filed with the commissioner." This refers to the different statements required to be filed either for the purpose of securing a license as a dealer or, as it is commonly called, registering a particular security. This statement, by the requirement of the act, is to be filed with the commissioner. It has no other destination, and there is no other purpose in making it excepting as it may be used by or through the office of the commissioner of securities. Until it is so filed, it is only, so to speak, in a formative or incomplete stage; it only acquires efficacy, only becomes a public document when it reaches the destination provided for it by law. This is made apparent by an observation of the apparent purpose of the law itself, or if not that, the purpose of the machinery and procedure for enforcing the law. This law is enforced by and through the department. Its benefits are secured by requiring compliance with its provisions by and through the department.

The object of these statements is to secure license or permission to transact business. This license or permission can only be secured from the commissioner, and by the issue of this license and its revocation and supervision afforded thereby over this character of business by the department, is the security which the act endeavors to give the public against deceit and fraud.

The statement is only for the purpose of securing the authority to transact the business; the statement itself is in no manner to be used in the transaction of business or as an inducement to anyone to purchase securities. It therefore only comes to maturity, is only effective, when so filed.

Although the language is "a statement of facts, etc., required by this act to be filed," yet, that is only a means used to point out what statement it is to which the penalty applies, and that statement is found to be the one described above, which is not, within the meaning of the statute, a statement until it is so filed. It then becomes a statement which may be the basis of action by the department; before that it is not.

Therefore, it follows that in this respect the offense can only be committed in the county in which said statement is to be so filed, which is Franklin county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VAGRANCY—SECTION 13409 CONSTITUTIONAL.

Section 13409 G. C. may be treated as constitutional and operative for the punishment of vagrancy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. ROBERT M. NOLL, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of May 9, 1918, you request an opinion from me as to the validity of section 13409 G. C. That section reads:

> "Whoever being a male person able to perform manual labor, has not made reasonable effort to procure employment or has refused to labor at reasonable prices, is a vagrant or common beggar and shall be fined not more than fifty dollars and sentenced to hard labor in jail until the fine and costs are paid. For such labor he shall receive credit upon such fine and costs at the rate of seventy-five cents per day."

You also call attention to the decision of Dickson, J., in the case of Ex Parte Frank Smith et al., 13 O. N. P. (n. s.) 278, in which the court held the above quoted section to be void as against the bill of rights, article 1, section 1.

I desire also to call your attention to opinion No. 696, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 2, page 1437, in which my predecessor had under consideration the question as to whether or not a person who was sent to jail, as provided by section 13409, should be credited at the rate of seventy-five cents per day, or sixty cents per day as was provided by section 12387. On page 1441 of said opinion the following language is found:

> "Before proceeding to the determination of the question which you ask, I would call your attention to the case of in re Smith, 13 O. N. P. n. s.) 278, wherein the court of common pleas of Hamilton county decided that section 13409 G. C. was void for uncertainty. I shall not express any opinion herein as to the correctness of the decision of Judge Dickson, in the Smith case, but shall proceed on the assumption that section 13409 is constitutional and operative."

If ever there was a time when the "tramp laws" (13408) and the "vagrant laws" (13409) should be enforced, that time is now. There is no occasion for a male person, who is able to work, to go from place to place and beg or ask subsistence by charity or enter a dwelling house, or yard or enclosure about a dwelling house, without the permission of the owner or occupant thereof, or do any of the other things provided in section 13408, neither is there any occasion at this time for a person to be a vagrant, no matter how said term is defined, and while I do not desire to say that the decision of Judge Dickson is wrong, I am inclined to the conclusion that another court of equal jurisdiction might easily arrive at a different decision.

I therefore advise you that it is my opinion that you may proceed to punish violators on the assumption that section 13409 is constitutional and operative.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS—POWER TO MAKE RULES RELATIVE TO TRANSFER AND REGISTRATION OF ELECTORS BEFORE PRIMARIES.

The board of deputy state supervisors of elections, in municipalities where registration of electors is required by law, is authorized under section 4975 G. C., prior to any primary election, to make such provision as may be necessary and reasonable for the transfer and registration of electors made necessary for the primary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 16, 1918.

HON. JOSEPH T. MICKLETHWAIT, Prosecuting Attorney, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked an official opinion upon the following:

> "Have not the deputy state supervisors of elections in counties in which cities requiring registration of electors are located, the right and authority to fix the days and prescribe the hours for the registration and for the transfer of registered electors before the primary election held in the month of August each year and in the month of April in each presidential year, without being governed by any provisions of law, except such as are provided in section 4975 of the General Code?"

Section 4975 G. C. provides:

> "The board of deputy state supervisors in municipalities where registration of electors is required by law, shall, prior to any primary election, make such provision as shall be necessary and reasonable for the transfer upon the registration books and the registration of all persons, not previously registered, who may qualify themselves to vote at the ensuing November election. No person shall be admitted to vote at any primary election, in such municipalities, unless he shall have caused himself to be registered as an elector therein, in the manner provided by law for the registration of electors."

Said section is found in Ch. 6, Tit. XIV, part first, G. C., which is composed of sections 4948 to 4991-1 inc. G. C., and entitled "Primary Elections," and has to do with all matters pertaining to primary elections, even including compensation of election officers.

Said section 4975 provides that in the registration in municipalities the board of deputy state supervisors, prior to any primary election, shall make such provision as shall be necessary and reasonable for the transfer upon the registration books and the registration of all persons not previously registered, who may qualify themselves to vote at the ensuing November election. Further provision is made that no person, other than those registered in the manner provided by law for the registration of electors, shall be entitled to vote at the primary.

Under this section it is my opinion, concurring with the one expressed by you, that the deputy state supervisors are authorized to make such rules as are necessary and reasonable and so fix the days and hours for the registration and for the transfer of registered electors becoming necessary before a primary election.

You call attention to section 4900 G. C., which reads as follows:

"In cities in which a general registration of electors is required at presidential elections only, at all other state or other public elections, those electors who have been duly registered at such general registration and have not removed from the precinct in which they then registered at such general registration in such city shall not be required to register. But at such state or other public elections, at the times hereinbefore provided for registration days, only those electors of such city shall be required to register as may be new electors or who have moved into a precinct of such city since a general registration and have not been registered therein, except that at such public election, other than presidential and state, such registration shall take place on Friday and Saturday in the third week before any such election. If an elector removes from the precinct in which he has so registered into another precinct of the city in which he resides, he shall apply in person to the registrars of the precinct in which he has so registered for a 'removal certificate,' as herein provided in other cases."

This section is found in Ch. 5 of the same title and part hereinbefore mentioned and is headed "Registration of Electors." This chapter contains the general registration laws that were in force long before the passage of the general primary act. Inasmuch as section 4900 makes provision for a situation "at such state or other public elections," and at the time of the enactment of this section there was no general primary act, it is my view that state and other public elections would not necessarily include a primary election, and when the legislature, in adopting the primary law, specifically provided as it has in section 4975 G. C. for certain provisions as to registration "prior to any primary election," I think it is reasonably clear that it did not intend the general registration provisions to apply to primary elections, but that the special provision made in section 4975 G. C. should apply.

Therefore, it is my view that in providing for registration prior to a primary election, the board of deputy state supervisors acts under section 4975 G. C. and may in its sound discretion make such necessary and reasonable provisions for transfer and registration as it deems proper.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF DEED OF TRACT OF LAND IN THE CITY OF AKRON TO THE STATE FOR ARMORY PURPOSES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 17, 1918.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department a deed whereby the city of Akron grants and conveys in fee simple to the state of Ohio for armory purposes the following described real estate:

"Situated in the city of Akron, county of Summit and state of Ohio, and known as being a part of block 26, King's addition, and further described as follows: Beginning at the intersection of the southerly line of Quarry street with the easterly line of High street, thence southerly along the easterly line of High street 146.93 feet to a point; thence easterly at right angles to the easterly line of High street to a point in the westerly line of Broadway; thence along the westerly line of Broadway to the intersection of said line with the southerly line of Quarry street; thence along the southerly line of Quarry street to the northeast corner of a tract of land deeded by the city of Akron to the state of Ohio by deed recorded in Vol. 505, page 428 of the Summit County Records of Deeds; thence southerly along the easterly line of said tract to the southeast corner thereof; thence westerly at right angles to the easterly line of said tract 204.00 feet to the southwest corner of said tract; thence northerly at right angles to the southerly line of said tract 145.00 feet to the northwest corner thereof and the southerly line of Quarry street; thence westerly along the southerly line of Quarry street 80 feet to the place of beginning. Reserving the right to the city of Akron to use a strip fifteen feet in width along the south side of the above described property for a driveway in common with the grantee, which the grantee shall improve and keep in repair."

Said deed being dated April 26, 1918, and signed by the mayor and director of public service. At the same time you transmitted certified copies of the legislation under which the deed was made.

I have examined said legislation and deed and finding the same to be in compliance with law hereby advise you that said deed may be accepted on behalf of the state of Ohio. The said deed should not only be recorded in Summit county, but also filed with the auditor of state.

I am herewith returning you the deed and the certified copies of the legislation referred to; also the plat of the property handed us by Mr. Elliott, your architect.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APROVAL OF DEED FROM THE STATE TO JOHN KERR.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 17, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Mr. John Kerr, through J. Walter Wright, attorney at law of Bucyrus, Ohio, has made application to the auditor of state for a deed for property situated in the township of Scott, Marion county, Ohio, being the east half of the northwest quarter of section 16, township 4, range 16, stating that he is the owner of the said premises and that the final certificate of purchase issued to John Beckley has been lost or destroyed and cannot be found after the exercise of due diligence.

Section 8525 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

"* * * when a certificate of the purchase of land sold at a land office of this state, * * * has been lost or destroyed by accident or otherwise, or when from any cause the owner of such land, by the use of due diligence, cannot find such certificate, * * * when satisfied that the original purchase money for such land has been fully paid, the governor shall execute a deed therefor in the name of the original purchaser which must recite the facts authorizing its making. Such deed shall be duly recorded in the office of the auditor of state, and such auditor must transmit it to the present claimant."

From the facts submitted it appears that the land described was granted by the United States to the state of Ohio for use of schools, and under an act of the general assembly, passed January 29, 1827, said land was authorized to be sold. From records found in the office of the auditor of state it appears that one Constant Bowen purchased in 1828 the east half of the northwest quarter of section 16, township 4, south in range 16, and paid $25.00 thereon; that one Thomas Beckley paid the second installment in 1831 in the sum of $26.50; that John Beckley paid the last two installments in 1832 and 1833 respectively, each in the sum of $26.50, but there is no record of the deed ever having been made for such property. In view of that fact it would appear that you would be authorized, under section 8525 of the General Code, to make a deed to said premises.

In an examination of the title to said property it appears that John Beckley and wife deeded the premises in question to John Roberson in 1833, and that said Roberson deeded the same to John Welker in 1834. The auditor's duplicate shows that the property was in the name of John Walker in 1837, and Johnston Kerr in 1838. Deeds of record in Marion county show that Robert Kerr deeded said property to Johnston Kerr in 1837. There is nothing to show how the property passed from John Walker to Robert Kerr. In view of that fact I do not believe that the provisions of section 8526 should be invoked. But since the title seems clear from the deed of Robert Kerr to Johnston Kerr in 1837 to the present claimant, and since it appears that no deed from the state has ever been made, it would be proper to make a deed from the state directly to John Beckley, who appears to be the original purchaser.

I herewith hand you a deed from the state of Ohio to John Beckley for execution should you come to the conclusion that such a deed should be made.

I am also handing you the abstract and correspondence relative to the matter.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN LAKE AND MONTGOMERY COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 17, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your two letters of May 13, 1918, enclosing, for my approval, final resolutions on the following improvements:

Euclid-Chardon road, I. C. H. No. 34, Sec. "B," Lake county.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—LIMITATION UPON LEVY TO PROVIDE FUND FOR PAYMENT OF TOWNSHIP'S PORTION OF COST.

For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the cost and expense of a road improvement to be borne by a township, a levy not exceeding two mills may be made without submitting the matter to the people, subject only to the limitation of fifteen mills for all taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 17, 1918.

HON. ROY R. CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of May 8, 1918, in which you make inquiry as follows:

> "The state highway department, in conjunction with the commissioners of Jefferson county and the township trustees of Saline township, have planned the construction of a gap under the directions of the state highway department, which gap connects the improved road at New Somerset with an improved road at Hammondsville. The state has agreed to pay something like $22,500.00; the county commissioners a certain per cent, the township trustees a certain per cent, and the abutting property owners a certain per cent.
> The township trustees propose that their proportion be levied by virtue of section 1222 of the General Code, their levy not to be in excess of two mills. The present tax rate levy is 10½ mills. The question that arises with me in advising them is whether they have the right to levy any amount over ten mills without the vote of the people."

Your question arises under the provisions of the highway law which have to do with the improvement of highways over which the state highway commissioner assumes jurisdiction. The question pertains particularly to the construction which should be placed upon section 1222 G. C. (107 O. L. 132), which is a part of the chapter containing the highway provisions above referred to. Said section covers a levy to provide a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the township for the construction of highways under said chapter. The part of the section relating to your inquiry reads as follows:

"Sec. 1222. * * * For the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the interested township or townships for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners or the township trustees are authorized to levy a tax not exceeding two mills upon all taxable property of the township in which such road improvement or some part thereof is situated. Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes and shall be outside of the limitation of two mills for general township purposes, and subject only to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force. Where the improvement is made upon the application of the county commissioners said county commissioners shall levy the tax and where the improvement is made upon the application of the township trustees said township trustees shall levy the tax. A county or township may use any moneys lawfully transferred from any fund in place of the taxes provided for under the provisions of this section."

You state the township trustees propose to make their levy under section 1222, supra; that the tax levy is already up to ten and one-half mills, and the question is whether the township trustees can make an additional two mill levy, without a vote of the people, under this section.

First let me suggest that the township trustees cannot make a levy for the purposes indicated, under the provisions of any other section than section 1222, supra, and further that under the provisions of this section the township trustees are authorized to make the levy in only those cases in which they make application to the state highway commissioner for state aid. When the county commissioners make application for state aid, they, and not the township trustees, must levy the tax to take care of the township's share of the cost and expense of the improvement. These are merely observations and do not go directly to the answer to your question.

The answer to your question is to be found in this provision of section 1222, supra:

"* * * Such levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes and shall be outside of the limitation of two mills for general township purposes, and subject only to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force. * * *"

If this levy is subject only to the limitation upon the combined maximum rate, we will consider what is "the combined maximum rate" of a township. Had the legislature merely used the term "maximum rate," it might have referred to the ten mill limitation; that is, the limitation beyond which any taxing authority could not go without a vote of the people. But in using the term "combined maximum rate" it evidently intended that the only limitation which was to be placed upon this levy of two mills was the combined rates levied both with and without a vote of the people; otherwise there would have been no necessity for using the word "combined." Further, this seems to have been the general policy of the legislature in the matter of road building.

We find the above quoted sentence not only in section 1222, supra, but also in a number of other sections of the General Code; for example, sections 6926, 6927, 3298-15 and 3298-18 (107 O. L., pages 100, 101, 77 and 82). The exact language above quoted is used in all of these sections and it was evidently the intention of the legislature that in levying taxes to provide a fund from which roads might be built, either by the townships, counties or the state, the only limit to said levy would be the fifteen mill limit.

Hence the only question which the budget commission would be compelled to consider year after year, in the matter of this levy, would be as to whether the same could be brought within the fifteen mill limitation and not whether it could be brought within the ten mill limitation, without a vote of the people.

Therefore answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that under section 1222, supra, in the levying of a tax of two mills for the purpose of providing a fund for the payment of the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by a township for a road improvement, the limitation to be considered is the fifteen mill and not the ten mill limitation, without a vote of the people.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FOREIGN TELEPHONE COMPANY PURCHASING DOMESTIC COMPANY ENGAGING IN INTRA-STATE AND INTERSTATE BUSINESS NOT SUBJECT TO PROVISIONS OF SECTION 183 G. C.—EXCISE TAXES.

A foreign telephone company purchasing the plant of a domestic telephone company, and thereupon engaging in both intra-state and interstate business in Ohio, is not liable to compliance with section 183 of the General Code.

Such a transaction occurring prior to June 30 of any year renders the purchaser company liable to make report and pay an excise tax based on receipts for the year ending on that date; but the receipts on which the tax is based would be the receipts accruing to the company itself during its ownership and management of the property, and would not include any part of the receipts of the vendor company during the year in question.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 17, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 17th requesting my opinion as follows:

> "The Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company, a corporation organized under the laws of West Virginia, purchased the Ohio property of The Central District Telephone Company, which it began to operate as a public utility April 1, 1918, having both intra-state and interstate receipts.
> (1) Is the company required to qualify under section 183 General Code?
> (2) Will it be liable for excise tax upon its gross receipts for 1918, and, if so, for what period will the company be required to report its receipts upon which such tax shall be based?"

The answer to your first question is furnished by section 188 of the General Code, which provides, in part, as follows:

"The preceding five sections shall not apply * * * to express, telegraph, telephone, railroad, sleeping car, transportation, or other corporations engaged in Ohio in interstate commerce; * * *"

It appears that the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company entered the state for the purpose of doing a business which was at least partly interstate. It is therefore squarely within the terms of section 188 G. C. It is not necessary that a company should engage, or offer to engage, exclusively in interstate commerce in order to be brought within this exception.

Your first question is therefore answered in the negative.

Your second question is answered by the following sections of the General Code:

"Sec. 5470. Each public utility * * * doing business in this state, shall, annually, on or before the first day of August, * * * under the oath of the person constituting such company, if a person, or under the oath of the president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or chief officer in this state, of such association or corporation, if an association or corporation, make and file with the commission a statement in such form as the commission may prescribe." (106 O. L. 571.)

"Sec. 5471. The statement, provided for in the preceding section, shall contain:

1. The name of the company.
2. The nature of the company, whether a person or persons or association or corporation, and under the laws of what state or country organized.
3. The location of its principal office.
4. The name and postoffice address of the president, secretary, auditor, treasurer and superintendent or general manager.
5. The name and postoffice address of the chief officer or managing agent of the company in this state."

"Sec. 5473-1. In the case of telegraph and telephone companies, such statement shall also contain (in) the entire gross receipts, including all sums earned or charged, whether actually received or not, for the year ending the thirtieth day of June, from whatever source derived, whether messages, telephone tolls, rentals, or otherwise, for business done within this state, including the company's proportion of gross receipts for business done by it within this state in connection with other companies, firms, corporations, persons or associations excluding therefrom all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government. Such statement shall also contain the total gross receipts of such company, for such period, from business done within this state."

"Sec. 5475. On the first Monday of September the commission shall ascertain and determine the entire gross receipts of each * * * telegraph and telephone company for business done within this state for the year ending on the thirtieth day of June, excluding therefrom, as to each of the companies named in this section, all receipts derived wholly from interstate business or business done for the federal government."

"Sec. 5483. In the month of October, annually, the auditor of state shall charge, for collection from each * * * telephone * * * company, a sum in the nature of an excise tax, for the privilege of carrying on its intra-state business, to be computed on the amount so fixed and reported by the commission as the gross receipts of such company on its intra-state business for the year covered by its annual report to the commission, as required in this act, by taking one and two-tenths per cent of all such gross receipts. * * *"

The excise tax law of this state does not provide for the case of a utility changing hands in the middle of the year, the receipts of which are to be reported. It does not cast upon the vendee company the duty of reporting anything excepting its own receipts. The privilege here is, as this department has held, that of doing the business for the year beginning on the first of July (Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1914, Vol. 2, page 1697; Express Co. v. State, 55 O. S. 69).

The receipts of the past year are used as a measure of the privilege to be enjoyed during the succeeding year, which is the thing taxed. It would have been perfectly competent for the legislature to have based the tax upon the receipts of the business for the past year, whether conducted by the company whose privilege for the succeeding year is taxed or not. In other words, consistently with the theory of the tax, the general assembly might well have required a company in the situation of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company to report not only its own receipts during the two months of the year ending on the thirtieth of June next succeeding the date on which it began business in Ohio, but also the receipts of its vendor, The Central District Telephone Company, during the ten months preceding the sale and transfer. Unfortunately, however, the legislature has failed to cover this case, as I have stated. I cannot read into section 5473-1 G. C. any requirement to the effect that anything other than the actual receipts of the reporting company shall be included in the statement.

In this connection I call attention to section 5417, which assumes further to define the term "gross receipts" as used in succeeding sections, like section 5473-1. Section 5417 provides as follows:

"The term 'gross receipts' shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by any person or persons, firm or firms, copartnership or voluntary association, joint stock association, company or corporation, wherever organized or incorporated, from the operation of any public utility, or incidental thereto or in connection therewith. The gross receipts for business done by an incorporated company, engaged in the operation of a public utility, shall be held to mean and include the entire receipts for business done by such company under the exercise of its corporate powers, whether from the operation of the public utility itself or from any other business done whatsoever."

It might be argued that the first of these two sentences would have the effect of casting upon the reporting company the duty of including in its statement of gross receipts the gross receipts of its predecessor in title from the operation of the public utility. I cannot yield assent to this view, however, and am of opinion that without more explicit provision than any which I am able to find in the statutes a company which has done business in this state for only two months preceding the thirtieth day of June has nothing to report excepting the intra-state receipts arising from its public utility business in that brief period of time.

I am of the opinion, therefore, in answer to your second question that the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Company will be liable for excise tax upon its gross receipts for the year 1918, and that, academically speaking, it will be required to report for the entire twelve months preceding the thirtieth day of June, 1918; but inasmuch as the only intra-state receipts of the company in that period of twelve months will be those accruing after it began to do business in Ohio on April 1, 1918, those receipts only will constitute the basis of the assessment of the excise tax.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE NANKIN SCHOOL DISTRICT, ASHLAND COUNTY—$26.000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Nankin school district, Ashland county, in the sum of $26,000 for the purpose of building, furnishing and equipping a new centralized school building therein.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the minutes of the proceedings relating to the creation of the Nankin rural school district and proceedings of the board of education of said school district, and of other officers, relating to the above issue of bonds.

I find all of said proceedings, both those relating to the creation of the school district and the issue of said bonds to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio, and I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district when the same are properly executed and delivered.

No bond form accompanied said transcript, and I am therefore holding the same until a proper bond form of the bonds covering said issue is prepared and submitted to this department for approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN SHELBY COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 20, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 10, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions for the following improvement:

Shelby county—Sec. "E," Sidney-Wapakoneta road, I. C. H. No. 164, type "B."

I have carefully examined said resolution entered into by the county commissioners of Shelby county, Ohio, and find the same correct in form and legal. I am therefore approving it under the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

It is not necessary for me to pass upon the other question set out in your communication, for the reason that my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, and I have heretofore passed upon the same. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL UNIVERSITY—AUTHORITY OF CITY AUDITOR OVER EXPENDITURES AND APPROPRIATIONS THEREFOR—TAX LEVIES—APPROPRIATIONS—POWER OF DIRECTORS.

The city auditor of a city maintaining a municipal university exercises the same function respecting the expenditures of appropriations from levies for the support of such university or for the maintenance of astronomical observatory, or for other scientific purposes, as he does over the expenditures of any other municipal appropriation.

The council of such city may make the second levy mentioned in section 7908 G. C. exclusively for the maintenance of the observatory, exclusively for other scientific purposes pertaining to the university, or jointly for both. When made in any of these forms the proceeds of the levy should be appropriated generally, as the directors of the university have wide, though not absolute, discretion as to the expenditure of the funds so levied.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 21, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date, as follows:

> "We are referring you to the provisions of sections 7908, 4285, 5649-3d and 280 of the General Code, and are advising you that the city auditor has received vouchers from the trustees of the University of Cincinnati approving bills covering numerous books which have been purchased for the university library and are shown in the asset accounts of the university library, such books being of a miscellaneous nature, such as Shakespeare's works, poetical works, general works on the present war, etc., etc., for the general use of the university. These vouchers are drawn upon the funds of the observatory.
> Question 1: Has not the city auditor the same discretion relative to the laws previously mentioned against drawing on appropriations of one department for supplies or equipment of another department, in this case as he has on all other bills for various departments?
> Question 2: Can observatory funds be used for other purpose than those specifically set forth by statute for the observatory proper?"

The sections referred to by you, in so far as they are material, are as follows: Section 7908 General Code:

> "The council annually may assess and levy taxes on all the taxable property of such municipal corporation to the amount of five-tenths of one mill on the dollar valuation thereof, less the amount necessary to be levied to pay the interest and sinking fund on all bonds issued for the university subsequent to June 1, 1910, to be applied by such board to the support of such university, college or institution and also levy and assess annually five one-hundredths of one mill on the dollar valuation thereof, for the establishment and maintenance of an astronomical observatory, or for other scientific purposes, to be determined by the board of directors and to be used in connection with such university, college or institution, the proceeds of which shall be applied by the board of directors for such purposes exclusively. * * *

The above tax levies shall not be subject to any limitations of rates of taxation or maximum rates provided by law, except the limitations herein provided, and the further exception that the combined maximum rate for all taxes levied in any year in any city or other tax district shall not exceed fifteen mills."

Section 4285:

"The auditor shall not allow the amount set aside for any appropriation to be overdrawn, or the amount appropriated for one item of expense to be drawn upon for any other purpose, or unless sufficient funds shall actually be in the treasury to the credit of the fund upon which such voucher is drawn. When any claim is presented to him, he may require evidence that such amount is due, and for this purpose may summon any agent, clerk or employe of the city, or any other person, and examine him upon oath or affirmation concerning such voucher or claim."

Section 5649-3d:

"At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners, exclusive of receipts and balances."

Section 280:

"All service rendered and property transferred from one institution, department, improvement, or public service industry, to another, shall be paid for at its full value. * * *"

I refer you also to section 7909 General Code, which provides as follows:

"Such levies shall be made by the council at the time, and in like manner as other levies for other municipal purposes, and must be certified by it and placed upon the tax duplicate as other municipal levies. The funds of any such university, college or institution shall be paid out by the treasurer upon the order of the board of directors and the warrant of the auditor."

As a basis for the views which I shall express I refer you to my opinion of recent date respecting the control on the part of the budget commission and other levying authorities as regards the levies made under authority of section 7908 General Code. I held in that opinion that under sections 7908 and 7909 no special immunity from the provisions relative to the machinery for levying taxes, other than that expressed in the last paragraph of section 7908, is accorded to the levies therein provided for. In other words, these levies and appropriations therefrom are to be treated just the same as other levies made by the council of a municipal corporation for proper municipal purposes. All the sections above quoted, therefore, apply to the appropriation and expenditure of the proceeds of these levies.

Your first question is therefore answered in the affirmative; and your second question in the negative, with the qualification that the levy mentioned in section 7908 is to be not only "for the establishment and maintenance of an astronomical observatory," but also "for other scientific purposes;" which purposes are "to be determined by the board of directors," but the proceeds of which are to be "applied by the board of directors for such purposes exclusively."

The so-called "observatory levy" may, therefore, be so made by council as to be available for purposes other than maintenance of the observatory itself, provided they are scientific purposes. Council must appropriate the proceeds of the levy, but inasmuch as the directors are to determine the scientific purposes to which it shall be applied, it would seem that council's appropriation could be no more specific than the levy itself, and that the final discretion as to what scientific purposes the appropriation shall be expended for must be left to the board of directors. However, the fact that the board of directors has some discretion does not lead to the conclusion that the discretion is unlimited; the purposes for which the proceeds of the levy may be expended in the discretion of the directors must be "scientific purposes." It would seem that the purchase of literary and historical books could scarcely be designated as a scientific purpose.

I have said that the council may, in the first instance, make the levy so as to be available for purposes other than the maintenance of the observatory itself. The council is the levying authority. It may make the levy under section 7908 in any of three ways:

(1) For the maintenance of the observatory.

(2) For the maintenance of the observatory or for other scientific purposes, etc.

(3) For scientific purposes other than the maintenance of the observatory.

If the levy is in the first form then, of course, its proceeds may not be appropriated or expended save for the maintenance of the observatory proper; if it is made in the third form then the purposes for which it may be appropriated and expended must be scientific purposes other than the maintenance of the observatory. This is made clear by the fact that such purposes are "to be determined by the board of directors and to be used in connection with such university" (not in connection with such observatory).

If the levy is made in the second or third forms above suggested the appropriation thereof should be in the general form which I have stated above, and the directors would then have the broad discretion which I have described, save that they would have to exercise their discretion reasonably so as not to divert wholly from the maintenance of the observatory funds levied in part for that purpose.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CORPORATIONS—UNPAID SUBSCRIPTIONS TO CAPITAL STOCK AND SUMS DUE UNDER EXECUTORY CONTRACTS FOR PURCHASE OF SUCH STOCK MUST BE LISTED FOR TAXATION AS PERSONAL PROPERTY—HOW PROPERTY OF SOLDIER ABSENT FROM COUNTY IN THE ACTIVE MILITARY SERVICE OF THE COUNTRY LISTED FOR TAXATION.

Unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a private corporation and sums due under executory contracts for the purchase of such stock made with the corporation, are, in the hands of the corporation, assets constituting a part of its capital stock and are to be listed for taxation as "personal property" and not as "credits;" i. e., the debts of the corporation may not be deducted from them.

Tangible personal property of a soldier absent in the active military service of the country is to be listed by the soldier himself as owner, unless it has been left by him in the possession of an agent or trustee; if left in the mere custody of a servant, the soldier retaining constructive possession, the soldier must list the property; if left in the possession of a bailee the duty of listing is, under the statutes, not clear, the question being involved in a pending case and no opinion is expressed with respect thereto.

Intangible personal property of a soldier so absent is to be listed by him unless the evidences thereof are in the control of a trustee, agent, guardian or parent, with authority to manage the fund represented thereby. Parents and guardians have this authority as a matter of law; trustees and agents would have it only if conferred upon them by the soldier.

A soldier in active service has, theoretically, the capacity to change his domicile; but no change of domicile can be predicated upon presence at a given place in accordance with the requirements of the service alone. The evidence of such change of domicile by a soldier must be clear and unequivocal. Possible cases considered are presenting circumstances bearing upon change of domicile.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 21, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 10th requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Corporations are in the habit of issuing certain portions of the stock of the company to their employes and deduct the unpaid subscriptions from the salary of the employe, on an installment plan basis. In some instances this subscribed but undelivered stock is carried as an asset, and the paid-up portion as a liability. In other instances they charge the face of the stock as though it were entirely paid-up, as a liability, and carry the unpaid subscriptions as accounts receivable and as assets. Is an unpaid subscription an account receivable, and should they be treated as such by the company in its return?
> Personal property located within the county, belonging to individuals now in the service of the United States, at various camps or bureau headquarters: Who has authority to list this property for the soldier? Can the auditor place it on as omitted property? If it consists of moneys, credits and other intangibles does it follow the residence of the owner; and if a soldier in the service of the government, can such soldier create any residence other than that where he last resided as a citizen?"

Unquestionably, an unpaid stock subscription is naturally a "credit," or, as you put it, an "account receivable" of the corporation. Upon the making of a subscription to the capital stock of an incorporated company an obligation arises to pay the par value of the stock or such other sum as may be payable by the terms of the subscription. The relation of debtor and creditor exists. When stock is issued at a discount or for over-valued property it is frequently held that as between the corporation and the subscriber no more is due than the amount expressly agreed to be paid for the property turned over; but that subsequent creditors of the corporation dealing with it without knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the subscription may hold the subscribers, or their assignees with notice, for the difference between the true value of the assets turned over to the corporation and the par value of the stock. Even this doctrine, however, does not seem to be applicable to the case of a corporation which as a going concern and with assets impaired issues stock upon an agreement to pay what the said stock would be worth in the open market. Such a transaction is rather to be regarded as a sale of stock than as an original subscription, though it is not in reality such. This last doctrine is not universally accepted, and probably is not accepted in Ohio, but as between the corporation and the person to whom stock is issued such agreements are probably binding.

Peter v. Union Mfg. Co. et al., 56 O. S. 181.

I mention these rules in a very general way to show that it is not universally true that the credit which exists in favor of the corporation on account of the issuance of stock to a person who does not pay the full par value is to be measured, in the first instance, by the difference between the amount paid and the full par value of the stock. Your question does not go to the value of the thing to be taxed, however, but it is a question as to its nature as a subject of taxation. I might add in respect to the matter of value that, like any other credit, a claim for unpaid subscription installments would have to be listed at its actual value rather than its face value.

I have said that primarily a stock subscription, or an agreement to purchase, partly executory, is in the hands of the corporation naturally a "credit" or "account receivable." I mean by this that, without legislation classifying it otherwise for the purpose of taxation, it would fall into such classifications, but as a matter of Ohio statutory law it will not do to say that a thing is to be classified as a "credit" simply because it represents the obligation of a debtor to pay and the correlative right of the creditor to enforce payment. A bond does that, but it is separately classified as a subject of taxation; a note secured by mortgage is none the less a "credit" in its intrinsic character, but it is made "personal property" by section 5325 General Code; bank deposits give rise to the relation of debtor and creditor and nothing more, yet if payable on demand they are regarded as "moneys" and so defined by section 5326 General Code, although if the deposit were with an individual instead of with a bank it would be merely a "credit."

The same thing is true, in my opinion, of unpaid stock subscriptions considered as assets of the corporation. Section 5325 General Code provides, in part, as follows:

> "The term 'personal property' * * * includes * * * the capital stock, undivided profits, and all other means not forming part of the capital stock of every company, whether incorporated or unincorporated. * * * "

Unpaid stock subscriptions constitute a part of the capital stock of the corporation. It is upon this theory that subsequent creditors are entitled to enforcement of their payment and that the subscriber is not permitted to set off claims due him from the corporation against the claim on the unpaid subscription (Sawyer v. Hoag, 17 Wall. 610); though the doctrine does not apply while the corporation is a going concern but only when it becomes insolvent (Clark v. Bever, 139 U. S. 96); yet its application then is predicated upon the principle that in equity the debt of a subscriber is a part of the capital stock. See Niles v. Olszak, 87 O. S. 229, in which the application of the rule to building and loan association stock was denied, but in which the rule itself is recognized. (Gates v. Tippecanoe Stone Co., 57 O. S. 60.)

But if there were any doubt as to whether or not unpaid stock subscriptions are intended to be treated as "personal property" in contradistinction to "credits," arising in view of the provisions of section 5325 G. C. standing by itself, such doubt would be dispelled, I think, by consideration of section 5327, which defines the term "credits." That section provides, in part, as follows:

> "Sec. 5327. The term 'credits' as so used, means the excess of the sum of all legal claims and demands, whether for money or other valuable thing, or for labor or service due or to become due to the person liable to pay taxes thereon, including deposits in banks or with persons in or out of the state, other than such as are held to be money, as hereinbefore defined, when added together, estimating every such claim or demand at its true value in money, over and above the sum of legal bona fide debts owing by such person. In making up the sum of such debts owing, there shall not be taken into account an obligation to a mutual insurance company, nor an unpaid subscription to the capital stock of a joint stock company, nor a subscription for a religious, scientific, literary, or charitable purpose; * * *"

I do not believe that the phrase "joint stock company" as used in this context is employed in any technical sense; on the contrary, I think it is equivalent to the word "corporation." I make this statement in full view of the fact that in earlier provisions of the same subdivision of the same chapter, originally a part of the same section of the Revised Statutes (section 2730, 56 Ohio Laws 175) the phrase "association, corporation, joint stock company or other company" is used, from which the inference might arise that the general assembly in defining the term "credits" intended to distinguish between joint stock companies and corporations. The two terms seem to have been used interchangeably in the legislation extant in 1859, at the time the provisions under consideration became incorporated in our statutory law. Thus in Swan and Critchfield's Statutes of 1860, page 309, sections 92 and 93, we find it declared that "any joint stock company heretofore incorporated" may secure permission to complete an improvement which it has been organized to complete within a specified time "as is hereinafter provided;" the succeeding provisions are to the effect that—

> "upon petition being filed by the directors of any corporation in the court of common pleas of the county in which the principal office of such corporation is located certain proceedings shall be had."

Here there is a shift from the phrase "joint stock company" to the term "corporation" in the very same act of only two sections.

Again, by section 1 of the act passed March 14, 1853, entitled "An act supplementary to the act to provide for the creation and regulation of incorporated companies in the state of Ohio," it was provided:

> "That in all joint stock companies, other than railroad companies, which have been or which shall hereafter be organized under the provisions of the act to which this act is supplementary, any and all installments of stock which shall remain unpaid sixty days after payment of the same shall have been required, * * * may be collected by a civil action, or the directors may sell the stock so unpaid, at public auction * * *."

Here we have the term "joint stock company" used in a sense naturally broad enough to include railroad companies, which, I think it will be conceded, must be considered to be "corporations" in a general sense and which indeed are referred to repeatedly as "corporations" in the sections of the acts then in force specifically dealing with railroad companies. (See Swan & Critchfield, page 271, section 19 et seq.)

Reading sections 5325 and 5327 together it is apparent that the legislature did not intend that unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation should be regarded either as "credits" in the hands of the corporation or as "debts" of the subscriber subject to deduction from his other credits.

Of course, the only difference between "credits" and "accounts receivable" which are not credits is that debts may be deducted from the former, while they may not be deducted from the latter.

I am aware that section 5325 includes within the category of things which are to constitute "personal property" not merely the capital stock, but also all means not forming part of the capital stock of an incorporated company, and that section 5404 of the General Code requires a corporation, through its proper officers, to list for taxation, inter alia, its "credits."

I do not find it necessary in this opinion to decide the question thus suggested respecting the right of a corporation to deduct its debts from its general accounts receivable for the purpose of determining its taxable credits; but content myself with the statement, based as well upon section 5327 as upon section 5325, that unpaid subscriptions to the capital stock of a corporation are not to be treated as general credits of the corporation for the purpose of taxation.

I have interpreted the first part of your letter as calling for a determination of the question as to whether or not unpaid stock subscriptions are "credits." You use the term "accounts receivable" in your letter, but this term is not found in the taxation statutes. I answer your question therefore by saying that while, naturally, an unpaid stock subscription or an executory contract of purchase of the stock of a corporation is, in the hands of the company, an "account receivable" in the general sense, it should not be listed as "credits" subject to deduction of debts, but as "personal property" from which debts are not to be deducted. In passing I may say that the manner in which the corporation keeps its books is a matter of no concern so far as the taxation of its property is involved.

I find it necessary to consider your second question first on the hypothesis that a soldier's domicile continues to be in the county of his former residence in Ohio. As you apparently intend to inquire about all kinds of personal property in the broad sense, including intangibles and tangible personal property, I shall have to consider this hypothesis under two additional suppositions: First as to tangibles and, second as to intangibles.

If a soldier, either by enlistment or through draft, enters the service in the army of the United States and leaves at his home articles of tangible personal property, it will not, of course, be assumed that he has abandoned such property. On the contrary, it must be presumed in each case that he has left the property in the care, and indeed in the full legal possession, of some one as his agent or trustee for that purpose. He knows where the property is and he has consented that somebody shall have the care, if not the use of it, during his absence in the army. The dominion thus resigned by him to the other party would probably be more than mere custody; so that if the person in whose charge the property were left as agent or trustee should convert it to his own use he would be guilty of embezzlement and not of larceny. On the other hand, if the relation of master and servant had existed between the custodian with whom the property was left and the soldier, and the latter went away without intending in any way to alter the legal relations that had theretofore existed between the parties, it might be that the servant's dominion would be no more than custody. At the other extreme, it might be that the departing soldier would have left the goods in the possession of one as bailee. The point I make is that in no case could the property be regarded as abandoned by the soldier.

Coming now to the statutes, we find that section 5372-1 of the General Code, which apparently is still in force, provides as follows:

> "Personal property, moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies or otherwise in the possesion or control of a person as parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, assignee, receiver, official custodian, factor, agent, attorney, or otherwise, on the day preceding the second Monday of April in any year on account of any person or persons, company, firm, partnership, association or corporation, shall be listed by the person having the possession or control thereof and be entered upon the tax lists and duplicate, in the name of such parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, assignee, receiver, official custodian, factor, agent, attorney or other person, adding to such name words briefly indicating the capacity in which such person has possession of or otherwise controls said property, and the name of the person, estate, firm, company, partnership, association or corporation to whom it belongs; but the failure to indicate the capacity of the person in whose name such property is listed or the name of the person, estate, firm, company, partnership, association or corporation to whom it belongs shall not affect the validity of any assessment thereof."

> "Each person of full age and sound mind shall list the personal property of which he is the owner, and all moneys in his possession, all moneys invested, loaned, or otherwise controlled by him, as agent or attorney, or on account of any other person or persons, company or corporation, and all moneys deposited subject to the order, check, or draft; all credits due or owing any person or persons, body corporate or politic, whether in or out of such county; and all money loaned on pledge or mortgage of real estate, although a deed or other instrument may have been given for it, if between the parties, it is considered as security merely. The property of a ward shall be listed by his guardian, of a minor child, idiot, or lunatic having no guardian, by his father, if living, if not, by his mother, if living, and if neither father nor mother is living, by the person having such property in charge; of a person for whose benefit property is held in trust, by the trustees; of an estate of a deceased person, by his executor or administrator; of corporations whose assets are in the hands of receivers, by such receivers; of a company, firm, or corporation, by the president or principal accounting officer, partner or agent thereof; and all surplus or undivided profits held by a society for savings or bank having no capital stock, by the president or principal accounting officer."

Section 5369:

> "A person or party so listing property, or other items named in the statement described in the next preceding section, shall take and subscribe an oath or affirmation according to law, to be administered by the assessor, to the effect, adapting the form to the capacity in which the person making the return acts, that the statement contains, as he verily believes, a true account of all the taxable personal property, moneys, credits, and investments in bonds, stocks, joint-stock companies, annuities or otherwise, owned or controlled by such person for his own use, or as parent, guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, accounting officer, factor, agent, or otherwise, * * *"

There are other statutes in which the same catalogue of representatives or custodians is repeated. Without quoting them suffice it to say that if one person has the possession or control of the tangible personal property of another in any of the capacities mentioned in the statute, it is the duty of the first person to list the same for taxation; but if property is in the manual custody of another otherwise than in one of these enumerated capacities the true owner of the property must list the same under section 5370 of the General Code.

Clearly, if the soldier's property were left in the mere custody of a servant, he at all times retaining the constructive possession—which he would exercise if he chose by directions given to the servant by letter or otherwise—section 5372-1 would not apply and it would be the legal duty of the soldier to make the return.

Equally as clearly, if the property were left in the possession of a trustee or agent, or parent or guardian (in case the soldier were under age), it should be listed by the person with whom it was left.

A more difficult question is furnished by the case of a bailee. Suppose, for example, the tangible personal property of the soldier is left in the possession of a warehouseman with whom it is stored. The identical question as to whether or not a warehouseman is within the terms of section 5372-1 G. C. is involved in a case now pending in the court of appeals of Hamilton county and entitled Pagels v. Beaman, Auditor. The court of insolvency of Hamilton county had held that the section does not apply to warehousemen. Decisions from other states are to the same effect. This office is making an effort to secure an opposite ruling, and I would not care to express an opinion at this stage of the proceedings in that case otherwise than to say that I entertain grave doubt as to whether or not a mere bailee is compellable to list for taxation property left in his possession.

The rule as to intangibles (still assuming the legal residence of the soldier to be in the county which he left to join the army) is based upon different tests. Intangibles not being choses in possession the test of possession drops out and that of control, as suggested by section 5372-1 G. C., becomes applicable. As a matter of Ohio law it has been held that the control here involved must be such as to enable the representative to exercise control over the fund represented by the chose in action, so that he would have not only authority to collect it, or the income derived from it, but also to apply the proceeds by way of reinvestment or otherwise.

Lee v. Dawson, 8 C. C. 365;
Myers v. Seaberger, 45 O. S. 232;
Grant v. Jones, 39 O. S. 506;
McKnight v. Dudley, 103 Fed. 918.

Of course, a guardian or trustee would have this authority as a matter of law, but an agent or attorney could only have it if in fact it had been delegated to him. If securities such as stocks or bonds were left in a safety deposit box at a bank the bank would not be required to list them for taxation because, obviously, it would have no control over them in the sense in which I have just defined that term. In all such cases the person in whose possession the evidences of indebtedness or certificates of interest might be left would not be required to list them for taxation; the duty of so listing them would remain with the soldier as the owner.

The question now arises as to whether or not the county auditor, in case the soldier being under a duty to list either tangible or intangible property for taxation fails to do so, has authority to place same on the duplicate as omitted property. Unquestionably he has this authority. Congress by act of March 8, 1918, has acted to a certain extent for the protection of soldiers in active service; but this legislation does not interfere with the taxing laws of the state except to prevent the sale for taxes of real property occupied by the family of a soldier as a home (see section 500 of that act). I know of no common law exception in favor of soldiers as against the duty to submit to the taxing laws of the country. However, it would be going too far, I think, to advise as a matter of administration that the auditor should proceed upon the basis that there has been, in the case of a soldier, a wilful failure to return or list his property for taxation. His service to the country should at least absolve him from the charge of a wilful violation of the law. On the contrary, the case seems to come squarely within the provisions of sections 5392 and 5397 of the General Code, which provide as follows:

> "Sec. 5392. When the failure to make or verify such statement is occasioned by the sickness or absence of the person who should make or verify it, * * * the assessor, if unable to obtain positive evidence of the items or value, may make the statement from general reputation and his own knowledge of facts and circumstances."
> "Sec. 5397. When any person has been prevented from making or verifying a statement of property for taxation, by sickness or absence, and the assessor has made a statement for him, at any time before the assessment of taxes thereon by the county auditor, such person may make, verify and file with the auditor the proper statement. In such case before the auditor shall receive the statement the person making it must add to the ordinary affidavit, a statement to the effect that his failure to give to the assessor or verify the statement at the proper time was occasioned by sickness or absence. On the filing of such statement the auditor shall correct the statement made by the assessor."

In a proper case this procedure might be followed. It would seem unfair, however, under present circumstances to permit the assessor to guess at the value of the property which should have been returned by the absent soldier, inasmuch as the difficulty of obtaining a correct return from the soldier before the assessment of taxes will no doubt be insuperable. I suggest, rather, the procedure outlined in section 5401 of the General Code, which is in form one for the correction of the return of the assessor. The placing of omitted property on the duplicate by this provision is not attended by penalties of any sort, and is to be based only upon positive information under oath. It affords, to my mind, the best available statutory provision for getting the property about which you inquire on the duplicate without doing injustice to the soldier.

The last question which you ask relates, as you correctly assume, only to the situs of intangibles, which according to the law of this state take the situs of the residence of the owner. You inquire whether or not a soldier in the service of the government can create any residence other than that where he last resided as a citizen.

The mere fact that he is a soldier does not make him a person of abnormal status, incapable of acquiring a domicile of choice; nor, on the other hand, does the fact that he has physically left his former home in order to comply with the requirements of the service in which he is enlisted constitute a change of domicile.

For present purposes a "domicile of choice" may be defined as a place chosen by a person as his abiding place with the intention of remaining there permanently or indefinitely. There is a doctrine in England to the effect that when a person abandons a home without the intention of returning to that place, his domicile of origin, i. e., the place where his parents lived when he was born, reverts and becomes his domicile for the time being until he shall have acquired a new domicile of choice. (Udny v. Udny, L. R. 1 H. L. Sec. 441.) So far as I am able to ascertain this doctrine has not been accepted in this country. (Borland v. Boston, 132 Mass. 89. See Barhydt v. Cross, 40 L. R. A. n. s. 986 and note.)

Perhaps the rule with respect to soldiers is as well stated in 14 Cyc., 849, as anywhere. It is as follows:

> "In general it can be said that a domicile is neither gained nor lost during military service, and although a soldier, if both the fact and intent concur, can establish a new domicile during his term of enlistment, this will not be deemed to have occurred in the absence of the clearest and most unequivocal proof. No domicile will be acquired merely from having been stationed in the line of duty at any particular place."

If a soldier, required by the lawful orders of his superior to go in the line of his active service to a particular place, should become enamored of that place and move his family there, with the intention of making that his permanent residence, I have no doubt that an effectual change in domicile would thereby take place. If he were a single man, however, it would be very difficult to show by any convincing proof that any such change of domicile had taken place. Contemporaneous declarations included in letters would go far toward establishing such a change, but, as the text cited states, the proof must be clear and unequivocal. This is because, though a soldier retains his normal status and is under no real legal incapacity, he is in point of fact under a species of quasi incapacity because his will is not entirely free. That is to say, his will to go from place to place is circumscribed. He cannot be absent from his command without leave, and the quarters in which he abides are not selected by his choice but by the choice of the proper superior military authority. In this latter respect there is perhaps some difference, under certain circumstances, between the case of a private soldier or non-commissioned officer and that of an officer who, though required to be at a post of duty, is sometimes permitted to live in his own quarters. So long as the intention as related to the place is thus circumscribed it would be pretty hard to show in an individual case that the requisite fact and intent necessary to constitute a change of domicile had concurred. In the case of a private soldier the fact would be lacking because while living in quarters he would not be abiding in a home selected by himself; so that, unless he had a family which he could establish in a new home, his own situation could with difficulty form the predicate of the necessary factum. In the case of both a soldier and an officer the continuing obligation to be where the necessities of the service and the orders of superior officers require would be a fact to be taken into consideration in connection with the intent that is requisite to establish a new domicile.

In view of these considerations I can only answer your question by saying that it is legally possible for a soldier in the service of the government to create a residence other than that where he last resided as a citizen; but that every presumption is against such a change of residence and is to be rebutted only by clear and unequivocal proof. No safe rule for the solution of all possible cases can therefore be laid down.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE VILLAGE OF CHAGRIN FALLS, CUYAHOGA COUNTY, $7,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 23, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE:—Bonds of the village of Chagrin Falls, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, in the sum of $7,500.00, for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of procuring additional water rights and to install additional equipment and machinery and to build an additional reservoir to furnish and supply the inhabitants of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, necessary water for domestic use and for protection of property against loss or damage by fire.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the village of Chagrin Falls, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds. Said issue is not in excess of any limitation imposed by law and the proceedings relating to said issue, both as to the purpose thereof and otherwise, are, in my opinion, in conformity with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio.

With respect to the purpose of said issue, I am quite clearly of the opinion that under paragraphs 11 and 12 of section 3939 General Code bonds may be issued by a municipality for the purpose of securing a source or means of water supply, as well as for the purpose of procuring machinery and other equipment for the purpose of effecting a distribution of such water. The securing of a source or means of water supply is within the enumerated powers of municipal corporations (see sections 3619 and 3677 G. C.); and under the above noted provisions of section 3939 General Code it seems quite clear that a municipality has authority to issue bonds necessary to carry into effect the specific power granted it by sections 3619 and 3677 G. C. with respect to water-works (see Akron v. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66, 74, 75).

In line with this view I note that my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in an opinion by him under date of August 14, 1913 (Annual Report of Attorney General for 1913, volume II, page 1662), held that a village may issue bonds under the Longworth act to meet the expenses of drilling wells for the purpose of extending, enlarging, improving or securing a more complete water-works system.

As above indicated, my views are in accord with those of my predecessor in the opinion just referred to, and with reference to the bond issue here under consideration I am of the opinion that the village has authority to issue bonds for the purpose of procuring necessary additional water rights and for the purpose of building an additional reservoir to secure the necessary source or means of water supply, as well as for the purpose of installing additional water-works machinery and equipment.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that said bond issue is in every respect in conformity to the provisions of law, and that bonds covering said issue properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of the said village, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—SEPARATE SUPERVISION.

A rural school district which is not wholly centralized cannot be continued as a separate supervision district under section 4740, as amended in 107 O. L., 622.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1918.

HON. ROBERT M. NOLL, Prosecuting Attorney, Marietta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—My opinion is requested by you on the following statement of facts:

> "Washington county had four (4) separate supervision districts created under authority of section 4740 G. C., prior to the amendment of this section in 1917. Such districts have not been placed under district supervision since the amendment.
> I have examined opinion of your office No. 767, given November 7, 1917, and I find myself unable to advise our county school superintendent definitely as to the effect of this amendment.
> I would therefore be pleased to have you give me your opinion stating whether or not the four districts should be placed under district supervision at this time."

In order to arrive at a thorough understanding of the matters which brought about your inquiry, it will be necessary to note under what circumstances supervision districts of a county school district are formed and also under what circumstances or conditions a district may be continued or established as a separate district under section 4740 G. C.

Supervision districts of the county school district were first provided for in 1914 in what is commonly called the new school code. It was provided in section 4738 thereof that the county board of education shall, within thirty days after such county board of education was first organized (that is, 1914), divide the county school district into supervision districts and that each district was to contain one or more village or rural school districts. Certain other limitations not material to this opinion were also provided for and authority was given the county board of education "upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county" to redistrict the county into supervision districts in any year. Supervision was thus provided for every school district of the county school district. At the time of the enactment, however, of said original section 4738, there existed numerous districts in the state which already had employed superintendents who had been so employed under authority of section 7705 G. C., as said section existed prior to the enactment of the new school code, and so that such districts might retain their superintendents who had theretofore been employed and might not be under the jurisdiction of the district superintendent, there was enacted at the same time original section 4738 was enacted another section, No. 4740, which read as follows:

> "Any village or rural district or union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employs a superintendent and which officially certifies by the clerk or clerks of the board of education on or before July 20, 1914, that it will employ a superintendent who gives at least one-half of his time in supervision, shall upon application to the county board of education be continued as a separate supervision district so long as the superintendent receives a salary of at least one thousand dollars and continues to give one-half of his time to supervision work. Such districts shall receive such portion of state aid for the payment of the salary of the district superintendent as is based on the ratio of the number of teachers employed to forty, multiplied by the fraction which represents that fraction of the regular school day which the superintendent gives to supervision. The county superintendent shall make no nomination of a district superintendent in such district until a vacancy in such superintendency occurs. After the first vacancy occurs in the superintendency of such a district all appointments shall be made on the nomination of the county superintendent in the manner provided in section 4739. A vacancy shall occur only when such superintendent resigns, dies or fails of re-election.
> Any school district or districts, having less than twenty teachers, isolated from the remainder of the county school district by supervision districts provided for in this section shall be joined for supervision purposes to one or more of such supervision districts, but the superintendent or superintendents already employed in such supervision district or districts shall be in charge of the enlarged supervision district or districts until a vacancy occurs."

Said section in effect provides that, subject to the conditions and limitations therein provided, the county board of education may designate certain districts as "separate supervision districts" and when so created the superintendent therein was named as and paid in the same manner as other district superintendents. He was in fact a district superintendent for said separate supervision district. Said section however, was amended in 1915, 106 O. L., 439, to read as follows:

> "Any village or rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before September 10, 1915, or before June 1st of any year thereafter, be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent. Such district shall continue to be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendent shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct. Such districts shall receive no state aid for the payment of the salaries of their superintendents, and the salaries shall be paid by the board employing such superintendents."

A marked change is noted in said amended section, last above quoted, from the way in which it originally read. The original section provided for three classes of districts, viz., village, rural and union of school districts for supervision purposes, which could become separate supervision districts. The amended section provided, in the place of the class "union of school districts for supervision purposes," a different class, viz., "union of school districts for high school purposes." Union of school districts for supervision purposes was provided for under section 7705, as it existed prior to the enactment of the new school code, but was not provided for under the new school code, and the former section 7705 was repealed and re-enacted as a new section, with said provision in relation to the union of school districts for supervision purposes being eliminated.

In original section 4740 it was provided that the application must be filed before July 20, 1914, but in the amendment last above noted the application was to be filed before September 10, 1915, or before June 1st of any year thereafter, and no district could be so continued without such application. It was provided in the original section under what conditions or limitations such district should continue as a separate supervision district, but in the 1915 amendment the conditions were changed and it was provided that "such district shall continue to be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district, by resolution, shall petition to become a part of the supervision district of the county school district." In the original section it was provided that the state should grant state aid to assist in the payment of such superintendent, that is, from what was commonly called state aid for supervision purposes, but in the amendment of 1915 it was provided that such district "shall receive no state aid for the payment of the salaries of their superintendents and the salaries shall be paid by the board employing such superintendents." There were other changes made by the amendment in 1915, but nothing, I think, which would be material to the question before us.

It seems to me, however, that we are forced to conclude that the legislature, in its 1915 amendment of said section, intended to deprive the superintendent of such a district of whatever position he occupied as a district superintendent, except that of simply performing the duties which usually devolve upon a district superintendent That is to say, when said section was so amended and made to read that the district should be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent, and that the superintendent of such district should be paid by the board of education of the district, and that the district should receive no state aid for supervision purposes, and that instead of being designated a separate supervision district it was only designated as a "separate district," then and for those reasons it seems to me that the district went out from under the supervision of a district superintendent and went under the supervision of the county superintendent. Said position is fortified further by the fact that the language used in the 1915 amendment permitted the district to continue to be under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education by resolution petitions the county board of education to become "a part of a supervision district of the county school district."

Districts which had existed prior to the amendment of 1915 as a union of school districts for supervision purposes could not take advantage of the provisions of said amended section and become a separate district. In other words, the only districts which could file a proper application to be continued as separate districts under the amendment of 1915 were village, rural and union of school districts for high school purposes.

> "Any village or wholly centralized rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent, shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendents shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct."

Here again the classes of districts are changed, for instead of any rural district which employed a superintendent, etc., being eligible to be continued as a separate district under said last amendment, only "wholly centralized rural" districts are so eligible. So that the classes as they now exist, which may make application to be continued as separate districts, are a village, wholly centralized rural, or union of school districts for high school purposes.

It was held by this department in opinion No. 244, rendered under date of May 5, 1917, found in volume I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, page 621, that the word "continued," as used in said section, should be read to mean "established" when it applied to districts making a first application thereunder, and the section is perfectly clear that there could be no establishment of separate districts other than those which would come within the three classes, last above mentioned. But, in your request you say that there existed four "separate supervision districts" which had been created under authority of section 4740 prior to the amendment in 1917, and inasmuch as the statute of 1915 used the term "separate districts" instead of "separate supervision district," as it was used in 1914, I am taking it that the districts you mention had been created as "separate supervision districts" in 1914 and that they were properly continued as separate districts in 1915, and that the only reason the question is now raised is, that the districts are not village or union of school districts for high school purposes, but that they are rural districts and that as such rural districts they are not wholly centralized, and your question resolves itself into the following, viz., can a rural school district, not wholly centralized, which existed as a separate district prior to the amendment of 1917, be continued as a separate district since said amendment?

As noted at the outset of this opinion, when the new school code was passed and the county board of education had been properly elected, and had qualified and organized, it was the duty of such board to divide the entire county district into supervision districts, taking into consideration, of course, any separate supervision districts which were at that time permitted.

Section 4738 was amended in 1915, 106 O. L. 396, to read as follows:

> "The county board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. The county board of education may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county. This shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools."

It is provided in said section that the county board of education shall divide the county school district "any year" into supervision districts and that such districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable, and that in case the county board of education shall receive an application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards, then the county board of education must redistrict the county into supervision districts. Said section also provides that the board of education of the county school district "may at their discretion require the county superintendent to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers of the village or rural schools of the county" and that this shall supersede the necessity of the district supervision of these schools. That is, if for any reason territory is annexed to a county school district, and it is necessary to attach to some supervision district, or if, say a district, which had been existing as a separate district, should, by its board of education, pass a resolution petitioning the county board of education to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district, or if for any other reason it was necessary in the judgment of the board of education of the county school district, to redistrict the county, said section 4738 gives authority to the county board of education whereby said purpose may be accomplished. Or, if three-fourths of the presidents of the village or rural school districts of the county school district petition the county board of education to do so, the county board of education must redistrict said county into supervision districts. In making said supervision districts, the county board of education must include all territory of the county school district, except that the county superintendent may be compelled by the county board of education to personally supervise not to exceed forty teachers, and I am taking it that the territory in which said forty teachers are located, while being a part of the county school district, would not be a part of any supervision district in the county school district.

In ascertaining the territory of the county school district, which is to be assigned to the various supervision districts, the county board of education, in so redistricting the county school district, must ascertain whether or not there are any districts in the county which have been continued or established as separate districts, and whether or not they can qualify to so continue as such separate districts. If there exists any such district which has been continued as a separate district, which has failed to employ a superintendent, then such district could not longer continue as a separate district. So likewise, if it is found that there exists a separate district which does not come within the class of a wholly centralized rural district, it is my opinion that such district could not longer be continued as a separate district and such district would have to be assigned by the county board of education to a supervision district of the county school district, or the county board of education would have to require the county superintendent to personally supervise the teachers of such district, provided the number did not exceed forty in the entire county school district.

You say you have examined opinion No. 767, rendered by this department on November 7, 1917, and that you are unable to advise your county superintendent definitely as to the effect of the amendment since reading said opinion. There were three questions answered in said opinion: First, what is meant by a "wholly centralized rural school district;" second, are rural school districts, which are not wholly centralized, entitled to have separate supervision as now provided by section 4740 G. C., and, third, where the centralization of schools has been carried into effect, is it necessary that all the schools be centralized under one roof? Inasmuch as you have a copy of said opinion, it will not be necessary for me to enclose one herewith, and that, together with this opinion, will answer your inquiry.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that a rural school district, which is not wholly centralized, cannot be continued as a separate supervision district under section 4740, as amended in 107 O. L. 622.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SANDUSKY COUNTY, $136,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Sandusky County, Ohio, in the sum of $136,000.00, for the purpose of paying the respective shares of said county of York and Green Creek townships, and of the owners of benefited property assessed, of the cost and expense of improving the Fremont-Bellevue road, I. C. H. No. 274, section L-2.

I have made a careful examination of the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Sandusky county, Ohio, and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in all respects in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county to be paid according to the terms thereof.

The bond form submitted with and as a part of said transcript is not entirely satisfactory to me and I am therefore holding the transcript of the proceedings relating to this bond issue until a bond form meeting my approval is prepared and submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

NOTARY FEES—LEGAL CHARGE AGAINST CITY FUND FOR ACKNOWLEDGING CEMETERY DEEDS—CITY SOLICITOR.

Notary fees for acknowledging cemetery deeds are legal charges against the funds of the city. However, these fees may not be paid to or received by the city solicitor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter as follows:

"We refer you to section 4165 G. C., Opinions of the Attorney-General, page 223, of the 1913 reports, and page 405 of the 1915 reports.

Question: Are notary fees for acknowledging cemetery deeds a legal charge against the funds of the municipality?"

I note you refer to an opinion found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, Vol. 1, page 223, and to an opinion of the attorney-general found in the 1915 reports, Vol. 1, page 405. In the first of these opinions it was held:

"Under section 3808, General Code, which prohibits any officer of a corporation from having any interest in the expenditure of money on the part of the corporation other than his fixed compensation, under penalty of dismissal from office; and also under section 12912, General Code, which prohibits an officer from being interested in the profits of any services for such corporation, under penalty of fine or imprisonment and forfeiture of office, a city solicitor may not receive compensation in addition to his salary for taking acknowledgment of cemetery deeds as notary public."

In the second opinion it is held:

"A notary fee on an affidavit in proof of publication is not a public charge unless made so by statute, and the expense thereof is to be borne by the publisher."

In the first opinion the attorney-general seems to have assumed that the payment from the city treasury of a notary fee for acknowledgment of a cemetery deed was a proper charge against a municipality. In the second opinion the conclusion that a notary fee on an affidavit in proof of publication was not a public charge seems to have been arrived at because of the fact that the duty of furnishing the proof of publication was upon the publisher and not upon the city.

Section 4165, referring to cemetery lots, provides:

"The director (of public service) shall determine the size and price of lots, the terms of payment therefor, and shall give to each purchaser a receipt, showing the amount paid and a pertinent description of the lot or lots sold. Upon producing such receipt to the proper officer, the purchaser shall be entitled to a deed for the lot or lots described therein."

It will be seen from this section that the duty of furnishing the deed rests upon the city through the director of public service and it would seem that if the certificate of a notary is required to the deed the expense of that certificate must be met by the city for the same reason that the publisher was required to pay such expense in connection with the proof of publication in the opinion of my predecessor, Mr. Turner, referred to.

> "A deed, mortgage, or lease of any estate or interest in real property, must be signed by the grantor, mortgagor, or lessor, and such signing be acknowledged by the grantor, mortgagor, or lessor in the presence of two witnesses, who shall attest the signing and subscribe their names to the attestation. Such signing also must be acknowledged by the grantor, mortgagor, or lessor before a judge of a court of record in this state, or a clerk thereof, a county auditor, county surveyor, notary public, mayor, or justice of the peace, who shall certify the acknowledgment on the same sheet on which the instrument is written or printed, and subscribe his name thereto."

This section was originally section 4106 of the Revised Statutes and in the case of Sheehan, et al. v. Davis, 17 O. S. 571, it was held that it did not apply to municipalities. The same view was taken in the case of Young v. Commissioners, 53 Fed. 895, 7 O. F. D. 324. However, at the time these cases were decided the statute referred only to deeds executed by "any man or unmarried woman" and to deeds executed by "husband and wife." Since these decisions the statute has been amended to refer to deeds generally. It will be noticed that the section provides that the deed must be signed by the "grantor" and that "such signing be acknowledged by the grantor" in the presence of two witnesses, and that "such signing also must be acknowledged by the grantor." It might be argued that section 8510 G. C., in providing that "such signing also must be acknowledged by the grantor" refers to the signing by the grantor and that inasmuch as the deeds of a municipality are not signed by the grantor, but by an agent or representative of the grantor, the provision of said section 8510, requiring acknowledgment, is without application in the case of deeds by municipalities. However, inasmuch as it has been the universal custom to require these deeds to be acknowledged, I am not inclined to consider this contention and shall, in the absence of any judicial decisions to the contrary, assume that section 8510 G. C. applies to deeds by municipalities, as well as to deeds by private individuals.

This being so, and the duty of making the proper deeds to these cemetery lots being cast upon the city through the director of public service under section 4165, above quoted, it is my opinion that the payment of the notary fee is a proper charge against the city.

A somewhat similar view seems to have been taken by former attorney-general Hogan, in an opinion found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, page 162, Vol. I, in which he held:

> "It is not the intention of the statutes that sheriffs should pay notary fees for the execution of deeds out of his own pocket and therefore out of the $2.00 allowed the sheriff for executing deeds, he may deduct the forty cents notary expense and pay the balance into the fee fund."

However, although we hold that the payment of a notary fee in connection with the deed to the cemetery lot is a proper charge against a city, we feel it should be here stated that this department agrees with the holding of former attorney-general Hogan, quoted above, and found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, Vol. I, page 223, to the effect that such notary fees may not be paid to or received by the city solicitor.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION HAS AUTHORITY TO MAKE RULES TO PREVENT ABUSE OF THE POWER TO SELECT EXEMPT EMPLOYES.

The civil service commission has authority to enact rules to prevent abuse of the power of selecting exempt employes conferred upon heads of departments by paragraph 8 of section 8 of the civil service law. Such rules must not interfere with the authority of the appointing power to select the exempt positions, and employes to fill the same, but may prevent abuses arising from arbitrary change of such selection of positions, or practices on the part of the appointing authority having a tendency to defeat the purpose of the civil service law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1918.

Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On April 18, 1918, you communicated the following request to this office:

> "Under section 486-1 of the civil ervice law, the term 'civil service' is defined as including all offices and positions of trust or employment in the state, counties, cities and city school districts thereof.
> Section 406-8 of the law provides in part:
> 'The civil service of the state of Ohio and the several counties, cities, and city school districts thereof shall be divided into the unclassified and the classified service.'
> Then follows an enumeration of the positions which are specifically placed in the unclassified service or which may be exempted from competition. Paragraph 8 of this enumeration of exceptions provides as follows:
> 'Three secretaries, assistants or clerks and one personal stenographer for each of the elective state officers; and two secretaries, assistants or clerks and one personal stenographer for other elective officers and each of the principal appointive executive officers, boards or commissions, authorized by law to appoint such secretary assistant or clerk and stenographer.'
> Section 486-9 immediately following the section in which appears the paragraph quoted, provides, in part, as follows:
> 'As soon as practicable after the taking effect of this act, the commission shall put into effect rules for the classification of offices, positions and employments in the civil service of the state and the several counties thereof; etc.'
> From this wording it would appear that the commission is required to put into effect rules for the classification of the civil service of the state and counties as the unclassified and classified service.
> Your advice and opinion is respectfully requested as to whether or not this is the intent and purpose of the law and, if so, as to what are the commission's powers and duties, especially with relation to those exemptions provided for in paragraph 8 of section 486-8, above quoted.
> Heretofore, elective and principal appointive executive officers, boards and commissions, have been allowed to designate without restriction the exemptions to be claimed under paragraph 8, and to change such exemptions at will. This practice, as you will readily understand, might lead to serious injustices. The appointing power, finding a position exempted under this paragraph, and for which no eligible list exists, desiring to make an unrestricted appointment to a position falling within the classified service, might place the position for which no list exists in the classified service and exempt the position to which it is desired to make an unrestricted appointment. In such case, it would be necessary for this commission to approve provisional appointment to the position thus placed in the classified service, and an employe qualified under the civil service law would be displaced to make room for the appointment of a person exempted from competition. Such exemptions might be shifted from time to time in such a way as to avoid making appointments from eligible lists prepared by the commission. It would seem to be the intent of the civil service law that the basis for such exemptions should be the confidential or fiduciary relationship existing, or which might logically be held to exist between the incumbents of positions exempted under this paragraph, and the appointing power.

Our commission is at a loss to know whether it has power to restrict the shifting of such exemptions or to require that they be made for satisfactory reasons or administration."

The matter about which you inquire presents great difficulty, and if the answer is barren, as it must be to some extent, the reason is the lack of clearness and definiteness in the civil service law as applied to this subject.

So far as the letter of the law is concerned, we are reduced to the most general considerations, and can only arrive at a conclusion by taking into account the spirit of the law more than its express requirements.

The purpose of the civil service law is obvious, and is deducible from all its provisions from beginning to end; and while in many respects the accomplishment of the purpose is worked out even to remote details, in some other respects it is not only left uncertain, but is even contradictory. This is especially true upon the subject of the unclassified service. We will note some of the provisions of the act. In its very first words it proposes to be all-embracing: it is as follows (486-1):

"1. The term 'civil service' includes all offices and positions of trust or employment in the service of the state, etc.

2. The 'state service' shall include all such offices and positions in the service of the state," etc.

Notwithstanding these positive declarations it transpires, upon further perusal of the act, that a very considerable portion of the offices and positions are not included within its regulatory terms. There is a direct contradiction as to the definition or the extent and limitation of the classified service, as for instance, in the first section of the act you have the following immediately after what is quoted above:

"3. The term 'classified service' signifies the competitive classified civil service of the state, etc."

Notwithstanding this restriction, we find in section 8 of the act:

"(b) The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof, not specifically included in the unclassified service, to be designated as the competitive class and the unskilled labor class."

This additional inclusion in the competitive class of a very large element excluded in the first definition is further carried out as follows in the same section:

"Vacancies in the labor class shall be filled by appointment from lists of applicants registered by the commission."

In reading the whole act through, only once is any authority mentioned of the commission over unclassified employes, which is found in section 18, and is as follows:

> "All officers and employes or subordinates in the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof, whether in the classified service or not, shall promptly and correctly report to the commission any information required by the rules of the commission relative to the conduct, capacity, and efficiency of any officer, employe or subordinate in the classified service under his supervision."

This, strictly, does not give the commission control over the unclassified employe, but only imposes a duty upon the latter.

It should also be observed that the civil service law is binding in its requirements on the heads of departments of the civil service commission, and while the appointing authority is making an appointment, it is his duty on his oath to make it upon merit and fitness. The act makes no provision for him to do this by means of a competitive examination. All this administrative machinery is confided to the civil service commission for the obvious purpose of uniformity. It is the office and function of the commission to make the law effective; this is the reason of its existence. Its authority for this purpose is plenary and far-reaching. Its first duty is as follows:

> "The commission shall, First: Prescribe, amend, and enforce administrative rules for the purpose of carrying out and making effectual the provisions of this act."

It keeps rosters and records, it hears appeals from discharges, makes investigations "touching the enforcement and effect of the provisions of this act and the administrative rules of the commission prescribed thereunder." It makes a report to the governor, which, among other things, contains "recommendations for the more effectual accomplishment of the purposes of this act." With all this full control and minute detail the intent of the act seems to except the unclassified service from the control of the commission.

An attempt is made to expressly enumerate everything included in the unclassified service, section 8 beginning as follows:

> "(a) The unclassified service shall comprise the following positions which shall not be included in the classified service, and which shall be exempt from all examinations required in this act."

It is to be noted that it is exempt from examinations; it is not necessarily exempt from other powers of the commission, such as investigation, report, and so on. After giving twelve classes of employes in the enumeration of the unclassified service, the section proceeds:

> "(b) The classified service shall comprise all persons in the employ of the state * * * not specifically included in the unclassified service, * * *."

So that all others than those contained in this enumeration comprise the classified service, and are under the control of the civil service law, and of the commission, with one possible exception, not here necessary to refer to.

In the enumeration of these twelve classes under paragraph (a) of this section, No. 8 is as follows:

"Three secretaries, assistants or clerks and one personal stenographer for each of the elective state officers; and two secretaries, assistant or clerks and one personal stenographer for other elective officers and each of the principal appointive executive officers, boards or commissions, except civil service commissions, authorized by law to appoint such secretary, assistant or clerk and stenographer."

This particular exemption is peculiar in that it does not identify the position or persons holding positions who are exempt. It is just a number of three or two or one of the given positions that is so exempt. There is no express authority to anyone to make the selection. The practice has been uniformly that the selection be made by the appointing authority, and this is most probably the correct construction and meaning of the language. The words "secretaries, assistants or clerks" are so general and inclusive as to take in practically all the employes of a department, and I cannot find in the section the meaning you suggest as probable that the confidential, the fiduciary idea is to be applied to the exempted employes.

There is nothing in the language indicating it, although it is readily conceivable that the department might prefer, and the legislature might exempt such employes with confidential duties. Yet, they have not done so, even by inference; but on the contrary, looking to paragraph 9, the inference is the other way, because the employes holding the fiduciary relation are excepted in addition to those provided in paragraph 8; that is, deputies holding such fiduciary relations form a separate exempt class. It does not necessarily follow, however, from the fact that the appointing authority arbitrarily selects these exempt employes that it may do so in violation of the terms and spirit of the civil service law; for while this exemption is peculiar and differs from all others in that it is left to such arbitrary selection, the very fact brings it in touch with the classified service; that is, these persons so exempted would be in the classified service except for such selection.

Reverting in this connection to the powers of the commission again, we again note the authority to prescribe, amend and enforce administrative rules for the purpose of carrying out and making effectual the provisions of the act. If this power of selection were left to the mere caprice of appointing authority to the extent that at will, or at random, the exemption might be changed, the act would to that extent and in that respect, not be carried out and made effectual.

Noting section 9 of the act quoted by you, it does not seem in this respect to add any additional authority. The rule for the classification of officers, etc., cannot apply to the enumeration in section 8, for they are expressly the unclassified service, and while the thing is not impossible, it is clearly not intended to give the commission the power to classify the unclassified service. There is in the very section itself a classification of this unclassified service, but it is suggested that the classification is exclusive of any other, and that its designation of "unclassified" means that it is to remain so so far as the commission is concerned. So that the classification provided for by this section 9 means such classification as that which the commission has already made by which the employes in different departments are standardized and uniformity in the service produced, and discrimination between the same character or value of service in different departments is obviated.

What has been said above must all the time be borne in mind. The provisions of this law, like every other law, are left to human agency to carry out, and therefore it may be imperfectly done or entirely fail.

It is the duty of the appointing power to make these exemptions in accordance with the civil service law, and for the good of the service, and without injustice to employes. However, it is also confided to the civil service commission to make rules for the purpose of carrying out all parts of the act, and this commission is a department superimposed upon the other departments of the state government, without authority or power to interfere in the management of any department, but with power in reference to all departments under the terms of the act to look after the enforcement of the civil service law.

I therefore hold that the state civil service commission may make rules to prevent abuses in this respect, which rules would probably consist of prohibition of arbitrary change of selection; but here the greatest difficulty of the situation arises. The rule must be such as not to interfere with the authority and discretion of the appointing power properly and lawfully exercised, as above described, but must stop at the prevention of the abuse of such power.

I do not wish to advise or suggest any rule that might meet this nice balance, as that is beyond the scope of the duties of this department, and I yet realize that what is above stated is very indefinite and unsatisfactory as a guide to the commission. This, as previously stated, arises from the nature of the case and the indefiniteness of the law in this particular.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS UNION HOW FORMED—EFFECT ON DISTRICT EXISTING UNDER SECTION 4740 G. C.—TO WHAT DISTRICTS THE PHRASE "WHICH MAINTAINS A FIRST GRADE HIGH SCHOOL" APPLIES.

When districts are united for high school purposes, that act alone does not unite such districts for supervision purposes.

A district which exists under section 4740 G. C. and which unites with an adjoining district for high school purposes, cannot longer exist under said section 4740.

Supervision districts are formed by the county board of education.

The phrase "which maintains a first grade high school" in section 4740 applies to village, wholly centralized rural and union of school districts for high school purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 24, 1918.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter in which you request my opinion reads as follows:

> "I desire to direct your attention to section 7669 of the General Code, providing for the union of village and of rural school districts for high school purposes, and to inquire whether or not a union for high school purposes unites the two districts for all purposes. The situation concerning which I wish your opinion is as follows:
> Newton and Newberry townships of Miami county compose one supervision district under the supervision of a district superintendent. Covington, which is located in Newberry township, maintains a high school. The boards of Newberry township of Covington wish to unite Newberry township and the village of Covington for high school purposes. The question that arises in my mind is as to the effect this would have on the grade schools in Newberry township and in Covington; in other words, would the superintendent of the Newberry-Newton district have supervision of the grades in Covington after such union and would he have supervision of the high school of the two districts, or would the grade schools of Covington remain under the jurisdiction of the county superintendent? Furthermore, if the grade schools of Covington remain under the jurisdiction of the county superintendent, could the two boards arrange for the present superintendent of Covington high school to give a portion of his time to the grade schools and the remainder to the high school of the two districts?

Newberry township would not unite with Newton and Covington as there is a high school located in Newton township at Pleasant Hill.

The section of the code covering the question of supervision is section 4740. A doubt was raised in my mind as to the effect of this union for high school purposes on the grade schools by the ruling of the attorney-general, 1911-12, page 1042, where the statement is made:

'When a joint school district is formed for high school purposes by a township school district and an adjoining village district, such district becomes one district and taxes for the support of same, etc.'

I did not construe section 7669 to mean that it intended union for any other than high school purposes, but this language being general and the remainder of the opinion throwing no light on it, I thought I might be wrong in my construction.

These boards wish to pass on this matter so as to get the budgets prepared and submitted on the basis of the united district and for that reason an early reply would be greatly appreciated."

Since receiving said letter I have received the following letter through the superintendent of public instruction in relation to your matter:

"Two townships in this county, Newberry and Newton, having thirty-one teachers or more constitute a supervisory district under Mr. W. F. Deeter. Lying within Newberry township is the village of Covington, having '4740 supervisory district' of its own and by virtue of the fact it maintains a first grade high school, the village superintendent being Mr. C. H. Detling.

Now Newberry township and the village of Covington are thinking of forming a joint high school district for the purpose of the better supervising of the high school now located at Covington. This will provide for an increase in the teaching force and make possible transportation of rural pupils to high school when living outside the four-mile limit.

However, puzzling questions regarding supervision have arisen:

(1) Would it be possible for Covington to continue as a '4740 supervisory district' while Newberry remains a member of the Newberry-Newton supervisory district?

(2) Which superintendent would have control of the high school, Mr. Detling or Mr. Deeter?

(3) Would the high school, if the condition mentioned in question number (1) were maintained, be under the joint supervision of these two men?

I rather think the prosecuting attorney intends to take this case up also with the attorney-general, but I believe it ought to come to your attention also. Mr. Detling and Mr. Deeter are good friends and I think we can make any plan work, but I believe it is very important that we follow only such course as may prove to be strictly legal, for it appears that a union of this kind is intended by the law to be permanent.

The two communities are on the best of terms with each other and I think the prospects are that the enrollment of the high school would increase from one hundred and ten to one hundred forty or fifty, provided we can find the right way to make the union and get all parties to agree to it."

Several questions are contained in said request which will be answered separately herein.

The first question I shall determine is, when school districts are united for high school purposes, does such act also unite said district for supervision purposes. The statutes which provide for the union of school districts for high school purposes are sections 7669 et seq. of the General Code. Section 7669, as amended in 107 O. L. 624, reads in part as follows:

> "The boards of education of two or more adjoining rural or village school districts or of a rural and village school district, by a majority vote of the full membership of each board, may unite such district for high school purposes. * * *."

Section 7670 G. C. provides that any high school established as provided by section 7669 shall be under the management of a high school committee consisting of two members from each of the boards which go to make up such joint district. Section 7671 G. C. provides that the funds for the maintenance and support of such high school shall be provided by appropriation from certain funds of each district "in proportion to the total valuation of property in the respective districts," and further provides that said funds must be placed in a separate fund in the treasury in the district in which the school house is located and paid out by the high school committee for the maintenance of such high school. It is plain, it seems to me, from the language of the above mentioned sections, that the districts are united for high school purposes only and that for supervision purposes, whether the same be joined or not, it will be necessary to look to other statutes.

In your statement you say that the districts of Newton and Newberry townships form a supervision district and I am taking it, for the purpose of this opinion, that both of said townships compose rural school districts and that therefore the supervision district, as at present constituted, is made up of Newton and Newberry rura school districts of your county and that said supervision district is under the supervision of a district superintendent. You further state that Covington, which I shall assume for the purpose of this opnion is a village school district, is located in Newberry township in said county and that said Covington maintains a high school, which I shall assume for the purpose of this opinion to be a first grade high school. You mention that Covington is supervised as is provided in section 4740 G. C. That section, as last amended, 107 O. L. 622, reads as follows:

> "Any village or wholly centralized rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district by resolution shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. Such superintendents shall perform all the duties prescribed by law for a district superintendent, but shall teach such part of each day as the board of education of the district or districts may direct."

That is to say, before the district of Covington could continue as a separate district under the provisions of the above quoted section, it would be necessary that such district comply therewith. But just what provisions thereof must be complied with by the district? Covington being a village district, is it necessary that it maintain a first grade high school and employ a superintendent, or do those provisions apply to a union of school districts for high school purposes only?

It will take the history of this section to solve the above question. When section 4740 was first enacted, 104 O. L. 141, that part of the section read:

> "Any village or rural district or union of school districts for supervision purposes which already employs a superintendent and which officially certifies by the clerk or clerks * * * shall upon application to the county board of education be continued as a separate supervision district * * *."

It will be noted that in said original section the three classes of districts were village, rural and union of school districts for supervision purposes,, and that said section provided if any of such districts already employed a superintendent, etc., it might be continued as a separate supervision district. So that the phrase "which already employs a superintendent" modified not only "union of school districts for supervision purposes," but also modified the words "village" and "rural." When the section was amended in 1915, 106 O. L. 439, one of the classes of districts was changed. That part of the amended section reads:

> "Any village or rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent * * *."

That is, the class of districts which were united for supervision purposes was eliminated and in its place was added that class of districts which united for high school purposes, and besides hiring a superintendent, a new condition was placed upon each district, viz., that it must maintain a first grade high school. The section does not mean that the union of school districts for high school purposes is the only district which must maintain a first grade high school, for the section reads, "which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent," showing that the phrase "which maintains a first grade high school" modified the same words as the phrase "employs a superintendent."

The section was again amended in 1917, 107 O. L. 622, and that part of the section reads:

> "Any village or wholly centralized rural school district or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employs a superintendent * * *."

So that, here again the class of districts was changed by substituting only "wholly centralized rural school district" for any "rural school district" and leaving the other provisions as to the maintaining of the first grade high school and the hiring of the superintendent the same as found in the 1915 amendment. There is but one conclusion that can be reached from the above and that is, that the phrase "which maintains a first grade high school" applies to all the districts mentioned in said section, whether the same be village, wholly centralized, rural or union of school districts for high school purposes. So that, when the Covington district and the Newberry district unite for high school purposes, it could not be said that the Covington district would continue to maintain a first grade high school. While the districts jointly would be maintaining a first grade high school, yet they would not be maintaining the same individually, and provision is made for a separate supervision district to be formed from a union of school districts for high school purposes. Therfore, when

Covington unites with Newberry township for high school purposes, it no longer can be a separate supervision district under section 4740 because it cannot comply with the provisions thereof. This, then, will not of itself unite said district with any other district for supervision purposes because supervision districts are formed by the county board of education and it would be for the county board of education to say whether said district should be united with the Newberry and Newton district for supervision purposes or whether there should be new districts formed for supervision purposes. In any event, it is a matter for the county board of education and not for the local boards which unite for high school purposes.

Answering your first question, then, I advise you that the union of school districts for high school purposes does not necessarily unite such districts for supervision purposes.

In the letter from the superintendent the question is asked whether or not the Covington district would continue as a 4740 district. What I have said above answers that question and you are advised that when Covington and Newberry districts are united for high school purposes, the Covington district will not continue as a separate district under section 4740 G. C.

Answering your question, then, I advise you:

(1) When districts are united for high school purposes, that act alone does not unite such districts for supervision purposes.

(2) A district which exists under section 4740 G. C. and which unites with an adjoining district for high school purposes, cannot longer exist under said section 4740.

(3) Supervision districts are formed by the county board of education.

(4) The phrase "which maintains a first grade high school" in section 4740, applies to village, wholly centralized rural and union of school districts for high school purposes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL BUILDINGS—WHEN BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY LET CONTRACT FOR SAME WITHOUT ADVERTISING FOR BIDS—URGENT NECESSITY.

Where a school building is destroyed by fire and there are no other buildings in the district in which the schools can be conducted, and a new building can be completed before the new school term if advertisement under section 7623 is dispensed with, but canno be completed if time for advertisement is taken, then and in that case there would be a case of urgent necessity and the board may proceed to let the contract without advertising for bids for a period of four weeks.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1918.

HON. CHARLES L. BERMONT, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"Sometime during the year 1917 the school building in the Blandensburg rural school district was destroyed by fire. The board of education then rented two halls, in which school was conducted during the school year of 1917 and 1918.

On March 7, 1918, an order was made by the industrial commission, by which order the board of education is prohibited from using said buildings for school purposes any longer.

As these two halls were the only available places for holding school, it looks as though no school could be held in Blandensburg until a new school building is erected, unless the order of the industrial commission is modified.

It seems to me that a case of 'urgent necessity' exists in this district so that the provisions of section 7623 G. C., providing for advertising for bids, might be dispensed with.

Please let me have your opinion in this matter."

Section 7623 G. C., which provides in what cases a board of education may build, repair, enlarge or furnish a school house or make improvements or repairs thereon without advertising for bids, as is provided in said section, reads as follows:

"When a board of education determines to build, repair, enlarge or furnish a schoolhouse or schoolhouses or make any improvement or repair provided for in this chapter, the cost of which will exceed in city districts, fifteen hundred dollars, and in other districts five hundred dollars, except in cases of urgent necessity, or for the security and protection of school property, it must proceed as follows:

1. For the period of four weeks, the board shall advertise for bids in some newspaper of general circulation in the district, and two such papers, if there are so many. If no newspaper has a general circulation therein, then by posting such advertisement in three public places therein. Such advertisement shall be entered in full by the clerk, on the records of the proceedings of the board.

2. The bids, duly sealed up, must be filed with the clerk by twelve o'clock, noon, of the last day stated in the advertisement.

3. The bids shall be opened at the next meeting of the board; be publicly read by the clerk, and entered in full on the records of the board.

4. Each bid must contain the name of every person interested therein, and shall be accompanied by a sufficient guarantee of some disinterested person, that if the bid be accepted, a contract will be entered into, and the performance of it properly secured.

5. When both labor and materials are embraced in the work bid for, each must be separately stated in the bid, with the price thereof.

6. None but the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted. The board in its discretion may reject all the bids, or accept any bid for both labor and material for such improvement or repair, which is the lowest in the aggregate.

7. Any part of a bid which is lower than the same part of any other bid, shall be accepted, whether the residue of the bid is higher or not; and if it is higher, such residue must be rejected.

8. The contract must be between the board of education and the bidders. The board shall pay the contract price for the work, when it is completed, in cash, and may pay monthly estimates as the work progresses.

9. When two or more bids are equal, in the whole, or in part thereof, and are lower than any others, either may be accepted, but in no case shall the work be divided between such bidders.

10. When there is reason to believe that there is collusion or combination among the bidders, or any number of them, the bids of those concerned therein shall be rejected."

The question of what is a case of urgent necessity is one of fact rather than law. The word "urgent" is defined as that which is characterized as being pressing; especially demanding prompt action or attention, that which is imperative or forcible, as an urgent want. "Necessity" is defined as that which is necessary; that which is indispersably requisite to an end desired; that which is especially needful to do. "Urgent necessity" is defined in Mueller v. Board of Education, 11 O. N. P. (n. s.) 113, 120, as follows:

> "Urgent necessity is a very strong expression. It means more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity. It is something that requires immediate action; something that cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for failure to comply with any statutory requirement it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises. An illustration of a case which might arise under the statutes referred to would be where there is a single school building of which a number of pupils would be prevented from occupancy for a considerable time, and left without any chance for instruction pending the construction or repair of such building."

On September 6, 1917, Hon. Addison P. Minshall, Prosecuting Attorney, Chillicothe, Ohio, submitted to this office the following request:

> "The board duly passed a resolution submitting to the electors of the district the question of the issuance of bonds for the erection of a high school building. The bonds were issued after the election had been held and the question favorably passed upon. Plans and specifications were prepared, advertisement for bids duly made, but no bids within the estimate were received. A high school has been in operation for several years in a building wholly unfit for such purposes. Under section 7623 of the General Code of Ohio can the board now proceed to enter into contracts for the construction of the building costing about $8,000.00 without advertising for bids, and is this a case of 'urgent necessity' such as will permit of dispensing with the advertisement?"

After reviewing the language of the statutes and the decisions in relation thereto, as found in my opinion No. 594, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. II, page 1672, I advised that it being impossible to complete the building prior to the time it would be necessary to use the same for school purposes, and either the old building would have to be used or arrangements made for the convenience of the high school pupils elsewhere, and that ample time would exist for the compliance with the provisions of section 7623, before the new term of school would commence, a case of urgent necessity did not exist in the matter in the above inquiry.

On April 20, 1917, Hon. Fred. W. McCoy, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio, submitted the following request for my opinion:

> "The board of education of Orange township, this county, sold bonds to the amount of $8,000.00 for the purpose of building a new school house at Sherodsville, Ohio, and after a number of efforts on the part of said board they have received a bid of $13,000.00 to furnish material and erect said school house. In your opinion would it be proper for the board to contract * * * without advertising in a statutory manner?"

Again, after considering the language of the statutes amd the decisions in relation thereto, I was compelled to advise that a case of urgent necessity did not exist under the statutes. Said opinion is No. 1161, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1918.

Your case, however, seems to me to present a different statement of facts from any that I have been called upon to consider, and seems to fall within the limits of the language used in the Mueller case, above mentioned. That is, on account of the buildings in which school was held after the school building had been destroyed by fire being condemned by the deputy inspectors of public buildings, and no other buildings being available for that purpose, it seems as though it is more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity that the building should be built at once. It seems that it is something which requires immediate action, something that cannot wait; that the pupils would be left without a chance for instruction pending the construction of said building, and if prompt action can be taken by the board, the building can be completed before the new school year begins. All these, however, are matters for the board of education to determine, and if, after due and careful consideration thereof the board of education finds that there are no other buildings in which the schools of said district can be conducted, and that the buildings which have been used cannot longer be used for school purposes and that the new building can be completed if the contract is let at once, and that it cannot be completed if time is taken to advertise, as provided by section 7623 G. C., then and under such circumstances the board of education would be warranted in declaring a case of urgent necessity to exist and proceed to let said contract without advertising for bids for a period of four weeks, as is provided by said section. If, on the other hand, the board of education cannot find any or all of the above facts to be true, then I would have to hold that a case of urgent necessity did not exist.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CENTRAL COMMUNITY HOUSE—BOARD OF EDUCATION HAS NO AUTHORITY TO BUILD.

A board of education of a township which has centralized its schools has no authority to build a "central community building" for the accommodation of the teachers and superintendents of such schools, at which building teachers and superintendents may room and board during the school year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1918.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of May 14, 1918, you request my opinion as follows:

> "Dixon township, a few years since, voted on the question of centralization, and it carried. In furtherance of said plan, they purchased a site and erected a school building thereon, costing about forty-five thousand dollars. The site is the mathematical center of the township. There is not a village or a hamlet in this township, and the school building is situated in such a place that it is impossible for the teachers to secure rooms and board, or houses, in the immediate vicinity of the school building. In fact, all the teachers are compelled to go at least from two to three and four miles to get to this school building.

For the reasons above given, their superintendent is very anxious to have a central community building erected, for the accommodation of the teachers, or at least the superintendent of the schools, and such of the teachers as care to room and board at the central building.

At one time I called the bureau of uniform information and they thought this could be done under the law as it exists at the present time.

We have gone over the matter carefully, section 7625 and related sections of the General Code, and I can find no authority to erect such a building for the accommodation of the teachers, and write to ask you whether, under any law now in the General Code, there is authority for the board of education of Dixon township, Preble county, Ohio, even though the proposition be submitted to the voters of the township and carried, to issue and sell bonds for the purpose of erecting such a building.

We would like to have your opinion in as short a time as possible, so that the matter can be determined one way or another, so far as Dixon townhip is concerned."

Boards of education are permitted by various statutes, hereinafter referred to, to acquire property and build and furnish school houses thereon for the proper accommodation of the schools under their control, but I desire to say at the outset that I doubt if the powers therein granted are broad enough to permit any board of education to build a "central community building" for the accommodation of the teachers and superintendents of such schools.

Section 7620 of the General Code provides that a board of education may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor or rights of way thereto, or purchase or lease real estate to be used as play grounds for children, or rent suitable school rooms, provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control, and that it also shall provide fuel for the schools, build and keep in good repair fences enclosing such school houses, when deemed desirable plant shade and ornamental trees on the school grounds, and make all other necessary provisions for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts.

Section 7666 G. C. provides that a board of education which establishes and maintains a high school or high schools shall build and repair, add to and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor or rent suitable rooms and make all other necessary provisions relative to such schools as may be deemed proper.

Section 7625 G. C. provides that when a board of education of any school district determines that for the proper accommodation of the schools of such district it is necessary to purchase a site or sites to erect a school house or houses, to complete a partially built school house, to enlarge, repair or furnish a school house or to purchase real estate for play grounds for children, or do any or all of such things, then under certain conditions therein mentioned bonds for such purpose or purposes may be sold.

Section 7629 G. C. provides that a board of education of any school district may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property and that under the conditions therein mentioned bonds may be sold for that purpose.

Section 7630-1 G. C. provides that if a school house is wholly or partially destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, under the conditions therein mentioned the board of education may sell bonds to replace same.

Section 7622-1 et seq. of the General Code provides that the board of education may permit the use of school houses and school grounds as social centers and places of public meetings.

There is no direct authority for a board of education to build a central community building for the accommodation of the teachers and superintendents. The only language contained in any of said sections which might be considered broad enough in any manner to permit a board of education to do other than build, equip and furnish school houses, would be that part of section 7620, which reads:

> "And make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control," and that part which provides:

> "and make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts," and that part of section 7666 which provides:

> "and make all other necessary provisions relative to such schools as may be deemed proper."

The maxim expressio unius est exclusio alterius, that is, the expression of one is the exclusion of the other, must be applied to matters of this kind, and applying the same to the first provision mentioned in 7620, that the board of education may make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control, means the necessary arrangements to carry out the objects of building, enlarging, repairing and furnishing the necessary school houses or purchasing or leasing real estate to be used as play grounds for children, or the renting of suitable school rooms and providing the necessary apparatus therefor, and the doing of all things incident to the carrying out of the above purpose, but not to add new purposes thereto, such as building a central community building. And so the making of all provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistrict means doing those things which are incident to the providing of fuel for schools, the building and keeping in repair of fences inclosing school houses, the planting of shade and ornamental trees on school grounds, and the doing of the things incident to said purpose, but not to add new purposes such as building central community buildings. And so with the language in section 7666, the making of all other necessary provisions relative to the high schools as the board deems proper means that in the building, repairing, adding to and furnishing the necessary school houses for high schools, or the purchasing or leasing of sites therefor, or renting suitable rooms therefor, the other provisions would be only those incidental to the carrying out of the above purposes and would not authorize the adding to of new purposes such as building central community buildings.

I can come to but one conclusion from a consideration of the above sections and that is, that a board of education is not permitted to erect a central community building for the accommodation of the teachers and superintendents of the schools under its control.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP DITCH—PROCEDURE WHEN BENEFITED OWNER FAILS TO CONSTRUCT—ESTIMATES.

Where a land owner whose lands are benefited by the construction of a township ditch fails to construct the portion of the ditch assigned to him to be constructed, and the trustees, under sections 6635 and 6636 proceed to sell the same, they must immediately before the sale make the estimate provided in 6636. If they have made such estimate, and the work has not been sold for such period of time that prices of labor and material have advanced so that it is impossible to sell the work for the estimate, they have power to make another estimate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1918.

HON. C. F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 24, 1918, you addressed the following request to this department:

> "Section 6636 of the General Code provides that township trustees may sell work which is not completed within the time specified by a former order of the board; that such work shall not be sold for a higher sum than that of the original estimate.
> A township ditch has been partially constructed. One of the persons to whom a section was apportioned, has refused to construct the same. The estimate made last fall on this section of work was $56.00. Since that time prices of tile—the improvement being a tile improvement—have increased to such an extent as also has the price of labor, that said section of work could not now be constructed for less than $85.00, and in all human probability could not be sold at the original estimate of $56.00, including the costs and expenses of sale, and I am unable to advise the board how to proceed in the matter, and if you can suggest a remedy for the situation, it will be thankfully received."

The subject of drainage comprises title 3 of part 2 of the General Code, and chapter 5 of that title is upon the subject of township ditches, containing detailed provisions for their construction, which is done by apportioning the ditch among the persons benefited, after the location and establishment of the same, and assigning to each of said persons a certain portion of the ditch to construct. An appeal is provided to the probate court with all kinds of provisions necessary for trying and determining the questions involved. Section 6635 then provides as follows:

> "* * * If no appeal is taken, the trustees, upon the expiration of the time specified by them for the opening of the ditch, shall forthwith inspect it, and if a section or part thereof has not been completed, they shall accept a bond with sufficient surety from the person having such unfinished work to perform, conditioned for the faithful completion of such work within the time they specify therein. If such person fails or refuses to give bond for the completion of the work the trustees shall forthwith sell the unfinished work * * *."

Then follows section 6636, referred to by you, which is as follows:

> "Before the work of constructing such ditch is sold by the trustees, they shall make a fair and impartial estimate of the cost thereof, which shall be entered upon the ditch journal, and it shall not be sold for a sum exceeding such estimate. The fees and allowances in all proceedings, and the apportioning and assessing of costs and expenses shall be as in the original location and establishment of the ditch, and be paid by the person whose section of the ditch is sold, and collected and paid out as provided in section sixty-six hundred and forty-one."

Your statement is that the estimate referred to in this section was made last fall, and the work has not yet been let. No excuse for the delay is given, and in view of the fact that 6635 requires the same to be forthwith, it is necessary to examine the question as to what, if any, steps the trustees may still take toward the completion of the work.

Of course, ordinarily it would be expected that the trustees should make but one estimate. An examination of the sections, however, fails to disclose any express prohibition of a re-consideration of this estimate or the making of another to take the place of it. Neither is there found anything else in the sections to prevent, or, at least, render impossible the making of another estimate.

It might be claimed that the direction to them to do at once, when complied with, rendered them functus officio in that respect, and that they have no authority to do it the second time. It appears though from your statement that unless they can re-estimate it, a section of the ditch will not be constructed. This might, and in many cases would, practically destroy the whole value of the improvement, and is a condition that can not arise upon mere construction or conjecture.

The requirement is that they shall do it before constructing the ditch, and then forthwith sell out the work. Reversing this language, the requirement would be that the estimate should be made forthwith before the sale, a construction very necessary in these times when prices are continually changing. They have made this estimate, but it turns out not to have been forthwith before the sale. Therefore, in order for them to comply with this statute, it is necessary just before they sell the work of construction that they make an estimate.

They may, therefore, proceed to make an estimate based upon present prices, and then forthwith sell out the work of construction. The owner of the land who is to make the payment cannot complain at this, much less could he prevent it by injunction. He has had an adequate remedy at all times in his own hands by constructing his portion of the ditch, and his very complaint arises upon his own dereliction.

According to the maxims of equity, he would not be entitled to an injunction either to prevent the sale of the work or the collection of the cost.

If this reasoning be correct, it complies with your request that a remedy for the situation be suggested.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN THE WILLIAM H. CONKLIN COMPANY AND THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 25, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted for my approval contract entered into on the 25th day of April, 1918, between The William H. Conklin Company, of Columbus, Ohio, and the Board of Trustees of Ohio State University, for the construction and completion of the ventilation and heating, plumbing, sewer, marble and tile, for the addition to Lord Hall and Kiln House, as covered by items 14 and 15 of the form of proposal, submitted by said The William H. Conklin Company, for the sum of $3,418.00. At the same time you submitted a bond securing said contract.

I have examined said contract and finding the same to be in compliance with law and having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there is money in the state treasury available for the purpose of said contract, I have this day approved the same and filed the same in the office of the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF ALLEN COUNTY, $3,600.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Allen county, Ohio, in the sum of $3,600.00 in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments to provide additional funds to pay the respective shares of said county, of Bath and German townships and of the owners of benefited property assessed for the cost and expense of improving section "H" of inter-county highway No. 129, located in said county and townships.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings relating to the above issue of bonds and find the same to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bon issues of this kind. I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Allen county, Ohio, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be executed and delivered covering this issue has been submitted. I am therefore holding the transcript of the proceedings relating to said bond issue until a proper bond form covering said issue is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEDERAL FARM LOAN BONDS—TAXATION.

Federal farm loan bonds are not subject to state and local taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 27, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have an inquiry from The Rudolph Kleybolte Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, relative to the taxability of federal land bank 5 per cent. farm loan bonds.

These bonds are issued under authority of the Act of congress of July 17, 1916 (39 Statutes at Large, 360). The act provides for the establishment at the seat of government in the department of the treasury a bureau to be known as the federal farm loan bureau, under the general supervision of a federal farm loan board, to consist of five members, including the secretary of the treasury. The members of this board are officers of the United States. The board is to divide the continental United States into federal land bank districts, and appoint a farm loan registrar in each district to receive applications for issues of farm loan bonds. Salaries of all the officers so far mentioned are to be paid by the United States, as well as the compensation of persons employed by them. In each federal land bank district the federal farm loan board is to establish a federal land bank, which is to be a corporation owing its existence to the act itself and having a capital stock the shares of which may be subscribed for and held by any individual, firm or corporation, or by the government of any state or of the United States. Stock owned by the government of the United States is to receive no dividends. Corporations to be known as "national farm loan associations" may be organized under the act by persons desiring to borrow money on farm mortgage security. These associations may hold stock in federal land banks, and the shares of such associations are to be held by individuals desiring farm loans. These national farm loan associations may issue certificates against deposits of current funds, convertible into farm loan bonds.

The power to issue and sell farm loan bonds is reposed in the federal land banks, "subject to the approval of the federal farm loan board," and also in corporations to be known as "joint stock land banks," which may be organized for the purpose of carrying on the business of lending on farm mortgage security and issuing farm loan bonds by any number of natural persons not less than ten. Stock in these banks is not to be held by the government of the United States, and they are, generally speaking, to sustain the same relation toward the United States as national banking associations.

The procedure of issuing farm loan bonds is by a written application on the part of the land bank or joint stock land bank to the federal farm loan board, through the farm loan registrar of the district, accompanied by first mortgages on farm lands or United States government bonds, no less in aggregate amount than the sum of the bonds proposed to be issued, as collateral. The federal farm loan board is to appraise the securities and to grant in whole or in part, or reject entirely, the application so made. No farm loan bonds shall be issued unless the federal farm loan board shall approve the issue in writing. Though the bonds are those of the bank, they are to be issued on forms prepared by the secretary of the treasury, the engraved plates, etc., to remain in his custody, and the expense of their preparation to be paid by him, subject to reimbursement by assessment upon the farm land bank in proportion to the work executed.

The foregoing is a partial statement of the relation of the United States to the farm loan bonds. I have made the statement without referring to the sections of the act which contain the appropriate provision upon which it is based. I quote, however, the following from the act itself:

> "Section 21. Every federal land bank issuing farm loan bonds shall be primarily liable therefor, and shall also be liable, * * * for interest payments due upon any farm loan bonds issued by other federal land banks and remaining unpaid in consequence of the default of such other land banks; and every such bank shall likewise be liable for such portion of the principal of farm loan bonds so issued as shall not be paid after the assets of any such other land banks shall have been liquidated and distributed: Provided, That such losses, * * * shall be assessed by the federal farm loan board against solvent land banks liable therefor in proportion to the amount of farm loan bonds which each may have outstanding at the time of such assessment."

This section seems to apply only to federal land banks and not to joint stock land banks:

"Section 26. That every federal land bank and every national farm loan association, including the capital and reserve or surplus therein and the income derived therefrom, shall be exempt from federal, state, municipal, and local taxation, except taxes upon real estate held, purchased, or taken by said bank or association under the provisions of section eleven and section thirteen of this act. First mortgages executed to federal land banks, or to joint stock land banks, and farm loan bonds issued under the provisions of this act, shall be deemed and held to be instrumentalities of the government of the United States, and as such they and the income derived therefrom shall be exempt from federal, state, municipal, and local taxation."

Nothing herein shall prevent the shares in any joint stock land bank from being included in the valuation of the personal property of the owner or holder of such shares, * * * in manner and subject to the conditions and limitations * * * with reference to the shares of national banking associations.

Nothing herein shall be construed to exempt the real property of federal and joint stock land banks and national farm loan associations from either state, county, or municipal taxes, to the same extent, according to its value, as other real property is taxed."

It will be observed that though the government of the United States administers directly many of the features of the scheme of federal farm loans, the bonds themselves are not direct obligations of the United States. They are not, therefore, exempt from state taxation on the same ground that United States bonds themselves are exempt; nor does congress attempt to make them exempt on such ground. They are, rather, declared to be "instrumentalities of the United States" and, though owned by private citizens, are exempted from state taxation on the same ground that stock in a national bank would be exempt from taxation without the permission of congress, as granted in section 5219 of the Revised Statutes of the United States. In fact, the two kinds of banks provided for by the federal farm loan act may be regarded as sustaining precisely the same relation toward the United States as national banking associations; and congress has adopted substantially the same attitude as has long prevailed with respect to the taxation of national banks and interest therein, in regulating state taxation of these banks themselves; but has gone further, and has exempted their obligations known as "Federal farm loan bonds" from taxation in the hands of holders thereof.

I see no reason to dispute the authority of congress to do this. The framework of the whole act shows that the federal farm loan bonds are an integral and necessary part of the scheme of agricultural aid which congress was striving to effectuate. The bonds are, therefore, as much an instrumentality of the United States as the banks themselves. But if I did not feel sure that this was so I would still hesitate to pronounce an act of congress unconstitutional. The federal act makes these bonds exempt and, in my opinion, the taxing authorities of the state should treat them as exempt from state and local taxation.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT THROUGH VILLAGE—BALANCE OF FUND DEPOSITED BY VILLAGE WITH COUNTY TREASURER TO PAY ITS PROPORTION OF THE COST, SHOULD BE RETURNED TO VILLAGE.

In those cases in which the state highway commissioner extends a road improvement through a village and the village assumes a certain proportion or percentage of the cost and expense of that part of the improvement which lies within the village, and deposits an amount with the county treasurer which is estimated to be sufficient to pay its proportion so assumed, the county should return to the village not only any part of the fund so remaining unused, but also any accumulation of interest thereon, if it should develop, upon the completion of the improvement, that the amount deposited, with accumulations of interest, is more than necessary to pay the obligation of the village under its agreement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 31, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of May 17, 1918, in which you enclose a communication addressed to you, and request my opinion on the matter therein contained. The statement of facts and question contained in said enclosure are as follows:

> "The village of Waynesfield in this county, in conjunction with the state highway department, under the Cass road law paved one of their streets. The village sold bonds and placed the proceeds in the county treasury to pay the village's portion of said improvement.
> I would like to know whether the village is entitled to its share of the interest on this money under Code section 2737, and I thought perhaps your department had ruled on this proposition. The money was paid into the county treasury under Code sections 6953-6954, found in 105-6 O. L. 610."

I take it that the road improvement under consideration was one in which the contract was let under the Cass highway act and not under the White-Mulcahy law now in force and effect. It is important to keep this in mind, for the reason that said law now in effect contains supplemental sections, viz., sections 1193-1 and 1193-2, which to some extent modify the law as it originally stood, in regard to the state highway commissioner constructing the road improvements into and through villages. So I will consider herein the law as it is found in the Cass act.

The section lying at the foundation of the matter about which you inquire is section 1231-3 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a village when the consent of the council of said village has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said village duly entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said village as may be agreed upon between said state highway commissioner and said council. The state highway commissioner may also enter into an agreement with the council of said village to improve any part of the road within said village to a greater width than is contemplated by the proceedings for said improvement, and the state highway commissioner and the council of said village shall be governed as to all matters in connection with said improvement within said village by the statutes relating to road improvements through municipalities, by boards of county commissioners."

I call attention to the following language found in said section:

"* * * and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said village as may be agreed upon * * *."

and especially to the emphasized part of this last quoted matter. In the latter part of said section it is stated that the authorities shall be governed, as to all matters in connection with said improvement within said village, by the statutes relating to road improvements through municipalities by boards of county commissioners, which makes it necessary for us to note sections 6949 to 6954 inclusive G. C. These are the sections which authorize boards of county commissioners to extend road improvements through or within municipalities.

Section 6949 G. C. read as follows:

"The board of county commissioners may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a municipality when the consent of the council of said municipality has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said municipality as may be agreed upon between said board of county commissioners and said council."

I will call particular attention to the following language contained in said section:

"* * * and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said municipality as may be agreed upon * * *."

and especially to that part which is emphasized.

Section 6953 G. C. provided as follows:

"The municipality shall pay to the county treasurer its estimated proportion of the cost of said improvement as fixed in said agreement between the council and the county commissioners, out of any funds available therefor, and in anticipation of the collection of assessments to be made against abutting property hereinbefore provided, and in anticipation of the collection of taxes levied for the purpose of providing for the payment of the municipality's share of the cost of such improvement, said municipality is authorized to sell its bonds under the same conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the sale of bonds for street improvement under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the council of a municipality."

Under this section the municipality must pay into the county treasury "its estimated proportion of the cost of said improvement as fixed in said agreement." This may be done from any funds available therefor or out of the proceeds of the bond issue made in anticipation of the collection of taxes to be levied for said purposes.

In section 6954 G. C. we find this provision:

"* * * The total cost and expense of said work shall be paid for on the allowance of the county commissioners, by the warrant of the county auditor, and after the completion of said work and the payment of the cost and expense thereof, any balance of the funds contributed by said municipality shall be refunded to it to be disposed of according to law. * * *."

Under section 2737 G. C. the county treasurer will realize interest on the amount of money deposited with him under the provisions of section 6953 G. C. Your question is as to whether the interest realized on the moneys deposited with the county treasurer by the village would inure to the benefit of the village or the county; that is, whether the accumulated interest upon said fund so deposited with the treasurer should be returned to the village with the excess of the fund deposited so remaining. The language of all the sections seems to indicate that the village in its agreement assumes a certain proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the improvement located within the village; viz., it assumes a half or a third or a fourth of the cost and expense of that part lying within the village. The amount required to enable the village to pay the half, third or fourth of said cost and expense would be merely an estimated amount and could not be definitely known until the improvement was fully comple ed. This clearly was the thought of the legislature when it used the language found in section 6953, as follows:

"The municipality shall pay to the county treasurer its estimated proportion of the cost of said improvement * * *."

Inasmuch as the amount deposited with the county treasurer is only an estimated amount, it is my opinion that the village would be entitled to a return not only of any part of the principal sum not used in the payment of that part of the cost and expense to be borne by the village under its agreement, but also of any interest that may have accumulated from the investment of this fund. The very fact that the county must return any part of the principal sum deposited with it by the village, not used in the construction of the improvement, clearly indicates that it was not the intention of the legislature that the money deposited with the county became absolutely the property of the county.

Provision is made fo the depositing of the estimated proportion with the county to enable the county commissioners to pay for the cost and expense of the improvement as it progresses, and with no other object or intent in view. It was not intended that the county should profit by the deposit so made with the county treasurer and hence it is my opinion that the interest realized by the county should be returned to the village with any amount of the principal sum not so used.

However, if the amount so deposited should not be sufficient to take care of the proportion of the cost and expense assumed by the village, it is my opinion that the interest realized upon the fund deposited might be applied to the payment of such proportion of the cost and expense assumed by the village, because it is evident to me that if the amount deposited in the beginning were not sufficient to take care of the cost and expense to be borne by the village, the village would be compelled to make good any deficiency that might exist. For this reason it would not be reasonable to hold that the county should return the interest upon said fund to the village and then in turn the village make up whatever deficiency existed owing to the fact that it had not deposited a sufficient amount in the beginning.

As hereinbefore stated, the provisions in reference to a municipality's making a deposit with the county treasurer seem to clearly indicate that the money deposited does not become county money. In this connection it might be well to quote section 2737 G. C., which reads as follows:

"Section 2737. All money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest at the rate specified in the proposal on which the award thereof was made, computed on daily balances, and on the first day of each calendar month or at any time such account is closed, such interest shall be placed to the credit of the county, and the depositary shall notify the auditor and treasurer, each separately, in writing of the amount thereof before noon of the next business day. All such interest realized on the money belonging to the undivided tax funds shall be apportioned by the county auditor to the state, cities, city school district and county taxing or assessing districts in the proportion that the amounts collected for the respective political divisions or districts bear to the entire amount collected by the county treasurer for such undivided tax funds and deposited as herein provided, due allowance being made for sums transferred in advance of settlements. All interest apportioned as the county's share, together with all interest arising from the deposit of funds belonging specifically to the county shall be credited to the general fund of the county by the county treasurer. The county auditor shall inform the treasurer in writing of the amount apportioned by him to each fund, district or account."

This section refers particularly to "funds belonging specifically to the county"; that is, when funds belong to the county the interest "shall be credited to the general fund of the county by the county treasurer."

The money deposited by the municipality would be of the same nature as that set out in this section, which is called "undivided tax funds." To be sure, it is not called undivided tax funds, but a fund which belongs particularly to the village and is deposited with the county treasurer to enable the county commissioners or state highway commissioner to draw upon in the improvement of the road in question.

Further, upon plain principles of equity, the interest that accrues upon a fund which really belongs to the municipality should follow the fund and should be returned to the municipality with that part of the fund which remains unused in taking care of the cost and expense of the improvement.

In arriving at the above conclusion, I am not unmindful of the holding of our supreme court in State ex rel. v. Pierce, auditor, 96 O. S. 44. In that case the court held that interest arising from a memorial building fund belongs to the county. The fourth branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

"The earnings of all county moneys under the depositary law generally belong to the county unless the statute expressly provides otherwise."

In rendering this decision, the court clearly held that the particular money in question was county money. In the opinion at p. 49 we find the following language:

"This was clearly the county's money and subject to the general depositary law. The statutes clearly provide what shall be done with the county moneys and the earnings upon the same."

As said before, in the case under consideration I do not feel that the moneys deposited with the county treasurer, by the municipality, became county money, and hence the holding in the case above quoted would not control in this matter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMON PLEAS JUDGE—COUNTY OFFICER FOR PURPOSE OF PRIMARY ELECTION LAW—DECLARATION OF CANDIDACY—FILING FEE—PARTY AFFILIATION.

(1) While the office of common pleas judge is for most purposes a state office, for the purposes of the primary election law, it is to be treated as a county office and the declaration of candidacy and certificate required under the primary act is to be filed with the board of deputy state supervisors of the county in which such office is to be voted for.

(2) Section 4970-1 provides that the time of filing the declaration of candidacy for the nomination of any office the candidate must pay a fee based upon the annual salary of such office. The fact that part of the salary of a common pleas judge is paid by the state and part by the county is not to be considered. The filing fee is based upon the entire amount of annual salary received by such judge irrespective of what subdivisions contribute to same.

(3) The primary election law provides for the regulation of the nomination of party candidates for public office, and for separate tickets for each political party, and that no name of any candidate shall be printed on an official ballot unless he files a declaration of candidacy which contains, among other things, an averment under oath that he is a member of a particular political party entitled to the provisions of the primary act. The provisions of the election law that the candidates for judge shall be voted for upon an independent and separate ballot without a party designation applies only to the regular election and has no application to the primary law; hence, a candidate for common pleas judge seeking nomination under the primary act must file his declaration of candidacy under 4970 and declare his party affiliation.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked for my official opinion on questions arising in the course of filing declarations and certificates of candidates for common pleas judge as raised by letter received by you from Hon. James W. Galbraith, Mansfield, Ohio, and from others.

These questions are:

> Is the office of common pleas judge a state, county, or district office, the county being the unit for his election and his having power, and possibly may be required, to perform services elsewhere in the state?
> Where should the declarations of such candidates be filed?
> As a part of the salary of this office is paid by the state and a part by the county, the question is raised whether the filing fee should be based upon the part received from the county, or upon the entire salary?
> The office of judge being non-partisan, is the candidate for nomination required to declare his party affiliation as in other cases, or should a different blank be used?

I will answer these questions in the inverse order, and first consider whether or not, owing to the fact that the office is now non-partisan, the candidate is required to declare his party affiliation.

It will be recalled that a prior primary election act known as the Bronson act, 2916 et seq. R. S., was attacked on the ground that it was unconstitutional as affecting the right of the elector to choose his political faith and at any time change same; that it was in direct violation of the constitutional provision for procuring signatures to the ballot, as well as for other reasons.

The supreme court in State ex rel. Webber v. Felton, 77 O. S. 554, held that the nomination of party candidates for public offices concerning the public welfare and the legislature in the exercise of police power, may make reasonable regulations therefor.

In the primary act as found in section 4948 et seq. General Code, the legislature has provided the manner of nomination of the candidates for all offices, including members of the committees of all voluntary political parties or associations in this state which at the next preceding general election polled for its candidate for governor in the state, or any district, county or subdivision thereof, or municipality, at least ten per cent of the entire vote cast therein for governor. The primary act is expressly a partisan law. It affects political parties having cast the required vote for governor. It only applies to such political parties, and persons desiring to be candidates other than candidates of such political parties are relegated to the provisions for nomination of candidates for office by petition.

Section 4970 absolutely prohibits the printing of the name of any candidate for office upon the official ballot, unless a declaration of candidacy and certificate shall have been filed with the proper board of supervisors. The declaration contains an avowal under oath of the candidate's party affiliation as well as an expression of the candidate's intention to vote for a majority of the candidates of the party of his affiliation at the next ensuing election. The certificate likewise contains a sworn statement by certain qualified electors that the candidate is a member of the political party as stated in his declaration of candidacy.

Section 4974 makes provision for protests being filed against the candidacy by any person and for the hearing of same. Such protests can only be filed by a recognized member, or its controlling committee, of the political party of which the candidate is a member.

Section 4976 provides for separate party tickets and the contents conform to the ballot.

Section 13335 provides a penalty for voting or attempting to vote at a primary election of a political party other than the political party with which the person has affiliated, as defined by law.

So it is plainly evident that the primary election law of Ohio is very much partisan, and that the candidates seeking nomination under its provisions, must take a decided stand as far as their political affiliations are concerned. Unless a candidate complies with the various provisions of the act he cannot have his name printed upon a separate official ballot of any party, and in consequence, could not be voted for at such primary.

So if one seeks his nomination under the primary law, and to obtain its advantages, he must comply with all of the provisions of the act, including a sworn statement as to his party affiliation.

It is suggested that the office of common pleas judge is non-partisan as far as the election of such judges is concerned, since the enactment of the act to provide for the election of judicial officers by separate ballot, 102 Ohio Laws, 5. Such judges are voted for upon a separate and independent ballot without any party designation, and in consequence, so far as their election is concerned, they have been deemed and spoken of, as non-partisan offices. But this does not affect the question of their nomination. If they desire to be nominated in a non-partisan manner, they cannot get into the primary but must be nominated as other independent candidates are; that is, by petition.

It has been further suggested that a different blank than the one used in the primary for other offices might be used. Inasmuch as there is no provision for the use of any other official ballots in the primary act than the separate party tickets as therein provided for, this suggestion has no weight.

So answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that if a party desires to seek nomination at the primary election, he is required to file his declaration of candidacy, which includes a statement of his party affiliation.

The third question refers to the fact that part of the salary of the office of common pleas judge is paid by the state, and part by the county, and asks what salary is the basis for computing the filing fee which is to be paid at the time of filing the declaration of candidacy.

Section 4970-1 General Code reads:

> "At the time of filing the declaration of candidacy for nomination for any office, each candidate shall pay a fee of one-half of one per cent, of the annual salary for such office, but in no case shall such fee be more than twenty-five dollars. All fees so paid in the case of candidates for state offices, office of United States senator and congressman-at-large, shall forthwith be paid by the officer receiving the same into the treasury of state. All other fees shall be paid by the officer receiving the same into the treasury of his county to the credit of the county fund. No fee shall be required in the case of candidates for committeeman or delegate or alternate to a convention or for president or vice-president of the United States, nor for offices for which no salary is paid."

It is readily seen that the filing fee is one-half of one per cent of "the annual salary." I think this language is too plain to need interpretation and construction. It makes no difference who pays the salary or how many subdivisions may contribute to the fund which constitutes "the annual salary," the fee is based upon the entire amount.

Hence, in the determination of the amount of the fee to be paid at the time of filing the nomination for common pleas judge, all that is necessary to be determined is what is the entire annual salary and the fee is figured on said salary. But in no case shall such fee be more than $25.00.

The second and first inquiries may be answered together, for the place where the declaration of candidacy shall be filed is to be determined by the conclusion reached as to whether the office of common pleas judge is a state, district or county office under the primary act.

Section 4949 provides for the nomination of > "* * * all elective state, district, county * * * offices, * * * all voluntary political parties * * * and the persons not so nominated shall not be considered candidates and their names shall not be printed on the official ballots."

Section 4952 provides:

> "Candidates for state offices, United States senator and congressman-at-large shall be nominated by direct vote of the people in the manner following: Each person so desiring to become a candidate for an office above enumerated shall not less than sixty days before the date of the primary election at which such nominations are to be made, file with the state supervisor of elections a declaration of candidacy signed and acknowledged and certified to by a certificate of five electors of the state who are members of the political party to which such candidate belongs, and shall pay to such state supervisor the proper fee."

Section 4952 provides that

"Candidates for district offices where such district includes more than one county, which shall include all candidates for member of the house of representatives in the congress of the United States, other than congressman-at-large, shall be nominated * * *. Each person * * * shall file * * * a declaration of candidacy * * * by a certificate of five electors of the district * * *."

Section 4969 provides:

"All nominations for offices or places on the primary ballot other than those heretofore provided for shall be made by the payment of the proper fees and by the filing of declarations of candidacy and certificates, which shall be filed with the board of deputy state supervisors at least sixty days before the day for holding the primary election. Such declarations of candidacy shall be signed and acknowledged by the person desiring to become a candidate and shall be accompanied by the certificate of five electors of the county, municipality, precinct, ward or other political subdivision for which such nomination is to be made and shall be in the form hereinafter provided. Where the term 'nomination paper' or 'nominating petition' is used in this chapter it shall be held to include 'declaration of candidacy' and any other paper required by law to be filed by a person seeking to become a candidate at a primary election."

It will be noted that section 4952 provides for the nomination of candidates for state offices, United States senator and congressman-at-large, and that the certificate necessary under the primary act shall be signed by five electors of the state, while 4952-1 providing for nomination of candidates for district offices, where the district includes more than one county, including candidates for congress other than congressman-at-large, shall have the certificate certified to by five electors of the district.

As far as the office is concerned, congressman-at-large differs from the congressman of the district only in so far as he is elected by the electors of the entire state, while the electors of the particular districts elect the other congressman. But there is an evident intention to have the declaration signed by the electors of the territory wherein the particular office was voted for. So in the provision of section 4969, which includes all the offices not taken care of in 4952 and 4952-1, provision is made for the signing of the required certificate by five electors of the county, or other political subdivisions for which the nomination is made.

I think it is plainly evident that so far as the primary act is concerned, the legislature intended to treat the officers to be voted for as classified by the territory in which the particular electors voting for the particular candidate were qualified to vote.

While for many purposes the common pleas judge is a state officer, and under certain circumstances may be called upon to perform the functions of his office in various parts of the state, yet he is elected by the electors of the county. While he is not a county officer under the common acceptation of the term, as far as his nomination and election is concerned, he is to be treated as a county rather than as a state officer.

You will recall the provision of 5004 prior to the amendment in 103 O. L. 843, provided that the certificate of nomination and nomination papers for state offices should be filed with the secretary of state, and for offices to be filled by the electors of a district, or subdivision of a district, composed of two or more counties, with the chief deputy state supervisor of the county in the district, or subdivision, containing the greatest number of inhabitants. That section was construed so as to provide for the filing of certificate of nomination and nomination papers of candidates for circuit judge in the most populous county of the circuit, and a common pleas judge in the most populous county of the subdivision, and for the filing of such papers. It was not, so far as I know, contended that there should be a filing with the secretary of state on account of the office of judge being a state office.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that for the purposes of the primary act, the office of common pleas judge is to be treated as a county office, and not as a state office, and that the declaration of candidacy and certificate required by the primary act must be filed under the provisions of section 4969, and with the board of deputy state supervisors of the county in which such office of judge is to be voted for.

You understand, of course, that the questions referring to matters coming under the primary election act, the answer is confined to the declaration of candidacy and certificate provided for under the act. In the event that a person does not desire to subject himself to the primary act, he may seek nomination under the provisions of section 4992 General Code, et seq., and the number of petitioners would be determined by the provisions of 4999.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have referred to me a notice and protest signed by a taxpayer, objecting to the submission to the electors of the state of an amendment to the constitution, as proposed by joint resolution No. 34 and adopted by the eighty-second general assembly on March 21, 1917, and found in 107 O. L. 774.

As stated by Mr. James A. Conroy, the taxpayer objecting, the protest against the proposal being designated on the official ballot in the manner provided in the joint resolution, is based on the following grounds:

"1. The legislature cannot provide by joint resolution for the designation of a proposed constitutional amendment on the official ballot. This can only be done by law and a joint resolution is not a law and cannot have the effect of law and therefore, to print upon the official ballot the designation set forth in said joint resolution, would be an expenditure of public funds of the state, without authority of law.

2. The manner in which proposed amendments to the constitution shall be submitted, and the ballots prepared, is provided for by law. Article 16, section 1, constitution; article 2, section 1-g, constitution; section 5019, General Code.

3. The designation sought to be made by this joint resolution is misleading and if said amendment were submitted under said designation, it would amount to a fraud upon the electors of this state, for the reason that said designation does not indicate the effect of such amendment. It assumes that there now exists double taxation of real estate in this state, which is not true. Further, it states that this amendment provides against double taxation of real estate; the amendment, if adopted, has no direct effect whatever, upon any taxation, but removes a constitutional limitation upon the legislature; so that the legislature and not the people, might classify property for taxation without any restraint and provide for a single tax on land.

4. Said designation, if placed upon the official ballot, in the form in which it appears in said joint resolution, would be contrary to the provisions of laws to the form of such ballots."

The joint resolution referred to reads as follows:

"Be it resolved by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, three-fifths of the members elected to both houses concurring therein:

That there shall be submitted to the electors of the state, in the manner provided by law, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, 1918, a proposal to amend section 2 of article XII of the constitution of the state of Ohio, to read as follows:

Article XII.

Section 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds outstanding on the first day of January, 1913, of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and by the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds outstanding on the first day of January, 1913, shall be exempt from taxation but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship; institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation; and laws may be passed to provide against the double taxation that results from the taxation of both the real estate and the mortgage or the debt secured thereby, or other lien upon it, but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

Be it further resolved, That at such election herein provided for the submission of this amendment to the electors of the state, this proposition shall be placed on the official ballot in the manner prescribed by law and shall be designated as follows:

'TO PROVIDE AGAINST DOUBLE TAXATION OF REAL ESTATE—YES.

TO PROVIDE AGAINST DOUBLE TAXATION OF REAL ESTATE—NO.'

If the votes for the proposal shall exceed those against it, this amendment shall take effect on the first day of January, 1919, and said original section 2 of article XII of the constitution of the state of Ohio shall be repealed and annulled."

The state constitution provides that it may be amended as follows:

(1) Article II provides for amendments by means of the initiative and referendum, but inasmuch as the proposed amendment under discussion was not initiated under the provisions of the sections of this article, it is needless to consider the same.

(2) Article XVI provides, under section 1, that the general assembly may propose amendments to the constitution. Under section 2 of said article it is provided that whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly shall think it necessary to call a convention to revise, amend or change the constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote for or against such convention. While section 3 of the same article provides that at the general election in 1932, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter or amend the constitution," shall be submitted.

The proposal under discussion was enacted under the authoritiy of article XVI, section 1. This section reads:

"Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution; and, if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals, with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors, for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendment shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately."

It is conceded that the proposal under section 1 of article XVI, supra, may be done by joint resolution of the general assembly, and this has been the usual method of providing for such proposal, as an examination of the year books will show. However, objection is made that the legislature cannot provide by joint resolution for the designation of the proposed constitutional amendment on the official ballot, and that this can only be done by law.

Attention is called to the fact that section 5019 G. C. (103 O. L. 554) provides how constitutional amendments shall be submitted. This section reads:

> "Sec. 5019. When an amendment to the constitution is to be submitted to the electors for their approval or rejection, such amendment shall be so submitted on a separate ballot at the top of which shall be printed the words 'Proposed amendment to the constitution,' or, if more than one such amendment is submitted at the same election, such heading shall be 'Proposed amendments to the constitution.' Each amendment shall be stated thereon in language sufficient to clearly designate it, which statement shall be printed in a space defined by ruled lines with two squares to the left thereof, the upper of which shall contain the word 'Yes,' and the lower the word 'No.' There shall be two similar blank squares, one to the left of that containing the word 'Yes,' and one to the left of that containing the word 'No.' Persons desiring to vote in favor of any such amendment shall do so by making a cross mark in the blank square to the left of the word 'Yes,' and those desiring to vote against the same shall do so by making a cross mark in the blank square to the left of the word 'No.' More than one such amendment may be submitted on the same ballot. The provisions of this title, so far as practicable, shall apply to the marking of ballots and the counting of votes upon any constitutional amendments so submitted. All such ballots shall be deposited in a separate ballot box."

This section manifestly shows that the legislature by statute has provided that each amendment shall be stated thereon in language sufficient to clearly designate it and also has provided the form of placing the amendment upon the official ballot and the manner in which the elector marks his choice.

It might be well to consider that part of the joint resolution which seeks to prescribe the manner and form of placing the proposed constitutional amendment upon the official ballot. It will be noted that the joint resolution starts out with the formal wording: "Be it resolved by the general assembly of the state of Ohio," and then proceeds to provide that there shall be submitted to the electors a proposed amendment "to read as follows." Then follows article XII, section 2, as proposed to be amended. The resolution then continues: "Be it further resolved" etc. Here follows the manner and form in which the proposed amendment is to be placed upon the official ballot.

The language of section 5019 G. C., as to the manner in which the amendment shall be placed on the ballot is:

> "* * * Each amendment shall be stated thereon in language sufficient to clearly designate it, which statement shall be printed in a space defined by ruled lines with two squares to the left thereof, the upper of which shall contain the word 'Yes,' and the lower the word 'No.' There shall be two similar blank squares, one on the left of that containing the word 'Yes,' and one to the left of that containing the word 'No.' * * *."

There is no specific provision as to the person who shall frame the wording, in order that the language used will be sufficient to clearly designate the amendment. But as in many cases the proposers of the amendment might not seek to formulate this statement, and as there would have to be some authority to determine whether or not a submitted statement, if authorized, complied with the statutory requirement, it would seem reasonable that the secretary of state, who is by law made the supervisor of elections and has general jurisdiction thereof, would have something to say as to whether the statute was complied with or not.

Article II, section 1g of the constitution among other things provides:

> "* * * Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law or proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. * * *."

The section from which the above quotation is taken is of course a part of the initiative and referendum provisions of the constitution and especially applies to an initiated amendment to the constitution. It probably has no direct reference to a proposed amendment by the general assembly, but it is seen that the people of the state have imposed a specific duty upon the secretary of state in the matter of an initiated amendment.

The election laws of the state make the secretary of state, by virtue of his office, state supervisor and inspector of elections and the state supervisor of elections. It is made his duty (section 5015 G. C.) to certify all nominations that are filed with him, together with a form of official ballot. In the past, various secretaries of state, as such supervisor of elections, have felt it their duty to send out forms of ballots to be used in the various counties where offices or questions are voted on throughout the state, that it might appear on all the ballots uniformly. While section 5019, supra, does not specifically name the secretary of state as state supervisor, nor specifically impose the duty of framing the designation to go on the ballot, still this section is a part of the election laws, the enforcement and carrying out of which is made the duty of said officer.

It is my opinion that the clear inference is that this duty is imposed upon the secretary of state as state supervisor, and that section 5019 is to be construed as if it read that the state supervisor of elections shall place a statement on the official ballot in language sufficient to clearly designate the proposed amendment.

It will be noted that the joint resolution provides:

> "* * * this proposition shall be placed on the official ballot in the manner prescribed by law and shall be designated as follows" (here follows the statement suggested to be placed on the ballot).

Inasmuch as the joint resolution provides that the proposition shall be placed on the official ballot in the manner prescribed by law, and as the statute providing for the voting on constitutional amendments does not contemplate the placing of the entire amendment upon the official ballot, but merely sufficient language to clearly designate it, this language is merely declaratory of what the statute is, and unnecessary because the matter having been provided for by statute, the legislature could not affect the law already passed, by joint resolution.

The supreme court in State ex rel. v. Kinney, Sec'y of State, 56 O. S. 721, held:

> "The statute law of the state can neither be repealed nor amended by joint resolution of the general assembly."

It is my opinion that that part of the joint resolution providing for the manner in which the amendment should be placed upon the ballot and designating the form, must under the authority of State ex rel. v. Kinney, supra, be treated as mere surplusage, and that the secretary of state need not pay any attention thereto.

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the secretary of state, as state supervisor of elections, need not pay any attention whatever to the designation of the form of the amendment to be placed upon the official ballot; that a duty is imposed upon him by statute to place such proposed amendment on the official ballot in language sufficient to clearly designate it, and that this duty imposed upon him by law cannot and has not been in any way changed by the joint resolution.

As this answers the objections of the protestor, numbered 1, 2 and 4, it becomes unnecessary to pass upon the question raised in objection numbered 3.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF ALLEN COUNTY—$7,900.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

> "In re bonds of Allen county, Ohio, in the sum of $7,900.00 in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments to provide additional funds to pay the respective shares of said county, of Bath and Perry townships and of the owners of benefited property assessed for the cost and expense of improving section 'A' of Intercounty Highway No. 128, located in said county and townships."

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings relating to the above issue of bonds and find the same to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind. I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Allen county, Ohio, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be executed and delivered covering this issue has been submitted. I am therefore holding the transcript of the proceedings relating to said bond issue until a proper bond form covering said issue is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—HOW PROCEEDS OF BOND ISSUE UNDER SECTION 1223 MUST BE USED.

The proceeds realized from the sale of bonds under section 1223 G. C. (107 O. L. 133) for a road improvement under the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner could not be used to pay the cost and expense of the improvement of the same road in a proceeding under section 6906 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 95). The proceeds of said bond issue would pass to the sinking fund of the county and be subject to the uses of such sinking fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

HON. G. O. MCGONAGLE, Prosecuting Attorney, McConnelsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of May 1, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Our county commissioners, prior to June, 1917, issued bonds for the county's proportionate share in building a 2.15 mile section of a certain intercounty highway, two other sections of the same being then under construction. This section has been advertised five times, estimates being raised, and no bids have been received. The county's proportionate share of this money has long since been drawing two per cent interest in the depositary, the bonds drawing five.
> May the commissioners proceed to use this fund to construct this section of road by force account? I call attention to sections 1203 and 6948-1 (107 O. L. 125 and 107 respectively)."

The road in question is one over which the state highway commissioner has assumed jurisdiction under the provisions of sections 1178 to 1231-3 G. C. For this improvement the county commissioners issued bonds under section 1223 G. C., to take care of the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the county, township and abutting property owners.

You inquire whether the county commissioners might now assume jurisdiction over the particular highway in question, construct the same under force account and pay for it, at least in part, from the proceeds realized from the sale of said bonds.

Section 1223 G. C. (107 O. L. 133) provides that the bonds issued thereunder "shall state for what purpose issued" and that

> "the proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement and repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued."

If the state highway commissioner should relinquish his jurisdiction over the construction of this road under the provisions of section 1178 et seq. G. C., and the county commissioners assume such jurisdiction, they would proceed under sections 6906 et seq. (107 O. L. 95); that is, it would virtually be an entirely new proceeding just the same as if the state highway commissioner had never taken jurisdiction of the matter. While the county commissioners would construct exactly the same piece of road which the state highway commissioner had intended to construct, yet it is my opinion that the improvement made by said commissioners would be a different one from that which would have been made by the state highway commissioner, and hence the proceeds of the bond issue would not be used in the manner set out in section 1223, supra, if the commissioners should apply them to a part of the cost and expense of the improvement.

Section 5654 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The proceeds of a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was levied, issued or made, except as herein provided. When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax or of the proceeds of a loan or bond issue which cannot be used, or which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied, or the loan made, or the bonds issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the officer, board or council having charge of such surplus, to the sinking fund of such city, village, county, township or school district, and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund."

In this section it is provided that if the proceeds of a bond issue cannot be used for the purpose for which the bonds were issued, they shall be transferred immediately to the sinking fund of the county. So under this section the county commissioners would not have authority in law to use the proceeds of said bond sale for a different purpose from that for which they were issued; but if the state highway commissioner would not proceed further with the improvement of said road and the purpose of the bond issue in that event fails, the proceeds would immediately be transferred to the sinking fund of the county, to redeem the bonds issued by the county as they fall due from time to time.

The question might also be raised as to whether the state highway commissioner, having once assumed jurisdiction over the construction of this highway, could surrender his jurisdiction and give the county commissioners jurisdiction to proceed with the construction. However, in view of the above conclusion, it will not be necessary for me to pass upon this particular question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN THEY MAY REDISTRICT—EFFECT OF REDISTRICTING UPON CONTRACT OF SUPERINTENDENT WHOSE CONTRACT EXTENDED BEYOND THE YEAR IN WHICH REDISTRICTING TOOK PLACE—TERM OF NEW SUPERINTENDENT.

The county board of education of a county school district may redistrict such county school district into supervision districts any year.

When the county board of education redistricts the county school district and changes the district lines of a supervision district which supervision district had employed a district superintendent for more than one year, such change in the supervision district will cause a termination of the contract of the district superintendent, which contract extended beyond the school year in which the redistricting was made.

Where the county board of education has redistricted the county school district, and has changed the lines of any supervision district therein, the district superintendent of such newly created supervision district can be employed for but one year at the first election held in such newly created supervision district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you say:

"During the past year one of our district superintendents was employed for a period of three years. The county board of education, on April 1, 1918, redistricted the county, with the result that an additional township was added to the supervision district over which said superintendent had supervision.

It was conceded that by such redistricting, the contract between the superintendent and the former district was rendered void, and a re-employment became necessary. There has been a re-employment of the same superintendent by the district as changed by the county board, for a term of three years, and the question has arisen as to whether or not * * * such employment could be made for a period of three years, or whether or not such employment could be for one year only, being the first employment.

My opinion on the proposition is that if the redistricting rendered the contract void between the superintendent and the district as then established, it would make the present employment a first employment and would be limited to one year. I would like to know first as to whether the addition of a rural district to the original district would work a discontinuance of the contract between the superintendent and the original district, and if so, whether or not the district as now constituted could employ the superintendent for a period of more than the one year."

The section which provides for the redistricting of a county school district into supervision districts is section 4738, and as last amended (106 O. L., 396) reads in part as follows:

"The board of education shall divide the county school district, any year, to take effect the first day of the following September, into supervision districts, each to contain one or more village or rural school districts. The territory of such supervision districts shall be contiguous and compact. In the formation of the supervision districts consideration shall be given to the number of teachers employed, the amount of consolidation and centralization, the condition of the roads and general topography. The territory in the different districts shall be as nearly equal as practicable and the number of teachers employed in any one supervision district shall not be less than thirty. The county board of education shall, upon application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county, redistrict the county into supervision districts. * * *"

Under the provisions of the above quoted section you say that during the last year, that is on April 1, 1918, the county board of education of your county redistricted the county school district and that as a result of such redistricting an additional township (rural district) was added to the supervision district, which supervision district had employed its superintendent for a period of three years.

That the county board of education has a right to so redistrict the county in any year has been determined by this department several times, and when three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards of the county petition or make application to the county board of education for such redistricting, then it is mandatory upon the county board to so redistrict the county school district, and it has also been determined by this department in several opinions, hereinafter referred to, that when the county school district is so redistricted in any year by the county board of education, and a supervision district has employed a superintendent, whose term extends beyond the period of the school year, in which such redistricting is had, and by such redistricting the district line of such supervision district is changed, either by adding to or taking from such supervision district, territory of the county school district, then and in that event the contract of such supervision district with the district superintendent is hereby rendered void or terminated and the new supervision district, as formed by the county board of education, must employ a district superintendent for such new supervision district.

In opinion No. 94, rendered by this department March 9, 1917, and found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 211, it was held:

> "The county board of education has the authority to divide the county school district into supervision districts during any year, the same to take effect on the first day of the following September, and the district superintendent has no such vested right in a contract for more than one year which will prevent such redistricting or which will compel a continuation of such contract."

In opinion No. 186, rendered by this department under date of April 14, 1917, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 482, it was held:

> "Redistricting of the county school district into supervision districts upon the application of three-fourths of the presidents of the village and rural district boards has the effect of terminating contracts of district superintendents which extend beyond the school year. Such district superintendents have no vested rights in such contracts which will defeat redistricting legislation."

So that, it may be considered that the county board of education had a right to redistrict your county school district on April 1, 1918, and that when it changed the supervision district which had employed a superintendent for more than one year, the contract of such superintendent for such supervision district was thereby terminated, and the next question to be determined is, whether or not such new supervision district may hire a superintendent for more than one year.

Section 4741 G. C. provides in part:

> "The first election of a district superintendent shall be for a term not longer than one year. Thereafter he may be re-elected in the same district for a period not to exceed three years * * *."

The language of said section is so clear that a construction of the same seems almost unnecessary in order to determine its meaning, for it says the first election of any district superintendent shall be for a term not longer than one year, and that thereafter he may be elected for a term of not to exceed three years. Whenever a supervision district is changed, either by adding to such district or by taking from such district any territory of the county school district, then the supervision district is a new district, that is, it is a different district from what it was before such redistricting was had. It is noted from section 4738, above quoted, that supervision districts may be formed from one or from more than one village or rural school districts of the county school district and each supervision district, when so formed, shall elect a district superintendent, either by the boards of education of such districts which compose such supervision district. if there are three or less districts in such supervision district, or by the presidents of such boards of education of the districts which compose such supervision district, if there are more than three in such supervision district. When, then, a new supervision district is formed by adding to an old supervision district another district, the electing body is a new electing body and it will be the first election for such new electing body. That some of the electing body had participated in a previous election of a district superintendent cannot, in any manner, effect the status of the body as a whole.

Therefore but one conclusion can be reached and that is that where the county board of education has redistricted the county school district and has changed the district lines of any supervision district therein, the district superintendent of such newly created supervision district can be employed for but one year at the first election held in such newly created supervision district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MINING MACHINES—WHEN SAME MAY NOT BE MOVED.

The provisions of section 957 G. C., prohibiting the moving of mining machines while the cutter chain is in motion, makes it unlawful to use the "breast" mining machine for cutting coal, which machine is moved with power, because this cutter chain necessarily must be in motion in order to move such machine with the power.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, attention of L. D. DEVORE, Chief Deputy and Safety Commissioner of Mines, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry asking opinion upon the following:

> "Owing to a controversy arising over the situation of handling the 'breast' mining machines when cutting coal at the Buffalo mine, operated by the Cambridge Collieries Company, Guernsey county, Ohio, a joint report of Inspectors Smith, Jenkins and Thos. P. Williams shows that the mining machines are moved with the power, the new device being a chain that reaches across the room and is made secure to the right hand rib.
> The chain is equipped with single pulley block attached. One end of the chain is hooked over a machine bit which is put in the reverse way, and the power turned on to move the machine the desired distance. When the room is cut, the chain is rearranged and the machine moved back to the track with the power.
> We should be pleased to have you give us an opinion at your earliest convenience, whether this system of moving mining machines as above pointed out is contrary to section 957 of the General Code of Ohio."

Accompanying your request is a report of the use of mining machines in the manner described, in which it is stated that claim is made that the use of the device described was a great saving of labor and that the use has come in to mining work since section 957 was passed, and was not contemplated by said section.

Section 957 General Code, to which reference is made, provides:

> "Machine runners and helpers shall use care while operating mining machines. They shall not operate a machine unless the shields are in place, and shall warn persons not engaged in the operating of a machine of the danger in going near the machine while it is in operation, and shall not permit such persons to remain near the machine while it is in operation. * * * They shall not move the machine while the cutter chain is in motion. * * *"

The inhibition contained in the part of 957 above quoted, is against operating the machine unless the shields are in place, permitting certain persons remaining near the machine while it is in operation, and moving the machine while the cutter chain is in motion. The statute in express terms provides that the machine runners and helpers "shall not move the machine while the cutter chain is in motion."

Now, as I understand your statement of facts, and as I gather from the report of the inspectors, the mining machines are moved with the power by means of a chain with pulley blocks attached, the power being turned on to move the machine to the required place, and when the room is cut the machine is moved back to the track with the power. The fact that this device was not in use, and that the question of using it has grown up since the passing of section 957, does not take it without the prohibition. The custom under this section was illegal in its inception, and the statute expressly, and in terms prohibiting the moving of the machine while the cutter chain was in motion, would preclude the use of this device in the manner in which you have described.

It is unfortunate that the benefit of the saving that this device accomplishes must be lost, but whatever good or benefit might accrue in using the machine in the manner described, while it might be an argument to the legislature to amend the statute so as to permit such use, can have no bearing upon construing the language of the law as it now exists.

An examination of the mining laws of the state shows a manifest intention on the part of the legislature to safeguard the miner. Duties are imposed upon those who operate mines, upon the superintendent of the mine's foreman and overseer, as also upon the miner. It can well be seen from these statutes that every endeavor is made to protect the workman in the mines as against the acts of his fellow miners and also himself.

Under section 976, the penalty section, penalties are to be visited upon the refusal or neglect of the owner, lessee or agent, the superintendent's foreman or overseer as well as the general violations of the law by individuals, and this section expressly provides a penalty for any person or persons who violate the provisions of section 957.

Specifically answering your question, it is my view that the provisions of section 957 prohibiting the moving of mining machines while the cutter chain is in motion, prohibits the use of the device for moving the machine with power, as stated in your inquiry, because the cutter chain, as stated, necessarily must be in motion in order to move the machine in the manner described.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

> "You are familiar with the practice of mutual fire insurance companies to allow their agents a policy or survey fee of $2.00 or more upon each policy written. I understand that the fee so charged is an agency profit and a uniform charge for a legitimate service rendered.
> Is it your opinion that the anti-discrimination law recently passed limits in any way the collection of the policy or survey fee? Is it not true that a proper policy survey charge is a claim of the agent for personal services and not included among so-called 'premium' charges?"

The law to which you refer is the act of March 20, 1917, found in 107 Ohio Laws, 743. The first section of this act requires every fire insurance company to belong to a rating bureau, which bureau is described and regulated in the succeeding sections. Section 8 of the act, section 9592-8 G. C. provides:

> "No fire insurance company * * * shall fix or charge any rate for fire insurance upon property in this state which discriminates unfairly between risks in the application of like charges and credits, or which discriminates unfairly between risks of essentially the same hazards and having substantially the same degree of protection against fire."

Section 9 (section 9592-9 G. C.) provides:

> "Any deviation of any company or insurer from the schedule of rates established and maintained by the bureau which it maintains, or of which it is a member, shall be uniform in its application to all of the risks in the class for which the variation is made, and no such uniform deviation shall be made unless notice thereof shall be filed with the bureau of which the insurer is a member, and the superintendent of insurance of his state, at least fifteen days before such uniform variation is in effect, and schedules providing for such variation shall be filed with the rating bureau and the superintendent of insurance showing the amended basis rate and amended charges and credits and application of the amended schedules to individual risks in the class affected."

The above excerpts from the law constitute the portion thereof bearing upon the question you ask. It is to be noted that the prohibition is directed to the company. This, of course, is broad enough to include any agent of the company acting in his representative capacity on behalf of the company.

The company, however, does not receive these policy fees, as stated in your request. They are retained by the agent as compensation for writing the policy; they do not seem, therefore, to come within the purview of this statute, or to have been in contemplation of the legislature in enacting the same. They speak continually of rates; no other charge of any kind is mentioned but rates, and it is well understood that the word "rates" as applied to the charge by an insurance company for a policy means rates based upon a percentage of the face of the policy. The rate, as it is commonly spoken of, is a certain percentage of the amount for which insurance is taken out, and is the basis for the calculation of the amount of what is known as the premium, which is the price paid for the insurance to the company.

You are therefore advised that the matter in question does not interfere with the common practice of charging a policy fee.

However, it does not follow that this practice might not become a proper subject of regulation by the insurance department. If a company made use of it as a subterfuge to accomplish an actual discrimination, it would no doubt be a violation of the act, as if, for instance, they reduced the compensation allowed by them out of the premiums on policies which the agent is permitted to retain, and in certain cases or classes of risks, require him to secure his compensation by the charge of a policy fee, or a greater policy fee than he ordinarily would charge. This would effect a discrimination, which would be a violation of the act, which violation does not arise by the mere charge by an agent of uniform fees for writing policies, regardless of the company in which they are written.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BANKS—NOT AUTHORIZED TO INVEST IN UNDIVIDED PORTIONS OF REAL ESTATE.

The statutes authorizing banks to invest in real estate whereon is, or may be erected, buildings suitable for the transaction of the business of such banks, means they may invest in real estate in its entirety and not in undivided portions thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

HON. PHILIP C. BERG, Superintendent of Banks, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your communication of May 20, 1918, in which you request my opinion, as follows:

> "Please advise whether a commercial bank, a savings bank, a safe deposit company, a trust company, or a combination of any or all of them, may hold an undivided half or other fractional interest in its banking house and the real estate upon which it is located."

Commercial banks are governed in this matter by section 9753, which is as follows:

> (a) Real estate whereon is erected or may be erected a building or buildings useful for the convenient transaction of its business, and from portions of which, not required for its use, a revenue may be derived; but the cost of such building or buildings and the real estate whereon they are erected, in no case shall exceed sixty per cent of its paid-in capital and surplus.

(d) Such corporation also shall have power by lease to acquire a suitable building for the convenient transaction of its business, and from portions of which, not needed for its own use, a revenue may be derived."

By section 9762 the same provision is made applicable to savings banks; and by section 9774 the same provision is made applicable to trust companies. Safe deposit companies are governed by section 9772, which is as follows:

"A safe deposit company may purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate whereon is erected or may be erected a building or buildings useful for the convenient transaction of its business, including fire and burglar proof vaults or safes, and from portions of which, not required for its own use, a revenue may be derived. The cost of such buildings and the real estate whereon they are erected in no case shall exceed fifty per cent of the paid-up capital and surplus of the corporation."

Technically considered, the term "real estate" includes undivided interests in land held in common. It is necessary to examine the above provisions to see whether this meaning is intended by the legislature in them. The undivided interest you mention is real estate; but is it real estate whereon buildings may be erected? Owners in common have what is called unity of possession, from which it follows that each owns every particular part and location of the real estate so held in common. Each one owns it all, but, of course, necessarily subject to the condition that the other or others also have the same ownership.

It would therefore also answer the description of real estate whereon may be erected buildings useful for the convenient transaction of the business of a bank, etc., and yet it is apparent that this meaning is not that intended by the legislature. This technical meaning of real estate cannot follow the latter part of the clause permitting ownership in which the amount of the investment is limited. It is the cost of such building or buildings and the real estate whereon they are erected that shall not exceed sixty per cent of the capital and surplus.

The cost of the building here referred to is undoubtedly the whole cost. The words are used in their ordinary sense, and this reflects back upon the land itself, for it is the cost of the buildings and the real estate whereon they are erected, which, of course, means the ground whereon they stand, with its necessary appurtenances.

If this were in doubt and it was necessary to proceed further and consider the consequence of the interpretation of the statute, it occurs that a contrary interpretation might permit the investment of sixty per cent of the capital and surplus of a commercial bank in an infinitesimally small undivided interest in real estate, as the owner of an undivided interest potentially may become the owner in whole by proceedings in partition, and as such proceedings must always be in contemplation of tenants in common, and as the bank, to carry out the purposes intended by the act, might find it necessary to become the owner of the whole property, it would follow in such case that it might have much more than its capital and surplus invested therein.

The evident reason for permitting the bank to hold this real estate, or rather the expressed reason is, that the bank may have a proper location and building for the transaction of its business, and this would not be accomplished by the precarious possession given by a tenancy in common with other co-tenants, who in law would have an equal, or the same right, at all times to possession of the premises, and who might at any time assert such right, and instead of permanence and security to the bank, it would thereby have confusion and continual uncertainty.

This meaning is also made more probable by comparison with paragraph (d) of section 9753. The power to lease a suitable building there could not mean an undivided interest in such building.

In view of the evident purpose of this legislative authority and the connection and context of the legislation, as well as what appears to be the meaning of the language itself, you are advised that such banks are only authorized to hold the entire estate and not an undivided interest in real estate.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CLERK OF COUNCIL—MAY SERVE NOTICES OF SPECIAL MEETINGS AND RESOLUTIONS—COMPENSATION—WHAT NOTICE UNDER SECTION 3818 SHALL CONTAIN.

1. Council may provide that the clerk shall serve notice on members of special meetings of council and also serve copies of all notices and notices of all resolutions that may be ordered by council, and shall receive as compensation therefor the sum of twenty-five cents for each service, and said clerk is entitled to such compensation in addition to his regular compensation as clerk of council.

2. The notice provided for in section 3818 G. C. is the resolution of necessity provided for in section 3814 G. C., and shall contain the matters and things set up in section 3815 G. C. It does not contemplate reference to any particular lot or parcel of land, but refers to the entire improvement. Ordinarily, a clerk of council or an assistant when called upon to serve such notice upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed is only required to serve a single notice, no matter how many lots or parcels of land on the improvement belong to the same owner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 25 you wrote me, enclosing a copy of ordinance No. 39 of the city of Mansfield, a part of which reads as follows:

> "The clerk of council or an assistant shall serve notice on members of special meetings of council and also serve copies of all notices and notices of all resolutions that may be ordered by council and shall receive as compensation therefor the sum of twenty-five cents for each service."

You request my opinion upon the following questions:

> "1. Is such ordinance legal and may the clerk of council legally receive the sum of 25 cents for each service of notice of special meetings of council and special assessment notices and such other notices as may be ordered by council in addition to his regular compensation as clerk of council?
> 2. If such compensation be legal and the clerk of council at one delivery serves ten notices to the owner of ten lots which may be side by side, can such clerk of council legally be paid for each of the ten notices?"

I assume that the ordinance was legally passed and that your question as to its legality is not as to the manner of its passage, but whether or not the subject-matter is proper and whether council is authorized to impose such duties upon the clerk of council or an assistant and provide the compensation as in the ordinance set out.

Section 4210 G. C. provides:

> "Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem., a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

This section authorizes the election of the clerk and such other employes of council as may be necessary, by the members of council, and the fixing of the duties and compensation of such clerk and other employes.

As far as the duties of such clerk are concerned, under this section they are to be determined by council, and council alone is the sole judge. In addition to the duties determined and imposed by council, there are certain other duties imposed by law upon the clerk. For instance, in the matter of public improvements, payable in whole or in part by special assessments, it is provided by section 3818 G. C. that:

> "A notice of the passage of such resolution shall be served by the clerk of council, or an assistant, upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed, in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil actions. If any such owners or persons are not residents of the county, or if it appears by the return in any case of the notice, that such owner cannot be found, the notice shall be published * * *."

So the service of the notice of special assessment is a statutory duty imposed upon the clerk.

Sections 3679, 3848, 3892, 3893, 4227, 4228, 4231 and 4232, and possibly some other sections of the General Code, impose specific duties upon the clerk. Such duties would be in addition to the other or similar duties determined and imposed upon him by council. No matter what his duties are or whether they are imposed by law or by council, his compensation is to be fixed by council. The statute does not provide that council shall fix a salary for the clerk. It is authorized to fix his compensation, which may include both salary and compensation.

As said by Spear, J., in Gobrecht v. Cin'ti., 51 O. S. 68, at p. 72, a general definition of "salary" includes "compensation," and while salary is compensation, compensation is not in every instance salary.

It is my opinion, then, that, assuming that the ordinance was properly passed, it is legal and under it the clerk of council may legally receive the fee fixed for each service of notice for special meetings of council and for the service of copies of all notices and notices of all resolutions that may be ordered by council, and that he is entitled to such specific fees, even if council has provided a regular compensation or salary for his other duties.

In your second question you inquire whether the clerk of council, who at one delivery serves ten notices to a person who is the owner of ten lots on the improvement, which possibly may be side by side, could legally be paid twenty-five cents for each of the ten notices.

That part of the ordinance in question which provides compensation for certain services therein named reads as above quoted on page one. The fee of twenty-five cents for each service is for each service of "notice on members of special meetings of council," "copies of all notices" and "notices of all resolutions that may be ordered by council."

The inquiry assumes, and I think correctly, that the ordinance provides for a fee for service of a notice of a special assessment upon the owner of lots affected by such assessment.

Section 3818 G. C. provides that a notice of passage of the resolution of necessity shall be served by the clerk of council, or an assistant, "upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed, in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil actions." It further provides that if any such owners or persons are not residents of the county, the notice shall be published at least twice in a newspaper of general circulation within the corporation.

You will recall that your bureau made inquiry of my predecessor, Hon. E. C. Turner, as to whether several lots or parcels of land owned by non-residents in a special assessment improvement could be included in one notice, and whether a newspaper is entitled to legal compensation for such publication when the newspaper publishes notice as per a form submitted by the city officials, said form providing a separate notice as to each lot or tract of land owned by non-residents. Mr. Turner held (Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 1222, as will be found at p. 1223) as follows:

> "The statutes are silent as to whether or not a separate notice shall be published as to each non-resident owner, or whether or not the same may be included in the one publication. Being silent as to this matter, I am of the opinion, in answer to your first question, that several lots or parcels of land owned by non-residents in a special assessment improvement may be included in one notice, and for the sake of economy should be so included.
> However, in answer to your second question, if the city officials submit forms of separate notice to each lot owner to a newspaper for publication, said newspaper would be entitled to legal compensation for each publication."

This does not assist us in solving the question submitted, but attention is called to the conclusion reached by Mr. Turner, with which I concur.

The resolution spoken of in section 3818 G. C. is the resolution provided for in section 3815 G. C. This section, as amended in 107 O. L. 151, provides:

> "Sec. 3815. Such resolution shall determine the general nature of the improvement, what shall be the grade of the street, alley, or other public place to be improved, the grade or elevation of the curbs, and shall approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement. In such resolution council shall also determine the method of the assessment, the mode of payment, and whether or not bonds shall be issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. Assessments for any improvement may be payable in one to twenty installments at such time as council prescribes."

It will be noted that the notice provided for in this section is a general notice, affecting all the property along the improvement, and such resolution would not refer in any way to any particular lot or parcel of land. So I cannot see the necessity of having a separate notice for each lot and parcel of land and of having the clerk or his assistant serve more than one notice upon a lot owner affected by the proposed improvement, and it is my opinion that one such notice being sufficient for each owner, more than one, even if such owner held title to more than one lot or parcel, would be superfluous and unnecessary.

Section 3818, supra, does provide that the notice shall be served "upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed," and if council, for some reason sufficient to itself, should order a notice to be given to each owner as to each piece of property that was assessable, then under this ordinance, which gives a fee for service of each notice of all resolutions that may be ordered by council, the clerk or his assistant would probably be entitled to the fee for each service.

I do not know what the rule has been in municipalities of the state, but it is my opinion that the statute only contemplates a single notice to each owner of property on the improvement, no matter how many pieces or parcels of land he may own thereon.

I would suggest that if there has been any custom of duplicate notices to such owners, it should be ordered discontinued, but that no findings be made against officials following such custom. Of course if the notice is served by direct order of council and there is in the municipality an ordinance providing for a fee for service of notices ordered by council, as in the instant case, then the ordinance would specifically provide for a fee for each separate notice and in this particular case the fee would be legally chargeable.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE—LEAVE OF ABSENCE—EFFECT—EXTENT—RULES BY COMMISSION RELATIVE TO—ABANDONMENT.

A leave of absence from duty by an employe in the state civil service, either with or without pay, is not a separation from the service within the meaning of section 486-16 G. C.

The state civil service commission has authority to provide by rule that leave of absence be reported to them when such leave of absence is under such circumstances or for such length of time that they may be required to supply an employe temporarily to perform the duties of the position.

No leave of absence could be granted which by its terms is to extend for a period beyond a year.

Whenever an employe is properly absent upon leave of absence, he has the right to return at the end of the period of such leave and resume his position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 3, 1918.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 21, 1918, you address the following communication to this department:

"Section 486-16 of the civil service law provides in part as follows:

'Any person holding an office or position under the classified service who has been separated from the service without delinquency or misconduct on his part may, with the consent of the commission, be reinstated within one year from the date of such separation to a vacancy in the same or similar office or position in the same department, etc.'

Employes in the classified service frequently request and are granted leave of absence by appointing officers, for periods ranging from a few days to one year. There seems to be no provision of the law, other than the one quoted, under which leave of absence might be granted. Former Civil Service Commissions have established a rule that a leave of absence may not be granted for a period of longer than one year, it being held that a leave without pay is a temporary separation from the service, under the provisions of section 486-16, and that inasmuch as the commission must fill, in accordance with the civil service law, vacancies caused by leave of absence for periods exceeding thirty days, except in cases where leave is granted on account of sickness and filled in accordance with the provisions of section 486-14, every leave of absence must be reported to it for approval. Certifications for temporary employment are made in accordance with the law, whenever possible, to fill positions thus temporarily vacated by the granting of leave.

Your advice and opinion is respectfully requested as follows:

Is there any provision of law under which classified employes may be granted leave of absence, except on account of sickness, as provided in section 486-14? If so,

1. Is a leave of absence, without pay, a separation from the service within the meaning of section 486-16, above quoted?

2. Can the civil service commission require by rule, that leave of absence be reported, with the reasons therefor, for its approval?

3. Can such leave, under the civil service law, be granted for a period exceeding one year?

4. When leave of absence has been granted a classified employe for a specified period, and the position in the meantime has been filled by certification, does the employe granted leave have undisputed claim to his position upon expiration of his leave?

5. If an employe granted leave of absence fails to return to duty promptly upon expiration of such leave, does this action on his part sever all claim he may have to the position?"

There is no express provision of statute in reference to leave of absence of employes in the state service, except as the same is alluded to in section 486-14, which reads as though it might be intended to assume that there could be no leave of absence except for sickness or disability. It is not necessary, however, to draw this implication from this language. The civil service law, like all other laws, is drawn to have a practical application and is intended to be applied to people and affairs in a practical manner. The law takes the world as it exists and is intended at all times to be applied in accordance with existing conditions. A man is not a machine, and if he were he wouldn't run all the time. When a man enters the service of the state, he does so in much the same way as if it were private service. While theoretically he gives all his time, yet applying the terminology of logic, this is a general and not a universal practice. It is certain that any man who enters any service, public or private, will be off duty at some time, and this occasional and incidental absence from duty is contemplated in the civil service of the state, as in every other connection in which men are employed. No express provision of the law is necessary to warrant it.

Answering, then, your five questions founded upon this situation, you ask, first,

> "Is a leave of absence, without pay, a separation from the service within the meaning of section 486-16, above quoted?"

This should be answered in the negative. The term "separated from the service" is used in the civil service law and plainly contemplates a discharge or entire separation. The statute is:

> "Any person * * * who has been separated from the service * * * may, with the consent of the commission, be reinstated within one year from the date of such separation to a vacancy in the same or similar office or position in the same department."

This clearly, therefore, does not mean such temporary separation as would arise from an absence of a few days upon leave. A person so absent is not out of the service, not separated from it, but is, in legal effect, in it all the time. It would make no difference as to the leave of absence being without pay, although loss of pay is not usually an accompaniment of such short absence. However, in the very nature of the case there ought to be no construction of law adopted which would prevent the head of a department doing that for the state which it is proper for a private employer to do for himself. There are many cases, where it is necessary for an employe to be absent for a short time when it is strictly just, that he should not receive pay. Suppose, for instance, an employe was the owner of real estate in California or had any occasion to go there on private business of profit to himself, there is no reason why he should be deprived of the opportunity to make a brief visit to look after his business and no reason that he should be paid for his time while doing so, and no reason for his forfeiting or losing the position by doing so, as the average man who would be chosen to fill the vacancy would be liable to the same temporary absence.

Your second question is:

> "Can the civil service commission require by rule, that leave of absence be reported, with the reasons therefor, for its approval?"

The power of the civil service commission to make rules is found in section 486-7 of the act. This sections begins:

> "POWERS AND DUTIES. The commission shall,
> First: (Rules and Regulations.) Prescribe, amend and enforce administrative rules for the purpose of carrying out and making effectual the provisions of this act."

The words "powers and duties" in the heading refer to a series of provisions, each of which is both a power and a duty; that is, in the one above quoted there is power to make rules and, the language being in form mandatory, it is also a duty that is imposed upon them. The second of these duties, as enumerated, is to keep the minutes of its proceedings and official actions; the third is to keep a roster of all persons in the classified service; the fourth is to make investigations concerning all matters touching the enforcement and effect of the law and the rules; the fifth is the subpoenaing of witnesses, and, in short, obtaining testimony in such manner as to make its investigations effective; the sixth is to hear appeals of persons who have been discharged, etc., and the seventh to make an annual report. This section contains an express categorical list of the powers and duties of the state civil service commission. Now it will be observed that the rules which it is authorized and required to make are for the purpose of carrying out and making effectual the provisions of the act. In determining, therefore, whether a certain proposed rule would be within the power of the commission to make, it is necessary to apply the test of whether the rule could have proper application to the purpose of carrying out and giving effect to the provisions of the act.

Referring to the law, then, for the control of the commission over leave of absence, in order to consider the rule proposed in your question, we find in section 14 the following:

> "In case of an emergency an appointment may be made without regard to the rules of this act, but in no case to continue longer than thirty days, and in no case shall successive appointments be made; provided, however, that interim or temporary appointments, made necessary by reason of sickness or disability of regular officers, employes or subordinates shall continue only during such period of sickness or disability, subject to rules to be provided for by the commission."

It would not be practicable and not desirable, either to any of the departments or to the civil service commission, that if an employe desired to leave his duties for an hour or two the same should be reported to the commission, and yet, in a sense, such brief absence, with permission of a superior, is leave of absence. The same statement might be vouchsafed as to an absence of a day, or a few days. Inasmuch, however, as temporary appointments may be made at times to fill these short vacancies and such temporary appointments can be made for no longer than thirty days, the rule requiring departments to report leave of absence for as long as thirty days would be entirely reasonable, and within the authority of the commission to make.

While such absence might necessarily be required to be reported it would probably not extend to the requirement of approval by the civil service commission, as the granting of such leave of absence is an administrative matter in each case for the department in question and the head of such department would be presumed the best qualified to decide whether such leave would be an impairment to the service and whether in short it should be granted.

The third question reads:

> "Can such leave, under the civil service law, be granted for a period exceeding one year?"

This question should certainly be answered in the negative; not that there is any express provision in the law, but a year is such a period that cannot be looked upon as a mere temporary absence from service. A year is a substantial percentage of the average working life of a man. It is such period of time as one who fills his place would be in a sense permanently installed in the work and, ordinarily, better qualified to continue it than one who had left it a year before. It is, in short, too long a time for anyone to hold office or employment and not be connected with the performance of its duties.

Your fourth question is:

tification, does the employe granted leave have undisputted claim to his position upon expiration of his leave?"

Whenever leave of absence is properly granted to an employe, the employe has a right to come back. This is involved in the very term itself. It is not understood when an employe has a leave of absence, for thirty days for instance, that he means to stay forever. The leave of absence is leave from the duty that he is specifically employed about and if he could not return and drop into the exact place he left, in place of being a leave of absence it would amount to a resignation or a discharge. This would be equally true however his position has been filled or by whomsoever his duties have been performed during his absence, and in that case if the position during his absence were filled by some one certified from the commission, this latter would be, nevertheless, a temporary appointment, although it is styled a regular appointment in the act.

Your fifth question is:

The answer to this question would neither be entirely in the affirmative or the negative, but each case will depend upon its own circumstances. If the employe absent on leave were returning to his employment by the ordinary means of travel and in plenty of time to arrive under ordinary circumstances, and by reason of deep snows or storms, or other causes, railroad traffic were suspended, he would have a sufficient excuse. On the other hand, if without such excuse or any excuse he remained away much longer than the leave granted him, such action might be considered as a voluntary relinquishment of his position and possibly, in that view, a successor might be appointed, and the original appointee dropped without even preferring charges, upon the theory that he had abandoned the office. Ordinarily, however, such staying away overtime would be simply ground for removal upon charges for which a reason should be given and of which an explanation might be made and from which an appeal could be taken.

One other subject should not be passed by without notice. A great many leaves of absence have been granted in order that employees of the civil service might temporarily enter the military service. The war is, of course, temporary; the period of its continuance is a matter of conjecture only.

While engagement in the military service of the country in a time of war is not disability in the ordinary sense of the term, yet it may readily be construed as such under the terms of the civil service law. It renders the employe unable for the time being to perform the duties of his employment in the civil service; its demands are as exacting as would be his own illness or sickness or misfortune in his family, or any of the things which ordinarily are held to excuse his absence from employment. As the safety and protection of the country is necessary to all interests public and private in the whole country, he who is necessarily engaged in the war is necessarily absent from an office which he holds, and disabled for the time being from fulfilling it in the sense that from strict necessity he is unable to do so.

Yours very truly,

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BOWLING GREEN STATE NORMAL COLLEGE AND LOUIS BRANDT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1918.

DR. H. B. WILLIAMS, President, Bowling Green State Normal College, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department the contract entered into the first of September, 1917, between the board of trustees of the Bowling Green state normal college and Louis Brandt, landscape architect. In such contract said Brandt agrees to superintend the landscape improvement work now being constructed by The Finch Engineering Co. for the sum of five (5) per cent commission on the sum actually paid out for said improvement, and in such contract said board of trustees also employs an engineer to be furnished by said Louis Brandt at one hundred and fifty dollars ($150) per month, amounting to approximately four hundred and fifty dollars ($450.)

I have carefully examined in regard to the commission paid to said Brandt and from a personal interview with him and with yourself have determined that in the instant case the said five per cent commission is not excessive.

Having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there is money available for the purposes of said contract, I have this day approved the same and filed the same in the office of the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 6, 1918.

HON. SUMNER E. WALTERS, Prosecuting Attorney, Van Wert, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you say:

> "In December, 1917, the school board presidents elected a member of the county board of education for the term commencing on the third Saturday of January, 1918, which election according to your opinion No. 877, rendered December 19, 1917, is illegal. Said election resulted in the re-election of the member whose term expired the day preceding the third

Saturday of January, 1918. I desire your answer to the following question:

Can the presidents of the boards of education as constituted on and after the first Monday of January, 1918, at this time, have a meeting called and elect a member of the county board for the term commencing the third Saturday of January, 1918; or does their failure to elect between the first Monday of January, 1918, and the third Saturday of January, 1918, result in the old member holding over for another term of five years?"

Section 4729 G. C. provides:

"On the second Saturday in June, 1914, the presidents of the boards of education of the various village and rural school districts in each county school district shall meet and elect the five members of the county board of education, one for one year, one for two years, one for three years, one for four years and one for five years, and until their successors are elected and qualified. The terms of office of such members shall begin on the fifteenth of July, 1914, and each year thereafter on the third Saturday of January. Each year thereafter one member of the county board of education shall be elected in the same manner for a term of five years. * * * *"

Section 4730 G. C. provides that such first election for members of the county board of education shall be called by the county auditor, giving at least ten days' notice of the place where such meeting is to be held, and,

"The call for all future meetings shall be issued by the county superintendent. The meeting shall organize by electing a chairman and a clerk. The vote of a majority of the members present shall be necessary to elect each member of the county board. * * * The result of the election of members of the county board of education shall be certified to the county auditor by the chairman and clerk of the meeting."

So that, from the above sections it will be seen that no definite time is mentioned for the calling together of the presidents of the rural and village boards of education in any year after the year 1914, when the members of the county board of education are elected.

In my Opinion No. 877, rendered December 19, 1917, I held that members of the county board must be elected by the presidents of the rural and village boards who are in office at the time the vacancy occurs in the membership of the county board, or, in other words, when the county board members' terms close. That is, the statute provides that the term of the members of the board shall begin on the third Saturday in January and extend for five years. The statute also provides that the presidents of the various village and rural boards of education shall be elected on the first Monday in January of each year, so that it would be for such new presidents to elect the successor to the member whose term expires the day preceding the third Saturday in January of each year. On May 27, 1918, the court of appeals of Hocking county in the case of State of Ohio ex rel. John F. Harsh vs. Charles White, reach the same conclusion. In such case the presidents of the village and rural district boards of Hocking county met on August 23, 1917, and attempted to elect a member of the county board. The new presidents met January 18, 1918, and elected a different person from the one who was elected by the old presidents. In an action in quo warranto the court held that the election in August was void and that the election of the new presidents was the valid election and followed State ex rel. Morris v. Sullivan, 81 O. S. 79, in which latter case it was held that an appointing power could not forestall the rights and prerogative of his successor by appointing a person to office, the term of which did not expire until after the term of the appointing power. Your case, however, is different from the Hocking case in that your new presidents have never acted and you inquire if they can now act.

In relation thereto I desire to call your attention to the case of State ex rel. Scott v. Ryan, 95 O. S. 405, in which case Scott was on the third day of April, 1916, duly elected a member of the county board of education of Adams county to serve until the third Saturday in January, 1921. He took the oath of office required by law and duly qualified to fill said office and perform the duties thereof. Ryan was in possession of the office and claimed that he could not be ousted therefrom on the facts stated by Scott. The court held that Scott was rightfully entitled to the office and by its order inducted him into the same. If, as in that case, the election could be held on April 3d, I can see no reason why it could not be held at this time in your case, and I therefore advise you that the presidents of the various village and rural district boards of education, never having been called together to act upon the election of a member of the county board, in the place of the one whose term expired the day preceding the third Saturday in January, 1918, may be called together at this time to elect such member whose term will end on the day preceding the third Saturday in January, 1923.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASE BY STATE TO COMMISSIONERS OF MUSKINGUM COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 10, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 5, 1918, in which you enclose a form of lease made by the state of Ohio to the county commissioners of Muskingum county under and by virtue of an act passed March 21, 1917, found in 107 Ohio Laws 702.

While said act does not require the approval of the attorney-general, yet I have examined the same carefully, and find it to be correct in form, and in accordance with the provisions of said act.

I might say, however, that it embraces one condition not found in the provisions of the act, in that the county of Muskingum is given five years in which to use the land leased for the purposes for which it is leased, and if the lands are not used within said period of five years for the purposes for which they were leased, then the same shall revert to the state.

If the county commissioners are willing to accept the lease with the said conditions contained therein, it will not in any way affect the rights of the state of Ohio; but it is my opinion that the county of Muskingum would have the right under the provisions of the act to request that said time limitation be stricken from the lease. Otherwise, it is my opinion that this lease is in harmony with the provisions of said act, and I am therefore returning same to you with my approval.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRAFFIC REGULATIONS—COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT PURCHASE SCALES TO SECURE EVIDENCE OF VIOLATIONS.

County commissioners have no authority in law to purchase "scales" to be used in the matter of securing evidence to convict those persons who violate the traffic regulations of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 10, 1918.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of May 29, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "A serious condition exists in this county by reason of the fact that commercial concerns use large trucks to carry their freight. Sometimes the weight is as high as twenty tons and by reason of that fact, these trucks are destroying the brick roads in the county.
> The county has in its employ a man for the purpose of arresting anybody overloading, but he complains that there are no scales in the county which are large enough for him to weigh the loads, so that he might get evidence to prosecute the violators.
> The county commissioners are desirous of purchasing three twenty-five ton scales and the question has arisen as to whether or not they have the authority to do so. As you know, the law provides that they can buy machinery, tools and equipment for the purpose of improving roads. Is this provision, in your opinion, broad enough to include scales, or is there any other provision in the law which will permit the county commissioners to purchase scales for this purpose?"

The particular provisions of the General Code which your county commissioners are desirous of having enforced are found in sections 7246 to 7251 General Code inclusive.

In connection with your question I desire to quote the following from section 7246 General Code:

> "No traction engine, trailer, wagon, truck, steam roller, automobile truck or other power vehicle, whether propelled by muscular or motor power, weighing in excess of twelve tons, including weight of vehicle, object or contrivance and load, shall be operated over and upon the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state, except as hereinafter provided."

The particular part of this quoted matter to which I desire to call attention is that it deals with "improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state;" that is, all state roads, county roads, township roads and streets of a municipality, providing the same are improved.

With this particular provision in mind, let us turn to the provisions of section 7200 General Code, to which you no doubt refer in your communication. This section reads in part as follows:

> "The county commissioners may purchase such machinery, tools or other equipment for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway, bridges and culverts under their jurisdiction as they may deem necessary, which shall be paid for out of the road funds of the county."

The particular part of this quoted matter to which I desire to call attention is that its provisions are limited to highways, bridges and culverts under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners.

The only theory upon which it might be inferred that scales could be included in the general terms "machinery, tools or other equipment" is that they would be used in the matter of prosecuting those persons who violate traffic regulations of the state, and thus they would indirectly be used to prevent the wearing out of highways and thus decrease the amount of work necessary to maintain and repair the same.

But when we consider the matter of maintenance and repair of roads we find under the provisions of 7464 to 7467 General Code that the jurisdiction of county commissioners in reference to this matter is limited to county roads, as defined in section 7464 General Code. And section 7200 limits the power of the county commissioners to purchase "machinery, tools or other equipment," in so far as it may be necessary, in reference to roads coming under their jurisdiction, which would be in the matter of the maintenance and repair of county roads.

With this in mind, let us compare the provisions of section 7246 with the provisions of 7200 in reference to the scope of the same. The provisions of section 7200 in reference to the maintenance and repair of roads for which "machinery, tools and other equipment" may be purchased, are confined to county roads, while the provisions of section 7246 General Code include not only county roads but state roads, township roads and municipal streets, provided they are improved thoroughfares.

From this it seems to be fairly evident that the county commissioners, under the provisions of section 7200 which gives them authority to purchase "machinery, tools or other equipment" in reference to the matter of the repair and maintenance of county roads, would not be authorized to purchase "scales," which would have reference not only to county roads, but also to state roads, township roads and streets of a municipality.

Secondly, it could hardly be said either that the power to purchase "scales" might be implied from the express power granted to the county commissioners to purchase "machinery, tools or other equipment" for the maintenance and repair of roads. An implied power is to be inferred only when it is essential to enable a body or official to carry out an express power granted. The only object which scales could serve would be to enable the proper officials to secure the necessary evidence to prosecute those persons who are violating the traffic regulations of the state, but the matter of prosecution of law violators and the matter of getting evidence with which law violators may be convicted is not a duty which rests primarily with the county commissioners, but is one which rests with the prosecuting attorney of the county; hence, there having been no express power granted to the county commissioners to secure such evidence, the implied power to purchase "scales" could not be inferred.

Further, I do not feel that the legislature intended in the use of the language found in section 7200 General Code to make it include "scales." The legislature evidently had in mind only the machinery and tools that are necessary to do something in the matter of bringing the roads up to the condition in which they were at the time they were improved, or in keeping them in such a condition, and therefore did not have in mind such a thing as "scales."

It could further be said that the term "scales" does not seem to fit into the terms "machinery and tools," and under the familiar rule of ejusdem generis it could not be brought within the term "other equipment."

From all the above, I do not believe that the provisions of section 7200 General Code are broad enough to give the county commissioners authority to purchase "scales" for the purposes set out in your communication.

Neither do I know of any other provision of law which would authorize the county commissioners to make such a purchase.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT INVEST PROCEEDS OF SINKING FUND LEVIES IN INTEREST BEARING SECURITIES FOR PURPOSE OF ACCUMULATING SINKING FUND—HOW SUCH PROCEEDS MAY BE USED—HOW EARNINGS FROM SUCH ILLEGAL INVESTMENT DISTRIBUTED.

County commissioners have no power to invest the proceeds of sinking fund levies in interest-bearing securities for the purpose of accumulating a sinking fund. It is the duty of the county auditor and county treasurer to pay the county's funded debt and interest as it falls due; and for this purpose they may use only the proceeds of the levy, even the depositary interest on same being subject to the general county fund.

Where the county officials have made an illegal investment of the proceeds of sinking fund levies in interest-bearing securities, the earnings resulting therefrom should be credited to the general county fund to the extent of the rate which could have been secured on inactive deposits in the county depositary; the surplus, if any, should be credited to the sinking fund. If the securities are sold for an amount insufficient to replace the principal, with interest at the depositary rate, the auditor and treasurer are liable for the difference.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 10, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date enclosing copy of a letter received by you from the auditor of Adams county, requesting the advice of your bureau as follows:

> "Since the Smith one per cent law came into effect, the board of county commissioners, owing to the limits of taxation, have issued bonds yearly, to meet the annual county expenditures.
> The money received from the levies for the payment of the principal of said bonds have been invested in bonds which mature prior to the maturity of the bonds which were issued to take up the original indebtedness.
> Sections 2294, 2295, 1465-58, 5649-1 and 5649-1a G. C., and article XII, section 11 of the constitution of Ohio have a bearing directly and indirectly upon the levies for and use of sinking funds in counties and their political subdivisions.

1. In view of the above where a county issues long time bonds, have county commissioners authority to invest sinking funds as is done in municipalities?

2. Having already invested said moneys in this manner, shall the earnings resulting therefrom be devoted to the accretion of the sinking funds or do such earnings go to the general county fund under section 2737?

We would refer you to opinion of attorney-general in 1914 reports, pages 1224-1226; on page 1226 of which is given a definition of 'Sinking fund.'"

You request my opinion upon the questions as submitted.

Article XII, section 11 of the constitution as amended in 1912 provides as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

As pointed out by Mr. Hogan in the opinion referred to by the county auditor, this section of the constitution requires the levy of a tax sufficient to provide a sinking fund for the redemption of bonds. In that opinion Mr. Hogan had before him the question as to whether under this provision of the constitution serial bonds could be issued. He came to the conclusion that the issuance of such serial bonds was not prohibited by the constitution inasmuch as the method of payment of such bonds as ordinarily issued is such as to meet the substantial requirement of amortization aimed at by the accumulation of a sinking fund. In the course of that opinion Mr. Hogan, who was then considering the case of a municipal corporation, used the following language:

"Of course, strictly speaking, a sinking fund is a fund accumulated by annual or other periodical investment which by accretion will equal the principal of an indebtedness due at a future date. Given the number of years which the indebtedness has to run, and the average rate of the investment available to the managers of the fund, the amount required to be set aside and added to the principal of the fund each year can be determined * * *.

* * * there is also present the idea that any amount annually set aside to the credit of the sinking fund shall be, roughly speaking, an aliquot part of the total indebtedness, ascertained by dividing the whole of the number of years, or other periods of time between the date of issue and the date of maturity. Of course, the periodical investments will not be precisely equal, because of accretions to the fund through its investment.

* * * This idea of equality of burden is the ruling and determining factor. * * *

In short, then, that is a 'sinking fund' which is accumulated by the periodical setting aside of approximately the same amount, and its investment with a view to accumulating a fund equal to the principal of the indebtedness, when the latter matures.

This is the public policy that is embodied in the constitutional amendment under discussion."

As I have said, Mr. Hogan evidently had in mind the provisions of the municipal code, which expressly authorized the investment of the sinking fund in income-producing securities, when he wrote this opinion which was addressed to a city solicitor. As he points out, however, the idea of "investment" which he brings out by repeated use of that term in the text from which I have made excerpts, is not the controlling one present in the constitutional amendment; and he did not hold, either expressly or by implication, that the constitutional amendment of itself carries with it authority in any given public officer to invest the proceeds of sinking fund levies in any particular income-producing securities.

A little thought will convince one that such an interpretation of the constitution is impossible; or at the very least that if this idea be present in the constitutional amendment the latter is not in this particular self-executing. For the constitution, silent as it is on the whole subject of investment save by implication, if there be such implication, does not point out what public officer shall make the investment nor create any public functionary for that purpose; nor does it prescribe the securities in which the investments shall be made. Being silent in this particular it cannot be looked to as the source of the authority of the county commissioners to invest county sinking fund levies in particular bonds.

It is palpable, then, that we must consult the statutes to find whether the county commissioners are given such control over the proceeds of sinking fund levies as to authorize them to act as a sinking fund commission for the county and, if so, what, if any, investment they are authorized to make of such proceeds.

The auditor refers to several sections of the General Code which I shall examine. Among these he mentions sections 5649-1 of the General Code, which is a part of the Smith one per cent law. It provides as follows:

> "In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

This section imposes upon the county commissioners as the levying authority for the county the duty of levying a sufficient sum for sinking fund purposes on account of all bonds issued by the county. It does not, however, save by the same inference which has already been discussed and rejected, authorize them to invest the proceeds of such levies in any particular securities or otherwise. In the same connection other sections of the Smith law might be quoted to show that it makes no discrimination among different political subdivisions with respect to debt and interest levies. In point of fact it concerns itself only with the levying of taxes and not with the payment of the debt itself. It uses the term "sinking fund" as if it had application to all subdivisions and, as we shall see, it does not stand alone in this respect. But it does not follow, for reasons already pointed out, that the term "sinking fund" implies, in the case of a county, all the machinery which is expressed in the statutes in dealing with municipal corporations and school districts.

What I have just said makes it unnecessary for me to quote section 5649-1a of the General Code, the import of which I have just discussed.

Section 1465-58 G. C. is a part of the workmen's compensation act and requires, in general terms, "the boards or officers of the several taxing districts of the state * * * to offer in writing to the state liability board of awards, * * * all such issues as may not have been taken by the trustees of the sinking fund of the taxing district so issuing such bonds; * * *." It is too much to draw from this provision, even in connection with those which have already been quoted, the inference that every taxing district in the state has a board of trustees of the sinking fund.

Sections 2294 and 2295 G. C. are general provisions of the law dealing, inter alia, with bonds issued by county commissioners. Section 2295 provides, in part, that > "All moneys from premiums and accrued interest on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the sinking fund from which said bonds are to be redeemed."

Here again we have reference to a county sinking fund and an assumption that such fund exists—perhaps indeed enough, together with the provisions of section 5649-1 et seq. and others which will hereinafter be quoted, to establish a county sinking fund, as such, either under that name or under another appropriate name. But we have nothing on which to base the conclusion that the county commissioners are to constitute a board of trustees of this sinking fund with authority to deal with it like the trustees of a municipal sinking fund may deal with such fund of a municipality.

I find myself able to add several sections, similar in tenor to section 2295, to the catalogue of sections of the general kind referred to by the auditor.

Section 5654 General Code distinctly refers to the "sinking fund of such * * * county."

Section 2462 General Code assumes that the county may be the owner of securities of the United States or other securities, for it authorizes the commissioners to execute bonds to indemnify the United States or the person, corporation or municipality bound to pay such securities against loss or liability for or on account of such securities if lost, destroyed or stolen; but it does not go so far as to authorize the purchase of such securities for any purpose.

Section 5634 General Code authorizes the commissioners of a county owning or wholly or partly maintaining a hospital for the insane (Hamilton county) to "levy the amount of taxes required to pay the interest on such bonds (issued for the purpose of enlarging, etc., the hospital) and create a sinking fund for the redemption thereof at maturity." I may say, however, that Hamilton county was at the time this act was passed operating under a special statute expressly authorizing the commissioners to act as the trustees of the county sinking fund.

There are, of course, many statutes specifically requiring the commissioners to levy taxes to pay the interest on particular bonds and the principal thereof at maturity. I refer to a few, such as sections 2439, 5659 and 5644 of the General Code. In point of fact these statutes are probably all supplanted or duplicated by section 5649-1 of the General Code, which has been quoted. None of them, even as to the bonds as to which they relate, authorizes the commissioners to invest the proceeds of sinking fund levies in designated securities. In fact none of them imposes any duty whatsoever upon the county commissioners, as such, with respect to the payment of the bonds; they all deal with the machinery of tax levying only.

On the other hand, certain other officers seem to have specific duties to discharge in connection with the payment of county debts. I deem it proper to quote entire sections 2609 to 2614 of the General Code, which provide as follows:

> "Sec. 2609. The auditor of a county owing a funded debt, bearing interest payable at stated periods, shall draw at the proper times, his warrants upon the treasurer of the county for the payment of the gross sum of such installments of interest as may be then due, or for such sum of money in the treasury as may be applicable to that purpose, and deliver them to the treasurer of the county. Upon receipt of any such warrant, the treasurer shall pay the installment of interest of such debt, at the times and places of payment specified in the security therefor, from any money in his hands applicable to that use. Upon payment of the installment of interest, the treasurer shall take up and hold the interest warrant so paid until it is cancelled, as herein provided. If the interest is provided for in the obligation, and not by separate warrants, he shall endorse the payment thereof on the obligation and take from the holder a separate receipt, specifying the date, amount, number, and time of maturity of the obligation, the date of the maturity of the installment so paid, and amount and date of the payment."

"Sec. 2610. If such installment of interest is not paid at the time and place of maturity, the county treasurer, at any time afterward, shall pay it, as funds in his hands applicable to that purpose admit. If the treasurer was ready with funds, at the time and place of maturity thereof, to make payment of any installment of interest thereon, and the holder of the evidence thereof did not have it then and there present and in readiness to be surrendered, or to have the payment indorsed thereon, the county shall not thereafter be bound to pay interest thereon until payment is afterward demanded at the office of the county treasurer, and refused."

"Sec. 2611. The county treasurer shall enter in a book provided for that purpose, to the credit of 'funded debt,' the amount of money in gross then in his hands applicable to the payment of such debt. On the first Monday of each succeeding month, in like manner, he shall enter therein to the credit of the same account, all sums of money received by him during the preceding month, applicable to the payment of such debt, specifying from what sources received, and at the proper dates, enter in the same book to the debit of the same account, all sums disbursed by him from such fund, specifying to whom and on what account. Such book shall be open at all times to the inspection of all persons interested in the fund, and shall be kept in the treasurer's office, and delivered over with the office to his successor."

"Sec. 2612. The auditor of each county, owing a funded debt, shall furnish the treasurer of the county an abstract of the funded debt, specifying the dates, amounts, numbers, times of maturity, of principal, rates and times of maturity of interest installments thereon, and where payable. The treasurer shall open such accounts thereon in the book so provided, as are expedient and proper to show at all times the amount and several classes of the funded debt of the county, the rate of interest accruing thereon, the payment made on account thereof, and the amount due and unpaid."

"Sec. 2613. At his stated settlements, the treasurer shall exhibit to the county commissioners and auditor all obligations for interest warrants by him redeemed, and all receipts for interest paid in cases in which there are no separate warrants. After they are compared with his accounts, and the accounts corrected to correspond with the vouchers so produced, the interest warrants shall be cancelled so as to prevent their being used or put into circulation, and, with the vouchers for interest paid other than upon warrants, shall be filed and preserved in the office of the county auditor. The county commissioners at any time may require the treasurer to surrender for cancellation the obligations and warrants by him redeemed, subject to his right to be credited therewith. At any time, on reasonable notice, the treasurer may require the county commissioners and auditor to receive such obligations and warrants for cancellation."

"Sec. 2614. If the principal of any of the obligations of the county is, by its terms, payable elsewhere than at the county treasury, payment thereof may be provided for and made by the means and in the manner prescribed for the payment of interest, and preparation shall be made by the treasurer for the payment at such place. Money provided or deposited at such place for that purpose, shall not be left there more than ten days after the maturity of such principal, but shall be replaced in the treasury, and thereafter such obligations shall be payable at the county treasury, and no interest shall be paid after maturity."

If it were possible to draw any inference from repeated reference to the existence of a county sinking fund found in the statutes which have been quoted, and the duty of the county commissioners thereunder to make levies therefor, to the effect that the county commissioners are authorized to act as sinking fund trustees of the county, the group of statutes which I have last quoted would dispel such an inference; for by their terms it appears that the funded debt of a county is to be paid, in the absence of refunding of course, by the auditor and treasurer. Obviously, these statutes require that the money to pay the funded debt shall be in the county treasury subject to the warrant of the county auditor. These express provisions of law render further consideration of the implied powers of the commissioners wholly unnecessary. There are no such implied powers in the respect under consideration. The function of the commissioners is exhausted when they have made the proper levy. They have no authority to invest the proceeds of the levy, withdrawing money from the county treasury for this purpose.

But for the provisions of section 2737, which I shall presently quote, it would probably be proper for the commissioners in making their levies to take into account the depositary interest that the proceeds of the sinking fund levies when paid into the county treasury would produce, until their withdrawal for the payment of the bonds or interest would be necessary. But even this result is obviated by the section to which I have just referred, which provides as to the disposition of depositary interest as follows:

"Sec. 2737. All money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest at the rate specified in the proposal on which the award thereof was made, computed on daily balances, and on the first day of each calendar month or at any time such account is closed, such interest shall be placed to the credit of the county, and the depositary shall notify the auditor and treasurer, each separately, in writing of the amount thereof before noon of the next business day. All such interest realized on the money belonging to the undivided tax funds shall be apportioned by the county auditor to the state, cities, city school district and county taxing or assessing districts in the proportion that the amounts collected for the respective political divisions or districts bear to the entire amount collected by the county treasurer for such undivided tax funds and deposited as herein provided, due allowance being made for sums transferred in advance of settlements. All interest apportioned as the county's share together with all interest arising from the deposit of funds belonging specifically to the county shall be credited to the general fund of the county by the county treasurer. The county auditor shall inform the treasurer in writing of the amount apportioned by him to each fund, district or account."

It will be observed that this statute makes no special provision for interest on money belonging to the sinking fund or the "county debt fund"—whichever name be employed. All interest on funds belonging to the county is to be credited to the general fund.

It follows that as to a county the idea of "investment" which Mr. Hogan quite properly discussed when speaking of a municipal corporation, is absent from the machinery of administering the sinking fund. Its absence results from the statutes which are found on the books, which not only do not furnish adequate machinery for the administration of a sinking fund in the strictest sense, but by express provisions prevent even such accretions to the levies as would take place by operation of law in the absence of such express provisions. I agree with Mr. Hogan in his opinion that the controlling mandate of the constitutional provision found in article XII, section 11 lies in another direction. It aims to require the annual levying of taxes in an amount constituting, roughly speaking, such aliquot part of the total principal of the fund as is indicated by the number of years for which the debt has to run. It stops with requiring such a levy. It does not require the investment of the proceeds of the levy in the case of straight sinking fund bonds. Therefore the statutes as we find them cannot be regarded as unconstitutional, but must be given effect.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the proceeds of levies intended to meet the principal and interest on bonds issued by the county should be placed in the county treasury to the credit of the county debt or sinking fund and there treated as other moneys in the county treasury are treated, remaining in the depositary drawing interest for the benefit of the general county fund until they have to be withdrawn for the purpose of meeting the principal and interest, and for no other purpose.

This conclusion demonstrates that the procedure of the commissioners of Adams county has been wholly illegal. The commissioners and all officers concerned therewith have misapplied the county funds, and technical liability exists. However, the liability which does exist is that of a trustee who has made an unauthorized investment of the funds of his trust. The cestui que trust has an option in such case to claim from the trustee the income of the illegal investment, together with the principal illegally invested. Where the commissioners have paid back into the county treasury the proceeds of securities purchased by them and subsequently sold and the interest accruing on such securities, the county is entitled, of course, to retain the entire sum so paid in. This amount should be credited to the sinking fund, deduction being allowed for the interest which would have accrued on inactive deposits during the time the money was invested in the securities. In other words, I do not think that section 2737 has enough force to constitute the entire income of the illegal investment moneys belonging to the general county fund. The result is that by the illegal investment which they have made the county commissioners may have benefited the county debt or sinking fund to the extent of the difference between the rate of depository interest and the net income on the securities.

It follows from what I have said that all the securities now in the possession of the county commissioners should be immediately sold and the proceeds thereof paid into the county treasury to the credit of the county debt or sinking fund and the general county fund in the manner which I have indicated.

If such securities have been or should be sold for a sum less than the principal thereof, plus interest at the rate allowed on inactive deposits, there would be liability in favor of the county for the difference. This liability, in my judgment, would exist against the auditor and treasurer in the first instance, it being their joint duty under the sections above cited to administer the county debt fund.

In the course of the above discussion I have answered the auditor's first question in the negative, and his second question by the statement that such part of the earnings to which the auditor refers as represents the current rate of interest on inactive deposits should go to the general county fund, the remainder, if any, to the accretion of the sinking fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY—FRANCHISE—DUTY OF COUNCIL TO FIX RATE OF FARE—MAY STIPULATE FOR PAYMENT OF SUM INTO CITY TREASURY ANNUALLY.

In granting the use of the streets of a city to an interurban railroad council is required to stipulate as to the rate of fare within the limits of the city.

Council may also stipulate for the annual payment of a certain fixed sum of money into the treasury of the city for the use of the streets, and such stipulation, if agreed to by the company, will be binding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 10, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have been requested by a city solicitor to express an opinion upon questions which seem to me of sufficient importance to justify an official opinion addressed to the bureau. The questions are as follows:

> "1. May a city provide in a franchise that an interurban traction company shall pay annually a certain fixed sum of money into the treasury for the use of the streets?
> 2. If not, is there any way whereby the city may collect any sum of money for the use of the streets?
> 3. In lieu of not being able to assess a certain fixed sum for use of streets, may the city fix the rate of fare to be collected by said traction company within the city limits?"

The following sections of the General Code must be considered in answering these questions:

> "Sec. 3778. The council of any municipality may grant a franchise upon such terms and conditions as it may prescribe for the building of any interurban railroad having, constructing, or building, ten miles or more of track outside of such municipality, to any company or companies using electric or other motive power, save steam, for the purpose of securing to such company or companies access to or terminals within such municipality. The council may authorize such company to build and construct tracks and to operate cars thereon, on any street or streets, or parts of streets, of such municipality, upon which tracks have not already been laid and where the consent of the owners of a majority foot frontage has already been obtained by such company."
> "Sec. 9100. Street railways, with single or double tracks, side tracks and turnouts, may be constructed or extended within or without, or partly within and partly without, any municipal corporation. Offices, depots and other necessary buildings therefor, also may be constructed."

"Sec. 9101. The right to construct or extend such railway within or beyond the limits of a municipal corporation, may be granted only by its council, by ordinance; * * *."

"Sec. 9113. Council, * * * may fix the terms and conditions upon which such railways may be constructed, operated, extended and consolidated."

"Sec. 9114. Upon the granting of franchises to traction companies throughout this state for the use of streets, roads and highways for the transportation of passengers, it must be provided, as one of the considerations for such use of the public highways, that such traction companies shall carry free as passengers on any and all regular cars, policemen and firemen, when on duty and in uniform."

"Sec. 9122. Such (interurban) companies shall be subject to the regulations provided for street railways and have all the powers, in so far as they are applicable, that other street railway companies possess."

It will be observed that section 3778 authorizes council in granting a franchise to an interurban railroad to impose "such terms and conditions as it may prescribe," and that section 9113 contains an essentially similar provision.

With respect to street railroads proper section 3768 provides as follows:

"No corporation, individual or individuals shall perform any work in the construction of a street railroad, until application for leave is made to the council in writing, and the council by ordinance has granted permission, prescribed the terms and conditions upon, and the manner in which, the road shall be constructed and operated, and the streets and alleys to be used and occupied therefor, but the council may renew any such grant at its expiration upon such conditions as may be considered conducive to the public interest."

I see no essential difference between this section in so far as it refers to prescribing "terms and conditions" and those of the statutes previously quoted. Indeed section 9113 applies both to interurban and street railroads.

Under the street railroad section the following have been held to be lawful "terms and conditions:"

That the street railroad company shall widen a bridge occupied by it, or in lieu thereof pay a stipulated amount to the municipal corporation, at the option of the latter.

Elyria vs. Railway, 8 N. P. n. s. 85.

That transfers to lines owned by other companies shall be given.

Raynolds vs. Cleveland, 8 C. C. n. s. 278.

That a street railway shall pay annually four dollars per lineal foot on each car run.

Cincinnati vs. Railway, 6 N. P. 140.

That a street railway company shall pay two and one-half per cent of its gross earnings annually to the municipal corporation.

Cincinnati vs. Railway, 11 Dec. Rep. 667, 28 Bull. 276.

The fare to be collected. Section 3770 G. C. applicable to street railroads not only authorizes but requires the rate of fare to be the subject of contract between the city and the company, and by section 9122, which has been quoted, the same requirement is extended to interurban railroads.

In some of these cases the power of council was assumed.

To my mind, however, we have a very clear expression of the authority of a municipal council to deal with an interurban railroad in the case of Interurban Railway and Terminal Co. vs. City of Cincinnati, 93 O. S. 108. The facts therein necessary to be noted in connection with this discussion are as follows:

In November, 1901, the council of the village of Pleasant Ridge passed an ordinance granting a franchise to the Rapid Railway Company, an interurban railway company, by the terms of which not only the rate of fare for city passengers within the corporate limits of the village was fixed, but it was also stipulated that passengers should be carried from any point within the village to a terminus in the city of Cincinnati, for a continuous ride in either direction at a rate of seven cents, with a further provision that "Should the village of Pleasant Ridge be annexed to the city of Cincinnati the rate of fare charged for a ride in either direction between any point in said village and the Cincinnati terminus shall not exceed five cents and transfers." The Rapid Railway Company later entered into a consolidation known as "The Interurban Railway & Terminal Company," and the village of Pleasant Ridge was annexed to the city of Cincinnati. The city sued the Interurban Railway & Terminal Company to enjoin it from charging more than five cents for the ride between points located in the former village of Pleasant Ridge and the Cincinnati terminus of the railway.

The court sustained the city's suit. In the opinion per Johnson, J., the following language appears:

> "The attack upon the judgments below is based upon the claim that the provision of the franchise quoted is without any validity or binding force.
> "The position of the Interurban company substantially is that the village was wholly without authority to prescribe or contract for fares beyond the municipal limits, and that notwithstanding that clause was, by agreement of the parties, included in the ordinance as adopted, which was thereafter accepted by the grantee, * * * nevertheless it is entitled to disregard and eliminate the provision objected to, and yet retain and enforce the rights and privileges granted to it by the other terms of the franchise.
> * * * Section 9113, General Code, provided that the 'council * * * shall have the power to fix the terms and conditions upon which such railways may be constructed, operated, extended and consolidated.'
> * * * It follows that as to villages * * * the village council was empowered to grant the right to construct or extend the line within or beyond the limits of the village, and by section 3443 (R. S.) (Sec. 9113 General Code above quoted) to fix the terms and conditions thereof.
> In The Citizens' Electric Rd. Co. vs. County Commissioners, 56 Ohio St., 1, it was held that an ordinance adopted by a city council * * * simply confers on a street railroad company the corporate power to extend its road over a state or county road. In the exercise of the power the right to so extend its road can only be acquired by agreement with the commissioners or by condemnation. The court say: 'Without such ordinance a company could not extend its road within or without the municipality. As a corporation it has, without the ordinance, no such power.'

* * * * * * * * * * *

In the absence of statutory provision to the contrary the village was empowered to stipulate as one of the 'terms and conditions' which it was authorized to fix * * * for a certain rate of fare for a road from any point in its limits to a point outside of its limits. It would not be disputed that the rate of fare to be charged to and from points in the village to points outside is a matter of interest to the municipality and its residents and a proper subject of negotiation with the company in connection with the grant. It was a matter for mutual consideration and agreement between the parties. Therefore, when the grant was made and accepted with the provision as to the fare included, it became one of the considerations of the grant and one of the elements in the making of the binding contract between the parties. * * *

* * * * * * * * * * *

It is insisted that the enforcement of the terms of the franchise under inquiry here will work hardship and irreparable injury to the company; and cases are cited in support of the accepted proposition that neither the state nor any of its agencies can, by regulation or legislation, withhold from the owners of the railroad just compensation for its services. But in this case we are dealing with the subject of contract. * * *

We are not able to see how the court can alter the terms of the contract in this case as the parties made it. * * *"

This case establishes, it seems to me, the principle that where power is delegated to a city council or board of commissioners to fix the terms and conditions of the right to use the public highways for the construction and operation of a street or interurban railway that power includes, in the absence of prohibitory or limiting statutes to the contrary, the authority to represent the public in agreeing upon any terms whatsoever which may be in furtherance of the public right and of the purpose for which the grant is made. The power does not seem to be narrower than that possessed by city councils under section 10129 of the General Code with respect to gas companies. Indeed, the language now under consideration appears to be broader in natural scope than that of section 10129, which gives to council in granting the use of streets and alleys the power to prescribe "regulations and restrictions;" yet the supreme court in the late case of Federal Gas & Fuel Co. vs. City of Columbus, 96 O. S. 530, held, in the language of the syllabus, that:

"1. Prior to the constitutional amendments of 1912 municipalities in Ohio, under favor of sections 3714 and 10129, General Code, had the power to contract with a gas company, or other public utility, for the use and occupation of the streets in laying its gas lines, maintaining the same and keeping the same in repair, by providing compensation to the municipality, either in a lump sum or based on a certain percentage of its gross receipts.

2. Where a statute grants the power to a municipality to grant a franchise, either upon 'terms and conditions' or 'regulations and restrictions' that it may prescribe, large latitude must be allowed for the discretion of the municipality and its officers in the provisions made in such franchise contract; and unless expressly limited by the statute authorizing the grant, the municipality may exercize its discretion in any reasonable manner compatible with the best service and the greatest advantage, pecuniary or otherwise, to the municipality and its inhabitants."

In that case it was stated by Wanamaker, J. (p. 538):

"The gas company admits that had section 3878, Revised Statutes (Sec. 10129 of the General Code), used the words 'subject to such terms and conditions as they (the council) prescribe' instead of 'subject to such regulations and restrictions as they (the council) prescribe' the franchise ordinance would be a valid contract and obligatory upon the company.

It must be conceded of course that the grant of power by the general assembly to the municipal government * * * was 'to grant franchises to gas companies in its streets,' etc. Necessarily such grant of power must be in general terms, and such grant must be reasonably and liberally construed so as to effect the purposes of the statute. * * *

Now by what sort of reason, or want of it, can it be held that the word 'restriction' can apply to the use and occupation of the streets and other public places, and the repair of them; but cannot apply to a restriction upon rates, upon profits, and cannot provide that when the rate shall exceed a stipulated sum a certain percentage thereof shall go to the municipality? * * *."

To the same effect see the interpretation of the statutes as applying to telephone companies in Columbus Citizens Telephone Co. vs. City of Columbus, 88 O. S. 466 (requirement that a certain percentage of the gross annual receipts must be paid into the municipal treasury for the use of the general expense fund, assented to by the company, held to be a valid contractual obligation and not an assessment in the nature of a tax).

In view of all the foregoing authorities, and because I believe that either of the classes of stipulations referred to by him is in furtherance of the public right and of the purpose of the grant, I answer the questions submitted by the city solicitor in the affirmative.

In point of fact, as I have stated, the council must stipulate as to the rate of fare within the municipality by virtue of the joint operation of sections 3770 and 9122 of the General Code; so that the fixing of the rate of fare is not really a thing that may be done "in lieu of not being able to assess a certain fixed sum for the use of streets," as the solicitor puts it, but is something that must be done at all events whether such a sum is exacted in the franchise contract or not.

I have not considered in this opinion whatever significance may attach to the fact that the traction company which he has in mind is probably a foreign corporation. This point might affect the question as to whether the railroad company might enter the city at all, i. e., as to whether it is such a company as to which the council may lawfully grant the use of the streets; but admitting that it can enter the city at all, I am satisfied that it may do so only upon the same terms and conditions as would be exacted from domestic companies.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—WATER RATES FOR SCHOOLS, HOSPITALS AND LIBRARIES.

A director of public service in establishing water rates has authority to charge lower meter rates, if substantial and reasonable, for water furnished to public school buildings when the school district is not entirely within the boundaries of the city and to libraries open to the public and operated not for profit; but he is required by section 3963 of the General Code to furnish water free to all hospitals open to the public and operated not for profit.

He may not, however, apply such lower rate generally to all hospitals and libraries so as to make it include such institutions when operated for profit.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 10, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 5th you requested my opinion as follows:

"STATEMENT OF FACTS.

The court of common pleas and court of appeals of Stark county held that the schools of the Canton city school district shall pay the municipal waterworks for water consumed. Whereupon the board of control, acting for the service director, made a rate of 30 cents per one thousand cubic feet for public schools, hospitals and library, while the prevalent rate to consumers is 52½ cents per one thousand cubic feet. While we know the director of public service has authority to fix the rates of waterworks and may fix a sliding scale owing to the quantity consumed, we have ever been holding that no discrimination in rates can be shown under any other basis than that of quantities.

Question: Has the director of public service in the city of Canton, Ohio, authority to fix special rates for institutions of a certain nature, such rate differing from the general rate prevalent for water consumers?"

Although you state in your inquiry that the rate fixed was by the board of control acting for the service director instead of by the service director himself, I do not suppose that you mean to raise any question relative to the authority who fixed the rate, assuming that the board of control simply acted in an advisory capacity for the service director, since the question that you ask is whether the director of public service has the authority to fix the rate in the manner specified.

"So far as the consumption of water or light is concerned it is immaterial to the consumer whether the supply be furnished by the municipality or by a public service corporation. As a general rule the obligations to the consumer are the same in either case. The organization supplying the water or light, whether it be a municipal or a private corporation, is under a duty to consumers to supply the water or light impartially to all reasonably within the reach of its pipes, mains and wires. * * *

The organization furnishing a supply cannot act capriciously or discriminate against anyone who is able to pay for the service furnished. The law will not permit any undue advantage to be given to a consumer by doing for him what is not done for others under circumstances substantially the same. * * *

The principle that the city or the company must supply all impartially and without discrimination does not prevent it from entering into reasonable special arrangements or agreements with consumers growing out of special circumstances, and the fact that by reason of such special circumstances a reduced rate, reasonable under the circumstances, is given to particular individuals does not affect the validity of the arrangement. But this is delicate ground, and the rates we think must be the same unless the circumstances are substantially dissimilar and reasonably justify a difference. Questions arise as to the rights of consumers growing out of the number and character of the buildings supplied; and it sometimes becomes important to determine whether each building owned by a consumer is to be treated separately in determining the rights and relations of the parties, or whether the fact that they are all owned by one person is to control."

Dillon on Municipal Corporations, Sec. 1317.

"Water rates must be uniform, or at least free from unreasonable discrimination as to all consumers using substantially the same amount of water or having the opportunity to do so. The company may, however, classify consumers with reference to the various lines of business, or with reference to the quantity of water used, and give a more favorable rate to the large consumer than to the small, or require large consumers to have a meter and to pay meter rates, while ordinary consumers are charged a flat annual rate, or make special rates for those whose situation or the character of whose demand for water makes it specially expensive or troublesome to serve them."

40 Cyc., 802.

"The furnishing of water to the inhabitants of a municipal corporation being a matter of public concern and the plant being established for the common welfare of the community, all are entitled to the equal benefit of it, and unjust discrimination cannot be made between patrons; nor can it be used for enhancing the value of certain property to the detriment of other property by giving the former more favorable rates. Special contracts, therefore, cannot be made which are in contravention of the rates established by law. But absolute uniformity is not required where the conditions under which the water is to be used by different consumers are sufficiently different to warrant a difference in rate. Water may be furnished free or at special rates to city departments and to charitable or educational institutions in which the city is more or less interested. It may also be furnished in large quantities at less relative rates than is charged to small consumers. And different methods of ascertaining the amount to be paid may be adopted, so that one class shall pay a flat rate for the service rendered, and another pay only for the quantity used * * *."

1 Farnham on Waters and Water Rights, p. 865.

It is apparent from the citations above from the text writers that different water rates may be established for different lines of business as well as on the basis of quantity, and the buildings supplied with water may be classified. It is, of course, to be determined whether or not in each case the classification is reasonable and that there is no unjust discrimination exercised.

In the case of St. Louis Brewing Asso. vs. St. Louis, 140 Mo. 419, the facts were that by ordinance a water rate was established of one cent for one hundred gallons to municipal establishments, which are located on one or more adjoining blocks of a city, consuming over a given amount of water for purely manufacturing purposes. The same ordinance provided a general rate for manufacturing purposes of one and one-fourth cents per gallon. Held, such a fixing of rate was not a violation of the constitutional provision that taxes shall be uniform upon the same class of subjects; a water rate not being a tax, but a charge for service.

In Ladd vs. Boston, 170 Mass. 332, the court say on page 335:

> "Considerable discretion in determining the methods of fixing rates is necessarily given by the statute to the water commissioner. Money must be obtained from water takers to reimburse the city wholly or in part for the expense of furnishing water. An equitable determination of the price to be paid for supplying water does not look alone to the quantity used by each water taker. The nature of the use and the benefit obtained from it, the number of persons who want it for such use, and the effect of a certain method of determining prices upon the revenues to be obtained by the city and upon the interests of property holders, are all to be considered. Under any general and uniform system other than measuring the water some will pay more per gallon than others."

In Souther vs. Gloucester, 187 Mass. 552, the syllabus is as follows:

> "In fixing the amount of water rates to be charged in a particular locality other things may be considered besides the amount of water used, and it may be reasonable and lawful to charge the inhabitants of an outlying section of a city as much for the water they use in only a part of the year as the inhabitants of the heart of the city are charged for the water used by them during the whole year." Citing with approval Ladd v. Boston.

There are a great many cases which have been decided by the various courts in regard to whether or not a certain building came within a certain classification on which the water rent was different from that in another classification. In none of such cases, however, was the question raised as to whether or not water could be classified in other than quantity used, the right to classification apparently having been conceded by all parties. Such cases are the following:

Cromwell vs. Stephens, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 15;
Berends vs. Bellevue W. & F. G. Co., 119 Ky. 8;
U. S. vs. American Water Works Co., 37 Fed. 747;
Wilson vs. Tallahassee W. W. Co., 47 Fla. 351;
Birmingham W. W. Co. vs. Truss, 135 Ala. 530.

As to whether or not certain consumers can be required to pay a flat rate in advance while other consumers are required to pay a meter rate at the end of the month see Ramsey vs. Columbus, 12 O. D. (N. P.) 725.

I am not unmindful of the cases of Bailey vs. Lafayette Gas Fuel Co., 193 Pa. St. 175, and Richmond Natural Gas Co. vs. Glawson, 155 Ind. 659, to the effect that a gas company could not charge one price for the use of gas for lighting and another for heat in the same premises.

I would also call particular attention to the case of Fretz vs. Edmond, et al., 168 Pac. 800 (Okla.), wherein the court held in the second and third branches of the syllabus as follows:

> "2. Municipal corporations in operating a water plant exercise business and administrative functions, rather than those strictly governmental in their nature, and in the exercise of such functions are governed largely by the same rules applicable to all individuals or private corporations engaged in the same business.
> 3. Municipal corporations operating water plants are not required to give absolute equality of service or rates, but are only required not to act arbitrarily in exercising discretion vested in them in such matters, and not to maintain a discrimination between patrons which is essentially unjust."

The court in its opinion in the above case cites several cases from other states which bear out the decision.

It is true that the law on this subject has undergone a decided change from the time when the first principles were worked out by the courts to the present time. There was at one time a doctrine that no individual could complain of discrimination per se, but only as evidence of the unreasonableness of the charge exacted for the service furnished to him.

As put by Professor Bruce Wyman, in his work on Public Service Corporations, volume II, section 1281:

> "It must be plain to all who have followed the course of events with the least attention that there has been distinct evolution in the law governing public employment during the last twenty-five years. The rule against discrimination is the most recent development in the definition of public duty. A comparatively few years ago it was held that if a public service company served all at reasonable rates it performed its obligation, but modern industrial conditions require the further law that it shall serve all with equality."

Again, in section 1288, the same author, after quoting numerous earlier cases, some of them quite recent in date, uses the following language, which is especially interesting to us in the present connection:

> "It is not surprising that the distinction just discussed has fallen into disrepute. Whether the complainant is charged more than the regular rates which others are called upon to pay, or whether he is compelled to pay the regular rates while others are given reductions, there is the same inequality in treatment and the same disadvantage in business. That this distinction is ignored in modern times is shown in several recent years in many cases, but in none is it better set forth than in a water rate case where the complaint made by certain takers was that certain others were getting much lower rates. The company explained that these others had threatened to start a rival water company and that these concessions had been necessary to ward off this project; but the North Carolina court held this no justification. (Citing Griffin vs. Goldsboro Water Co., 122 N. C. 206, 30 S. E. 319, 41 L. R. A. 240 (1898). Mr. Justice Clark wrote a striking opinion well worth full quotation to show the modern way of looking at the wrong of discrimination: 'The acceptance by a water company of its franchise carries with it the duty of supplying all persons along the lines of its mains, without discrimination, with the commodity which it was organized to furnish. All persons are entitled to have the same service on equal terms and at uniform rates. If this were not so, * * * the business interests and the domestic comfort of every man would be at their mercy. They could kill the business of one and make alive that of another and instead of being a public agency created to promote the public comfort and welfare these corporations would be the masters of the cities they were established to serve * * * The law will not and cannot tolerate discrimination in the charges of these quasi-public corporations. There must be equality of rights to all and special privileges to none, * * *.'"

Proceeding, he states in section 1290 that:

"By the better view, it is submitted, the common law today forbids all discrimination between two applicants who ask the same service. This is the modern view reached after some bitter experiences with the results of discriminations by the railroads in disturbing the normal industrial order, in suppressing competition and fostering monopoly. * * *"

(Citing, inter alia, the comparatively early Ohio cases of Scofield vs. Railroad Co., 43 O. S. 571; State vs. Railway Co., 47 O. S. 130; Brundred vs. Rice, 49 O. S. 640; Railroad Co. vs. Coal Co., 61 O. S. 242; and Railroad Co. vs. Bowling Green, 57 O. S. 336. In fact it is quite apparent that Ohio is a pioneer in the judicial condemnation of the railroad rebate without the aid of statutes.)

From the first of these Ohio cases the following quotation is made by Professor Wyman (Sec. 1291):

"The principle is opposed to a sound public policy. It would build and foster monopolies, add largely to the accumulated power of capital and money, and drive out all enterprise not backed by overshadowing wealth. With the doctrine as contended for by the defendant, recognized and enforced by the courts, what will prevent the great grain interests of the northwest, or the coal and iron interests of Pennsylvania, or any of the great commercial interests of the country, bound together by the power and influence of aggregate wealth, and in league with the railroads of the land, driving to the wall all private enterprises struggling for existence, and with an iron hand thrusting back all but themselves?"

It might seem from the cases which I have quoted in the earlier part of this opinion that the right to service without discrimination is one which is limited to the members of a given class, so that those of one class cannot complain of differences in the charges for service existing as between that natural class and another natural class, but only of discriminations between members of the same class. Professor Wyman says on this point, however, that (Secs. 1299-1300):

"As has been seen what forced the development of the law against discrimination was the necessity of preventing discrimination between shippers who were competitors in business. This has already been seen from the language of many of the judges whose opinions have been quoted; but few of these judges limited the operation of this rule against discrimination to those cases in which the discrimination was between competitors, for almost all of them relied upon the legal argument that the common right of all involved the duty to give equal rates to all. * * *

It should therefore be appreciated that the rule against discrimination has outgrown its original occasion to protect those in competition and become a universal rule to protect all who are being served. * * * Householders are not competitors and yet they must have water, for example, at equal rates."

This admirable statement of the general law on the subject of discrimination and its history leads me to accept with some reservation the seemingly broad language which I have quoted from some of the cases. It must be admitted, however, that now discrimination is illegal, but that within the purview of the principle as I have already quoted it, in the language of Professor Wyman, it is only when two customers have asked the same service under the same conditions and different charges have been exacted that discrimination exists. Whether or not discrimination is illegal, therefore, depends upon whether service conditions are substantially identical.

In chapter XXXVIII of his work, Professor Wyman deals with this problem, and in the course of that chapter considers some of the cases from which I have quoted. He also deals with justifiable differences not amounting to illegal discrimination in chapter XXXIX, classifying them under the following headings:

Actual Differences in Total Costs;
Service in More Convenient Units;
Facilities Furnished by Customers;
Independent Consideration for Reductions.

I do not find it necessary to discuss this particular topic because the facts upon which you request my opinion present a question somewhat narrower than that which you base upon them. You have asked me whether the director of public service may fix special rates for institutions of a certain nature, but the facts are that the service director has fixed special rates for public schools, hospitals and library. I shall limit by conclusion to the precise facts thus disclosed.

In section 1303 et seq. of Professor Wyman's work above cited he uses the following language:

"Sec. 1303. The argument has been made in several cases, most of them early cases, that it could not be contrary to law for the carrier to make occasional concessions in particular cases, as no harm of any considerable sort would be done to others by the granting of such special favors. The example usually given of such occasional favors is that the railroad might carry for charity in particular instances. If this be so, it must according to modern ideas be subject to the most strict limitations; and if this exception remains in modern common law it can only be with the qualification expressed by Chief Justice Doe in one of his great cases (McDuffee vs. Portland & R. R. R., 52 N. H. 430, 13 Am. Rep. 72-1873): 'This question may be made unnecessarily difficult by an indefiniteness, confusion and obscurity of ideas that may arise when the public duty of a common carrier, and the correlative common right to his reasonable service for a reasonable price, are not clearly and broadly distinguished from a matter of private charity. If A receives, as a charity, transportation service without price, or for less than a reasonable price, from B, who is a common carrier, A does not receive it as his enjoyment of the common right; B does not give it as a performance of his public duty; C, who is required to pay a reasonable price for a reasonable service, is not injured; and the public, supplied with reasonable facilities and accommodations on reasonable terms, cannot complain that B is violating his public duty. There is, in such a case, no discrimination, reasonable or unreasonable, in that reasonable service for a reasonable price which is the common right. A person who is a common carrier may devote to the needy, in any necessary form of relief, all the reasonable profits of his business. He has the same right that anyone else has to give money or goods or transportation to the poor. But it is neither his legal duty to be charitable at his own expense, nor his legal right to be charitable at the expense of those whose servant he is.'"

"Sec. 1304. It is generally said that special reductions or even free service may be given a government, of whatever grade it may be, without its being considered undue preference or illegal discrimination. Thus the supreme court of the United States has squarely said (citing Interstate Comm. Comm. vs. Baltimore & O. R. R. Co., 145 U. S. 163, 36 L. ed. 699, 12 Supt. Ct. 844-1892) that as a common law matter regardless of whether the exception was specifically made in the legislation the property of United States, state, county or municipal governments might be transported on more favorable terms than for other parties without its being illegal discrimination. It is certainly true that a municipal government operating its own plant may serve its own departments without making charges against itself without any taxpayers having any complaint. It is, moreover, well established that in granting any legal privileges to a public service company, if the franchise conferred be no more than incorporation itself, the granting government, of whatever grade it may be, may stipulate for free service for its own public purposes. And it may also be provided that certain public employes shall have transportation at special rates. It should be noted, however, that there is often special legislation forbidding public officers to accept free transportation."

"Sec. 1305. The suggestion is made in several cases that general reductions may be made to further certain policies, provided that the public interests are thereby promoted. It is urged that such concessions if permitted will turn out for the best interests of all concerned in the end. The weight of this line of argument may be judged by the following abstract of part of the opinion of Judge Baxter in Hays vs. Pennsylvania Company (12 Fed. 309-1882). He said in effect that it is only when the discrimination inures to the undue advantage of one man, in consequence of some injustice inflicted on another, that the law intervenes for the protection of the latter. Harmless discrimination such as a concession to a general class might be indulged in. For instance, he said that the carrying of supplies at nominal rates to communities scourged by disease or rendered destitute by floods or other casualty would not entitle other communities to have their supplies carried at the same rate. Furthermore it is the custom as he pointed out for railroad companies to carry fertilizers and machinery for mining and manufacturing purposes to be employed along the lines of their respective roads to develop the country and stimulate productions, as a means of insuring a permanent increase of their business at lower rates than are charged on other classes of freight; and such discrimination while it tends to advance the interest of all worked no injustice, he thought, to anyone."

"Sec. 1306. It should be noted, however, here as throughout this whole discussion, that there is no common law obligation resting upon the company to give concessions of any kind from the rates others pay for the same service. This makes one doubtful of the legal character of these exceptions; for were there imperative reasons dictating such exceptions a company could not refuse to make them in any case. But it is well agreed that the company need not make any such concessions. It may even refuse to the United States government a party rate ticket for soldiers which it usually sells to other managers of travelers in groups, as one extreme case holds. (Citing United States vs. Chicago & N. W. R. R., 127 Fed. 785-1904.) Moreover it may discriminate in granting its favors, which is proof positive that this is no part of its legal obligation. Thus a particular minister of the gospel whom a carrier refused to carry for the customary reduced fare charged such persons has no right of action against the carrier because of the discrimination. (Citing Illinois C. R. Co. vs. Dunnigan (Miss.) 50 So. 443, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 503-1909.) The most that these exceptions amount to, therefore, is that there is a sufficient public policy in them to justify the proprietors of a public business in extending these special favors."

The text here is amply supported by the authorities cited which I need not go into.

It is my opinion that the director of public service has the right to discriminate in rates in favor of institutions of the character mentioned, all of which I assume to be of a public or semi-public and charitable nature. I may say, however, that if the reduced rate for hospitals is granted to such hospitals as are operated for profit I do not think that it can be justified to that extent, and limit my conclusion accordingly. I take it for granted that the library which is mentioned is a public one, at least in the sense that it is not operated for profit.

Returning to the first principle upon which my opinion has proceeded, I may say that the director's right to extend such favors to public or charitable institutions is based upon the breadth of the managerial powers reposed in him by the statute. Were he not made practically the operator of a public utility in the business sense, he would not have this power, unless expressly granted. However, though the municipality is the owner of the utility which it operates through him, he does not conduct in its behalf a governmental enterprise, and under the broad statutes which exist on the subject I am satisfied that the quotation which I have made from Dillon on Municipal Corporations, in so far as it states that the powers and duties of a municipality are the same as those of a private water company, is applicable.

In this connection see Butler vs. Karb, 96 O. S. 472, the syllabus of which is as follows:

"1. Municipalities of the state are authorized to establish, maintain and operate lighting, power and heating plants and furnish the municipality and the inhabitants thereof light, power and heat. The powers thus conferred are proprietary in their character and in the management and operation of such plant municipal officials are permitted wide discretion. Courts are without authority to interfere therewith upon complaint merely that the capacity of the plant is overtaxed and streets of the municipality are insufficiently lighted by reason of furnishing current to private consumers, and that the rates charged for current are inadequate to meet the cost of production and transmission thereof.

"2. But where the council of any such municipality fails to adopt and use a system or schedule of rates for current furnished private consumers as contemplated by section 3616, General Code, but leaves the matter of rates to the administrative officers of the municipality, who arbitrarily fix and determine the rates in each case, and in so doing unjustly discriminate between citizens in the matter of rates and service, such action constitutes an abuse of corporate power which may be restrained by the court upon suit instituted by the city solicitor, or by a taxpayer if the city solicitor refuses upon written request to bring suit."

I have thus far not considered the application of section 3963 of the General Code, which formed the basis of the opinion of the court in the case cited by you. It provides as follows:

"Sec. 3963. No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes, the cleaning of market houses, the use of any public building belonging to the corporation, or any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institutions, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children, or for the use of public school buildings; but, in any case where the said school building, or buildings, are situated within a village or cities, and the boundaries of the school district include territory not within the boundaries of the village or cities in which said building, or buildings, are located, then the directors of such school district shall pay the village or cities for the water furnished for said building or buildings."

It is obvious that this section to some extent controls the powers which the director of public service would have were it not in existence. It prohibits him from making any charge for supplying water for "any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institutions, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children." It seems to me that the word "hospital" as used here is employed in a general sense indicative of any hospital operated not for profit, and is not modified by the phrase "devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children," because as a matter of fact there are few, if any, hospitals devoted, for example, to the relief of the aged or destitute, or orphan or delinquent children. As I see it, therefore, the director of public service is not entitled to make any charge whatsoever for water furnished to hospitals which are in point of fact charitable institutions, by which I mean that, whether they make a charge to those who are able to pay or not, they are not operated for profit. To this extent I would say that, in my opinion, the rule inquired about is ineffectual; for as applied to charitable hospitals it is invalid because it exacts a charge where none can be exacted, while as applied to private hospitals operated for profit it is probably invalid as constituting an illegal discrimination.

I have assumed that the library referred to is open to the public on equal terms and is not operated for profit. It is therefore not within any of the provisions of section 3963; while the decision of the court settles the point that the school buildings in question are not within the terms of this section. The question now arises as to whether or not section 3963 is to be taken as a complete statement of the law with respect to discriminations by municipal waterworks in favor of public and charitable consumers. If it is, then it would follow that the director of public service has no power to make discriminations in favor of such consumers except those which the statute directs him to make. But if the statute is not to be so construed then as to cases within the general class indicated by the foregoing discussion, but not within the terms of section 3963, he has the general powers which I have referred to.

Now, section 3963 says that the director of public service shall make no charge in certain cases. This department has on several occasions considered the question as to whether or not this section, which is in terms prohibitory, is exclusive. The last and most exhaustive of these opinions was given to the bureau on February 13, 1918, No. 1008, and I refer you to it for a complete discussion of the questions involved. In that opinion I did not directly pass upon the question as to whether charitable institutions, other than those named in the section under discussion, could be furnished with free water, but did hold that free water could be furnished by the director of public service for municipal purposes not enumerated therein, and that the statute is not exclusive in this respect. Of course, as to school buildings there is a specific requirement in the statute that unless the district is entirely within the municipality the "'directors" thereof shall "pay the city for water furnished."

However the statute be interpreted with respect to the furnishing of free water to institutions other than those enumerated, it does not follow that because the director of public service may not furnish water free to such institutions he may not make a classification on grounds such as have been suggested, and include within the benefits of the lower rate institutions of the same general character not specifically enumerated in section 3963. As to such institutions the implied provision of the law would be no more than that expressed as to school buildings situated within a city, the boundaries of the school district not being within the boundaries of the city, to wit, that "the directors of such school district shall pay the * * * city for the water furnished for said building or buildings." In other words, the law would be that something must be paid; but section 3963 stops short of saying that exactly the same rate shall be paid as is exacted of domestic or manufacturing consumers.

On the whole I am satisfied that the section is not exclusive in the sense in which I have employed that term, and that the director of public service has the power to create for the purpose of rate making a class which may be described as "charitable institutions not enumerated in section 3963 of the General Code." In fixing the rate he must, of course, exercise reasonable discretion. He cannot evade the implied and partly expressed requirement of section 3963 by furnishing water at a merely nominal charge; he must exact a substantial rate. But I cannot say as a matter of law, and without further facts, that a rate of thirty cents per one thousand cubic feet for public schools and library, while the prevailing rate to domestic consumers is fifty-two and one-half cents, is either unjustly discriminatory as against domestic consumers or nominal and insubstantial as a charge.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN ALLEN COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 3, 1918, in which you enclose for my approval final resolutions on the following improvements:

Lima-Ottawa road—I. C. H. No. 129, Sec. "H," Allen county, types A, B, C.

Lima-Kenton road—I. C. H. No. 128, Sec. "A," Allen county, types A, B, C.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning same to you with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with section 1218 G. C.

In passing I might suggest that the resolution on the improvement of the Lima-Kenton road, I. C. H. No. 128, Sec. "A" (type B), sets out that the preliminary application of the board was made to the state highway department on December 30, 1918. This of course is a typographical error and I suggest that correction be made.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF GRATIS VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, PREBLE COUNTY—$4,220.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Gratis village school district, Preble county, Ohio, in the sum of $4,220.00, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of indebtedness which from its limits of taxation said school district is unable to pay at maturity.

GENTLEMEN:—The only transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Gratis village school district, relating to said bond issue, which has been submitted to me, is a letter directed to me by the clerk of the village, in which is set out a copy of the resolution of the board of education providing for said issue of bonds. This resolution, as set out in the letter of the clerk, is as follows:

"Resolved, By the board of education of Gratis village school district, Preble county, Ohio, all the members elected thereto concurring, that it is deemed necessary by said board of education to extend the time of payment of an indebtedness which from its limits of taxation such Gratis village school district is unable to pay at maturity.

Resolved further, That it is necessary, for the accomplishment of said purpose, to issue and sell the bonds of said district in the amount of four thousand two hundred and twenty dollars ($4,220.00), for the purpose of extending the time of payment of an indebtedness which from its limits of taxation such Gratis village school district, Preble county, Ohio, is unable to pay at maturity."

This proposed issue of bonds is under the assumed authority of sections 5656 and 5658 G. C. With respect to bond issues of this kind, section 5658 provides that no indebtedness of a school district shall be funded, refunded or extended unless such indebtedness is first determined to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of such school district by a formal resolution of the board of education. It is obvious that the resolution of the board of education above quoted is fatally defective in not making the finding required by the provisions of section 5658 G. C., above noted.

The resolution providing for this bond issue is defective in the further additional particulars:

1. The same does not set out the amount and nature of the indebtedness to be refunded by the proposed issue of bonds, nor does it state the time when said indebtedness matures.

2. Said resolution does not fix the denomination and maturities of bonds covering the proposed issue, nor the date that said bonds shall bear.

3. The resolution does not provide the rate of interest to be borne by said bonds, nor when the same shall be payable.

4. The purpose of said proposed issue is to pay an existing indebtedness, and in this view the transcript of the minutes relating to the adoption of this resolution is defective in not showing affirmatively that said resolution was adopted on a yea and nay vote of the board.

In addition to the defects above noted, the information furnished me with respect to the adoption of the above noted resolution is defective in not advising as to the character of the meeting of the board of education at which the resolution was adopted. This defect is probably cured by the recital that all the members of the board of education concurred therein. Nevertheless, full information with respect to the character of the meeting at which the resolution was adopted is always required by this department, in passing upon the validity of the acts of a board of education or other deliberative body.

The letter of the clerk advises that said issue of bonds was first offered to the "sinking fund" and rejected. I do not know from this expression whether the clerk intended to convey the information that said bonds had first been offered to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district, or to the trustees of the sinking fund of the village. Full information with respect to this matter is likewise required.

The transcript sent me is otherwise defective, in not setting out certain information always required in passing on bond issues of this kind, but inasmuch as a number of the defects in the proceedings, above noted are fatal to the validity of the bond issue, I do not deem it necessary to point out such further defects.

I am of the opinion that this bond issue is invalid and that you should not purchase same.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

ELECTRIC CARS—USE OF SEATS BY MOTORMEN AND CONDUCTORS.

Section 9007-1 G. C. makes it unlawful to operate an electric street car or interurban railroad car unless it is provided at all times during operation with seats for the motorman and conductor, but neither said section nor the law of which it is a part anywhere provides for rules and regulations as to the use of said seats.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1918.

HON. WALTER W. BECK, Prosecuting Attorney, Lisbon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked an official ruling in reference to certain provisions of an act found in 107 O. L. 590, now known as section 9007-1 et seq. of the General Code. The facts are as follows:

A traction company operates interurban service between East Liverpool, O., and Beaver, Pa., and between East Liverpool, O., and Steubenville, O., and city cars in East Liverpool, O., Chester, Pa., Wellsville, O., and Steubenville, O. Claim is made that on these various routes there are several congested places. It appears further that the pay-enter system is in vogue and that the conductor on the car is required to open and close the safety doors to permit the passengers to get on and off. These cars, I understand, are equipped with seats for the motorman and conductor and question is raised regarding a regulation requiring the motorman not to use this seat when operating his car through the congested districts and the conductor not to use said seat when opening and closing the safety doors. Claim is made that under the regulations of the company stool limits permit the motorman using his stool more than fifty per cent and the conductor about seventy per cent of the time when on duty. I understand this applies to the city cars and on the interurban lines the motorman and conductor are permitted to use stools about seventy per cent of the time.

Section 9007-1 G. C. reads:

> "That it shall be unlawful to operate in Ohio any electric, street or interurban railroad car unless it be provided at all times during operation with seats for the motorman and conductor."

Section 9007-2 G. C. reads:

> "A violation of section 1 hereof shall constitute a violation thereof by the president, general manager, general superintendent, or other officer in charge of operation, and shall be punishable by a fine of not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or by imprisonment for not less than ten nor more than thirty days for each offense. An offense on any calendar day and as to any car shall be a separate and distinct offense from a violation on any other such day."

These two sections constitute all the provisions of the act necessary to be considered under the facts stated. Section 9007-1 merely makes it unlawful to operate any electric, street or interurban railroad car unless it is provided at all times during operation with seats for the motorman and conductor. The act nowhere attempts to provide for the use of said seats. The title of the act recites that it is "an act requiring persons, associations and corporations owning or operating street or interurban electric railroad cars to provide for the well being of their employes." This is sought to be done by requiring that no car should be operated unless a seat for the motorman and conductor be provided. The act is wholly silent as to whether the employes are to have the right to use such seats during every moment of the time they are on duty, or whether the company is to make rules governing the times or places when such seats shall be used. I can well see that questions may arise as to the reasonableness of certain rules of the company made in reference to the use of the seats necessary to be provided under this law, but the language of the law gives no aid, nor would the construction of the language used in House Bill 144 aid, in solving such questions. The right to make a rule being conceded, the reasonableness or unreasonableness would depend upon the facts, and the absence of the particular facts, other than the general statement that there are congested districts on the lines, would preclude my giving an official opinion as to the reasonableness or unreasonableness of such regulation.

This is a matter that should be worked out satisfactorily between the employer and employe, which I trust may be done. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INCREASE OF TAX LEVY BY SCHOOL DISTRICT—WHEN ELECTION MAY BE HELD.

When a board of education, acting under section 5649-5 G. C., certifies to the deputy state supervisors a copy of resolution required under said section, the proposition shall be submitted to the electors of the school district at the November election that occurs more than twenty days after the adoption of such resolution as is provided in section 5649-5a G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 11, 1918.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked for an official opinion on the following: Kalida village school district, Putnam county, passed a resolution asking for a vote to increase the levy of taxes under section 5649-5 G. C. You state you advised the board that said election could not be held until the next November general or regular election, under section 5649-5a G. C.

I cannot understand the contention of the board. The language of the statute is so plain that he who runs may read, and I concur with the opinion that you have given the board.

Section 5649-5 G. C. provides that certain officers and boards, including the board of education, may proceed under said section when the maximum tax rate is insufficient.

Section 5649-5a G. C., the succeeding section, makes provision for the vote on such proposition and fixes, among other things, the time at which such vote shall be had. The language is as follows:

> "Sec. 5649-5a. Such proposition shall be submitted to the electors of such taxing district at the November election that occurs more than twenty days after the adoption of such resolution. * * *."

So it is readily apparent that the November election occurring more than twenty days after the adoption of the resolution is the proper time at which to submit the proposition. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—WHEN WORKMAN DIES AFTER FILING NOTICE OF INJURY AND APPLICATION FOR COMPENSATION WITH INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION, HIS RIGHT TO COMPENSATION PASSES TO HIS PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVE.

When a regular employe of an employer paying full premiums into the state insurance fund sustains an injury in the course of and arising out of his employment which results in his being permanently and totally disabled, and the said employe files a first notice of injury and preliminary application for compensation with the industrial commission, but dies as the result of said injury before his claim is passed on and allowed by the said commission, the right of said injured employe to receive compensation for said injury for the period from the date of said injury, less the first week, up to the date of death passes to his personal representative, and upon application of said personal representative said compensation should be awarded and paid to him.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 13, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication requesting my opinion on the following:

> "In re: Claim No. 411616—Joseph Crawford, deceased.
> Joseph Crawford, while in the employ of the American Tool Works Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, sustained an injury in the course and arising out of his employment on the eighteenth day of December, 1917, from which injury death resulted on February 6, 1918. Medical and funeral expenses have been paid by the industrial commission out of the state insurance fund. The decedent left no dependents surviving him.
> Under this state of facts, the commission desires your opinion as to whether or not payment of compensation accruing between the date of injury and the date of death may be lawfully paid to the administrator of decedent's estate, who has made application therefor."

In addition to the facts stated in your communication an examination of your file in regard to this claim discloses the fact that on January 14, 1918, the said Joseph Crawford filed with you a first notice of injury and preliminary application for compensation. It also appears from your file that as a result of the injury which the said Joseph Crawford sustained on December 18, 1917, he was totally and permanently disabled from that time up until his death on February 6, 1918.

Paragraph two of section 1465-68 General Code, being section 21 of the workmen's compensation act (103 O. L. 79), vests the general right in injured employes and the dependents of killed employes of private employers under the workmen's compensation act to receive compensation, medical expenses, etc., and reads:

> "Every employe mentioned in subdivision two of section fourteen hereof, who is injured, and the dependents of such as are killed in the course of employment, wheresoever such injury has occurred, provided the same was not purposely self-inflicted, on and after January 1, 1914, shall be entitled to receive, either directly from his employer as provided in section twenty-two hereof, or from the state insurance fund, such compensation for loss sustained on account of such injury or death, and such medical, nurse and hospital services and medicines, and such amount of funeral expenses in case of death as is provided by sections thirty-two to forty inclusive of the act."

Section 1465-81 General Code, section 34 of the workmen's compensation act (103 O. L. 86), provides for the payment of compensation in the case of permanent total disability, and reads, in part:

"In cases of permanent total disability, the award shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of the average weekly wages, and shall continue until the death of such person so totally disabled, but not to exceed a maximum of twelve dollars per week and not less than a minimum of five dollars per week, unless the employe's average weekly wages are less than five dollars per week at the time of the injury, in which event he shall receive compensation in an amount equal to his average weekly wages. * * *"

It seems clear from the provisions of the foregoing section that an injured employe who has suffered a permanent total disability is entitled to receive the rate of compensation therein provided from the date of his injury, less the first week which is excepted by section 1465-78 G. C., up to the time of his death.

Section 1465-82 General Code, as amended in 107 O. L. 450, and as in effect at the time of the death of the said Joseph Crawford, provides for the payment of compensation when injury results in death within two years after the injury was sustained and reads, in part:

"In case the injury causes death within the period of two years, the benefits shall be in the amount and to the persons following:

1. If there be no dependents, the disbursements from the state insurance fund shall be limited to the expenses provided for in section forty-two hereof.

2. If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of the average weekly wages, and to continue for the remainder of the period between the date of the death and eight years after the date of the injury and not to amount to more than a maximum of five thousand dollars, nor less than a minimum of two thousand dollars.

3. If there are partly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent of the average weekly wages, and to continue for all or such portion of the period of eight years after the date of the injury, as the board in each case may determine, and not to amount to more than a maximum of five thousand dollars."

The only difference between section 1465-82 G. C. as amended in 107 Ohio Laws 450, and the said section as enacted in 103 Ohio Laws 86, relates to the amount of compensation that is to be awarded in case of death and the length of the period during which same is paid, which are not material so far as the instant question is concerned.

When sections 1465-81 and 1465-82 G. C. are read together, it is seen that an injured employe who has suffered a permanent total disability is entitled to compensation from the date of his injury, less the first week, up to the time of his death; then, in the event that he leaves wholly dependent persons, it is provided in subparagraph 2 of section 1465-82 that these wholly dependent persons are entitled to receive compensation for the remainder of the period between the date of the death and eight years after the date of the injury. In other words, where an injury causes death within the period of two years and there are wholly dependent persons it was evidently intended by the legislature that compensation for a period of eight years should be allowed for said injury and death; the injured employe himself being entitled to compensation for whatever disability he suffered during the period between his injury and the date of his death and those persons who were wholly dependent upon him for support compensation for his death for the balance of said eight year period. I feel convinced that in such a case there are two separate and distinct rights, one being the right of the injured employe himself for compensation up to the date of his death, and the other being the right of those persons who were wholly dependent on him for support for compensation on account of his death.

Nothing is stated expressly in the act about the disposition of any compensation that might be due and unpaid to an injured employe at the time of his death —as to whether it should go to his dependents or to his personal representative. As has been noted heretofore, the compensation or benefits to the wholly dependent persons dates only from the time of the death of the injured employe.

In so far as the present question is concerned section 1465-88 G. C., section 41 of the act (103 O. L. 88), contains the only express limitations in regard to the payment or status of compensation, and reads:

> "Compensation before payment shall be exempt from all claims of creditors and from any attachment or execution, and shall be paid only to such employes or their dependents."

Since this section provides that compensation shall be paid only to injured employes or to the dependents of killed employes, it might be argued that it would not authorize the payment of compensation to the personal representative of an injured employe or the personal representative of a deceased dependent. However, in the case of State ex rel. Munding vs. Industrial Commission, 92 O. S. 434, at page 454, it was said in the opinion of the court in reference to the purpose of this part of the section:

> "The intent apparent and expressed throughout the act that compensation is to be paid only to dependents, was not for the purpose of securing an abatement of unpaid compensation upon the death of a dependent. The purpose is to insure that compensation shall go intact to the injured employe or his dependents without any shrinkage by passing through or into the hands of assigns, agents, attorneys, friends or relatives, it being common knowledge that if a sum of money on its journey from the one from whom to the one to whom it is due passes through the hands of others it is inevitable that it suffer diminution, sometimes almost to the vanishing point."

Hence, since it was considered by the supreme court that this section only prohibited an injured employe or the dependents of a killed employe from assigning his right to compensation, it was held in the Munding case, supra, that a personal representative of a deceased dependent of a killed employe could claim as assets of the estate of said deceased dependent any compensation which had been awarded said deceased dependent, but remained unpaid at the time of his said death.

Of course, there is a difference between the facts in the instant case and the facts in the Munding case, supra, in that in the Munding case the award had been made by the industrial commission at the time of the death of said dependent, and the only thing that remained to be done was to pay same in accordance with the schedule of compensation provided in the workmen's compensation law. However, in the instant case there can be no controversy as to the amount that the said Joseph Crawford would have been entitled to at the time of his death, since it would be in accordance with the schedule fixed in section 1465-81 G. C. for the period, less the first week, from the date of the injury to the date of his death. Crawford had filed his first notice of injury and his preliminary application for said compensation, but same had never been passed upon by you. Still, I cannot see that the mere fact that you had not passed on his claim, when as a matter of fact the said injured employe was entitled to said compensation, would make any difference so far as his individual right was concerned. His right was to have compensation for the above mentioned period. If it had been possible for all the various steps to have been taken and everything completed on the date of his death, the said Joseph Crawford would have been awarded and would have received compensation for the above mentioned period up to the date of his said death.

There being no express provision in the workmen's compensation law itself as to the payment of any compensation due and unpaid to an injured employe at the time of his death, and there being no express or implied prohibition in the law so far as I have been able to ascertain against the payment of said compensation to the personal representative of a deceased workman, I see no reason why a claim for compensation due an injured employe at the time of his death, but unpaid, should not pass to his personal representative just the same as any other claim for money due and unpaid.

It cannot be controverted that the said deceased employe Crawford was entitled to a certain amount of money out of the state insurance fund by way of compensation for the injury that he sustained in the course of his employment. This right was given him under the workmen's compensation law on the theory he would receive same in lieu of the wages he lost by reason of his injury. If there had been a certain amount of wages due and unpaid at the time of his death unquestionably the right to collect and receive same would pass to his personal representative. Hence, it would seem that the same rule should apply in regard to compensation due and unpaid at the time of the death of a claimant.

I, therefore, advise you that it is my opinion under the foregoing state of facts that the personal representative of the said Joseph Crawford is entitled to receive the compensation that was due him for the injury that he had sustained for the period from the date of said injury on December 18, 1917, less the first week, up to February 6, 1918.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIMITATION OF BOND ISSUE BY VILLAGE TO PAY ITS SHARE OF COST OF INTER-COUNTY HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT—HOW ASSESSMENTS MADE.

When an inter-county highway improvement is constructed in or through a village with its consent, in the manner provided by section 1193-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 123), and at the same width as that of the balance of the improvement, bonds issued by the village to pay its assumed share of the cost and expense of such improvement are charges against the tax duplicate of the taxable real and personal property in the village, and the village in issuing such bonds is limited by the provisions of the Longworth law (Secs. 3939 et seq. G. C.).

In such case where the improvement is initiated by an application for state aid made by the board of county commissioners, such board of county commissioners is authorized to levy assessments to pay the share of the cost and expense of said improvement to be borne by the owners of benefited property, upon the lots and lands abutting upon said improvement, whether the same be within or without such village; or if the county commissioners have taken appropriate action to that end under the provisions of section 1214 G. C. (107 O. L. 129), they may levy assessments to pay the share of the cost and expense of such improvement to be borne by the owners of benefited property, upon lots and lands lying within one mile or one-half mile, as the case may be, of either side of said improvement, whether the real estate so assessed be within or without such village.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, JUNE 13, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of your favor of May 21, 1918, in which you ask opinion on the questions submitted as follows:

> "Referring to section 1193-1 of the General Code providing for the improvement of inter-county highways and main market routes within a village, I respectfully ask for your opinion on the following points in question:
> First: In establishing the amounts of the cost of the improvement, can the county commissioners collect that portion of the cost assumed by agreement by the council of the village without the vote of the people?
> Second: Can the county commissioners assess the property within one mile of each side of the improvement without the vote of the people?"

Your questions, as I have been advised, have reference to the proposed Ashtabula-Conneaut inter-county highway No. 2 improvement, through the village of North Kingsville, Ashtabula county.

I am further advised that this improvement is one initiated by an application for state aid made by the board of county commissioners of Ashtabula county. On this consideration the statutory provisions applicable to your question are those of section 1193 G. C. and the sections enacted supplementary thereto (Secs. 1193-1 and 1193-2, 107 O. L. 123-4), rather than the provisions of section 1231-3 G. C., which have primary, and I may say sole, application to cases where an inter-county highway or main market road improvement is projected into or through a village by the state highway commissioner without the co-operation of county commissioners or township trustees.

Again I am informed that the proposed improvement of this inter-county highway through the village of North Kingsville is to be of the same width as that contemplated by the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners of Ashtabula county with respect to the balance of said proposed improvement, and this fact requires us to apply to the questions here presented the provisions of section 1193-1 G. C., rather than those of section 1193-2 G. C. which has immediate and sole application to cases where an inter-county highway or main market road improvement, initiated by application of county commissioners or township trustees, is constructed in or through a village at a width exceeding that contemplated by the proceedings for such improvement by the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners or township trustees.

Section 1193 G. C. provides that each application for state aid in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of inter-county highways or main market roads shall be accompanied by a properly certified resolution of the county commissioners or township trustees, stating that the public interest demands the improvement of the inter-county highway or main market roads therein described, which may include any portion of a highway in the limits of any village, when the same is a continuation of the proposed improvement, or it may cover any portion of a highway in the limits of any village, when the same is a continuation of an inter-county highway or main market road already improved, and the consent of the village has been obtained, which consent shall be evidenced by proper legislation of the council of said village entered upon its records.

"When, upon the application of county commissioners or township trustees and under the supervision of the state highway department, the improvement of an inter-county highway or main market road is extended into or through a village, or an improvement constituting an extension of an improved inter-county highway or main market road is constructed within a village, it shall not be necessary for the village to assume any part of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement. If no part of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement is assumed by the village, no action on the part of the village, other than the giving of its consent, shall be necessary; and in such event all other proceedings in connection with said improvement, including the making of assessments, shall be conducted in the same manner as though the improvement was situated wholly without a village. The village may, however, by agreement of its council made with the county commissioners or township trustees, assume and agree to pay all or any part of the cost and expense of that part of the improvement within the village assumed in the first instance by the county commissioners or township trustees and to be paid by general taxation. A village agreeing to pay any portion of the cost and expense of the improvement is hereby authorized to levy taxes upon all the taxable property of such village under the same conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the case of taxes levied for the purpose of providing funds for the payment of the village's share of the cost of street improvement under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the council of a village and is further authorized to sell its bonds in anticipation of the collection of such taxes under the same conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the sale of bonds for street improvements under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the council of a village. The village shall pay to the county or township treasury, as the case may be, its proportion of the estimated cost and expense of said improvement as fixed in the agreement between the council and the county commissioners or township trustees, and after the completion of said work and the payment of the cost and expense thereof any balance of the funds contributed by said village shall be refunded to it to be disposed of according to law. All special assessments shall be made by the county commissioners or township trustees upon whose application the improvement is constructed. This section shall apply where the council of a village does not desire to improve all or any part of said road within such village to a greater width than is contemplated by the proceedings for said improvement by the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners or township trustees; and shall also apply to so much of said road as it was designed to improve by the state highway commissioner and county commissioners or township trustees in cases where the council of said village desires to improve all or any part of said road within such village to a greater width than is contemplated by the proceedings of the state highway commissioner and county commissioners or township trustees."

With respect to your first question, which I take it is whether this village may provide for the share of the cost and expense of this improvement assumed by it without a vote of the electors, it will be noted that under the provisions of section 1193-1 of the General Code, just quoted, if this village not only consents to the construction of the proposed improvement in or through the same, but also, as it may do, assumes and agrees to pay a part of the cost and expense of the improvement, it may sell bonds therefor in anticipation of the collection of taxes to be levied on all the taxable property of the village.

I speak of the sale of bonds by the village, for practically this is the only way that it can raise the money to pay its assumed share of the cost and expense of the improvement. Under the provisions of said section it will be noted that the authority of the village to sell bonds for this purpose is subject to the same conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the sale of bonds for street improvements under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the village. It will be noted that the statute in terms speaks of the conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the "sale" of bonds for street improvements. The "conditions and restrictions" here mentioned have reference, I take it, to something other than the regulations prescribed by sections 3922 to 3924 inclusive, and section 1465-58, with respect to the sale of municipal bonds after their issue has been provided for. Such regulations would apply to a sale of bonds authorized by the section of the General Code here under consideration without any express mention therein and, as I view it, the conditions and restrictions mentioned in this section refer to the limitations as to amount applicable to the issue of bonds for street improvements under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the village. The issue of bonds for street improvement under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of a village as a municipal corporation is authorized by section 3821 G. C. and subsection 22 of section 3939 G. C.

Bonds issued by a municipal corporation under the authority of either or both of these statutory provisions, for the purpose therein mentioned, are subject to the limitations of the Longworth law, so called, which prescribes specific purposes for which bonds may be issued by a municipal corporation and provides for certain limitations on the amount of bonds that may be so issued.

> Smith vs. Village of Rockford, 4 N. P., n. s., 476; s. c. 4 N. P., n. s., 513; 9 N. P., n. s., 465; City of Cleveland, etc., vs. City of Cleveland, et al., 16 C. C., n. s., 471; 76 O. S., 594.

It follows therefore that bonds issued by this village under authority of section 1193-1 G. C., to pay its assumed share of this improvement, will be subject to the limitations as to the amount prescribed by the Longworth law. I do not deem it necessary to discuss the provisions of this law, it being sufficient to say that the same are found in sections 3939 to 3954-1 inclusive of the General Code.

Bonds may be issued by the village of North Kingsville for the purpose above indicated, without a vote of the electors, subject to the limitations as to amount prescribed by section 3940 G. C., as amended (107 O. L. 578), which provides that total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year by the council of a municipal corporation shall not exceed one-half of one per cent of the total value of the property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation.

Bonds issued by said village for this purpose, without a vote of the electors, will likewise be subject to the limitation prescribed by sections 3941 and 3954-1 G. C., which provide that the "net indebtedness" (section 3949 G. C.) created or incurred by council in the issue of bonds, subject to the limitations of said law, shall not exceed two and one-half per cent of the total value of all property in the municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation.

It therefore follows that if said village desires to assume a portion of the cost and expense of said improvement, which will exceed the limitations above noted, and desires to issue its bonds therefor, the approval of the electors of the village must first be obtained as to the issue of such bonds in the manner provided by sections 3942 to 3947 inclusive of the General Code, in which case bonds issued for the purpose will be subject only to the five per cent limitation prescribed by sections 3948 and 3954-1 G. C. This, I believe, answers your first question.

With respect to your second question, it will be noted that whether this village assumes or agrees to pay any portion of the cost and expense of said improvement or not, the assessments to pay the share of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by the owners of benefited property to be assessed therefor are to be made by the county commissioners. Unless otherwise provided by appropriate action of the board of county commissioners, this share will be ten per cent of the cost and expense of the improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, and the assessments therefor will be made upon the lands and lots abutting upon the improvement. However, section 1214 G. C., as amended (107 O. L. 129), provides that the county commissioners, by resolution adopted by unanimous vote, may increase the percentage of the cost and expense of the improvement to be specially assessed, and may order that all or any part of the cost and expense of the improvement contributed by the county and the interested township or townships be assessed against the abutting property; and that the county commissioners, by resolution passed by unanimous vote, may make the assessment of ten per cent or more, as the case may be, of the cost and expense of the improvement against the real estate within one-half mile of either side of the improvement or against the real estate within one mile of either side of the improvement.

Other than the provisions of section 1214 G. C., according to the individual owners of property assessed for the construction of an inter-county highway or main market road improvement, a right to a hearing with respect to their assessments, there is nothing in the provisions of the statutes relating to the construction of improvements of this kind which gives the electors of the village in or through which such improvement is constructed under the authority of section 1193 and section 1193-1 G. C., any voice in the matter of assessments made to pay the share of the owners of such benefited property in the cost and expense of the improvement, whether such benefited properties or the owners thereof are wholly within or partly within and partly without the village in or through which such improvement is extended.

Assuming, therefore, that the county commissioners of Ashtabula county have taken or will take appropriate action under the authority of section 1214 G. C., assessing benefited property within one mile of either side of the improvement, such assessments can be made with respect to property both within and without the village without a vote of the electors thereof, and your second question is accordingly answered in the affirmative. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN PERRY AND LOGAN COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, JUNE 13, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of June 6, 1918, enclosing, for my approval, final resolutions for the following named improvements:

Bryan-Pioneer road—I. C. H. No. 306, Sec. "L," Williams county.
Zanesville-New Lexington road—I. C. H. No. 350, Sec. "E-1," Perry county.
Lima-Bellefontaine road—I. C. H. No. 130, Sec. "B," Logan county.
Lima-Bellefontaine road—I. C. H. No. 130, Sec. "A-2," Logan county.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find the same correct in form and legal and am therefore returning them to you with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

In passing I might suggest that the final resolution made by the commissioners of Perry county, for the improvement of the Zanesville-New Lexington road, I. C. H. No. 350, Sec. E-1, does not state the month nor the day of the month upon which the commissioners acted, but the certificate of the clerk of the board of county commissioners sets forth the fact that it was adopted on May 1, 1918. This I think cures the defect, which at any rate is not of vital importance.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF LORAIN COUNTY—$17,500.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, JUNE 13, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Lorain county in the sum of $17,500, for the purpose of relocating and rebuilding Houghton bridge No. 145 over Charlemonte creek in Wellington township, on Medina-Norwalk Inter-County Highway No. 291.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Lorain county, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind. I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof. No bond form has been submitted as a part of said transcript and I am therefore holding the transcript of the proceedings relating to this bond issue until such bond form is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN HIGHLAND COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 14, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of 13th inst. enclosing for my approval final resolutions (in duplicate) for the following named improvements:

Highland county—Milford-Hillsboro road, I. C. H. No. 9, Sec. "I."
Highland county—Milford-Hillsboro road, I. C. H. No. 9, Sec. "K."

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find the same correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning them to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

However, I wish to call your attention to what is apparently a typographical error in the resolution pertaining to I. C. H. No. 9, Sec. "I," wherein it is stated that the preliminary application of the board to the state highway department was made on November 5, 1918.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

The Ohio Gas & Electric Company, Middletown, O.

I have carefully examined these leases, find them correct in form and legal and therefore approve the same. I am forwarding them to the governor of Ohio for his consideration.

In approving said leases, I am assuming they in no way interfere with the rights of the city of Akron as provided in section 14009 G. C. (107 O. L. 418).

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 14, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have examined the lease of canal lands made by you to Benjamin L. Johnson and John W. Bush, of Portsmouth, Ohio, for cottage site purposes, and find the same to be correct in form and legal. I am therefore forwarding it, with my approval endorsed thereon, to Hon. James M. Cox, governor, for his consideration.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STREET IMPROVEMENTS—WHEN TWO CONTRACTS HAVE BEEN ENTERED INTO WITH CONTRACTOR AND OVERPAYMENT MADE ON ONE MUNICIPALITY MAY DEDUCT AMOUNT OF OVERPAYMENT FROM SECOND CONTRACT.

Where a municipality has entered into two certain contracts with a particular contractor for certain street improvements and one contract has been completed and the said contractor has been paid a certain amount in excess of what he is entitled to under the terms of the contract and the said municipal corporation has a right to recover the amount of said overpayment in a proper action, and the second contract is in the course of being performed and there is more than a sufficient amount due on the second contract to satisfy said overpayment to said contractor, HELD:

That said municipal corporation may deduct a sufficient amount from the moneys due on said second contract to satisfy the overpayment that was made to the contractor on said first contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of May 31, 1918, requesting my opinion on the following:

> "The city of 'A' has two street improvement contracts with John Smith, contractor. The final estimate has been paid on one contract while the other contract is not yet completed nor all payments made. It is discovered that the contractor has been paid more than he was rightfully entitled to on the completed contract.
> Question: Can the city officials legally withhold from his payments on the second contract an amount sufficient to aggregate the amount overpaid him on the contract for which he has been paid in full and erroneously too much?"

You do not state in your communication the facts which show how it happened that the contractor was paid more than he was legally entitled to on the first contract. However, I am assuming that the overpayment on said contract was illegal and that the municipality is entitled to recover same in an action properly brought against the contractor for money had and received. This action, of course, would arise out of the implied contract of the contractor to repay to the municipality moneys that he had received illegally and to which the said municipal corporation was entitled.

Sections 11319 and 11321 G. C. read:

> "Sec. 11319. A set-off is a cause of action existing in favor of a defendant against a plaintiff between whom a several judgment might be had in the action, and arising on contract or ascertained by the decision of a court. It can be pleaded only in an action founded on contract."
> "Sec. 11321. When cross-demands have existed between persons under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counterclaim or set-off could have been set up, neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by assignment by the other, or by his death. The two demands must be deemed compensated so far as they equal each other."

Section 5077 Revised Statutes, which provided substantially the same in effect as section 11321 G. C., in so far as the instant question is concerned, and section 5075 Revised Statutes, which gave the right of set-off and had substantially the same effect as section 11319 G. C., were considered by the supreme court in the case of Bank vs. Brewing Co., 50 O. S. 151. Beginning at the bottom of page 157 it was said by the court:

> "The bank owed Schlegel on his deposit account, when he gave the Brewing Company his check, more than the amount for which it was drawn; at the same time, Schlegel owed the bank on his note, a sum greater than the bank's indebtedness to him; these mutual debts existed between the parties in the same relation, were both past due, and each was founded on contract. Our statute secures the right of set-off to parties sustaining the relation of debtor and creditor, between whom there are such cross demands, and those existing between banks and their customers are not excepted from its operation; so that, if Schlegel, when the check was drawn, had brought an action on his claim against the bank, the latter could have set off against it the debt which Schlegel owed the bank. And it is clear the right of set-off was not defeated or impaired by the check, even if it be treated as an assignment. The statute plainly protects the right of set-off, when it existed between the parties, notwithstanding the assignment, by either, of his demand. Its language is, 'when cross demands have existed between persons, under such circumstances that if one had brought an action against the other a counter claim or set-off could have been set up, neither can be deprived of the benefit thereof by assignment by the other, but the two demands must be deemed compensated, so far as they equal each other.' Revised Statutes section 5077. By force of the statute, the indebtedness of the bank to Schlegel was paid by a corresponding amount of the indebtedness of Schlegel to the bank; and crediting Schlegel's note with the amount due on his deposit account, as was done by the bank, was but giving effect to the provisions of the statute."

In so far as their legal effect is concerned we have present the same facts in substance as those in the above mentioned case. The municipality has the right to recover from the contractor the amount of money he has received improperly on his first contract and the contractor upon his performance of the second contract has the right to demand from said corporation the amount that is due him under said last mentioned contract. The amounts of these respective obligations are apparent, of course, from the facts which are not stated by you as to the amount of money that is or was due the contractor on each contract and the amounts that have been paid.

Following the holding and reasoning of the aforesaid case and the provisions of the above mentioned sections of the General Code in reference to cross-demands, I advise you that the officials of the city you have reference to in your communication may legally withhold a sufficient part of the money due on a contract entered into with the particular contractor to satisfy an illegal payment which has been made to the same contractor on another contract and which said overpayment on said last mentioned contract could have been recovered by said municipality in a proper action.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully examined the corrected articles of incorporation of The Florists and Gardeners Insurance Association and find same to be in substantial conformity to the provisions of sections 9593 et seq. of the General Code and not in conflict with the constitution and laws of the state of Ohio or of the United States and the same are accordingly hereby approved.

I am returning to you check for $25.00 submitted with your letter.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—VERDICT—IN CASES INVOLVING THE ASSESSMENT OF COMPENSATION AND DAMAGES AND IN THE MATTER OF ESTABLIHING A ROAD.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

HON. A. C. MCDOUGAL, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of May 29, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "I would be pleased to have an opinion on the question as to whether or not a three-fourths jury can return a verdict on an appeal on a road case from the county commissioners either as to compensation and damages or as to the establishment?"

It is my understanding, from your communication, that you are making inquiry in reference to a case which might arise under section 6891 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Sec. 6891. Any person, firm or corporation interested therein, may appeal from the final order or judgment of the county commissioners made in the proceeding and entered upon their journal determining either of the following matters:
> 1. The compensation for land appropriated.
> 2. The damages claimed to property affected by the improvement.
> 3. The order establishing the proposed improvement.
> 4. The order dismissing or refusing to grant the prayer of the petition for the proposed improvement."

The section which bears more particularly upon the matter about which you inquire is section 6894-6 G. C., the latter part of which reads as follows:

> "The rules of law and procedure governing civil cases in the common pleas court shall apply to the trial of the cause in the probate court."

This will make it necessary for us to examine into the question as to what is the rule of law in the common pleas court which governs civil cases in reference to whether the jury must be unanimous in rendering an opinion in civil cases, or whether three-fourths of the jury concurring may render a valid verdict. The provisions pertaining to this question are found in section 11455 G. C., which reads as follows:

"In all civil actions a jury shall render a verdict upon the concurrence of three-fourths or more of their number. The verdict shall be in writing and signed by each of such jurors concurring therein, and they must then be conducted into court, where their names shall be called by the clerk, and the verdict handed to the clerk by the foreman. The clerk must then read the verdict to the jury and make inquiry if it is the verdict of three-fourths or more of their number."

I am of the opinion that the provisions of this section apply to the particular case you have in mind.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my view that if three-fourths of a jury concur in a case involving the assessment of compensation and damages for lands taken in road cases, a verdict can be rendered by the jury. I think the same principle would apply in establishing a road, and if three-fourths of a jury concur, a verdict can also be rendered upon this proposition.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—FAIR GROUNDS WHEN EXEMPT.

Real estate used for the purpose of holding agricultural fairs conducted by county or so-called "independent" agricultural societies, organized not for profit and complying with the provisions of sections 9880 et seq. General Code, is exempt from taxation, whether the title to such lands is in the society or in the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 6th, requesting my opinion, as follows:

"Is the real estate, the fee of which is in the name of an agricultural society organized under sections 9880-9880-1 G. C., and complying with sections 9881, 9882 and 9883, liable for taxation?

If the fee of the real estate is in the name of the county of such society, is it liable for taxation?

We fail to find any law exempting the real property of agricultural societies, and the only opinions, by a former attorney general, do not seem to cite any law for exempting this property, although it is not generally taxed. We refer to opinions of Attorney-General J. A. Kohler, February 9, 1886, Volume 3, 1883-1888, page 813, and on page 998 of the same volume."

Of course, in case of doubt considerable, if not controlling, weight should be given to the administrative rulings and practices with respect to a question of this kind; especially where the conditions giving rise to the question have existed for a long time and the practice has been uniform. On the other hand, where the law is clear it cannot yield to any such practice, however uniform.

The following language of Spear, J., in Lee vs. Sturges, 46 O. S. 153-176, is pertinent here:

"The omission of the taxing officers of the state in previous years to assess this property cannot control the duty imposed by law upon their successors or the legal construction of a statute under which its exemption is claimed. Vicksburg Railroad Co. vs. Dennis, 116 U. S. 665. If it could, the consequence would be the lodging in their hands of the very power of exemption which the general assembly alone can validly wield, and that under the limitations of the constitution. Nor can laches be imputed to the state. * * * The extent of the claim for 'uniform construction' seems to be that in case of doubt as to proper construction, the construction by state and county officers should prevail. This has been at large argued and considered. * * *

Our conclusion is that there is not such doubt present as will make this claimed 'uniform construction' available as against the claim for taxes here made. * * *"

It will not do, therefore, to dispose of the questions submitted by you upon the short ground that the general or uniform practice has been to regard either or both of the classes of property inquired about by you as exempt from taxation. The inappropriateness of doing so in this case becomes peculiarly apparent when the ruling of this office to which you have called attention is examined in its historical setting.

The second of the two opinions of Attorney-General Kohler cited by you is, so far as it relates to the question under consideration, in full as follows:

"Last winter the question as to the exemption of the grounds of an agricultural society from taxation was submitted to me, and after consulting with the auditor of state I gave an opinion that, under section 2732, such grounds were exempted from being taxed.

The circuit court of Brown county has recently held, in an action against an agricultural society for damages received by a person on the fair grounds, that the society was not liable for the reason that it was not organized for profit, but was, in its nature, a public institution for public purposes. I must admit that it is a very close question and very many eminent lawyers take the position that the property is taxable and does not come within the legal exemptions of subdivision 8 of section 2732.

The question can easily be put to the test of a judicial decision if the auditor will place upon the duplicate the name of the society, which will then ask for an injunction restraining the tax. I wish it could be done. I am advised that, as a rule, agricultural societies in this state pay no taxes on their fair grounds."

The Brown county case referred to by Attorney-General Kohler is evidently that of Dunn vs. Agricultural Society, which about a year and a half after Mr. Kohler's opinion was rendered was decided by the supreme court, 46 O. S. 93. The judgment of the court was that the judgment below should be reversed, and its decision on the point of law involved was summarized in the syllabus as follows:

"A county agricultural society, organized under the act of February 28, 1846 (44 O. L. 70), and amendments thereto, which has constructed seats on its fair grounds for the use of its patrons, is liable, in its corporate capacity, to an action for damages, by a person who, while attending a fair held by it, and rightfully occupying the seats, sustains an injury in consequence of its negligence in their construction."

I quote the following from the opinion, per Williams, J.:

"There is a class of public corporations, sometimes called civil corporations, and sometimes quasi corporations, that, by the well settled and generally accepted adjudications of the courts, are not liable to a private action in damages, for negligence in the performance of their public duties. * * *

Of this class, are counties, townships, school districts and the like. * * * Organizations of the kind referred to, are mere territorial and political divisions of the state, established exclusively for public purposes. * * * They are involuntary corporations * * * created by the state, without the solicitation, or even consent, of the people within their boundaries. * * *

This rule of exemption, however, extends no further than its reason, and therefore has no application to corporations called into being by the voluntary action of the individuals forming them, for their own advantage, convenience or pleasure. * * *

When, therefore, it is determined to which of these classes of corporations the defendant belongs, a decision of the case is reached. * * *

From this summary of the statutes, it is apparent, that corporations formed under them, are not mere territorial or political divisions of the state; nor are they invested with any political or governmental functions, or made public agencies of the state, to assist in the conduct of its government. * * * It is evident that societies organized under the statutes are the result of the voluntary association of the persons composing them, for purposes of their own. It is true, their purposes may be public, in the sense that their establishment may conduce to the public welfare, by promoting the agricultural and household manufacturing interests of the county; but in the sense that they are designed for the accomplishment of some public good, all private corporations are for a public purpose. * * *

It is evident that the defendant has, or may have, a corporate fund. * * *

The income may * * * exceed the expenditure, and hence, not only may a corporate fund be acquired, but it may be distributed among the members, or held for other disposition, at the pleasure of the society, and the corporation may thus become one of pecuniary profit, with the control and management of property, real and personal; and we see no reason why, for private injuries, caused by the improper management of its corporate property, it should not be held to the same general liability, as natural persons who own and manage the same kind of property."

I might stop here for the purposes of at least one of your questions, but I do not feel that I ought to do so because, in my opinion, the reasoning of Judge Williams in this case will not bear close scrutiny. The first proposition he advances is that liability for negligence exists unless the corporation be a public one. This, of course, is not true, and our own supreme court, adhering to the rule well settled in other jurisdictions, has since held that a private corporation not for profit engaged in the management of a charitable institution is exempt from such liability (Taylor vs. Hospital Assn., 85 O. S. 90). Judge Williams in his opinion seems to have had this principle vaguely in mind, for he seeks to support his conclusion by the additional statement that because an agricultural society may have a corporate fund it may be converted into a corporation for pecuniary profit, distributing the fund periodically by way of dividends among its members. This statement is palpably erroneous. It does not follow that every corporation having assets and the capacity to reap income has the power to distribute the assets among its members (Snyder vs. Chamber of Commerce, 53 O. S. 1). Indeed the general statutes of this state declare that > "If a corporation be organized for profit it must have a capital stock."

and it is difficult to understand upon what basis the property of an agricultural society which is not authorized to have a capital stock could be distributed among its members, prior to dissolution at least.

In fact, if agricultural societies are corporations for profit, the whole scheme of legislation involved in chapter 2, part second, title IX, division VI, would be unconstitutional, as numerous provisions of the related statutes authorize the levy of taxes in aid of the enterprise conducted by such societies, which, if the latter were organized for the profit of their members, would be a palpable violation of sections 4 and 6 of article VIII of the constitution.

This question has been raised and it was decided in Commissioners vs. Brown, 1 N. P. n. s. 357, that county agricultural societies organized in the usual way are corporations not for profit, that is, without capacity to distribute dividends among their members; so that the provisions of law authorizing the state and the counties to contribute public revenues to their support are not unconstitutional.

From these considerations it appears that whatever may be the fact as to the correctness of the decision in Dunn vs. Agricultural Society, it was based upon reasoning which cannot be supported. Had the court determined that county agricultural societies are liable for injuries resulting from the negligence of their officers and agents because, though organized not for profit they do not constitute such charitable institutions as are entitled to the benefits of the rule laid down in Taylor vs. Hospital Assn., supra, the case would, for reasons which will hereafter appear, be of some service, but so far as I am able to ascertain this was not the ground of the decision in the case under consideration.

I might add in this connection that in the opinion in Taylor vs. Hospital Assn., supra, Johnson, J., uses the following language respecting the Dunn case (page 102):

> "In Dunn vs. Agricultural Society the fair grounds were kept and the fair conducted not as a thing free to the public; Judge Williams in declaring the judgment of the court says as to the rule of exemption from liability that 'it has no application to corporations called into being by the voluntary action of the individuals forming them for their own advantage, convenience or pleasure.'"

This is, of course, a satisfactory distinguishment of Dunn vs. Agricultural Society from Taylor vs. Hospital Assn.; but I do not think that it would be fair to say that the court in Taylor vs. Hospital Assn. meant to approve the correctness of Judge Williams' dictum that an agricultural society is formed for the advantage, convenience or pleasure of its organizers.

What I have said so far has been directed to the point that neither Attorney-General Kohler's opinion, based upon the reversed decision of the circuit court of Brown county, on the one hand, nor on the other the decision of the supreme court in the same case is of much weight in the determination of the question now presented. I am disposed therefore to ignore both of them in the further consideration of the question. I do not feel that it is necessary to quote article XII, section 2 of the constitution, which authorizes the general assembly to exempt property of certain classes from taxation. It is sufficient to state the obvious and now well recognized proposition that, with an exception which it is not necessary now to note, this provision of the constitution of its own force does not exempt anything from taxation; it is not self-executing; by which we mean, of course, that it is a mere grant of authority to the legislature.

I turn, therefore, to the statutes relating to exemptions from taxation, with the remark that there is no exemption provision in the chapter relating to agricultural societies, as such, and find the following provisions which are worthy of consideration in this connection:

> "Sec. 5352. Buildings belonging to counties and used for holding courts, and for jails or county offices, with the ground, not exceeding ten acres in any county, on which such buildings are erected, shall be exempt from taxation."
> "Sec. 5353. Lands, houses and other buildings belonging to a county, township, city or village, used exclusively for the accommodation or support of the poor, or leased to the state or any political subdivision thereof for public purposes, and property belonging to institutions of public charity only, shall be exempt from taxation."
> "Sec. 5358. Stocks, or certificates of stock, in a corporation or railroad company, owned by a county, township, city or village, the money to acquire which was originally raised by taxation upon such county, township, city or village, shall be exempt from taxation."
> "Sec. 5359. Funds raised and set apart for the purpose of building monuments to the soldiers of this state, and monuments and monumental buildings, shall be exempt from taxation."
> "Sec. 5362. Real estate held or occupied by an association or corporation, organized or incorporated under the laws of this state, relative to soldiers' memorial associations, monumental building associations, or cemetery associations or corporations, which in the opinion of the trustees, directors or managers thereof, is necessary and proper to carry out the object intended for such association or corporation, shall be exempt from taxation."

In the same connection see section 5356 General Code. It does not relate to counties, but provides as follows:

> "Sec. 5356. Market houses, public squares or other public grounds of a city, village or township, houses or halls used exclusively for public purposes or erected by taxation for such purposes, notwithstanding that parts thereof may be lawfully leased, shall be exempt from taxation."

I call attention to the fact that there is nothing like the broad provisions of section 5356 just quoted in the statutes relative to the exemption of county property from taxation. The county is entitled to hold as exempt from taxation its court house, jail and county offices and the ground on which they are located not exceeding ten acres in extent; its lands and buildings used exclusively for the accommodation and support of the poor, any stocks owned by it, and its funds set apart for the purpose of building monumental buildings. Children's homes are exempted from taxation by section 5353-1 of the General Code, if not by section 5353 as above quoted itself. Memorial buildings and the lands on which they are situated are not exempted from taxation by any of the provisions which I have quoted nor by any other provision which I can find, unless they come under the heading of "institutions of public charity only," which will be hereinafter discussed. The same remark applies to county and district tuberculosis hospitals and detention hospitals, unless these can be identified with the lands and buildings "used exclusively for the accommodation or support of the poor." There is other county property, such as county parks, county experiment farms and the like, none of which is, so far as I am able to find, specifically exempted from taxation, though the legislature has undoubted authority to make an exemption under article XII, section 2 of the constitution.

Without further comment, therefore, I arrive at the conclusion that the fact that the title to fair grounds or to buildings and improvements thereon may be in the county does not in any way affect the question of their exemption from taxation.

Looking again at the statutes which I have quoted I call attention to the fact that specific provision is made for the exemption of the property of certain incorporated societies, such as monumental associations and the like, and no such specific provision is found for the exemption of the property of agricultural societies. This fact is not without its significance; but before I can reach a conclusion on either of the questions submitted by you I must determine whether or not an agricultural society is "an institution of purely public charity" or, as the constitution and statutes now have it, "an institution of public charity only."

As I have already stated, I do not think that this question is foreclosed by the decision in Dunn vs. Agricultural Society. The following cases deserve examination in this connection:

> Cleveland Library Assn. vs. Pelton, 36 O. S. 253 (Syllabus):
> "1. A library association, incorporated under the laws of this state, whose objects and purposes are: 'The diffusion of useful knowledge, and the acquirement of the arts and sciences, by the establishment of a library of scientific and miscellaneous books for general circulation, and a reading room, lectures and cabinets;' open to all persons, without distinction, upon equal terms, and the income and revenues of which are devoted exclusively to such objects and purposes, is 'an institution of purely public charity,' within the meaning of the 6th clause of the act of March 21, 1864. S. & S. 761."

The statement of facts in this case shows that the library association was organized under a law and articles of incorporation by virtue of which "any person, without distinction of color, sex or faith, can become a member, and * * * the annual fee is * * * one dollar * * *; that if a member withdraws more than one book at a time a further charge of ten cents per week is added; that its library and reading room are open to the members daily, and its natural history and historical collections are open free during two days a week to the public; the association has no stockholders, and no member or officer of the plaintiff has any pecuniary benefit from the plaintiff or is entitled to any."

In the opinion, per Johnson, J., the following language is used (p. 257):

> "The purposes of this association * * * are, * * * 'The diffusion of useful knowledge and the acquirement of the arts and sciences by the establishment of a library * * * and a reading room, lectures and cabinets.'

It is open to all without distinction, and all its income is devoted exclusively to said purposes.

That this association, in its objects and purposes, is 'an institution of purely public charity' * * * is, we think settled by the cases of Gerke vs. Purcell, 25 Ohio St. 229; Cincinnati College vs. State, 19 Ohio 111; and Humphreys vs. Little Sisters of the Poor, 29 Ohio St. 201."

The cases thus relied upon establish the following points:

In Cincinnati College vs. State, the court had before it a statute exempting "all buildings belonging to scientific, literary or benevolent societies." The statute was passed in 1848, prior to the adoption of the constitution of 1851, and the case arose and was decided before that constitution was adopted. In the case the court really did not therefore have to construe the phrase "institutions of purely public charity;" but in Library Association vs. Pelton it was apparently assumed that the latter phrase included "scientific, literary or benevolent societies" when open to the membership of all upon the same terms.

In Gerke vs. Purcell the following language appears in the syllabus:

"2. In section 2, article 12, of the constitution, which authorizes the general assembly to exempt from taxation the classes of property therein described, the word 'public' is used, in some instances, to describe the ownership of the property, in others as merely descriptive of the use to which the property is applied. As applied to schoolhouses, it is used in the former sense; and by 'public schoolhouses' is meant such as belong to the public, and are designed for schools established and conducted under public authority.

3. The fact that the use of property is free, is not a necessary element in determining whether the use is public or not. If the use is of such a nature as concerns the public, and the right to its enjoyment is open to the public upon equal terms, the use will be public, whether compensation be exacted or not. Whether the use is free or not, becomes material only where some other element is involved than that of its public character, as, for instance, whether the use is charitable as well as public.

4. A charity, in a legal sense, includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art, without any particular reference to the poor.

5. Schools established by private donations, and which are carried on for the benefit of the public, and not with a view to profit, are 'institutions of purely public charity' within the meaning of the provision of the constitution, which authorizes such institutions to be exempt from taxation.

6. The constitution, in directing the levying of taxes and in authorizing exemptions from taxation, has reference to property, and the uses to which it is applied; and where property is appropriated to the support of a charity which is purely public, the legislature may exempt it from taxation, without reference to the manner in which the title is held, and without regard to the form or character of the organization adopted to administer the charity.

8. In the description of the property exempted from taxation in section 3 of the tax law, as amended March 21, 1864, the word public, as therein applied to schoolhouses, colleges, academies, and other institutions of learning, is descriptive of the uses to which the property is devoted. The schools and instruction which the property is used to support must be for the benefit of the public; and when private property is thus appropriated without any view to profit, it constitutes a 'purely public charity' within the meaning of the constitutional provision."

As is apparent from the syllabus itself, the question involved was as to whether or not parochial schools, the legal ownership of the property belonging to which was in the archbishop of the appropriate diocese and the use of which was available to the children of the parents of all denominations upon substantially gratuitous terms, were exempt from taxation. The opinion, per White, J., contains a careful analysis of the meaning of the two words "public" and "charity." As the syllabus indicates, he declared that the word "public" did not refer in this context, either in the constitution or in the statutes, to the ownership but rather to the use of the property. Respecting the meaning of the word "charity" he has the following to say (p. 245 et seq.):

> "The meaning of the word 'charity,' in its legal sense, is different from the signification which it ordinarily bears. In its legal sense it includes not only gifts for the benefit of the poor, but endowments for the advancement of learning, or institutions for the encouragement of science and art, and, it is said, for any other useful and public purpose. Lord Camden described a charity as a 'gift to a general public use, which extends to the rich as well as the poor.' * * *
> The maintenance of a school is a charity. * * * and in the case of the American Academy vs. Harvard College, 12 Gray, 594, it was said to be well established, that 'a gift designed to promote the public good, by the encouragement of learning, science, and the useful arts, without any particular reference to the poor, is a charity.'"

Then coming to consider the two words as used together in a single term "institution of purely public charity" he says:

> "For the purpose of determining the public nature of the charity, it is not material through what particular forms the charity may be administered. If it is established and maintained for the use and benefit of the public, and so conducted that the public can make it available, this is all that is required.
> But is it competent for the legislature to treat the buildings and lands connected therewith, used for carrying on the schools, as institutions, or as property belonging to institutions? The term 'institution' is sometimes used as descriptive of the establishment or place; * * * at other times it is used to designate the organized body. It is used in both senses in the third section of the tax law brought under consideration in this case. * * * In the sixth clause of the section it is used in the latter sense, and the property referred to is described as belonging to the institutions named. * * *
> Laying out of view the nature of the organization by which the charity is administered, the property in question stands on the same footing as the property devoted to the support of colleges and other higher institutions of learning not founded by the state. All of these institutions stand, as respects their claim to exemption from taxation under the constitution, on the ground of their being institutions of purely public charity.

> If property is appropriated to the support of a charity which is purely public, we see no good reason why the legislature may not exempt it from taxation, without reference to the manner in which the legal title is held, and without regard to the form or character of the organization adopted to administer the charity. To illustrate: If the organization by which these schools are maintained were incorporated, no question could be made as to the existence of authority to exempt their property from taxation. Now, if the property is appropriated to the same public uses, and the same ends are accomplished, we see no constitutional obstacle to prevent the legislature from exempting it as fully without incorporation as with it; * * *
> But admitting the constitutional power of the legislature to make the exemption, the next question is, whether the exemption is authorized by the statute."

But in Humphries vs. Little Sisters of the Poor, supra, the following proposition is laid down in the syllabus:

> "2. The word 'institutions,' in the sixth clause of sec. 3 of the tax law, is used to designate the corporation or other organized body instituted to administer the charity, and the real estate described as belonging to such institutions has reference to property owned by them; and to entitle such institutions to hold the property exempt from taxation, they must not only own it, but it must be so used as to fulfill the requirements of the statute."

This case raised squarely the question as to the meaning of the phrase "property belonging to institutions of purely public charity." In the opinion, per White, J., the following language appears (pp. 206-207):

> "It seems clear to us that the word 'institutions' in this clause is used to designate the corporation or other organized body instituted to administer the charity, and, that the real estate described as belonging to such institutions has reference to property owned by the institutions; and that to entitle them to hold the property exempt from taxation, they must not only own it, but it must be so used as to fulfill the requirements of the statute.
> That such is the meaning of the word 'institutions' is manifest from the last part of the sentence, which exempts moneys and credits. * * *
> The word 'belonging' is used in the same sense throughout the clause, and, as there used, means ownership.
> We do not say that the legal title must be vested in the institution. If the legal title were held in trust for the sole use and benefit of the institution, the property, in such case, would be regarded as belonging to the institution."

There are other cases on the same general points, such as Watterson vs. Halliday, 77 O. S. 150; and Little vs. Theological Seminary, 72 O. S. 417. The former of these two cases deserves some consideration because of its apparent modification of the doctrine of the last two cases cited. It was held in that case that the Roman Catholic church was, as such, not an "institution of purely public charity" in its primary sense. The legal result of the distinctions to be inferred from this and the other cases is that the property the legal title of which is in the bishop or archbishop is to be regarded as vested in substantially different beneficial ownerships when it is managed and conducted for purely church purposes, on the one hand, and when it is managed and conducted for the purposes of schools open to the public, on the other hand; for the court did not overrule or in any way modify either Gerke vs. Purcell or Humphries vs. Little Sisters of the Poor.

These cases were all elaborately reviewed and applied to section 5353 General Code in its present form in Myers vs. Rose Institute, 92 O. S. 238, and Rose Institute vs. Myers, 92 O. S. 252. In the latter of these two cases the language which I have quoted from Humphries vs. Little Sisters of the Poor was quoted as an epitome of the settled policy of the state (per Nichols, C. J., p. 270):

It is believed, then, that the foregoing cases establish the following principle:

In order that real estate may be exempt from taxation under section 5353 General Code, two things must concur, viz.:

> (1) Ownership in an institution, i. e., organization of some kind as distinguished from an individual.
> (2) Exclusive use for a purpose charitable in the sense that it aims to alleviate human suffering or meet great public needs, such as the advancement of science or useful arts, and is carried on without gain to the members of the organization; and public in the sense that its benefits are available to all without distinction and upon the same reasonable terms.

But in connection with the first of these propositions it is to be observed that the place where the legal title is found is immaterial. The ownership that is requisite is the equitable or beneficial use, and not the legal title.

It remains for me to apply these principles to property in the state familiarly known as "fair grounds."

In the first place, the legal title to this property, as is intimated, may be either in an agricultural society organized under sections 9880 et seq. of the General Code or, under certain circumstances and conditions, in the county (see sections 9887, 9888, 9894, 9895, 9898, 9900, 9901, 9906, etc.). But regardless of the location of the legal title, it is clear that so long as fairs are held the beneficial use of fair ground property is in the organization known as the "county agricultural society." The following section brings this out:

> "Sec. 9906. When the title to grounds and improvements occupied by agricultural societies is in the county commissioners, the control and management of such lands and improvements shall be vested in the board of directors of such society so long as they are occupied and used by it for holding agricultural fairs. * * *"

In the light of this section I reaffirm the conclusion expressed earlier in this opinion to the effect that the ownership of the legal title of fair grounds by the county is of no legal significance in connection with the question now under consideration. I then held that it does not make exempt from taxation property which might otherwise not be exempt; I now hold that if it should appear that the property would be exempt from taxation if "belonging to" the agricultural society as an "institution of public charity only," the ownership of the legal title by the county would not deprive it of that exemption, because in the sense in which the word "belonging" is used in the statute as interpreted by our supreme court the ownership is, nevertheless, in the society.

Of course, I do not need to quote the statutes to show that county agricultural societies are "institutions," that is, voluntary organizations as distinguished from mere collections of individuals. There is therefore left in your inquiry the single question as to whether or not the character of such societies and the use which they make of such real estate are such as to constitute the latter "property belonging to institutions of public charity only."

At the outset let me state again that, Dunn vs. Agricultural Society to the contrary notwithstanding, I am satisfied that the better view is that agricultural societies are not corporations for the pecuniary benefit of their members, and that the better reasoning supports the view to this effect expressed in Commissioners vs. Brown, supra. For what purpose, then, do agricultural societies conduct their enterprises? This question is answered, I think, by the provisions of sections 9881, 9882 and 9884 of the General Code, which provide as follows:

> "Sec. 9881. The several county or district societies formed under the provisions of the preceding section, annually shall offer and award premiums for the improvement of soils, tillage, crops, manures, implements, stock, articles of domestic industry, and such other articles, productions, and improvements, as they deem proper, and may perform all acts they deem best calculated to promote the agricultural and household manufacturing interests of the district and of the state. They shall regulate the amount of premiums, and their different grades, so that small as well as large farmers may have an opportunity to compete therefor. In making their awards special reference shall be had to the profits which accrue, or are likely to accrue from the improved mode of raising the crop, or of improving the soil, or stock, or of the fabrication of the articles thus offered, so that the premium will be given for the most economical mode of improvement."
> "Sec. 9882. Persons offering to compete for premiums in improved modes of tillage, or the production of crops or other articles, before such premium is adjudged, shall deliver to the awarding committee a full and correct statement of the process of the mode of tillage or production, and the expense and value thereof, with a view to showing accurately the profits derived or expected to be derived therefrom."
> "Sec. 9884. County and district societies annually shall publish a list of awards, and an abstract of the treasurer's account, in a newspaper of the district, and make a report of their proceedings during the year, and a synopsis of the awards for improvement in agriculture and household manufactures, together with an abstract of the several descriptions of these improvements; also make a report of the condition of agriculture in their county or district, which shall be made in accordance with the rules and regulations of the state board of agriculture, and be forwarded to the state board at its annual meeting in January of each year. No subsequent payment shall be made from the county treasury unless a certificate be presented to the auditor, from the president of the state board, showing that such reports have been made."

Your question assumes that these statutes have been complied with. It is clear to me that the promotion of the "agricultural and household manufacturing interests of the district and of the state" constitute the sole object of the activities of these societies. It is possibly true that in the course of years abuses may have grown up and that many activities may have been carried on in connection with county agricultural fairs that have no real place in such enterprises; but I would hesitate to take cognizance of such conditions to the extent of holding as a matter of law that they constituted such a perversion of the objects of such societies as to deprive their activities of the essential character which they are required to have and the legal benefits that accrue therefrom. I would be particularly hesitant to take such a stand in view of the fact that section 9880 of the General Code provides, in effect, that the president of the state board of agriculture shall pass upon this very question in issuing certain certificates and orders which he is authorized and required to issue by that section.

I feel, therefore, that I must assume, as to all agricultural societies which have received the sanction of the state, that they are engaged in the promotion of agricultural and domestic manufacturing, with a view not only to benefiting such interests in the district or county, but also in the state at large, through reports which they are required to make to the state board of agriculture. In my opinion, these activities constitute the promotion of the agricultural and domestic manufacturing sciences and to that extent bring the activities of such societies within the broad definition of the word "charity" which I have quoted from Gerke vs. Purcell, supra.

The one remaining question is as to whether the notorious fact that an admission fee is charged by these associations in connection with all fairs conducted by them, not merely of those who are able to pay but also of the poor if they would receive admittance, is sufficient to deprive the activities of such societies of a purely public character. It will be remembered that whatever may be the income of such societies it cannot be distributed as dividends to its members; and that all accumulations derived from the successful prosecution of its enterprises are to be devoted to the making of necessary improvements and the offering of attractive premiums, etc. The public are admitted without discrimination upon the payment of the proper fee. As pointed out in Gerke vs. Purcell, a thing does not lose its character as a charity in the broad sense because it is administered without reference to the needs of the poor, as such. On the whole, I am of the opinion that the charging of a reasonable admission fee of all who enter is of itself a fact of no significance in this connection.

Davis vs. Camp Meeting Association, 57 O. S. 257.

For all the foregoing reasons, I arrive at the conclusion that property belonging to agricultural societies which comply with the laws of this state, or the legal title to which is vested in the county for the use of such societies so long as they comply with such laws, is exempt from taxation as "property belonging to institutions of public charity only."

As to the application of section 9880-1 G. C. referred to by you, I refer you to the enclosed copy of opinion addressed to the secretary of the board of agriculture under date of January 30, 1918 (No. 979), and to an opinion addressed to Hon. Walter Beck, prosecuting attorney, Lisbon, Ohio, under date of December 7, 1917, and found in Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, Volume III, page 2252. Whatever the phrase "independent agricultural society" as used in section 9880-1 G. C. may mean, the section can have no constitutional application to a society conducted for profit. It follows that if there be any such societies to which it can apply such societies are in substantially the same situation as those which are not "independent."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JUVENILE COURT—DELINQUENCY, ETC., CASES—JURISDICTION WHEN ACTS COMMITTED OUTSIDE OF COUNTY.

The juvenile court has jurisdiction over and with respect to all deliquent, neglected and dependent minors within the county, and the fact that some or all of the acts of misconduct upon which a delinquency charge is based were committed outside of the county does not rob the court of its jurisdiction to determine the status of the child and proceed accordingly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 8, 1918, as follows:

> "A party from Ross county appeared in the probate court of this county of Fayette, seeking to file charges against two minors under the age of eighteen years, in such court and in the juvenile division thereof. These minors are residents of Fayette county and a few days ago entered a school house in Ross county and destroyed considerable property therein.
> Has the juvenile court of this county jurisdiction to entertain a complaint and issue a citation requiring them to appear in such court regarding the offense committed in Ross county?"

Section 1642 of the General Code reads:

> "Such courts of common pleas, probate courts, insolvency courts and superior courts within the provisions of this chapter shall have jurisdiction over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors, under the age of eighteen years, not inmates of a state institution, or any institution incorporated under the laws of the state for the care and correction of delinquent neglected and dependent children, and their parents, guardians, or any person, persons, corporation or agent of a corporation, responsible for, or guilty of causing, encouraging, aiding, abetting or contributing toward the delinquency, neglect or dependency of such minor, and such courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any charge or prosecution against any person, persons, corporations, or their agents, for the commission of any misdemeanor involving the care, protection, education or comfort of any such minor under the age of eighteen years."

As has been repeatedly noted in opinions of this department and of the courts, there is a vast difference between what is known as juvenile delinquency in this state and crime. There is never a conviction of delinquency—simply a finding by the court that the child is a delinquent. The child is not accused of any crime and the procedure determining whether or not the child is a delinquent does not move along the same lines as the procedure in criminal cases.

In the matter of Frank Januszewski, 10 O. L. Rep. 151, the second branch of the syllabus reads:

> "Delinquency has not been declared a crime in Ohio, and the Ohio juvenile act is neither criminal nor penal in its nature, but is an administrative police regulation of a corrective character; and while, as in the case at bar, the commission of a crime may set the machinery of the juvenile court in motion, the accused was not tried in that court for his crime, but for incorrigibility."

At page 156 the court say:

"The purpose of the statute is to save minors under the age of seventeen years from prosecution and conviction on charges of misdemeanors and crimes, and to relieve them from the consequent stigma attaching thereto; to guard and protect them against themselves and evil-minded persons surrounding them; to protect and train them physically, mentally and morally. It seeks to benefit not only the child, but the community also, by surrounding the child with better and more elevating influences and training it in all that counts for good citizenship and usefulness as a member of society. Under it, the state, which through its appropriate organs, is the guardian of the children within its borders (Van Walters vs. Board, 132 Ind. 569) assumes the custody of the child, imposes wholesome restraints and performs parental duties and at a time when the child is not entitled, either by the laws of nature or of the state, to absolute freedom, but is subjected to the restraint and custody of a natural or legally constituted guardian to whom it owes obedience and subjection. It is of the same nature as statutes which authorize compulsory education of children, the binding of them out during minority, the appointment of guardians and trustees to take charge of the property of those who are incapable of managing their own affairs, the confinement of the insane, and the like. The welfare of society requires and justifies such enactments. The statute is neither criminal nor penal in its nature, but an administrative police regulation (State vs. Marmouget). A consideration of the acts enumerated which respectively constitute delinquency precludes the thought that it was the legislative intent that they or any of them, when committed by infants within the specified age, should for correctional purposes be treated as a crime—such purposes, as regards such minors, being the only ones contemplated by the statute. The intent to disassociate juvenile from criminal cases is evidenced by the provision of section 1649 that the former shall not be heard, if it can be avoided, in a room used for the trial of the latter, and by the prohibition against the detention of any delinquent child in the county jail pending the disposition of its case (section 1652)."

And again at page 158 the court say:

"The legislature of Ohio has not declared delinquency, as defined by the juvenile act, to be a crime. The state's highest judicial tribunal, whenever called upon to review proceedings had under laws akin to those authorized by the act now in question, has declared such laws to be special, statutory, corrective but not criminal, and constitutional, and indictment before a hearing thereunder not necessary. The juvenile act, in its omission to direct that a hearing should be preceded by presentment or indictment, does not conflict with the constitution of the United States."

At page 159 it is said:

"The commission of a crime may set the machinery of the juvenile court in motion, but not to try the delinquent minor for his crime. For that, he must be tried in another forum, after indictment, and by a jury."

It will be noted that section 1642, in conferring jurisdiction upon the juvenile court, does not give it jurisdiction over offenses committed by juveniles or over the acts constituting delinquency, but confers upon such court jurisdiction "over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors, under the age of eighteen years." The language used by the legislature in this statute again emphasizes the distinction between delinquency and crime. Criminal jurisdiction is always conferred on the courts through the offense and when it is to be determined whether or not a court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter in a criminal proceeding, the test is whether or not it has jurisdiction not over any certain person or persons, but whether it has jurisdiction over the offense committed. In the juvenile statute the delinquent children of the county are placed within the jurisdiction of the court for the purposes of discipline and protection and if after a hearing the court finds that the child within its jurisdiction is delinquent, it is the duty of the court to assume control over the child. The thing to determine is the child's status—whether or not it is delinquent—and when the child is before the court the only important thing for the court to determine is whether the child is really in need of the court's protection. It makes no difference whether the facts at the hearing disclose that some of the acts of misconduct of the child were committed in an adjoining county. The child is not being tried for these things and it is not a question of whether they were committed, but whether or not in fact they were committed. If they were, they tend to establish the delinquency of the child. If they were not, the court's protection is unnecessary. The important question for the court, when the court stands before it, is to determine whether the child is good or bad, whether it needs correction or whether it does not, and the locality in which any acts of misconduct may have been committed by the child can have no bearing upon the question.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that the juvenile court has jurisdiction over and with respect to all the delinquent, neglected and dependent minors within the county, and that the fact that some or all of the acts of misconduct upon which a delinquency charge is based were committed outside of the county does not rob the court of its jurisdiction to determine the status of the child and proceed accordingly.

I would advise you, therefore, that in the case submitted the juvenile court of Fayette county has jurisdiction over the minor residents of Fayette county referred to, and that court may, if it sees fit in determining the status of the juveniles, hear evidence of whatever misconduct these children are guilty of when they were in Ross county.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF JACKSON TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, ASHLAND COUNTY—$22,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re:—Bonds of Jackson township rural school district, Ashland county, Ohio, in the sum of $22,000, for the purpose of erecting and equipping a school building therein.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Jackson township rural school district, Ashland county, Ohio, relating to the above noted issue of bonds. I find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind and I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form was submitted with and as a part of said transcript and I am, therefore, holding same until such bond form is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—WHEN INTERURBAN RAILWAY MAY BE ASSESSED FOR PART OF COST OF IMPROVEMENT—DUTY OF TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES.

1. A strip of land owned or occupied by an interurban railway company and lying along a public highway may be assessed for a part of the cost and expense of improving said highway, the assessment to conform to the benefits received.

2. The township trustees are authorized to make the assessment and they in good faith must decide on the amount that shall be assessed, in any case not to exceed thirty-three per cent of the value of the property for the purposes of taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

HON. C. C. CRABBE, Prosecuting Attorney, London, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have a communication addressed to you by the Ohio Electric Railway Company. You request my opinion on the matters therein set out. Said communication contains the following:

> "The specific question which is to be presented to the attorney-general, together with the facts upon which the inquiry is based, would be substantially as follows:
> The Urbana-London road is to be improved by the state, county, township and property owners acting jointly. Through Union township, on the north side of the road, the Ohio Electric has a narrow strip of right of way, in which it has rights for railway purposes, with reverter in the event of the discontinuance of such use. The company has been assessed $470.14, which is at the rate of $25.00 an acre, an assessment much more than the assessment per acre of abutting farm lands.
> The claim is made by the Ohio Electric railway that the improvement of the road is of no benefit to it, but, on the contrary, the furnishing of increased facilities for other transportation is a distinct detriment and will result in loss of earnings.
> The statute provides that assessments should be made in accordance with the benefits, and that such assessment may be divided between abutting property owners and the railway occupying a strip along the pike; both classes being considered abutters.

On the basis of the above facts, can an electric interurban railway right of way be assessed on the basis of abutters owning small residential strips, where there is no showing of any benefit other than such benefit as might be incident to any farm land in the vicinity?'

Upon inquiry from the state highway commissioner I learn that the contract for the construction of the road in question was entered into prior to June 28, 1917, and hence the procedure in connection with said improvement would be controlled by the provisions of the Cass highway act, rather than by the White-Mulcahy law which is now in force.

Section 1215 G. C. reads as follows:

"Where property is separated from a road improvement by a canal, street railway, steam railway or in any other similar manner, such property shall be regarded for the purposes of assessment under the provisions of this chapter (G. C. Secs. 1178 to 1231-3) as property bounding and abutting upon said improvement, and both such strip of land owned or occupied by such street railway and the land lying back thereof shall be assessed on account of said improvement as provided herein."

An interurban railway is not specifically mentioned in the section. The words "canal," "street railway" and "steam railway" are used therein. But there is also found in this section the phrase "in any other smiliar manner," and apparently an interurban railway would come under this phrase.

Under said section the strip of land and the property lying immediately back of said strip, which is separated by the canal, street railway, steam railway, etc., from the road improvement, are subject to being assessed for a portion of the cost and expense of a road improvement. It is not essential that the railroad company should own the land in fee simple upon which its road is built, because this section provides that "both such strip of land owned or occupied" shall be assessed on account of said improvement. But provision is made therein that the assessment should be made "as provided herein;" that is, as provided in the chapter of which the section is a part. So it will be necessary for us to look further to note the conditions under which an assessment may be made.

Section 1211 G. C. provided in the Cass act:

"Upon completion of the improvement the chief highway engineer shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property. He shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement, and his apportionment thereof to the county commissioners, and the trustees of the township or townships interested therein."

Section 1214 G. C. provided in part as follows:

"* * * Ten per cent of the cost and expense of improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement, provided the total amount assessed against any owner of abutting property shall not exceed thirty-three per cent of the valuation of such abutting property for the purposes of taxation. * * *"

Hence under this provision in no case shall this assessment exceed thirty-three per cent of the valuation of the abutting property for the purposes of taxation, although under section 1215 G. C. the strip of land owned or occupied by an inter-urban railroad company shall be considered as abutting upon a road being improved and shall be liable for an assessment to take care of a part of the cost and expense of the improvement.

Section 1214 G. C. further provided as follows:

> "* * * The township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of the abutting property according to the benefits accruing to the owners of the land so located. At least ten days' notice of the time and place of making such apportionment shall be given to the persons affected thereby, and an opportunity given them to be heard. The township trustees shall cause a notice to be served upon abutting property owners, stating the time and place for hearing on the apportionment and the amount to be paid by each abutting property owner. In case any of the abutting property owners are non-residents, such notice shall be given by one publication in some newspaper of general circulation in the county."
> * * * *

This gives the assessed property owners notice of the amount assessed against them and an opportunity to be heard if they have objections to the assessment as it was made by the township trustees, and while there is no direct provision in this section to this effect, yet it is my opinion that the township trustees could modify or change the assessment as it was first made by them; otherwise the notice given to the assessed property owners of the apportionment would be of no force or effect whatever.

Section 1216 G. C. provided:

> "The township trustees shall certify the assessments so made to the county auditor, who shall place them upon the tax duplicate against the several properties benefited as shown by said assessment list. The county treasurer shall collect such assessments in the same manner as other taxes are collected. The township trustees shall pay to the county the portion of the cost and expense apportioned to the township, in the same manner as other claims against the township are paid."

From the sections above quoted it is evident that the Ohio Electric Railway Company may be assessed for a part of the cost and expense of the improvement of the public highway which lies parallel to the strip of land which said electric railway company owns or occupies; that the amount assessed against said railway company shall be according to the benefits accruing to said railway company from the improvement, but cannot exceed thirty-three per cent of the valuation of such property for the purposes of taxation; and that the township trustees are given authority in law to apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of the abutting property and assess against each piece of property the part to be paid by the owner of said property.

Said railway company raises the question that it will not be benefited in the least by the improvement, but on the other hand said improvement will be detrimental to the company, in that it will have a tendency to take freight and traffic away from said company. The apportionment of the cost and expense to be borne by abutting property owners and the making of the assessment against each piece of property of that amount which is to be borne by the owner thereof rest entirely with the township trustees. They are necessarily the judges as to the benefits which any particular piece of property will receive by the improvement and what amount ought to be assessed against each particular piece of property. There is no provision made in the statute for an appeal from the decision of the township trustees and unless they have not acted honestly and in good faith, but have grossly abused the power vested in them, it is my opinion that an abutting property owner would have no relief as against the assessment made by the township trustees.

So it is clear that the question as to whether a particular piece of property will be benefited by the improvement of a public highway is one of fact, and not of law to be decided by this department. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find them correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning same to you with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with section 1218 G. C.

In passing I will call attention to what is apparently a typographical error in the final resolution covering the improvement of the Milford-Hillsboro road, I. C. H. No. 9, Sec. DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF PHILLIPSBURG VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, MONTGOMERY COUNTY—$50,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In re: Bonds of Phillipsburg village school district, Montgomery county, Ohio, in the sum of $50,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a site for, erecting and equipping a school building in said school district and for the purpose of purchasing school wagons to convey the pupils to and from said school in said village of Phillipsburg.

I am herewith returning to you, without approval, the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Phillipsburg village school district relating to the above bond issue. The board of education of this school district has provided for the issue of these bonds in the aggregate sum of $50,000.00 pursuant to an affirmative vote of the electors of the school district on a submission of the question of said bond issue to said electors by the board of education under the provisions of section 7625 General Code. The resolution of the board of education, in so far as any question arising on the same is concerned, provides as follows:

"WHEREAS, The board of education of Phillipsburg village school district, Montgomery county, Ohio, deems it necessary for the proper accommodation of the schools of said district to purchase ground, erect a school building and equip the same, and to purchase school wagons to convey the pupils to and from said school in said village of Phillipsburg, and the funds at the disposal of said board are not sufficient to accomplish that purpose and that a bond issue is necessary, and said board having already estimated that the probable amount of money required for said purpose will be fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00); be it Resolved, That the question of issuing bonds for the purpose of purchasing ground, erecting and equipping a school building and purchasing school wagons for the purpose of conveying the pupils to and from said school district, to the amount of said estimate, to wit, of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00), shall be submitted to the electors of said village school district in the manner provided by law for school elections."

The resolution providing for the issue of the bonds pursuant to the vote of the electors is identical in purpose with that indicated in the resolution adopted by the board submitting the bond issue proposition to the vote of the electors of the school district. The bond issue proposition was submitted to the electors as a single proposition for the issue of bonds, in the specified amount, covering the purpose of purchasing school wagons for the transportation of pupils as well as for the purpose of purchasing a site for, erecting and equipping a school building; and inasmuch as there is nothing in the provisions of sections 7625 of the General Code, authorizing the board of education to issue bonds for the purpose of obtaining money to purchase vehicles for the transportation of pupils, and as no means are available for ascertaining what portion of said bond issue was voted and issued for such unauthorized purpose, it necessarily follows that the whole bond issue proposition is illegal by reason of the inclusion of said unauthorized purpose in the purposes for which the bonds were voted and issued.

You will perhaps recall that the question above discussed was involved in the consideration of the validity of the bonds of Belle Center village school district, Logan county, Ohio, which were disapproved by this department for the reasons above stated in Opinion No. 464, under date of July 23, 1917. In the opinion above referred to I followed the decision of the court of common pleas of Crawford county, Ohio, in the case of Shell vs. Bevier et al., which was decided very shortly before said opinion was written.

As before noted herein, the bonds here in question are to be issued by the board of education pursuant to a vote of the electors of Phillipsburg village school district under the authority of section 7625 General Code. It has been repeatedly held by this department that a board of education is not authorized to submit the question of a proposed bond issue under the authority of section 7625 General Code unless the board affirmatively finds that the funds at the disposal of the board, or which can be raised under section 7629 General Code, are not sufficient for the purpose for which the bonds are to be issued. The resolution of the board of education in this case shows that it made a finding that the funds at the disposal of the board were not sufficient for the purpose that the board had in mind, but under the provisions of section 7625 General Code this is not sufficient; the board should have further determined that the funds which it could raise under the provisions of section 7629 General Code would not be sufficient for such purpose. The transcript fails to show that any such determination was made by the board in the submission of the question of this proposed bond issue to the electors of the school district, and for this reason the proposed bond issue is illegal.

I note some further defects in the transcript of the proceedings relating to this bond issue:

There is nothing in the transcript to show that the notice of the election on said bond issue, a copy of which notice is set out in the transcript, was ever published in the manner required by section 4839 General Code.

Again, there is a fatal defect in the provisions of the resolution of the board of education under date of May 21, 1918, providing for the maturity of some of the bonds covering this issue. With respect to this said resolution provides that the bonds covering said issue shall be numbered 1 to 47, inclusive, and makes specific provision with respect to the maturities of the first eleven bonds of said series. Said resolution further provides as follows:

> "Bonds Nos. 12 to 47 for one thousand dollars ($1,000.00) each to mature as follows:
> The odd numbered bonds from 13 to 47, inclusive, shall mature on March 1st of the years 1930 to 1946, respectively, and the even numbered bonds from 12 to 46, inclusive, shall mature on September 1st of the years 1930 to 1946, respectively."

Without an extended discussion on this point, it may be observed that if the resolution had provided that said bonds should mature in the years 1930 to 1947, respectively, adequate provision would have been made for the maturity of said bonds; but inasmuch as the resolution does not indicate any intention that more than two of said bonds from 12 to 47, inclusive, shall mature in any one year, sufficient time has not been provided for the maturity of said bonds.

Said transcript is further defective in not making any statement with respect to the fiscal condition of said school district. This is an objection, however, which could probably be obviated on further information, but inasmuch as the defects first noted herein are, in my opinion, wholly fatal to the validity of said proposed bond issue, I feel that I have no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove said bonds and advise you not to purchase same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF NEW CONCORD VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re: Bonds of New Concord village school district in the sum of $10,000.00, for the purpose of repairing and furnishing school house in said district.

I am herewith returning to you, without approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of New Concord village school district, relating to the above bond issue. The issue of these bonds is provided for by resolution adopted at a meeting of the board of education on May 15, 1918, pursuant to the affirmative vote of more than a majority of the electors voting on said proposition at a special election held August 17, 1917.

With respect to the payment of the interest on said bonds, said resolution provides as follows:

"They shall bear interest at the rate of five per cent from date of sale, payable semi-annually on the 5th of March and the 5th of September thereafter, except said first payment of interest. This payment shall include all interest due on said bonds until that date, which date is when said first bond is due, and the bonds shall be paid as follows:

One bond in the sum of $500.00 to be due and payable on the 5th day of March, 1920; * * *."

In other words, by the provisions of this resolution, the payment of the first installment of interest on the bonds therein provided for is deferred until March 5, 1920, when the first bond becomes due. This provision is illegal for the reason that it is in conflict with the provisions of section 7627 G. C., which provides that the interest on bonds of this kind shall be paid semi-annually.

This department, in approving school bonds purchased by the industrial commission of Ohio, has permitted the first payment of interest on such bonds to be deferred past a period of six months from the date of the bonds, to such time as the board of education may be able to obtain the first proceeds of tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes on said bonds. I do not think there is any legal warrant for permitting the first payment of interest on bonds of this kind to be deferred beyond this period.

After the adoption of the resolution providing for the issue of these bonds, it became the duty of the board of education of this school district, in making up its budget under the provisions of section 5649-3a G. C., to make a proper and sufficient levy for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to these bonds, the proceeds of which would be available to the extent of one-half thereof on or about March 1, 1919. Said board of education, in providing for this issue of bonds, was not, therefore, authorized to defer the first payment of interest on said bonds for any substantial period of time beyond said date, and for the reason above stated this issue of bonds is disapproved.

On consideration of the proceedings set out in said transcript, some doubt arises in my mind with respect to the legality of the election at which the proposition of said bond issue was approved by the electors of the school district. As to this question the transcript shows that on July 9, 1917, the board of education adopted a resolution in proper form, providing for the submission of said bond issue proposition to the electors of the school district, and fixed the date of the election on said proposition for August 2, 1917.

Thereafter, proper and legal publication of the notice of the election on said date was published, but it appears that by reason of some misunderstanding between the board of elections and the clerk of the school district, election supplies for the election to be held on said date were not furnished, with the result that no election on said date was held.

Thereupon, the board of education, at a meeting held on August 2, 1917, adopted a resolution in the following terms:

> "Resolved, That inasmuch as the board of elections failed to prepare election supplies for our bond issue election to have been held on August 2, that we establish the date of August 17, 1917, by the sanction of the board of elections, and that the clerk be instructed to publish notices of said (election) on August 17, 1917."

Following the adoption of this resolution, the board of education, or the clerk thereof, caused a notice of the new date of said election to be published in a newspaper of general circulation in such school district. This notice in and of itself was insufficient as a notice of the election, the same not containing any statement with respect to either the purpose or amount of the proposed bond issue. As a matter of fact, this notice took the form of a statement to the electors and citizens of the school district, advising them as to the reasons for the election not being held on August 2, 1917, as originally intended and provided for, and advising them that said election would be held on August 17, 1917. This notice was published once on August 8, 1917, said publication being one day short of the ten day notice prescribed by section 4839 G. C.

As before indicated, this statement of the proceedings relating to the election on the proposition of said bond issue creates some doubt with respect to the legality of said election, but on account of the fact that the present proposed issue of bonds has already been found to be invalid upon another ground, I do not feel called upon to express any final opinion on the question last above discussed.

My opinion, therefore, on a consideration of the whole transcript, is that said issue of bonds is illegal and that you should not purchase the same.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CLERK OF COURTS—COMMON PLEAS COURT WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO MAKE RULE ALLOWING DEPUTY TO RETAIN FEES FOR CERTAIN WORK.

A court of common pleas of a county in Ohio adopted the following rule:

"All pleadings, motions and briefs shall be prepared carefully in a legible manner, without unnecessary interlineations or erasures, and when filed a true copy thereof shall also be filed for the use of the opposite party, and upon failure to so file such copy, the clerk shall make the same and tax the cost against the party so failing to file such copy."

Assuming that the court had authority to adopt this rule, it was nevertheless without authority to provide, in approving the appointment of the deputy clerk of courts, that such deputy should receive the fees collected by virtue of this rule. Such fees when collected should be paid by the clerk of courts into the county treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of May 16, 1918, as follows:

"One of the examiners of this department in a certain county found that rule 4 of the rules of the common pleas court of the county read as follows:

'All pleadings, motions and briefs shall be prepared carefully in a legible manner, without unnecessary interlineations or erasures, and when filed a true copy thereof shall also be filed for the use of the opposite party, and upon failure to so file such copy, the clerk shall make the same and tax the cost against the party so failing to file such copy.'

The court of common pleas of the county in question in approving the appointment of the deputy clerk authorized the following journal entry:

Deputy Clerk.

Said appointment to become effective January 1, 1917, and the salary is by law payable monthly to said deputy, out of the county treasury, upon warrant of the county auditor; also the fees for copies under rules of court.

Query: When the court prescribed rule 4, did it not impose upon the clerk of courts a legal obligation under sections 2977 and 2978 of taxing the fees for such copies for the benefit of his fee fund, and could not recovery be made from the clerk of courts for the payment of such fees to his deputy as a personal fee?"

In this opinion I shall assume that the common pleas court had authority to adopt the rule set out in your communication, making it the duty of the clerk of courts, when the party filing a pleading fails to file a copy, to make a copy for the opposite party and tax the same in the costs against the party failing to file such copy.

Section 2977 G. C. reads:

"All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

Section 2980 G. C. reads:

"On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter, with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper, and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

Section 2981 G. C. provides:

"Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

It will be seen that under section 2980 the clerk of courts files with the county commissioners on the 20th of November of each year a statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended by him for deputies, clerks, etc., and under the same section it is the duty of the county commissioners to fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, clerks, etc. Under section 2981 G. C. the clerk of courts appoints his necessary deputies and fixes their compensation within the limits fixed by the commissioners under section 2980. Under section 2871 G. C. the court of common pleas approves the appointments made by the clerk of courts. Nowhere is the court of common pleas given any authority to fix any compensation of such deputies and it is my opinion that the court is without authority in the case submitted to provide that the deputy clerk should receive the fees for making the copies of pleadings under the rule of the court above referred to.

Section 2977, above quoted, makes it the duty of the clerk of courts to pay all fees and costs collected or received by law by him as compensation for services into the county treasury. Assuming, as I have done in this opinion, that the court of common pleas in the case submitted had authority to adopt rule No. 4 referred to, it follows that whatever fees or costs have been collected by the clerk because of this rule have been collected by him, or have been "collected or received by law," and these fees must therefore be paid into the county treasury.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—MAY NOT ERECT BUILDING TO STORE ROAD TOOLS AND MACHINERY.

Township trustees have no authority in law to purchase or lease real estate whereon to erect a building in which to store the road tools and machinery owned by the township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 17, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of May 30, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Have township trustees the right to purchase or lease real estate and erect thereon a building for the storage of road tools and machinery belonging to the township, at the expense of the township?"

The powers of township trustees are generally held to be strictly limited to those conferred by statute, and those powers which are absolutely essential to enable the trustees to perform the express duties devolving upon them by statute.

Section 3244 provides in part as follows:

> "Each civil township lawfully laid off and designated, is declared to be, and is hereby constituted, a body politic and corporate, for the purpose of enjoying and exercising the rights and privileges conferred upon it by law."

The court in Trustees of New London Township vs. Miner, et al. 26 O. S., 452, used the following language in their opinion:

> "It is settled that neither the township nor its trustees are invested with the general powers of a corporation; and hence, the trustees can exercise only those powers conferred by statute, or such others as are necessarily to be implied from those granted, in order to enable them to perform the duties imposed upon them."

Hence, from statute and from legal decisions, it is necessary to find some express authority by statute permitting the township trustees to do those things set out in your communication, or we must find that it is absolutely essential for them to have the powers mentioned in your communication in order to enable them to perform other duties which they have to perform.

If we cannot find this, then we must arrive at the conclusion that they cannot exercise the powers such as you set out in your communication.

I have examined the statutes pertaining to the powers and duties of trustees very carefully, and can find no provision which would authorize the township trustees to exercise the powers you suggest.

The next question is as to whether they are given the power and authority to do something, the performance of which would make it absolutely essential that they have the power to purchase or lease real estate and erect thereon a building for the storage of road tools and machinery.

In connection with this matter possibly the provisions found in section 3373 General Code, giving the township trustees authority to purchase such machinery and tools as may be deemed necessary for use in maintaining and repairing roads and culverts within the township, are as favorable as any that can be found in the statutes from which the implied power might be inferred authorizing the township trustees to do those things mentioned in your communication.

But I do not believe such a conclusion would be warranted in reference to the authority set out in said section; this is an authority to purchase tools and machinery. The authority to lease or purchase real estate and erect thereon a building for the purpose of storing said tools and machinery is not a power which is at all necessary to enable them to exercise the power to purchase.

To be sure, as a general proposition it must be said that the township trustees have a duty resting upon them to take such care of their tools and machinery in the manner in which persons would ordinarily care for such articles, but I do not believe that this general duty which rests upon the township trustees, and which is one that is not at all provided for by statute, would warrant the conculsion that they would have the implied power to purchase or lease real estate and erect thereon a building in order that they might perform the general duty which rests upon them of taking ordinary and reasonable care of the tools and machinery purchased. There is one provision of the statute which seems to throw some little light upon the question submitted by you. That is found in section 7200, and is as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall provide suitable places for housing and storing machinery, tools, equipment and conveyances owned by the county."

Just why the legislature should have seen fit to grant this power to the county commissioners and not grant it to the township trustees is not readily answerable; but the very fact that the legislature did grant this power to the county commissioners and failed to grant it to the township trustees seems to indicate an intention upon the part of the legislature that the township trustees should not exercise authority such as you suggest in your communication.

In reaching the conclusion to which I have arrived, I am not unmindful of a provision found in section 3244 General Code, which is as follows:

"It (the township) shall be capable of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded, and of receiving and holding real estate by devise or deed, or personal property for the benefit of the township for any useful purpose."

This standing alone would almost seem to indicate that the township trustees have authority to purchase, because it gives them authority to receive real estate by deed and hold the same; but when we consider the phrase "receiving and holding," together with what follows in said section, it is readily seen that no such power was intended to be conferred upon the township trustees. This section proceeds further as follows:

"The trustees of the township shall hold such property in trust for the township for the purpose specified in the devise, bequest or deed of gift."

This makes it clearly evident that the word "deed" as used in the former part of the section does not mean a deed of purchase, but means a deed of gift.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the township trustees have no authority in law to purchase or lease real estate upon which to erect a building in which to store road tools and machinery belonging to the township.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN WOOD COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 18, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 18, 1918, in which you enclose the following final resolution for my consideration:

Bowling Green-Perrysburg Road—I. C. H. No. 282, section "F," Wood county.

I have examined said resolution and find the same correct in form and legal under the provisions of section 1218 G. C., and have therefore endorsed my approval upon the same.

However, I desire to call your attention to this technical irregularity in that the county commissioners appropriated the sum of $2,000.00, "being $8,117.06 of the total estimated cost." This was meant to read as follows: "Being $8,117.06 less than the total estimated cost." While this is purely technical, yet it possibly ought to be corrected.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF LIBERTY UNION VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, FAIRFIELD COUNTY—$45,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 18, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Liberty Union village school district, Fairfield county, Ohio, in the sum of $45,000.00, for the purpose of completing school building in said school district.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Liberty Union village school district, Fairfield county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering this issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid according to the terms thereof.

The bond form for the bonds to be printed covering this issue is not wholly satisfactory, and I am therefore holding the transcript until a proper bond form is submitted to me for approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—ORDINANCE PROVIDING FOR SAME MUST MAKE ANNUAL LEVY OF TAXES FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND PURPOSES.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MANSFIELD—$35,000.00.

An ordinance of a city providing for an issue of city bonds which does not make provision for an annual levy of taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to such bonds, as required by section 11 of article 12 of the constitution, is defective, and such issue of bonds is unauthorized and should be disapproved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 18, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re bonds of the city of Mansfield, Ohio, in the sum of $35,000.00 for the purpose of more completely equipping the fire department of said city.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the city of Mansfield, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue. Said issue is for the purpose of adding to the equipment of the fire department of the city two motor pumping engines, one squad wagon, an aerial truck and necessary fire hydrants and equipment for extending the fire alarm system.

Assuming that the purposes of said issue are wholly within the authority of subsections 27 and 2 of section 3939 of the General Code (Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S., 66), I find that the proceedings relating to said issue are fatally defective for the reason that in the ordinance providing for the issue of said bonds no provision is made for an annual levy of taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes, as required by section 11 of article 12 of the state constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The above quoted provisions of the state constitution are obviously mandatory, and I feel I have no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove said issue of bonds.

I am therefore of the opinion that said issue of bonds should be rejected.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE LAW—APPLIES ONLY TO CIVIL EMPLOYES IN ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE.

The military establishment of Ohio is not subject to the civil service law. This law applies to the adjutant-general's department just as to the other departments of the state government and civil employes in that office are subject to the civil service law just as in the other state departments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 20, 1918.

State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of May 18, 1918, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "Your advice and opinion is respectfully requested as to the interpretation of the phrase 'military appointees in the office of the adjutant-general,' appearing in paragraph 6 of section 486-8 of the civil service law.
> It is clear to the commission that all commissioned, non-commissioned officers and enlisted men in military service of the state are exempted from the classified service, but it is not clear just what is meant by military appointees."

Section 8 of the civil service law (Sec. 486-8) cited by you is the section defining the unclassified service, taking in eleven different sets or descriptions of employes, of which the sixth is as follows:

> "6. All commissioned, non-commissioned officers and enlisted men in the military service of the state, including military appointees in the offices of the adjutant-general."

This exception was unnecessary to make, as it is the civil service of the state that is included and regulated under the law and not the military service, so that this exception logically is out of place. It is true the definition of civil service found in section 1-a of the act is general. It is as follows:

> "1. The term 'civil service' includes all offices and positions of trust or employment in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

The term "offices," however, by the ordinary rules of construction in order that the definition might not do violence to the ordinary meaning of the words, would be restricted to offices in the civil service.

This construction is also rendered necessary by a comparison with the constitutional provision. The act was passed to comply with the requirement of article XV, section 10, which requires only appointments and promotions in the civil service to be according to merit and fitness. The constitutional provision bears no relation to the military service, neither does the act passed to enforce it, properly construed, have any effect upon the military service. Section 2 begins:

> "On and after the taking effect of this act, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of the state, * * * shall be made only according to merit and fitness, etc."

In all civilized governments there is a line of demarcation between the military and the civil service and the distinction between the two is constantly maintained so that it is proper to construe the civil service law just as though this clause in question were not in it at all, and it is logically necessary to construe it without any reference to this provision. This, of course, is in conflict with the ordinary rules of construction, nevertheless it is absolutely necessary in the nature of the case.

What, then, is the situation of your commission with reference to appointments in the adjutant-general's office? It is simply that the law and your duties under it are applicable to the civil service and to appointees therein in the adjutant-general's department just the same as in other departments. Take the war department of the general government for comparison—nobody claims that the army or any one in military service is subject to the national civil service law. On the other hand, there is no thought that merely civil appointees in the war department are exempt from the operation of that law. A stenographer or other mere employe in the war department is not distinguished in any manner from one in the state, postoffice or any of the other departments of the government. The same principle applies here. "Military appointees in the office of the adjutant-general" are such as after their appointment have a military character and are in the military service of the state. As the law stands at present they would all have some connection with the national guard and some rank in it.

It was the legislative intention that the language of the act should apply to future conditions if they should arise from changes in the laws with reference to employes. Sections 82, 83 and 84 G. C. provide for the appointment of a quartermaster general, an assistant adjutant-general and an assistant quartermaster general, and define their duties. These are the only military appointees at present created by statute, although there may be others provided for in the appropriation act, as is the case in some of the departments. If there be such now or hereafter, the definition above will include them.

This seems to answer your inquiry, although it is not much more than saying that military appointees are not subject to the civil service law and that appointments in the civil service are.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—FULL LENGTH OF COUNTY LINE ROAD SHOULD BE CREDITED TO EACH COUNTY IN COMPUTING SALARY.

In computing the salary of the county surveyor, in so far as it is based upon road mileage, the full length of a road on a line between two counties should be credited to each county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 21, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 7, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> Section 7181 G. C., as amended, 107 O. L. 110, fixing the salary of the county surveyor, provides:
> '* * * One dollar per mile for each full mile of the first one thousand miles of the public roads of the county; * * *.'
> Question: Are county line roads to be considered in fixing this compensation, or are such roads only to be considered as one-half of their mileage in each county where they exist?"

The particular part of section 7181 G. C. (107 O. L. 110) upon which the answer to your question depends reads as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office and shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: One dollar per mile for each full mile of the first one thousand miles of the public roads of the county; * * *."

If the road mileage in any county exceeds one thousand miles, your question is not a vital one, but if the mileage of either or both of the counties abutting on the county line road is less than one thousand miles, your question is vital. Our statutes make no provision for such a case as you submit; and no logical reasons can be given why one or the other of the above methods should be adopted. However, it is my view that a county line road should be considered in the computation of the road mileage of those counties abutting upon said road. The legislature, in enacting the provision that the county surveyor should be allowed one dollar per mile of the first one thousand miles of the public roads of the county, evidently had in mind that the greater the road mileage of a county, the more labor would the county surveyor be called upon to perform in any one year.

I will now consider a few of the statutes pertaining to the duties of the county surveyor.

Section 6933 G. C. (107 O. L. 102) provides that in the improvement of a road located along the line between two or more counties the joint board of county commissioners shall appoint a county surveyor of one of the counties interested to make such surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications as may be necessary for said improvement. Under this section it is discretionary with the board as to which of the surveyors will be selected to perform the work on the improvement. If the joint board cannot agree upon a surveyor, it becomes the duty of the state highway commissioner to designate a county surveyor of one of the interested counties to act in the premises.

Section 3298-15n G. C. (107 O. L. 82) makes the same provision for the selection of a surveyor in those cases in which two or more boards of township trustees act jointly in the improvement of a road on the line between the townships.

The same provision of law would apply to the improvement lying between two counties in those cases in which the state highway commissioner would assume jurisdiction over it.

I cite these provisions with a view to showing that it is altogether problematic which of the county surveyors will be selected by a joint board of county commissioners, or township trustees, or the state highway commissioner himself, to have charge of the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of a road on a line between two or more counties. However, it is certain that one of the county surveyors of the counties interested will have the work to do.

While this argument has not much weight, still I am of the opinion that on account of the facts above stated each county should be given credit for the full length of the road on the line between two or more counties. I realize it might be held that in the long run each county surveyor possibly would be called upon to perform practically half of the work done on a county line road, and therefore each county ought to be credited with but half of said road, but as stated before this is problematic, and inasmuch as the statute makes no provision for such a condition as you suggest, it is my opinion that the county surveyors should be given the benefit of the doubt, and that therefore each county should be credited with the full length of the road on the line between the two counties.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

OIL—INSPECTION FEE BASED UPON NUMBER OF BARRELS IN CAR REGARDLESS OF KIND—WHEN OIL AND GASOLINE SHIPPED IN COMPARTMENT CAR, FEE IS BASED ON NUMBER OF BARRELS OF EACH.

When the different kinds of oil which have been shipped in a compartment car, that is, a tank car that is divided to hold two or more kinds of oil, are inspected, the inspection fee is based not separately upon the number of barrels of each kind of oil found in the shipment, but such fee is to be based upon the total amount of barrels of oil in the shipment, regardless of kind.

When, however, a shipment in such compartment car contains gasoline and oil, the fee to be charged for such shipment is to be based not upon the entire number of barrels in the shipment, but to be computed upon the number of barrels of oil taken as one kind and the number of barrels of gasoline taken as another.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 21, 1918.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 18, 1918, as follows:

"I beg to call your attention to that part in particular of section 850 of the General Code which reads:

'When a lot inspected exceeds fifty barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, three cents,' and ask your opinion as to what fees are to be charged for inspections on what is known as a compartment car, that is, a tank car that is divided to hold two or more kinds of oil.

I cite for instance the case of a dealer receiving such car containing 30 barrels of gasoline and 40 barrels of refined oil, or 70 barrels in the aggregate

I would like to have your opinion as soon as possible as I now have such case pending."

Section 850 G. C. reads:

"Each owner of oil inspected under this chapter shall pay the state for inspection the following fees:

For a single barrel, package or cask, twenty-five cents.

When the lot inspected does not exceed ten barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, fifteen cents.

When the lot inspected does not exceed fifty barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, ten cents.

When the lot inspected exceeds fifty barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, for each barrel, three cents.

All fees under this chapter shall be payable on demand of the treasurer of state and in no case shall the payment thereof be deferred beyond the tenth of the next month after the inspection is made, and such fees shall be a lien on the oil so inspected."

Section 865 G. C., relative to the inspection of gasoline, reads in part:

"For such inspections, the state inspector shall receive the same fees as for the inspection of oils, * * *."

From a reading of these sections it is my opinion that when different kinds of oil are shipped in a compartment car, that is, a tank car divided to hold two or more kinds of oil, the amount of oil shipped in the different compartments should be added together as a basis for determining the fee. For instance, if 30 barrels of fifty gallons each of one kind of oil and 40 barrels of fifty gallons each of another kind of oil, making 70 barrels altogether, are shipped, the fee should be a fee of three cents for each barrel, under the provision of section 850 G .C., to the effect that when a lot inspected exceeds fifty barrels of fifty gallons each in the aggregate, the fee shall be three cents for each barrel.

I reach this conclusion because of the fact that section 850 is dealing with shipments of oil, meaning all kinds of oil, not one kind or the other, therefore, the fact that the shipment of oil contains different kinds should make no difference.

However, in the case you cite the shipment contains forty barrels of refined oil and thirty barrels of gasoline. The authority for the inspection fees to be charged for the inspection of gasoline is found in section 865, part of which is above quoted. This section deals with gasoline, not with oil, and although it provides the same fees for inspection of gasoline as is paid for the inspection of oil, nevertheless its provisions deal solely with gasoline. The "lot" to be inspected, referred to in section 850, is a "lot" of oil and the "lot" which the provisions of 865 G. C. adopts by reference is the "lot" of gasoline. Therefore, when determining the fees, the number of barrels of gasoline should be counted separate and apart from the number of barrels of oil and the fee to be charged for inspection of gasoline based upon the number of barrels of gasoline, and the fee to be charged for the inspection of oil based upon the number of barrels of oil.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN SAMUEL PLATO AND ACTING DIRECTOR OF STATE ARMORIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 22, 1918.

HON. J. E. GIMPERLING, Acting Director of State Armories, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me contract entered into on the 21st day of June, 1918, between Samuel Plato, an individual, of Marion, Indiana, and yourself for the construction and completion of a state armory building to be built in Elberon avenue, Zanesville, Ohio, according to the approved plans and specifications, including the substitute of terra cotta for stone trim and the substitution of tile for cement floors as per alternate specifications and bid, said contract calling for the sum of $50,148.10. At the same time you have submitted a bond securing said contract in the penal sum of $50,000.00.

I have examined said contract and find the same to be in compliance with law, and having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there is money available for the payment of the contract price, I have this day approved said contract and filed the same in the office of the auditor of state.

I am returning herewith duplicate copies of said contract.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—LAYING OUT AND ESTABLISHING NEW ROADS—WHEN THEY MAY BE CONSTRUCTED AND IMPROVED —HOW COUNTY AND TOWNSHIP ROAD DETERMINED—NO JOINT ROADS.

The sole authority to lay out and establish a new road is vested in the county commissioners.

A road cannot be constructed and improved unless it has been previously laid out and established, except by the county commissioners, under section 6906 et seq. General Code. Township trustees, therefore, have no authority to construct a new road where none has been previously laid out and established.

The character of a road as a county or township road under existing laws depends upon the authority which has constructed or improved it. All unimproved roads are township roads.

In determining the character of a road by this test, its improvement under any of the plans outlined in section 6906 et seq. of the General Code makes it a county road though the township trustees may have participated in the proceeding. There are no "joint" roads.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1918.

HON. T. A. JENKINS, Prosecuting Attorney, Ironton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of June 7, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "Query: Whose duty is it to look after the laying out and construction of township roads?
> Section 6860 provides as you will note that the county commissioners have power to establish and widen roads, etc. This same section provides that this power extends to all roads within the county except with certain exceptions. Other sections dealing with this proposition follow and provide for different steps in road construction, but it might be contended that all these sections have to do with county roads. Especially is this true when we come to consider that the General Code of Ohio, in section 3298-1 and other sections immediately following provide how township roads are to be constructed. Were it not for section 3298-1 and other sections immediately following, one would conclude that there would be no question but that the county commissioners have the duty of building all new roads. If the sections 6860 et seq. are held to deal only with county roads then sections 3298-1 et seq. would provide for the method and manner of constructing township roads and there would be no conflict, but if the first mentioned group of sections are held to permit county commissioners to build township roads, then there are two methods by which township roads may be constructed. Now the question is as set out above: Is it the duty of county commissioners to lay out and construct township roads, or does the filing of petitions with the county commissioners mean that any roads built in compliance with said petition are then county roads? And again: Can a county and a township jointly construct a new road? I think not. If they can would it be a county road or a township road?

I enclose herewith copy of an opinion to Hon. Roger D. Hay, prosecuting attorney of Defiance county, under date of March 18, 1918, No. 1084, to which I refer you for the principles upon which a specific answer to your questions are to be found.

I held therein that the county commissioners had the sole authority to locate or establish a road; that the location and the establishment of a road are steps separate and distinct from the construction or improvement of the road—the one amounting merely to a dedication of a certain way to public travel, the other being such alteration of the surface of the earth within the bounds of the public way as may make it more suitable for travel.

The county commissioners have the power under section 6906 to combine the steps of laying out and establishing a new road with that of building it, and when such combination is made in the manner provided by that and the succeeding section the road when completed will, of course, be a county road. But the effect of action under section 6860 of the General Code is not to constitute the road as located and established, a county road, but merely a road; in fact, the character which it immediately assumes as an unimproved public way is that of a township road—for roads are now classified not by reference to the manner of the establishment or location, but by reference to the authority which has constructed them.

See section 7464 of the General Code referred to in the enclosed opinion.

All unimproved roads are, generally speaking, therefore, township roads, and the fact that the county commissioners, as the only competent authority to do so, have conducted the proceedings for the location and establishment of a new road, does not stamp it as a county road.

Section 3298-1 and succeeding sections of the General Code, to which you refer, were not specifically considered in the enclosed opinion. I call your attention, however, to the language of the first of these sections. It provides as amended in 107 O. L. 73, that:

> "The board of trustees of any township shall have power * * * * to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve any public road or roads or part thereof under their jurisdiction * * * * *."

The absence from this context of the words "location," "establishment" and other words of similar import, especially when the section is compared with section 6906, which is the corresponding section referring to the commissioners of the county, is significant and is in accord with the conclusions which I have already stated.

Under the early law roads might be "established," "located" or "laid out" either by the commissioners or by the township trustees, and they were classified, broadly speaking, as county or township roads accordingly as whether they had been established by the one authority or the other. The Cass law of 1915 did away with this scheme of things and the White-Mulcahy law of 1917 makes no change in the general framework of the existing law in this respect.

Your question, therefore, is to be answered as follows:

The county commissioners alone have the authority to lay out a new road. Either the commissioners or the township trustees have power to construct a road where the establishment has taken place but no construction work has been done—and this without regard to the manner of its location and establishment, which must be by proceedings had before the county commissioners under section 6860. The county commissioners, however, may combine in one proceeding the laying out of a new road and the construction of a more or less improved surface thereon by virtue of section 6906 et seq. of the General Code. The township trustees may not do this; but their construction enterprises must be conducted upon roads that have already been laid out.

Your last question relative to the joint construction of the new road may be answered by saying that there is no statutory authority for the joint construction of a new road. The proceedings authorized by section 6906 are all county proceedings, although by virtue of section 6916 of the General Code a part of the cost may be borne by the township. This, however, occurs without any proceedings on the part of the township trustees except when they are called upon to agree upon the proportion to be assumed by the township under the third optional plan therein provided. Such agreement, however, does not make the improvement a joint one in any sense, and when proceedings have been had under favor of this section, the road when constructed would be a county road.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JAIL PRISONERS—GUARDS FOR SUCH PRISONERS BEING WORKED ON ROADS APPOINTED BY SHERIFF—MAINTENANCE—COMPENSATION TO PRISONERS.

(1) When jail prisoners are being worked on the roads under agreement between the sheriff and the county commissioners, the guards in control of such prisoners should be appointed by the sheriff and not by the county commissioners.

(2) When such prisoners are working on the roads they are not to be considered as being in jail within the meaning of section 2850 G. C., which section provides for the allowance of the sheriff for feeding prisoners in jail. Under section 7500 G. C. the commissioners must reimburse the sheriff for his actual cost of maintaining these prisoners, including the cost of feeding them. Whether or not the cost exceeds 75 cents per day is immaterial.

(3) When the sheriff and the commissioners agree upon the amount to be paid these prisoners for their labor, this amount must be credited to the prisoner and paid to him upon his discharge from jail, or sometime prior to his discharge, as the sheriff may see fit. It is not necessary, however, that the prisoners be paid anything.

(4) The amount paid to these prisoners for their labor, as well as the expense of transportation, maintenance and discipline, should be paid from the road fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1918.

HON. THOMAS F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 6, 1918, as follows:

> "The commissioners of Clark county propose to make use of the prison labor on the roads of this county. When such prisoners have been sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail, are the guards to be furnished by the sheriff or by the county commissioners?
> In this county the sheriff is paid 65 cents per day for keeping and feeding the prisoners. When these prisoners are at work on the roads, it will be necessary for the sheriff to prepare and send with the prisoner his dinner meal, such food to be of better quality and of greater quantity than when the man is constantly confined in the jail. Can the commissioners legally contract with the sheriff for more than 75 cents per day for keeping and feeding such prisoners while so employed? (Section 2850 G. C.)

Can the commissioners exceed the maximum provided in section 2845 G. C., when arranging with the sheriff for payment for the labor of these prisoners?

Should the sheriff be paid for the labor of these prisoners out of the road fund and the credits so given to said prisoners be paid in by the sheriff to the county fund?

On May 17, 1915, a bill was passed entitled, "An act to provide a system of highway laws for the state and to repeal all sections of the General Code and acts inconsistent therewith." Chapter 11 of this act was entitled, "Use of prison labor on roads." Section 261 of the act, which became section 7496 of the General Code, provided that the state highway commissioner might make a requisition upon the warden of the penitentiary or superintendent of the state penal institutions for prisoners to work upon the state highways. Section 262 of the act, now section 7497 of the General Code, provided for an agreement between the state highway commissioner and the prison officials for the amount to be paid for the use of the prisoners in addition to the entire cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline. Section 263 of the act, now section 7498 of the General Code, provided that the county commissioners might make a requisition upon the state prison authorities for prisoners desired for use upon the county highways. Section 267 of the act, now section 7502 G. C., reads:

"All persons convicted of crime and sentenced to be confined in the state reformatory, penitentiary, jail, workhouse or other penal institutions, shall be subject to labor upon the highways and streets as hereinbefore provided."

Section 265 of the act, now section 7500 G. C., provides:

"The county commissioners may make requisitions upon the authorities in charge of any workhouse located within such county for any number of prisoners confined therein, or upon any jailers for any number of prisoners sentenced thereto, desired for use upon the highways of said county, or in the manufacture of road materials and the authorities in charge of said workhouse, and the jailer in charge of said jail, may furnish such prisoners, if available, out of the number in their charge. An agreement shall first be entered into between the county commissioners, and the authorities in charge of said workhouse or jail, prescribing the amount which shall be paid for the labor of such prisoners in addition to the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of said prisoners. The restrictions hereinbefore provided for determining the amount to be paid for the labor of such prisoners when the same are procured from the state penal institutions, shall apply to all contracts for the use of prisoners of any workhouse or jail. Persons sentenced to imprisonment for non-payment of fines shall be liable to work upon the roads as other prisoners."

Section 277 of the act, now section 7512 G. C., provides:

"The guards, if any, in charge of said prisoners shall, so far as possible, be selected from men who are competent to supervise the work under construction and, so far as practicable, said guards shall supervise such work under the directions of persons having the supervision of the construction or repair of said roads or streets, in addition to their duties as guards."

Section 7496 of the General Code, above referred to, provides:

"Said requisition shall be made through the officials having general charge of said institutions (state penal institutions) and such officials and said highway commissioners shall by agreement provide for the cost of transportation and maintenance of said prisoners, and the discipline and government thereof. The discipline of such prisoners shall be under the control of guards furnished by the prison authorities. The rules and regulations under which such prisoners shall work shall be prescribed by the prison authorities, but the work to be done and the manner of doing such work shall be under the control of the state highway commissioner or those acting under his authority in charge of such work."

It will be seen from the above quoted part of section 7496, that in the enactment of this section the legislature left no doubt as to what authority should appoint the necessary guards.

Section 7498 G. C., providing for the agreement between the county commissioners and the state prison authorities, provides:

"The county commissioners shall have full power and authority to enter into an agreement with the authorities controlling such prison, and all the provisions of law relating to the transportation, maintenance and discipline of prisoners when working upon the state highways, under requisition of the highway commissioners, shall apply to prisoners working upon county highways."

This section, by adopting the provisions of section 7496, allowed no doubt to remain as to what authority should appoint the guards in cases where state prisoners were working on county roads. However, in the case you submit, viz., where county jail prisoners are being worked on county roads by agreement between the sheriff and the county commissioners, the legislature failed to make specific provision as to how the guards should be appointed.

Section 7500 G. C., which is the section providing for the use of jail prisoners upon county roads by agreement between the county commissioners and the sheriff, and quoted above, does provide, however:

"An agreement shall first be entered into between the county commissioners and the authorities in charge of said workhouse or jail, prescribing the amount which shall be paid for the labor of such prisoners in addition to the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of said prisoners."

It is clear from this provision that the legislature contemplated that the county commissioners were to reimburse the sheriff not only for the cost of transportation and maintenance, but also for the cost of discipline. It would follow from this that the sheriff would be the proper party to furnish the guards, since the only way in which he could incur the cost and expense of discipline would be to employ these guards himself in the first instance. This conclusion is strengthened by the fact that these prisoners are sentenced or committed to the county jail and as jail prisoners are in the custody and control of the sheriff, and that officer is responsible for them until the day of their discharge. The fact that the prisoners are worked upon the roads does not in any way affect his responsibility, since in such cases the jail is simply extended to include the territory where the prisoners are working, hence the responsibility of the sheriff remains, and I am of the opinion, in view of this fact and because of the provisions of the section as referred to, that in the case you submit the guards should be furnished by the sheriff and not by the county commissioners.

In your second question you ask whether the sheriff may be allowed more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding these prisoners while they are working on the roads. Section 2850 G. C. provides:

> "The sheriff shall be allowed by the county commissioners not less than forty-five nor more than seventy-five cents per day for keeping and feeding prisoners in jail, but in any county in which there is no infirmary, the county commissioners, if they think it just and necessary, may allow any sum not to exceed seventy-five cents each day for keeping and feeding any idiot or lunatic. The sheriff shall furnish at the expense of the county, to all prisoners confined in jail, except those confined for debt only, fuel, soap, disinfectants, bed, clothing, washing and nursing when required, and other necessaries as the court in its rules shall designate."

This is a general provision relating to prisoners confined in the county jails. Section 7500 G. C., above quoted, provides that when jail prisoners are being worked on county roads, an agreement shall first be entered into between the county commissioners and authorities in charge of such workhouse or jail, prescribing the amount which shall be paid for the labor of such prisoners, in addition to the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of such prisoners. It will be seen from this provision that the commissioners and the sheriff may, by contract, agree upon the amount which shall be paid for the labor of the prisoners "in addition to the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline." The amount to be paid for the labor is to be determined by the commissioners and the sheriff, but the balance to be paid by the commissioners, in connection with the working of these prisoners upon the roads, is not some amount which may be agreed upon, but is to be "the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline." The county commissioners are to pay the actual cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of these prisoners upon the roads, and this being a special act dealing only with a certain class of prisoners who are being engaged in a certain class of work, it is my view that it is to be looked upon as an exception to section 2850 G. C. The prisoners referred to in that section are the prisoners confined in the jail, and while the prisoners working upon the roads are prisoners confined within the jail in one sense, I do not believe they are such prisoners as would fall under the provisions of section 2850 G. C. Section 7500 G. C. being a special and later act, ought to govern, and it is my opinion, in answer to your second question, that the commissioners must reimburse the sheriff for the actual cost of maintaining these prisoners, which, of course, includes the cost of feeding them. If this cost should exceed seventy-five cents per day, it is my opinion that the commissioners may, nevertheless, and should, pay the same.

Answering your third question, I beg to quote section 13717 G. C. to which you refer:

> "When a fine is the whole or a part of a sentence, the court or magistrate may order that the person sentenced remain imprisoned in jail until such fine and costs are paid, or secured to be paid, or he is otherwise legally discharged, provided that the person so imprisoned shall receive credit upon such fine and costs at the rate of sixty cents per day for each day's imprisonment."

Section 7500, as amended in 106 O. L., p. 656, provides that the agreement between the sheriff and the commissioners shall prescribe the amount which shall be paid for the labor of such prisoners, in addition to the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of such prisoners. This section further provides:

"The restrictions hereinbefore provided for determining the amount to be paid for the labor of such prisoners when the same are procured from the state penal institutions, shall apply to all contracts for the use of prisoners of any workhouse or jail."

The question here arises whether or not the amount which the statute refers to as being paid to the prisoner for his labor on the roads means an actual payment to the prisoner of some agreed sum per day for his labor or whether it means an amount to be credited to such prisoner upon his fine or costs, or sentence of imprisonment. It is suggested that it means the latter and that the commissioners and the sheriff, in agreeing upon the amount, are limited by the provisions of section 13717, above quoted. It will be noted, however, that section 7500, above quoted, in part, provides that the amount to be paid for the labor of the prisoners shall be subject to the same restrictions as is the amount paid to prisoners in the state prisons for their labor under agreements between state prison authorities and the highway commissioner. This provision carries us by reference to section 7497 G. C. wherein the restriction upon the amount to be paid to the state prison authorities is as follows:

"The amount to be paid to said prison authorities, if anything, for the use of said prisoners, in addition to the entire cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of said prisoners, shall be agreed upon between the officials having charge of said institutions and the said highway commissioner, but the amount so paid shall not exceed the cost of such transportation, maintenance and discipline of said prisoners plus the amount to be credited to such prisoner on account of his labor upon such highways."

That the clause in section 7497, "the amount to be credited to such prisoner on account of his labor upon such highways" refers to an actual payment of money to the prisoners for their labor and not simply to a credit upon their fine or imprisonment, is clear from the fact that no system of credits upon fines or imprisonment is in vogue at any of the state penal institutions, no provisions being made for any such system in such institutions by statute. This being so, it would seem that the authority in section 7500, for the sheriff and county commissioners to enter into an agreement, prescribing the amount which shall be paid for the labor of prisoners upon the roads, which is made subject to the same restrictions as the amount to be paid state prisoners, is an authority not to simply credit the prisoners with a certain amount upon their fines, but to determine and agree upon an amount which shall be actually paid to the prisoner for his labor.

Section 13717, referred to in your communication above quoted, provides that jail prisoners shall receive a credit of sixty cents per day for each day's imprisonment and determine in that manner the length of their imprisonment, but this section, to my mind, has no bearing upon the amount to be paid to jail prisoners for their work upon the roads, under agreement between the county commissioners and the sheriff. It has been suggested that the authority given in these statutes to the state and county prison officials to agree with the highway commissioner and the county commissioners, respectively, upon a sum to he paid the prisoners for their labor upon county roads, is not an authority to fix any amount they may agree upon in the contract, but simply an authority to agree to pay whatever other statutes may allow to prisoners for their labor. This position is, to my mind, without foundation.

Section 7500 places the determination of the amount to be agreed upon between the county commissioners and the sheriff upon the same basis as the determination of the amount to be agreed upon by the state highway commissioner and the state prison authorities, under section 7497. There is no statute, to my knowledge, that allows prisoners in the state prisons any certain sum for their labor, nor is there any statute which lays down any general rule for the fixing of an amount to be paid them for such labor. There are several statutes, such as 1866, 2183-1, 2227-5 and 2227-6, which make provision for the payment of certain amounts to prisoners for their labor, but all of these statutes refer to special classes of prisoners engaged in special work.

It is therefore my opinion that section 7497 gives to the state prison authorities and the state highway commissioner the authority to determine in their agreement the amount which is to be paid to prisoners for their labor upon roads, and this amount so agreed upon must be credited to the prisoner and actually paid to him upon his discharge from prison, or at such other time as the prison authorities may see fit.

This view of section 7497 forces a similar conclusion with respect to section 7500 and it is therefore my opinion that when the county commissioners and the sheriff enter into such an agreement, as you refer to, for the working of jail prisoners upon the county roads, the sheriff and the commissioners may agree upon an amount to be paid these prisoners for their labor and that this amount must be credited to the prisoner and paid to him upon his discharge from jail, or some time prior to such discharge as the sheriff may see fit.

It is also suggested that sections 2238 and 2248 of the General Code might have application to the situation you present, but an examination of the history of these sections discloses that they are limited in their application to the labor of prisoners in the operation of plants in the manufacture of brick or other road building material or supplies, and has no connection whatever with prison labor upon the roads.

Answering your fourth question, beg to call your attention to section 7506 G. C. which is a part of the act above referred to, and which reads as follows:

> "The county, city and village authorities having charge of such roads and streets may lawfully expend any moneys available for the repair and maintenance of such roads or streets to meet the cost of transporting, maintaining and disciplining such prisoners while so employed upon such roads or streets."

It will be seen from this section, that while the act provided that the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of the prisoners should be paid out of the road fund, it did not make any specific provision as to the credits for the labor of the prisoners. Under the act it is not only necessary for the county commissioners to pay the cost of transportation, maintenance and discipline of these prisoners when working them upon the county roads, but also to pay an amount to be agreed upon between themselves and the sheriff, and it is my opinion that this latter amount, as well as the expense of transportation, maintenance and discipline of prisoners, should be paid from the road fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS MAY NOT BE ISSUED FOR IMPROVEMENTS TO SCHOOL PROPERTY ORDERED BY PLUMBING INSPECTOR UNDER 7630-1—WHAT RESOLUTION BY BOARD OF EDUCATION MUST CONTAIN —DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF BELLEFONTAINE—$80,000.00.

Bonds may not be lawfully authorized under section 7630-1 of the General Code for the purpose of making improvements on school property rendered necessary by the orders of the state plumbing inspector.

The resolution of the board of education providing for the issuance of bonds must provide for the annual levy and collection of taxes to pay the interest on said bonds, and to cover an aliquot part of the particular indebtedness thus created. The levies on account of principal may not be made substantially different for the several years during which the bonds are to run; and if such bonds are to be issued in series, and sinking fund levies in the strict sense are not provided for, the levies on account of principal being limited to that which is payable in any year, the series must be so arranged as that substantially equal amounts of principal shall mature in each year of the life of the bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re: Bonds of the school district of the city of Bellefontaine; two issues, (a) in the sum of $80,000 for the purpose of improving certain various school buildings; and (b) in the sum of $25,000 for the purpose of purchasing a site and erecting thereon a school house and furnishing the same.

We return herewith the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of the school district of the city of Bellefontaine, Ohio, relative to the issuance of both the series of bonds above referred to. The following are the reasons for which I am unable to advise that said series of bonds have been issued in accordance with the provisions of the law nor that the same constitute a good and valid legal obligation against the school district:

THE $80,000 ISSUE.

These bonds are issued under the assumed authority of section 7630-1 of the General Code, for the purpose of making improvements ordered by the state inspector of plumbing and by the division of workshops, factories and public buildings of the department of inspection of the industrial commission of Ohio. The preamble to the resolution providing for the submission of the question of issuing said bonds to a vote of the electors and that of the resolution providing for the issuance of said bonds both recite that $60,000 of the proceeds is to be expended for the purpose of complying with the order of the state plumbing inspector, and the remaining $20,000 is to be expended for the purpose of complying with the orders of the department of inspection of workshops, factories, etc.

There is, however, no separation of the bonds themselves as between these two classes or objects—that is, bonds of particular serial numbers are not issued for the one purpose and those of other serial numbers for the other purpose.

Section 7630-1 of the General Code cannot be resorted to for the purpose of issuing bonds in order to comply with the orders of the state plumbing inspector. The section provides that:

> "If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories" and certain other conditions exist, the board of education may issue the kind of bonds therein provided for. It is probably true enough that the state plumbing inspector's order has an effect similar to that of the chief inspector of workshops and factories or its successor, the Industrial Commission of Ohio; so that in a sense it might be said that the action of the board of education of the city of Bellefontaine is within the spirit of the section. However, the section is not in terms broad enough to cover the same, and there is no such ambiguity of expression as to justify a resort to the principles of statutory interpretation. To the extent of $60,000, therefore, the $80,000 issue now under consideration is clearly without authority of law.

It may be that the action that has been taken might, so far as this point is concerned, and but for the existence of other defects in the procedure which will hereinafter be stated, form the predicate of the valid issuance of bonds in the amount of $20,000. Without citing cases, suffice it to state that there is some authority to the effect that an excessive exercise of power to issue bonds makes the issue illegal as to the excess only. But this question is not raised here because the commission has not accepted an offer of $20,000 of bonds of this issue, nor has the board of education limited the issue to $20,000. The commission has agreed to purchase $80,000 of bonds of this issue or none, and my opinion is as to the validity of the issue as a whole.

Morever, these bonds, or even as to the $20,000 which so far as the point just discussed is concerned, might be unaffected by the element of invalidity which I have mentioned (though I do not so hold) are subject to the same defects as those which I shall have occasion to describe in discussing the second issue of $25,000.

THE $25,000 ISSUE.

Notwithstanding certain irregularities in the proceeding which do not go to the validity of the bonds, I find but one element of invalidity in them, which, however, is of so serious a character that I find myself unable to approve the purchase.

I quote from the resolution providing for the issuance of these bonds enough to show the nature of the question to be considered:

> "Be it Resolved, by the board of education of the city school district of Bellefontaine, Ohio, That the bonds of said city school district be issued * * * in the amount of twenty-five thousand dollars all bearing date the 1st day of May, A. D. 1918, and bearing interest from date at the rate of five per cent per annum * * * payable semi-annually * * * in denominations of five hundred dollars, each, consecutively numbered from number 141 to 184 inclusive and fifteen hundred dollars (being three bonds of $500 each) maturing May 1st, 1941, and fifteen hundred dollars (being three $500.00 bonds) maturing November 1, 1941, and being serial numbers 185 to 190, both inclusive; the residue of said bonds maturing as follows: $500.00 each year beginning May 1, 1919 to 1940 both inclusive; and $500.00 each year November 1, 1919 to 1940, both inclusive."

* * * * * * * *

"Be it further, Resolved, That there be annually certified to the auditor of Logan county, a tax in addition to all other taxes sufficient to pay such bonded indebtedness as it falls due together with the amount of interest thereon maturing."

Article XII, section 11 of the constitution of Ohio, provides:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, formerly attorney-general, in an opinion found at page 1224 of volume II of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for the year 1914, held that the fundamental and underlying idea of this section of the constitution is, that an aliquot part of the principal sum of each indebtedness incurred by the state or any political subdivision thereof should be retired or provision made for its retirement by amortization of an aliquot part thereof during each year of its life.

In arriving at this conclusion he considered the history of the proposal in the constitutional convention of 1912 and certain cases from other states having similar constitutional provisions.

I agree with his conclusion, and point out that this requirement has the effect of necessitating the separation or segregation of the separate bond issues of the given subdivision for sinking fund purposes, and particularly the levying of taxes therefor. That is to say, under this provision it is no longer lawful for the sinking fund or taxing authority of any subdivision of the state to consider its bonded indebtedness as a unit for amortization purposes and levy such amount of taxes as shall provide for the immediate or ultimate retirement of an aliquot part of the whole for each year; but each bond issue constitutes a separate unit, the amortization of which by annual tax levies must go on independently of the sinking fund requirements of other bond issues outstanding at the same time. I quote from the dictum of Donahue, J., in Link vs. Karb, 89 O. S. 326-339:

"The taxing officials of any political subdivision of the state must provide in the resolution or ordinance authorizing such issue, or in a resolution or ordinance in relation to the same subject-matter passed prior to the issuing of such bonds, for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity. This, of course, does not require the immediate levying of a tax certain * * * but it does mean that, at the time the issue of bonds is authorized, the taxing authorities proposing to issue such bonds shall provide that a levy shall be made each year thereafter during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest thereon and retire the bonds, * * *."

It follows that a provision like that found in section 7613 of the General Code is substantially modified by this constitutional requirement. The section mentioned provides that,

"In any school district having a bonded indebtedness * * * the board of education of such district annually * * * shall set aside from its revenue a sum equal to not less than one-fortieth of such indebtedness together with a sum sufficient to pay the annual interest thereon."

Section 7614 in the same connection provides that,

"the board of education of every district shall provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of all its bonded indebtedness."

These sections permit the combination of the entire bonded indebtedness of a district into one sinking fund; but as we have seen, the subsequently adopted constitutional amendment forbids such combination and makes each issue of bonds a separate account for the purpose of ascertaining the sinking fund or amortization requirements thereof in the levy of taxes.

As I interpret the resolution above quoted, it violates this requirement. The board of education has thereby attempted at least to provide for an annual levy to pay interest, but not for an annual levy for amortization purposes. This is made clear from the serial character of the bonds and the dates at which the bonds are to mature. The intention in this particular is made even clearer by the financial statement attached to the transcript, which discloses the reason for postponing the maturity of six bonds of the issue until 1941.

It appears from the financial statement that there are other bonds now outstanding maturing in series up to and including the year 1940, so that the additional amounts which are to mature in the year 1941 under the present issue are intended to take the place, as it were, of the issue which at that time will have been retired.

The deviation from the required uniformity is, to be sure, not great in the case of this issue, and affects but the one year 1941 in which $3,000 instead of $1,000 of the issue will mature. It is greater, however, in the case of the $80,000 above referred to, in which the bonds, though in series, do not commence to mature until 1941, and with irregularities in the amounts maturing each year, run on until 1957—the full limit allowed by the forty year provision of section 7625 et seq. of the General Code, which by reference in 7630-1 is made applicable to bonds of this character.

With all these facts before me, I cannot conclude otherwise than that the tax levying provision of each resolution is intended to require not a levy of an aliquot part of the principal with due allowance for sinking fund investments in each year of the life of the bonds, but for levies for principal only in the years in which the principal matures, and then for the amount maturing in those years.

This is not in compliance with article XII, section 11 of the Constitution, and slight though the deviation from the requirement is in the case of the $25,000, I feel unable to approve the issue as well as the one for $80,000 where the deviation is great.

My disapproval of these bonds on this ground is predicated upon another part of the dictum of Donahue, J., in Link v. Karb, supra, in which he distinctly holds that the "provision" of which the constitutional amendment speaks, shall be made in and as a part of the local "legislation" authorizing the issuance of bonds as well as in the statutes of the state. This expression was carried into the syllabus of the case (see the second and third branches thereof), but it is none the less dictum, for that point was not before the court.

Great doubt exists in my mind as to the applicability of this holding in view of the subsequent decision of the supreme court in Cincinnati v. Harris, 91 O. S. 151. This case involved bonds about to be issued by the board of trustees of the Cincinnati Southern Railway Company. Such bonds when issued would have been general obligations of the city of Cincinnati, but the trustees, who were the issuing authority, had no power to levy taxes. The council of the city of Cincinnati had passed no ordinance providing for the annual levy and collection of taxes to meet the interest and sinking fund requirements of the bonds, and apparently relying upon what has been said in Link v. Karb, supra, the city solicitor sought to enjoin their issuance.

It appears, however, that the bonds were issued under authority of a special act commanding council of the city to levy annually a tax "sufficient to pay the interest thereon and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption." This the court held to be sufficient "provision" and proper "legislation" within the meaning of the constitution. The syllabus is as follows:

> "1. The act of March 5, 1913 (103 O. L., 112), supplementary to the act of May 17, 1911, (102 O. L., 111) conforms to the requirement of section 11, article XII of the Constitution of Ohio.
> 2. This act and the act of May 17, 1911 (102 O. L., 111), is the legislation under which the indebtedness evidenced by the proposed issue of bonds is incurred within the meaning of section 11, article XII of the Constitution of Ohio."

In the opinion, referring to the special act, Donahue, J., says:

> "This is the legislation under which this indebtedness is incurred, and this legislation conforms in letter and spirit to the provisions of section 11 of article XII of the Constitution of this state. This act is equally mandatory upon the council of the city of Cincinnati, not only as now constituted, but as may be constituted at any time during the life of these bonds, as any ordinance the present city council could now pass."

This decision can be reconciled with the decision in the case of Link v. Karb on the theory that the special act involved in the Harris case required sinking fund levies to be made on the segregated basis which I have discussed; whereas the general statutes of the state applicable to municipal corporations and in force when Link v. Karb was decided, may have been regarded by the court as authorizing combined sinking fund levies. I quote from Link v. Karb the statements which otherwise explained would be inconsistent with the decision in the Harris case:

> "In view of the fact * * * that, at the time this amendment was adopted and went into effect, there was legislation by the general assembly of Ohio in harmony with its provision, it would seem that something other and further than this legislation was intended. These boards (municipal councils) are authoritzed and required by law to levy and collect annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on bonds and to provide a fund for their final redemption, and, therefore, it would appear that this amendment to the constitution was framed and adopted for the purpose of requiring not only the legislature of the state but the taxing authority of any political subdivision of the state proposing to issue bonds to include in the law, resolution or ordinance, under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, the provision for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest and retire the bonds, otherwise the only effect of this amendment would be to carry into the organic law of the state the existing statutory porvisions."

It is possible to reconcile the two cases on another theory, that the bonds proposed to be issued by the trustees of the Cincinnati Southern Railway Company were issued under authority of a special act relating to those bonds alone, and that when the authority therein provided for had been exercised the law became executed; whereas, the general statutes of the state referred to in Link vs. Karb did not relate to the issue of any particular bonds, but conferred general authority to issue bonds.

Now, section 5649-1 of the General Code provides that in any taxing district, the taxing authority shall levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued in a political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof.

This section in its former state was before the court when Link v. Karb was decided. As it then existed it provided "in any taxing district the taxing authority shall levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes."

If the reconciliation of the two cases which I have cited is to be worked out on the first of the two grounds above suggested, then the question is raised as to whether the amendment of section 5649-1 is to be interpreted as requiring segregated levies for each issue of bonds, and, as of course, by implication, repealing numerous statutes like 7613, for example, which authorized the management of sinking funds upon the other basis. If section 5649-1 as amended, requires segregated levies, then it would seem that "provisions" in bond issuing ordinances and resolutions for the making of annual sinking fund and interest levies are no longer necessary; and that if some such "provision" is so inserted, which does not comply with the requirement of the Constitution, it is to be treated as mere surplusage on the ground that because of the mandatory provision of section 5649-1 the power as to controlling future levies has been taken away from the issuing authorities.

This reasoning would sustain the bonds now under consideration, because it would stamp as surplusage the paragraphs of the respective resolutions to which reference has been made. But there is doubt upon two points, first, as to whether section 5649-1 as amended really requires segregated sinking fund calculations of levies any more than the section in its original form as it was before the court in Link v. Karb, supra, required them; and, second, whether the Harris case is to be distinguished from Link v. Karb upon the first ground suggested or upon the second, which accounts for Cincinnati v. Harris on the theory that it involved a special act rather than the general law.

The doubt is so great that in a matter of this character, I do not feel that I ought to attempt to decide the question, but that I ought to adhere to the practice which has been followed in this department ever since article XII, section 11 was adopted and Link v. Karb was decided, viz: to require as a condition of my approval the inclusion in the resolution or ordinance under which the bonds are to be issued, of a tax levying provision in substantial compliance with the mandatory requirement of the Constitution.

If the bonds of the $25,000 issue had been made to mature in such series as that an equal aliquot amount thereof should fall due in each year of their life, then though the language of the tax levying provision of the resolution in this case is even fundamentally different from that of the Constitution I would have been constrained to approve the proceedings in this respect on the authority of Mr. Hogan's opinion, to which I have referred.

In this opinion it was held that the Constitution did not forbid the issue of bonds in such series as that the retirement of an aliquot part thereof in each year of their life of the bonds might be provided for by taxation without the accumulation of a sinking fund in the strict sense; but slight though the deviation is, in that it affects but one year, it remains true that the maturities of the bonds of the $25,000 issue are so arranged that this principle is violated. As to the bonds of the $80,000 issue, the violation is palpable.

For these reasons then I am unable to approve of either of these issues. I may add that as I find no other material defects in the proceedings relative to the $25,000 issue, it is possible that the resolution may be so amended as to cure this defect, and the bonds when properly re-offered to the local sinking fund authorities and to the Commission, may be accepted.

The fundamental character of the other defect which I have noted with respect to the $80,000 issue, however, would seem to preclude any curative action in that regard.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SCHOOL FUNDS—TRANSFER.

Moneys belonging in one fund of a school district, but expended for the purposes of another fund and treated as "overdrafts" in such other fund, may not be subsequently transferred to the fund for the purposes of which the expenditures have been made, unless by nunc pro tunc order of the common pleas court under section 2296 et seq., G. C., as to which query.

Authority to transfer funds is limited to funds represented by actual cash in the treasury to the credit of the proper funds.

As to actual cash balances, however, there may be a transfer under section 2296 et seq., of General Code from a sinking fund of a school district to another fund, when the school district has no outstanding bonds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 24, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, O.

GENTLEMEN—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 4th requesting my opinion as follows:

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

A state examiner of the division of schools and townshpis reports financial statement of a board of education as follows:

	Overdrawn	Balance
Tuition Fund	$ 706.26
Contingent Fund	6,075.35
Bond and Interest Fund		$6,908.39
	$6,781.61	$6,908.39

It is very evident from this statement that the provisions of sections 5660 and 5649-3d G. C. have been greatly disregarded and violated. Our examiner informs us there is actually no bonded debt to be provided for as the last outstanding bonds of the school district matured and were paid in March of this year.

Question—In view of the fact based upon the statement submitted by our examiner that there is no bonded debt to provide for, therefore the levy which has occasioned the unrequired balance in the bond and interest fund having been incorrect can such balance of $6,908.39 in the bond and interest fund be legally transferred to the other funds of the school district by procedure in sections 2296 et seq. of the General Code."

It is, as you say, clear not only that sections 5660 and 5649-3d General Code have been violated, but that practically all the sections relative to the levying of taxes and expenditure of revenues by boards of education have been flagrantly disregarded. Without going into particulars or citing statutes, there has evidently been an entirely unauthorized levy of taxes ostensibly for sinking fund purposes. Municipal corporations may levy taxes for this general purpose, including therein the allowance of a reasonable amount to meet final judgments, save in condemnation of property cases; but boards of education have no authority to levy taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes save to meet the actual needs of the district on account of its bonded debt.

Assuming that there has been no transfer to the sinking fund from some unexpected source, the inference seems irresistible that sinking fund levies have been made in this instance without any warrant of law whatsoever. On the other hand, without denying the existence of such circumstances as under favor of section 5661 General Code might have justified the incurring of obligations by the board of education in question without money in the treasury to meet the same, it is obvious that in the face of section 5649-3d and other statutes equally applicable the so-called "overdraft" was wholly illegal. When there is no money in a school district fund there would be no authority, even in the absence of the Smith law, for the drawing or payment of a warrant on that fund. Overdrafts, save in the case of county warrants issued under favor of former laws (still unrepealed save by implication arising from the Smith law) and marked "Not paid for want of funds", from the very nature of the case are and always have been illegal.

It follows that primarily the officers of the district responsible for the present condition are liable to the distrtict for the amount of the overdrafts. They have taken money belonging to the sinking fund and applied it to unauthorized purposes, and they and their bondsmen personally owe the sinking fund these amounts. The books may show a balance of nearly seven thousand dollars in such bond and interest fund, but as a matter of fact it is not there; it has been spent, excepting the actual balance of $126.78. This balance may, in my opinion, be legally transferred under all the circumstances by proceeding under section 2296 et seq. of the General Code. That section, which I do not quote, does not in terms prohibit a transfer from the sinking fund, as such, should there happen to be an unneeded surplus in such fund. I have already stated that there is no authority to levy taxes for a sinking fund unless there are actually bonds and interest thereon to be met. There is no reason, therefore, why, if the common pleas court to which application must be made is satisfied as to the necessity and propriety of a transfer, such a court should be denied the jurisdiction to order it made.

But as I have said, I do not believe that the ostensible balance of $6,908.39 in the bond and interest fund has any real existence save in the imagination of a bookkeeper. Your examiner says that there is in the treasury in cash $126.78. I do not see how the court could transfer from one fund to another money which had already in point of fact been paid out of the treasury, unless the power of the court under section 2296 may be exercised nunc pro tunc and in effect establish the transfer as of a date prior to the making of any of the expenditures in question. I am in doubt as to the authority of the court to do this, but I would not deem it proper to express an opinion upon any question that would necessarily come before a court in a proper case.

Section 2296 G. C. authorizes the transfer of "public funds * * from one fund to another". I have already expressed the view that the phrase "public funds" as used in this context means funds which really exist subject to future expenditure. As I see it and have said, money that has already been spent, though as a matter of bookkeeping the defaulting officials have debited it as an "overdraft" in another fund instead of (as it actually was) an expenditure of the sinking fund, is not subject to transfer. The real nature of things can not be altered by bookkeeping. If public officials would keep clearly in mind the legal impossibility of "overdrafts" and their own personal liability arising therefrom, evils of the sort described by you would be less frequent than they are.

If upon the exhaustion of the tuition and contingent fund application had been promptly made for the transfer of the then existent moneys in the sinking fund, and the court had allowed the transfer, the transaction would have been regular and legal; and as I have said, if the court should decide that it has jurisdiction to order a transfer nunc pro tunc so as to validate that which is already done, such action would be likewise effectual. I do not feel that I ought to say, however, that the common pleas court has this power nor that it should exercise it under the circumstances in this case, if it has it.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

AKRON ARMORY—CONTRACT FOR STEAM BOILERS—BREACH—WAIVER—EXTRAS IN CONSTRUCTION—FROM WHAT FUND PAID.

1.—Where a contractor agreed to furnish two cast-iron, steam boilers of not less than 13,500 feet capacity each, for an armory, he is not released from his obligation, because of the fact that boilers of said size can not be secured on the market. The contractor would be liable for damages for a breach of his contract, in so far as the original plans and specifications are concerned.

2.—Where the contractor, in compliance with the original plans, specifications and estimates, submits plans for heating the armory and said plans so submitted indicate two boilers of 10,000 feet capacity each, and where the original plans provided that boilers manufactured by a certain firm were to be used, and the largest capacity of boilers manufactured by the firm is 10,000 feet, and where the state officials acquiesced and consented to the installation of two boilers of the largest type manufactured by said firm, under such conditions the state has waived its rights to an action for damages for a breach of the contract and could not recover damages against the contractor.

3.—Where the contractor under plans and specifications was required to install the amount of radiation as marked on the plans and he so installed the radiation, he is not liable for a breach of contract, even though the radiation as installed is not of sufficient capacity to heat the building to the desired temperature.

4.—The money appropriated by the legislature at its last session and credited to the state armory fund would be available to the state armory board for providing the necessary extras in the construction of said armory.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 27, 1918.

HON. GEORGE H. WOOD, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR—I am in receipt of a communication from your department signed by J. E. Gimperling, Assistant Adjutant General, and dated April 15, 1918, which reads as follows:

"I herewith submit data relative to the insufficient heating system in the state-owned armory at Akron, Ohio, now under course of construction, and respectfully request an opinion from your department as to the legal status of the state and the rights or authority of this department to order or enforce the installation of additional pipes, radiators, boilers, etc., as are necessary and required to provide a satisfactory and efficient heating system in the building.

The architects for the building were Harpster & Bliss of Akron. The general contractor for this building is The Clemmer & Johnson Company of Akron, and the subcontractor for the heating and ventilating is The Thomas Heating Co., of Racine, Wis.

The insufficiency of the system was first discovered by actual tests made in the presence of witnesses. The discovery made by the tests has been confirmed by actual calculation and are as follows:

The total amount of direct radiation installed in the building is 4,262 square feet, and the proper amount to sufficiently heat the building should be at least 5,915, which means that at least 1,653 square feet of additional direct radiation should be installed.

The total amount of indirect radiation installed to heat the incoming air required for ventilation is 2,754 square feet, and the proper amount is 4,918 square feet, which means that at least 2,164 square feet of additional indirect radiation should be installed.

The installation of the additional direct and indirect radiation as above described would require additional and larger boiler, to generate and deliver steam to such a radiator.

The architect's plans show the amount of direct radiation to be installed in the building and the specifications state: 'The amount of radiation to be as marked on the plans.'

The architect's specifications state in reference to the indirect radiation that: 'Each of these groups of vento heaters will consist of six stacks of heaters making the group two stacks in height and three stacks deep. Each stack will have 17 loops of the regular 50 inch sections, 5¾" on centers.'

The architect's specifications provide for two sectional cast-iron boilers each with a rated capacity, in direct radiation of 13,000 (13,500).

The supervising architect, Fred W. Elliott, reports that he has thoroughly examined the system and finds that the amount of direct and indirect radiation shown by the architect's plans and specifications has been installed, but that the two boilers of capacity of 10,000 feet each have been used instead of two with a capacity of 13,000 feet each as specified. The supervising architect further reports that the boilers now installed are the largest pattern made of the size specified, and are of ample size to heat the amount of radiation shown by the archtect's plans and specifications, but that the same are not sufficient to heat the actual amount of radiation required.

The architect's specifications contain the following general clause:

'The heating and ventilating will be as hereinafter specified and the work shall in all respects comply with the code of the Department of Inspection of Workshops and Factories of the State of Ohio. The successful bidder will be required to furnish complete details of the heating system he proposes to install the same and shall give the board a written guarantee that the system will do the work as required and specified.'

With the above data before you, this department respectfully requests an opinion on the following points at issue:

First—Can the State of Ohio demand of the contractor the necessary correction of defects without paying extra for the same, or has the state waived her rights when she accepted the architect's plans?

Second—If the state has waived her rights to hold the contractor responsible, how then can funds be secured from the state treasury to pay for such extra work which will amount to $4,500.00.

Third—Can the state demand the installation of two boilers of a greater capacity than is manufactured, or should she require the equivalent capacity by using three instead of two boilers?

The Akron armory affords sufficient space for the installation of an additional boiler, but if such was not the case, would the contractor be required to remove walls and partitions in the building, in order to secure the necessary additional space?

Approved plans and specifications are on file in the state auditor's office."

Your communication refers to certain matters connected with the construction of the Akron armory. Briefly stated, the facts are as follows: The state armory board, through architects selected or approved by the board, had plans and specifications made for said armory building. Based upon these plans and specifications, which were approved by the armory board, a contract was entered into with the Clemmer & Johnson Co., of Akron, for the erection of said armory. Said company furnished a good and sufficient bond conditioned for the faithful performance of its contract.

The heating and ventilating of said armory building was sublet to The Thomas Heating Co., of Racine, Wis.

The armory proper is practically completed and in so far as the questions raised in your communication are concerned, it is entirely completed. Since the completion of the armory, it has been ascertained by careful investigation that the amount of radiation, both direct and indirect, is not sufficient to heat the building as it should be heated; that the direct radiation lacks at least 1,653 square feet of what it should be, and the indirect radiation lacks 2,164 square feet, for a proper heating of the building.

The plans and specifications, together with the plans upon which the contract was based, provided for a certain amount of radiation, both direct and indirect, and plainly indicated where the different radiators were to be located in the building. The plans and specifications also provided that two cast-iron sectional steam boilers, of not less than 13,500 feet capacity each, should be installed in said armory building in connection with the heating and ventilating of same.

There is no question raised that the contractor did not install the heating plant, in so far as radiation is concerned, exactly as the plans and specifications provide; but it is admitted, on the other hand, that instead of installing two steam boilers of a capacity of 13,500 feet each, the contractor installed two such boilers of a capacity of 10,000 feet each, thus making a total capacity of 20,000, instead of 27,000 feet.

It is further admitted that if there were a sufficient amount of radiation installed in the armory, it would require a boiler capacity of something like 36,000 feet, which is 16,000 feet more than is at present installed in the building and 9,000 feet more than called for by the plans and specifications.

It is further admitted that it was impossible at the time the contract was entered into and at any time since the date thereof, to secure on the market a boiler of the type set forth in the plans and specifications, with a capacity of 13,500 feet, and that the maximum capacity of the type of boiler such as is set out in the plans and specifications is about 10,000 feet.

It is further admitted upon the part of the state armory board that the boilers as installed in the armory building would be of sufficient capacity for the amount of radiation now in the building.

It is further to be noted that the boiler room of the armory, which was built in accordance with the plans and specifications, is of sufficient size to accommodate another steam boiler such as those which have been installed by the contractor.

In view of these facts the question is as to what steps the state armory board ought to take under the conditions set out in your letter.

Article I of the contract provides that:

> "The contractor shall and will provide all the materials and perform all the work for the construction and completion of an armory in the city of Akron, Ohio, as shown on the drawings and covered in the specifications prepared by Harpster & Bliss, associated with Karl I. Best, Architects, * * *."

The bond given by the contractor, The Clemmer & Johnson Company, provides in part as follows:

> "That if the said principal shall faithfully perform said contract on its part to be performed, in accordance with the proposal and the plans, specifications and descriptions for the erection and completion of said armory * * then this obligation shall be void."

The specifications upon which the contract was based and which became a part of the contract itself, on p. 52 thereof, under the title "Boilers," read in part as follows:

> "Contractor shall furnish and set up in the boiler room where shown two cast-iron sectional steam boilers of not less than 13,500 feet capacity each,"

On p. 54 the following provision is made in reference to "Direct Radiation:"

> "All direct radiation in the first and second story shall be the American Radiator Company's Rococo or National Radiator Company's Novue radiation or equal to be approved by the architects using two column radiation 38 inches high unless otherwise marked in the drawing and the amount of radiation to be as marked in the plans."

On p. 56 under "Motors" we find this provision:

> "The G. A. R. lodge room will be heated with warm air only and the contractor shall include in his proposition a proper size disc type of fan using the Davidson fan or equal operated with a direct motor of the three phase, 220 volt alternating current type and a sufficient amount of Vento coils for heating the air to a proper temperature, so as to heat this room to 70 degrees in the coldest winter weather."

I quote the above provisions in reference to radiation to show that the contractor did not in any way agree to furnish a certain amount of heat for any part of the building other than the G. A. R. lodge room. The contractor was simply to install a certain amount of radiation at places indicated in the plans.

On p. 52 of the plans and specifications, under the paragraph entitled "Preliminary," we find this provision:

> "The successful bidder will be required to furnish complete details of the heating system as he proposes to install same and shall give the board a written guarantee that the system will do the work as required and specified."

Apparently in compliance with this provision of the plans and specifications, on February 10, 1916, The Thomas Heating Co. submitted certain plans for a heating system, which plans clearly set forth the location of two boilers in the boiler room and indicated that these boilers had a capacity of 10,000 feet each.

In answering your questions the first thing to be considered is as to whether the contractor ought not to be relieved from his obligation to install two boilers of 13,500 feet capacity each, in view of the fact that ever since the letting of the contract it has been impossible to secure boilers of said size. Some members of the board feel that this principle might be applied. There is a general impression abroad that in all those cases in which it is impossible for a person to carry out the terms of a contract, he is relieved from the performance of the same and is not liable to damages for a breach thereof. While this is true in some instances, it is not true as a general proposition.

Elliott in his Work on Contracts, in section 1891 lays down the following:

> "Where no express or implied provision as to the event of impossibility can be found in the terms or circumstances of the agreement, it is a general rule of construction, founded on the absolute and unqualified terms of the promise, that the promissor remains responsible for damages, notwithstanding the supervening impossibility or hardship."

However, the author continues in the same section as follows:

> "It must be borne in mind, however, that it is equally well settled that when performance depends on the existence of a given person, purpose or thing, and such existence or continued existence was assumed as the basis of the agreement, the death of the person or the destruction or non-existence of the thing, without fault, puts an end to the obligation."

Is the impossibility, as we find it to exist in the matter under consideration, such as to be governed by the first or second principle laid down by Mr. Elliott? Of course if it is governed by the second principle, the contractor is relieved from the obligation to install two boilers with a capacity of 13,500 feet each.

We will first consider the second principle above laid down. In Dexter vs. Norton, et al., 47 N. Y. 62, the court says:

> "Where a contract is made for the sale and delivery of specified articles of personal property under such circumstances that the title does not vest in the vendee if the property is destroyed by an accident without the fault of the vendor, so that delivery becomes impossible, the latter is not liable to the vendee in damages for the non-delivery."

In this case the contract in question involved the sale of certain bales of cotton, each bale being designated by a particular mark. These bales of cotton were destroyed by an accidental fire. In the opinion on p. 65 the court quotes the following with approval:

"The principle seems to us to be that in contracts in which the performance depends on the continued existence of a given person or thing, a condition is implied that the impossibility of performance, arising from the perishing of the person or thing, shall excuse the performance, and the reason of the rule is that because from the nature of the contract it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the particular person or thing."

In Martin & Co., vs. Siegel-Cooper Co., 237 Ill., 610, the court say:

"In contracts the performance of which requires the continued existence of a particular person or a particular thing, a condition is always implied that the death of such person or the destruction of such thing shall excuse performance."

In Vogt vs. Hecker, 118 Wis., 306, the court say in the opinion at p. 309:

"Plaintiff invokes a rule well recognized—that when parties contract for the doing of some act with reference to an existing thing, to the performance of which the continued existence of the thing is essential, they impliedly agree that such continued existence shall be a condition of the contract duty * * * . This distinction is of course obvious between two contracts—one to do work upon a thing which exists, or for the creation of which another is responsible; the other, to fully create and bring into existence that for which the contract price is to be paid."

Before commenting on whether the above decisions apply to the case under consideration, I will quote from a case which upholds the first principle of Elliott above set out, viz., Harrison vs. Missouri & Co., 74 Mo., 364. On p. 371 the court say:

"Where a party by contract agrees to do a prescribed thing in a prescribed time, he is liable for non-performance of the contract, notwithstanding the fact that his non-fulfillment of the contract was occasioned by inevitable and unavoidable accident."

The court quotes then with approval as follows:

"When a party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good, notwithstanding any accident by inevitable necessity, because he might have provided against it by his contract."

The court further quotes with approval:

"If the carrier has agreed to carry the goods to their destination and then deliver them within a prescribed time, he will be held to a strict performance of his contract and no temporary obstruction or even absolute impossibility will be a defense for failure to comply with the engagement * * * because he might have provided against it by his contract."

We will now consider the distinction between the two above principles laid down by Elliott. If a contractor agrees to do something with a particular thing which is in existence at the time the contract is entered into, and if before the fulfillment of the contract this particular thing is destroyed without any fault of his own, he is relieved from his obligation and can not be held in damages for a failure to comply with the terms of his contract, for the reason that both parties must be held to have contracted on the implied condition that such particular thing would continue in existence.

On the other hand, if the contractor agrees generally to furnish a certain thing for the party with whom he contracts, he is liable for damages if he fails to furnish the article about which the contract is made, even though it is impossible for him so to do, for the reason that he might have made provision for such a contingency in his contract; that is, that he would furnish the article provided said article could be obtained on the market.

Let us apply the above distinction to the matter under consideration. The Clemmer & Johnson Co. agreed with the state armory board to install generally two steam boilers, each with a capacity of 13,500 feet. The said company did not agree to furnish two certain, specific steam boilers located at some particular place or numbered or marked in some particular manner, which were in existence at the time the contract was entered into. If the latter had been the case and these two specific boilers had been destroyed, the Clemmer & Johnson Co., would have been relieved from their obligation to furnish the specific boilers, because it would be presumed that both parties had entered into the contract with the implied understanding that said boilers would continue in existence until the fulfillment of the contract. If The Clemmer & Johnson Co. had desired to be relieved from its obligation to install two boilers of 13,500 feet capacity each, in case it would be impossible for it to obtain such boilers on the market, the company should have so stipulated in the contract.

Upon this question there is an interesting case reported in 59 Mich. 488, styled Switzer et al. vs. Pinconning Mfg. Co. In this case the defendant agreed to furnish plaintiff with two million feet of white pine lumber "to be cut from logs now in the pond and logs to be cut from section 13 during the season of 1883." It developed that there was not two million feet of lumber in the pond and on section 13.

The plaintiff brought action for damages for breach of contract, but the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, because the contract was entered into with a view to certain specific logs, viz., logs in the pond and logs to be cut from section 13, and that both parties must have impliedly understood that if there were not two million feet of lumber so located, the defendant would be relieved from carrying out its obligation and not be responsible for damages for a breach thereof. But the court clearly indicated that if the defendant had generally agreed to furnish two million feet of white pine lumber, it would have been liable for a breach of the obligation, even though it would have been impossible to have purchased on the market that number of feet of white pine lumber.

In view of all the above we can conclude that The Clemmer & Johnson Co. is not relieved from the obligations of its contract with the state armory board, merely because it was impossible for it to purchase on the market the engines for which it contracted.

Another question propounded by you is:

> "Can the State of Ohio demand of the contractor the necessary correction of defects without paying extra for the same, or has the state waived her rights when she accepted the architect's plans?"

I assume this question refers to radiation. Inasmuch as the contractor installed the radiation, both direct and indirect, exactly in conformity to the plans and specifications upon which the contract was made and which became a part of the contract, the state has no right of action against the contractor for the defects in said radiation. The contractor did not agree that the radiation installed should produce a certain temperature in the rooms. He merely agreed to install "the amount of radiation to be as marked on the plans."

Your third question reads as follows:

> "Can the state demand the installation of two boilers of a greater capacity than is manufactured, or should she require the equivalent capacity by using three instead of two boilers?"

This question involves the proposition as to whether the state could compel specific performance of the contract. Without going into this very fully, I will say that the state can not compel specific performance on the part of the contractor to install two boilers of a capacity of 13,500 feet each; neither can the state compel the contractor to install three boilers having a capacity equal to that which the two boilers were to have. In other words, the state would have no right of action for specific performance of the contract, providing the contractor refuses to comply with the same. The state's action would be an action for damages, in that the contractor failed to comply with the terms of the contract for the installation of said boilers.

The question now to be considered is whether the state could maintain an action in damages, in view of all the above principles, against the contractor, for his failure to install two boilers of 13,500 feet capacity each. In reference to this matter I have received further information in the way of sworn statements and letters which pertain to the installation of these boilers.

The Thomas Heating Co. submitted plans and specifications for the heating of the building. This was done in accordance with the provisions of the original specifications and estimates. Said heating company clearly indicated in these plans that it intended to install two boilers of 10,000 feet capacity each. These latter plans and specifications were followed by the Thomas Heating Co. and the architects of the state, who stood by and saw these two boilers installed.

Further, the original plans and specifications provide that the contractor should install boilers made by the Prudential Heating Co. of Akron, O. It developed that the largest boilers the Prudential Co. manufactured were of about 10,000 feet capacity. This matter was taken up by the Thomas Heating Co. with the architect of the state, Major Best, who consented to the proposition that the Thomas Heating Co. should use boilers of the Prudential Heating Co., and inasmuch as it manufactured boilers of no larger capacity than 10,000 feet, that the Thomas Heating Co. should use boilers of said capacity in the installation of the heating system in the armory.

It was further understood there were to be but two boilers installed in connection with this heating system. It might be well here to remember also that no other company manufactured boilers, such as were to be installed in the armory, of a greater capacity than 10,000 feet.

From all the above it is my opinion that the state has by its action, through its officers, waived any rights it might have had against The Clemmer & Johnson Co. for a failure to comply with the terms of the original plans and specifications.

It is my view that the state would be estopped from setting up its rights on account of the facts above set forth and that it could not recover in an action for damages against The Clemmer & Johnson Co., and I so advise you.

There is one question remaining to be considered, viz., how can the necessary funds be secured from the state treasurer to pay for the extra work which may have to be performed by the state in order to have said armory building properly heated? Sections 5247, 5248 and 5249 G. C. (107 O. L. 395) read as follows:

> "Sec. 5247.—The auditor of state shall credit to the 'state military fund' from the general revenues of the state, a sum equal to ten cents from each person who was a resident of the state, as shown by each last preceding federal census. Such fund shall be a continuous fund and available only for the support of the national guard and naval militia. It shall not be diverted to any other fund or used for any other purpose."
> "Sec. 5248.—The general assembly shall appropriate annually, and divide into two funds, the amount authorized by the preceding section. Such funds shall be respectively known as the 'state armory fund' and 'maintenance Ohio National Guard.'
> "Sec. 5249.—From the 'maintenance, Ohio National Guard fund' the adjutant general shall pay all expenses incident to the maintenance of the various units of the national guard and Ohio naval militia, except such as are provided for from the 'state armory fund.' From the 'state armory fund' the adjutant general shall provide grounds, armories and other buildings for military purposes by leasing, purchasing or constructing the same."

In accordance with the provisions of these sections, we find that the legislature appropriated the sum of $426,712.10, divided between the two funds as follows: Maintenance Ohio national guard, $311,712.10; state armory fund, $115,000.00.

Section 5249, supra, provides that "From the 'state armory fund' the adjutant general shall provide grounds," etc., "by leasing, purchasing or constructing the same." It is my opinion that from the moneys so appropriated by the legislature the proper officers could use a sufficient amount to provide for the extra work in connection with said armory.

I am not unmindful of the provisions of section 2 of the act, making the above appropriations, which reads as follows:

> "The following sums shall not be expended to pay liabilities or deficiencies existing prior to July 1st, 1917, * * *."
> 107 O. L. 188.

It is my opinion that these extras would not be furnished under an obligation entered into prior to July 1, 1917, but that there would be an obligation to furnish same under a contract entered into since said date.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—APPROACHES AND DRIVEWAYS, DAMAGES FOR DESTRUCTION, BY WHOM PAID AND FROM WHAT FUND.

1.—Under section 7212 G. C. (107 O. L. 120,) whatever authority constructs or improves a road, whether it be the state highway commissioner, the county commissioners or the township trustees, that same authority must pay the damages to an abutting property owner for the destruction of any approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof must reconstruct the same through the county surveyor and pay the costs incident thereto.

2.—In those cases in which the county or township pays the damages or the costs incident to the reconstruction of a driveway or approach, the money necessary for the same must be taken from the general fund. When the state pays said damages or costs, the money necessary for same should be taken either from the inter-county highway fund due the county, or the main market road fund, depending on whether it is an inter-county highway or main market road that is being constructed or improved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, O.

DEAR SIR—I have your communication of June 19, 1918, which reads in part as follows:

> "The State Highway Department is constructing section 'A' of Inter-County Highway No. 62, through a part of this county. A question has arisen in the matter of the construction of approaches in this improvement. The plans and specifications for said highway do not provide for such approaches. * * *.
> This section (Sec. 7212 G. C.) is not clear as to whether the county or the state should repair these approaches or reimburse the abutting owner. The State Highway Department is the authority constructing this improvement and by taking that view of the section it would seem that it would be incumbent on the State Highway Department to compensate such abutting property owner. On the other hand the section provides that the county surveyor shall reconstruct the same at public expense, thus seeming to place the responsibility upon the county.
> Kindly give me your opinion as to the liability in the matter, as to whether it rests with the county or with the state highway department."

Briefly stated, your question is: If, in the construction of highways under the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner, approaches leading from the highway to the abutting property are destroyed, who shall pay the property owner for the destruction of said approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof who shall authorize the county surveyor to reconstruct the same and pay for the cost of such reconstruction? The further question naturally follows as to the fund from which the damage or the cost of reconstruction shall be paid.

The questions arise under section 7212 G. C. This section was amended at the last session of the legislature and as it now stands reads as follows (107 O. L. 120:)

> "Sec. 7212.—The owners of land shall construct and keep in repair all approaches or driveways from the public roads under the direction of the county surveyor, provided, however, that if, in the construction or improvement, maintenance and repair of any road the approach or driveway of an abutting property owner is destroyed, the authorities constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing such road shall compensate such abutting property owner of said lands for the destruction of such approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof authorize the county surveyor to reconsruct the same at public expense.
> In the construction of a road improvement the state highway commissioner or county surveyor may in all cases where the approaches of the owners of abutting real estate are unsuitable to a projected improvement or so constructed as not to afford proper drainage after its completion, include in the plans for such improvement plans for proper approaches. The entire cost of constructing such approaches may be assessed against the lands along which they are constructed."

The section, as it stood prior to the amendment, read as follows:

"Sec. 7212.—The owners or occupants of land shall consturct and keep in repair all approaches or driveways from the public roads under the direction of the county highway superintendent, provided, however, that if, in the constuction or improvement, maintenance and repair of any road, the approach or driveway of an abutting property owner is destroyed, the county commissioners or township trustees shall compensate such abutting property owner or occupant of said lands for the destruction of such approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof, authorize the county highway superintendent to reconstruct the same."

I will call your attention to an opinion rendered by me on April 19, 1917, to Hon. S. L. Gregory, prosecuting attorney, and found in Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 524, wherein I passed upon the exact question you have in mind. However, the opinion was rendered under the law as it stood prior to the amendment of this section. In the first branch of the syllabus I held as follows:

"Under the provisions of section 7212 G. C., the cost of the construction of approaches and driveways, or compensation to the abutting property owner for the destruction of approaches and driveways, is not to be included in the estimate of the cost and expense of constructing or repairing the highway and paid from the fund created for the construction or repairing of the highway, but same must be taken from the general fund of the county or township."

I think this same principle would apply under the section as amended; that is, the cost of the construction of the approaches or driveways or the damages paid to the property owner because of their destruction, would not be considered a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and hence would not be included in the plans and specifications for the improvement. This is a general obligation which rests upon the county or township and therefore the cost and expense of the same or the damages allowed would be taken from the general fund of the county or township.

In the third branch of the syllabus I held as follows:

"If the township trustees had jurisdiction and supervision of the construction or repair of the public road, then in that event they are the persons either to compensate the owner or occupant for the destruction of the approach or driveway, or to reconstruct said approach or driveway. If, on the other hand, the county commissioners or the state highway commissioner had jurisdiction and supervision over the construction or repair of the public road, then the county commissioners are the persons either to compensate the owner or occupant or to reconstruct the approach or driveway."

The principle set forth in said third branch, while related to the question you have in mind, does not exactly answer it. At this point let us remember that the provision "the county commissioners or township trustees shall compensate," as it originally stood in section 7212 G. C., was amended to read "the authorities constructing, improving, maintaining or repairing such road shall compensate." The term "authorities" is substituted for "the county commissioners or township trustees."

I am quite sure, from the reading of the section as it now stands, that the state would be obligated to compensate the abutting property owner for the destruction of his approach or driveway, or to pay the expense of reconstructing the approach or driveway in those cases in which the state highway commissioner assumes jurisdiction over the construction of the highway. This seems to be the clear intent of the statute. That is, whatever authority—whether it be the township trustees, the county commissioners or the state highway commissioner—constructs or improves the road, that same authority must pay the damages incident to the destruction of the approach or driveway, or in lieu thereof pay the cost of the reconstruction of the same.

The question as to the fund from which the money should be paid remains to be answered. As said before, I held in the opinion quoted from above, that the damages or the cost and expense should be taken from the general fund, inasmuch as it is a general obligation against the county or the township. This leaves the only question remaining as to the fund from which the state should pay the damages or the cost and expense of reconstructing the driveway or approach. In this case I think the damages or the cost and expense of the reconstruction should be paid from the inter-county highway fund which is due the county in which the improvement is located, as provided in section 1221 G. C. (107 O. L. 131.)

While the state highway commissioner assumes jurisdiction over the building of a road, and the state pays a part of the cost and expense thereof, yet this is done only to the extent of the funds which may be due any county under said section. Therefore, the damages incident to the improvement over which the state highway commissioner assumes jurisdiction, should be paid from the same fund. Of course if it should be a main market road that is being improved under the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner, the damages or the cost of reconstructing the approach or driveway would be paid by the state from the main market road fund, under section 1221, supra.

As I understand it, this answers your question in full.

It might be held that under the last sentence of section 7212, supra, as amended, the cost of the construction of the approaches may be assessed against the lands along which they are constructed; but I think not. This sentence evidently applies to the provisions of the latter part of the section, to the effect that the authority making the improvement may construct new approaches, provided said authority finds that the approaches as they exist at the time are not suitable to the improvement about to be projected. In other words, I do not think the provisions of this sentence apply to those cases in which approaches or driveways are destroyed and are reconstructed, or damages paid to the abutting property owner.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney General,

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE AND HEALTH OFFICER.

The positions of director of public service and health officer are compatible if it is physically possible for one person to perform the duties of both positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—I am in receipt of your request for my written opinion as follows:

> "The health officer of the city of Circleville, Ohio, has resigned and left the city and the director of public service has been temporarily filling the duties of the health officer. We are requested by the solicitor of such city for the following information:
> Are the positions of director of public service and health officer of the city compatible?"

I have carefully examined the statutes pertaining to the offices of director of public service and health officer and find no statutory inhibition against one person holding both offices. It remains to be determined, then, whether or not these offices are incompatible within the meaning of the common law.

In the case of State ex rel vs. Gebhart, 12 O. C. C. (n. s.,) 274, the rule is laid down as follows:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other, or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

I am unable to see in practice how there could be any conflict in the duties of the two positions and it is my opinion that the offices of director of public service and health officer are not incompatible and may be held by the same person if it is physically possible for one person to perform the duties of both.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

INTEREST OR PREMIUM RECEIVED FROM SALE OF BONDS SHOULD BE COVERED INTO SINKING FUND.

Moneys received by way of accrued interest or premium in the sale of bonds issued under sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e G. C. should be covered into the sinking fund, from which said bonds are to be redeemed as required by the provisions of section 2295 G. C. as amended, 106 O. L., 493.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—I am in receipt of your favor of June 10th, 1918, in which you ask my opinion upon the following statement of facts:

"The concluding sentence of section 2295 G. C., as amended, 106 O. L. 493, provides what disposition shall be made of the premium and accrued interest on bond sales. We take it that this refers to such bonds as are issued by boards mentioned in section 2294 G. C., as amended, 106 O. L. 492. We find that sections 1223 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 133, 6929 as amended, 107 O. L. 101 and 3298-15e, 107 O .L. 79, each contain substantially the following provision:

'The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement or repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued,'

but it is well to note that each of these sections cited provides that the bonds shall be sold in an amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the respective shares, etc.

Question.—When bonds are sold under the sections above cited are the premium and accrued interest to be considered as a part of the proceeds of the sale and do these particular sections govern because of their being special provisions in place of the provisions cited in section 2295 G. C., as to the disposition of the premium and accrued interest?"

Section 2294 G. C., as amended, 106 O. L. 492 provides for the manner in which bonds issued by boards of county commissioners, boards of education, township trustees, or commissioners of free turnpikes, shall be advertised for sale.

Section 2295 G. C., as amended, 106 O. L. 492, referring to bonds issued by the authorities mentioned in section 2294, provides in part as follows:

"All moneys from the principal on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold, and all moneys from premiums and accrued interest on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the sinking fund from which said bonds are to be redeemed."

I do not deem it necessary to discuss at any length the provisions of sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e, as amended, 107 O. L. 79. It is sufficient to say that said sections authorize county commissioners and township trustees, respectively, to issue bonds for road improvement purposes, and each of said sections in terms quite identical provides that the proceeds of bonds therein set out shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement or repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued. The question made by you is with respect to the application of the above quoted provisions of section 2295 G. C. to moneys paid by way of accrued interest and premium on road improvement bonds issued under the respective sections of the General Code just noted; or more specifically, perhaps, the question is whether or not the provision in sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e that the proceeds of bonds issued under said respective sections shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement or repair of the highway for which the bonds are issued, has the effect of excepting moneys received by way of accrued interest and premium on such bonds from the provisions of section 2295 G. C.

The suggestion that this is the effect of this provision in said bond issuing sections of the General Code above noted, proceeds upon the assumption that said provision is incompatible with the general provisions of section 2295 G. C. with respect to the disposition to be made of accrued interest and premiums received on bonds issued by county commissioners and township trustees, and making such assumption, is predicated upon the rule of construction that if there are two acts, of which one is special and particular and includes the matter in controversy, while the other is general and would, if standing alone, include it also, and if reading the general provisions side by side with the particular one, the inclusion of that matter in the former would produce a conflict with it, it is to be taken that the latter was designed as an exception to the general provision.

In this connection, although it is not a matter of controlling importance, it may be noted that so far as sections 1223 and 6929 G. C. are concerned, the provision therein that the proceeds of bonds issued under said respective sections shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of the improvement for which the bonds are issued, it not to be considered as a later expression of the legislative will, than that indicated by the provision of section 2295 G. C. above quoted, and this for the reason that said provision of sections 1223 and 6929, as amended in the White-Mulcahy law of 1917, was likewise contained in said sections as enacted in the Cass law of 1915, ten days before the act amending section 2295 G. C. in its present form was enacted.

See State vs. Borham, 358-362. In re Hesse 93 O. S. 230, 235.

Sections 3298-15e G. C., as enacted in the White-Mulcahy road law of 1917, is in a measure a new section, taking the place of section 3298-8 G. C., as enacted in the Cass road law, which provided for an issue of bonds by township trustees for road purposes on a vote of the electors, and the provision in section 3298-15e that the proceeds of bonds issued thereunder shall be used exclusively to pay the cost and expense of the improvement for which they are issued is a new provision so far as this section is concerned. Inasmuch, however, as section 3298-15e G. C. is with sections 1223 and 6929 a part of what is intended to be a complete code of laws relating to the subject of road construction, improvement and repair, I do not apprehend that the particular provision here under consideration in section 3298-15e is in any event to receive a different construction or application from the same provisions in sections 1223 and 6929 G. C. However, as above indicated, no controlling importance in the consideration of this question is to be attached to the time when said respective statutory provisions were enacted, for if it be assumed that the special provision in sections 1223, 6929, and 3298-15e G. C. is in conflict with the general provisions of section 2295 G. C., above noted, the question here made is controlled by the rule of construction above noted, which, stated in another way, is that where there is a general act, and also a special act on the same subject in conflicting terms neither necessarily abrogates the other but both are permitted to stand together, and it is immaterial which is of the later date.

Commissioners vs. Board of Public Works, 39 O. S. 628, 630.

I am not persuaded, however, on a full consideration of the sections of the General Code involved in the consideration of your question, that any conflict exists between the special provision of sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e G. C. on one hand, and the provisions of section 2295 G. C. on the other.

It is a rule of construction as equally well established as that above noted that the provisions of a statute are to be construed in connection with all laws in pari materia, and especially with reference to the system of legislation of which they form a part, so that all the provisions may, if possible, have operation according to their plain import, and it is to be presumed that a code of statutes relating to one subject is governed by one spirit and policy and intended to be consistent and harmonious in its several parts.

In the case of Cincinnati vs. Conner, 55 O. S., 82, it was held that where in a code or system of laws relating to the particular subject a general policy is plainly declared, special provisions should, when possible, be given a construction which will bring such special provisions in harmony with that policy.

The above quoted provisions of section 2295 G. C. clearly declare a wise and beneficent policy with respect to the disposition of moneys received by way of accrued interest and premiums on all bonds sold by county commissioners and township trustees, and the provision above noted and found in section 1223 G. C., 6929 G. C. and 3298-15e G. C., should, if possible, receive a construction which will bring it in harmony with the declared policy indicated by the provisions of section 2295 G. C.

In ascertaining the legislative intent in the enactment of sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e G. C., we are not only permitted, but required, to read as in pari materia with the provisions of said sections the provisions of section 2295. Standing alone it may well be that the provision in said sections requiring the proceeds of bonds issued thereunder to be used for the cost and expense of the improvement for which they are issued, would cover moneys received by way of accrued interest and premiums as well as moneys representing the principal sum for which the bonds are issued. The word "proceeds" as used in connection with said section is one of general import, but it is likewise true that general words in a statute should be limited to the particular objects to which it is apparent the legislature intended to apply them (46 O. S. 595), and in this view, giving proper effect as I must to the provisions of section 2295 G. C., I find no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the legislature, in providing that the proceeds of bonds issued under sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e G. C. shall be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of improvements for which the bonds are issued, intended to provide for the application of the principal of such bonds only.

This view is likewise compelled by a consideration of other provisions of sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e G. C. Each of said sections contains the provision that bonds may be issued thereunder in an amount not to exceed the estimated cost and expense or portion thereof of the improvement for which such bonds are issued. In issuing bonds under said respective sections the county commissioners or township trustees, as the case may be, are not required to anticipate the amount of moneys to be received by them by way of accrued interest or premium in the sale of such bonds. This being true, such county commissioners or township trustees may issue bonds in a principal sum up to the estimate of the cost and expense or part thereof of the improvement for which the bonds are issued. The principal of bonds sold under these sections manifestly goes into the fund for the construction of the improvement for which the bonds are issued, and if in addition to this sum moneys received by way of accrued interest and premium on said bonds likewise goes into the road improvement fund, the authorities issuing such bonds will thereby realize moneys in excess of that necessary for the construction of the improvement contrary to what seems to be the intent and purpose of said sections.

For all of the above reasons I am of the opinion that moneys received by way of accrued interest for premium in the sale of bonds issued under sections 1223, 6929 and 3298-15e G. C. should be covered into the sinking fund from which said bonds are to be redeemed as required by the provisions of section 2295 G. C.

With the above request for opinion you submit to me a letter received by you from the auditor of Guernsey county in which inquiry is made as to the proper disposition of the sum of $15,976.48 received by the county commissioners by way of premium and accrued interest on road improvement bonds in the sum of $300,000.00 sold for the improvement of the National road through Guernsey county in 1914.

Without further information on the point I assume that said bonds were issued and sold by the county commissioners under section 1223 G. C., as amended in the act of April 18, 1913, for the purpose of paying the respective shares of said county, of the interested townships and of the owners of benefited property assessed for the construction of an improvement on said highway by the state highway commissioner.

Section 1223 G. C., as enacted in the provisions of said act of 1913, provided, as now, that the proceeds of bonds issued thereunder should be used exclusively for the payment of the cost and expense of construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of the highway for which the bonds were issued, while section 2295 of the General Code then provided that all moneys from both principal and premiums on the sale of bonds issued by county commissioners should be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold.

This being the state of the law at the time of the sale of the bonds in question, and there being nothing in the present provisions of section 2295 G. C. indicating that they are to receive anything but a prospective operation, the conclusion is inevitable that the moneys received by the commissioners of Guernsey county by way of premium and accrued interest on the sale of the bonds mentioned in the communication of the auditor belong properly to the road improvement fund, subject to transfer to the county debt fund under the provisions of section 5654 G. C., if it be found that such money is not needed for the construction of the improvement for which the bonds were issued.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GERMAN NEWSPAPER — LEGAL ADVERTISEMENT BY MUNICIPALITY.

The officers of a municipality in which the only newspaper published therein is printed in the German language are not compelled to insert the legal advertisement required by sections 4228, 4229, 4232 and 6255 in such German newspaper, unless it has a bona fide paid circulation of not less than 1,000 copies—Such advertisement in a German newspaper does not relieve the officers of a municipality from the obligation of advertising in the manner set forth in the first paragraph of section 4228.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—I am in receipt of your request for opinion which reads as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> We are referring you to sections 4228, 4229, 4232 and 6255 of the General Code, and are respectfully advising that 'The Minster Post,' a newspaper printed in the German language, is the only paper published in such municipality.
> Question 1—Are the officers of the village of Minster forced to insert their legal advertising in such newspaper?
> Question 2—Must such newspaper have a circulation of 1,000 copies within such municipality?"

You call my attention to sections 4228, 4229, 4232 and 6255, which sections provide as follows:

Section 4228—"Unless otherwise specifically directed by statute, all municipal ordinances, resolutions, statements, orders, proclamations, notices and reports, required by law or ordinance to be published, shall be published as follows: In two newspapers of opposite politics printed and of general circulation in such municipality, if there be such newspapers; if two newspapers of opposite politics are not printed and of general circulation in such municipality, then in any newspaper printed and of general circulation therein; if no newspaper is printed and of general circulation in such municipality, then in any newspaper of general circulation or by posting as provided in section forty-two hundred, thirty-two of the General Code, at the option of council.

In addition to the foregoing requirements, ordinances and resolutions required by law or ordinance to be published, shall be published in a newspaper in the German language printed in such municipality and having therein a bona fide paid circulation of not less than one thousand copies; proof of the place of printing and required circulation of any newspaper used as a medium of publication hereunder shall be made by affidavit of the proprietor of either of such newspapers, and shall be filed with the clerk of council."

Section 4229—"The publication required in section forty-two hundred and twenty-eight of the General Code shall be for the following times: Ordinances, resolutions and proclamations of elections, once a week for two consecutive weeks; notices not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks; all other matters shall be published at once."

Section 4232—"In municipal corporations in which no newspaper is printed as defined in section sixty-two hundred and fifty-five of the General Code, publication of ordinances, resolutions ,statements, orders, proclamations, notices and reports required by law or ordinance to be published, shall be published in either of the following methods, to be deterined by council, viz: By posting copies thereof in not less than five of the most public places in the municipality to be determined by council, for a period of not less than fifteen days, prior to the taking effect thereof, or, by publication thereof in any newspaper printed in Ohio and of general circulation in such municipality. Provided, however, notices to bidders for the construction of public improvements and notices of the sale of bonds shall be published in not more than two newspapers, printed in Ohio, and of general circulation in such municipality, for the time prescribed in section forty-two hundred and twenty-nine of the General Code. Where such publication is by posting, the clerk shall make a certificate of such posting and the times when and the places where done, in the manner provided in section forty-two hundred and thirty-one of the General Code, and such certificate shall be prima facie evidence that the copies were posted up as required."

Section 6255—"Whenever any legal publication is required by law to be made in a newspaper or newspapers published or printed in a municipality, county, or other political subdivision, the newspaper or newspapers used shall have at least one side thereof printed in such municipality, county, or other political subdivision; and whenever any legal publication is required by law to be made in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation in a municipality, county, or other political subdivision, without further restriction or limitation upon a selection of the newspaper to be used, such publication shall be made in a newspaper or newspapers at least one side of which is printed in such municipality, county, or other political subdivision, unless there be no such newspaper or newspapers so printed, in which event, only, such publication shall be made in any newspaper or newspapers of general circulation therein."

The supreme court of this state in the case of city of Cincinnati, etc., vs. Bickett et al., 26 O. S. 49, in passing upon the validity of advertising for bids for sewer construction published in one English and one German newspaper held:

"The objection that the publication of notice to bidders was made in one English and one German paper and not in two English papers, we incline to think was well taken. While there is some conflict of authorities on the question, we think it the safer and better rule to hold, as we do, that where a statute of the state requires a publication to be made in a newspaper, a paper published in the English language is to be intended, unless the contrary is expressed or indicated."

The rule laid down in the above case was sustained in the case of Schloenbach vs. The State ex rel., 53 O. S., 345; and at page 346 the court say:

"We perceive no error in the judgment of the circuit court. The duty of the commissioners in regard to publishing their report is governed wholly by section 917 of the Revised Statutes, and that section does not accord authority for either ordering such report published in a German newspaper, or paying for the same."

In 29 cyc. 1120, the rule is laid down as follows:

"While the rule supported by the weight of authority is that where the statute is silent as to the language in which either advertisement or newspaper is to be published, the advertisement must be printed in English in a newspaper printed in the same tongue, it has been held in at least one jurisdiction that publication in a German newspaper, but in the English language, is sufficient." (Citing a California case.)

See also—Turner, Auditor General vs. Hutchison, 71 N. W. (Mich.) 514; Connors vs. city of Lowell, 209 Mass., 111; Teylee vs. Hyde, 60 Fla., 389.

Under the rule as laid down in the above cases we must look to the statutes for specific authority to insert notices required by law to be published in a newspaper in the German language. Looking then to the sections referred to by you, the only authority we find for publishing municipal ordinances, resolutions, etc. in a newspaper printed in the German language is contained in the second paragraph of section 4228, which is as follows:

"* * * In addition to the foregoing requirements, ordinances and resolutions required by law or ordinance to be published, shall be published in a newspaper in the German language printed in such municipality and having therein a bona fide paid circulation of not less than one thousand copies; proof of the place of printing and required circulation of any newspaper used as a medium of publication thereunder shall be made by affidavit of the proprietor of either of such newspapers, and shall be filed with the clerk of council."

This part of the section above quoted makes it obligatory to publish municipal ordinances, resolutions, etc., in a newspaper printed in the German language under certain conditions, to-wit: that such newspaper have a bona fide paid circulation of not less than 1,000 copies. The first paragraph makes no mention of newspapers printed in the German language; therefore if these legal publications are to be made in a German newspaper at all they must be made under the conditions imposed by that part of the section just quoted. You will note that the advertising required by the latter part of said section is in addition to that required in the first part of the section, showing that the legislature undoubtedly required advertising other than that printed in a German newspaper.

It is my opinion that if there is no newspaper printed in the village of Minster in the English language and of general circulation therein, then such municipal ordinances, resolutions, etc., must be published in some newspaper printed in the English language and of general circulation therein, or by posting as provided by section 4232 G. C., and that the officers of the village of Minster cannot be compelled to insert their legal advertising in the "Minster Post" simply by reason of its being the only newspaper printed in the municipality. In other words that part of section 4228 which provides does not contemplate a German newspaper, but must be construed in the light of the decisions of our supreme court and other decisions to mean a newspaper printed in the English language. However, if the "Minster Post" qualifies under the latter part of said section, then the officers are compelled, in addition to the other publication required by the first part of the section, to insert such advertising in the "Minster Post."

> "if two newspapers of opposite politics are not printed and of general circulation in such municipality, then in any newspaper printed and of general circulation therein"

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LABORERS ON COUNTY EXPERIMENT FARMS NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION IF EMPLOYED CONTRARY TO RULES AND REGULATIONS ADOPTED BY BOARD OF CONTROL OF THE OHIO AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION.

1.—Inasmuch as the statutes pertaining to county experiment farms provide that all employes thereon are to be governed by the general rules and regulations of the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, a person employed to perform labor upon a county experiment farm is not entitled to compensation for labor so performed, if he were employed contrary to the rules and regulations adopted by the board of control.

2.—A contracting party is bound to know the provisions of law having to do with his employment, when he deals with an officer or agent of the state or any political subdivision thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, Wooster, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—I have a communication from the prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, Ohio, in which he encloses a letter received by him from Cary W. Montgomery, chief of the department of farm management, and upon which he has requested that I render an opinion. Said letter enclosed reads in part as follows:

> "The department of farm management, Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, has the general supervision of the county experiment farms. (See general orders Nos. 1 and 3, attached.)
> The local superintendent of each farm is required to make an estimate of the probable expenditures for each month and forward to the department for approval. (See order No. 10, attached.)
> For two years previous to July 1, 1917, D. R. Van Atta was local superintendent of the Hamilton county experimental farm located four miles north of Mt. Healthy. Some time during the month of May or June, 1917, Mr. Van Atta had the farm residence painted outside. A request to do said work had not been sent in on an estimate and allowed.
> Is the Hamilton County Experiment farm liable for the bill? Is the director of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station liable for the bill?"

We will consider a few of the sections of the General Code pertaining to the establishment of county experiment farms.

Section 1174 G. C. provides as follows:

> "In order to demonstrate the practical application under local conditions of the results of the investigations of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, and for the purpose of increasing the effectiveness of the agriculture of the various counties of the state, the commissioners of any county in the state are hereby authorized and empowered to establish an experiment farm within such county as hereinafter provided for."

Section 1176 G. C. provides that the county commissioners must submit the question of establishing a county experiment farm to the voters upon five per cent. of the electors signing a petition requesting such submission. Provision is then made for securing the necessary funds with which to establish the experiment farm.

Section 1177-4 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "The equipment of an experiment farm shall consist of such buildings, drains, fences, implements, live stock, stock feed and teams as shall be deemed necessary by the board of control for the successful work of such farm, and the initial equipment shall be provided by the county in which the farm is established, together with a sufficient fund to pay the wages of the laborers required to conduct the work of such farm during the first season. * * *."

That is, the board of county commissioners must provide for the initial equipment as well as funds to pay the wages of laborers for the first season.

Section 1177-5 G. C., covering the management of the county experiment farm after the same has been established, reads as follows:

> "Sec. 1177-5.—The management of all county experiment farms established under authority of this act shall be vested in the director of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment station, who shall appoint all employes and plan and execute the work to be carried on, in such manner as in his judgment will most effectively serve the agricultural interests of the county in which such farm may be located, the director and all employes being governed by the general rules and regulations of the board of control."

In order to intelligently answer the question submitted, it will be well for us to note the sources from which a county experiment station obtains the funds with which to manage the farm.

The latter part of section 1177-4 G. C. provides as follows:

"Sec. 1177-4— * * * The county commissioners shall appropriate for the payment of the wages of laborers employed in the management of such farms as may be established under this act, and for the purpose of supplies and materials necessary to the proper conduct of such farms such sums not exceeding two thousand dollars annually for any farm, as may be agreed upon between such county commissioners and the board of control."

Section 1177-8 G. C. reads as follows:

"Sec. 1177-8.—The produce of each county experiment farm as may be established under this act, over and above that required for the support of the teams and live stock kept on the farm, shall be sold and the proceeds applied to the payment of the labor and to the purchase of the supplies and materials required for the proper management of the farm as contemplated by this act, and for the maintenance of its equipment. Any surplus beyond these requirements shall be covered into the county treasury and placed to the credit of the general fund of the county, except in the case of the use of farms already belonging to the county, in which case the proceeds shall be placed to the credit of such fund as the county commissioners may designate."

From these two sections we note there are two sources of income:

(1) The county commissioners must appropriate annually a sum of money not to exceed two thousand dollars for the farm.

(2) The income derived from the farm, which must first be used for expenses that arise in conducting the operations of the farm.

We will now consider some of the rules and orders which have been adopted by the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, in reference to these county experiment farms.

While section 1177-5 G. C. provides that the management of all county experiment farms shall be vested in the director of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, yet such rules have been adopted and such orders made that the management of these county experiment farms is placed under a department known as the department of farm management.

In General Order No. 3 adopted by the board of control, through the director, Charles E. Thorne, we find the following in subdivision "(A)" thereof:

"(A) The department of farm management is organized for the general management of the county experiment farms. All plans for the work of these farms, and all business transactions concerning them, must be submitted to the department of farm management before being put into operation."

In order that there may be a local representative upon the grounds, provision is made in subdivision "(C)" of said General Code No. 3 as follows:

> "(C) The superintendent of the county experiment farm is the local representative of the department of farm management, and all employees and all work on the farm are under his supervision."

From these provisions it is seen that the director of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station appoints what is called a superintendent of the farm and this superintendent by virtue of his position becomes the local representative of the department of farm management and has the local supervision of all matters pertaining to the farm. In other words, the local superintendent becomes the agent of the department of farm management, through whom said department carries on the operations of the experiment farm.

In an order designated General Order No. 10, the department of farm management has adopted the following rule in subdivision "(B)" thereof:

> "In the latter part of each month an itemized statement of the probable receipts and expenses of the experiment farm for the coming month should be made out and forwarded to this office. No expenditure will be allowed except emergency unless it has first been authorized by this office."

In the amendment to General Order No. 10, under subdivision "(D)" we find the following provision:

> "On these estimates should be indicated in detail:
> 1. All items on account of which liability is to be incurred during the coming month. * * *."

With the provisions of the statutes and general orders, above quoted, in mind, let us now turn to the facts submitted by you. D. R. Van Atta was appointed local superintendent of the Hamilton county experiment farm, which position he held in the year 1917. As such local superintendent he employed a certain person to paint the farm residence. The department of farm management complains that Mr. Van Atta failed to obey the rules and orders of the department, in that he did not include in his report of expenses, likely to be incurred the following month, an estimate of the money needed to paint said farm residence.

The question now arising in your mind is whether this is sufficient in law to warrant a refusal of payment to the person who painted the house under his employment by the local superintendent of the experiment farm. The requirement for the superintendent to submit estimates of expenses to be incurred during the succeeding month arises under an order of the department of farm management, hereinbefore quoted. But it must be remembered that this is not a mere order of the department of farm management, but arises under the statutory provisions above quoted. Section 1177-5, supra, provides among other things that:

> " * * * the director and all employes being governed by the general rules and regulations of the board of control."

Of course there can be no question that Mr. Van Atta, the local superintendent, was merely an employe of the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, acting through the department of farm management.

The principle is well settled that a person dealing or contracting with an officer or agent of the state is bound to know the law and take the same into consideration when he deals or contracts with the officer or agent.

When the party who painted the farm residence came to deal with the local superintendent of the county experiment farm located in Hamilton county, he must be held to have known that this employe was governed entirely by the general rules and regulations of the board of control and hence it would be up to him to investigate as to what rules and regulations had been issued by the board of control to regulate the local superintendent in the performance of his duties pertaining to the experiment farm.

As said before, one of the orders issued by the department of farm management was to the effect that:

> "No expenditure will be allowed except emergency unless it has first been authorized by this office."

When the painter contracted with Mr. Van Atta, he must be held to have known of this regulation or order and hence to have known that Mr. Van Atta had not complied with said rule and regulation under which he was acting as local superintendent.

From the above principles I think it is clear that the Ohio Agricultural Experiment station, acting through its proper officials, is under no obligation in law to allow the claim presented by the one who painted the farm residence, and that no officer or agent of the state is under obligation to pay the same for and on behalf of the State of Ohio or the county of Hamilton.

As to whether Mr. Van Atta is liable upon the claim, due to the fact that he exceeded his authority in so employing the person who painted the farm residence, I am not considering, for this is a private matter and not one pertaining to the interests of the state or any political subdivision thereof. However, if the services were rendered in good faith by the one who painted the farm residence, and the same was in need of being painted, and the state and county have gotten value received from the labor performed upon said farm residence, you would, in my opinion, be justified in allowing the claim and permitting the same to be paid, but as stated above, you are under no obligation to do this as a matter of law. It simply rests with the proper officials, exercising a sound discretion as to whether they will allow the bill, notwithstanding the fact that Mr. Van Atta exceeded his authority in so employing the one who painted the farm residence.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF RICHWOOD, UNION COUNTY—$21,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

> In re bonds of the village of Richwood, Union county, Ohio, in the sum of $21,000.00, for the purpose of extending the time of payment of certain indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the said village is unable to pay at maturity.

GENTLEMEN—I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the village of Richwood relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be fatally defective in that the ordinance providing for the issue of said bonds does not make any provision for an annual tax levy for interest and sinking fund purposes as required by section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The foregoing constitutional provisions are obviously mandatory and I have no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove said bond issue by reason of the failure of council to comply with said provisions in the enactment of the ordinance providing for the issue of said bonds.

There are a number of other minor defects in the proceedings on the transcript as it now reads, most of which perhaps can be obviated by further information. Inasmuch, however, as the defect in the proceedings above noted compels me to disapprove the said issue, it will serve no useful purpose so far as you are concerned for me to discuss the other defects in the transcript.

I am of the opinion that said bond issue is invalid and that you should not purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FRANCHISE TAX—HOW REDEEMED PREFERRED STOCK CONSIDERED IN COMPUTING.

The redemption of preferred stock under favor of section 8669 General Code, as amended 107 Ohio Laws, 411, extinguishes such preferred stock, so that the amount redeemed is not to be taken into consideration as "subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock" in computing the basis of the franchise tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, June 29, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 19th requesting my opinion as follows:

> "In its report as a domestic corporation for profit for 1917 the Cincinnati Realty Company gave $1,550,000 as the amount of its subscribed and issued and outstanding capital stock. In 1918 $1,525,000 is given as the amount of such stock. In its report the company states a reduction of $25,000 of its preferred stock was made August 31, 1917.
> "We presume that this reduction was made by redeeming that amount of the issued and outstanding preferred stock. The company has not filed a certificate in the office of the Secretary of State reducing its authorized capital stock. Is this redeemed stock subject to the franchise fee of three-twentieths of one per cent? A number of corporations have made reductions in a similar manner.

"We make this inquiry in order that we may have your interpretation of section 8669 (O. L. 107, page 411) as affecting the amount of the subscribed or issued and outstanding stock determined by the commission as a basis of the franchise tax."

The section to which you refer reads as follows:

"Sec. 8669.—A corporation issuing both common and preferred stock may create designations, preferences, and voting powers, or restrictions or qualifications thereof, in the certificate of incorporation, and if desired, preferred stock may be made subject to redemption at not less than par, at a fixed time and price, to be expressed in the stock certificates thereof.

Preferred stock may also be redeemed in whole or part by purchase thereof by the corporation or by exchanging the same for common stock, or be converted into common stock, upon such terms as from time to time may be proposed by the board of directors and accepted by the holders thereof. Preferred stock redeemed may be cancelled by the board of directors, and if so cancelled shall not be reissued. A certificate of such cancellation shall be filed with the secretary of state, as a certificate of reduction. Thereupon the authorized capital stock of such corporation shall be reduced by the amount stated in said certificate."

The new matter inserted in this section by the amendment is the second paragraph thereof. From its original enactment in 1902 the section, then a part of section 3235a of the Revised Statutes, has always contained the language now found in its first paragraph.

Your question is asked, I take it, in view of section 5498 of the General Code, which imposes a tax or "fee" upon the corporate franchise of a domestic corporation for profit measured by "its subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock." The real problem, then, is to determine whether preferred stock which has been "redeemed" as provided in section 8669 G. C. otherwise than by conversion into common stock at par or exchanged for common stock at par, but which has not been "canceled" as therein provided, is to be considered as "subscribed capital stock" or as "issued and outstanding capital stock" within the meaning of section 5498 G. C.

The status of common stock which, whether legally or illegally, has after issuance been purchased or otherwise acquired by the corporation and constitutes so-called "treasury stock" has been considered in several opinions of this department; and it has been uniformly held that such stock, though belonging to the corporation, retains its character of "issued and outstanding capital stock" within the meaning of section 5498 General Code and its predecessor, the original Willis law of 1902. (See annual report of Attorney-General 1907, page 84, per Wade H. Ellis, attorney-general; Opinions of Attorney-General 1916, Volume I, page 288, Volume II, page 1322, per Edward C. Turner, Attorney-General.) There was, to be sure, some difference in the reasoning of these opinions, in that Attorney-General Ellis seemed to regard such "treasury stock" as "issued and outstanding," while Attorney-General Turner seemed to be of the opinion that it would come more appropriately under the designation of "subscribed" capital stock.

Whichever of these views be correct, I am content at the present time to follow the general conclusion that common stock of this character is to be included in the amount upon which the franchise tax is to be computed, upon the ground that the question may be regarded as authoritatively settled by long continued administrative ruling, if upon no other ground.

But it must be admitted that it does not necessarily follow from this conclusion that preferred stock which has been redeemed in pursuance of specific statutory authority is to be likewise treated. It could not be treated as "subscribed stock" if the statute with reference to its redemption had been complied with, because the contract of subscription for it would have been fully discharged. It would seem, therefore, that the only question which could arise with reference to preferred stock which had been redeemed but not canceled would be with respect to its character as "issued and outstanding capital stock."

At this point a brief analysis of section 8669 with regard to the possibilities thereunder may be helpful. The section provides for the "redemption" of preferred stock in four ways, viz:

(1) At a fixed time and price, to be expressed in the certificates.
(2) By purchase by the corporation at any time.
(3) By exchange for common stock.
(4) By conversion into common stock.

Whether the purchase and exchange may be made upon such terms as may be proposed by the board of directors and accepted by the holders, or whether this freedom of contract as to terms is extended only with respect to conversion into common stock, is a question which I do not find it necessary to decide in considering the present question. I will, however, discuss the question upon the hypothesis that the purchase and the exchange for common stock may be made upon such terms as may be proposed by the board of directors and accepted by the holders.

It is further provided in the section that preferred stock which has been redeemed may be canceled and if so canceled shall not be re-issued, but that a certificate of cancellation shall be filed with the secretary of state as a certificate of reduction and shall have the effect of reducing the authorized capital stock.

Let me now point out that if preferred stock is redeemed by conversion into common stock at par its "cancellation" needs must be automatic, and that in such case a certificate of cancellation need not be filed with the secretary of state. It seems to be only when the effect of the cancellation of the shares is to reduce the authorized capital stock of the company that such a certificate need be filed. Suppose, for example, a corporation has an authorized capital stock of $1,000,000 divided into $700,000 common and $300,000 preferred, and that the $300,000 preferred is converted into common stock at par; the corporation will then have $1,000,000 common and no preferred, and it will not have authority to issue or "re-issue" any preferred because its total authorized capital stock is $1,000,000. In such case the "cancellation" of the redeemed preferred capital stock would not reduce the authorized capital stock of the corporation at all, and in such event, therefore, the filing of a certificate of reduction would seem to be unnecessary. In such a case, moreover, the amount upon which the franchise tax would have to be computed would remain the same, because it could not possibly be argued that the"redeemed" preferred stock had any existence for any purpose when it had been "converted" into common. Indeed, another way of looking at this process is to regard the "conversion" not as a real "redemption" at all, but as a mere change in the character of issued and outstanding stock. It is clear that such conversion can be made only as to issued and outstanding stock and not as to unissued stock because it is to be made upon terms proposed by the board of directors and accepted by the "holders" thereof, necessarily implying that it must be outstanding.

This process of conversion seems to offer no other possibilities, for, considered as a mere change in the character of existing stock, it could not be effected in such a way as to require the issuance of stock of additional par value nor to change the par value of the existing shares. That is to say, despite the ability of the directors and the holders of the outstanding preferred stock to agree upon "terms" of conversion, I do not believe it would be legal for outstanding preferred stock of the par value of $100.00 a share to be converted into common of the par value of $200.00 a share, nor into common of the par value of $50.00 a share. Nor could the par value of outstanding stock be in any way affected by such a conversion; the "terms" must relate to the actual cash capital to be contributed by the holders of the preferred for the privilege of having stock converted into common or by the corporation for the privilege of making the conversion. Inasmuch, however, as all questions relating to the franchise tax depend for their solution upon the par value of the shares, what these terms may be would be immaterial so long as the par value remained constant.

But, assuming the ability of the directors and the holders of the preferred stock to agree upon "terms" of exchange the same reasoning would not necessarily apply. It does not appear from the section that preferred stock is to be exchanged for common stock at par. Conceivably it may be exchanged upon other terms. Suppose—to put a question about other features of which there will not be doubt—the corporation which has been used for purposes of illustration had issued of its authorized common stock of $700,000 but $400,000, and that an exchange of $150,000 of its outstanding preferred stock for common stock on the basis of two shares of common for one of preferred had been agreed upon, the corporation would emerge from this process with an increase in its issued and outstanding capital stock of $150,000 and with all its authorized common stock issued, but with $150,000 of its authorized preferred stock redeemed and apparently subject to reissue.

Your question requires me to consider upon such facts whether or not this $150,000 should be regarded as "issued and outstanding capital stock," although taken in by the corporation in return for common stock which had already actually increased the basis of its franchise tax—whether, putting it in another way, the corporation should now pay on $300,000 more of issued and outstanding stock than formerly, or only on $150,000 more, without filing a certificate of cancellation.

Of course, I have assumed in stating this question that the right to exchange can only be exercised when the originally authorized common stock has not been fully issued, and then only by the use of unissued common stock. This I believe to be the law.

But suppose the redemption of the preferred stock is made in one of the first two ways, i. e., either according to the terms of the preferred stock certificates or upon other terms of purchase not involving the issuance of common stock in exchange or the conversion of the preferred shares into common; the facts here would always be much simpler, and the question would be as to the status of the preferred which had been redeemed but not canceled. There would seem to be no difference, for the purposes of your question, between redemption in accordance with the terms of the stock certificates and redemption otherwise.

The word "redeemed" or the substantive "redemption," whichever may be employed, seem to embody the idea of repurchase.

See Westerfield, Bonte Co. vs. Burnett, (Ky.) 195 S. W. 477; Booth vs. Union Fibre Co. (Minn.) 162 N. W., 677.

See also Words and Phrases Judicially Construed, and cases cited.

The question now is as to whether these terms carry with them also the idea of extinguishment of the stock itself as a necessary incident to its redemption. It is very clear from the section that in cases wherein the process of redemption is worked out in one of the first three methods above described it does not deprive the corporation of the power to "re-issue" such stock, unless it has been also "canceled." In other words, it is clear that the word "redeem" does not mean that the effect of the process shall be to reduce the authorized capital stock unless the last step therein has been taken. Even when the "redemption" is made by converting the preferred into common stock the authorized capital stock is not reduced, but the proportions of preferred and common respectively, representing such authorized capital stock, are automatically changed.

We have it, then, that the redeemed stock, save where it has been converted into common stock, may be "re-issued." Does this mean that the same stock is to be issued over again, or does it mean that the authority to issue stock may again be exercised though the stock to be issued is not the same stock which was redeemed? In my opinion, the answer to this question is the same regardless of which of the first three methods of redemption has been employed. It is true that if redemption is made according to the first method the original certificate would never be used again because according to its own terms it would be a nullity; but this same remark would apply to all preferred stock having a definite redemption date, whether redeemed at that date or prior thereto.

In my opinion, the word "re-issue" which is used in this context does not mean the mere sale of stock as an asset; it means at least the issuance of a new certificate; it must mean this in the case of stock redeemed in accordance with the first method, and I think it also means it in the other two cases now under consideration.

If this is true, then the stock which has been purchased or acquired by exchange on the part of the corporation has no real existence as stock after the process is complete, for though the certificate is not the stock but merely evidence of it, it at least defines the contractual relation which is the basis of the reciprocal rights of the parties in the case of preferred stock. When ordinary common stock is in the treasury of the corporation after purchase by it, it is not "re-issued" when the corporation comes to dispose of it; it is sold, and in the meantime it has been an asset in the corporate treasury and in a very real sense the corporation has been one of its own stockholders. Not so with preferred stock which has been redeemed. When it leaves the corporation again it must be re-issued; a new contract must be entered into creating a new and distinct relation between the corporation and the person to whom the stock is issued. This is clearly true in the first case, for the old contract embodied in the first issue of stock is discharged and there will be nothing which the corporation as the holder of a contract with itself could assign to a third party. Inasmuch as the statute, as I have already said, treats the effect of all three processes alike this fact becomes determinative.

If these things are true then it must follow that the redemption of preferred stock in any of the first three methods extinguishes the stock so that it has no existence for the purpose of the franchise tax.

The word "cancellation" in the context under consideration would seem to suggest a contrary result; inasmuch as this term is most appropriately used to describe a process which puts an end to existing contract rights. I conclude, however, that what is meant by "cancellation" is the renunciation of the corporation's privilege of re-issuing the stock. It will be observed that the corporation apparently has the option whether to renounce this privilege or not, as the filing of a certificate of cancellation is not compulsory. It will be observed also that the effect of the filing of such a certificate is to reduce the authorized capital stock, i. e., deprive the corporation of the privilege of re-issuing so much stock. On the whole, then, I find no difficulty in assigning to the word "cancellation" in this context such a meaning as will harmonize it with the necessary effect of redemption of preferred stock in the first of the above described methods.

For the reason, then, that when preferred stock is "redeemed" at the "fixed time and place * * * expressed in the stock certificates thereof" such redemption ipso facto puts an end to that stock, as such, though not necessarily to the authority of the corporation to "re-issue" it upon new terms, and for the reason that there is no discrimination in the section as between this method of redemption and the other two which would leave authority in the corporation to "re-issue such stock," I arrive at the conclusion that stock which has been redeemed in any of the first three methods above referred to, but as to which no certificate of cancellation has been filed with the secretary of state, is neither "subscribed" nor "issued and outstanding capital stock" within the meaning of section 5498 of the General Code.

In the specific case put by you the result is that the amount of franchise taxes to be paid by the corporation referred to by you will be smaller for 1918 than for the previous year, if it be assumed that the reduction in the amount of issued and outstanding capital stock was made in compliance with the statutes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

REBUILDING COURT HOUSE DESTROYED BY FIRE—PROCEDURE—BUILDING COMMISSION—JAIL PRISONERS MAY NOT BE USED TO REMOVE DEBRIS FROM BUILDING DESTROYED.

1.—Where a court house is destroyed by fire, the county commissioners are not compelled to submit the question of the policy of rebuilding the same to a vote of the people of the county. This by virtue of the provisions of section 2436 G. C.

2.—In the reconstruction of a court house which has been destroyed by fire, a building commission must be appointed as provided in section 2333 G. C. and the provisions of this section as well as the provisions of the sections following must be carried out by the county commissioners.

3.—In removing the debris from a court house which has been destroyed by fire, the county commissioners can not use the labor of persons confined in the county jail in the doing of said work.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1918.

HON. THOMAS F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR—I have your communication of June 13, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Clark county's court house was gutted by fire several months ago. The walls remain uninjured according to state officials. The commissioners have received $54,000.00 insurance on said building. Plans have been submitted to rebuild the court house at a cost of $48,000.00. Have the commissioners authority to expend an amount not to exceed $50,000.00 in rebuilding the court house without first submitting the question to the voters of Clark county or having a building commission appointed by the court? If the commissioners have such authority, may they make use of the labor of prisoners, confined in the county jail and subject to labor on the county roads, in removing the debris from the building?"

Your communication naturally divides itself into three different questions, especially must it be so divided when it comes to giving an answer to the matters set out therein.

The three questions are as follows:

(1)—Have your commissioners the authority to expend an amount not to exceed $50,000 in rebuilding the court house, which was destroyed by fire, without first submitting the question to the voters of Clark county?

(2)—Have your commissioners authority to proceed to reconstruct the court house without the necessity of having a building commission appointed by the court of common pleas?

(3)—Have the commissioners authority to use the labor of prisoners confined in the county jail in removing the debris from the building?

In reference to the question of submission, it will be well for us to keep in mind that there are two different provisions of the statutes in reference to submission for the construction of a building such as you have in mind.

Section 2333 G. C., provides that the county commissioners shall submit the question of issuing bonds of the county to a vote of the electors thereof when the erection of a court house costs more than $25,000.

Section 5638 G. C. provides that the county commissioners shall not levy a tax, appropriate money or issue bonds for the purpose of building county buildings, the expense of which will exceed $15,000, without first submitting to the voters of the county the question as to the policy of making such expenditure.

Your question now is as to whether the county commissioners may proceed to reconstruct a court house costing not to exceed $50,000 without submitting the question to the voters of Clark county. Of course, under the circumstances you will not need to issue bonds for the purpose of reconstructing the court house, as you have sufficient money on hands to reconstruct the same without issuing bonds. But the provisions of section 5638 G. C. are still to be considered.

Section 2436 G. C. provides as follows:

"For the purpose of rebuilding an infirmary or court house, destroyed by fire or other casualty, the commissioners of a county may appropriate money, levy tax, issue and sell the bonds of such county in anticipation thereof, in an amount not to exceed fifty thousand dollars, without first submitting to the voters of said county, the question of rebuilding such infirmary or court house, appropriating such money, levying such tax and issuing and selling such bonds."

The part of this section which is to be particularly noted is that if the court house does not exceed $50,000, the county commissioners may proceed with the construction of the same "without first submitting to the voters of said county;" then follow two different propositions,—(1) "the question of rebuilding such infirmary or court house," and (2) "appropriating such money, levying such tax and issuing and selling such bonds." From these provisions it is quite clear that if the court house can be reconstructed at a cost not to exceed $50,000, both the provisions of sections 2333 and 5638 do not obtain.

Hence, answering your first question specifically, it is my opinion that under the facts set out in your communication, your county commissioners can proceed with the reconstruction of the court house without submitting the question as to the policy of making such expenditure to a vote of the people of your county.

The next question to be considered is: Can the county commissioners also proceed without the necessity of appointing a building commission as provided for in section 2333 G. C.?

In reference to this question, I desire to call your attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, found in Annual Reports of Attorney-General, 1911-12, Volume II, page 1142. In this opinion Mr. Hogan was passing upon the question as to whether a county infirmary which had been destroyed by fire could be rebuilt without the intervention of a building commission as provided for in section 2333 G. C. In this opinion he was considering the provisions of section 2436 G. C., the same one that is involved in this case. In the second branch of the syllabus he held:

> "Under section 2436 General Code, when an infirmary has been destroyed by fire, the commissioners are empowered to appropriate money, levy tax, and issue and sell bonds in anticipation of said tax in an amount not to exceed $50,000 without submission to the vote of the electors."

In the third branch of the syllabus he held:

> "While this section" (that is, section 2436 G. C.) "presents an exception to that part of sections 2333-2343, General Code, providing for a submission to the electors the question of issuing bonds for county buildings in excess of $25,000, it in no way excepts any of the other restrictions of these sections, providing for a building commission, etc."

In the opinion on page 1144 he held as follows:

> "I take it that all of said sections are mandatory and are to be strictly followed by the commissioners; and if there were no exception to the provisions of the above mentioned sections, then the procedure therein contained would be the exclusive method by which such county buildings would be constructed and erected. But there is an exception, at least in respect to the building of an infirmary building when the same has been destroyed by fire, as provided in section 2436, General Code, which reads as follows:"

Mr. Hogan then quotes the section, which at that time did not include the rebuilding of a court house, but it has been since amended so as to include a court house, as shown in the section, as hereinbefore quoted.

Mr. Hogan then concluded:

> "So that it follows, whenever by reason of fire or other casualty, an infirmary is destroyed, the commissioners may resort to the power given them by the legislature in said section 2436, which is an exception to the provisions of sections 2333 to 2342, General Code, inclusive, and that the commissioners may proceed under said section 2436 to rebuild such county infirmary without first submitting the proposition to a vote of the people of the county."

Mr. Hogan rendered another opinion found in Annual Reports of the Attorney-General, 1914, Volume I. page 251, having to do with this same matter. In this opinion he seemed to weaken somewhat in reference to the holding in the opinion above cited and quoted. He did this on account of an opinion rendered by the supreme court in McKenzie vs. State, 76 O. S., 369. But he still maintained that his original conclusion was correct, using the following language:

"I still am inclined to the view that it would be at least the safer policy to follow the building commission act in constructing a county building, the cost of which exceeds $25,000."

I think Mr. Hogan was right in his holding in both of said opinions. I am of the opinion that the first conclusion reached by him is correct, and that it is not only the safer policy to follow the building provision in reference to a building commission as set out in section 2333 G .C., but that this is an absolutely essential provision in reference to the building of a county building which costs to exceed $25,000.

I want to call your attention in reference to this matter to an opinion rendered by me and found in Volume I, page 585 of the 1917 opinions.

While I did not have your specific question under consideration in rendering that opinion, yet I arrived at conclusions therein which will possibly be of some assistance to you in the matter which you have under consideration. In that opinion I found that not only did the provisions of sections 2333 to 2342 G .C. inclusive, apply to the matter of erecting a county building to cost over $25,000, but that also the provisions of section 2343 to 2361 G. C. inclusive, apply as well; that is, that while original sections 2333 to 2342 formed one act, and section 2342 to 2361 formed another act, yet, when these matters were codified by the legislature in 1910, section 2338 G. C. was so amended as to combine and unite these two acts into one, and that the provisions of sections 2333 to 2361 must be followed in the matter of erecting a county building to cost in excess of $25,000.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that it would be necessary for you to proceed in the matter of the reconstruction of the court house by having the common pleas court appoint a building commission in conformity with the provisions of section 2333 G. C.

Your third question is as to whether the county commissioners can use persons confined in the county jail in the matter of removing the debris from the interior of the walls of the court house as they now stand.

In your communication you connect this question up with the question as to whether they can proceed without the building commission, but as I view it, the question as to whether a building commission is necessary or not, has nothing to do with the removal of the debris from the building as it now stands.

I am of the opinion that it is the duty of the county commissioners to remove the debris from the building, and that after this is done, the building commission in connection with the county commissioners would proceed under the provisions of section 2333 et seq.

This question was pretty carefully considered in the case of State ex rel. vs. Green, et al. 18 O. N .P. n. s. 97. In that case a taxpayer raised the question that the matter of removing the debris of a court house which had been destroyed by fire, and the matter of building the new court house should not be taken together and let as one contract. In this case the court held that the two matters could be taken together; but it is to be noted in the opinion on page 117 that the court laid considerable stress, in arriving at its conclusion, upon the fact that much of the material which was found in the debris of the old building was to be used in the construction of the new one. That is, in this case, the walls and everything were destroyed, while in the case under consideration, the walls are left standing, and undoubtedly no material part of the debris, which is now within the walls, could be used in the erection of the new building, and for this reason it would seem to me to be safer to follow the course above outlined by me.

Of course, in reference to this matter you are more familiar with the facts in the case, and you will be better able to judge whether you ought to follow the course outlined by me, or whether you ought to follow the course as passed upon by the court in State ex rel. vs. Green, supra.

With this in mind, let us proceed to the answering of your third question.

In 98 Ohio Laws, 177, there is an act which has to do with the employment of convict labor. This act was given sectional numbering 2228 G. C. etc. Section 2228 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, the board of managers of the Ohio State reformatory, or other authority, shall make no contract by which the labor or time of a prisoner in the penitentiary or reformatory, or the product or profit of his work, shall be let, farmed out, given or sold to any person, firm, association or corporation. Convicts in such institutions may work for, and the products of their labor may be disposed of, to the state or a political division thereof, or for or to a public institution owned or managed and under the control of the state or a political division thereof, for the purposes and according to the provisions of this chapter."

It is to be noted in this section that convicts may work for the state or a political division thereof for the purposes "and according to the provisions of this chapter." This language makes it necessary for us to turn to the other provisions of the chapter to ascertain when convicts may labor for a state or for a political division thereof.

Section 2230 G. C. provides as follows:

> "Such labor shall be (1) for the purpose of the manufacture and production of supplies of such institutions, the state or political divisions thereof; (2) for a public institution owned, managed and controlled by the state or a political division thereof; (3) for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution, or in the work of such construction or repair; (4) for the purpose of industrial training and instruction, or partly for one and partly for the other of such purposes; (5) in the manufacture and production of crushed stone, brick, tile, and culvert pipe, suitable for draining wagon roads of the state, or in the preparation of road building and ballasting material."

Section 2238 G. C. provides in part:

> "In such counties, the board of commissioners, whenever practicable, shall cause to be worked as provided in this chapter all convicts so sentenced to imprisonment at hard labor," etc.

The provision of this section, I think, can be held to refer back to the provisions of section 2230 G .C. So that the provisions that are made in section 2230 would apply not only to the state, but also to a county.

The question now is as to whether there is any provision in section 2230 G. C. which would warrant the county commissioners in using the labor of persons sentenced to the county jail for the purpose of removing the debris from the court house walls as it now stands. The only provision in section 2230 G. C. which could be made to apply to your matter would be the one above designated as No. 2, namely, "for a public institution, owned, managed and controlled by the state or a political division thereof;" or No. 3, "for the preparation and manufacture of building material for the construction or repair of a state institution, or in the work of such construction or repair."

Is a court house an institution, either state or county? I do not think it is an institution in any sense, and especially in the sense in which the legislature evidently used the term "institution" in said section. The legislature evidently had in mind such activities of the state or county as the Ohio penitentiary or the activities which have to do with the blind or the deaf or the incorrigible youth of the state, such as the Boys' Industrial Farm or the Girls' Industrial School.

In view of all the above, it is my opinion that your county commissioners could not use the labor of those persons confined in the county jail to remove the debris in question.

In arriving at this conclusion I am not unmindful of the provisions of section 2227-4 G. C. which reads as follows:

> "No other articles than those specified in section 2 of this act shall be manufactured, but nothing herein shall prevent the employment of any person so confined, elsewhere than within the jail or workhouse where he has been committed by any political subdivision, nor impair or affect any contract heretofore made."

It is to be noted that this section provides, "but nothing herein shall prevent the employment of any person so confined, elsewhere than within the jail or workhouse where he has been committed." This might be construed as giving authority to employ persons confined in jails or workhouses for the work you have under consideration; but this section should not, in my opinion, be given such a construction. It simply provides that there is nothing in this act which shall prevent the employment of any person outside of the jail or workhouse, but in order to get the authority so to employ, we must look elsewhere in the statutes, and as said before, the authority elsewhere given does not seem to be broad enough to include your matter.

Neither am I unmindful of an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, found in Annual Reports of the Attorney General, 1913, Volume I, page 502. In this opinion he assumed, without raising any question, that a state arsenal is a state institution or building. There is not much question but that a state arsenal is a state building, but not all state buildings are state institutions.

While I do not pass upon the question as to whether a state arsenal is a state institution or not so as to come within the provisions of section 2230 G. C., yet I am of the opinion that a court house is not a county institution, and therefore could not be brought within the provisions of said section. It is to be noted that said section does not include the term "building," but merely the term "institution."

In coming to the above conclusion I have considered that what your county commissioners are about to do is to erect a court house and not merely repair or alter an old one. It is to be noted that the provisions of section 2333 G. C. apply only in those cases in which the county commissioners are about to erect a court house or other county building.

If what your county commissioners are about to do is merely to repair or alter the court house of the county, then the provisions of section 2333 G. C. would not apply, but the provisions of section 2343 would make it possible for the county commissioners to do this without the necessity of there being a building commission.

There is a line, of course, somewhere that divides those enterprises which have to do on the one hand with the erection of county buildings, and which have to do on the other hand with the mere repair or alteration of the same. Without having all the facts before me, it is impossible for me to say whether the matter about which your county commissioners are about to enter is one that falls upon one side of the line or the other; but if there is any doubt in your mind as to this question, I would resolve it in favor of proceeding under section 2333 G. C. rather than resolve it in favor of the other course, as there would be less liability of your getting into trouble and difficulty by following that course than there would be by following the other.

In reference to this matter I might call your attention to a case found in 5 O. N. P. 260, styled State ex rel. vs. Board of Commissioners of Ottawa county. In this case the court went into the matter to a considerable length based upon facts which are very similar to those with which you have to deal, and found along the line that the provisions of section 2333 et seq. should be followed.

I also call your attention to a case found in 24 O. S. 492, styled Commissioners vs. Croweg et al. This case is not so nearly in point as the one before cited, but the principles therein set out may assist you somewhat in deciding as to the point in question.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE— SECRETARY OF THE BOARD OF CEMETERY TRUSTEES OF A UNION CEMETERY AND VILLAGE CLERK.

The positions of secretary of the board of cemetery trustees of a union cemetery and the clerk of the village, which with the township constitutes the joint cemetery, are compatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN.—I am in receipt of your request for my opinion upon the following:

> "Statement of Facts
> In a joint cemetery of village and township, operated by the cemetery trustees in accordance with law, the secretary of the cemetery trustees, receiving compensation for his services, is the clerk of the village, which with the township constitute the joint cemetery.
> Questions—Are the positions of village clerk and secretary of cemetery trustees compatible, and can the one person draw the two compensations?"

I have carefully examined the statutes and find no statutory restriction against the secretary of the board of trustees of a union cemetery holding the position of clerk of the village which with the township constitutes the joint cemetery. It will be necessary, then, to ascertain whether or not there is any incompatibility in these two positions under the common law.

The rule is laid down in the case of State ex rel. vs. Frank Gebert, 12 O. C .C. (n. s.) 274-275, as follows:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

The following sections of the General Code are pertinent to your inquiry:

Section 4283.—"In the following provisions of this chapter, the word 'city' shall include 'village,' and the word 'auditor' shall include 'clerk.'"

Section 4284.—"At the end of each fiscal year, or oftener if required by council, the auditor shall examine and audit the accounts of all officers and departments. He shall prescribe the form of accounts and reports to be rendered to his department, and the form and method of keeping accounts by all other departments, and, subject to the powers and duties of the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, shall have the inspection and revision thereof. Upon the death, resignation, removal or expiration of the term of any officer, the auditor shall audit the accounts of such officer, and if such officer be found indebted to the city, he shall immediately give notice thereof to council and to the solicitor, and the latter shall proceed forthwith to collect the indebtedness."

Under the last above quoted section of the General Code it is the duty of the clerk of the village to audit the accounts of all officers and departments of said village. Therefore, it becomes necessary, in answering your question, to determine whether or not these cemetery trustees of the union cemetery are officers of the village which is united with a township for cemetery purposes within the meaning of this section. This consideration is necessary because of the fact that if it should be that they are such officers and it is therefore necessary for the clerk to examine and audit their accounts, which accounts would of course be made up by their secretary, then under the rule as laid down in the case of State ex rel. vs. Gebert, supra, the two positions of which you inquire would be incompatible.

In the determination of this question we must, then, ascertain how the trustees of a joint cemetery are appointed. Section 4193-1 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"At any such joint meeting or at the joint meeting provided for by section 4192 of the General Code, by a majority vote of all present counting council members and trustees, such meeting may elect a board of cemetery trustees consisting of three members, of which one or more must be a member of each of the separate boards of township trustees and municipal councils comprised in the union cemetery association represented by such joint meeting. * * * *."

You will note that this section, after providing for a board of trustees, says:

"Of which one or more must be a member of each of the separate boards of township trustees and municipal councils comprised in the union cemetery association represented by such joint meeting."

This provision is somewhat ambiguous, and at first sight it appears that the legislature in saying "of which (speaking of the board of trustees) one or more, etc.," intended simply that one member of the board chosen must be a member of either the village council or township trustees, but the following part of the section wherein it says "must be a member of each of the separate boards" leads me to the conclusion that the legislature intended that each separate board represented at the joint meeting must have representation on the board of cemetery trustees, or, in other words, in a case where a village united with a township for cemetery purposes, at least one member of the board of cemetery trustees must be a member of council and one a member of the township trustees represented at each meeting, but both the council and township trustees must have representation on such board.

I have gone into this discussion for the purpose of showing that the board of cemetery trustees is made up of one municipal officer and one township officer, and therefore it could not be said that the members of said board of cemetery trustees are municipal officers or that such board is a municipal department. This board, as above pointed out, is selected jointly by municipal and township officers, and neither the township nor the municipality separately has control over such board. It is a joint board, and entirely separate and distinct from each branch of local government represented, and is neither a township nor a municipal board.

This is borne out by the fact that the funds derived from the sale of lots, etc., in the cemetery are not turned into the village treasury nor into the township treasury, but are under the control and charge of the cemetery trustees. (Sections 4193 and 4167 G. C.) Therefore, the clerk of the village, under section 4284 G. C. would not be compelled, nor would he have any authority, to examine and audit the accounts of the board of cemetery trustees, and therefore would not be a check upon the board of cemetery trustees or the secretary of such board.

I know of no way in which the positions of secretary of the board of cemetery trustees of a union cemetery and the clerk of the village, which with the township constitutes the joint cemetery, are incompatible, and, therefore, advise you that said positions may be held by one person if it is physically possible for one person to perform the duties of both offices.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF ANTRIM TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT OF WYANDOT COUNTY—$20,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN—

> In re bonds of Antrim township rural school district of Wyandot county, Ohio, in the sum of $20,000.00 for the purpose of completing the construction of a partially built school house in said school district.

I have made a careful examination of the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Antrim Township Rural School District, relating to the above issue of bonds. Said issue of bonds is one approved by the electors of said school district at a special election held in accordance with the provisions of section 7625, et seq., General Code, and I find the proceedings relating thereto to be in conformity with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue has been submitted to me and I am therefore holding the transcript of the proceedings relating to this issue until such bond form is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHIROPRACTOR NOT AUTHORIZED TO SIGN DEATH CERTIFICATE UNDER SECTION 210 G. C.

A chiropractor is not authorized to sign a death certificate under section 210 G. C., and he is not a "physician" as that term is used in said section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1918.

Bureau of Vital Statistics, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have asked for an opinion as to the right of a chiropractor to sign a death certificate when one of his patients dies without a regular physician having been called.

Section 204 G. C. provides for the necessity of a burial or removal permit and that—> " * * *. No such burial or removal permit shall be issued by any registrar until a complete and satisfactory certificate of death has been filed with him, as hereinafter provided."

Section 209 G. C. provides for the contents of the certificate of death, while section 210, providing by whom such certificate shall be signed, contains the following:

> " * * * The medical certificate shall be made and signed by the physician, if any, last in attendance on deceased, who shall state the time in attendance, the time he last saw the deceased alive, and the hour of the day at which death occurred. He shall further state the cause of death, so as to show the course of disease or sequence of causes resulting in death, giving the primary cause, the contributory causes, if any, and the duration of each."

Section 212 G. C. makes provision for certificate in case of death without medical attendance.

So it is seen that the statute requires the medical certificate of death to be signed by "the physician," if any, who is last in attendance on the deceased.

Your sole question is whether or not a chiropractor under the Ohio law is embraced within the term "physician" as used in this section.

Section 1274 G. C. provides for the issuance of a certificate to practice medicine or surgery after an examination as prescribed by law and among other things contains this language:

> " * * *. Such certificate when deposited with the probate judge as required by law, shall be conclusive evidence that the person to whom it is issued is entitled to practice medicine or surgery in this state. * * *."

The word "physician" is defined by Cyc. as—> "a person who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution; one lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine."

This is the common meaning of the term "physician" and the word, when used by the legislature in the passage of the section providing for the signing of the certificate of death by the attending physician, did not contemplate nor include a chiropractor. The right of a chiropractor to practice his vocation is given in the supplementary sections to section 1274 G. C., found in 106 O. L. 202. Section 1274-1 provides that the state medical board shall examine and register persons desiring to practice any limited branch or branches of medicine and surgery and that it shall establish rules and regulations governing such limited practice. This section further provides among other things that:

> "Sec. 1274-1. * * * . Such limited branches of medicine or surgery shall include chiropractic, * * *."

Section 1274-3 G. C. provides that if the applicant passes the examination and pays the required fee, the state medical board shall issue its certificate to that effect and further:

> "* * * Such certificate shall authorize the holder thereof to practice such limited branch or branches of medicine or surgery as may be specified therein, but shall not permit him to practice any other branch or branches of medicine or surgery nor shall it permit him to treat infectious, contagious or venereal diseases, nor to prescribe or administer drugs, or to perform major surgery."

The above sections are found in the act in 106 O. L. 202, referred to, the title of which reads as follows:

> "To supplement section 1274 of the General Code by the enactment of sections 1274-1 to 1274-7, both inclusive, for the purpose of regulating further the practice of medicine and surgery in this state by authorizing the examination and registration of practitioners of limited branches thereof."

Section 1274-7 G. C. provides that nothing in sections 1274-1 to 1274-6, inc., shall be so construed as to in any way amend sections 1286, 1287 and 12694 G. C., or as in any manner limiting the application of said sections or any other provisions of the laws of the state to practitioners of such limited branches of medicine or surgery, save as thereinbefore specifically provided.

Section 1286 G. C. provides what constitutes the practice of medicine, surgery or midwifery, while section 1287 provides certain exceptions to the provisions of the chapter, but not including practitioners of chiropractic.

Section 12694 G. C. provides a penalty for practice of medicine or surgery without having obtained a certificate therefor, or for practising after an obtained certificate has been revoked.

In an opinion to the Ohio Board of Administration under date of October 24, 1917, found in Volume III, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 1994, I held that an osteopath could not be regarded as practicing medicine or surgery, pointing out the different educational qualifications required and the totally different examinations provided with reference to the two professions; and further that an osteopath could not be considered as a physician within the meaning of sections 1954 and 1956 G. C., providing for the signing of a certificate of insanity by a medical witness who was required to be a "reputable physician."

I think the legislature, by the use of the words "physician * * * last in attendance," had in mind a practitioner who had obtained a certificate to practice medicine and surgery generally, and that said term can not include a limited practitioner such as a chiropractor.

Holding these views, it is my opinion that a chiropractor is not authorized to sign up a death certificate, under the vital statistics law, for one of his patients who dies without a regular physician being in attendance.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BEQUEST TO BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR ERECTION, ETC., OF PUBLIC LIBRARY AND Y. M. C. A. EXEMPT.

A bequest to a board of education for the purchase of a site and the erection and maintenance of a building for a combined public library and Young Men's Christian Association building is exempt from collateral inheritance tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 1, 1918.

HON. J. H. MUSSER, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of June 20th requesting my opinion, as follows:

"In July, 1912, one of the citizens of our county died testate, leaving a will containing among other provisions, the following:

'Seventh.—Provided there are sufficient funds left out of my estate after the payment of the bequests, legacies and devises made in this will, I next give and bequeath to the Board of Education of the School District of Wapakoneta, Ohio, the sum of fifty thousand dollars ($50,000.00), or such other less sum as may be left for that purpose, for the purchase of the necessary land, erection of a building and maintenance of same, for a combined public library and Young Men's Christian Association building, to be called the "Blume Library and Y. M. C. A.," for the use and benefit of all the people and citizens of Wapakoneta and vicinity, the same to be in charge of and under the control of said Board of Education.'

This money was not to be paid over to the Board of Education under this provision of the will until after the death of his wife, she being constituted a trustee for the purpose of holding same until said time.

All of the parties interested in the will now desire to make a complete settlement of the estate and terminate the trust, and the question has arisen as to whether or not the collateral inheritance tax should be paid upon the bequest of $50,000.00 in the item above referred to."

I assume that the estate in the wife is a mere dry trust, she having no beneficial interest therein. Of course, any interest she might have would not be within the terms of the collateral inheritance tax law. Assuming the capacity of the board of education to take this bequest, it would be clearly exempt under section 5332 G. C., which is now in force and was a part of the law in force in 1912, as a "bequest * * * to a * * * political subdivision (of the state) * * * for exclusively public purposes."

From your letter I gather that no question has been or will be raised by the next of kin of the testator respecting the validity of the bequest.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, I advise that the bequest is exempt from the collateral inheritance tax under the law in force in July, 1912, which is the law determining the question, though said law so far as the exemptions now involved are concerned has not been changed since that time.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MAYOR OF VILLAGE AND MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

The mayor of a village may also hold the office of member of the board of education for a district which includes the village of which he is mayor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 2, 1918.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Atorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your request of June 21, 1918, as follows:

"A few days since I had inquiry from a township school superintendent asking if the mayor of a village could also be a member of a board of education for a district, which included the village of which he is mayor. My reply to him was that there was no provision of statute that would prohibit such holding of the two offices, and he has requested me to ask your opinion on the point.

The only sections I find covering the question of qualifications of the mayor are 2830, 2910 and 4762, forbidding the mayor to act as deputy sheriff or as prosecuting attorney, but I find no section forbidding the mayor to act as member of a school board or a member of school board to act as mayor.

The question is submitted to you at his request and not because of doubt in my mind as to it. For the purpose of clearing the matter up, however, I would appreciate it if you could give me your ruling on the same."

I have carefully examined the statutes pertaining to the offices of mayor of a village and member of the board of education and find no statutory inhibition against one person holding both offices. It remains to be determined, then, whether or not these offices are incompatible within the meaning of the common law.

In the case of State ex rel. vs. Gebhart, 12 O. C. C. (n. s.) 274, the rule is laid down as follows:

"Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to or in any way a check upon the other, or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

I am unable to see in practice how there could be any conflict in the duties of the two positions and it is my opinion that the offices of mayor of a village and member of the board of education are not incompatible and may be held by the same person if it is physically possible for one person to perform the duties of both.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

EXECUTION FOR COSTS—STATUTES OF LIMITATION DO NOT RUN AGAINST RIGHT OF CLERK OF COURTS TO ISSUE.

The statutes of limitation do not run against the right of a clerk of courts to issue execution for costs under section 3028 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 2, 1918.

HON. A. C. MCDOUGAL, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your request for my opinion, which reads as follows:

"Does the statute of limitations run against the right of the clerk of courts to issue execution for costs for his own benefit in cases either in the Court of Common Pleas or in the Court of Appeals? This question is based upon the provisions of section 3028 G. C."

Section 3028 G. C. provides:

"When the party recovering neglects to sue out execution immediately, or after such execution has been returned without satisfaction of costs, the clerk, for his own benefit, may, or at the instance of a person entitled to fees in the bill of costs, taxed against either party, shall issue against the party indebted to such clerk or other person, for such fees, whether plaintiff or defendant, an execution to compel the party to pay his own costs, in the following form, towit:

(Form of execution to compel either party to pay his own costs.)

The State of Ohio,_____county, ss:

To the Sheriff of _____county, Greeting:

WHEREAS, in a certain civil action lately prosecuted in the _____ court of_____county, wherein _____ was plaintiff and_____ _____ was defendant, the costs of said _____ were taxed at _____ dollars _____ cents: You are therefore conmmanded, that of the goods and chattels or for the want of goods and chattels, of the lands and tenements of the said_____in your county; you cause to be made the costs aforesaid, with interest thereon from the _____day of _____ A. D., _____ (the date of the judgment) until paid, and costs that may accrue: And if you shall levy and make said costs and interest, do you have the same before the _____ court of _____ county, within sixty days from the date hereof, to render unto the persons entitled to the same; and have you then and there this writ.

WITNESS my hand and the seal of the _____ court, this _____ day of _____ A. D._____.

A B. Clerk.

The statutes of limitation of this state limit the time within which a person or persons may bring an action to enforce a right. An action has been defined by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of In Re Oliver, reported in Volume 77 Ohio State Reports, page 474, as follows:

"Action is the formal demand of one's right from or upon another made in a court of justice."

Section 11279 of the General Code provides what shall constitute the commencement of an action. This section reads:

"A civil action must be commenced by filing in the office of the clerk of the proper court a petition, and causing a summons to be issued thereon."

Under section 3028 G. C., above quoted, it is not necessary for the clerk of courts to institute an action for the recovery of costs. He does not file a petition and cause a summons to issue thereon. Under that section he is authorized to issue an execution against the successful party when such party neglects to issue out execution immediately or after such execution has been returned without satisfaction of costs, without any preliminary proceedings in the matter.

As above pointed out the proceeding instituted by a clerk under section 3028 G. C. is not an action. Therefore, the statutes of limitation would not apply to such a proceeding. I am not unmindful, however, of section 11663, which provides:

> "If execution on a judgment rendered in a court of record in this state, or a transcript of which has been filed as hereinbefore provided, be not sued out within five years from the date of the judgment, or if five years intervene between the date of the last execution issued thereon and the time of suing out another execution, such judgment shall be dormant, and cease to operate as a lien on the estate of the judgment debtor."

This section, however, does not apply to your question, as the execution issued by the clerk is not predicated upon any judgment or order of court.

See Eckstein vs. Strauss, 1 Ohio Dec. 292.

Answering your question specifically, therefore, I advise you that the statutes of limitation do not run against the right of a clerk of courts to issue execution for costs under the provisions of section 3028 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—ASSIGNMENT OF PUPILS TO SCHOOLS OUTSIDE OF DISTRICT—CONSENT OF PARENTS.

1.—A board of education has no authority to assign pupils to schools outside of the district over which such board has jurisdiction.

2.—A board of education may contract under the provisions of section 7734 G. C. with another board of education for the admission of pupils into the schools of such other district and such contract is in effect an assignment of the pupils to such other district school.

3.—The consent of parents is not required to make an effective assignment of the school youth of the school district to the various schools therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 2, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR.—You request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

> "Throughout our county, on the school district line roads, the school vans of the adjoining districts must both travel the same road in order to to collect the children on one side of the road belonging to the particular district.
> It has been suggested that if it were legal, the road could be divided by the board of the adjoining district so that but one van would travel the particular road. However, this would necessitate taking the children on the side of the road from the adjoining district, to the school from which the van was sent and thereby take the children out of the district in which they live.
> I desire an opinion as to whether or not the school board, in its own discretion, may, without the consent of the parents of the child, assign a pupil to the adjoining district under the circumstances above set forth. However, section 7684 provides for the assignment of pupils and it seems to confine them to the school within the district. Section 7734 confers upon the board of education the right to contract with another board for the admission of pupils outside of the district of the first board. However, the question in my mind is this:

Does not section 7681 confer upon the parent the right to have his child attend school in his own school district, and would not the consent of the parent be required before the board could assign the child to an adjacent district?"

Several sections of the General Code must be considered in determining your question, and they are as follows:

Sec. 7684.—"Boards of education may make such an assignment of the youth of their respective districts to the schools established by them as in their opinion best will promote the interest of education in their districts."

Sec. 7681.—"The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district, but the time in the school year at which beginners may enter upon the first year's work of the elementary schools shall be subject to the rules and regulations of the local boards of education. * * * But all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

Sec. 7734.—"The board of any district may contract with the board of another district for the admission of pupils into any school in such other district, on terms agreed upon by such boards. The expense so incurred shall be paid out of the school funds of the district sending such pupils."

That is to say, the school youth of a district have the right and privilege of attending the schools of such district and the board of education of a district, that is, a village or rural district can only assign the pupils to the various schools within the district and under no circumstances has a local board control over the schools of any other district than its own, and its pupils can only be admitted to such other district by proper contract with the board of education of such other district. If your boards of education cannot agree that a division of the district line road mentioned by you be made, then the county board of education might settle the matter by transferring certain territory from one district to the other so that the transportation could be carried out along the line suggested in your inquiry. This transfer would be made under the provisions of sections 4692 or 4736 G. C. There is nothing in the statute which provides that the consent of the parents must be secured to make such transfer or such assignment of the school youth, but under section 4692, above mentioned, the electors of the territory to be transferred, and under 4736 the electors of the territory affected, have a right to remonstrate against the proposed transfer under the first section and against the arrangement proposed under the second section.

It might also be suggested that under section 7734 G. C. the board of any district may contract with the board of another district for the admission of pupils into any school of such other district. Your several boards might enter into such arrangement in relation to the pupils along said highway and the contract so entered into in relation to such pupils would be an assignment of the pupils to the school of such other district.

Answering your question, then, I advise you that (1) a board of education has no right to assign pupils to schools outside of the district over which the board has jurisdiction, and (2) the consent of parents is not required to make an assignment of the school youth of a district to the various schools therein.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN COMMON PLEAS COURT REVERSES A CONVICTION BY MAYOR'S COURT FOR VIOLATION OF SPEED LAW (12604 G. C.) COST OF BILL OF EXCEPTIONS CANNOT BE CHARGED AGAINST THE COUNTY.

In a prosecution for the violation of section 12604 G. C. prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle at a greater rate of speed than fifteen miles an hour in other portions of the municipality than the business and closely built up portions thereof, where the defendant's conviction in the mayor's court is reversed by the court of common pleas, the cost of the bill of exceptions may not be charged against the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 6, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 30th asking the following question:

> "In the mayor's court the defendant in a criminal case in which the state of Ohio was plaintiff was found guilty, he prepared a bill of exceptions and secured a reversal in the court of common pleas. Can the cost of the bill of exceptions be charged against the county and the defendant be reimbursed for his cost in preparing the bill of exceptions. The case was a misdemeanor? Is section 12279, 105-106 O. L., 134, applicable to criminal cases? See section 1552 G. C., 22 Ohio Dec. 360."

Also your letter of June 7th, adding the following information:

> "The prosecution was under section 12604 for violating that provision of the section prohibiting the operation of a motor vehicle at a greater rate of speed than fifteen miles an hour in other portions of the municipality than the business and closely built up portions thereof."

Section 12604 G. C. reads:

> "Whoever operates a motorcycle or motor vehicle at a greater speed than eight miles an hour in the business and closely built-up portions of a municipality or more than fifteen miles an hour in other portions thereof or more than twenty miles an hour outside of a municipality, shall be fined not more than twenty-five dollars, and, for a second offense shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars."

I have noted, as you suggest, section 12279 G. C., as amended 105-106 O. L., 134, which reads:

> "When a judgment or final order is reversed, the prevailing party shall recover all court costs incurred to secure such reversal, including the cost of bills of exceptions, and when reversed in part, and affirmed in part, the court may apportion said costs between the parties in such manner as it deems equitable."

This section, I think, is applicable only to civil cases. Section 1552 G. C., which is cited, reads:

> "The compensation of stenographers for making such transcripts shall be not more than eight cents per folio of one hundred words, to be fixed by the common pleas judges of the subdivision. Such compensation shall be paid forthwith by the party for whose benefit a transcript is made. The compensation for transcripts made in criminal cases, by request of the prosecuting attorney or the defendants, and transcripts ordered by the court in either civil or criminal cases, shall be paid from the county treasury, and taxed and collected as other costs. The clerk of the proper court shall certify the amount of such transcripts, which certificate shall be a sufficient voucher to the auditor of the county, who shall forthwith draw his warrants upon the county treasurer in favor of such stenographers."

In the case of Cincinnati Equipment Co. vs. Kauffman, 22 O. D., p. 360, which you cite, it was held:

"The expense of making a stenographic transcript of trial proceedings constituting a bill of exceptions, in the absence of a statute authorizing it in error proceedings, cannot be taxed as costs."

Section 1552 G. C., to which you refer, and which is cited above, has no application to the mayor or justice courts and nowhere in the statutes is there found any provision for an official stenographer in those courts or for any stenographic record of the proceedings in those courts. Costs are only allowed in criminal cases when the statute permits them to be so taxed. There being no authority in the statute to tax the expense of the bill of exceptions as costs in the case, such expense may not be paid as "costs" by the county. Even if this were not true, the costs in this case of the bill of exceptions could not be paid by the county for the reason there is no authority for the payment by the county of any costs in the case. In a great many misdemeanor cases the statute provides that the costs, if the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, shall be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor and then paid out of the county treasury upon the auditor's warrant. This is true regarding all those cases enumerated in section 13423 G. C. It has quite frequently been held that the provision in regard to such payment of costs in section 13429 G. C. applies to all the fifteen classes of misdemeanors set out in section 13423 G. C. Special provision is also made in section 1404 concerning all fish and game cases, and numerous other special provisions concerning certain misdemeanors may be found in the statutes. However, I know of no provision of law relating to payment of costs in misdemeanors brought under section 12604 G. C.

In an opinion of this department, rendered February 19, 1918, to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, it was held in the third branch of the syllabus:

"In prosecutions for charging unlawful rate of interest on money loaned, there being no special provision for the payment of costs, the only authority for payment of costs is section 3019."

In that opinion it was said:

"The third case to which attention is called in the inquiry is one in which the defendant was charging an unlawful rate of interest on money loaned. This is a misdemeanor for which no special provision as to payment of cost has been made and it is subject, therefore, to the general rule relating to misdemeanors.

Section 3019 of the General Code provides:

'In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars.'

It has frequently been held by this department that in misdemeanor cases, before officers may be allowed fees under section 3019, there must be, first, a conviction and, second, the defendant must prove insolvent. This is the view recently taken by the common pleas court of Carroll county, in an opinion rendered December 3, 1917, in the case of State ex rel. vs. Marshall, Auditor.

Referring, then, to the case mentioned in the inquiry, concerning the violations of the loan shark law, beg to advise that, assuming for the purposes of this opinion that the justice court had jurisdiction to try this case, the costs may be paid as follows: If the higher court sustains the conviction and the defendant proves insolvent, fees may be allowed under section 3019 of the General Code, as above provided. If the higher court reverses the conviction, I know of no way to collect."

The case you present, as far as the question of costs is concerned, is exactly the same as the one to which reference is made in the opinion quoted, and I am of the opinion that in this case neither the cost of the bill of exceptions or any other costs may be taxed against the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER—APPOINTED TO FILL VACANCY—FEE—COMMISSION—VALIDITY OF ACTS PERFORMED WHEN HE DOES NOT SECURE COMMISSION—SALARY.

1. A county commissioner appointed by the probate judge, county auditor and county recorder, to fill a vacancy, must, before entering upon his duties, pay the fee of five dollars to said officers and secure a commission from the governor of the state.

2. If a county commissioner enters upon the duties of his office in good faith, by virtue of his appointment, without securing the commission, he is an officer de facto, and so far as the rights of third persons and the public are concerned, his acts pertaining to the duties of said office are legal.

3. If a county commissioner is paid the salary pertaining to his office, while a de facto officer, and he has performed the duties of his office in good faith, the public having benefited by the same, in justice, and possibly in law, no finding should be made against him for the recovery of the money paid him as salary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 6, 1918.

HON. JAMES F. FLYNN, JR., Prosecuting Attorney, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 21, 1918, which reads as follows:

"On January 14, 1918, you rendered an opinion to me in reference to the question as to whom the resignation of a county commissioner should be sent and in which you advised me that the appointing board, to wit, the probate judge, auditor and recorder of the county should receive the resignation and make the appointment. The question has arisen with reference to the appointee qualifying for that office. There is nothing in the statute with reference to the appointing board certifying the appointment to the governor or secretary of state.

* * * From the foregoing (section 138 G. C. quoted) it seems apparent that the county commissioner who was appointed to fill the vacancy must present a legal certificate of his appointment to some one, and before he can enter upon his duties he must have a commission from the governor to fill the said office as county commissioner.

Is it your opinion that this county commissioner must have the certificate of the appointing board, and if so, to whom will he present the certificate, how will he receive his commission from the governor and will he be required to pay the fee for said commission the same as an elective official?

This county commissioner has been drawing his salary since the so-called filling of the vacancy by the appointing board last January. What do you say as to the duties he has performed as such commissioner and his right to receive his salary as commissioner?"

Your questions are based on section 138 G. C., quoted in your request. Said section reads as follows:

"Sec. 138. A judge of a court of record, state officer, county officer, militia officer and justice of the peace, shall be ineligible to perform any duty pertaining to his office, until he presents to the proper officer or authority a legal certificate of his election or appointment, and receives from the governor a commission to fill such office."

Your communication is naturally divided into three parts as follows:

1. Matters having to do with the issuing of the certificate and the payment of the fee for the commission.
2. Whether the acts of said county commissioner since his appointment are legal.
3. Whether the salary paid to said county commissioner since his appointment was legally paid.

It is my opinion that section 140 G. C. would control, at least by analogy, in reference to the certificate and commission. Said section reads as follows:

"Sec. 140. When the result of the election of any such officer is officially known to the deputy state supervisors of elections of the proper county, and upon payment to them of the fee prescribed in the preceding section, they shall immediately forward by mail to the secretary of state a certificate of election of such officer together with the fee so paid. Upon receipt of such certificate and fee by the secretary of state, the governor shall issue and forward the proper commission to the clerk of the court of common pleas, who shall deliver the same to the officer entitled thereto. The fees so received by the secretary of state shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund."

The appointing board, consisting of the probate judge, auditor and recorder of the county, would in this case be in the place of the deputy state supervisors of elections. The appointing board, upon receiving the fee of five dollars from the county commissioner appointed by it, would forward a certificate to the secretary of state, accompanied by the five dollar fee. Upon receipt of this certificate and fee by the secretary of state, the proper commission would be issued by the governor of the state and forwarded to the clerk of the court of common pleas, who would deliver the same to the commissioner so appointed.

The question might arise as to whether the commission should be dated back to the time at which the county commissioner was appointed, with a view to making his acts in all respects legal from the time he entered upon the performance of the duties of county commissioner; in other words, whether it would not be well for the governor to make a nunc pro tunc commission, dating it back to the time when it should have been issued under the statutes. I do not think this should be followed. The commission cannot be dated back of the day upon which it is issued. The only case in which a court or any officer can make a nunc pro tunc order or entry is where they actually did, as of a former date, make an order, but failed to enter the same upon the records. In such case the order or entry can be dated as of the date upon which the same was actually made; but no officer has authority to date an order, commission or entry as of an earlier date, if in fact he did not at said earlier date make an order or finding of some kind. Therefore it is my opinion that the commission should be dated as of the date when it is actually issued by the governor.

A question is asked in reference to the fee to be paid by the county commissioner. It is my view that under section 138 G. C. the commissioner would be required to pay the fee of five dollars, provided in section 139 G. C., to the board which appointed him to fill the vacancy, and it in turn would forward this fee with the certificate to the secretary of state. Section 138 applies to appointments as well as elections, and therefore to my mind covers the case under consideration.

We come now to the legality of the acts of this county commissioner. In my opinion, so far as the rights of third persons and the public are concerned, the acts of said commissioner are legal. There was a vacancy upon the board of commissioners. The proper authorities appointed this person to fill the vacancy, in accordance with the provisions of law. He entered into the possession of the office and actively engaged in the performance of the duties which devolved upon him by virtue of his position. Third persons and the public dealt with him on the theory that he was the duly appointed and qualified commissioner of the county. In view of all these things, it seems to me said commissioner has been an officer de facto from the time he entered upon the performance of the duties of the office.

I will not quote from any decisions, but the principle is well established that as between himself and the public the official acts of an officer de facto have the same force and virtue in law as do the acts of an officer de jure, and are as valid as to strangers, the public and third persons as are the acts of an officer de jure.

We come now to a consideration of a question more difficult to answer, as to whether this county commissioner is entitled to retain the salary paid him by the county from time to time since his appointment. There are several questions pertaining to this matter which are well settled. One of them is that even though, as between himself and the public, the acts of a de facto officer are as valid as those of a de jure officer, yet when it comes to the assertion of his individual rights, based upon his official character, he is required to show that he is an officer de jure. The acts of a de facto officer are valid only so far as the rights of the public or third persons having an interest therein are involved. Said officer can claim nothing for himself by virtue of those acts. He cannot claim the benefit of his acts. He is never allowed to build up rights or shield himself from responsibility on the mere fact that he has entered into an office and performed the duties of the same.

From the above principle the proposition also naturally follows that a de facto officer cannot maintain an action against the proper authorities, based merely upon the fact that he is a de facto officer. He must show in such a proceeding that he is not merely a de facto officer, but that he is a de jure officer. In other words, the salary or emoluments annexed to a public office are incident to the right to the office and not to the mere exercise of its duties or its occupancy.

The facts submitted by you do not come within the above principles of law. The officer has been paid by the county, from time to time, the sums of money due him as county commissioner. This being the case, I do not believe that a finding should be made against him. He entered into the office by virtue of an appointment. He performed the duties of the office in good faith. The public has received the benefits of the services rendered by him. Further, the public will not run the risk, as in many cases, of being compelled to pay this salary a second time, inasmuch as there is no other person in this case who is the officer de jure.

In view of all the above it is my opinion that in justice, and possibly in law, no finding should be made against this county commissioner.

There is some authority for the above conclusion. Constantineau on the De Facto Doctrine, section 240, has the following suggestions to make in reference to recovering money paid to a de facto officer:

> "It is a settled rule of the common law, that money paid by one with full knowledge of the circumstances, or the means of such knowledge in his hands, cannot be recovered back on account of such payment having been made under an ignorance of the law. Whether such rule applies to governments and public bodies as well as to individuals, is a much debated question. But whatever may be the result of the decisions on this point, we think it can safely be asserted that, in the absence of statutory provisions declaring a different rule, money paid as fees or salary by the state or a public corporation to a de facto officer, cannot in general be recovered back as money paid under a mistake of law."

In Badeau vs. United States, 130 U. S. 439, the court passed upon a question very similar to the one under consideration. In the head notes to said case we find the following principle laid down:

> "Where an officer of the army was paid, as such, for time during the intervals of his employment in a diplomatic or consular capacity, being an officer de facto if not de jure, the moneys so paid to him cannot be recovered back by the United States."

Mr. Chief Justice Fuller in the opinion uses the following language:

> "But inasmuch as the claimant, if not an officer de jure, acted as an officer de facto, we are not inclined to hold that he has received money which, ex aequo et bono, he ought to return."

It is to be noted that in this opinion Mr. Justice Fuller held that in justice and good dealing, if not in law, an officer de facto cannot be compelled to return money which he has received by virtue of his assuming an office and performing the duties pertaining thereto.

In view of all the above, I am of the opinion that the conclusion heretofore reached is correct, and ought to be followed by yourself and the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

ADJUTANT GENERAL HAS NO AUTHORITY TO LEASE STATE RIFLE RANGE AND MILITARY CAMP GROUND.

The adjutant general has no authority in law to lease to the federal government, or to anyone else, the state rifle range and military camp ground, commonly known as Camp Perry.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 10, 1918.

HON. J. E. GIMPERLING, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 1, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Please note enclosed letter from the adjutant general, central department, relative to lease of the Camp Perry rifle range by government.
> General Wood was acting under authority of section 5246, page 395, Laws of Ohio, 1917.
> Will you please give me your legal opinion as to proper procedure in this case?"

This question arises by virtue of the fact that the adjutant general of the state leased to the federal government the state rifle range and military camp ground, commonly known as Camp Perry, to be used by the federal government in matters pertaining to the United States army. The federal government now hesitates to pay the rental provided for in the lease because of the fact that it feels there is no authority upon the part of the adjutant general to lease said lands to the federal government. Hence, your communication raises two questions; first, as to whether the adjutant general would have authority to lease said lands, and, secondly, if he has no authority so to lease said lands, then what would be the proper course to pursue in reference to the matter.

It will assist us somewhat in understanding the matter in question if we look to the statutes as they originally stood, which made provision for this rifle range. This was provided in section 5283 G. C. as it stood prior to the enactment of the law in 1917, which is now in force and effect. This section read as follows:

> "The adjutant general shall be the custodian of the state rifle range and military camp ground, which is hereby dedicated and set apart forever as a state park for military purposes to be known and designated as 'Camp Perry' in honor of Commodore Oliver Hazzard Perry and the naval victory won by him September 10, 1813, near this park."

Supplemental sections were added to this section providing for the purchase of additional lands to be made a part of said state rifle range and military camp grounds.

You state in your communication that the adjutant general leased said lands to the federal government under and by virtue of the provisions of section 5246 G. C., 107 O. L. 395. This section reads as follows:

> "In case any armory erected or purchased by the state of Ohio under the provisions of this chapter shall become vacant by reason of the disbandment of the organization or organizations quartered therein, the adjutant general with the consent and approval of the governor, is authorized to sell or lease said armory, the proceeds of rent therefrom being turned into the state treasury to the credit of the 'state armory fund.'"

It is my opinion that this section does not give any authority to the adjutant general to lease the lands which go to make up the state rifle range and military camp. It is to be noted that this section is placed under the general title of "armories," and when we study it in reference to its context we can scarcely arrive at the conclusion that it gives any authority to lease the lands now in question. This section together with the connected sections has to do with the purchase and building of armories for the use of the different military organizations of the state. These sections provide the amount that may be expended for each armory and the use to which they are put and provides a board of control for their management. I do not think that said section 5246 gives authority to lease anything other than an armory, using that term in its strict sense; that is, a building that has either been purchased or built for the use of the local organizations of the Ohio national guard. It is to be noted that in this section the term "to sell" is used co-ordinately with the term "to lease." It would hardly be held that the adjutant general would have authority to sell the lands commonly known as Camp Perry, yet if he has authority to lease them under and by virtue of the same provisions he would have authority to sell them. Further, I do not find any provisions of the General Code which would authorize the adjutant general to lease said lands.

Section 5220 G. C., 107 O. L., 391, provides as follows:

> "The adjutant general shall be the custodian of the state rifle range and military camp ground."

This seems to be about the extent of his authority. It could not be held that a mere custodian of said property would have authority to lease it.

Section 5221 G. C. provides that the adjutant general may make changes and improvements in reference to said property and may make rules and police regulations for the range and ground subject to statutory provisions. Section 5221 has this provision:

> "All revenue and receipts therefrom, or from any other military property in the state of Ohio, not made a portion of the company, troop, battery or other organization funds by regulations, shall be credited to the fund hereinbefore specified as 'Maintenance, Ohio national guard.'"

This provision makes it clear that the adjutant general may realize some revenue from these grounds, but these terms are not broad enough to warrant the conclusion that he has authority to lease said premises.

In connection with this question I desire to call attention to the provisions of section 8523 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "All conveyances of real estate, or any interest therein, sold on behalf of the state, in pursuance of law, shall be drafted by the auditor of state, executed in the name of the state, signed by the governor, countersigned by the secretary of state, and sealed with the great seal of the state."

I quote this provision simply to the point that even the governor of the state is not permitted to convey real estate, or any interest in the same, excepting in pursuance of some statutory provision. It is my opinion that before any state officer can convey real estate or any interest in the same, the right to do so must clearly be set forth in some provision of law. Hence, it is my opinion that the adjutant general had no authority in law to lease the state rifle range and military camp ground and that the federal government is justified in hesitating to pay the rentals provided for in said lease.

The next question to be considered is this: What course shall the state pursue in reference to this matter?

In the letter directed to the adjutant general of Ohio and signed by H. O. S. Heistand, adjutant general, department adjutant, he suggests the following course:

"It is suggested that the United States government be permitted to occupy the range until the next session of the legislature, at which time proper authority can be secured, and the terms and conditions of the lease now in existence can be put into force, and execution and disbursement thereon made."

In reference to this suggestion I might say that there is one thing certain and that is that no state official has any authority to lease said grounds until authority is given to some state official by enactment of the legislature. Further, under the circumstances it would not be wise or advisable for the state to refuse the use of this ground to the federal government even though at the present time no strictly legal arrangements can be made by which the lands can be leased to the federal government by the state; but inasmuch as the lease has been made under the assumed authority given by statute and the federal government has entered into the possession of said lands under the lease, it is my opinion that the matters pertaining thereto should be worked out along the line suggested in the above quotation; that is, the federal government could use the lands with the tacit consent and understanding that when the legislature meets the coming winter it could enact some provision whereby this land could be leased to the federal government for and during the period of the war.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—SECTION 2846 MAKING ALLOWANCE TO SHERIFF ONLY APPLIES TO COSTS IN COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

Magistrates may issue their warrants to the sheriff, but when a warrant is issued by an officer of a municipal corporation, such as the mayor, it must be issued to the marshal or police officer thereof.

Section 2846 G. C. providing that the county commissioners may make an allowance to the sheriff for fees in certain criminal cases has application only to the court of common pleas, and does not apply to magistrates or mayors' courts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 10, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have called my attention to our opinion No. 1002, rendered February 11, 1918, to J. W. Watts, prosecuting attorney, Hillsboro, Ohio, in which it was held:

> "The sheriff must pay into his fee fund fees received by him for serving warrants issued to him by a magistrate in state criminal cases."

You have informed me that some doubt has arisen as to whether or not this opinion held by inference that the mayor might issue his warrant to a sheriff. In holding, however, this opinion warrants no such conclusion.

Section 13500, which was considered in the opinion, reads:

> "The warrant shall be directed to the sheriff or any constable of the county, or, when it is issued by an officer of a municipal corporation, to the marshal or other police officer thereof and, by a copy of the affidavit inserted therein or annexed and referred to, shall show or recite the substance of the accusation and command such officer forthwith to take the accused and bring him before the magistrate or court issuing such warrant, or other magistrate of the county having cognizance of the case, to be dealt with according to law."

It will be noted from this section that magistrates may issue their warrants to sheriffs, but when the warrant is issued by an officer of a municipal corporation, such as the mayor, it must be issued to the marshal or police officer thereof. The statute draws a sharp distinction between the issuing of such warrants by the magistrate and by the mayor. This fact was noted by former Attorney-General Hogan in opinion No. 1158, found in Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, Vol. 2, page 1246. At page 1247 he says:

> "Section 13500 makes special and, therefore, exceptional provision for an officer of the municipal corporation by directing a warrant issued by such to be directed to the marshal or other police officer of such municipal corporation. This provision is in keeping with the general plan of the statutes, to confine as far as possible, the administration of such corporation. I am therefore of the opinion that a mayor is without authority to issue a warrant, in a state case, to the sheriff."

In our opinion of February 11, 1918, to which you redirect my attention, the following statement was also made:

> "It will be noted that section 2846 G. C. provides that the sheriff in criminal cases, where the state fails to convict, and in misdemeanors upon conviction, where the defendant proves insolvent, may be allowed his fees upon the certificate of the clerk and the allowance by the county commissioners. The fact that these fees must be allowed upon the certificate of the clerk would indicate that the section refers only to cases in the court of common pleas and not to cases in the mayor's court, police court and courts of justices of the peace. This being so, this section would offer no assistance in the situation you refer to."

You call my attention to the fact that former Attorney-General Edward C. Turner rendered an opinion found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 1, page 114, in which he held:

"The certificate comprehended by section 2846 G. C. as to such fees as are earned by the sheriff in the probate court and the court of justice of the peace, shall be made by such probate judge and justice of the peace, respectively."

In that opinion Mr. Turner said:

"I hold that the term 'clerk' as used in the statute, shall be construed as referring to the officer of each of the various courts, wherein the sheriff is required to render such service, having custody of the records and memoranda of such court and being charged with the clerical or ministerial functions thereof, rather than that such word 'clerk' should be construed as referring exclusively to the particular officer of the county technically named 'clerk of the court.'"

In support of this holding Mr. Turner says:

"By the provisions of the statute a justice of the peace performs all the ministerial and clerical functions incidental to his court, as well as the judicial functions thereof."

After consideration of this opinion I advise you that I still hold to the view expressed in my opinion of February 11, 1918, to the effect that section 2846 refers only to cases in the court of common pleas and not to cases in the mayor's court or justice court.

This view is strengthened by the fact that the statutes, when providing for the certification of costs in magistrate's courts, invariably refer to a certification "by the magistrate;" also by a review of the history of section 2846 G. C., which discloses the fact that as originally enacted the section provided:

"Courts of common pleas in each county shall make an allowance of not more than three hundred per annum for the sheriff, for services where the state fails to convict or the defendant proves insolvent."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKHOUSE—WHEN PRISONERS MAY BE SENTENCED TO WORKHOUSE IN ANOTHER COUNTY.

Where a county has no workhouse, and is not joined with other counties in the maintenance of a joint workhouse, prisoners from such county may not be sentenced by the courts to the workhouse of another county except under an agreement as provided in section 12384 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1918.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR.—I have your letter of June 27, 1918, as follows:

"Preble county, Ohio, of which Eaton is the county seat, has no workhouse, nor has any village or city within the confines of said county a workhouse.

We understand from the county auditor that the county commissioners of Preble county, Ohio, have a contract with the authorities of the Dayton workhouse, at Dayton, Ohio; and the auditor is also sure that the commissioners have no contract with any other workhouse directors.

In the fall of 1917, a man by the name of James Penny was taken up at the village of Camden, Ohio, which is south of Eaton, and has good railroad connections with Cincinnati, but very poor railroad connections with Dayton, Ohio, for assault and battery. He waived the right of trial by jury, in writing, and Mr. Shuey, mayor of the village of Camden, Ohio, found him guilty and sentenced him to the workhouse at Cincinnati, Ohio. Penny was taken up on a state warrant and sentenced under the laws of the state, and not by virtue of any ordinance of the village of Camden. Penny served part of his time and then he went insane and was released and taken back to Mobile, Alabama, by his relatives.

The city workhouse of the city of Cincinnati, Ohio, has presented a bill to the county commissioners of Preble county, Ohio, in the amount of thirty-three dollars and eighty cents ($33.80,) for housing, boarding, etc., Penny from October 28th to December 19th, 1917—fifty-two (52) days, at sixty-five cents (65c) per day—and the question arises, in the minds of the board of county commissioners whether they should pay this bill, because of the fact that they have not made a contract with the workhouse authorities of the city of Cincinnati.

I should like your opinion with reference thereto, calling attention to sections 4141, 4151 and 4152 of the General Code of Ohio.

We think the bill is reasonable and should be paid."

Sections 4141, 4151 and 4152 G. C. provide:

Sec. 4141.—"Any city or district having within its limits, a workhouse, may receive as inmates thereof persons sentenced thereto, as provided by law, from counties other than the one in which such workhouse is situated, upon such terms and during such length of time as is agreed upon by the commissioners of such counties, or by the council of such municipality, and the council of the city, or the board of the district workhouse, or other authority having the management and control of such workhouse. Convicts so received shall in all respects be and remain under control of such director or board of workhouse directors, and subject to the rules, regulations and discipline of such workhouse, the same as other convicts therein detained."

Sec. 4151.—"When a person has been convicted of a misdemeanor by a court or magistrate in a district in which there is a workhouse, such court or magistrate may sentence such person to such workhouse for a period not exceeding the maximum period of confinement in the jail of the county provided by statute for such offenses. In all such cases the court or magistrate may further order that such person stand committed to such workhouse until the costs of prosecution are paid, or he be discharged as herein provided. In all cases where a fine may be imposed in punishment in whole or in part for an offense and the court or magistrate could order that such person stand committed to the jail of the county until such fine and the costs of prosecution are paid, the court or magistrate may order that such person stand committed to the workhouse until such fine and costs are paid, or until he be discharged at the rate of sixty cents per day for each day of confinement, or be otherwise legally discharged."

Sec. 4152.—"When a person is sentenced to such workhouse by the court of common pleas, the clerk shall make and deliver to the sheriff a certified copy of the docket and journal entries showing the crime charged and the sentence of the court, which shall be delivered by the sheriff to the proper officer in charge of the workhouse, and shall be his warrant for detaining such person in custody therein. In cases of such convictions by any other court or magistrate such court or magistrate shall make a certified transcript of the docket in the case, which shall in like manner be delivered to the marshal or constable, or sheriff by the court or magistrate, which shall be delivered by the officer to the proper officer in charge of the workhouse, and shall be his warrant for detaining the person in custody therein. In all cases of sentence to such workhouse, the person so sentenced may be confined in the jail of the county for such period as may be reasonably necessary for the officer to procure the papers and make arrangements to transport him to the workhouse."

It will be noted that section 4141 provides that any city or district having a workhouse may receive as inmates persons sentenced thereto from counties other than the one in which the workhouse is located, upon such terms and during such length of time as agreed upon by the commissioners of such county or by the council of such municipality, and the council of the city or the board of the district workhouse, or other authority having the management and control of such workhouse. This section simply makes provision for the commitment to the workhouse in another county after a proper contract has been entered into. No such contract was entered into in the case you submit and therefore this section can afford us no assistance.

Section 4151 G. C. provides:

"When a person has been convicted of a misdemeanor by a court or magistrate in a district in which there is a workhouse, such court or magistrate may sentence such person to such workhouse for a period not exceeding the maximum period of confinement in the jail of the county provided by statute for such offenses."

This section refers to the commitment by a court or magistrate when such court or magistrate is located in a district composed of counties which have united in the erection, management or maintenance of a workhouse for the joint use of such counties, as provided in section 4142 G. C. The commissioners of Preble county not having joined with any other counties for the erection, management and maintenance of a workhouse, this section is without application. The same may be said of section 4152 G. C., above quoted.

Sections 12384 and 12386 of the General Code read:

Sec. 12384.—"The commissioners of a county, or the council of a municipality, wherein there is no workhouse, may agree with the city council, or other authority having control of the workhouse of a city in any other county, or with the board of district workhouses having a workhouse, upon what terms and conditions persons convicted of misdemeanors, or of the violation of an ordinance of such municipality having no workhouse, may be received into such workhouse under sentence thereto. The county commissioners, or the council of a municipality, are authorized to pay the expenses incurred under such agreement out of the general fund of the county or municipality, upon the certificate of the proper officer of such workhouse."

Sec. 12386.—"When a person has been convicted of a misdemeanor, or of the violation of an ordinance of a municipality, by the court or magistrate in a county or municipality having no workhouse, and the commissioners of such county or council of such municipality, have made provision as allowed by law for receiving persons so convicted into the workhouse of a city in any other county or district in the state, such court or magistrate, where imprisonment in the county or municipal jail may lawfully be imposed in punishment of such offense, may sentence such person to such workhouse for a period not exceeding the maximum period of confinement in the county or municipal jail allowed by statute or ordinance for the offense. In such cases, the court or magistrate may further order that such person stand committed to such workhouse until the costs of prosecution are paid, or he is discharged as herein provided."

When there is no workhouse in the county or the county has not become a part of a district in which a joint workhouse is maintained, section 12384 G. C. allows the commissioners of the county or the council of a municipality to agree with the city council or other authority having control of a workhouse in another city or county, upon what terms and conditions persons convicted of misdemeanors for the violation of a municipal ordinance may be received into such workhouse. The county commissioners or the council of a municipality are authorized to pay whatever expenses are incurred under such agreement.

Section 12386 G. C. makes it lawful for courts or magistrates in the county having no workhouse, to sentence or commit prisoners to the workhouse in another county under the agreement entered into. This is the only provision I know of for sentencing and committing prisoners under such circumstances to counties other than the one in which the offense is committed. I do not believe that where a county has no workhouse and is not joined with other counties in the maintenance of a joint workhouse it can send its prisoners into the workhouse of any other county except by agreement as provided for in section 12384. When this agreement has been entered into, the expenses of commitment in that workhouse are made payable under the authority of that section and the confinement of a prisoner in the workhouse of the other county is made lawful by virtue of the provisions of section 12386, above quoted. Under no other circumstances, in such case, would the imprisonment be lawful or the payment of expenses incurred legal.

This being true, I must advise you that inasmuch as there is no workhouse in your county, and your county board has not joined with any other county in maintaining a joint county workhouse, it may only sentence its prisoners to a workhouse outside of your county after contracting with the authorities having control of the workhouse in another county, under section 12384, as your commissioners have done in entering into a contract with the city of Dayton. I am of the opinion that the sentencing of a prisoner by the mayor of Camden, Ohio, to the Cincinnati workhouse, was without authority in law and that the expense of the prisoner's commitment to that institution, in the absence of a contract with that workhouse, under section 12384, may not lawfully be paid.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WOMAN IS ELIGIBLE FOR APPOINTMENT AS SUPERINTENDENT OF COUNTY INFIRMARY.

The superintendent of a county infirmary is not a public officer and therefore a woman is eligible for appointment to said position.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN.—I have your letter of July 3, 1918, in which you submit the following question for my opinion:

"Can a woman be legally appointed superintendent of a county infirmary?"

The question which you ask is based upon two sections of our state constitution.

Section 4 of Art. XV of the constitution reads in part as follows:

"No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; * * *."

When we turn to section 1 of Art. V of the constitution we find set forth the qualifications of an elector in the following terms:

"Every white male citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township, or ward, in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector, and be entitled to vote at all elections."

From the provisions of these two sections it is readily apparent that if the position of superintendent of a county infirmary is an office, a woman can not be appointed to said position; but if we can arrive at the conclusion that it is not an office, a woman could be appointed thereto by the county commissioners.

In your communication you referred to an opinion rendered by me to Hon. J. H. Fultz, prosecuting attorney, at Lancaster, under date of March 22, 1917 (Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 329), wherein I held that the superintendent of a county infirmary is not a public officer. The syllabus reads as follows:

"The superintendent of a county infirmary is not a public officer and therefore not required to have the qualifications of an elector."

This opinion was based entirely upon the authority of Palmer vs. Zeigler, 76 O. S. 210, and without any further examination whatever. Notwithstanding said opinion and the decision of our supreme court in the case above referred to, you raise the question whether this position ought not to be considered as an office, inasmuch as since the rendering of said decision in the supreme court our statutes have been modified to some extent and further and added duties placed upon the superintendent of a county infirmary. Because of this suggestion I have carefully examined the statutes pertaining to the duties of superintendent of a county infirmary as they stood at the time the supreme court passed upon the case of Palmer vs. Zeigler, supra, and as they now exist.

Sections 961 to 985 inclusive R. S. dealt with the superintendent of an infirmary under the law as it stood at the time the above decision was rendered; while sections 2422 to 2557 inclusive G. C. cover the same matter under the existing law. When the office of infirmary director was abolished and the duties of infirmary directors were placed upon the county commissioners, there were some added duties given to the superintendent of an infirmary; that is, some of the duties which were originally performed by the infirmary directors now devolve upon the superintendent of a county infirmary, and not upon the county commissioners. The act abolishing the office of infirmary director and placing their duties upon the county commissioners and the superintendent of a county infirmary is found in 102 O. L. 433.

We will briefly note the nature of the added duties placed upon the superintendent of a county infirmary, to determine whether they are such as would make the position of superintendent an office, rather than a mere employment, as held by our supreme court in Palmer vs. Zeigler, supra, under the law as it then existed.

In section 962 R. S. provision was made that the infirmary directors should sell all products of the infirmary not necessary for the use of the same, and all moneys arising therefrom should be paid into the county treasury, to be placed to the credit of the proper fund; while in section 2526 G. C. it is provided that this same duty shall be performed by the superintendent of the infirmary.

In section 967 R. S. provision was made that the infirmary directors on the first Monday of March and September of each year should report to the county commissioners all matters pertaining to the county infirmary; while section 2533 G. C. places this same duty upon the superintendent of the infirmary.

Section 967 R. S. also provided that the infirmary directors should give all statistical information in reference to the inmates of the county infirmary in the report they made on the first Monday in September; while section 2535 G. C. provides that the superintendent of the infirmary shall give this same information to the county commissioners.

In section 969 R. S. provision was made whereby the infirmary directors were given authority to remove any person from the infirmary who had no legal settlement in the state, to the county and state in which he had a legal settlement; while under section 2540 G. C. the superintendent performs this duty.

In section 974 R. S. authority was given to the infirmary directors to admit persons into the infirmary when they were of the opinion that the person complained of was entitled to admission to the infirmary; while under section 2544 G. C. this duty and discretion devolve upon the superintendent of the county infirmary.

Under section 974 R. S. the infirmary directors were compelled to make a report to the state board of charities as to all outside relief which had been furnished by the infirmary directors during any particular year; while under section 2545 G. C. this is done by the superintendent of the infirmary.

The above I think covers the main duties which were placed upon the superintendent of the county infirmary at the time the infirmary directors were abolished. It will be noted that the added duties are mainly the making of reports. It is true there are some additional duties which call for the exercise of considerable judgment and discretion upon the part of the superintendent, in that he has the authority to sell the products of the farm, to remove any person not legally entitled to admission to the infirmary, and to admit persons into the infirmary if in his opinion they are entitled to such admission. However, I do not feel that these additional duties are sufficient in law to transform this position of county superintendent from that of a mere employment to an office.

In Palmer vs. Zeigler, supra, the court, in deciding whether the position of superintendent of a county infirmary is an office or a mere employment, laid stress upon the question as to whether he exercised any of the sovereign functions of the government; that is, whether some portion of the sovereignty of the county, either legislative, executive or judicial, attached to him for the time being, to be exercised by him for the public benefit. The court reached the conclusion that the superintendent did not exercise any of the sovereignty of the state or nation and therefore could not be considered as a public officer. I believe this reasoning and conclusion would still stand, notwithstanding the fact that the duties above set out have been added to the duties which were originally performed by the superintendent.

There is one striking provision which remains the same under the new law as it was under the old. In section 962 R. S. the following language is found:

> "The directors shall appoint a superintendent who shall reside in some apartment of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. He shall perform such duties as they may impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations."

Section 2523 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall appoint a superintendent who shall reside in some apartment of the infirmary or other building contiguous thereto, and shall receive such compensation for his services as they determine. The superintendent shall perform such duties as the commissioners impose upon him, and be governed in all respects by their rules and regulations. * * *."

From both of these provisions it would seem that the law contemplates that the superintendent of a county infirmary originally was a mere employe of the infirmary directors, while at the present time he is an employe of the county commissioners.

Therefore, in view of all the above, I do not feel that I would be justified in ruling otherwise than I have heretofore held in reference to the superintendent of a county infirmary; nor do I believe that the facts are so different that the position now could be distinguished from what it was at the time the court rendered the decision in Palmer vs. Zeigler, supra.

This conclusion having been reached, your question is readily answered to the effect that a woman is eligible to an appointment to the position of superintendent of a county infirmary, provided the commissioners of the county find her to be otherwise qualified for said position.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—CONTRACTS FOR IMPROVEMENT IN EXCESS OF ESTIMATE OF CITY ENGINEER.

A contract for an improvement to be paid for in part by special assessments may be let by the director of public service under the provisions of the Municipal Code, if the lowest and best bid therefor exceeds the amount of the estimate of the city engineer on file at the time of the passage of the resolution of necessity and approved therein, without impairing the validity of the assessment in whole or in part.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN.—I am in receipt of a letter from the city solicitor of Cincinnati requesting my opinion upon a question which I may phrase as follows:

"May a contract for an improvement to be paid for in part by special assessments be let by the director of public service under the provisions of the Municipal Code, if the lowest and best bid therefor exceeds the amount of the estimate of the city engineer on file at the time of the passage of the resolution of necessity and approved therein?"

It appears that conflicting opinions on this point have been expressed by various city solicitors and assistant city solicitors of the city of Cincinnati, and that in view of the present condition of the market for labor and materials in the construction of street improvements it has been found impossible to proceed in the city of Cincinnati with needed improvements until this question is settled.

I shall discuss the provisions of the Municipal Code. I understand that the city of Cincinnati is operating under a charter, but no reference is made in the communications which have been addressed to me to any special provisions of this charter, and I assume therefore that the charter adopts the essential provisions of the general law with respect to the procedure for making assessments and that for letting contracts in excess of five hundred dollars in the department of public service or its equivalent.

I quote the following provisions of the Municipal Code which must be considered in answering this question:

Section 3814.—"When it is deemed necessary * * * to make a public improvement to be paid for * * * by special assessments, council shall declare the necessity thereof by resolution, * * *."

Section 3818.—"A notice of the passage of such resolution shall be served * * * upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed, * * *."

Section 3815.—(107 Ohio Laws, 151)—"Such resolution shall * * * approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement. In such resolution council shall also determine the method of the assessment, the mode of payment, and whether or not bonds shall be issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. * * *."

Section 3816.—"At the time of the passage of such resolution, council shall have on file * * * plans, specifications, estimates and profiles of the proposed improvement, * * * which plans, specifications, estimates and profiles shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested."

Section 3819.—"The council shall limit all assessments to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, * * *."

Section 3820.—"The corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council deems just, which part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and * * * the cost of intersections."

Section 3823.—"An owner of a lot, * * * abutting upon a proposed improvement, claiming that he will sustain damages by reason of the improvement, within two weeks after the service of the notice * * * shall file a claim in writing with the clerk of the council, setting forth the amount of the damages claimed, * * *. An owner who fails to do so shall be deemed to have waived such damages * * *."

Section 3824.—"At the expiration of the time limited for so filing claims for damages, the council shall determine whether it will proceed with the proposed improvement or not, * * *."

Section 3825.—"If the council decides to proceed with the improvement, an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed. Such ordinance shall set forth specifically the lots and lands to be assessed for the improvement, shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement, the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor, the mode of payment therefor, a reference to the resolution theretofore passed for such improvement with date of its passage, and a statement of the intention of council to proceed therewith in accordance with such resolution and in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles provided for such improvement."

Section 3833.—"The contract for any such improvement shall be let by the director of public service, in the same manner as other contracts, * * *."

Section 3812.—"* * * . The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting * * * lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, * * * by any of the following methods:

First. By a percentage of the tax value of the property assessed.

Second. In proportion to the benefits which may result from the improvement, or Third. By the foot front of the property bounding and abutting upon the improvement."

Section 3896.—"The cost of any improvement contemplated in this chapter shall include the purchase money of real estate * * * the costs and expenses of the proceeding, the damages assessed in favor of any owner of adjoining lands * * *, the costs and expenses of the assessment, the expense of the preliminary and other surveys, and of printing, publishing the notices and ordinances required, * * * and serving notices on property owners, the cost of construction, interest on bonds, * * * and any other necessary expediture."

Section 3901.—"If in any such action (for the recovery of a special assessment) it appears that by reason of any technical irregularity or defect, whether in the proceedings of the council, or of any other officer of the corporation, or in the plans or estimates, the assessment has not been properly made against any defendant * * * the court may nevertheless * * * render judgment for the amount properly chargeable against such defendant * * *."

Section 3909.—"If an assessment proves insufficient to pay for the improvement and expenses incident thereto, the council may, under the limitation prescribed for such assessment, make an additional pro rata assessment to supply the deficiency. * * *."

Section 3911.—"Proceedings with respect to improvements shall be liberally construed by the councils and courts, to secure a speedy completion of the work, at reasonable cost, and the speedy collection of the assessment after the time has elapsed for its payment, and merely formal objections shall be disregarded, but the proceedings shall be strictly construed in favor of the owner of the property assessed or injured, as to the limitations on assessment of private property, and compensation for damages sustained."

Section 4328.—"The director of public service may make any contract * * * for any work under the supervision of that department * * *. When an expenditure within the department, * * * exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement * * *."

Section 4329.—"The bids shall be opened * * * by the director of public service and publicly read by him. Each bid shall contain the full names of every person * * * interested in it, and shall be accompanied by a sufficient bond * * * that if the bid is accepted a contract will be entered into and the performance of it properly secured. If the work bid for embraces both labor and material, they shall be separately stated with the price thereof. The director may reject any and all bids. * * *."

Section 4330.—"The contract shall be between the corporation and the bidder, and the corporation shall pay the contract price in cash. Where a bonus is offered for completion of contract prior to a specified date, the department may exact a pro rated penalty in like sum for every day of delay beyond a specified date."

Section 4331.—"When it becomes necessary in the opinion of the director of public service, in the prosecution of any work or improvement under contract, to make alterations or modifications in such contract, such alterations or modifications shall only be made upon the order of such director, but such order shall be of no effect until the price to be paid for the work and material, * * * under the altered or modified contract, has been agreed upon in writing * * *."

I do not believe that it will be necessary to consider any sections other than those which I have quoted except for the purpose of contract. Thus, there are provisions in the general laws of the state expressly prohibiting the letting of contracts at a greater sum than the estimated cost thereof (See section 6946 General Code, county road improvement; section 2323 G. C., state buildings; section 2358 G. C., county buildings and bridges; section 1207 G. C., state highway improvements.) The quotations which I have made from the Municipal Code, setting forth as they do all the provisions thereof with respect to this matter, show that there is no similar provision governing municipal officers in the letting of contracts now under consideration. I have not quoted section 4403, which requires contracts in the department of public service in excess of five hundred dollars to be approved by the board of control, but may say that it adds nothing to the sections which I have quoted in this particular.

I think it is clear from what has been said that unless there is something in the nature of the estimate required to be made and approved by the council as a part of the initial step looking toward the levying of special assessments which gives rise to some rights on the part of the owners of property to be assessed, there is nothing to prohibit the proper municipal authorities from letting a contract for a street improvement at a price in excess of that fixed in the estimate. In other words, there is no public right which could be enforced by general taxpayers or the city solicitor which would be violated by such action on the part of the proper authorities.

Nor am I able to see that there is any private right arising in favor of the owner of property which is to be assessed that would be violated by so letting the contract. True, he has notice that the estimated cost of the construction work of the improvement is to be a certain figure; but in the absence of a statute limiting the actual construction cost to that estimated, I do not see how it could be argued that he would have a right to expect that the actual cost of construction would be so limited. Unless there is something in the very nature of the estimate which makes it, without the express language contained in the other sections to which I have referred, a limitation on the amount of the contract or on the amount thereof which is to enter into the assessment, the property owner's knowledge of the amount of the estimate would carry with it as a necessary implication the correlative knowledge that it was but an estimate—a guess, and that there is nothing in the law which would prevent its being exceeded by the actual cost of the construction work.

Of course, the statutes make it perfectly clear that at the very most the estimate is not a limit on the amount which can be assessed, because in the first place many other items of the cost of the improvement are included in the total cost which is to be assessed; because in the second place the council need not assess the entire cost of the improvement nor even the maximum proportion thereof which by law it is permitted to assess, and there is nothing in the statutes requiring council to decide at the time it passes the resolution of necessity or even at the time it passes the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement that it will assess any definite proportion of the total cost; and because in the third place it is perfectly clear that so long as the essential character of the improvement is not changed supplemental contracts may lawfully be entered into, the effect of which may conceivably be to change the total cost of the construction work. Indeed this power to modify the original contract shows that not only may the estimate be exceeded by its exercise, but the plans and specifications themselves may be changed thereby so long as what is substantially a different improvement does not result therefrom.

All these things the owner of property to be assessed who has been served with notice of the passage of the resolution of necessity must be deemed to know in the legal sense. To be sure, it might be argued that he would have a right to expect, for example, that whatever the total cost of the improvement so much of it as is attributable to construction work should not exceed the estimate; that whatever proportion of the total cost and expense may be assumed by the city, so much thereof as is attributable to construction work shall not be based upon an amount greater than that set forth in the estimate; and that if the estimate is exceeded by modifications of the contract it will be exceeded only in this way and not by letting a contract in excess of the estimate. So that after all the question narrows down to the purpose of the estimate from the viewpoint of the owner of property to be assessed, and may be expressed in the formula:

> Has such owner a legal right to insist that he shall not be assessed beyond the amount set forth in the estimate?

Of course, he could not assert that to exceed the estimate in the letting of the contract would make the whole assessment invalid in the teeth of the curative provisions of the statutes which have been quoted.

I can not see that the property owner would have such a right. As previously stated, an estimate is in the absence of a provision expressly making its amount a limitation upon the amount for which a contract may be awarded nothing more than a guess—an approximation. There is no idea of limitation inherent in the word itself.

Conceding, then, that the purpose of having an estimate on file and approving it in the resolution of necessity, coupled with the giving of notice of such action to the property owner who is to be assessed, is to enable the property owner to predicate objections to the improvement upon the amount which it is going to cost as disclosed thereby—a question which is not free from doubt.

> See—Vincent vs. South Bend, (Wash.) 145 Pac. 452; Property Co. vs. Seattle, 69 Wash. 508; State vs. Town, 38 N. J. L., 419.

It does not follow that he would be entitled to infer therefrom anything more than the meaning of the word would necessarily imply. He does have a right to believe that the amount fixed in the estimate has been fixed in good faith, and that it represents an honest effort on the part of the officers of the municipality to advise the owners of property to be assessed of the probable cost of the improvement; but in the state of the statute law applicable to municipal assessments it can not be regarded as an assurance to him that the work will not cost more than that amount.

In one of the opinions of a city solicitor of Cincinnati to which I have referred it is reasoned that the letting of a contract in excess of the original estimate would be a change of the estimate and would be equivalent to letting a contract originally upon different plans and specifications from those approved by council. If this were so, it would follow that a contract could not be let in excess of the estimate, but that council would have to commence its legislation over again in order to enable the director of public service to let the contract at the figure required, just as it would have to reinitiate the improvement if the contract were to be originally let upon different plans and specifications from those originally approved.

But I can not follow this reasoning. To my mind the assumption that the letting of a contract in excess of the estimate is a change in the estimate begs the whole question. It brings us back again to the question as to what the estimate is for. It is true that in the ordinance determining to proceed, which is the ordinance constituting the authority of the director of public service to enter into the contract involving an expenditure of more than five hundred dollars required by the section governing the activities of that official, the council is required to declare its intention to proceed in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles which have been theretofore adopted. Such an ordinance determining to proceed is a command and an authority to the director of public service to let a contract only in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles. This is to be conceded; but if he lets a contract to the lowest and best bidder at a figure in excess of the estimate does it therefore follow that he has not proceeded "in accordance with the estimate?" I do not think so. It is to be admitted that some slight inference in this direction is afforded by the fact that whatever effect is to be given to the estimate is carried over, so to speak, and given force as regards the action of the director of public service; but it may be given plenty of force in this regard without having the effect which would have to be ascribed to it if it were to control the amount that he might agree to expend in letting a contract for the work.

Heretofore I have used the word "estimate" in the singular number as if it were an entirety. This I have done because it has not been claimed by any of the learned gentlemen who have expressed opinions thereon that anything other than the gross or total amount of the estimate would be binding upon the director of public service. As a matter of fact, however, the statutes use the word in the plural, from which I assume that the intent of the statute was that the council should have on file and approve not merely an estimate of the total construction cost, but also detailed estimates of the cost of labor and cost of material of various kinds. If anything would be controlling upon the director of public service it would seem to me that each item estimated would be so controlling. However, it will be observed that the director of public service has the right to reject any and all bids, and it is, of course, his duty and that of the board of control to scrutinize bids carefully for the purpose of determining which is the best one as well as which is lowest. The bids are required to be itemized as to labor and material, and the estimates may well be used by the director of public service and the board of control for the purpose of determining whether or not a contractor's bid is free from mistakes and errors of calculation such as might give rise to misunderstandings and difficulties. There are other purposes for which the estimates may be regarded as binding on the director of public service; but in the absence of a statute making the total amount thereof a limit upon the total contract price which he may agree to for the corporation, I can not say that such is its effect.

Being of the opinion, then, that the mere fact that the director of public service is to proceed under authority of council "in accordance with the estimates" does not make the total amount thereof binding upon him in the sense under discussion, I return to the question as to whether the letting of the contract at a price in excess of the estimate would be a change in the estimate. I do not see upon what grounds, other than those previously discussed, such an assumption could be predicated. Council certainly does not change the estimate when it orders the director of public service to proceed with the improvement in accordance therewith: the director of public service does not change the estimate when he lets a contract in excess of it; if he does anything he violates the estimate, but we have already seen that this is not so because the estimate does not bind him in this respect.

Without prolonging the discussion, I advise that it is my opinion that neither in assessment cases nor in other cases in which the director of public service of a municipal corporation governed by the Municipal Code is proceeding to let public contracts is the estimate of the engineering department of the city a limitation, in gross or otherwise, upon the amount of the contract which he may let. This conclusion is further sustained, in my judgment, by such provisions as that authorizing a supplemental assessment in case the first assessment is not sufficient to pay the total cost of the improvement, which, it seems to me, could hardly be based upon anything except an assumption that the original estimates may not have been adequate.

I have also considered the cases of Scovill vs. City of Cleveland, 1 O. S. 126, and Wewell vs. City of Cincinnati, 45 O. S. 407, which, in my judgment, support the conclusion at which I have arrived. Joyce vs. Barron, 67 O. S. 264, would be authority for the conclusion that the failure to make and file any estimate at all would be fatal to the assessment. This conclusion, of course, is based upon an entirely different principle from that which I have discussed. The case of Doddsworth vs. City of Cincinnati, 10 C. C. Dec. 179, contains a dictum to the contrary, the actual holding being that no greater effect could be claimed for the making of an assessment for construction work in excess of the estimate than that the assessment is voidable as to the excess—a proposition which I have already advanced in this opinion. On the main issue the remark of the court is clearly a dictum, and I do not regard the decision in this respect as binding.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO PAY FOR PRINTING OF PAMPHLETS CONTAINING MATTERS PERTAINING TO OFFICE OF COUNTY TREASURER.

The county commissioners have no authority in law to pay for the printing of a pamphlet giving certain information and making certain recommendations in reference to matters pertaining to the office of county treasurer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 11, 1918.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR.—I have a communication as of date July 1, 1918, and signed by G. A. Howells, assistant prosecuting attorney, asking for my opinion in reference to a certain matter therein set out. The communication reads as follows:

> "The treasurer of this county is desirous of publishing a pamphlet which I am enclosing herewith. The question has arisen whether or not this could be considered as supplies or stationery for the office.

Will you kindly look this pamphlet over and give your opinion as soon as possible as to whether or not the expense of the publication could be paid for by the county?"

To this communication is attached a certain printed pamphlet prepared by Hon. John J. Boyle, county treasurer.

The question is as to whether the cost of printing this pamphlet, which was prepared undoubtedly for circulation among the taxpayers of the county of Cuyahoga, might be paid by the county commissioners of Cuyahoga county on the theory that it might be classed as office supplies or stationery.

The pamphlet contains twenty pages of printed matter, and contains quite a bit of information which would be valuable to the taxpayers of Cuyahoga county, and also contains much matter, which shows a commendable zeal in the present county treasurer in the way of looking after the interests of the people of his county. Briefly, it contains articles along the following lines:

Showing the administration and the workings of the office of county treasurer, and setting forth a number of improved methods adopted by the present county treasurer; setting forth the fact that the delinquent tax collector has been abolished, and thus much money saved to the taxpayers of the county; setting forth what is done with the overpaid taxes, due to the fact that taxes upon certain property are frequently paid twice; stating that the real estate tax bills are mailed to the different taxpayers of the county; giving the information that the legislature has so modified the law in reference to delinquent tax sales that the same are now practically abolished; making recommendations that a constitutional amendment should be adopted in order that cities may be given certain relief in the way of having better representation in the legislature of the state; recommending that laws should be passed which would give relief to the cities in the matter of tax limitation; recommending that provision be made whereby a discount could be granted taxpayers in the event that they should see fit to pay the entire year's tax at the time the first installment thereof is due; recommending that different dates should be provided by law for the payment of taxes. The above, in brief, sets out the contents of this pamphlet.

While the same contains valuable information to the voters of the county, yet it can hardly be said that the pamphlet in any way goes to the matter of enabling the county treasurer to perform the duties of his office, and, therefore, it is my opinion that the printing of this pamphlet could not legally be paid by the county commissioners. At best, it seems under the provisions of our statutes as they now stand, there is no direct authority vested in the county commissioners which warrants them in purchasing supplies of any kind for county officers, but it has always been held that they have the implied power to furnish the different county officers with supplies necessary to enable them to perform the duties of their offices. However, I do not believe that this implied power should be extended beyond that which is absolutely necessary to enable the county commissioners to purchase those things which may be directly connected with the administration of the different county offices.

The section upon which the county commissioners rely for the power to purchase supplies is 2419 G. C. This section reads as follows:

"A court house, jail, public comfort station, offices for county officers, and an infirmary, shall be provided by the commissioners when, in their judgment, they, or any of them, are needed. Such buildings and offices shall be of such style, dimensions, and expense, as the commissioners determine. They shall provide all rooms, fire and burglar proof vaults and safes, and other means of security in the office of the county treasury, necessary for the protection of public moneys and property therein."

It will be noted that the matter rests in the judgment of the county commissioners as to whether they will furnish offices for the different county officers or not; that is, they are to furnish them with offices when they are needed, and the matter rests in their sound discretion as to when they are needed.

Under this section courts and attorneys-general of the state have held that county commissioners have the implied power to furnish not only a bare office, but also to furnish the supplies and stationery which may be needed to enable the different officers to perform the duties pertaining to their offices.

In an opinion rendered by me to Hon. David A. Webster, prosecuting attorney, as of date June 2, 1917, I held as follows:

"Section 2419 G. C. is the only section relative to providing offices for county officers and said section makes it discretionary with the commissioners in regard thereto."

In the body of the opinion I used the following language:

"Under various rulings of former attorneys-general it has been determined that the discretion resting with the commissioners would go so far as to permit also the furnishing of the office as well as the providing of the bare office rooms."

But, inasmuch as the pamphlet enclosed does not in any way partake of the nature of supplies for the office, or furnishings or stationery, it is my opinion that the county commissioners would have no warrant in law in paying for the printing of the same.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

REGISTRATION FEES FOR DOGS NOT TO BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION IN MAKING ALLOWANCE TO COUNTY AUDITOR FOR CLERK HIRE.

Registration fees paid for the registration of dogs under sections 5652-1 and 5652-2 are to be paid into the dog and kennel fund. These fees are not fees received by the county auditor within the meaning of section 2977 G. C. as compensation for his services and cannot be taken into consideration in determining the amount of money to be allowed the county auditor under section 2980-1 for clerk hire.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1918.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR.—I have your letter of July 1, 1918, as follows:

> "Referring to section 5652, General Code, and following as amended in 107 Ohio Laws 534, kindly advise if the county auditor is entitled to include in his fee fund all money paid in pursuant to this account, that is, can the county commissioners under section 2980, General Code, in determining the amount to be expended for the county auditor for compensation of deputies, assistants, clerks and other employes, include such money so paid in?"

Section 2977 G. C. reads:

> "All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

Section 2980 G. C. provides:

> "On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks and other employes, except court constables, of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix the aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes of such officer, except court constables, which sum shall be reasonable and proper and shall enter such finding upon their journal."

Section 2980-1 G. C. provides in part:

"The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office or office of the clerk of the courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; * * *."

Sections 5652-1 and 5652-2 G. C. read:

Section 5652-1.—"Every owner of a kennel of dogs shall in like manner as in section 5652 provided, make application for the registration of such kennel, and pay therewith to the county auditor a registration fee of ten dollars for such kennel. Provided, however, that the owner of such dog kennel shall, in addition to paying such kennel fee, comply with all of the requirements of section 5652 with respect to every dog more than three months of age belonging to such dog kennel not kept constantly confined in such kennel."

Section 5652-2.—"Every person immediately upon becoming the owner, keeper or harbourer of any dog more than three months of age or becoming the owner of a dog kennel, during any year, shall file like applications, with fees, as required by sections 5652 and 5652-1 for registration for the year beginning January first prior to the date of becoming the owner, keeper or harbourer of such dog or owner of such dog kennel."

Section 5652-13 G. C. reads:

Section 5652-13.—"The registration fees provided for in sections 5652-1 and 5652-2 shall constitute a special fund known as the dog and kennel fund which shall be deposited by the county auditor in the county treasury and be disposed of by defraying the cost of furnishing registration applications, certificates and tags, by the payment of animal claims as provided in sections 5840 to 5849 both inclusive of the General Code, as amended herein; and in accordance with the provisions of section 5653 of the General Code as amended herein."

It will be seen from the last four sections quoted that the registration fees received by the county auditor for the registration of dogs are paid into what is known as the dog and kennel fund and is used as provided in section 5652-13, partly for the payment of animal claims and partly as provided in section 5653 G. C. These registration fees are not fees received by the county auditor within the meaning of section 2977 G. C. as compensation for his services, and cannot be taken into consideration in determining the amount of money to be allowed the county auditor under section 2980-1 for clerk hire.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CLERK OF BOARD OF HEALTH AND HEALTH OFFICER.

The positions of clerk of the board of health and health officer are compatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN.—I am in receipt of your request for my opinion as follows:

"Are the positions of clerk of the board of health and health officer compatible?"

I am informed by Mr. Blau, of your department, that the health officer in question was appointed by the local board of health by virtue of the provisions of section 4408 G. C.

So far as I can ascertain, there is no statutory inhibition against one person holding both of these positions at the same time, nor can I see that one position is in any manner a check upon the other. I therefore advise you that the health officer of a city may also hold the position of clerk of the board of health.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—WHEN ADMINISTRATOR MUST PAY PENALTY.

There is no legal reason why an estate all interests in which vest as of the death of the testator or intestate should not be appraised within a reasonable time after such death; it is not necessary to wait until the property is converted into money, if that is anticipated, before settling the tax; and an administrator who does so and thus postpones the settlement of the tax beyond a year after such death must pay the penalty provided for by the statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1918.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR.—I have previously acknowledged receipt of your letter of July 1st, in which you state that "A" died two years ago leaving an estate, both real and personal, subject to the collateral inheritance tax provided for under section 5335 G. C.; that the chattels were disposed of and distributed and the tax paid within one year thereon; that the real estate has just been sold and the fund arising therefrom is ready for distribution and the administrator has tendered the taxes properly computed, except that he refuses to pay eight per cent. interest on such taxes for the time having elapsed one year after A's decease. You further state that claim is made that the administrator could not pay these taxes until the real estate was sold and the amount of taxes therefrom determined, and that this fund, although taxable, is not subject to a penalty in the form of interest, since the administrator was unable to tender the proper amount of taxes within the time fixed by the statute; and you request my opinion as to whether the administrator of "A" is legally bound to pay the penalty provided by section 5335 on these taxes.

In my opinion, the administrator's claim has no foundation in law. The machinery provided in section 5343 G. C. not only should have been, but must now be invoked to determine the value of this property. Its value is not the sum for which the administrator sold it, because, assuming that he got a fair price for it, that price is evidence only of its value at the time it was sold—not of its value at the time of the death of the intestate. The liability for the tax accrues and the amount thereof must be determined as of the date of the death which gives rise to the transfer, except as to interests arising therefrom which do not immediately vest.

I have dealt with this subject in several opinions, among them those found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1917, Volume III, pages 2333 and 2365, and in that addressed to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices under date of February 20, 1918, copy of which I enclose herewith. These opinions furnish the principle which decides the question you submit, though they do not pass upon your precise facts.

The administrator is without excuse for not having the amount of the tax determined and paying it in time to prevent the accrual of the penalty; and there is accordingly no reason which would justify the probate court in remitting the penalty in this case. My advice to you is to resist any such remission and claim the penalty.

I have said that the procedure outlined in sections 5343 et seq., in connection with which I might have mentioned section 5340 of the General Code, must be followed in all cases. I do not wish to lay too great stress on this statement. To save costs the prosecuting attorney and the administrator, with the approval of the court, might agree upon an entry as to the value of the property for purpose of assessing the tax; but if the administrator in anticipation of a sale postpones the valuation and settlement of the tax until the sale takes place to save costs and court procedure, he must do so at the peril of paying the penalty provided for by law, if such postponement carries the settlement of the tax beyond the year, for there is no necessity for any such postponement.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MR. G. H. LYTLE, 4412 Euclid Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

end of thirty days from the date of such notification the official is still delinquent the attorney-general shall certify the facts to the governor of the state who shall at once declare the office vacant and appoint a successor."

I have examined said synopsis and said proposed law. I am not passing upon the rhetoric, grammar, spelling or punctuation of either the proposed law or the synopsis.

I hereby certify that said synopsis is a truthful statement of the contents and purpose of said proposed law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECTION 13668-3 AUTHORIZES REIMBURSEMENT TO DEFENDANT AND COUNSEL FOR ACTUAL TRAVELING EXPENSES.

Section 13668-3 authorizes the reimbursement to the defendant for his actual traveling expenses and the traveling expenses of his counsel only.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 15, 1918, you wrote me as follows:

"By virtue of sections 13668 et seq. the defendant, in the case of the State of Ohio v. Allen Edick, took depositions in the state of Florida and Hopewell, Va., of witnesses residing out of this state.

The case was tried in the court of common pleas and the defendant found not guilty. He is a man who has considerable property and was able to employ counsel.

He has now presented a bill for the expenses incurred in the taking of the depositions and demands payment under section 13668-3.

I enclose herewith a copy of the statement and desire to know if the items set forth therein should be paid out of the county treasury under the last named section."

On June 12, 1918, and June 21, 1918, you addressed to me two additional communications from which I gather the following facts:

The expense accounts submitted by Allen Edick cover the expenses incurred in the taking of three depositions, viz., the depositions of Dr. A. R. Parrott, Mrs. Annie Clark, Jacksonville, Fla., and Dr. Robert Evans, of Hopewell, Va.; that depositions of Dr. Parrott, of Jacksonville, Fla., was taken at the request of the defendant and the deposition of Mrs. Annie Clark, of Jacksonville, Fla., taken at the same time, was taken at the request of the state; that the deposition of Dr. Evans, of Hopewell, Va., was taken at the request of the defendant. It seems that the court made an order relative to the Dr. Evans and Annie Clark depositions in relation to the expenses to be incurred, which orders were as follows:

"It is further ordered that the defendant, Allen Edick, and one of his counsel and the prosecuting attorney, may attend the taking of said depositions and examine the witnesses face to face, and all expenses so incurred in taking said depositions shall be submitted to the court for approval and shall be paid out of the county treasury.

It is further ordered that the defendant, Allen Edick, and one of his counsel, may attend the taking of said depositions in person and examine the witnesses face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court; and any and all expenses necessarily incurred by the defendant and his said counsel in so attending in taking of said depositions, and the expense of the prosecuting attorney necessarily incurred for said purpose, shall be submitted to the court for approval and shall be paid out of the county treasury as other county expenses."

No such order concerning the expense was made by the court relative to the Dr. Parrott deposition, but a commission to take the deposition was, I take it, properly issued.

Sections 13668 and 13668-1 of the General Code, as amended in 107 O. L. 451. read:

"Section 13668. When an issue of fact is joined upon an indictment, and material witness for the defendant or for the state resides out of the state, or, residing within the state, is sick or infirm, or about to leave the state, or is confined in prison, such defendant or the prosecuting attorney may apply in writing, to the court or the judge thereof in vacation, for a commission to take the deposition of such witness or witnesses. Such commission shall not be granted and said order shall not be made until there is filed with the clerk of said court an affidavit stating in substance the evidence sought to be secured by deposition, and that it is competent, relevant and material that the defendant is not confined, or, if confined in prison, that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio. If it appear to the court, or judge, upon such application supported by said affidavit, that the evidence sought to be secured by deposition is relevant, competent and material, and that the defendant is not confined in prison, or, if confined in prison, that the deposition is not to be taken outside of the state of Ohio, the court or judge shall grant such commission and make an order stating in what manner and for what length of time notice shall be given to the prosecuting attorney or to the defendant before such witness or witnesses shall be examined.

Section 13668-1. When the deposition is to be taken in the state of Ohio, and such commission is granted, and the defendant is confined in prison, the sheriff or deputy shall be ordered by the court or judge to take the defendant to the place of the taking of such deposition and have him before the officer at the taking of such deposition. Such sheriff or deputy shall be reimbursed for actual reasonable traveling expenses, for himself and the defendant, so incurred, the bills for the same, upon approval by the county commissioners, to be paid from the county treasury on the warrant of the county auditor. Such sheriff shall receive as fees therefor one dollar for each day in attendance thereat. Such fees and traveling expenses shall be taxed and collected as other fees and costs in the case."

Sections 13668-2 and 13668-3 G. C., as found in 103 O. L., 443, read:

"Section 13668-2. If counsel has been appointed by the state to defend a defendant under sections 13617 and 13618, General Code, said counsel shall be authorized to attend upon and represent the defendant at the taking of depositions, and said counsel shall be paid a reasonable fee for his services in such matter, in addition to the fee prescribed in section 13618, General Code, to be fixed by the county commissioners, and he shall also be allowed his actual expenses incurred in going to and from the place of taking the depositions."

"Section 13668-3. In all cases in which depositions are taken by the accused or by the state, to be used by or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance cannot be had at the trial, the court shall by proper order provide and secure to the accused the means and opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court, and any and all expenses necessarily incurred in the securing of said means and opportunity and the expenses of the prosecuting attorney in attending the act shall be paid out of the county treasury as other county expenses, upon the certificate of the court making such order."

I note that you say there is some question in your mind whether section 13668-3 has application to all cases in which depositions are taken, or only those cases referred to in section 13668-2, viz., where the defendant had counsel appointed by the state. After a reading of those sections I cannot bring myself to conclude that such is the case. Section 13668-3 has application, I think, in all cases in which depositions are taken by the state to be used by or against the accused. It now remains for us to determine just what items of the expense account submitted may be paid out of the county treasury by virtue of this section.

Without setting out in full the items submitted for payment by the defendant, Allen Edick, it is sufficient to state the full amount of $539.53, made up of charges as follows:

14 days time	$350.00
Witness fee advanced to witness at Jacksonville, Fla	1.25
Witness fee advanced to witness at Hopewell, Va	1.00
Notary fee paid to notary at Jacksonville	16.80
The balance of $170.48 is made up of actual traveling expenses incurred, such as railroad tickets, pullman tickets, hotel and meals.

It will be noted that section 13668-3 provides that the court shall, by proper order, provide and secure the accused the means and opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. The words "secure to the accused the means and opportunity to be present in person and with counsel" are rather indefinite, and it is hard to conclude just what sort of an order the legislature had in mind when enacting this section. I do not believe that it is necessary for the court to provide for the payment of the expense in this order, but simply by order to authorize the defendant and his counsel to make the trip. The expense of such trip, after the trip has been authorized by the court, is then made payable out of the county treasury upon the certificate of the court which authorized it. From your letter it is clear that the court made this order with reference to the Dr. Evans and Annie Clark depositions, and while you state that no order similar to the one made in connection with these depositions was made concerning the deposition of Dr. Parrott, yet I take it that the defendant's presence at the taking of the Parrott deposition with his counsel was authorized by the court, the same as in the case of the other two depositions, and if this is true a nunc pro tunc order could now be made by the court concerning the Parrott deposition. To my mind, then, the three depositions are within the provision of section 13668-3, and whatever payment is authorized by that section may be made. That section provides that the court shall secure to the accused "the means and opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court," and the payment of all expenses necessarily incurred thereby. It seems to me that this section only authorizes the payment of the expense which the defendant and his counsel incurred in making the trip. In other words, the section aims to place the defendant and his counsel in the same position in the taking of the deposition as if the testimony was being given in court. It does not aim to pay the defendant's attorney any counsel fees or to pay witness fees, stenographic fees or notary fees. Some of these fees may be proper items of cost, but if so they are payable by virtue of other provisions of the statute as costs and not out of the county treasury upon the certificate of the court, under section 13668-3.

Applying these conclusions to the expense account submitted, I am of the opinion that the only items which may be paid under section 13668-3 are those covering actual traveling expenses incurred for the defendant and his counsel, which I think total $170.48. It might be noted here that inasmuch as the Dr. Parrott and Annie Clark depositions were taken at the same time on the same trip to Jacksonville, Fla.,the question of whether a proper order was made with reference to the Parrott deposition by the court at the time becomes immaterial.

The charge of $350.00 by defendant's counsel for 14 days of his time should be disallowed and the witness fees and notary fees should I think be paid as costs in the case and not upon the certificate of the court under section 13668-3 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—HOW VACANCY OCCURS IN SAID OFFICE—ENTITLED TO SALARY UNTIL HE RESIGNS OR OFFICE BECOMES VACANT.

1. The mere fact that a county surveyor enlists in the army and leaves the county to take training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, does not ipso facto vacate the office.

2. Under the provisions of section 2725 G. C. the county commissioners have authority to fill a vacancy when a vacancy occurs; but they have no authority to declare and create a vacancy in the office of county surveyor.

3. County commissioners have no authority to attempt to fill a vacancy in the office of county surveyor unless a vacancy actually occurs either through the death or voluntary resignation of the county surveyor, or unless he is removed under the provisions of section 2790 G. C.

4. A county surveyor is entitled to the salary provided by law until he resigns or the office otherwise becomes vacant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 13, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 20, 1918, requesting my opinion upon the following:

"In a certain small county of this state, the county surveyor did not ask the commissioners for any moneys to be set aside for deputies, assistants, etc., in his office, as he could have done under the provisions of section 2787, as amended, 107 O. L. 70. Quite recently the surveyor entered the officers' training camp at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, Indiana, and after so doing appointed a deputy.

In view of the provisions of section 7181 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 110, which says that the county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office, can the surveyor enter the federal service and still receive his salary, or can he appoint a deputy and have the deputy paid for acting in his stead when no request had been made to the commissioners for an appropriation for this purpose? Under the circumstances, can either the surveyor or his deputy be paid out of the county treasury or does a vacancy exist that should be filled?"

The matters set out in your letter naturally divided themselves into two parts: (1) As to the officer and the duties which he has to perform; (2) and the salary pertaining to the office.

You call particular attention to one provision of section 7181 G. C. (107 O. L. 110), which reads as follows:

"The county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office * * *."

If this provision is construed literally, of course the surveyor could not absent himself from the county for the purpose of taking training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, but I do not think it should be given a literal construction. This is not the object and purpose of this provision, which will aid us in construing the same.

In the past a custom had prevailed among many of the county surveyors of accepting considerable private employment or employment along the line of ditch work, etc. This was carried on to such an extent that the legislature concluded many county surveyors were neglecting the duties of their office to give their time to those matters for which they received fees.

The object of section 7181, supra, was to give the county surveyors a fair salary for the duties performed by them and at the same time compel them to devote their time and attention to the duties of their office, and not to the acceptance of employment for which they received fees in addition to their regular salary. So I do not believe the county surveyor is placed in any different position than any other county officer. He stands in the same position as does a county auditor or recorder, or other county officer.

The next question to consider is whether the county surveyor vacated his office when he left the county to take training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison. If he vacated the office, he could not, after doing so, appoint a deputy to perform the work of the office so vacated by him.

In connection with the question as to whether the county surveyor vacated the office when he left the state to take training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, it will be well for us to keep in mind the fact that before he could take such training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison it was necessary for him to be an enlisted member in the United States army. I call particular attention to this fact for the reason that on May 9, 1917, I rendered an opinion to Hon. W. P. Barnum, judge of the court of common pleas of Mahoning county, which is found in Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, page 640. In this opinion I was placing a construction upon a provision of our constitution which reads as follows:

"The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years."

In some respects this provision is similar to that of section 7181 G. C., above quoted. In this opinion I held as follows (page 645):

> "It is my opinion that the enlisting in the officers' reserve corps, which will require your being out of the county for ninety days, would not be in violation of either of said constitutional provisions. While you would not be strictly residing in your county during the time you are at Ft. Benjamin Harrison, yet it would be an absence merely for temporary purposes; and, of course, it would not be in violation of the second constitutional provision cited herein, because you would neither be holding office nor drawing a salary."

The opinion rendered in the case of Hon. W. P. Barnum might serve as the basis for this opinion, were it not for the fact that at the time the opinion was rendered to Mr. Barnum the training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison was open to civilians and if they were successful in the test through which they had to pass they received a commission in the United States army. If they were not successful, they were free to return to their usual and ordinary vocations, thus making the stay at Ft. Benjamin Harrison purely a temporary one. However, under present conditions this is not the case, inasmuch as those entering the training at Ft. Benjamin Harrison must be enlisted persons in the army of the United States.

Hence we have this question to consider: Does the fact that the county surveyor has joined the United States army and left the state to take training at Ft Benjamin Harrison, and thus possibly permanently disable himself to perform the duties of his office, amount to a constructive or implied resignation of the office by abandonment, so that it can be held at this time that there is a vacancy in said office?

Section 2785 G. C. reads as follows:

> "If the vacancy occurs in the office of county surveyor because of death, resignation or otherwise, the county commissioners shall appoint a suitable person county surveyor, who upon giving bond and taking the oath of office as required of the county surveyor elect, shall enter upon the discharge of the duties of the office."

Under this section the county commissioners have no power or authority to appoint a person county surveyor excepting where a vacancy occurs either because of death, resignation or otherwise. That is, the provisions of this section are clear to the point that the county commissioners have no authority to create a vacancy. They merely have authority to fill a vacancy, providing one exists. Therefore the vital question is as to whether the office of county surveyor is vacated, which is not an easy matter to determine.

Dillon in his work on municipal corporations in section 420 lays down as an absolute principle of law that an office may be vacated by abandonment. This section reads as follows:

> "An office may be vacated by abandonment. A voluntary enlistment by a civil officer in the military service of the United States for three years, or during the war, vacates the civil office, being a constructive resignation by abandonment. So where residence within the corporation is necessary in order to be eligible to hold an office, permanent removal from the municipality may undoubtedly be taken as evincing an intention to resign, and as an implied resignation."

He bases his conclusions mainly upon cases decided by the courts of Indiana, but when we come to examine the decisions in Indiana we find they are based mainly upon the constitutional provision in that state, which requires that all county officials shall reside, during the term for which they are elected, in their respective counties; for instance, in Relender v. State, 149 Ind. 283, the court say:

> "Where a county commissioner violates the provision of section 6, Article VI of the constitution, requiring county officials actually to reside in the county in which they hold office, by voluntarily ceasing to reside therein during his term of office, it will operate as an abandonment of the office, and ipso facto a surrender of all rights and title to the office."

In the opinion on p. 288 the court say:

> "That the title of a public officer may be terminated and his office vacated by abandonment is a rule of the law settled beyond controversy. As the constitution exacts of a county officer the duty to actually reside in the county in which he holds his office, if he violates this provision of the law by voluntarily ceasing to reside therein, during his term, it will operate as an abandonment of the office, and ipso facto a surrender of all his right and title to the office."

As authority for this legal proposition the court cites decisions in its own state. It is to be noted that the court used the constitutional provision above referred to as the basis for its conclusion. Hence, I. do not believe that the holdings of the courts in Indiana could be used as authority to the effect that in the case now under consideration the county surveyor has vacated his office, and that the county commissioners of Vinton county have authority in law to fill the vacancy, under the provisions of the section of the General Code above quoted. There are many cases to the contrary on this point.

In Johnson v. Wilson, et al., 2 N. H. 202, the court held:

> "Where once filled, the office, until the term of it expires, can not be deemed vacant except by the death, resignation or removal of the incumbent."

In State v. Sheldon, 10 Neb. 453, the court held:

> "Proceedings to remove a county treasurer from office for wilful neglect of duty must be instituted by a complaint containing the charges against him with the necessary specifications under them and verified by the oath of an elector of the state.
> It is not sufficient for the board of county commissioners to declare and resolve that the office of county treasurer is vacant; there must be a judgment of ouster."

In Page, Auditor, v. Hardin, 47 Ky. 648, careful consideration was given by the court, and hence this case is used as authority by many other courts. It had to do with the question as to whether the secretary of state had abandoned his office because of the fact that he failed to reside at the seat of government. On September 1, 1846, the governor of Kentucky made the following entry upon his executive journal: (p. 649)

> "Whereas Benjamin Hardin, by his failure, wilful neglect and refusal to reside at the seat of government, and perform the duties of secretary, has abandoned said office, and said office, in the judgment of the governor, has become vacant for the causes aforesaid, it is, therefore, declared by the governor, and ordered to be entered on the executive journal, that the office of secretary has become and is vacant. Wherefore, to fill said vacancy, the governor this day commissioned George B. Kinkead, Esq. to be secretary till the end of the next general assembly of Kentucky. And George B. Kinkead having qualified to his commission, entered upon the discharge of his duties."

The question arose as to whether the governor of Kentucky had the right in law to declare the office of secretary of state vacant and to fill the same by appointment. On p. 668 we find the following reasoning, in the opinion:

"If, as we have assumed, Hardin, though he failed to reside at Frankfort and perform the duties of his office, performed those duties occasionally in person, and generally by authorized deputy, we are satisfied, that whatever personal deliquency might be involved in his failure, etc., to reside at Frankfort and perform the duties of secretary (if this last be a separate allegation), he cannot be regarded as having abandoned the office. And even if we exclude the assumption as to his performance of the duties occasionally in person, still it is not stated, and cannot be assumed that they were wholly unperformed, or that their performance was not provided for by him. And whatever might have been the effect of a total and continued failure, by which the business remained wholly undone, we are of opinion that the general allegation of failure, etc., to reside at the seat of government, and perform the duties of secretary, does not make out a case of abandonment in the only sense in which it would vacate an office, because it does not establish as an inference of fact or law, a voluntary or actual relinquishment of it.

V. The governor, however, decided that by reason of the alledged failure, etc., Hardin had abandoned the office, and it had become vacant. The response relies upon this decision as conclusive of the question, and it becomes our duty to inquire whether it is conclusive as to the rights of the officer to whom it relates.

The constitution (article 3, section 10), confers upon the governor the express power 'to fill up vacancies that may happen during the recess of the senate, by granting commissions which shall expire at the end of their next session.' But this clause certainly gives no power to make a vacancy by declaration or judgment that one exists, or by granting a commission to fill one assumed to exist. . There must be a vacancy before the power or duty of filling it arises. And although having the power to act in a particular state of case, the governor must decide for the determination of his own action, whether and when the designated state of case exists, still the constitutional power of granting the commission, and therefore, the legal validity of the act, is made to rest upon the fact of an actual vacancy, and not upon his opinion or judgment of the fact. To say that his opinion or judgment of the existence of a vacancy, is to be the sole and conclusive test of the fact, is to make him the sole and conclusive judge of all the acts and causes which may produce a vacancy, is to change a contingent into an absolute power; and must ultimately result in converting the power to fill a vacancy already existing, into the power of creating a vacancy to be filled. Such a power, which would place within the uncontrolled discretion of the governor, not merely the selection of the person to fill an office actually vacant, but the displacing of an officer under the form of filling a vacancy, is not conferred by the clause in question, and is moreover inconsistent with those clauses which fix the tenure of office during good behavior, and which therefore give to the officer the right to hold according to that tenure. If the governor may determine conclusively upon the existence of a vacancy, there is no security for this right, but by imputing to him an infallibility which belongs to no earthly officer or tribunal—which the constitution imputes to none, and which cannot be regarded as the appointed guaranty of constitutional or legal rights."

Honey v. Graham, 39 Tex. 1, is a case in point The first, second, third, fifth and six branches of the syllabus read as follows:

"1. A proclamation by the governor that the state treasurer elect had absented himself from the limits of the state—not on public business and without leave of absence—leaving no bonded or responsible clerk, but leaving a man acting as such who, when called on to give the bond required by law, was unable to do so; held, not sufficient to authorize the courts to infer an abandonment of the office.

2. The right to hold and exercise the functions of an office to which one is elected by the people, is regarded both as property and privilege, and the incumbent can only be deprived of his office in the manner pointed out in the 16th section of the 1st Article of the constitution.

3. Though the governor may assume the existence of a vacancy in such an office, no case can occur wherein he will be authorized to adjudge the office forfeited.

5. The power of the governor to create a vacancy in an office exists only where the office is filled by the governor's appointment, without concurrence by the senate or election by the people, and the term of office is undefined by law.

6. The right to an elective office may be lost by nonuser or misuser, though a party continue to assert it, but the determination of the question whether it be lost or not is for the judiciary and not the executive."

On page 12 of the opinion we find the following principle:

"The power of the governor to fill a vacancy, when one exists, is not disputed. The power to create a vacancy is denied by every authority, except where the office is filled by the governor's choice of an incumbent without concurrence of the senate or election by the people, and the term of office is undefined by law. In such case the incumbent holds at the pleasure of the executive, and may be at any time removed from the office."

In State ex rel. Carson v. Harrison, 113 Ind. 434, we find the following principle set forth in the first four branches of the syllabus:

"While it is the right of the governor to determine for his own guidance in each particular case whether a vacancy exists in an office, yet he can not make a valid appointment unless there is a vacancy in fact.

The authority to fill vacancies confers upon the governor no judicial power, and the title of an incumbent can not be affected by the ex parte judgment of the executive that the office is vacant.

The final adjudication of such a right is, unless otherwise specially provided by competent authority, a matter of judicial concern, and the prior claimant is entitled to be heard in court.

The word 'vacancy,' as applied to an office, has no technical meaning, but an office is vacant or not according to whether it is occupied by one who has a legal right to hold it and to exercise the powers and perform the duties pertaining thereto."

In the opinion on page 438 we find the following:

"While it is the right of the executive department to determine for its own guidance whether or not a vacancy exists in each particular case, and while every intendment is to be indulged in favor of the action of the executive, it must nevertheless be borne in mind that the power of the governor to make valid appointment does not arise until there is a vacancy in fact. The existing title of an incumbent can not be extinguished or affected by the ex parte judgment of the executive that the office is vacant. The authority to fill vacancies confers upon the governor no judicial power.

* * * * * * * * * *

The word 'vacancy,' as applied to an office, has no techical meaning. An office is not vacant so long as it is supplied in the manner provided by the constitution or law with an incumbent who is legally qualified to exercise the powers and perform the duties which pertain to it; and, conversely, it is vacant in the eye of the law whenever it is unoccupied by a legally qualified incumbent, who has a lawful right to continue therein until the happening of some future event. * * *

When an office has been conferred upon one legally eligible, and has been accepted, no vacancy can be said to exist therein until the term of service and right to hold as fixed by the law expires, or until the death, resignation or removal of the person elected or appointed."

In Hedley v. Board of Commissioners, 4 Blackf. 116, the court found as follows in the second branch of the syllabus:

"The board of county commissioners can not create a vacancy in the office of recorder, but when such vacancy has occurred, they may declare its existence, and make an appointment to supply it, in conformity with the statute."

The court reasoned as follows in the opinion on page 118:

"It is said that the board had no authority to declare the office vacant. By the statute, it is expressly made the duty of the board when the office of recorder is vacant, to appoint, etc. The vacancy which it is competent to fill must arise 'by death, resignation, removal, or otherwise.' The order of the board, which is before us, does not create the vacancy in the office of recorder, to which it was unequal, for the vacancy had previously occurred; but it simply states that 'it appearing to the satisfaction of the board that the office of recorder, etc. is vacant in consequence of the removal, etc., the board appoints, etc.' The board by this order does not create a contingency upon which it can act, but declares that the event had occurred upon which its action became necessary. The distinction is palpable between creating a vacancy and declaring that a vacancy had taken place."

I desire to call attention to the fact that the last two cases above quoted from were considered by the supreme court of Indiana upon the authority of which Dillon laid down his principle above quoted.

Throop on Public Officers, section 437, lays down the following propositions:

> "A statute, conferring upon a board power to fill a vacancy, does not empower them to create a vacancy, but they may decide, in the first instance, whether a vacancy has occurred. A constitutional provision, giving the governor power to fill vacancies during the recess of the senate, gives him no power to make a vacancy by a declaration that one exists, and by granting a commission to fill such supposed vacancy, and his decision that the vacancy exists will not conclusively affect the right of others. The appointment by the governor of a person to fill an office, rightfully held by an incumbent, whose term of office has not expired, and who cannot be arbitrarily removed, is void, and the surrender of the office by the incumbent, to the person so appointed, does not validate the appointment, but creates a vacancy."

We are not entirely without authority upon this question in our own state. In State of Ohio ex rel., v. Bryce, 7 Ohio Rep., Part II, p. 82, the court was considering a question which is similar to the one now under consideration. In the syllabus of this case the following principle is laid down:

> "A trustee of the Ohio University can not be regarded as having vacated his place if he has not resigned, unless there is a judicial decision that such vacation has taken place. A legislative appointment of a successor, without such resignation or adjudication, confers no legal right upon the person appointed."

In section 8, of the act creating the Ohio University located at Athens, found in 2 O. L. 193, the following provision was made:

> "That when any member of the corporation shall be removed by death, resignation or otherwise, such vacancy shall be supplied at the next meeting of the legislature of the state."

It is to be noted that this language is similar to that found in section 2785 G. C., above quoted.

In 30 O. L. 326, we find the following resolution:

> "Resolved, by the general assembly of the state of Ohio, that Thomas Bryce of Athens county be, and he is hereby appointed a trustee of the Ohio University, to fill the vacancy occasioned by Jacob Linley having removed out of the state."

The court was called upon to pass upon the validity of this resolution, based upon the following statement of facts: Mr. Linley was appointed a trustee in 1805, he then residing in Athens. He performed his duties until 1828, at which time he removed to the neighborhood of Cincinnati. In 1829 he removed to Virginia. He afterwards removed to Pennsylvania, and resided there on January 11, 1832. Between the time of his removal from Athens in 1828 and January 11, 1832, he was present at but one meeting of the board, which was in 1830, when he transacted business with them without objection.

Upon this state of facts the question was raised whether Mr. Linley had vacated his office, on the theory that he had abandoned it. In the opinion on p. 83 the court say:

> "It is conceded that the legislature have no power of appointment, except in the event of 'a vacancy.' Unless, therefore, the non-residence or non-attendance of Linley renders his office vacant, the appointment of Bryce is not good.
> It is well settled that neither a neglect to exercise corporate powers, nor even an abuse of them, ipso facto, works a forfeiture of the franchise, that the corporation subsists until the forfeiture be ascertained and declared by a competent tribunal, in a judicial proceeding instituted for that purpose against it by government. * * * It is equally well settled that no member of a corporation shall be disfranchised, no officer removed, without the agency of a tribunal competent to investigate the cause and pronounce the sentence of the loss of right. The office is not vacant by neglect or abuse; it requires an act done, or the exercise of power, to work the forfeiture and determine the title to the office, 2 Black. 156; 4 Kent's Com. 127; for it is the forfeiture of a vested right for the breach of a condition in law. Where the charter prescribes the terms under which the power of a motion is to be exercised, they must be pursued; where the organic law is silent, the corporation itself possesses the inherent power to ascertain and declare the forfeiture either of franchise or office. * * *
> This proceeding is essentially adversary in its character. The justice of the common law permits no investigation of facts which may be followed by the loss of a right, or by the infliction of a penalty, to be conducted ex parte. It is essential to its validity that the party should be duly summoned. * * *
> In the present case, if the relator had forfeited his office by neglecting his duties, it was necessary that the corporation, after reasonable notice to him and an opportunity for hearing, should investigate the facts, and determine his title to the office by sentence, and thus create the vacancy. Until this was done the relator was entitled to his seat, and the contingency had not happened in which the legislature could lawfully appoint a trustee."

In view of all the above, I will note the provisions of another section of the General Code, which reads as follows:

> "Section 2790. Any person may bring a civil action in the court of common pleas against the county surveyor, alleging his incapacity, misconduct in office or neglect of duty. A copy of the petition with the summons shall be served on such surveyor. Such cause shall have precedence over other business, and, if upon trial thereof, the court finds a surveyor guilty of any of the charges, by the judgment of the court he shall be removed from office."

Here is a specific provision made, applying only to the county surveyor. It provides that he may be removed from office for neglect of duty. Inasmuch as sections 2785 and 2790, supra, apply specifically to the county surveyor alone, it is my opinion that the county commissioners would have no authority to attempt to fill a vacancy until a vacancy actually occurred, either through the death or voluntary resignation of a county surveyor, or in case of removal under section 2790 G. C. In other words, they have the authority to appoint if a vacancy occurs, but they have no authority to declare a vacancy.

This leaves the question of salary yet to be considered. So long as the county surveyor is not removed or does not resign, he is entitled to the salary pertaining to the office. It is a universal proposition, well established, that salary is something which is incident to the office itself and not to the performance of the duties of the office.

In Bryan v. Cattell, 15 Ia. 538, the fifth branch of the syllabus reads:

> "When the statute providing for the compensation of an officer makes no provision for a deduction for absence or neglect of duty, he is entitled to the salary for the time he legally remains in office, without reference to any neglect in the discharge of the duties thereof."

It is clear that the deputy county surveyor is entitled to no compensation from the treasury of the county inasmuch as the county commissioners made no allowance therefor. Under section 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70), the county surveyor can not employ deputies and pay them to exceed the amount allowed by the county commissioners. To be sure, if the county surveyor desires to draw his salary and from it compensate the deputy no one could complain.

It might be suggested that under said section 2788 the county surveyor could make application to the court of common pleas for an allowance to take care of deputy hire, but this could not be used to pay the deputy for the services rendered prior to the time the order was secured.

From all the above the following conclusions are reached by me:

1. The mere fact that a county surveyor has enlisted in the army and gone to Ft. Benjamin Harrison to take training, does not ipso facto vacate the office by abandonment.

2. The county surveyor, not having vacated his office, was warranted in law in appointing a deputy to perform the duties pertaining to the office, during his absence.

3. So long as the county surveyor remains in office he is entitled to the salary incident to the same.

4. The deputy appointed by the county surveyor, however, is not entitled to draw any compensation from the county treasury, if the county commissioners have made no such allowance and no allowance therefore has been made by the court of common pleas of the county.

5. The county commissioners under the provisions of section 2785 G. C. can not declare a vacancy in the office of county surveyor, but can only fill a vacancy which has already occurred either by death, resignation or removal of the court under section 2790 G. C.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF AUGLAIZE COUNTY, $6,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 15, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

> In re:—Bonds of Auglaize county in the sum of $6,000.00 for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of certain repairs and improvements in the county jail of said county.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Auglaize county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form has been submitted to me with and as a part of said transcript and I am therefore holding the transcript until a proper bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue has been submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF HAS NO AUTHORITY TO ARREST A DELINQUENT CHILD OUTSIDE OF STATE AND IS NOT ENTITLED TO FEE OR EXPENSES FOR SO DOING.

A warrant of the court is not authority for the sheriff or probation officer to arrest a delinquent child outside the state of Ohio. There is no provision in law for the payment of the expenses of the sheriff or probation officer in pursuing and arresting such child outside the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 15, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of June 20, 1918, as follows:

> "Under the juvenile court laws, while the judge may issue his writs to the sheriff or the probation officer, may he issue warrant to the sheriff to arrest and bring back a delinquent child from another state, and if so, how is the sheriff to be paid for his services in such a case?"

Section 1660 G. C. provides:

> "The summons, warrants, citations, subpoenas, and other writs of such judge may issue to a probation officer of any such court or to the sheriff of any county, and the provisions of law relating to the subpoenaing of witnesses in criminal cases shall apply in so far as they are applicable."

While the statutes authorize the juvenile court to make such orders as it sees fit relating to the management of delinquent children, I know of no statute which authorizes the court to order the arrest of any delinquent child when such child is out of the state, nor any statute which allows the sheriff or probation officer to go beyond the confines of the state of Ohio in pursuit of a delinquent child.

In an opinion rendered by this department on March 15, 1917, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 265, it was said at page 267:

> "There is no authority in law, that I am aware of, for the payment of costs incurred in the pursuit of persons charged with misdemeanors outside of the state of Ohio."

It has frequently been held by this department that sheriffs, chiefs of police and other officers are without authority to pursue criminals out of the state and that the expense incurred in such pursuit can not be paid except in felony cases when a requisition is had. Delinquency cases are to be viewed in the same light as misdemeanors, and in reply to your inquiry beg to say that it is my opinion that the sheriff is without authority to pursue a delinquent child outside of the state and in case he does so, no allowance can be made him either as fees or expenses in connection with such service.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTION TO FILL VACANCY IN OFFICE OF REPRESENTATIVE TO CONGRESS IS SPECIAL ELECTION AND SHOULD BE CONDUCTED SEPARATELY FROM REGULAR ELECTION ALTHOUGH HELD AT SAME TIME.

1. Where a vacancy in the office of representative to congress occurs and the governor issues a writ of election directing that a special election be held to fill such vacancy, and in such writ fixes a date for the primary as provided for in section 4964 G. C.; and where the date so fixed for said primary is the date for holding the regular primary election, the special primary election for nominating candidates to fill the vacancy in the office of representative to congress shall be conducted separately from the regular primary election; that is, there should be a separate ballot, poll books and ballot box for said special election, although conducted by the same election officers.

2. In the conduct of a special election on the 5th of November, for the election of a member to congress to fill a vacancy, there should be a separate ballot, poll books and ballot box for said special election, and the election officers at the general election shall conduct said special election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 15, 1918.

HON. W. D. FULTON, State Supervisor of Elections, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested a ruling of this department on the manner of conducting the election for representative to congress in the fourteenth congressional district of Ohio, for the vacancy now existing in such office and for the special election called by Hon. James M. Cox, Governor.

The governor's writ of election reads as follows:

"TO THE SHERIFFS OF LORAIN, MEDINA, PORTAGE AND SUMMIT COUNTIES.

Whereas a vacancy has occurred in the office of REPRESENTATIVE TO CONGRESS in the fourteenth congressional district of Ohio;

Now, therefore, I, James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, by virtue of the powers vested in me by law, hereby direct that a special election be held to fill such vacancy in such congressional district on Tuesday, the fifth day of November, 1918.

I further direct that on Tuesday, the thirteenth day of August, 1918, a special primary be held in such district for the purpose of nominating candidates for such election.

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the Great Seal of the State of Ohio to be affixed at Columbus, Ohio, this first day of July, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen.

(Signed) JAMES M. COX,
Governor."

This writ of election is issued under the provisions of section 4829 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "When a vacancy in the office of representative to congress or senator or representative to the general assembly occurs, the governor, upon satisfactory information thereof, shall issue a writ of election, directing that a special election be held to fill such vacancy in the territory entitled to fill it on a day specified in the writ. Such writ shall be directed to the sheriff or sheriffs within such territory who shall give notice of the time and places of holding such election as in other cases. Such election shall be held and conducted and returns thereof made as in case of a regular election."

The nomination of candidates for members of the house of representatives in the congress of the United States for the regular term is provided for in section 4963 G. C. (107 O. L. 400), but as will be noted in the writ of election, the nomination and election provided for therein is for a vacancy.

Art. I, Sec. 2, clause 4 of the Constitution of the United States provides:

> "When vacancies happen in the representation from any state, the executive authority thereof shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies."

So it is evident that such writs of election direct the holding of a special election to fill the unexpired term, and that this election to fill such vacancy under the provisions of section 4829 G. C. must be a special election.

Section 4964 G. C. provides:

> "When a call is issued for a special election, the date of the primary shall be fixed at the same time and in the same manner by the authority calling such special election, which primary shall be held at least two weeks prior to the time fixed for such special election. Declarations of candidacy and certificates for such primary shall be filed and fees shall be paid at least ten days before the date for holding the same and such election shall be called so as to allow at least five days for preparing and filing such nomination papers."

Acting under the provisions of this section, the governor fixed the date of the primary as well as the date of the election. Said section provides that the date of the primary shall be fixed at the same time and in the same manner by the authority calling such special election, and further that the primary shall be held at least two weeks prior to the time fixed for such special election.

There is a further provision in said section that the declaration of candidacy and certificates for such primary shall be filed and fees shall be paid at least ten days before the date for holding the same and that such election shall be called "so as to allow at least five days for preparing and filing such nomination papers." This last provision merely guards against the calling of the primary election at too early a date, having reference to the ten-day period for filing declarations of candidacy, provisions being made that the call be made at such time as to allow at least five days for preparing and filing the nomination papers, so as to give candidates at least a five-day period prior to the ten-day period mentioned in the section for such preparation as might be necessary.

So it is evident that both the primary and the election to be held under the writ of election issued by the governor are special elections. It has so happened that in fixing the dates for the special primary and the special election the governor has fixed the primary on the regular primary election day and the special election for the regular November election day, but this does not make these elections any less special.

Section 4829 G. C. provides that the special election to fill the vacancy in the office of congressman "shall be held and conducted and returns thereof made as in case of a regular election." Ordinarily, special elections are called for voting on questions or propositions, and section 5020 G. C. provides that "when the approval of a question, other than a constitutional amendment, is to be submitted to a vote, such question shall be printed on a separate ballot and deposited in a separate ballot box, to be presided over by the same judges and clerks of election."

There does not seem to be any special section of the statute making similar provisions when candidates are to be voted for at a special election, but since it is only rarely that such special election would be called for the regular election day, and since such election must be a special election, it necessarily follows that while it is held upon the same days as the primary and the regular election, it is entirely separate and distinct from the primary and the regular election, and, while conducted by the same election officers, must be kept separate and apart. This necessitates a separate ballot, poll books and ballot box for the special election.

Section 5050 G. C., providing for the contract for printing ballots and other supplies, which at regular elections must be advertised, provides that in case of special elections notice may be given by mail instead of publication.

Sections 5103 and 5104 G. C. are special provisions governing the returns of special elections for member of congress, abstracting and canvassing the vote thereon.

In view of the fact that the provisions of law make the primary at which a candidate to fill a congressional vacancy shall be nominated, and the election at which such candidate shall be elected, a special election, and in view of the other provisions of the election laws regarding special elections, it is my opinion:

(1.) That as to the nominations for congress to fill the vacancy, the special primary is to be conducted as if there were no other election being conducted on that day; that is to say there should be a separate ballot, poll books and ballot box for the special primary, although of course conducted by the same election officers.

(2) In the conduct of the special election on the 5th of November, the election to fill the vacancy in the office of congressman should be conducted as if there were no other election on that day; that is, there should be a separate ballot, poll books and ballot box for the special election for congressman, conducted by the same election officers that have charge of the regular election.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—WHEN COUNCIL PASSES A RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY AND ORDINANCE TO PROCEED WITH STREET IMPROVEMENT AND ACCEPTS WAIVER OF PROPERTY OWNERS AGREEING TO ASSESSMENT OF COST OF GRADING ONLY, AND COUNCIL PROCEEDS WITHOUT OTHER ACTION, VALIDITY OF BONDS DOUBTFUL.
DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WESTERVILLE, $4,540.00.

Where the council of a municipality, having passed a resolution of necessity, and an ordinance determining to proceed with a paving improvement, accepts a waiver signed by the owners of all the abutting property agreeing to the assessment of the cost of grading only, and proceeds to make that part of the improvement and assess the cost thereof without in any way amending or changing the resolution of necessity and ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement, there is grave doubt as to the validity of the bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of the assessment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re:—Bonds of the village of Westerville, Ohio, in the amount of $4,540.00, in anticipation of special assessments for the purpose of improving Glenwood drive in said village.

I find myself unable to advise you that the proceedings of the council of the village of Westerville in the issuance of the above described bonds are legal.

The transcript shows that proceedings were properly initiated and carried through for the purpose of improving a street by grading, draining, setting curb and paving with vitrified block, and laying sewer and water connections therein, and that the village manager duly advertised for bids for this purpose; that bids were received and all of them rejected; that thereafter there was filed with the council a waiver signed by all the owners of property abutting upon the improvement and to be assessed for the cost thereof, by which they undertook to "waive all the improvements provided for in the legislation * * * except the improvements by grading the same," and each of them undertook to "consent to the improvements by grading only, and to assessing the costs of said grading against the property owners per front foot, less two per cent. (2%), and the cost of the intersections, and further consent and agree that any time in the future that the village of Westerville, through its council deems it necessary to further improve Glenwood drive, by draining, paving, curbing, etc., that the said village shall have the right to do so notwithstanding the special assessments heretofore made by reason of the cost of grading." Thereupon, without any further legislation, council entertained and accepted a bid for the grading work only, and, no assessment ordinance having been previously passed, adopted an ordinance to levy special assessments for the improvement of the street in question by grading only. After the adoption of this ordinance the ordinance for the issuance of the bonds was duly passed.

The waiver may be regarded as the predicate of proper action on the part of the council for proceeding to the completion of the partial improvement therein agreed to; but it seems to me that the projected improvement could not be departed from without at least amending the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement. Whether or not it is also necessary to amend the resolution of necessity is a different question, inasmuch as this measure is intended for the protection of the owners of the property to be assessed, and their rights are probably foreclosed by the waiver which they have entered into. On the other hand, however, the referendum, by which the public rights are protected, is available under the general statutes which are applicable to the village of Westerville (see 103 O. L. 784, section 1), and is applicable only to the first of the series of measures necessary to make a public improvement, i. e., to the resolution of necessity. The effect of acting in accordance with the "waiver" is, of course, to substitute an entirely different improvement for the one originally contemplated, and on the whole it would seem that the point referred to respecting the referendum would necessitate the repassage of the resolution of necessity as well as the amendment of the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement.

We have it ,then, that on the public side, so to speak, the council has not so acted as to make its proceedings immune from attack say by a taxpayer; on the other hand, so far as the private rights of the owners of abutting property are concerned, they would seem to be foreclosed by the waiver which has been entered into.

The question as to the effect of this irregularity upon the validity of the bonds which are issued in anticipation of the assessment is very doubtful. On the one hand, it might be argued that the assessments themselves could not be challenged because the property owners have waived their rights to object; and that the bonds issued in anticipation of them are likewise not open to objection for the same reason. On the other hand, however, assessment bonds are ultimately the general obligation of the municipality, and if any jurisdictional step in the procedure is lacking or defective it would seem that the defect would be reflected in the bonds themselves.

On the whole, while I am not certain as to the exact legal result of the peculiar procedure which has been followed in this case as regards the validity of the bonds, my very uncertainty prevents me from advising you that the same should be purchased.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—WHEN TESTATOR DEVISES ALL HIS PROPERTY TO A CORPORATION AND BY AGREEMENT SUCH CORPORATION IS TO ADMINISTER THE PROPERTY UPON CERTAIN TRUSTS, THE QUESTION OF WHETHER OR NOT INHERITANCE TAX APPLIES TO WHOLE ESTATE IS AN OPEN QUESTION.

A testator devised all of his property, both real and personal, to a corporation absolutely; but by agreement with the corporation, executed in writing contemporaneously with the execution of the will, it was stipulated that the corporation should administer the property on certain trusts, which trusts according to the doctrine prevailing in Ohio are enforcible against the corporation so far as they are legal, and in case of illegality a constructive trust arises in favor of the heirs and next of kin. When beneficiaries of the trust thus created are exempt persons or institutions under the inheritance tax law, HELD

That in contemplation of law the beneficial interests thus arising in favor of such exempt persons must have passed at the death of the testator through the non-exempt corporation as a conduit; so that, momentarily at least, the entire beneficial and legal interest in all the property rested under the will in the corporation. Whether the inheritance tax applies to the whole estate or not is an open question in Ohio and should be settled by the courts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 18, 1918.

HON. GEO. C. VON BESELER, Prosecuting Attorney, Painesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date enclosing a copy of the last will and testament of Henry A. Everett executed on November 1, 1916, and copy of a trust agreement between Henry A. Everett and The Cleveland Trust Company of even date therewith. By supplemental letter you advise that The Cleveland Trust Company as executor under the will has offered the same for probate and has filed an application in regard to fixing the collateral inheritance tax in the probate court, to which it has attached a copy of the trust agreement.

The application suggests a finding to the effect that certain annuities created, or attempted to be created, by the trust agreement are subject to the collateral inheritance tax and that the remainder of the estate legally vesting in The Trust Company under the will is either not subject to said tax or exempt therefrom. My opinion on the question thus raised is requested.

The will referred to disposes of the entire estate of the testator to The Cleveland Trust Company, which is appointed executor. There is in the will itself no qualification of the devise and bequest thus made. In so far as the testator was competent at the time of his death to transmit the legal and beneficial interest in the property covered by the will he has done so as far as the will is concerned.

The trust agreement is lengthy, but I find myself under the necessity of abstracting its provisions. It is signed in the presence of two witnesses by Henry A. Everett and by The Cleveland Trust Company, by its president and vice-president. It witnesses that Henry A. Everett has "this day sold, assigned, transferred, conveyed, delivered and set over unto The Cleveland Trust Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, as trustee, the property described in 'Schedule A' which, initialed by me, is hereto attached and made part hereof."

I pause here to state that no copy of "Schedule A" is before me, and I can only assume from the correspondence in my possession and from the face of the remainder of the trust agreement itself that it includes all kinds of property—that is, real estate, tangible personal property, stocks and bonds and choses in action.

The trust agreement goes on to say that the property thus referred to is to be "held, managed and controlled by The Cleveland Trust Company as trustee, upon the trusts and for the uses and purposes hereinafter set forth." The trusts thus attempted to be declared are as follows:

> (1) To dispose of, invest and re-invest all the property, subject to the power reserved to the trustor.
> (2) To determine whether accessions shall be treated as principal or income, and to employ agents and attorneys.
> (3) To borrow money during the life of the trustor upon his written approval and after his death at any time for the protection, improvement or preservation of the estate, with a lien upon the trust estate for such advances, and with power to mortgage or pledge to secure the same."

The foregoing, with others of similar character, constitute the special powers attempted to be reposed in the trustee by the trust agreement.

Continuing, the agreement proceeds to define the trust as follows:

The trustee is to pay the entire net income derived from the trust estate to the trustor during his life, together with such amounts from the principal as the trustee may deem proper and necessary for the trustor's maintenance, etc.

During the life of the trustor the trustee is to secure his written approval, wherever practicable, to all sales or purchases of securities which it may propose to make.

The trustor is to return for taxation any personal property held by the trustee during his life, and the trustor also reserves the right to exercise the voting privilege upon any stocks standing of record in his name, and the right to the use and enjoyment of all real estate conveyed to the trustee under the trust agreement, assuming the obligation to look after the payment of taxes and the maintenance of insurance thereon.

The trustor reserves the right to revoke the settlement evidenced by the agreement so long as he is competent to act in the matter.

The trustor directs that > "any and all property received by the Cleveland Trust Company under any will executed by me shall be held, managed, controlled and disposed of by it as trustee under the powers and for all the purposes set forth in this trust, unless the terms of the will otherwise specifically provide. The execution of this instrument by the Cleveland Trust Company shall constitute its agreement to administer all property so received by it in trust for such purposes."

The trust agreement goes on to provide that after the death of the trustor the trustee shall pay out of the trust estate the just and valid debts of the trustor or the trust estate; that the trustee shall allow the trustor's wife, during her life, the use and enjoyment of all household goods and other tangible chattel articles which may be of use or enjoyment in or about any places of residence the trustor may be occupying at the time of his death; upon the death of the wife all such articles then unconsumed are to be divided between the trustor's two daughters.

From the net income derived from the remainder of the trust estate certain annuities are to be paid to eight named persons during their lives.

The trustor then directs that the net income derived from a certain parcel of real estate in the city of Cleveland, or from the proceeds of sale thereof, shall be paid to his wife and daughters, share and share alike, and the survivor of them, during their lives and the life of the survivor; and that upon the death of the last survivor of the three the parcel, or the proceeds of sale and reinvestment if sold, shall become part of the residuary trust estate; that the net income derived from the residue of the trust estate not otherwise disposed of shall be paid to the trustor's wife during her life, and upon her death to the daughters, in equal shares, during their lives, with power in the trustee to allow to the wife or daughters further amounts from the principal if necessary for their maintenance, etc. Upon the death of either of the daughters leaving issue surviving, the daughter's share is to be paid to her issue for the period of twenty-one years after the death of the last survivor of the three. After the death of the last survivor and her issue the net income from the estate is to be annually expended or appropriated, perpetually, until the principal may have been disbursed for the purposes of the Cleveland Foundation, which is designated as a community charitable trust; a certain tract of real estate in Lake county is to be used "in caring for and aiding in the cure of consumptives;" a certain other tract of real estate in the same county is to be used "for the purpose of caring for persons afflicted with cancer." There is a further provision which attempts to create a spendthrift trust with respect to the interests of any of the individual beneficiaries.

Of course, the trust agreement was ineffectual to create a perfect trust as of the date of its execution, unless such acts as would be necessary to vest legal title in the various parts of the property to which it relates were done at the time.

The principle is well established that equity will not aid a volunteer, and that a gift which is imperfectly made will not be perfected in chancery.

Flanders v. Blandy, 45 O. S. 108;
Worthington v. Redkey, 86 O. S. 128.

Clearly as to the lands involved no perfect trust could have been created without conveyances, and such information as I have does not disclose that Henry A. Everett ever conveyed any of his lands by deed to the Cleveland Trust Company. As to the personal property and choses in action more would be required, I think, than the mere trust agreement to amount to such delivery to the trustee as to constitute an effectual gift. It is true that there is a consideration for the trustee's agreement in that the trust is an active one; and that the trustee has an interest in it arising from the compensation which it is to receive (consisting of five per cent. commission), but the expressly reserved power of revocation in the trustor establishes, I think, the fact that the trustor did not part irrevocably with the beneficial interest in any personal property which he had during his life time. See Worthington v. Redkey, supra, which seems to cover this feature of the case completely. In that case Davis, C. J., quoted from Wadd v. Hazelton et al., 137 N. Y., 215, 219, as follows:

> "The acts must be of that character which will admit of no other interpretation than that such legal rights as the settlor retains are held by him > as trustee for the donee; the settlor must either transfer the property to a trustee or declare that he holds it himself in trust. An intention to give, evidenced by a writing, may be most satisfactorily established, and yet the intended gift may fail because no delivery is proved. And where an intention to give absolutely is evidenced by a writing, which fails because of its non-delivery, the court will not and cannot give effect to an intended absolute gift by construing it to be a declaration of trust and valid, therefore, without delivery."

In that case also there was the reservation of the right to revoke. Davis, C. J. says of that:

> "It reflects a strong light on the question whether he ever did intend to finally and forever abandon all control over the fund during his life."

The question in the present case being as to what, if any, beneficial interest the testator's wife and daughters, and the charitable enterprises which he had in mind acquired by virtue of the trust agreement itself without the will, I am forced to the conclusion that in the absence of a showing of facts to the effect that Henry A. Everett so acted as to put the legal title of all the property mentioned in "schedule A" in the hands of the Cleveland Trust Company prior to his death no such beneficial interest existed.

Of course, if the beneficial interests of these persons and institutions actually did exist prior to the death of the testator, they would have to be predicated upon the existence of legal title in Henry A. Everett, coupled with a declaration of trust on his part, and the trust agreement does not amount to such a declaration of trust or upon legal conveyances or deliveries sufficient to pass legal title to the Cleveland Trust Company as trustee, in which event the will would not operate at all as to the property mentioned in "schedule A," both the legal title and the beneficial interest having passed from Henry A. Everett at the date of his death. In such event the solution of the question as to inheritance taxes would be easy so far as the property mentioned in "schedule A" is concerned, for such property would have to be considered as vesting beneficially in direct heirs or exempted institutions, either by a transaction completely inter vivos or "by deed, grant, sale or gift made or intended to take effect in possession or enjoyment after the death of the grantor," and in either view the tax would not be collectible as to this part of the estate.

But for the reasons already stated I find myself obliged to assume, without other evidence than that which is before me, that no valid, complete and effectual trust was created even in the property mentioned in "schedule A" by any act of the testator during his lifetime, the mere execution of the trust agreement not being efficacious to create such a trust. This assumption necessarily leaves both the legal title and the beneficial interest in all the property mentioned in "schedule A" in Henry A. Everett, at least up until the instant of his death.

This legal title and this beneficial interest were then subject to testamentary disposition by Henry A. Everett, so that if he had willed all of the property to any other person or corporation than the Cleveland Trust Company such devisee and legatee would have taken an absolute and unqualified interest therein.

But the testator saw fit to allow the will which he had made contemporaneously with the execution of the trust agreement to stand until his death, and the question now arises as to the operation and effect of the will and the trust agreement considered together. It is clear that they do not constitute a single testamentary act, for so to hold would work a violation of the statute of wills. However, it has likewise become ultimately settled by authority that a devisee or legatee taking by will under circumstances like these will not be permitted in equity to enjoy the beneficial interest in the property passing to him by the will.

Winder v. Scholey, 83 O. S., 204.

It is believed that the case just cited fully determines for Ohio the question now immediately under consideration. I, therefore, quote copiously from the syllabus and the opinion of the court therein.

The following are quotations from the syllabus:

"1. Where a testator is induced to make an apparently absolute legacy, by a promise, express or implied, on the part of the legatee that he will transfer the legacy to another, although no express trust is created, and although the legatee at the time of the promise intended no fraud, a court of equity may interfere to prevent a wrong, and declare the legatee a trustee ex maleficio for the protection of the testator's intended beneficiary.

2. A trust in an absolute legacy may be established by parol evidence, and the contemporaneous declarations of the testator, and subsequent declarations of the legatee, that the bequest was made for the benefit of a third person upon the promise of the legatee to hold it in trust, are admissible for that purpose."

The following is quoted from the opinion per Summers, C. J. (page 215):

"Counsel for defendant say that there is no reported case in Ohio, in which a trust has been engrafted on a will by parol, and contend that a beneficiary under a will can be declared a trustee ex maleficio only when the testator was influenced by the legatee's actual intentional fraud.

Pomeroy on equity, section 1054, is cited as follows: 'There are a few cases which seem to hold that a trust will arise under these circumstances from a mere verbal promise of the devisee or legatee to hold the property for the benefit of another person. This position is clearly opposed to settled principle. The only ground upon which such a trust can be rested, and is rested by the overwhelming weight of authority, is actual intentional fraud.'

In a note to this section, in the second edition of that work, it is said, 'A majority of the recent decisions do not insist on an actual fraudulent intention on the part of the legatee or devisee as necessary to the creation of a trust of this nature.'

It is conceded that in cases of actual intentional fraud equity will raise a trust, notwithstanding the statute of frauds or the statute of wills. In equity what difference can there be whether the fraudulent intention existed at the time the testator acted or not until it was time for the devisee to act? In either case the testator acted upon the faith that the devisee would keep his promise; the result of his refusal or failure to do so is the same in either case and equally fraudulent. * * *

The rule is founded on the principle that the legacy would not have been given * * * unless the promise had been made, and, hence, the person promising is bound in equity to keep it, as to violate it would be fraud. * * * The trust does not act directly upon the will by modifying the gift, for the law requires wills to be wholly in writing, but it acts upon the gift itself as it reaches the possession of the legatee, or as soon as he is entitled to receive it. The theory is that the will has full effect by passing an absolute legacy to the legatee, and that then equity, in order to defeat fraud, raises a trust in favor of those intended to be benefited by the testator and compels the legatee, as a trustee ex maleficio, to turn over the gift to them. The law, not the will, fastens the trust upon the fund by requiring the legatee to act in accordance with the instructions of the testator and his own promise. Neither the statute of frauds nor the statute of wills applies, because the will takes effect as written and proved, but to promote justice and prevent wrong the courts compel the legatee to dispose of his gift in accordance with equity and good conscience. * * *

It is next contended that the action was barred by the six years' statute of limitations. The six years' statute bars an action upon a contract not in writing, either express or implied. This is not an action upon a contract. It is an action for relief on the ground of fraud. Such actions are barred within four years, but it is expressly provided that the cause of action in such case shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the fraud, * * *."

The only difference between the facts involved in Winder v. Scholey, supra, and those now under consideration, lies in the fact that the agreement in the case cited was that the legatee would turn over the legacy to a lodge, while in the present case the promise is that the Trust Company will administer an active trust. In other words, if both had been express trusts in the full sense of the word, one of them would have been a mere dry trust and the other an active trust. This difference in facts raises the question as to whether a difference in principle is here involved. It might be argued that an active trust of this kind could not be engrafted upon a will in the way in which the dry trust involved in Winder v. Scholey, supra, was raised and enforced; on the other hand, it might be argued that the designation of the dry trust as one arising ex maleficio could not be made where the agreement was of such character as to give rise to an active trust.

The point is doubtful, but I am of the opinion that though the case is somewhat anomalous the principles of Winder v. Scholey apply to the facts now under consideration in their entirety. That is to say, we have here not an express but a constructive trust bottomed upon the rule against unjust enrichment, and the case is not altered by the fact that the constructive trust involves the performance of active duties. The Cleveland Trust Company gets the full legal and beneficial interest so far as the will is concerned, but it will not be permitted to enjoy the beneficial interest. That this is the case is apparent from the discussion in Perry on trusts, sixth edition, section 181, note (a), page 289. In his text as originally prepared the learned author of this work had used the following language:

"There must be some actual fraud in procuring a deed or devise to one's self; the mere breach of a promise to convey is not enough."

In the sixth edition, however, Mr. Howes, the editor thereof, used the following language embodied in the note above cited:

"Recent decisions show a conflict of authority upon this point. In many cases it has been held that it is necessary to show a fraudulent intention at the time the promise was made. * * * (Citing cases from Alabama, Georgia, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, New Jersey and Pennsylvania).

The weight of authority, however, is to the effect that it is unnecessary to show any actual fraudulent intent at the time the promise is made,or at the time the title vests in the alleged trustee, if the promise was the main inducement of the transfer to him * * *. Some of the decisions are based upon the theory that fraud at the time of making the promise will be inferred from failure to perform it subsequently. (Citing cases.) But most of the cases go to the extent of holding that the fraud lies in failure to carry out the parol agreement made under such circumstances, even if the agreement was made with an honest intention of performing it." (Citing numerous cases. This is the class in which Winder v. Scholey, supra, belongs.)

It has been suggested that in view of the prevailing American doctrine respecting the enforcement of the statutes of Frauds and of Wills, a parol trust like the one under consideration should be held void, with the result of raising a constructive trust for the heirs of the settlor as when testamentary trusts fail for other reasons, and that "the decision of the courts (in cases like Winder v. Scholey) may be viewed as a specific enforcement of the agreement, with the statutory objection overcome by the strong equitable consideration that, as the testator is dead, in no other way could his wish to do something for C (the beneficiary) ever be carried out." (20 Harvard Law Review, 403.)

A searching analysis of this suggestion shows that the transaction amounts to a constructive trust (the right to specific performance) to hold upon an express trust; that is to say, the agreement the specific performance of which is enforced is an agreement to administer as upon trusts. There is no direct express trust, but there is a trust agreement, a contract to declare and administer an express trust. The working out of the rule thus really involves two steps, though the result is the same as if an express trust had been created in the first place.

Putting it in another way: The Cleveland Trust Company in the case under consideration was not made the trustee of an express trust by any act of Henry A. Everett, but by agreement with Henry A. Everett it promised to hold such property as Henry A. Everett should give to it absolutely upon certain trusts. This was in contemplation of law an agreement to declare and administer a trust and enforcible against the Cleveland Trust Company in the teeth of the statute of wills in order to prevent fraud. The maxim that equity will not aid a volunteer by completing an imperfect gift does not operate because the trust agreement is a perfect declaration in trust on the part of the Cleveland Trust Company and operates upon the beneficial interest passing to the Cleveland Trust Company under the will as soon as that interest is received.

To discern in the process by which the result is reached the two distinct steps which have been pointed out avoids much of the difficulty that courts and commentators have encountered in dealing with the subject.

Thus in a note to the case of McDowell v. McDowell, 141 Iowa, 286, reported in 31 L. R. A. n. s. 177, the editor, distinguishing cases like Winder v. Scholey from cases in which a decedent is dissuaded from making a will prior to his death on the promise that his heirs at law will carry out his wishes, says:

"In the one (the latter) case the fraud lies at the root of the transaction, and the trust springing from the fraud by which the title was obtained is purely constructive, while in the other case the trust is based upon the promise itself, rather than upon its breach, and so is express rather than constructive."

But later on in a note to Winder v. Scholey, wherein a trust of the second class was held to be constructive, he says: (33 L. R. A. n. s. 996.)

"Since in the class of cases herein under discussion the element of personal fraud is wanting, its very existence being often expressly negatived by the continued willingness of the promisor to carry out decedent's wishes into execution, the only fraud which can justify the interposition of equity is the so-called 'constructive fraud' upon the decedent, which would be occasioned by a failure to execute his wishes. The question stated is therefore merely a concrete aspect of the general question whether constructive fraud, as well as actual and intentional fraud, is sufficient to raise a trust ex maleficio. * *

From what may be termed the technical point of view, the doctrine that a trust ex maleficio may be erected upon the anticipated breach of a parol promise to devote property received from the promisee to certain purposes is open to the serious objection that, by the simple expedient of giving it another name, it gives effect to a trust created by parol, and thus evades the express provision of * * * the statute of wills with respect to the formalities necessary to a valid testamentary disposition, unduly extending the judge-made exception which obtains where property has been acquired by actual fraud. * * *

On the other hand, looking at the matter from a practical viewpoint, with the idea of doing justice to the parties, * * * and bearing in mind that the essential purpose of the statutes of frauds and wills is to interpose a safeguard against fictitious claims by requiring a satisfactory form of proof, the objections which stand in the way of the enforcement of a parol undertaking to hold property for the benefit of a third person, though unaccompanied by actual fraud, seem to be satisfactorily overcome by the court's insistence on clear and convincing proof of such undertaking. * * *

It would seem, therefore, as though the courts which are willing to accept this doctrine might as well abandon the pretense that they are enforcing a trust ex maleficio, and instead announce that the statute of frauds will not in all cases preclude the enforcement of a parol trust, * * *. Such a course would do away with the difficulty of observing the tenuous boundary between the rule that the mere breach of a promise to hold property in trust is, in the absence of fraud in procuring the transfer, insufficient to raise a trust ex maleficio, and the doctrine that the constructive fraud upon the promisee in event of nonperformance of a promise in reliance upon which property is transferred will warrant a court of equity in constructing such a trust."

It is submitted that this argument is unsound, and that the designation of such trusts as the one involved in the case under consideration as primarily constructive is no mere pretense gotten up to evade the statute of wills, but an accurate description of the real situation.

But however this may be, Winder v. Scholey certainly treats such trusts as constructive in the first instance, and it would seem that in the absence of further adjudications in Ohio this question is, for this state at least, foreclosed.

For the purposes of the question at hand the debate as to whether the trust which is to be enforced against the Cleveland Trust Company is constructive or express may be ignored and the trust may be classifed on another principle. That is to say, we may think of trusts, whether express, resulting or constructive, as classified with respect to the identity of the person whose acts give rise to them. In this view all trusts fall into two classes:

First: Those in which the trust arises because of the act or promise of the person who will be held as trustee; and Second: Those in which the trust arises because of the directions of one other than the person upon whom the transaction ultimately casts the obligations of a trustee.

All constructive trusts belong in the first class. Most express trusts fall in the second class, but where there is a valid and complete declaration of trust, though the trust is express, it falls in the first class. In the early paragraphs of this opinion I have described Henry A. Everett as the trustor. On more careful analysis it has developed that he was not the creator of this trust. He did not create a trust by signing the trust agreement, for reasons which have been pointed out. He did not create a trust by leaving his will, because the will gave both the equitable and the legal title to the Cleveland Trust Company. The Cleveland Trust Company is, nevertheless, to be held as trustee. For what reason? Obviously because of its promise to carry out Everett's directions. These directions and this promise concerned themselves with the disposition of the equitable use in the property, the legal title of which is, without dispute, in the Cleveland Trust Company. It must necessarily follow that before these directions and this promise could have anything upon which to operate the equitable use must have vested in contemplation of law in the Cleveland Trust Company. This point is capable of demonstration to a mathematical certainty. I have already mentioned the consequences of a subsequent revocation of the will of Henry A. Everett, and the execution of a codicil or another will by him vesting legal title in some person other than the Cleveland Trust Company. Suppose, however, that instead of vesting legal title in another the testator had executed a codicil or another will revoking the former will and vesting legal title in the Cleveland Trust Company upon trusts other than those declared in the trust agreement, and had then died. There can be no question but that under such circumstances the trust agreement would have yielded to the subsequent will, and the Cleveland Trust Company, though vested by such subsequent will with just as full legal title as it has under the will which Everett actually left, would have been subject to the trust obligations declared by the second will and would have been relieved of the obligations set forth in the trust agreement. Why would this be so? Obviously because the trust agreement would have had nothing on which to operate.

Suppose, also, that between the date of the execution of the trust agreement and the death of Henry A. Everett, leaving the will which he did leave, the Cleveland Trust Company had dissolved as a corporation and had passed out of existence. There would then have been an intestacy as to the legal title. Would, then, the heirs at law and next of kin have held the legal title to the property passing to them by the statutes of descent and distribution as trustees for the uses mentioned in the trust agreement? I think not. If the trust had been of the second class, above referred to, it would have been enforced against such heirs and next of kin on the principle that equity will not let a trust fail because of the lack of a trustee, but the trust is one which can be enforced only against the Cleveland Trust Company by virtue of its agreement to deal with what it might receive under the will.

In short, the Cleveland Trust Company's promise is the foundation of the enforcibility of the trust in question. All the cases say so and they are, in my opinion, right. So that it makes no difference whether we call the trust a constructive one or an express one, as the act or the declaration, whichever it be that creates it, is that of the Cleveland Trust Company, the person held as trustee, and not that of Henry A. Everett, the third person, nor that of the beneficiaries.

Now in order that a trust of the first class, in which the one under consideration falls, may arise it is absolutely necessary that the actor or the declarant shall at the time he commits his act or makes his declaration, or at such subsequent time as he may acquire the legal title, have the beneficial interest. His agreement relates to that beneficial interest, and it can have nothing on which to operate unless such interest is in him. The Cleveland Trust Company's promise is to deal with the use in certain ways. Before that promise can have any legal effect the Cleveland Trust Company must have that use in itself.

It would have been very different if Everett had made a will declaring these trusts. In that event he would have disposed by his testamentary act of the legal estates and the beneficial uses to different people, and the disponees of the beneficial uses could have enforced them not only against the Cleveland Trust Company as holder of the legal title, but also against the heirs at law and next of kin of Henry A. Everett, should the Cleveland Trust Company because of dissolution or otherwise have failed to take the legal title. In that event the beneficial uses would have been directly disposed of by Henry A. Everett and the court would have been enforcing his disposition; as it is, the beneficial uses are declared by the promise of the Cleveland Trust Company.

The situation then is that the Cleveland Trust Company was at least the necessary conduit of the equitable interest in the property of the late Henry A. Everett. That is to say, this beneficial interest could not vest in the intended beneficiaries of the decedent without passing through the Cleveland Trust Company. It did not pass directly from Henry A. Everett to these beneficiaries, as it would have done if he had created the trust by will.

In this state of affairs what is the application of the inheritance tax law? The statute which is to be applied provides as follows:

> "Section 5331. All property * * *, and any interests therein, * * * which pass by will or by the intestate laws of this state, * * * to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, shall be liable to a tax * * *."
> (It will not be necessary to quote the provisions of succeeding sections which make exemptions in favor of certain public and charitable institutions.)

If the foregoing analysis is correct the property in question passed by will to the Cleveland Trust Company, and so far as that vesting was concerned it did not pass for the use of any one excepting the Cleveland Trust Company. However, the use of this property immediately vested in exempt persons (with the exception of the beneficiaries of the annuities), so that for no appreciable period of time did the Cleveland Trust Company hold both the legal title and beneficial interest to the property in question.

A technical view will justify the imposition of the inheritance tax upon the entire property. Such a view was taken by the court of appeals of New York in In re Edson, 159 N. Y. 568, affirming 38 N. Y. App. Dec., 19, 56 N. Y. Supp. 409. In that case the testator, moved by what was apparently the same motive as actuated Henry A. Everett, disposed of a certain property to a friend upon a secret trust to convey or make over the same to a charitable institution in attempted avoidance of the mortmain statutes of New York, prohibiting testamentary gifts to such institutions save under certain circumstances. The court held that the secret trust was void; that the testamentary donee would not be permitted to retain the beneficial interest which passed to him by the will, but that a constructive trust arose in favor of the heirs or next of kin of the decedent who were direct relatives and whose interest therefore, if arising under the will, would not be subject to the collateral inheritance tax. The court held that so far as the will was concerned the entire beneficial interest passed to the devisee and legatee, and that the whole estate so passing was subject to the collateral inheritance tax.

A contrary result was reached by the supreme court of Illinois in the case of People v. Schaefer, 266 Ill. 334. An attempt was made in that case to distinguish the New York case, but the grounds of distinction relied upon are not wholly satisfactory. To my mind the two cases can not be reconciled, although in the Illinois case the secret or parol trust was, like that in favor of the wife and daughters, and the issue of the latter, in the case under consideration, not illegal, so that the trust which arose existed in favor of the beneficiaries actually intended by the testator.

I quote the following from the opinion in People v. Schaefer:

> "Only the beneficial interest passing from the decedent to the heir or legatee, and vesting at the time of the death, is taxable. (Citing cases.) A beneficial interest, when considered as a designation of the character of an estate, is such an interest as a devisee takes solely for his own use or benefit, and not as a mere holder of the title for the use of another. (Citing cases.) The property here in question * * * was impressed with a trust * * * at the time of the death of the testator and at the exact moment of time the property passed to the respective donees, and therefore, in both instances, the respective donees only received the legal title, the beneficial interest passing at once to other persons, as provided for in the memorandum. It is true that all property, whether real or personal, must pass at the moment of the death of the owner, but the laws under which it passes and vests include all laws of the state which govern not only as to the vesting of the legal but the beneficial title as well, and include all rules of law in force in this state. (Citing cases.)

* * * It has repeatedly been held that the legislative intention under this law was that a person should be taxed only upon the beneficial interest that he received; that it was not a tax upon the estate, but upon the right to receive the beneficial interest of a portion of the estate. * * * To hold * * * that the interest left under the will * * * should pay an inheritance tax, would be to hold that the person receiving the legal title, only, to property should be required to pay the inheritance tax on the title so received, notwithstanding he received no beneficial interest therein. This is contrary not only to the letter but to the spirit of the statute and all of our former decisions construing it. * * *"

It will be observed that this reasoning ignores the fact that the beneficial interests necessarily must vest, though but for a moment of time, in the promisor in order that his promise to deal with them may be enforcible against him. The decision looks to the result of the process, but shuts its eyes to the steps by which it is worked out.

The answer to the question which you submit depends, as I see it, upon which line of reasoning the courts of this state will ultimately adopt. Much is to be said in favor of the Illinois rule, which ignores technicalities and gives effect to the substance of things. On the other hand, something is to be said in favor of the New York rule, inasmuch as to the extent that the testator's wishes were legal he could have expressed them in such a way as to avoid the imposition of the inheritance tax had he so desired; but having chosen an irregular method of disposing of his property the beneficiaries of his bounty ought not to complain because of the imposition of the inheritance tax when the courts go as far as they do to sustain their interest in the teeth of the statute of wills.

As I see it, the New York rule is technically correct. Brief as is the instant of time in which the beneficial interest must have vested in the Cleveland Trust Company in order to give operation and effect to the promise of that company to deal with it, the right of the state to inheritance taxes attaches; for the thing taxed, as the supreme court of Illinois correctly holds, the holding being equally applicable to the Ohio statute, is the right to receive the property which vests by the will. In the case at hand this right was exercised both as to the legal title and as to the beneficial interest by the Cleveland Trust Company, though by its own promise it immediately divested itself of the latter. In contemplation of law the case should be treated in its technical aspect just as if the Cleveland Trust Company had made a trust agreement amounting to a declaration of trust a day or a week after it had received the full, legal and beneficial interest to the property involved. What the donee under a will may choose to do with the interests which vest in him under a will is no concern of the state in the administration of the inheritance tax law, though he may have committed such acts or made such promises or declarations as to deprive himself of the beneficial interest before the tax is assessed or collected. Everything dates back to the instant of the testator's death, and I can not see that in the technical view it makes any difference that the donee's act or declaration by which he disposed of the interest vesting in him under the will may have taken place before the death of the testator and by agreement with the testator; though done or made before, it could not take effect until after the death of the testator and not without the momentary vesting of the beneficial interest in the testamentary donee.

But satisfied as I am with the technical correctness of my conclusion, I find myself unable to advise you positively in the matter. The case is actually for decision in a court having jurisdiction to decide the question. My advice to you is that, as prosecuting attorney, you present to the probate court the arguments which I have tried to outline with a view to sustaining the claim of the state for inheritance taxes, at the same time acquainting the court with the Illinois decision which I have cited. I would not presume to go further than this in the present posture of the case. The question is an open one in Ohio, and I would strongly urge that if the amount involved is considerable, as seems likely, you determine to present the affirmative view as I have outlined it, not only to the probate court, but also, if necessary, to the appellate court, to the end than an authoritative decision may ultimately be obtained.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY MAY BE REIMBURSED FOR EXPENDITURES FOR OIL AND GASOLINE USED IN OPERATION OF HIS OWN MACHINE UPON OFFICIAL BUSINESS.

The prosecuting attorney may be reimbursed for expenditures for gasoline and oil paid by him in connection with the operation of his own automobile upon official business. However, no allowance can be made him under such section for wear and tear on his machine

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 19, 1918.

HON. F. J. BISHOP, Prosecuting Attorney, Jefferson, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request of June 20, 1918, as follows:

> "I would be glad of your opinion on the following proposition: Section 3004 provides that there shall be allowed annually to a prosecuting attorney an amount equal to one-half of his salary to provide for expenses that may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice not otherwise provided for.
> This county, as you will remember, from point of territory is the largest county in the state, and the railroad accommodations east and west across the county are very poor, and in making trips to those parts of the county which cannot be reached by railroad, I have been in the habit of using my own automobile and have made no charge in my expense account for its use. I have never charged for an automobile except when I have hired one from a livery, but this seems like an excessive expense and I would rather use my own if I would have a right to charge my expense account with the actual cost of operation when going on official business or making investigation of some criminal action. The cost of operation would only include oil and gasoline and wear and tear on tires.
> Now the question which I desire answered is this, Would it be proper for me to charge a reasonable amount per mile as expenses to include gasoline and oil and wear on tires if I use my own automobile in going on official business? Of course I would undoubtedly have the right to hire a machine at a livery, but as I said before that is more expensive to the county, and I would rather use my own machine if I could charge the actual expenses of operation."

Section 3004 G. C. reads in part:

"There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney, in addition to his salary, and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. * * *"

In an opinion rendered by this department April 13, 1917, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. I, page 478, it was said:

"I know of no express provision of law allowing the prosecuting attorney railroad fare, automobile hire and such expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties, and I am of the opinion that inasmuch as they are 'incurred by him in the performance of his official duties, and in the furtherance of justice,' and are 'not otherwise provided for,' they may be paid by the prosecuting attorney under section 3004 G. C."

From this statement it will be seen that this department has already held that automobile hire is a proper expense to be allowed under section 3004 G. C. when incurred by the prosecuting attorney in the discharge of his official duties. The only question then remaining is whether or not the prosecutor may be allowed his expenses in operating his own car in the discharge of his official duties.

In an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 1, page 295, it was held:

"Under section 2997 G. C., county commissioners shall make an allowance to the sheriff for actual and necessary expenses incurred by him in paying for repairs on his automobile and in keeping it in good condition, only when said machine is used by him in the discharge of his official duties."

In another opinion rendered by Mr. Turner, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, Vol. 2, page 1276, it was held:

"County commissioners may allow a sheriff a reasonable amount to cover the expense of maintaining and operating an automobile owned by him and used in the discharge of his official duties, having due regard to the extent of the use of the machine in public and private business."

These opinions were based upon the theory that it is often more economical to pay such expense than to pay the cost of livery hire.

I find myself in harmony with these opinions, and, applying the same to the question you present, I advise you that it is my opinion that the expense of gasoline and oil used by you in operating your machine on official business may be paid from the fund provided for by section 3004 G. C.

As to the wear and tear, I can see no way in which a proper estimate of the county's liability could be determined, and for that reason am not convinced that any allowance could be made to you for such purpose from this fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE BUCKEYE UNION MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1918.

HON. WM. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully examined the articles of incorporation of the Buckeye Union Mutual Insurance Company and find said articles to be in compliance with the provisions of sections 9607-2 et seq. of the General Code, as amended in 107 O. L., 647, and not inconsistent with the constitution and laws of this state, or of the United States, and said articles are herewith approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

1361.

TAXES—OVERPAYMENTS UNDER MISTAKE OF FACT MUST BE RETAINED BY COUNTY TREASURER—LIABILITY OF TREASURER—TREASURER MAY NOT EMPLOY ASSISTANT TO INVESTIGATE OVERPAYMENT AND PAY HIM FROM INTEREST ON SUCH FUND—WHERE SUCH PAYMENT HAS ONCE BEEN MADE TREASURER MAY NOT COLLECT OTHER TAXES FOR THAT YEAR ON SAME ENTRY, ALTHOUGH PERSON TENDERING SUCH PAYMENT IS THE ONE WHO OUGHT TO PAY THEM.

The county treasurer when collecting taxes on the general duplicate is not the agent of the county, but of the state. Overpayments under mistake of fact are not, therefore, to be credited to any county fund subject to allowance by the county commissioners as claims against the county, but must be retained by the treasurer in his official capacity and turned over by him to his successor, the treasurer who made the collection being subject to suit for money had and received and entitled to reimbursement out of the surplus undivided taxes for that year in the event that he is required to make restitution.

The county treasurer is without authority to employ an assistant, deputy or clerk to investigate overpayments and ascertain to whom restitution is due, paying him out of the proceeds of the depositary interest on such surplus moneys.

Under most, if not all, circumstances any payment of taxes on an entry of real estate on the general duplicate where the real estate is properly entered thereon is valid and binding as between the payer and the county treasurer, although the former may not have been under any legal duty to pay the taxes. Where such a payment has been made the treasurer has no right to collect any other taxes for that year on the same entry, his warrant being discharged, even though the person offering to pay the taxes a second time is the one who ought to pay them; therefore the treasurer may not accept the second tender and refund the first payment when he knows that the taxes have once been paid. In all cases where the treasurer has reason to believe that the taxes have once been paid, though he can not conveniently ascertain the fact at the time, he should receive the second offer to pay as a tender only and not make a collection unless it appears that the taxes thereon have not actually been paid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—At the request of Hon. John J. Boyle, treasurer of Cuyahoga county, I have reconsidered my opinion to you under date of April 15, 1918, No. 1145.

In that opinion I reviewed an opinion rendered by Hon. E. C. Turner, attorney-general (found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1916, volume I, page 517), in which Mr. Turner had held that excessive tax collections produced by a duplicate payment of taxes under a mistake of facts constitutes "public money" within the meaning of section 286 of the General Code, but that such payments may not be "used by the county for public purposes, or * * * credited to any fund of the county to be used for public purposes;" but that "the money so received * * * becomes, is and must continue to be until exhausted a trust fund for the benefit of those who created it by mistake and who are entitled to be repaid from it upon proof of such mistake and their consequent right to such repayment." Conceding that "there are no statutory provisions applicable to this situation," Mr. Turner advised that > "this money be held by the county treasurer until his semi-annual settlement with the county auditor. In the meantime each treasurer should make every possible effort to return all duplicate payments to those who are entitled to the same. At the time of making the semi-annual settlement whatever amount of such payments remains in the hands of the treasurer should be reported by him to the auditor and turned into the county treasury to be credited to a special trust fund, and thereafter all claims against such fund should be paid upon the allowance of the county commissioners; said allowance to be made upon the written request of the treasurer and upon proof that the party making the claim is rightfully entitled thereto."

Without expressing adherence to all the foregoing conclusions, I advised in my previous opinion to which I have referred that the county treasurer's duty to care for such moneys was one imposed upon him in his official capacity and to be discharged by his regular official force; so that the interest on the surplus fund might not be used to employ a clerk to perform the clerical work incidental to the handling of the fund.

Strong objections to this ruling having been lodged by the officials of Cuyahoga county, who have designed a course of dealing with funds of the character mentioned which has been working to their complete satisfaction, and to that of the interested taxpayers, I have felt that it would be appropriate for me to consider the questions involved in a somewhat more fundamental way than they have heretofore been considered by this department.

Of course, it is elementary that money paid under a mutual mistake of fact, without negligence on either side, and in the absence of a change of position on the part of either party predicated upon the payment, is recoverable. In a great majority of cases the question as to whether or not the equitable principles upon which such recovery is allowed are such as to stamp it as founded upon a constructive trust will not arise; for the law has so long since developed a perfectly adequate remedy for the enforcement of the right of restitution in the shape of what is known as the "implied assumpsit" that recourse to distinctly equitable remedies has been unnecessary. In fact the whole theory of the law of quasi contracts in this particular is borrowed from the principles of equity. Inasmuch as the right of the plaintiff to recover is not traced to the invasion of any primary rights of his by the defendant, but rather results from a duty on the part of the defendant to make restitution of whatever he can not, in equity and justice, conscientiously retain, the measure of recovery in all such cases is the amount of the defendants' unjust enrichment rather than the damage to the plaintiff; so that when this form of recovery is permitted as an alternative remedy for an action sounding in tort the choice of remedy may very substantially affect the measure of damage.

It is easy to imagine instances, however, in which, legal remedies being barred or inefficacious, the issue as to the nature of the defendant's duty which arises from his unjust enrichment would be squarely raised. One such case, of course, is that of bankruptcy. If the payer of money under a mistake of fact is to be regarded merely as a general creditor of the bankrupt payee, then one result will ensue; whereas, if upon the making of the payment by mistake the situation which arose amounted to a trust, the ownership found in the bankrupt payee would be legal merely and the payer would be entitled to a full recovery in preference to other creditors out of the assets in course of administration in a court essentially one of chancery.

This question was answered in the case of In re Berry, 16 Am. Bankruptcy Rep., 564, by holding that a constructive trust arises upon payment of money under mistake, so that the bankruptcy of the payee will not discharge his obligation to make restitution to the payer.

On the authority of this case, which is the only one I have been able to find upon the exact point, I am constrained to agree with one of the premises adopted by Mr. Turner when he held that essentially a fund produced by duplicate payment of taxes under what must be assumed to be a mutual mistake of fact is a trust fund.

But I do not find it so easy to follow Mr. Turner in the next step taken by him. I do not think that it necessarily results from the point just established that a fund is thereby created by operation of law in the county treasury, to be administered without the warrant of statute in the way in which he suggests. While it is true that no statute deals specifically with surpluses produced by duplicate payment of taxes, as such, there are statutes which seem to me to cover every possible case which may conceivably arise and furnish legal remedies available to the taxpayer, and which, because of their complete adequacy so far as he is concerned, render unnecessary and therefore preclude the adoption of any such extra-statutory procedure as that to which Mr. Turner refers.

A brief statement of the framework of the county government and the statutes relating to the collection of taxes will be necessary at this point.

In the first place, the county, as such, is not a body corporate. It can not sue or be sued in its own name, but only through its proper officers. It is true that the county commissioners in many respects may represent the county in its proprietary capacity, but the quasi corporate capacity of this board is limited to certain specified matters.

Thus under section 2408 of the General Code the commissioners may sue and be sued in matters involving the maintenance of public roads, bridges, ditches, etc., but as to claims against the county sounding in contract and not fixed by law the procedure outlined in sections 2460 et seq. governs; and such claims must be presented to the county commissioners for allowance subject to an appeal to the common pleas court, as therein provided. There are other statutes of similar import which I do not find it necessary to quote, because the question which now arises is as to the interest, if any, of the county, as such, in moneys collected as taxes on the general duplicate. Both previous opinions of this department have apparently assumed that a surplus created by duplicate payment of taxes belongs legally to the county, though equitably to the payers; so that it should be treated as public money of the county, but as a trust fund to be administered through the ordinary machinery for the presentation of claims against the county. In other words, assuming a trust fund, the previous opinions seem to regard the county as the trustee.

With a view to testing the validity of this assumption I have examined a large number of statutes, viz.: Sections 2633, 2638, 2639, 2640, 2642, 2645, 2568, 2595, 2596, 2598, 2602, 269, 2683, 2688, 2689, 5671, 5697, 5699, 5700, 12075 and 2571 of the General Code, together with the cases of Wasteney v. Schott, 58 O. S. 410, and Woolley v. Staley, 39 O. S. 354, and have arrived at the following conclusions:

(1) The county treasurer, as collector of taxes charged on the general duplicate, is not the agent of the county in its proprietary capacity, and his legal title to the funds he collects under color of this authority is not acquired by him as a representative of the county, as such. Though he is a county officer in the same sense that all officers having to do with the machinery of levying and collecting taxes are county officers (State ex rel. v. Groom, 91 O. S. 1), it does not necessarily follow that he is the agent of the county, as such, when acting in this capacity.

(2) On the contrary, the function of collecting taxes is a state function. Before they are collected the right to collect them is a chose in action which the state owns (Wastency v. Schott, supra), and after they are collected they belong to the state until distribution at the semi-annual settlement.

(3) By virtue of the joint operation of some of the sections above referred to, and section 286, General Code, referred to in Mr. Turner's opinion, it is clear that all money collected under color of authority of the county treasurer as tax collector belongs to him in his official capacity as agent of the state, and not personally, so that he is obliged to account for it in his account current with the county auditor and to pay it over to his successor in office.

(4) There is, therefore, no authority in law for crediting balances remaining after settlement and arising from duplicate payment of taxes to any fund set up in the county treasury, as such, and making claims for recovery of money so paid by mistake subject to the procedure for the allowance of claims against the county. Such a claim is not a claim against the county in any sense; it is a claim against the treasurer in the capacity above described. The treasurer is subject to suit for the recovery of such taxes under section 12077 of the General Code, even though he has settled with his successor; but he is entitled to reimbursement on account of any judgment rendered, together with costs and expenses, under favor of section 5700 of the General Code, such reimbursement to come from the undistributed and undistributable amount constituting a constructive trust fund, which as a matter of bookkeeping must remain in the undivided taxes. That is to say, the operation of section 5700 under such circumstances is such that the person who collected the sum paid by mistake as county treasurer and has been obliged to make restitution may be reimbursed out of the undivided and undistributed surplus general taxes, and no further distribution or allotment of the sum so withdrawn for the purpose of reimbursement is to be made under said section.

(5) Such surplus moneys, standing nominally to the credit of the undivided taxes, but in reality constituting a constructive trust, should be placed in the county depositary as are all other undivided tax moneys, and the interest thereon should go to the undivided taxes themselves, but not be distributed; in other words, the interest belongs to the constructive trust. As to whether the payers are entitled to participate in the interest I am in doubt, as the ordinary measure of recovery for money paid by mistake is the amount paid with interest at the legal rate from the time of demand for restitution and its refusal. Such interest may well be used, however, to pay costs accruing in the action, if any, brought under sections 12075 et seq. of the General Code.

(6) As a necessary corollary to what has been said I should have stated earlier that the county treasury is not entitled as residuary legatee, so to speak, to all moneys collected as taxes and not otherwise distributable. It is entitled to the proceeds of the levies it has made, and to nothing else, from the undivided taxes.

(7) There is no authority in law for any activity on the part of the county treasurer in seeking out the makers of erroneous payments, and he can not lawfully spend any public moneys whatsoever on this account; moneys collected by him in his official capacity being public moneys, even though as a result of their payment under mistake of fact the public may be a constructive trustee of them, he may not lawfully devote any part of the principal or interest of such moneys to the expense of investigating such duplicate payments. The burden of showing that such payments have been made and of claiming restitution rests in law upon the persons making such payments. Where, however, the treasurer has discovered and knows the identity of the person who has made such payment he may, of course, incur such expense as may be involved in advising the person of the fact and making proper restitution. In all cases of doubt, however, the question as to whom the payment is due should be settled by the common pleas court in an appropriate action.

(8) For all these reasons I reaffirm the general conclusion arrived at in my previous opinion, to the effect that the county treasurer may not lawfully employ a person to investigate duplicate payments of taxes and pay him out of the interest arising from the deposit of the fund produced by such duplicate payments. I feel constrained, however, to modify Mr. Turner's opinion by advising that the fund so produced does not belong to the county, as such, and that the county commissioners have nothing whatever to do with it; but, on the contrary, it belongs nominally in the undivided tax fund and in substance to the county treasurer, the custodian of that fund, as the agent of the state, and in his official capacity.

I do not feel that I ought to let this opportunity pass to emphasize what Mr. Turner said in his opinion, to the effect that there is no reason why any such duplicate payments should occur.

The treasurer of Cuyahoga county advises that more than one hundred thousand dollars in four years have been collected in this way. The treasurer also advises that a former incumbent of the same office, who originated the practice which has been followed, devised a scheme along the following lines:

> "In all cases where there was demand made for a tax bill, the original of which had been taken away, I issued to the person demanding a second bill, a bill in duplicate, at the same time taking the name and address of the person to whom such second bill was issued.
> This was followed up later by forwarding notice to both parties, * * *.
> In addition, the names of all those and the amount of overpayment was made known through the daily newspapers, and lists containing the names and amounts were posted on the bulletin board in the court house, where they remained for many months."

This scheme is in its essential respects an excellent one and up to a certain point is quite in harmony with the law. I take it that all the duplicate payments in question arise in reference to taxes charged on real estate. I deem it pertinent to suggest here that such taxes are assessed in rem, and that it is immaterial who pays them. When they are once paid the tax lien is discharged and there is no obligation on the part of any one to pay the taxes. If a third person, who has no interest whatsoever in the real estate in question, and never had any, should voluntarily pay the taxes charged against it, that would be a perfectly legal payment so far as the county treasurer is concerned; it is neither his duty nor his right to see to it that the proper person pays the taxes charged on real estate. (37 Cyc. 1152, and cases cited.)

It is true that sections 5682 and 5683 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "Section. 5682. Each person owning lands, may authorize or consen to the payment by another of the taxes levied upon such lands. A person so paying such taxes shall first obtain from the owner or owners of such lands a certificate of authority to pay them, signed in the presence of two witnesses, and acknowledged before an officer authorized to administer oaths. Such certificate shall contain an accurate description of the property as shown by the tax duplicate, the amount of the taxes levied thereon, the year for which they were levied, the name of the person authorized to pay them, and the date of the payment thereof."
> "Section 5683. The person so paying such taxes, within ten days from the date of the payment thereof, shall file such certificate in the office of the county recorder for record. When the certificate has been filed the amount thereof with interest at eight per cent per annum from the date of the payment of such tax, shall become a lien upon such real estate in preference to all liens thereafter attaching to the property and in preference to all pre-existing liens the holders of which have executed and acknowledged such certificate of authority. The money so paid, with the interest thereon, may be recovered by action for money paid to his use against the person legally liable for the payment of the tax. Such action may be brought by the person so paying the tax, at any time after the expiration of one year from the date of the payment thereof. The certificate, so filed with the recorder, shall be recorded and cancelled, in like manner as mortgages on real estate, in a book to be separately kept and indexed by him for that purpose, and the recorder shall receive such fees as are prescribed by law for recording real estate mortgages."

The force of these sections is, however, in my opinion, exhausted in the creation of the lien of which section 5683 speaks, and in the statutory right of action for money paid for the use of another. Without these statutes a mere volunteer could acquire, of course, not even a right of action for reimbursement, but that would not prevent his paying the taxes at his own peril. In my opinion, the statutes found in the chapter of which the above sections are a part are intended to and do govern the rights of taxpayers inter se; they have nothing whatever to do with the duties of the county treasurer as tax collector.

From these considerations it follows that when taxes on real estate have once been paid the charge on the duplicate has become discharged, and any one subsequently paying taxes assessed on account of such real estate, whether as between him and the first payer he should have paid the taxes in the first instance or not, is under no obligation to pay the same a second time. If he does pay them, he it is in all cases who is entitled to restitution from the county, if any one is. If he knows that the taxes have been paid once, and insists upon paying them a second time because of his belief that it is his duty to do so, he can not obtain restitution because he has made a voluntary payment not under a mistake of fact but under a mistake of law, viz: that it was his duty to pay the taxes a second time. Under such circumstances he is entitled to no refunder at all, and the money which he pays to the county treasurer does not constitute a part of any trust fund.

These things being true, it seems to me that when, in the language of the county treasurer's letter, "a demand is made for a tax bill, the original of which has been taken away," and when the treasurer "issues to the person demanding a second bill, a bill in duplicate, at the same time taking the name and address of the person to whom such a second bill was issued," he should give his personal receipt to such second person for money tendered as taxes, and not assume to collect it as taxes at all. If upon investigation it appears that the absence of the tax bill is due to the fact that the taxes on the real property in question have actually been paid once, he should immediately refund the tender to the person who made it. So far as the rights of the two taxpayers are concerned that is a matter to be worked out between them, and it is a waste of the time of the county treasurer's office and a perversion of the duties of his office for him, or any other officer engaged in the collection of taxes, to attempt to decide such questions. The money so received by way of tender should not be credited to the undivided tax funds, nor included in the daily statement of the county treasurer to the county auditor. In fact it should not be "collected" at all.

In point of fact, if at the time the treasurer receives a demand for a duplicate bill he is able to see from the entries on the duplicate that the taxes have been paid, he should refuse the second tender, as he would then know that he is being asked to collect moneys for the collection of which he holds no warrant. I assume that he would be able to do this in all cases, but for the enormous pressure of work that is thrown upon the treasurer's office in a populous county during the last days of the collection, when it is impossible to keep the duplicate up with the payments. The fact that the original bill is gone, however, is a suspicious circumstance which should place the treasurer upon his inquiry at the outset, and it has been so regarded by the officials of Cuyahoga county. The error into which they have fallen is in assuming that they had a right to receive the collection and that restitution was due, not necessarily to the person making the second payment, but to the person who ought to hav paid the taxes on the entry in the first place. This, as I have shown, is not so. In all cases the person making the second payment is entitled to the recovery unless he knew when he made it that the first payment had been made; in which event no one is entitled to any recovery from the public.

I should have stated, of course, that if the first payer was in point of fact under no duty to pay the taxes, and yet there was a charge on the duplicate against the lands on which the taxes were paid, he could not claim recovery upon the theory that he had made the payment under a mistake of fact, at least in very few cases could he do so. His mistake would almost always be one purely of law. There would be a legal charge on the duplicate against the lands as such, not against any person in particular. If, then, some person, believing himself liable to pay the taxes on account of such charge, should pay them, I can not see how the principles of payment under a mistake of facts could apply; his payment would be perfectly good as between him and the county treasurer, and his remedy, if any, would be against the person who ought to have paid the taxes.

Again, suppose that the mistake consisted of a failure on the part of the payer to remember the fact that he had previously conveyed away the property on which he pays taxes. Here there would be some doubt as to whether a recovery would be permitted.

The general principle as stated in 30 Cyc., page 1318, is as follows:

> "Money paid under a bona fide forgetfulness of facts which disentitled the party to receive it is paid under a mistake of fact and may be recovered. To authorize a recovery the mistake must be as to a material fact, but need not be mutual. It is immaterial that the mistake of fact was accompanied by a mistake of ignorance of law."

Here the bona fide forgetfulness would exist, but the fact forgotten is not one which disentitled the treasurer to receive the payment, but rather one which destroys the obligation of the particular payer to make it. The treasurer is entitled to receive payment from some one, and it is immaterial who pays him. There is no mistake as to the existence of the charge on the duplicate, which is the essential fact.

On the contrary, it is stated in 37 Cyc. 1153, previously referred to, that > "Payment of taxes by a mere stranger who knows he has no title to the land can not create any liability on the part of the owner, * * * although it is otherwise where the payment is made under an honest, but mistaken, belief as to the state of the title, provided the mistake does not arise from the party's own carelessness or ignorance of the law."

So that a payment under the circumstances mentioned would seem to give a right rather against the person who should have paid the taxes than against the public. The doctrine of Woolley v. Staley, supra, is limited to cases in which there is no charge on the duplicate whatsoever on which liability could be predicated.

Sec. 2. Cooley on Taxation, 3d Ed. p. 1495 et seq.

I incline, therefore, to the belief that cases of this type should be treated in the manner already indicated, and that the first payment should be regarded as final so that the second payment should be refused if it is possible to ascertain the facts in time.

I can not too strongly urge upon the bureau, and through it upon the county treasurers, the impropriety of allowing any such duplicate payments to be made. There is absolutely no necessity for it, and it is easily avoided by simply refusing to accept as payment moneys tendered as taxes upon real estate entries when the first bill has been withdrawn until it is discovered that no actual payment has been made.

Of course, even where all precautions are taken it is conceivable that some duplicate payments may occur, and that they have occured to a very large extent because of the erroneous practice which has prevailed in some of the counties is manifest. Therefore, I have felt it necessary to go at length into the matters discussed in the body of this opinion. For the future, however, such problems ought to be reduced to a minimum in quantity and will be if the simple and lawful practice of refusing to accept payment on real estate entries more than once is rigidly adhered to.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

P. S. Since preparing the above opinion I have seen a copy of the bureau's instructions to county auditors and county treasurers provided in Circular No. 64, under date of November 16, 1912. I note two features of this circular which invoke comment in connection with what I have held in the foregoing opinion:

(1) It is suggested in the circular that

> "if the undivided general tax fund shows a surplus at any August settlement, it be transferred to a separate fund to be styled 'Surplus Fund 1912,' or some other suitable name, and the undivided general balances at each August settlement."

This suggestion is an excellent one and in nowise inconsistent with what I have held in saying that, as a matter of law, the surplus is a constructive trust unless accounted for by the failure of the treasurer to stamp as paid items actually collected, though as a matter of bookkeeping it properly belongs in the undivided taxes. Though there is no statutory warrant for so doing, convenience would certainly dictate that the auditor and treasurer should keep an accurate account of the surplus of each year, and for this purpose they may, in my opinion, set up as a matter of convenience such accounts as those recommended for each year.

(2) The circular further states that

> "The balances remaining in each surplus fund may be held until the general assembly provides for their disposition, or transferred to the general county fund as soon as it is reasonably certain that all discoverable errors have thus been corrected."

With the first part of this statement I, of course, agree; with the last part of it I have expressed disagreement. Under no circumstances may these surpluses be transferred to the general county fund nor to any other fund in the county treasury as such, unless the legislature by passage of a law where no law now exists may authorize this particular disposition of such surpluses. The only thing to be done with surpluses for the time being, other than that suggested in the opinion, is to allow them to accumulate.

Except as last noted the suggestions which I have made are consistent with those in the circular, and if all the suggestions referred to are followed it seems to me that the difficulties which have been encountered will in time largely, if not completely, disappear.

RETIRED PATROLMAN MAY RECEIVE COMPENSATION FROM POLICE FUND AND ALSO SERVE AS PARK POLICEMAN AND RECEIVE COMPENSATION THEREFOR.

A retired patrolman under one-half pay from the police fund can legally serve as park policeman and receive his pay therefor, even though both compensations are paid from the funds of the municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you request my opinion upon the following:

> "A patrolman of a city has served the time set forth by the rules governing the police department of his city and has been retired upon half pay, such one-half pay being paid from the police pension fund. The man in question is still able to perform duty and was appointed and has been serving as park policeman in the park department of the municipality where he is paid from the regular payrolls of such park department.
> Can a retired patrolman under one-half pay from the police pension fund legally serve as a park policeman and receive his pay therefor, both compensations being paid from the funds of the municipality?"

Sections 4616 et seq. G. C. provides a scheme for a "police relief fund." This fund is created by certain tax levies, proceeds of certain taxes in certain instances, certain fines, penalties and license fees, donations, and in certain instances contributions from members of the police department.

Section 4628 G. C. provides that the trustees shall make all rules and regulations for the distribution of the fund, including the qualification of those to whom any portion of the fund shall be paid and the amount thereof, the rules being subject to the approval of the director of public safety, or the marshal, as the case may be.

When a person under the rules of the organization is entitled to participate in the fund his status is fixed as far as the fund is concerned at least for the time being. The mere fact that the patrolman has been retired and is entitled to a pension does not mean that he is incapacitated to perform any further physical labor. It may be that he has served a sufficient number of years to entitle him to retirement and that he still may be in fit condition for certain work.

I do not find in the statutes any inhibition against a person being appointed park policeman in the park department of a municipality because of the fact that he is receiving a pension from the police pension fund. Assuming that the person in question has been legally appointed to the position, it is my opinion that the fact that he receives a pension from the police pension fund would not in any manner interfere with his receiving pay as park policeman. A person retired from the police department and receiving a pension under the rules and regulations of the police relief fund is not an officer, nor has he any official duties to perform on behalf of the municipality, consequently there would be no incompatibility.

It will be noted that a pension is not payment for present services rendered or to be rendered. "Pension" is defined as a periodical allowance for an individual on account of past services, or some meritorious work done by him. So it is apparent there is a difference between receiving both a pension and pay for present services and the receiving of pay for services rendered in two positions in the same municipality.

Coming then to answering your question, it is my opinion that a retired patrolman under one-half pay from the police pension fund can legally serve as park policeman and receive his pay therefor, even though both compensations are paid from the funds of the municipality.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

A CORPORATION WHOSE PURPOSE CLAUSE IN ITS ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION MAKES IT A REAL ESTATE AND BUILDING COMPANY IS NOT EXEMPT FROM SECURING A LICENSE FOR THE FLOTATION OF ITS SECURITIES WHEN SUCH SECURITIES ARE NOT PREDICATED UPON PROPERTY.

The statement of the purpose for which a corporation is formed, shown by its articles of incorporation on file with the secretary of state, makes it a "real estate or building company." The application for license to dispose of its securities together with contracts submitted therewith shows that its securities are not predicated upon property. Such company is not entitled to be exempt from securing a license for the flotation of such securities upon the ground that it is "a real estate or building company, all of whose property upon which securities are predicated is located in this state," under the exception contained in section 6373-14.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1918.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On April 18, 1918, you addressed the following request to this department:

> "We are desirous of getting a ruling from you as to the construction on section 6373-14 'e' with particular reference to 'nor of a real estate or building company all of whose property, upon which such securities are predicated, i slocated in this state.'
> We have an application on our blank form No. 4 wherein application is made that the securities of the Three in One Apartment Company be exempt because of the fact that its securities are those of a real estate or building company, and the property upon which such securities are predicated is located in Ohio. We are inclosing said application, together with other data relative thereto. We particularly wish to know whether this corporation is considered a real estate or building company."

The above request is accompanied by the forma statement under section 6373-9 on the regular printed blanks; also a contract between the Cleveland Mansions Company and E. G. Haskell, and another contract between said E. G. Haskell and the Three In One Apartment Company.

From these attached documents, upon which you base your inquiry, the company does not appear to be a real estate or building company, but its essentia objects and purposes are clearly shown to be to exploit a patent and dispose of goods produced under and by virtue of said patent.

As this proposed company is a corporation, however, I have examined its articles of incorporation, and find that from the purpose for which it is incorporated as shown thereby, it is a real estate and building company. The purpose for which it is incorporated is stated in the articles as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of constructing and maintaining buildings to be used for hotels, apartment houses, residences, dwelling houses, store rooms, offices, warehouses and factories, and acquire by purchase or lease, rent and sell all such real estate and personal property as may be necessary for such purpose, and the doing of all things necessary or incident thereto. All of the company's funds invested in real estate and buildings must be invested within the state of Ohio."

The statement shows that there is to be either $30,000.00 or $45,000.00 of stock (there is a contradiction) of which $15,000.00 is preferred stock. It is not shown that the company has any assets, but is stated that 125 of the shares of preferred of $10.00 each have been subscribed for, for cash; that the common stock was issued for rights to use "Merrill" furniture in Cuyahoga county, one-half of same "trusteed" back to company. The commission paid for sale of stock will not exceed 15 per cent.

The contract shows that there is some kind of a patent furniture placed on revolving panels; that the owner of these patents is located in Chicago, but that the Cleveland Mansions Company, through some right it has acquired, is contracting with Haskell to use the patent in Cuyahoga county, in order to do which Haskell agrees to furnish a corporation, which turns out to be this Three In One Company; that its capital stock shall not exceed $30,000.00; that 15 per cent of the stock shall be turned over to the Cleveland Mansions Company, who shall have a right to inspect its books and name a director.

The contract between Haskell and the Three In One Company recites that Haskell owns the above contract with the Cleveland Mansions Company; that the Merrill corporation of Chicago does not sell the Merrill furniture outright, but always on a royalty basis in some manner so that it can secure a part of the excess profit earned by the furniture; that the new company believes it for its own best interest to own the contract, and that it is worth to it the sum of $15,000. This last contract then proceeds to transfer the former contract, and the company agrees to issue 3,000 shares of common stock as fully paid in full of Haskell's subscription to common stock. Then Haskell agrees to turn back 1,500 of these shares to be given as bonuses to purchasers of preferred stock, and to give 450 shares of the common stock to the Merrill corporation, which is to have a right to inspect the company's books and have a director.

Here, as has been said, is no trace of a real estate or building company or anything that looks like one, although the corporation actually formed is a building and real estate company as shown by the purpose of its incorporation set out in the articles.

It is not rendered necessary, however, to determine the question of whether your department may look back of the articles of incorporation to determine whether it be such real estate and building company or whether you are concluded as to its character by the record of its charter. The company places before you not what it is, but what it does, not its charter showing its nature and identity, but its contracts and transactions, and the contract and the transactions of other persons before its existence, and under the terms of which, and by reason of which, it came into existence, and from them claims exemption from the requirement of the license as provided in section 6373-14.

The only statement in this application which bears any relation to the nature of the company is paragraph No. 4, which is as follows:

> "Are the securities those of a real estate or building company, and is all of the property upon which such securities are predicated, located in Ohio? Yes."

This may be taken as a statement that the purpose of the corporation makes it a real estate or building company, but not the latter part of the inquiry as to whether the property upon which its securities are predicated is located in Ohio. The answer to that is "yes", but the other statements of the application show that this is only true prospectively; that is, if the company ever gets any real estate it has declared in advance that it will only have it in Ohio. How can it be said that these securities which it is proposed to sell are real estate located in Ohio, or is property located in Ohio when the company has no property at all located any place, except the mere intangible right to use a patent, and to require subscribers to stock to pay $1,250 for shares subscribed for.

This intangible property having in a sense only an imaginary existence, existing by the operation of law upon the acts of individuals, is by the same law located at the domicile of its owner, which of course is in Ohio, and as shown by the articles of incorporation, it is a building and real estate company, which seems literally to fulfill the requirement. It fails, however, because the application shows that the securities, namely, the remaining 1,375 shares of preferred stock still unsold are not predicated upon this property, or at least only partially so. They are predicated upon business to be done in the sale and installation of furniture, which business is to be done by means of the very proceeds of the sale of the securities itself.

The blue sky law provides for two licenses, one for a "dealer" which is personal, and the intended effect of which is to permit the business coming under the purview of the statute, to be done only by honest and proper persons; the other, a license applying to the property to be disposed of—the security itself—which is the one here inquired about.

It seemed to be in the legislative contemplation that while the licensing of dealers generally would afford sufficient protection to the public from the evils the statute was intended to prevent, that such mere supervision of the persons doing such business would not be sufficient when it came to the flotation of the securities of a new company. And, therefore, in addition to the other powers it confers upon the department, full authority is given to investigate the nature of the new company, its resources and purposes and the manner in which it is proposed to transact its business. From this additional regulation it makes certain exceptions, one of which is that quoted above, as to the real estate and building company whose property upon which the securities are predicated is located in this state. It is suggested that to come under this exception, it is necessary that the securities should be predicated at least upon property, without for the present deciding that it would necessarily be real property.

If the securities be not predicated upon property at all, but upon prospects, however bright, or upon hopes and future intentions, it is not within the exception, but remains under the general requirement.

The question you ask is in the following words: "We particularly wish to know whether this corporation is considered a real estate or building company." Answering this question literally, it does have that character, but it does not follow from its being such real estate or building company that it is exempt from the requirement of license. Such exemption must be based upon the additional facts above required; that is, the securities must be predicated upon property, and the property upon which they are predicated must be located in this state, which under the circumstances set out in this application is not true in the present case.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFFS, DEPUTY SHERIFFS, CONSTABLES, ETC., NOT ENTITLED TO FEES IN FISH AND GAME CASES.

Section 1397 of the General Code providing that the fees of sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers, in fish and game cases, should be the same as allowed game wardens, has become inoperative since the amendment of section 1397, denying fees to game wardens, and no fees in these cases may now be charged by sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables or other police officers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of April 22, 1918, as follows:

> "Did the amendment of section 1394 G. C., 107 O. L. 487, repeal by implication that portion of section 1397 G. C., which presumes to fix fees for sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers in fish and game cases? If section 1397 G. C. was repealed, what fees are sheriffs, deputy sheriffs and constables to be allowed in fish and game cases, it having heretofore been held that no fees are taxable to marshals or chiefs of police in state cases?"

Sections 1394 and 1397 G. C., prior to the amendment in 107 O. L., read as follows:

> "Section 1394. The board of agriculture may allow the chief warden, each special warden and each deputy state warden such compensation as it deems proper and his necessary expenses. In addition to the salaries and compensation herein provided, each warden shall be entitled to receive the same fees as sheriffs are allowed for like services in criminal cases. The salaries and expenses of the chief warden and each special warden and the compensation allowed each deputy state warden shall be paid by the state upon the order of the board."
> "Section 1397. Sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers shall enforce the laws for the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish, and game, and for this purpose they shall have the power conferred upon the wardens and receive like fees for similar services. Prosecutions by a warden or other police officer for offenses not committed in his presence shall be instituted only upon the approval of the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the offense is committed, or upon the approval of the attorney general."

It will be noted from these sections that at this time the game wardens were to receive in fish and game cases the same fees as sheriffs received for like services in criminal cases, and that sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers were to receive the same fees as wardens. However, in 107 O. L., page 487, section 1394 was amended to read as follows:

"The compensation of the chief warden, deputy state wardens and special wardens shall be fixed and paid in the same manner provided for in section 1087 of the General Code for the compensation of other agents of the secretary of agriculture. They may also be allowed and paid in the manner provided in section 1087 all necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of their duties."

It will be noted that in this amendment the provisions allowing game wardens fees in fish and game cases were stricken out, and it has been since held by this department in an opinion found in vol. III of the Attorney-General's Opinions for 1917, page 2300, that no fees may be any longer allowed game wardens for services in these cases. The question is now presented, whether or not section 1397 is any longer effective. In other words, since in section 1397 reference was made to section 1394, and since the provisions of section 1394, to which reference is made in section 1397, has been repealed, does section 1397, which now has reference to the repealed provisions of section 1394, become inoperative.

In the case of Collins v. Blake, 79 Me., 218, it was held:

"The statute giving a lien for feeding and sheltering animals provided that it should be enforced 'as liens on goods and personal baggage by inn holders or keepers of boarding houses.' Held: That repealing the mode of remedy in the latter case did not repeal or change the remedy applicable to the former."

The court said at page 220 in that case:

"The statute gave a lien on animals for feeding and sheltering them, the lien 'to be enforced in the same manner as lien on goods and personal baggage by inn-keepers or keepers of boarding houses.'

That meant enforcement in the manner then existing, not as it might be in the future by a new enactment. A reference was the readiest way to describe the process to be employed for enforcement. The repeal of the process in the one case does not repeal the process in the other, there being no words in the act of repeal including the latter. Suppose the inn-holders' lien had been wholly abrogated, would it be pretended that the lien on animals would fall with it? There is no dependency between the two classes of liens or their enforcement. The case of Lord v. Collins, 76 Maine, 443, by implication, so settles the question."

It will be seen that in this case the reference in the incorporating statute to the statute incorporated was hardly more specific than the reference in section 1397 G. C., above quoted, to the provisions of section 1394 G. C., which section 1397 sought to adopt, and, applying the holding in this case to the situation your communication presents, it would seem that the provisions of section 1394, as they were originally enacted, are to be still read into section 1397. However, the weight of authority seems to draw a marked distinction between those cases in which the incorporating statute has made a specific and descriptive reference to another statute, and the cases in which the adopting statute makes no reference to any particular statute by its title or otherwise, but merely adopts a general law governing a certain subject. This distinction is well set out in a note entitled "Effect upon adopting statute of amendment or repeal of adopted statute," found in volume 40, Am. & Eng. Anno. cases, 1916 B, 375. That note read in part:

"In State v. Leich, 166 Ind. 680, 9 Ann. Cas. 302, the general rule was recognized that when a statute adopts a part or all of another statute by a specific and descriptive reference thereto, such adoption takes the statute as it exists at that time, subsequent amendments or a repeal of the adopted statute having no effect on the adopting statute." (Many cases are cited in support of this doctrine.)

The note further says at page 376:

"A different rule, however, prevails in case of the adoption of a general law on a particular subject. In such a case, where the adopting statute makes no reference to any particular statute by its title or otherwise, but merely adopts the general law governing a certain subject, such adoption includes all subsequent amendments and changes in the law on that subject. In re Guenthoer, 235 Pa. St., 67, 83 Atl. 617. See also People v. Crossley, 261 Ill. 78, 103 N. E. 537. Thus in the case of In re Guenthoer, supra, the court, after adverting to the rule that changes in a statute specifically adopted do not affect the adopting statute, said: 'While this general rule of statutory construction is well settled, and recognized by judicial decisions as well as by text writers, yet it is equally well established as a rule of statutory construction that where the reference in an adopting statute is to the law generally which governs the particular subject, and not to any specific act or part thereof designated in the adopting act, the reference means the law at the time the exigency arises as to which the law is to be applied. We have frequently recognized this distinction and applied the rule that where the reference in an adopting statute is to the law generally upon any subject, the adopting statute means the law in force on the subject at the time it is invoked.' In re Vernon Park. 163 Pa. St. 70, 29 Atl. 972; Kugler's Appeal, 55 Pa. St. 123."

I believe the above rule to be the correct one. It might be well, however, to give some consideration here to two cases of the Ohio Supreme Court and an opinion rendered by former Attorney-General Timothy S. Hogan, all of which discussed the subject matter of this opinion.

The two cases are the Heirs of Ludlow v. C. and J. Johnston, 3 Ohio 553, and Stall v. Macalester, 9 Ohio 19, and the opinion referred to is found in annual report of the attorney-general for 1913, Vol. I, page 164. In the first of the two cases referred to the referring statute provided that a guardian of an idiot, lunatic or insane person shall be authorized to discharge the debts of such person "out of the real estate, in such manner as executors or administrators are by law enabled to discharge the debts of deceased persons, when the personal property is found insufficient." In this case the law defining the duties of the administrator, etc., was repealed, and the question was what effect such repeal had upon the statute referring to the duties of a guardian. On this subject the court said on page 572:

"When in one statute a reference is made to an existing law, in prescribing the rule or manner in which a particular thing shall be done, or for the purpose of ascertaining powers with which persons named in the referring statute shall be clothed, the effect, generally, is not to revive or continue in force the statute referred to, for the purpose for which it was originally enacted, but merely for the purpose of carrying into execution the statute in which the reference is made. For this purpose the law referred to is, in effect, incorporated with and becomes a part of the one in which the reference is made, and so long as that statute continues, will remain a part of it, and although the one referred to should be repealed, such repeal would no more affect the referring statute than a repeal of this latter would the one to which reference is made. Such references are common in our legislation, and a slight examination will show that this is the effect intended to be produced. We will take, for instance, the several laws for the recovery of money secured by mortgage."

In the other supreme court case referred to, Stall v. Macalester, 9 Ohio, 19, the court said on the same subject, beginning at page 22:

"On the 11th of February, 1828, in an act amendatory to the act regulating the duties of executors and administrators, provision is made that after sale of real estate by these officers, return shall be made to the court for confirmation, thereby placing these sales in this respect upon the same footing as sales by sheriffs. It is insisted by the plaintiff's counsel, that this change in the law prescribing the duties of administrators shall be so construed as to effect a similar change in the law relative to the duties of guardians. Such, however, is not the opinion of the court. As has been already remarked, the law for the appointment of guardians does not in itself prescribe the mode in which real estate shall be sold, but refers to another law upon a different subject as to this mode. And as has been already shown by this reference, the law referred to becomes a part of this law for this particular purpose. Such being the case, a repeal of the law referred to would not divest guardians of the right to sell in a proper case. Nor can any change in the law relative to the duties of administrators effect a change in the law relative to the duties of guardians, unless this latter is expressly referred to. 3 Ohio, 556. On full consideration, we are of opinion that the law does not require that a guardian shall make return to the court of a sale by him made, of the real estate of his ward, nor is a confirmation of such sale by the court necessary to its validity."

In the opinion of former Attorney-General Hogan, referred to, he gives consideration to a similar situation in the following language, found at page 167:

"As has been noted, section 9856, General Code, provides that title guarantee and trust companies shall make such reports to the auditor of state as are required of safe deposit and trust companies, and be subject to like examinations and penalties. In the enactment of the provisions of this section prescribing the duties of title guarantee and trust companies, with respect to reports to the auditor of state, and prescribing the authority of such offer with respect to the examination of such companies, the legislature, by necessary intendment, had reference to the provisions covering the same subject-matter with reference to safe deposit and trust companies, now contained within sections 9834 and 9835, General Code. The effect of this reference was to adopt and incorporate the provisions as to reports and examinations applying to safe deposit and trust companies into the act applying to title guarantee and trust companies, the same as if such provisions had been in terms re-enacted in the latter act.

When in one statute a reference is made to an existing law, in prescribing the rule or manner in which a particular thing shall be done, or for the purpose of ascertaining powers with which persons named in the referring statute shall be clothed, the effect, generally, is not to revive or continue in force the statute referred to, for the purpose for which it was originally enacted, but merely for the purpose of carrying into execution the statute in which the reference is made. For this purpose, the law referred to, is, in effect, incorporated with, and becomes a part of the one in which the reference is made, and, so long as that statute continues, will remain a part of it, although the one referred to should be repealed, such repeal would no more effect the referring statute than a repeal of this latter would the one to which reference is made.

Ludlow v. Johnson, 3 Ohio, 533, 572.
Stall v. Maccallister, 9 Ohio, 19, 23.
Shull v. Barton, 58 Neb. 741, 743.
Phoenix Assur. Co. v. Fire Dept. 117, Ala. 631, 646.
Sika v. C. & N. Co., 21 Wis. 370.
In re Heath, 144 U. S., 92, 94.

Applying the principle of construction just noted, it follows that the provisions of sections 9834 and 9835, adopted by reference by the provisions of section 9856, and by legal intendment incorporated in the latter section as applying to the title guarantee and trust companies, are not affected in their application to such companies by the fact that they have been impliedly repealed and abrogated in their application to safe deposit and trust companies by the later provisions of the Thomas banking act."

It will be noted that in this opinion Mr. Hogan relied upon the cases of Ludlow v. Johnston, and Stall v. Macallister, above quoted.

The supreme court cases and the opinion of the former attorney-general do not discuss the distinction pointed out by the authorities heretofore referred to between a specific reference to some special statute and the reference to and adoption of a general law upon a subject. The distinction pointed out in these other authorities amounts practically to this: that where the referring statute employs such language as to fasten some specific provision of another statute as it then exists to the referring statute, no subsequent change of the statute to which reference is made can affect the referring statute, but where the language employed in the referring statute is of a general nature and does not seek to incorporate a provision of law, as it may exist at any certain time, the amendments of the statute referred to become a part of the referring statute. With this distinction in mind I believe the two supreme court cases cited, and the opinion of the attorney-general referred to, can be brought within the rule as stated by the authorities hereinbefore quoted.

It will be noted that in the case of Ludlow v. Johnston, 3 Ohio, 572, the referring statute uses the term "in such manner as executors or administrators are by law able to discharge the debts of deceased persons." In the case of Stall v. Macallister, 9 Ohio, 19, the statute provided that the sale of real estate by guardians should be governed "by the same regulations as are required of administrators in the sale of real property in the case of insolvents' estates."

In the opinion of former Attorney-General Hogan, referred to, the statute provided that "title and trust companies should make such reports to the auditor of state as are required of safe deposit and trust companies." In these two cases and the opinion of Mr. Hogan the word "are" is used and was of the same effect, I think, as though the word "now" had been used in conjunction with it. In other words, the legislature in these cases sought to adopt not a general law on the subject, but the law as it existed at the time of the passage of the adopting statute. This was the view taken by the court in a similar case, viz., Atkinson v. Swords, 11 Ga. App. 167, 74 S. E. 1093. In that case it was held that a clause in an enactment to the effect that a certain liability should be the same as "the liability fixed by the law governing, etc.," adopting by force of the ordinary and usual meaning of the word of the act, the law at that particular time did not extend to future enactments. I think the use of the word "are" in the two supreme court cases and the opinion of Mr. Hogan referred to, is sufficient to indicate a similar intention. In the statute we have under consideration, however, no such language is used. Section 1397 merely provides that sheriffs, etc., shall "receive like fees for similar services." This language is in my opinion such as to affect an adoption of a general rule upon the subject, and under the rule laid down in the authorities quoted in this opinion, such adoption would include all subsequent amendments and be affected by the repeal of the incorporated sta u e.

Viewing the situation presented in the light of this rule, it is my conclusion that section 1397 has become inoperative in so far as the fees of sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables and other police officers in fish and game cases are concerned. This being so, no fees can be allowed these officers in these cases by reason of this section. If section 1397 were not on the statute books, resort might be had to the general provisions of law to give fees to sheriffs, constables and police officers in this case, but inasmuch as the provisions of section 1397 still stand, but are merely inoperative as to these fees, because of the amendment of section 1394, I do not believe any fees may be allowed to these officers in fish and game cases under the general provisions of the fee statutes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DISTRICT—TRANSFERRING TERRITORY AND CREATING NEW DISTRICT, TO WHOM THE PRIVILEGE OF REMONSTRATING EXTENDS.

1. When territory is transferred from one district to another, the privilege of remonstrating extends to the electors only who reside in the territory so transferred.

2. When a new school district is created, the right to remonstrate extends only to the electors of the newly created district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 23, 1918.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:- My opinion is requested by you on the following statement of facts:

> "When territory is transferred from one district to another, does the privilege of remonstrating, as provided for in section 4736, extend to the electors of the district to which the territory is transferred, as well as to the electors of the district in the territory transferred?
> The section further provides for the creation of a new school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof. Does this privilege of remonstrating extend to the electors of such newly created school district, also. does the privilege extend to electors of a part of an existing school district not taken in to such new district?"

Section 4736 G. C., to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "The county board of education shall arrange the school districts according to topography and population in order that the schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils and shall file with the board or boards of education in the territory affected, a written notice of such proposed arrangement; which said arrangement shall be carried into effect as proposed unless, within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education, a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board file a remonstrance with the county board against the arrangement of school districts so proposed. The > county board of education is hereby authorized to create a school district from one or more school districts or parts thereof. The county board of education is authorized to appoint a board of education for such newly created district and direct an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness belonging to the newly created district. Members of the boards of education of the newly created district shall thereafter be elected at the same time and in the same manner as the boards of education of the village and rural districts."

That is to say, the county board of education is by said section granted the authority to arrange the school districts according to topography and population and in order that the schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils, and when such proposed arrangement is completed by the county board of education, it shall file a written notice of such proposed arrangement with the board or boards of education in the territory affected. The territory affected is primarily the territory which, in arranging the school districts, would be taken from one district and added to another district, according to topography and population, so that the schools may be most easily accessible to the pupils, and, given a strict construction, no other territory in such district is affected. True, the districts are affected, but the statute does not say that a notice shall be given to the board or boards of education in the school district affected, but only to the board or boards of education in the territory affected. The arrangement shall not be carried into effect if, within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education, a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against such proposed arrangement. Here, again, we use the words "territory affected" and not the words "districts affected." The county board is authorized to create a school district from one or more districts or parts thereof. If a new district is created from two or more entire school districts, then it is clear that the territory which is affected is the entire territory of the new district and that alone and it was so held by this department, in opinion No. 368, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 987. In that case the county board of education united the Sparta village district and the South Bloomfield rural district into a new district and named the new district the South Bloomfield rural school district, and the question was, whether a remonstrance from the qualified electors of only one of such districts was sufficient, but inasmuch as the whole of the two entire districts was taken in the creation of the new school district, the territory affected was held to be all the territory of both of said districts, and the fact that the new district was named the South Bloomfield rural school district, instead of some other name, made no difference. Some light upon the intention of the legislature in this matter may be gathered from the history of the legislation in relation to said section.

Section 4736 was first enacted February 5, 1914, 104 O. L., p. 138, wherein it was provided that the county board of education shall, as soon as possible, after organizing, make a survey of its entire district, that is, the entire county school district. The old section then provided that "the board shall arrange the schools according to topography and population in order that they may be most easily accessible to pupils." As far as the above quotation goes, the old and new sections were very similar. But the old section then provided:

> "To this end the county board shall have power by resolution at any regular or special meeting to change school district lines and transfer territory from one rural or village school district to another."

No such provision is now contained in section 4736, although if action is taken under section 4736, and school districts are now arranged according to topography and population, and it is necessary in so doing to change district lines, it is necessary to proceed in substance according to the last above quoted language. Said last above quoted language, while not contained in the new section, is in substance contained in section 4692, which will be hereinafter referred to.

Section 4736 next provided that:

> "A map designating such changes shall be entered on the records of the board, and a copy of the resolution and map shall be filed with the county auditor."

This provision is no longer contained in the new section 4736, but in substance the language is found in new section 4692. Old section 4736 then provided:

> "In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines, and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation. In no case shall any rural district be created containing less than fifteen square miles. In changing boundary lines, and other work of like nature, the county board shall ask the assistance of the county surveyor, and the latter is hereby required to give the services of his office at the formal request of the county board."

When said section 4736 was amended the last above mentioned language was entirely omitted, and is now found in no part of the school laws. At the same time, however, that section 4736 was amended, and in the same bill, viz.: amended senate bill 282, passed May 27, 1915, section 4692 was amended to read as follows:

> "The county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining district or districts of the county school district. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map is filed with the auditor of the county in which the transferred territory is situated, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, and a notice of such proposed transfer has been posted in three conspicuous places in the district or districts proposed to be transferred, or printed in a paper of general circulation in said county, for ten days; nor shall such transfer take effect if a majority of the qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred, shall, within thirty days after the filing of such map, file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against such proposed transfer. If an entire district be transferred the board of education of such district is thereby abolished, or if a member of the board of education lives in a part of a school district transferred the member becomes a non-resident of the school district from which he was transferred, and ceases to be a member of such board of education. The legal title of the property of the board of education shall become vested in the board of education of the school district to which such territory is transferred. The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

In said section are found many of the provisions in relation to the transfer of territory which was formerly contained in section 4736, and in both sections 4692 and 4736 was added language which gave certain electors a right to remonstrate. No right to remonstrate was theretofore contained in any of the General Code sections which refer to the transfer of territory from one school district to another. In section 4692 the language is perfectly clear, that is, the persons who have a right to remonstrate are "the qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred," and it might also be added that at the same time and in the same bill, section 4694, which provided for the transfer of territory from one county school district to another, or to an adjoining exempted village school district, or city school district, was amended, and in said section is found language as follows:

> "Provided at least fifty per centum of the electors of the territory to be transferred petition for such transfer."

While no right of remonstrance is given in section 4696, the above language is only referred to as showing that the legislature intended that only those electors who resided in the territory to be transferred should be the electors who could petition, and so in section 4692 the language is clear that only those qualified electors who reside in the territory to be transferred are those which are permitted to remonstrate. Just why the legislature should use different language in the different sections in relation to the same matter is difficult to understand and ordinarily in giving full effect to each word, clause and sentence it would be necessary to give a different meaning to the language which is contained in section 4736 than that which is contained in sections 4692 and in 4696; but I am advised by the superintendent of public instruction that the universal administration of the law has been to permit only those electors in the territory of the newly created district or in the arranging of school districts in the territory which is transferred from one school district to another to remonstrate against such arrangement or the creation of such new districts.

This view also seems to be the view which has been taken by our courts and I call attention to a case found in 6 O. App. Rep. 415 entitled Fisher v. Whitters et al., wherein the county board of education consolidated two village districts into one district and thus created a new school district as provided by section 4736. On page 417 Houck J. in delivering the opinion of the court uses the following language:

> "No claim is made in the amended petition that advantage was taken by the electors of the new school district of the provisions of section 4736 General Code, part of which reads 'Which said arrangement shall be carried into effect as proposed unless within thirty days after the filing of such notice with the board or boards of education a majority of the qualified electors of the territory affected by such order of the county board file a written remonstrance with the county board against the arrangement of school districts so proposed.' "

The court in the above language refers to the right of remonstrating to the electors of the new school district and while in said case the same as in my opinion above referred to the entire districts were created into a new school district yet instead of using the language "territory affected" the court uses the language "of the new school district."

I can come to but one conclusion from the history of said legislation and that is that the legislature when it amended section 4736 and used the language "qualified electors of the territory affected" meant the same as when it used the language in section 4692, "qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred" and the same as in section 4696 when it used the language "electors of the territory to be transferred." I therefore advise you in answer to your several questions as follows:

1. When territory is transferred from one district to another the privilege of remonstrating extends to the electors only who reside in the territory so transferred.
2. When a new school district is created the right to remonstrate extends only to the electors of the newly created district.
3. My answer to your second question answers your third.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE FOR LOT NO. 35 OF WOOD-BROWN PLACE, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I beg to ackowledge receipt of the abstract of title for the following described real estate in Clinton township, Franklin county, Ohio:

> Being Lot No. Thirty-five (35) of Wood-Brown place, as the same is numbered and delineated on the recorded plat thereof, Plat Book 5, pages 196 and 197, in the recorder's office in Franklin county, Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title to said real estate as disclosed thereby which lapse of time has not cured. There are no liens or incumbrances against said real estate excepting the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined, are unpaid and a lien, also special taxes noted on the treasurer's duplicate for the improvement of Edgeview lot, five-year plan, balance 40 cents, with 5% interest. One installment of 10 cents and interest was due in June, 1918.

Subject only to the payment of said taxes and said assessment, I am of the opinion that the abstract discloses a good and sufficient title in fee simple in Thelma Burnett to said Lot No. 35, above mentioned.

I am returning the abstract herewith.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

P. S.—I have also this day examined the mortgage records of Franklin county, Ohio, and find from the indexes thereof no mortgages of record against said property.

VILLAGE INCORPORATED, OR VILLAGE TO WHICH TERRITORY IS ANNEXED, AFTER BONDS ISSUED BY TOWNSHIP FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT, DOES NOT ASSUME PART OF INDEBTEDNESS, INDEBTEDNESS IS LIABILITY AGAINST TOWNSHIP.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1918.

(1) A village incorporated after the issuing of bonds by the township trustees for a road improvement under the provisions of sections 3298-15d and 3298-15e does not assume any part of said bonded indebtedness even though a part of the road improved is included within the corporate limits of said village. The bonded indebtedness so created is a liability against the township as a whole, and the levy that is made to take care of this bonded indebtedness is made against all the property of the township whether lying within or without the limits of municipal corporations therein.

(2) A village to which territory is annexed, and in which territory there is a road, for the improvement of which the township trustees had issued bonds, does not assume any part of said bonded indebtedness. The bonded indebtedness so created is a liability against the township as a whole, and the levy that is made to take care of this bonded indebtedness is made against all the property of the township whether lying within or without the limits of municipal corporations therein.

HON. C. G. ROETZEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have a communication of July 17, 1918, signed by W. A. Spencer, assistant prosecuting attorney of your county. This communication reads as follows:

> "Will you please give me an opinion upon the following questions:
>
> Some six months ago Silver Lake village was incorporated out of a part of the territory which was formerly Stow township, Summit county, Ohio. Previous to this incorporation, Stow township had improved and constructed a road known as Payne avenue, and for its share of the cost of this road issued bonds which it obligated itself to pay. When Silver Lake village was incorporated it took within its limits a portion of Payne avenue. The trustees of Stow township now want to know whether Silver Lake village must pay a proportionate part of this bond issue which would cover that part of the road within the village limits, or whether what remains of Stow township is still obligated to pay the whole of its share of the bonds as per the agreement originally made.
> A somewhat similar situation exists with reference to the village of Cuyahoga Falls, Summit county. Cuyahoga Falls also recently annexed to their village a part of what was Stow township. Previous to this time, Stow township has issued bonds to cover its share of the cost for improvement of what is known as the Stow-Tallmadge road.
> We wish an opinion as to whether or not the village of Cuyahoga Falls will share with Stow township the payment of these bonds in proportion to that part of the road taken in the village, or whether Stow township will have to pay its share of the entire bond issue as it originally obligated itself to do."

The communication naturally divides itself into two parts, the one having to do with the incorporation of a new village called Silver Lake village from territory originally forming a part of Stow township, Summit county, Ohio, and the other having to do with the annexation of certain territory to the village of Cuyahoga Falls, Summit county, Ohio, which territory originally formed a part of Stow township lying outside of said village.

Let us consider these two questions in the order set out in the communication: In the first question you ask whether the bonds issued by Stow township to pay for the cost and expense of a road lying in the township, a part of which road falls within the incorporated village of Silver Lake, should be paid in whole by a tax levy upon the territory lying outside of the village of Silver Lake, or whether Silver Lake village should assume a part of this indebtedness proportioned to the part of the road that now lies within said village.

It is my opinion that neither of these alternative propositions is correct. It is my opinion that these bonds must be paid from a tax levy made upon all the taxable property of the township whether this property lies within the incorporated village of Silver Lake or any other village within Stow township, or whether it lies without the incorporated village of Silver Lake or within the corporate limits of any other village. In other words, when the township trustees of Stow township issued bonds to take care of the cost and expense of the improvement of what was known as Payne avenue road, the bonds became an obligation against the township as a whole, and the levy which is made from time to time by the township trustees to provide a fund out of which these bonds may be redeemed is made against all the property of the township whether it lies within the limits of an incorporated village or lies without said limits.

While your communication does not distinctly indicate, yet I take it that the bonds were issued by the township trustees under the provisions of the White-Mulcahy law, which became effective on the 28th day of June, 1917, and I shall, therefore, note a few provisions of said law. The principle, however, would be the same, even though the bonds were issued under the provisions of the Cass law.

Section 3298-15d, 107 O. L. 79, reads as follows:

> "The proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the township shall be paid out of any road improvement fund available therefor. For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the township's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, resurfacing or improving roads under the provisions of section 3298-1 to 3298-15n inclusive, of the General Code, and for the purpose of maintaining, repairing or dragging any public road, or roads, or part thereof, under their jurisdiction in the manner provided in sections 3370 to 3376 inclusive, of the General Code, the board of trustees of any township is hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding three mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said township. Said levy shall be in addition to all other levies authorized by law for township purposes and subject only to the limitation on the combined maximum rate for all taxes now in force. The taxes so authorized to be levied shall be placed by the county auditor upon the tax duplicate against the taxable property of the township and collected by the county treasurer as other taxes. When collected such taxes shall be paid to the treasurer of the township from which they are collected, and the money so received shall be under the control of the township trustees of such township for the purposes for which such taxes were levied."

From the provisions of this section it is to be noted that the levy which is made annually by the township trustees is made "upon each dollar of the taxable property of said township." That is, the levy covers the entire property of the township whether within or without the limits of a municipal corporation.

It is to be noted that this section further provides that the county auditor shall place the tax levy upon the tax duplicate "against the taxable property of the township."

Section 3298-15e provides that:

> "The township trustees, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments, or any part thereof, may, whenever in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said township in any amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement."

This section further provides:

> "Prior to the issuance of such bonds the township trustees shall, in case all or any part of said bonds are to be redeemed by special assessments, provide for the levying of a tax upon all the taxable property of the township to cover any deficiencies in the payment or collection of any such special assessments."

From the provisions of these two sections it is clearly evident that the bonds issued by your township trustees are obligations against the township as a whole, including not only the territory lying outside of any municipal corporation but as well the territory lying within a municipal corporation, and that the redemption of these bonds must be made from a fund created by a levy of taxes upon all the property of the township.

Hence, the levy made annually by the township trustees of Stow township will be made against the property lying within the incorporated village of Silver Lake just the same as it would have been levied against this same property if the village had not been incorporated. But the village as a village does not assume any part of this obligation, neither do the authorities of the village make any levy of taxes to create a fund out of which to redeem any part of these bonds.

From this I think it is clear that neither of the alternatives set out in the communication is correct. The village does not assume any part of the obligation; but on the other hand, the part of the township outside of the incorporation of said Silver Lake village does not assume the entire obligation, but the obligation stands against the township as a whole.

I think this answers your first question.

The second question is to this effect: Certain territory originally lying outside of the village of Cuyahoga Falls, and in Stow township, has been annexed to the village of Cuyahoga Falls, and through the territory so annexed a part of the Stow-Tallmage road runs, for the construction of which bonds had been issued by the township trustees of Stow township, and some of the bonds have not as yet been redeemed.

The question is as to whether Cuyahoga Falls should assume a part of this obligation, or whether Stow township will have to pay the bonds so issued.

The same answer and the same reasoning will apply to this question as applied to the first question. Cuyahoga Falls as a village will not assume any part of said obligation neither will the property of Stow township outside of Cuyahoga Falls be compelled to bear the entire obligation, but the township trustees in making a levy from the proceeds of which the bonds shall be paid, will make the levy upon all the taxable property of the township whether it lies within the village of Cuyahoga Falls or whether it lies outside the corporate limits of Cuyahoga Falls.

Hence, the tax levy made by the township trustees from year to year will be levied against the territory annexed to Cuyahoga Falls just the same as if it had not been so annexed.

In passing, I might say that I am assuming that the trustees of Stow township have not created a special road district of the territory lying outside of the municipal corporations within Stow township under the provisions of 3298-25 General Code.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

COUNTY DITCH—WHEN NEW ESTIMATE MAY BE MADE—NOTICE—WHEN COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT CHANGE CHARACTER OF IMPROVEMENT.

The sale of the work of construction of a county ditch, having been prevented by injunction for such period of time owing to the increase in prices it is impossible to secure a bid at the cost of construction as estimated by the engineer, a new estimate may be made.

No further notice to interested persons is legally required as to the making of such re-estimate, but it is advisable to notify the owners of assessed lands in some manner of the change in the estimate.

After a petition has been filed, praying for the construction of a ditch improvement, and the proceedings have reached the point where the next step is the sale of the improvement, the commissioners have no power to change the character of such improvement by changing an open ditch to a tile one, or such other change as makes it a different improvement from that originally found for.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1918.

HON. CHARLES L. FLORY, Prosecuting Attorney, Newark, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On June 20, 1918, you addressed the following inquiry to this department:

> "In November, 1915, a petition was presented to the commissioners of Licking county, praying for the establishment of a county ditch. The petition was granted and the proceedings progressed according to law up to the point where the county surveyor, who was doing the engineering work, was about to sell the work, at which time one of the land owners, to be assessed for the work, obtained an injunction against further proceedings; the letting of the work was not advertised, and consequently no contract was ever made for the construction work.
> The injunction proceeding has just terminated in favor of the commissioners, and it is now desired to proceed with the construction of the ditch, but the commissioners are confronted by three propositions.
> The engineer's estimate of the cost of the work was made in 1915. Material and labor have greatly advanced in price since the estimate was made, so that such estimate is now far below what the work will cost at the present time. Also, a part of the ditch, as designated in the specifications, was to be an open ditch. It is now desired to make the entire improvement a tile ditch.
> I shall appreciate your opinion on the following propositions:
>
> First—May the commissioners now have the engineer prepare a new estimate, and proceed to let the contract and have the work done on the basis of such new estimate?
>
> Second—If so, may such action be taken without any further notice being given the land owners whose property will be assessed?
> Third—May the entire ditch be now constructed of tile, in view of the fact that the original specifications, made in 1915, called for part of the ditch to be of tile and a part to be an open ditch?"

Your request has not been complied with sooner because of the difficulties presented by the first of your three questions.

It is, of course, necessary to examine the statutes upon the subject, which are contained in the chapter "Single County Ditches," and so far as they affect these questions, are as follows:

> "Section 6443. The board of county commissioners, at a regular or called session, when necessary to drain any lots, lands, public or corporate road or railroad, and it will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare, in the manner provided in this chapter, may cause to be located and constructed, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, a ditch, drain or watercourse, * * * *."

It will be here noted that there are a number of different things which may be done under the authority of this section, two or more of which were done in the case in hand. Your inquiry shows that an order has been made for the location and construction of a ditch and for tiling a part of the same. This section contains the authority of the commissioners to do these things, and directs that they shall be done in the manner provided in this chapter.

Section 6446 provides who may make application for such improvement, and 6447 makes provision for a petition and bond. The beginning of the section is as follows:

> "A petition shall be filed with the county auditor setting forth the necessity and benefits of the improvement and describing the beginning, route and termini thereof."

Of course, it follows that this petition must designate the character of the improvement; that is, it must be a petition for one or more of the things which the commissioners by 6443 are empowered to do, as it is in the present case.

It further follows from the provision giving commissioners jurisdiction to do certain specified things, and then providing for invoking their action by a petition filed by qualified persons that the specific thing or things sought to be done are to be set forth in the petition, and that the jurisdiction of the commissioners in the particular proceeding is limited to an improvement of the character prayed for in the petition.

Section 6449 and 6450 provide for notice to land owners.

Section 6451 is as follows:

> "The county commissioners shall meet at the place of beginning of the ditch, as described in the petition, on the day fixed, as provided in this chapter, and hear the proof offered by any of the parties affected by said improvement, and other persons competent to testify. They shall go over and along the line of the improvement, and by actual view of the ditch and the premises along and adjacent thereto which are to be drained or benefited thereby, determine the necessity thereof, and may adjourn from time to time and to such place as the necessity of the work may require. If the commissioners find for the improvement, they shall fix a day for the hearing of applications for appropriations of land taken therefor and damages that persons, affected by said improvement, may sustain thereby, and for the approval of the report of the county surveyor as hereinafter provided for."

Section 6452 provides for combining different improvements or for the exercise by the commissioners of the power to do different things provided in 6443 in one proceeding. While it does not include construction and tiling, the two must necessarily be united, as construction, while used in 6443 especially to designate an improvement which is entirely new from one which is a modification of some former improvement, yet ex vi termini must include all the other improvements, all of which must be constructed. There would, therefore, seem no doubt of the power of the commissioners to construct a new ditch, a part of which might be tiled and a part constructed as an open ditch.

Section 6453 provides for a finding against improvement, and section 6454 provides as follows:

> "If the county commissioners find for the improvement, they shall cause to be entered on their journal an order directing the county surveyor to go upon the line described in the petition, or as changed by them as provided in this chapter, and survey and level it, and set a stake at every hundred feet, * * * * * and make a report, profile and plat thereof, and estimate the number of cubic yards of earth or other substance to be removed, and the cost per cubic yard for each working section as hereinafter provided, and of each section of one hundred feet."

This section furnishes data from which the total cost of location and construction, or rather an estimate of the total cost of the improvement, may be ascertained, and 6455 contains the following:

> "The county commissioners, by such order, shall direct the county surveyor or engineer to make and return a schedule of the lots and lands, and public or corporate roads or railroads that will be benefited, with an apportionment of the cost of location, and the labor of constructing the improvement, in money, according to the benefits which will result to each * * * * *."

It will be noted here that what the engineer is called upon to do is to make an apportionment; that is, to compare the benefits received by each benefited owner, and how much they are relatively to each other. This apportionment he is directed to make "in money." This can mean nothing else than that he is to make this apportionment by ascertaining the total cost according to the estimate made by him under 6454, and then show the apportionment thereof by making the proper division of the estimated cost among the different parties benefited. The section further provides that certain kinds of benefits shall be taken into account in making this apportionment, and that there shall be "a specification of the manner in which the improvement shall be made and completed, the number of flood-gates, waterways, * * * * *," etc.

This is quoted to show that all details as to the character and manner of the construction of the improvement are to be settled in advance of selling the work.

Section 6457 requires the commissioners to review the apportionment made by the surveyor, and that they may so amend it as to make it fair and just in proportion to the benefits, providing that they may adjourn for that purpose and go upon the premises, make an entire reapportionment and bring in new parties, if necessary.

Section 6460 provides that on or before the day set for the hearing when the commissioners find for the improvement, any persons whose lands are affected may make application for compensation and damages. Of course, the amount of this compensation and damages would depend upon the character of the improvement, and would be entirely different in a tile ditch from what it would be in an open ditch.

Section 6461 provides for the agreement of an allowance of such compensation and damages, and other sections provide for the payment before entering upon the work of improvement. Then follow detailed provisions for an appeal (6469-6480) and 6481 is as follows:

> "When an appeal has been taken, after the transcript of the proceedings before the probate judge and the other papers in the case are returned to the auditor's office, the county commissioners shall cause such entry to be made on their journal as will give effect to the verdict and findings of the jury. In such cases and in cases where no appeals have been taken, they shall fix a time for the public sale of the construction of the improvement in sections not less than one hundred feet nor more than sixteen thousand feet in length, or it may be sold as an entirety in the discretion of the county commissioners and county surveyor or engineer."

Section 6482 then provides for advertising, for selling the construction of the work, at which point your proceedings have arrived.

It now appears in your case that it is useless to proceed to take the next statutory step, and that the improvement cannot be sold under the present estimate, because there will be no bid as low as the estimated cost, and therefore under 6482 the work cannot be sold. There is in the whole statutory scheme no provision for abandoning an improvement after it has been found for. So you find yourself in a dilemma; that is, you can neither go on nor stop.

Of course, this difficulty must be resolved by finding a way to go on. The principal difficulty lies in the requirement upon the engineer of making the apportionment under 6455 "in money." It has already been shown that this is not a finding in dollars and cents of what each one must eventually pay. It is nothing but a division of the cost, which for convenience and uniformity is expressed in dollars and cents. It seems necessarily to follow from the fact that a bid cannot be received in excess of this estimate that the amount apportioned to each one would constitute a maximum above which he could not be required to pay. This conclusion, however, disappears in view of the necessity for paying compensation and damages which are not included in this estimate at all. It, therefore, is not a maximum sum of money beyond which the land owner cannot be required to pay for the improvement, but remains nothing more nor less than a division of the burden among those who receive the benefit.

If, therefore, you cannot stop, but must go on, and if you cannot take a bid above this estimate, and cannot get a bid which is not above it, something has to give way, and that "something" in the necessity of the case is the estimate.

This estimate is of the probable cost of construction. It has been made by an engineer with the best lights he possessed at the time. The construction of the improvement has been held up by the courts; during this period of delay the mutations of time have been beyond all human foresight or calculation, and money now has substantially less purchasing power than at the time of making this estimate. The estimate was nothing but an estimate at that time. Of course, the statute contemplated that the improvement would be carried out before such lapse of time as would create such change as upsets human calculation, but it was not so. It, therefore, must follow that another estimate could now be made enabling this proceeding to go on, which must go on because it cannot stop, and your first question is therefore answered that a new estimate may be made. This estimate does not, however, include the making of a new apportionment, but in order to express it in money a simple arithmetical calculation is necessary.

However, it would seem to me that it would possibly be best to first offer the work under the old estimate in order that no question can be raised that the work might have been let thereunder. After it is demonstrated that the old estimate is too low a new estimate could be made.

Coming to your second question, there is no statutory provision for further notice, or, in fact, for but one notice, in common with all other quasi judicial proceedings. It would be advisable, however, to give informal notice to all the affected land owners of the change of the estimate, as by doing this the commissioners might stand better in equity if injunction proceedings were invoked on account of the change.

As to your third question, the answer must already be apparent from what is premised as to the jurisdiction of the commissioners and the manner in which it must be invoked.

It is too late after a specific improvement has been prayed for and granted, and it has proceeded to the point of selling the work, to change and make an improvement of a different character; that is, to do one of the different things that the commissioners had power and jurisdiction to have done if properly initiated.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ENGINEER AND ASSISTANTS EMPLOYED UNDER SECTION 2411 MUST BE PAID FROM THE GENERAL COUNTY FUND—MONEY CANNOT BE TRANSFERRED FROM A FUND CREATED FOR A SPECIAL PURPOSE TO THE GENERAL COUNTY FUND.

1. The engineer and assistants provided in section 2411 G. C. must be paid from the general county fund and not from the fund created to take care of the cost and expense of an improvement in reference to which said engineer and assistants perform labor.

2. There is no authority in law to transfer money from a fund created for a special purpose to the general county fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of some days since which is as follows:

> "In case the county commissioners have employed an engineer in accordance with section 2411 G. C., and in the case the county surveyor has in his employ certain assistants, deputies and inspectors, in accordance with section 2788, and all of these persons are engaged exclusively upon a certain special improvement—for example, a bridge—may the compensation due all these employes, or any of them, be paid from the fund created for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of constructing the given improvement?
> If your answer is that the payment must be made from the general fund of the county, is there any provision under which the general fund of the county may subsequently be replenished to the amount of the payment of the compensation, from the special fund created for the cost and expense of the improvement?"

Your question naturally divides itself into two parts: (1) as to whether the engineer and assistants employed under section 2411 G. C. should be paid from the proceeds of the special fund created for taking care of the cost and expense of a certain improvement upon which they devote their time and labor, or whether they should be paid from the general county fund; and (2) whether there is any authority in law for transferring a portion of the special fund to the general fund of the county, provided I hold that these employes should be paid from the general fund.

Section 2411 G. C. reads as follows:

> "When the services of an engineer are required with respect to roads, turnpikes, ditches or bridges, or with respect to any other matter, and when, on account of the amount of work to be performed, the board deems it necessary, upon the written request of the county surveyor, the board may employ a competent engineer and as many assistant engineers, rodmen and inspectors as may be needed, and shall furnish suitable offices, necessary books, stationery, instruments and implements for the proper performance of the duties imposed on them by such board."

Under this section the engineer and assistants and clerks employed by the county commissioners to assist him are employed to perform work which otherwise would devolve upon the county surveyor and his office force, and for the performance of which the surveyor and his force would not be entitled to compensation over and above the salary pertaining to said office. So if the county surveyor and his force performed the work which under the law becomes a part of his duties, they are entitled to receive no compensation from the fund created to take care of the cost and expense of the particular improvement upon which the work is performed. They obtain their salaries from the general county fund, under the allowance made by the county commissioners, or the court of common pleas in the event it makes an extra allowance.

As the engineer and assistants provided for under section 2411 G. C., are employed to perform work, which would otherwise devolve upon the county surveyor, due to the fact that the county surveyor cannot perform the work himself, said engineer and assistants are not entitled to receive any compensation from the special fund so created. This is the logical conclusion deduced from said section 2411.

Further, the legislature has seen fit to make specific provisions in reference to this matter. Section 2413 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Sec. 2413. The board of county commissioners shall fix the compensation of all persons appointed or employed under the provisions of the preceding sections, which, with their reasonable expenses shall be paid from the county treasury upon the allowance of the board. No provisions of law requiring a certificate that the money therefor is in the treasury shall apply to the appointment or employment of such persons."

Under this section all persons employed by the county commissioners under section 2411 G. C. must be paid from the county treasury.

The conclusion herein reached by me is in harmony with an opinion rendered by one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, and found in Vol. II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, p. 1144. Mr. Hogan held as follows at p. 1146:

"When an engineer is employed, pursuant to the provisions of section 2411, I am of the opinion that he may perform the services prescribed by section 2343, as to bridges. His compensation, however, must be paid in the manner set forth in section 2413 and not from any fund contemplated by sections 2343 and 2344."

This disposes of your first question and the answer to it makes one necessary to your second question. The answer to your second question is based upon the provisions of section 5654 G. C. This section reads as follows:

"Sec. 5654. The proceeds of a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was levied, issued or made, except as herein provided. When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax or of the proceeds of a loan or bond issue which cannot be used, or which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied, or the loan made, or the bonds issued, all of such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the officer, board or council having charge of such surplus, to the sinking fund of such city, village, county, township or school district, and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund."

It will be noted that there are two separate and distinct provisions in this section. The first one is to the effect that the proceeds realized from a special tax, loan or bond issue shall not be used for any other purpose than that for which the same was provided. The second provision states that when any of the fund so realized cannot be used for the purpose for which it was created, or is not needed for such purpose, the surplus shall immediately be transferred to the sinking fund of the proper subdivision and thereafter shall be subject to the uses of such sinking fund.

From this section it seems clear to me that there is no authority in law for transferring any part of the money in a fund created for a special purpose, to the general county fund, for the reason that the statute provides that it must be used for the specific purpose for which it was created and for no other, and if there should be a surplus, it must immediately be transferred to the sinking fund.

When we turn to the provisions of section 2296 G. C., which has to do with the transfer of money from one fund to another upon the order of the common pleas court, we find a special inhibition against the transfer of public funds which are the proceeds or balances of special levies, loans or bond issues. This section reads as follows:

"Sec. 2296. The county commissioners, township trustees, the board of education of a school district, or the council, or other board having the legislative power of a municipality, may transfer public funds, except the proceeds or balances of special levies, loans or bond issues, under their supervision, from one fund to another, or to a new fund created under their respective supervision, in the manner hereafter provided, which shall be in addition to all other procedure now provided by law."

Hence from all the above it is evident that there is no authority in law to transfer money from a fund created for a special purpose to the general county fund.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

OFFICER ENTITLED TO SALARY REGARDLESS OF WHETHER OR NOT HE PERFORMS THE DUTIES OF HIS OFFICE.

Salary is incident to the office, and not to the performance of the duties of the same. Hence, so long as an officer does not resign, or die, or is removed, he is entitled to the salary pertaining to that office.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 27, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of recent date which reads as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> STATEMENT OF FACTS.
> A man who holds a position requiring all of his time becomes a candidate for treasurer of a city. He receives the nomination and is properly elected and qualified. His compensation by ordinance is fixed at $2,000.00 per annum. Knowing that his time is occupied, to meet the conditions he appoints a deputy, whose compensation is fixed by council at $1.00 per month, he paying one-half of his salary or $1,000.00 to the deputy, of course, not through the municipal records. The deputy performs the duties of the office and the treasurer devotes little, if any, time to the duties of the office, and if any time is devoted it is outside of office hours.
> Question: Is such treasurer legally entitled to the compensation fixed by council for the city treasurer?"

The answer to your question is based upon the familiar rule of law that salary is incident to the office and not to the performance of the duties pertaining to the office. This principle is generally followed by the courts.

In Bryan vs. Cattell, 15 Iowa, 538, the principle is stated thus:

> "When the statute providing for the compensation of an officer makes no provision for a deduction for absence or neglect of duty, he is entitled to the salary for the time he legally remains in office, without reference to any neglect in the discharge of the duties thereof."

In Larsen vs. the City of St. Paul, 83 Minn., 473, we have the following:

> "The salary annexed to a public office is incident to the title to the office, and not to its acceptance and exercise, nor to the usurpation or colorable possession of it."

In Meagher vs. the County of Storey, 5 Nevada, 244, and in the opinion on page 250, the principle is stated as follows:

> "The right to the salary or compensation of an office depends upon the title to such office, and cannot be recovered by one who is simply an officer de facto."

In the case submitted by you the city treasurer was duly elected and qualified for the said position. He has not died, nor resigned, nor has he been removed from said office; hence he is still the legally qualified treasurer of the city in which he was elected, and is therefore entitled to the salary of city treasurer as fixed by the council of said city.

In this opinion I am passing merely upon the question as to whether the city treasurer is entitled to the salary under the present conditions. If he is guilty of nonfeasance, provision is made in the law whereby he can be removed and someone appointed in his place. I am not passing upon the question at all as to whether he is guilty of nonfeasance or not, neither am I passing upon the question as to whether he has authority to appoint a deputy and pay him a part of the salary received by him from the municipality, nor am I passing upon the question as to whether the one appointed by him is entitled to receive the salary provided for by council.

I am passing only upon one question, and that is the one which is set out in your communication.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN ADAMS, ALLEN, ASHLAND, ASHTABULA, BROWN, ERIE, GUERNSEY, HIGHLAND, LAWRENCE, LUCAS AND PERRY COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of July 25, enclosing for my approval, final resolutions for the following named improvements:

Cincinnati-West Union Road—I. C. H. No. 30, Sec. A, Adams county.
Lima-Sandusky Road—I. C. H. No. 22, Secs. k, l, m, Allen county.
Kalida-Lima Road—I. C. H. No. 134, Sec. o, Allen county.
Savannah-Vermillion Road—I. C. H. No. 149, Sec. G, Ashland county, types A and B.
Cleveland-Buffalo Road—I. C. H. No. 2, Secs. N (O) and P, Ashtabula county.
Ripley-Hillsboro Road—I. C. H. No. 177, Sec. b-1, Brown county.
Cincinnati-West Union Road—I. C. H. No. 30, Sec. N, Brown county.
Columbus-Sandusky Road—I. C. H. No. 4, Sec. K, Erie county.
Steubenville-Cambridge Road—I. C. H. No. 26, Sec. T, Guernsey county.
Steubenville-Cambridge Road——I. C. H. No. 26, Sec. S, Guernsey county.
Hillsboro-Chillicothe Road—I. C. H. No. 258, Sec. B, Highland county (in duplicate).
Ohio River Road—I. C. H. No. 7, Sec. K, Lawrence county, type B.
Toledo-Wauseon Road—I. C. H. No. 20, Secs. H-1, I, J and K-1, Lucas county.

Zanesville-New Lexington Road—I. C. H. No. 350, Sec. E-1, Perry county.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find them correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

However, I desire to call attention to two of these resolutions which are irregular in form to a slight extent, which I think should be corrected, although not of vital importance.

In the resolution relating to the Lima-Sandusky improvement, I. C. H. No. 22, Allen county, the state highway department has appropriated $11,100.00, while from the resolutions themselves it would appear that the state should appropriate but $11,000.00. As stated in other communications to your department, I cannot say whether it is an improvement that would warrant an appropriation from the maintenance and repair fund, or not.

In the resolution pertaining to the Hillsboro-Chillicothe road, I. C. H. No. 258, Highland county, the county commissioners have signed the same without indicating the name of the county of which they are commissioners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF BELLEFONTAINE CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT, LOGAN COUNTY—$25,000.00—$80,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Bellefontaine city school district, Logan county, Ohio—two issues: One in the sum of $25,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing site and erecting and equipping school building thereon; and one in the sum of $80,000.00, for the purpose of improving certain various school buildings.

I have recently advised the commission against the purchase of both of the above described issues of bonds on grounds which, in my opinion, have been obviated by further action taken by the board of education and additional facts appearing in an amended transcript of the proceedings.

In the other opinion I stated an objection common to the proceedings in respect of both issues. This objection had to do with the form of that clause of the respective resolutions providing for the issuance of bonds in which provision was made for the tax levies to meet principal and interest. The amended transcript shows that the board of education, at a meeting at which all members were present, has amended both of the resolutions so as exactly to comply with the requirement of article XII, section 11 of the constitution in this respect.

This defect was the only one existing with respect to the $25,000.00 issue, and without further comment I advise that the proceedings now had with respect to the issuance of these bonds are in all respects legal, and that said bonds, when properly executed, will constitute valid and binding obligations of the school district of the city of Bellefontaine.

I also found in the opinion to which I have referred another defect which existed respecting the $80,000.00 issue only. The point in question was, in effect, that these bonds were issued under the supposed authority of section 7630-1 of the General Code for the purpose of making certain repairs and improvements upon several school buildings which had been ordered to be made by certain state authorities. Of the aggregate sum of $80,000.00, $60,000.00 was issued on account of repairs and improvements to be made in and upon the East school building, in compliance with an order issued by the state inspector of plumbing. This was the recital of the resolution submitting the bond issue to a vote of the people, which set forth the said order in full. I then advised that action under section 7630-1 General Code could not be predicated upon an order of the state plumbing inspector, but only upon an order of the division of workshops, factories and public buildings of the department of inspection of the industrial commission; and that the bond issue being a unit and accepted by you subject to my opinion, as such, I could not advise that any part of these bonds could be safely purchased.

The amended transcript in setting forth the form of the bonds evidences an effort to separate this issue into two parts, and to have one series of bonds in the aggregate amount of $60,000.00 for the purpose of making the improvements on what is known as the "East School Building," and another series aggregating $20,000.00 for the purpose of making the other improvements which were properly predicated upon orders of the division of workshops and factories, etc. I intimated in the other opinion that if such a separation were made it might be possible to say that the $20,000.00 series would constitute a valid and binding legal obligation of the district, regardless of any infirmity which might attach to the remaining $60,000.00 of the entire issue. For reasons which I shall presently state, I do not find it necessary to determine whether such a separation as is attempted in this respect can be made.

Returning now to so much of the $80,000.00 issue as relates to the making of repairs and improvements in and upon the so-called East school building, I note that the amended transcript sets forth additional information from which the following facts will be gleaned:

On December 21, 1915, the division of workshops, factories and public buildings of the department of inspection of the Industrial Commission of Ohio had actually issued an order with reference to the East school building, requiring the replacement of the entire sanitary system therein, the installation of a new heating and ventilating system in accordance with the state building code; the laying of new floors in the first and second stories; the removal of loose plaster and the replastering of certain rooms; and as an alternative to strengthening the walls of the third story, the removal of the entire third story and the remodeling of the whole building into a two-story edifice in accordance with the requirements of the state building code for the type of construction to which it belongs.

Subsequently, on January 24, 1918, the state inspector of plumbing made an order covering substantially the same ground. In perhaps greater detail he required the replacement of the sanitary equipment of the building in accordance with the building code, the installation of a new system of heating and ventilating, removal of loose plaster and the conversion of the building into a two-story edifice. He went a little further and required the installation of a rest room, with first aid equipment, and the removal of the manuel training room to the basement. But these details, in my opinion, are immaterial. Suffice it to say that the orders of the two departments respecting this building were substantially identical, and that to comply with one would necessarily comply with the other, at the same outlay of money. I do not know how it happens that two state departments are thus overlapping each other in their respective fields, but call attention to the fact as one of possible interest to the industrial commission.

It appears that the board of education, when it took the initial step in the issuance of the $80,000.00 of bonds now under consideration, overlooked the existence of the order promulgated by the industrial commission, and recited in its resolution that it was about to comply with the order of the state plumbing inspector. However, as I have pointed out, the orders were substantially identical, and the board was in point of fact proceeding to comply with the order of the industrial commission, though it said that it was complying with the order of the plumbing inspector. Under all these circumstances I feel that there has been a substantial compliance with the requirements of section 7630-1 General Code, which is as follows:

> "If a school house is wholly or partly destroyed by fire or other casualty, or if the use of any school house for its intended purpose is prohibited by any order of the chief inspector of workshops and factories, and the board of education of the school district is without sufficient funds applicable to the purpose, with which to rebuild or repair such school house or to construct a new school house for the proper accommodation of the schools of the district, and it is not practicable to secure such funds under any of the six preceding sections because of the limits of taxation applicable to such school district, such board of education may, subject to the provisions of sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-six and seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven, and upon the approval of the electors in the manner provided by sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-five and seventy-six hundred and twenty-six issue bonds for the amount required for such purpose. For the payment of the principal and interest on such bonds and on bonds heretofore issued for the purposes herein mentioned and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, such board of education shall annually levy a tax as provided by law."

The mere misomer of the order involved in the original resolution is immaterial in this instance, even though the popular election which followed was legally referable to that resolution, because the board determined to do the very things in the case of the East school building which the industrial commission had commanded to be done. The case is unique because of the almost absolute identity of the substance of the orders issued by the two departments respectively. If there had been a substantial variance between them, then I would feel obliged to hold that the proposition submitted to the electors, being that of borrowing money for the purpose of complying with the orders of the state plumbing inspector, could not by subsequent action of the board be converted into a proposition to comply with the orders of the industrial commission; so that the approval of the electors could not be made the predicate of action referable to the orders of the industrial commission. But the two orders being substantially identical in purport, the proposition to comply with the one order is the legal equivalent of one to comply with the other; so that the people when they voted determined that the things ordered by both departments, being one and the same set of improvements, should be done and that moneys should be borrowed under section 7630-1 G. C. for this purpose, and that taxes should be levied outside of the limitations of law to pay the interest and retire the principal of the money so borrowed.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that despite the erroneous recital in the preamble of the resolution submitting the question of the issuance of the bonds to a vote of the electors of the district, the electors actually did approve in substance the proposition of issuing bonds in order to comply with the orders of the industrial commission. That being the case, the objection which I had previously lodged against this issue of bonds, so far as that portion of it which was to be used for the purpose of making improvements on the East school building is concerned, is effectually obviated.

I may add that though the orders of the industrial commission do not, in terms, prohibit the use of the buildings respecting which they are issued for their intended purpose, this is the legal effect of them by virtue of the provisions of sections 1013 et seq General Code, with which the commission is familiar.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that there has been a substantial compliance with section 7630-1 G. C. in the issuance of the entire $80,000.00 of bonds here under consideration. This department has previously held that formal defects in proceedings under this section may safely be ignored, and that bonds issued in substantial compliance with its terms are valid. (Opinions of Attorney-General for the year 1917, Volume II, page 1439.)

I advise therefore that the bonds of the $80,000.00 issue above described will, when properly executed, constitute valid and binding legal obligations of the Bellefontaine City School District.

The transcript contains forms for each of the issues, which are entirely acceptable.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DITCHES—CLEANING AND REPAIRING—APPORTIONMENT OF WORK—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO HOLD MEETING FOR ENTERTAINING COMPLAINTS, AND ADJOURNMENT OF MEETING WITHOUT TAKING ANY ACTION IN REFERENCE THERETO.

The proceedings provided in chapter 8 of the drainage laws, G. C. 6691 et seq. authorizing the cleaning and keeping in repair of ditches under the direction of the township ditch supervisor is applicable to tile ditch improvements.

Under the terms of those sections such township ditch supervisor can only apportion such work of cleaning and repair by assigning a certain lineal portion of the ditch to each benefited land owner.

If the trustees fail to hold a meeting for the entertaining of complaints, and appeals from such action of the ditch supervisor, or if upon holding such meeting they adjourn sine die without taking any action in reference thereto, the power and jurisdiction to enforce the apportionment so made is thereby lost, and it is necessary to serve notice fixing another day for such meeting, or to begin de novo.

In case of a ditch where comparatively costly local works are constructed as a part of the improvement, which are liable to become out of repair, and thereby render the apportionment of such ditch into working sections impracticable, a better proceeding is provided by the act of March 12, 1913, section 6726-1 to 4, providing for the appointment of a superintendent of such ditch, with power to keep the same in repair, and causing the cost to be assessed back upon the land owners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1918.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On July 10, 1918, you addressed the following request for an opinion to this department:

> "In the year 1905 W. filed with the commissioners of Fayette county a petition for the location and construction of a ditch. The commissioners granted the prayer of the petition, the ditch was constructed and the lot and land owners assessed therefor. This was a tile ditch and in the lower end thereof very large tile were used. In order to protect the lower end of the improvement and prevent the dirt washing off the tile a concrete head wall was constructed as a part of the improvement. This head wall has since been destroyed and the soil has washed away leaving some of the tile exposed at the lower end. Also at the lower end of the ditch trees and brush have been allowed to grow and the roots therefrom have about filled many of the tile. This condition exists for a distance of several rods. At the time the ditch was originally constructed R. owned the land where the head wall was placed and he also owned the land where the trees and brush now exist. R. recently sold and conveyed these lands to H. and P., who now own the same. At the time of the sale of these lands the ditch was in practically the same condition as above described. With the exception of the headwall and the part of the ditch on the lands of H. and P. the remainder of the ditch is in need of no particular attention at this time.
> The township ditch supervisor of the township where the ditch is located, presumably acting under sections 6691 et seq., of the General Code, served notices on the lot and land owners along the line of the ditch, a copy of which notice is herewith enclosed. This is the first attempt made to apportion this ditch since its construction. The township trustees met on the 29th day of June, at which meeting many of the parties interested were present. The trustees took no action whatever in the matter and adjourned without day with the intention of securing advice in the premises.
> In the first place I am of opinion that the attempted apportionment is too indefinite and uncertain to be of any effect. It will also be observed that the meeting of the trustees was not fixed in accordance with G. C. 6696. Also since the trustees adjourned without day the question arises as to their right to now modify or confirm the report of the ditch supervisor—at least without some notice to the parties affected.
> Some of the land owners on the upper end of the ditch contend that they should not be required to bear any of the burden of putting this ditch in working order on the lands of H. and P.; that H. and P. should be required to do this. H. and P. contend that all of the lot and land owners who receive any benefits from the ditch should be required to assist in this work.
> I would appreciate an opinion from you in this matter. Who are the proper officers or board to proceed with this work and how should the burden thereof be divided? If this may be legally accomplished under G. C. 6691 et seq., what is the status of the proceedings already started?"

Your doubts as to the legality of the proceeding and power of the trustees to further entertain the same are well founded, for the reasons you give.

The notification attached to the inquiry is in regular form upon a printed blank, but the description of the portion of the ditch assigned to the land owner to be cleaned out is as follows:

> "All of the portion of the ditch that is on your land and to help repair the concrete wall at the outlet of said ditch, and any other repairs necessary to be made on the lands of R. M. Hughey and R. C. Peddicord, petitioned for by J. C. Wilson."

This is perfectly definite as to the portion of the ditch to be kept clean, but contains an additional element not contemplated by the statute.

Section 6691 referred to by you, begins as follows:

> "For the cleaning and keeping in repair of township, county and joint county ditches, the township ditch supervisor or supervisors of the township or townships through which such ditch runs, shall divide them into working sections and apportion such sections to the land owners, corporate roads, railroads, township and county according to the benefits received * * *."

The power here given clearly does not extend to the action taken by the ditch supervisor, as he is confined to dividing the ditch into working sections and apportioning such definite sections to the different land owners. But even if he had power to add to each section a provision to assist in keeping the head wall in repair, he has left the amount or share thereof to be done by a given proprietor entirely indefinite, and any one of them would comply with his notice by the slightest possible assistance, so that the amount done by all would not constitute any substantial repair.

It is still further rendered indefinite by reference to other repairs necessary without suggesting what they might be. The requirement that it shall be divided into sections, each of which shall constitute a lineal proportion of the ditch is further fortified by section 6695, which is as follows:

> "Each lot and land owner, corporate road, railroad, township and county, so notified, shall clean the portion or section of the ditch or watercourse, as fixed by such apportionment, or if changed by the township trustees, as fixed by them, to its full depth and capacity as originally constructed, and when necessary reclean such portion without further notice. The parties assessed, as provided in the next preceding section, shall mark the terminus of their respective working sections by planting a substantial post or marker, on which shall be cut or painted the number of the section."

The requirement in 6696 that the meeting of the trustees be held at nine o'clock on the second Saturday after the completion of the apportionment, might probably be held directory, so that if a slightly later time be mentioned in the notice, it might not thereby be rendered entirely void. It is unnecessary to decide this, however, as upon the meeting when it did take place, they adjourned without further day. And inasmuch as no further notice is contemplated or provided, the trustees thereby lost whatever jurisdiction they had, so that your conclusion is correct that they cannot now further proceed in the matter.

If the action of the ditch supervisor in making the apportionment were capable of enforcement, a new notice might be served, and the case proceed. However, as the notice itself is defective, or rather illegal, as above pointed out, it would be necessary to begin de novo by the making of a new apportionment by the ditch supervisor. There is no doubt of the application of the proceeding provided for to this case, as it is expressly enacted that it shall apply to tile ditches, as section 6709 provides:

> "When a county, joint county or township ditch, or part thereof, has been tiled, it shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter. * * *."

In the making of such apportionment there is no power given to divide up the construction of one costly element of the ditch to be paid for jointly by all or any number of the benefited land owners. Authority is only given to divide the improvement into working sections, and there is no provision in the statute making any exception for such more costly portions of the improvement as this head wall. It would be impracticable to divide it lineally by inches so that one or two or more persons would construct the head wall leaving the residue of the ditch to others.

In the nature of the case it is also impracticable in the present situation to make an apportionment of this ditch that may not operate unjustly in the future, as there is but a small portion of the lower end of the ditch which now requires any attention, and by the terms of this chapter the apportionment for cleaning out creates a permanent condition or burden upon the different land owners. The whole ditch must be divided. If nine-tenths of it requires no work now, somebody or several persons would be let out of doing anything at present upon it, and in a future proceeding those escaping this time might have all to do.

This, however, is not a legal objection to the proceeding, which may be resorted to in exact compliance with the statutes in question.

There is another proceeding, however, provided by statute to which attention is called, which might be found more satisfactory in the present case.

It is provided for by the act of March 12, 1913, and found in the supplement to the code as sections 6726-1 to 4, making provision, in brief, for the appointment of a superintendent of such county ditch, who is given authority to make the necessary repairs and pay for the same, and the process is instituted for taxing the cost back annually upon the persons originally assessed in the proportion of their original assessment.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WHITEHOUSE VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, LUCAS COUNTY—$26,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 30, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re bonds of Whitehouse village school district, Lucas county, in the sum of $26,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting and equipping a school house in said school district and for the purpose of remodeling and equipping the present high school building therein.

I have made a careful examination of the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of the Whitehouse village school district of Lucas county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds. Said issue is under the authority of sections 7625 et seq. of the General Code, pursuant to the affirmative vote of the electors of said school district. My examination of said proceedings discloses that the same have been in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio, and I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared in accordance with the resolution of the board of education, providing for the same, will, when they are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue has been submitted as a part of said transcript, and I am therefore holding said transcript until a proper bond form is submitted and approved by me.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION FUNDS—CUSTODIAN WHEN NO BIDS RECEIVED —INTEREST WHEN DEPOSITED WITH CITY OR COUNTY TREASURER —LIABILITY OF BANKS FOR INTEREST WHEN THEY REFUSE TO BID BUT ACCEPT DEPOSIT.

1. Where a board of education has advertised and used every effort to obtain bids for deposits, and such board has been unable to secure bids, the city treasurer of the city district, and in a rural and village district the county treasurer, shall be the custodian of the board of education funds.

2. If the funds of a city district were left in the custody of a city treasurer and the funds of a rural district were left in the custody of the county treasurer, the boards of education of such districts are legally entitled to receive the depository interest or any profits arising from the deposit of such funds by such officials.

3. Banks which accept deposits, even though they refuse to bid, are liable for the interest earned and for the profits arising from the deposit of such funds.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—My opinion is requested by you upon the following statement of facts:

"We are respectfully referring you to sections 4782, 7604 et seq. and 4763 of the General Code, also to your opinion No. 1072, rendered under date of March 15, 1918, as well as court decision 96 O. S., 453.

Question 1. Where a board of education has advertised and used every effort to obtain bids for deposits and such board has been unable to secure any bids, who shall have the custody of the board of education funds thereafter?

Question 2. If the funds of a city district were left in the custody of the city treasurer and the funds of a rural district were left in the custody of the county treasurer, would not such boards of education be legally entitled to receive the depository interest earned from such custodian?

Question 3. Would not banks accepting such deposits, even though they refused to bid, be liable for the interest earned under court decision cited?''

Section 4782 G. C., referred to by you, reads:

''When a depository has been provided for the school moneys of a district, as authorized by law, the board of education of the district, by resolution, adopted by a vote of a majority of its members, shall dispense with a treasurer of the school moneys belonging to such school district. In such case, the clerk of the board of education of a district shall perform all the services, discharge all the duties and be subject to all the obligations required by law of the treasurer of such school districts.''

Sections 7604 et seq. provide how depositories for school funds shall be established. Section 4763 G. C. reads:

''In each city school district, the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds. In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such district.''

In Opinion No. 1072 I held that a board which established a depository, but which received no bids for the public funds under its charge, could not be held for the two per cent. penalty as is provided by section 7609 G. C.

In the case of Franklin National Bank vs. the City of Newark, 96 O. S., 453, it is held that a bank which receives money from a city treasurer, knowing it to be public funds, is liable to the city for any profits which arise from the use of said funds.

Let us apply the above, then, to your questions. In the first question you ask: Where a board of education has advertised and used every effort to obtain bids for deposits, and such board has been unable to secure any bids, who shall have the custody of the board of education funds thereafter? The answer to said question is found in section 4763 G. C., above quoted. If the board be a city board of education, then as provided in said section the treasurer of the city funds shall be the treasurer of the school funds, and if the board be a village or rural board, then the county treasurer shall have the custody of such funds. So that, in either case the question is completely answered by the language of said section.

In your second question you say: If funds of a city district were left in the custody of the city treasurer, and the funds of a rural district were left in the custody of the county treasurer, would not such boards of education be legally entitled to receive the depository interest earned from such custodian? This question will be made a little clearer if the latter part of same is changed to read:

Would not such boards of education be legally entitled to receive any profits earned by the use of said funds or interest paid to such custodian thereon?

The city treasurer, in the one instance, and the county treasurer in the other, are made the mere custodians of said funds and when the same are deposited in a bank or banks, which bank or banks should be the depository established for the city or the county funds, whatever earnings arise therefrom, or whatever interest is paid thereon, is as much a part of the fund itself as though it were deposited as such, unless there be a statute to the contrary.

You refer to the case of Franklin Bank vs. Newark, 96 O. S., 453. In that case the city sold a large number of waterworks bonds and when the money was received by the city treasurer he deposited the same in the several banks of his city. The deposit was not authorized by council and no contract was made with the bank that it should pay any interest thereon. The court held, however, that "any bank receiving funds of a municipality, * * * knowing the same to be the funds of the municipality, becomes a trustee and must account to the municipality for the funds so deposited and all profits arising from such deposit." So that, if the above were applied to your case, and the banks receive the public school money, knowing the same to be such public school money, other than under a proper depository contract, they thereby become trustees and must account to the school districts for such funds so deposited and for all profits arising from such deposit.

As to the deposit of school funds by a city treasurer, we are guided in this state by a decision on all fours with the case referred to by you. In Eshelby vs. Board of Education, 66 O. S., 71, the plaintiff in error was treasurer of the city of Cincinnati and, as such was ex officio treasurer of the school district of Cincinnati. He received the sum of $2,000.00 and more from the Atlas National Bank and suit was brought by the board of education to recover said interest from said treasurer. In the syllabus of said case the court holds:

> "The treasurer of a school district who, * * * deposits its funds in a bank which allows interest on the average balance of the deposit, is required to account to the school district for such interest."

Shauck, J., delivering the opinion of the court, says on page 73:

> "Counsel for the plaintiff in error has made it quite clear that the liability of the treasurer is absolute, and that it differs in that respect from that of the ordinary trustee or bailee who may be exempt from liability on account of funds lost without his negligence or connivance. But it does not necessarily follow that funds coming into the hands of the treasurer are his, nor that upon the receipt of money in his official capacity the relation of debtor and creditor is established between him and the district. To the contrary it is quite clear that instead of being the creditor of the district he is its treasurer—the custodian of the funds—and that he acquires custody of the funds without acquiring title to them * * * *. Since the funds belong to the school district, the ultimate question in the case is answered in favor of the defendant in error by the elementary proposition that in the absence of a statute or stipulation to the contrary the increment follows the principal."

As in that case, so in yours. If the city treasurer is made the custodian of the school funds, any interest which he receives therefor or any profits arising from the deposit of such funds are the property of the school district and not the city treasurer. What applies to the city treasurer with reference to city funds also applies to the county treasurer in relation to the funds which come into his hands from rural or village boards of education. He is merely the custodian thereof and receives no title whatever to said funds. Whatever interest or profits arise from such deposits are the property of the school district or districts to whom such funds belong. It is urged, however, that inasmuch as no compensation is provided for, the county treasurer, while acting as custodian of the said funds, and in relation thereto, it was intended that the interest thereon should inure to his benefit. But the court decisions of our state are uniformly opposed to said proposition and the Eshelby case is cited with approval and commented upon in Thornily vs. State, 81 O. S., 108, in which case, on page 117, Shauck, J., delivering the opinion of the court, says:

> "From all the cases relating to the subject it appears that all duties imposed upon a public officer without provision for compensation are presumed to be performed in consideration of the general emoluments of his office."

I must advise you then, in answer to your second question, that whatever interest is received by the city treasurer or county treasurer, or whatever profits arise from the deposit of said funds, all inure to the benefit of the district to which such funds belong.

In your third question you ask would not banks accepting such deposits, even though they refuse to bid, be liable for the interest earned upon such funds. There is no question but that under the decisions above referred to the banks which receive such funds, knowing the same to be public moneys, are liable for any interest or profits arising from the use of such funds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL MAY APPROVE BILLS FOR DETECTIVES EMPLOYED BY MAYOR AND SAFETY DIRECTOR WITHOUT AUTHORITY FROM ORDINANCE OR RESOLUTION.

Where the mayor and director of public safety of a municipal corporation, with the knowledge and assent of the individual members of council, but without specific authority emanating from any ordinance or resolution previously passed by council, employ detectives for the purpose of investigating the conduct of members of the police department of the city, and subsequently the council by resolution approves bills presented by such detectives for services and expenses and orders their payment out of a contingent account appropriated from the general fund, and such bills are paid, the payments are legal, being justified either on the ground of ratification by council of an unauthorized act which it could have authorized by appropriate prior action, or on the ground that council as the repository of the legislative power of the city has the power to recognize and discharge a moral obligation against the city.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You request my opinion on the following statement of facts:

"The director of safety of a municipality of this state being of the impression that members of the police department were drinking, gambling and neglecting their official duties at such times as they were supposed to be applying themselves to their official duties, engaged, with members of council, private detectives without the knowledge of any other person to investigate the conduct of such officers mentioned, paying them such compensation as the director deemed advisable, together with their expenses while investigating.

Is such investigation and expenditure legal?"

By a subsequent letter your examiner advises that the employment of the detectives in question was agreed upon informally among the mayor, the director of public safety and all the members of council, and that the payment for their services was made from the contingent appropriation in the general fund, the council in each instance approving the bills as rendered and by resolution authorizing them paid from that appropriation. The council did not make any specific appropriation for the payment of these detectives, nor did it fix their compensation in advance.

Section 4367 of the General Code provides that in each city there shall be a department of public safety, which shall be administered by a director of public safety, and that such director of public safety shall be appointed by the mayor of such city.

Section 4246 G. C. provides that the executive power and authority of cities shall be vested in certain officers, which include the director of public safety.

Section 4368 G. C. provides that under the direction of the mayor the director of public safety shall be the executive head of the police department and that he shall have all powers and duties connected with and incident to the appointment, regulation and government of the police department, except as otherwise provided by law.

Section 4369 G. C. provides that the director of public safety shall make all contracts in the name of the city with reference to the management of the police department, subject to the restrictions imposed by law.

Section 4247 G. C. provides that subject to the limitations prescribed, the director of public safety shall have the exclusive right to appoint all officers in the police department and that he shall have the sole power to remove or suspend any officer.

Sections 4373 to 4375, inclusive, and section 4382 of the General Code make detailed provision for the appointment and employment of regular and special officers of the police department, which is under the control of the director of public safety. These sections have in common the requirement that, save in case of riot or other like emergency, positions in the police department shall be created by or under authority of ordinance of council.

Section 4214 of the General Code provides that where not otherwise provided in the municipal code, council "by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation * *."

I have no difficulty upon consideration of all these sections in advising that the original employment of the detectives was unauthorized. They were either members of the department of public safety or they were not. If they were members of the department their compensation should have been fixed in advance; if not, their employment should have been authorized by council, at least by making an appropriation for such purposes in advance. Neither of these things was done. The fact that the members of council were cognizant of the enterprise does not change the technical, legal aspect of the transaction; for council must act as a legislative body, and what its members may agree to as individuals is not the action of that body. Therefore, I have no hesitancy in reaching the conclusion that at the outset neither the mayor nor the director of public safety, or both acting together, had any authority to employ the detectives in question.

But the information furnished by the examiner shows that the bills were not paid without some legislative action on the part of council. They were presented to the council, which approved them and ordered them paid from the previously made appropriation for contingencies in the general fund. It does not clearly appear from the examiner's letter whether this "contingent fund" is the one mentioned in section 3800 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "In making the semi-annual appropriations and apportionments herein required, council may deduct and set apart from any moneys, not otherwise appropriated, such sum as it deems proper as a contingent fund to provide for any deficiency in any of the detailed appropriations, which may lawfully and by any unforeseen emergency happen. Such contingent fund or any part thereof may be expended for any such emergency only by ordinance passed by two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the mayor. Any balance remaining in such contingent fund at the end of the fiscal year shall thereupon become a part of the general fund, to be again appropriated as other moneys belonging to the corporation. This section shall not interfere with the provisions of law authorizing the transfer of funds by the court of common pleas."

If so, I would have grave doubt as to whether this contingent fund could be lawfully expended for such a purpose, as it is intended merely to supply deficiencies in the detailed appropriations happening by an unforeseen emergency. The examiner's letter, however, gives rise to the inference that this was not the fund used, but that there was a contingent appropriation in the general fund; that is, a detailed appropriation intended to create an account upon which council might draw for contingencies not contemplated in any of the other detailed appropriations within that fund. I assume that such an appropriation would be subject to expenditure under the direction of council, as not one executive officer of the city could be said to be the head of the whole city government. While the information is a trifle vague on this point, therefore, I assume that payment was made from an account properly appropriated to pay general contingencies constituting proper municipal obligations, but not referable to any of the regular activities of the several departments for which other appropriations had been made.

This assumption leaves the question of law in the case one which may be stated as follows:

> Did the action of council in approving the bills and ordering them paid constitute a legal expenditure of the municipal funds?

This question depends on the principle of ratification. If an executive municipal officer attempts to create an obligation which he is not authorized to create because of the lack of previous authorization emanating from council, may the council by subsequently approving the transaction and ordering the claims arising from such attempted creation of an obligation to be paid effectually ratify such an act, and make the transaction so far legal as to justify the expenditure of the funds by the direction of council for such a purpose?

Of course, it is to be admitted that the council cannot represent the municipality in ratifying an act which it could not have authorized in the first instance. That is to say, if the creation of the obligation is ultra vires the council in its capacity to authorize the incurring of it, then whatever council does by way of subsequent approval of the transacton cannot be an effectual ratification of it as against the municipality. But the rule seems to be that where council could have authorized the creation of the obligation in the first instance but did not do so, its subsequent approval of the claim has full effect as a ratification.

Thus, Dillon on Municipal Corporations, after stating the rule as it obtains in Ohio, to the effect that a contract made without the support of a previous appropriation or a certificate to the effect that there is money in the treasury and available for the payment of the claim, etc., is void and imposes no obligation whatsoever upon the municipality (See sections 790 et seq., 5th Ed.), goes on to lay down the following principle in section 797 of his work:

> "A municipal corporation may ratify the unauthorized acts and contracts of its agents or officers, which are within the scope of the corporate powers, but not otherwise * * * *. But a subsequent ratification cannot make valid an unlawful act without the scope of corporate authority. An absolute excess of authority by the officers of a corporation, in violation of law, cannot be upheld; and where the officers of such a body fail substantially to pursue the material requirements of a statutory enactment under which they are acting, the corporation is not bound. In such cases the statute must be strictly followed, and a person who deals with a municipal body is obliged to see that its charter has been fully complied with; when it is not done, no subsequent act of the corporation can make an ultra vires contract effective."

In view of cases like Lancaster vs. Miller, 58 O. S. 558, Comstock vs. Nelsonville, 61 O. S. 288, and Wellston vs. Morgan, 65 O. S. 219, I feel some hesitancy in applying this doctrine in its entirety to Ohio. I am not sure, for example, that the passage of an ordinance by council expressly ratifying an unauthorized obligation of the kind under consideration would make the obligation enforcible by action against the municipality. But in this case the council has not only attempted to ratify what was done, but has ordered payment to be made, and it has been made, leaving the only question in the case that as to the legality of the payment.

Assuming, for the moment, that the obligation would have been lawfully created if council had authorized it in advance, I am of the opinion that the subsequent action taken is such as to deprive the payment which was made of the taint of illegality. It is not necessary to go so far as to assert that this is an instance of the recognition of a moral obligation, if the legality of the payment can be predicated upon the principle of ratification. But if the principle of ratification has no application, then it seems to me that that of moral obligation can be recognized and applied with peculiar appropriateness in this case. Council would have legislated, says the examiner in his letter, but for the futility of employing a detective in the glare of publicity. He makes it clear that it was understood on all hands that the detectives were to be employed, and that in spirit at least there was no intention to evade any other law than the mere technicality that council should pass a formal ordinance instead of agreeing to the program as a group of individuals. Certainly there is no suggestion of fraud in what was done.

Under these circumstances it seems to me that—still assuming for the purpose of the argument that the employment of the detectives in question was one which council might have authorized in the first instance—the subsequent allowance of the claim by council and its payment from an appropriation broad enough in its terms to be available for such purposes is not an illegal transaction.

I come, therefore, to the ultimate question in the case, which is as to whether council might have authorized, by appropriate action in advance, the mayor and the director of public safety to employ a detective or detectives for the purpose of acquiring information respecting the conduct of the members of the police department. Of course, there is something repulsive in the idea of espionage; but such notions do not alter the legal aspect of affairs. Very wide legislative power is given to council within the scope of the field of municipal activities. It may require reports from the director of public safety under favor of section 4254 of the General Code. I am clearly of the opinion that the detectives employed in this instance were not a part of the regular police establishment of the city. It is true that section 4374 above abstracted refers to detectives, but such detectives are to be used in investigations in connection with the enforcement of the laws and ordinances of the city by the police department against general malefactors. On the other hand, it is the duty of the director of public safety to keep himself informed as to the fidelity with which those under his command are discharging the duties of their respective positions. The whole spirit of modern public service requires that heads of departments shall be in touch with the efficiency records of their subordinates. And even if council were not authorized to require reports from the director of public safety the provisions of the civil service law, which I do not take time to quote, would be sufficient to authorize the director of public safety to find out as much as he could about the official conduct of the members of the police department. In no other way could he adequately perform the high duty vested in him to manage the police department and provide for its regulation and government.

Now the director of public safety might conceivably adopt the tactics of the caliph Haroun-al-Raschid, and wander about the city at night in disguise for the purpose of seeing how things are going; presumably, however, it is not every director of public safety who has the talents for dissimulation that the celebrated oriental potentate possessed. If, therefore, the director, who is officially responsible for all the misdoings of his subordinates, and the mayor, who is likewise officially responsible for the shortcomings of the director and those under him, come to the conclusion that they require anonymous assistants for the purpose of finding out facts which they ought to know in order to enable them to discharge their several responsibilities, I can imagine no legal reason why the council may not, in the exercise of its legislative power, authorize the employment of such assistants as a temporary expedient, and do so without creating a permanent position in the police department, as such. The function discharged by the detectives would be that of temporary assistant to the director of public safety. It is true that the council should authorize the employment of such assistant as a member of the general department of safety, though not as a member of the police department, by ordinance previously passed—or, what is perhaps more accurate, having regard to the temporary character of the employment—should by ordinance authorize the temporary employment of such an assistant and fix his compensation. Because council did not do this in the case at hand the obligation as attempted to be created by the mayor and the director of public safety was without legal force. But because council could have authorized the creation of such an obligation by appropriate legislation, and under all the peculiar facts of this case, I am of the opinion that when council did subsequently approve the bills as presented, and order them paid out of the appropriation mentioned by the examiner, such payment was legal.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—NO AUTHORITY FOR MUNICIPAL CORPORATION TO ISSUE BONDS TO CONSTRUCT BRIDGE IN CO-OPERATION WITH COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE CITY OF SIDNEY—$10,000.

There is no authority for the issuance of bonds by a municipal corporation to construct bridges in co-operation with the county commissioners of the county. Legislation which purports to authorize the issuance of such bonds is void and cannot be interpreted as valid by ignoring the provision thereof which relates to co-operation with the commissioners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 1, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re bonds of the city of Sidney, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000, for the purpose of "paying the city's portion of constructing in co-operation with the commissioners of Shelby county, Ohio, permanent structures or bridges over the Miami and Erie Canal" at points where certain streets of the city cross said canal.

I am unable to advise that the proceedings had by the council of the city of Sidney in the issuance of the above described bonds are legal.

The transcript shows that the council first appointed a committee to confer with the county commissioners with a view to working out a plan of co-operation for the construction of bridges at the points named, none of which it appears is on a state or county road, but all of which are located on city streets; that this committee reported that the terms of said co-operation had been agreed upon; that a resolution declaring it necessary to issue bonds for the purpose of initiating the proposition to be voted upon by the people of the city was passed, in which it was recited that the bonds were to be issued for the purpose I have quoted in the caption of this opinion; that the notice of election recited the purpose thereof in the same words; that after the approval of the proposition by a two-thirds vote of the electors an ordinance to issue bonds was passed, in which the purpose of the issue was recited in the same terms.

There is no authority for the issuance of bonds by a city for the purpose of building bridges in co-operation with the county commissioners of the county. There is no authority indeed for the commissioners and the city to unite or to co-operate in the construction of bridges, regardless of how the funds may be raised to pay the respective shares of the cost of such an enterprise.

It seems that this point has not been entirely overlooked by the officers of the city of Sidney, as I am advised by the city solicitor that the prosecuting attorney had advised the county commissioners that this could not be done, and that the commissioners had informally communicated this advice to the city authorities. Unfortunately, however, the legislation went on in the form which I have indicated.

It is suggested that the phrase "in co-operation with the commissioners of Shelby county," or its equivalent, wherever repeated in the series of measures constituting the legislation under which these bonds are sought to be issued may be disregarded as surplusage under all the circumstances. I cannot accept this view. The purpose for which bonds are to be issued is of the very essence of the legislation for their issuance. It is not merely descriptive matter, nor does it amount to a mere recital which might be rejected as surplusage if not in accordance with the actual facts. The general assembly in limiting the power of municipal corporations to incur indebtedness has seen fit to enumerate the objects for which bonds may be issued. (See section 3939 G. C., under the assumed authortiy of which these proceedings have been had,) Legislation purporting to authorize the issuance of bonds for a purpose other than those enumerated in the statute is simply invalid, and its invalidity cannot be avoided by showing that in point of fact the proceeds of the bonds are intended to be used for a purpose within the catalogue of objects mentioned in the statutes.

To be sure, it might be argued that council cannot be presumed to have deliberately undertaken to pass a void ordinance, and that the people of the city cannot be presumed to have deliberately approved a void proposition, so that by construction the ordinance should be given such meaning as to make it valid. This principle would have to be stretched beyond its natural scope, however, in order to save the ordinance under consideration, because it would require the rejection of essential language in order to apply it.

Under all the circumstances, therefore, I feel compelled to advise that the bonds in question if issued would not be valid obligations of the city of Sidney.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUES OF DELAWARE COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 5, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re Delaware county road bonds.

Under date of May 22, 1918, you adopted a resolution providing for the purchase of seven issues of Delaware county road bonds covering the cost and expense of the same number of road improvements in said county. After some delay completed transcripts of the proceedings relating to these bond issues were furnished to this department and opinions were prepared approving each of said said issues so far as their conformity to laws of this state were concerned. However, the aggregate of these issues exceeded $100,000, and inasmuch as these bonds were authorized since the act of congress providing for the functions of the capital issues committee was enacted, it was found necessary to have the approval of that committee as to the amount of said bond issues in excess of $100,000. I was informed yesterday by Mr. Young, the county auditor, that the necessity of submitting this matter to the capital issues committee would be obviated, inasmuch as there was an accumulation in the county road fund sufficient to permit the county commissioners to withdraw one of these bond issues, and I was informed that the county commissioners would withdraw the bond issue with respect to the Wilson road improvement in the sum of $7,200.00. In order to clear your records, as well as those of this department, with respect to this bond issue, I suppose a resolution should be adopted rescinding the purchase of this bond issue.

I am sending you opinions approving the other six bond issues covered by your resolution.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION HAS NO AUTHORITY TO ISSUE BONDS TO PURCHASE WAGON FOR TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF EDEN TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, WYANDOT COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 7, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

> In re bonds of Eden township rural school district, Wyandot county, Ohio, in the sum of $20,000, for the purpose of equipping and furnishing a newly constructed school house therein and for the purpose of procuring wagons for the conveyance of pupils.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Eden township rural school district, relating to the above bond issue and regret to say I am unable to approve the same.

This proposed issue of bonds is one on the affirmative vote of the electors of the school district and under the assumed authority of section 7625 of the General Code. The purpose of said issue, as disclosed in the resolution of the board of education providing for the submission of the question to the electors, is as follows:

> "Be it resolved for the proper accommodation of the schools of said district, it is necessary to furnish said school house by completely equipping the same for school purposes, which equipment shall consist of a sanitary toilet system and disposal plant, according to the plans and specifications by the architects, Howard & Merriam, of Columbus, and such school furniture as desks, cupboards, chairs, tables, blackboards, wagons for the conveyance of pupils and a lighting system and a vacuum cleaning system so that said furnishings shall completely equip said school house; that the probable amount of money necessary to accomplish said purposes be, and the same is hereby determined by this board to be the sum of $20,000.''

The notices that were posted of said election stated the purposes of said bond issue in terms quite identical to those contained in the resolution above quoted. In other words, the purposes of this proposed bond issue are to equip and furnish a school house in said school district and to procure wagons for the conveyance of pupils.

The bond issue proposition was submitted to the electors as a single proposition for the issue of bonds in a specified amount covering said stated purposes, and inasmuch as there is nothing in the provisions of section 7625 of the General Code, authorizing the board of education to issue bonds for the purpose of obtaining money to procure wagons for the transportation of pupils, and as no means are available for ascertaining what portion of said proposed bond issue was voted and is to be issued for such unauthorized purpose, it necessarily follows that the whole bond issue proposition is illegal by reason of the inclusion of said unauthorized purpose in the purposes for which the bonds were voted and provided for by the subsequent resolution of the board of education.

You will undoubtedly recall that the question above discussed was involved in consideration of the validity of the bonds of Belle Center village school district, Logan county, Ohio, which were disapproved by this department for the reasons above stated in Opinion 464, under date of July 23, 1917. In the opinion above referred to I followed the decision in the case of Shell vs. Bevier, et al., in the common pleas court of Crawford county, which was decided very shortly before the opinion with respect to the Belle Center village school district bonds was written. You will also recall that the same question was involved in a consideration of the validity of the bonds of Phillipsburg village school district, Montgomery county, Ohio, which were disapproved by this department in Opinion No. 1285, under date of June 17, 1918.

I note some further defects in the transcript of the proceedings relating to the bond issue. These defects are of such a nature that they can probably be cured by further information, but inasmuch as this proposed issue must be held to be invalid for the reasons above stated, it will serve no useful purpose so far as you are concerned, to note the other defects in the transcript.

For the reasons above stated, I am compelled to advise you not to accept said bonds. The transcript submitted to me is enclosed with this opinion.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

In re bonds of the city of Middletown, Ohio, in the sum of $20,000.00, for the purpose of improving, repairing and securing a more complete enjoyment of the waterworks utility of said city.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said city, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF HURON COUNTY—$98,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1918

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Huron county, Ohio, in the sum of $98,000.00, in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments to pay the respective shares of Huron county, of Lyme and Ridgefield townships and of the owners of benefited property assessed, of the cost and expense of improving designated section of I. C. H. No. 289 in said county and townships.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Huron county, Ohio, and of other officers, both federal and state, relating to the above issue of bonds, and finding said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind, and finding further that the purpose of said issue has been approved by the capital issues committee of the federal reserve board, said issue is hereby approved by this department.

In the consideration of the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds, I find only one matter upon which any question of any kind can be made. The question referred to arises out of the action of the board of county commissioners, by resolution under date of March 25, 1918, providing for the portion of the cost and expense of this improvement to be paid by the owners of benefited property. This resolution, which was adopted under the assumed authority of section 1214 G. C., as amended in the White-Mulcahy act (107 O. L. 129), provides that ten per cent. of the entire cost of the construction and improvement of that portion of the section to be improved, located in Lyme township, shall be assessed against the real estate within one mile of either side of said improvement, and that twenty-five per cent. of the entire cost of that portion of the improvement located in Ridgefield township shall be assessed against the real estate within one mile of either side of said improvement.

Under the provisions of section 1214 G. C., as amended in the act above referred to, the county commissioners, by unanimous action of all members of the board, have authority to provide for the assessment of a designated portion of the cost and expense of the improvement against property located within one mile of either side of the improvement, as was done in this case, and by like unanimous action the county commissioners have authority to increase the portion of the cost and expense to be borne by benefited property over and above the portion which in the absence of such action is imposed by law.

Inasmuch, however, as this improvement, though located in part in each of the townships above mentioned, is but a single improvement, I doubt whether the county commissioners had any authority to provide for a greater assessment of the cost and expense of such improvement on the benefited property located in one of said townships, than that assessed upon the benefited property located in the other township. I do not find it necessary, however, to express any opinion on this question, for the reason that the same is wholly immaterial to the question of the validity of this issue of bonds by Huron county for the purpose above stated.

Aside from the provisions of sections 5630-1 G. C., which make bonds of this kind full, general obligations of the county, it will be noted that these bonds are for the purpose of paying the aggregate shares of said county and townships and of the owners of benefited property, of the cost and expense of this improvement.

The shares of the cost and expense of this improvement to be paid by Lyme and Ridgefield townships, respectively, are fixed by agreements between the trustees of said townships and the board of county commissioners, and therefore the share of the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the owners of benefited property is wholly a question between such owners and the county.

As I see it, the resolution of the board of county commissioners, above noted, apportioning the part of the cost and expense of this improvement to be borne by the benefited property in each of these townships, is either valid or invalid. If the same is invalid, the law, to the extent that such resolution may be invalid, fixes the amount that is to be borne by the benefited property, and to that extent increases the amount to be borne by the county itself. But in any event, it seems clear to me that no question with respect to the validity of these bonds is presented by any question that may arise between the county and the owners of benefited property as to the validity of the resolution of the county commissioners, above noted, either in whole or in part.

This being my view on the only question of any kind presented on a consideration of the proceedings set out in the transcript, I am of the opinion that said issue is in all respects valid and that bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly prepared, executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE OF LOT 85 IN WOOD BROWN PLACE —MARGARET A. GALBRAITH.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an abstract of title for the following described real estate, situated in Franklin county, Ohio, and being lot No. 85 of the Wood Brown place as the same is numbered and delineated on the recorded plat thereof, found in Plat Book 5, pages 196 and 197, in the recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title to said real estate as disclosed thereby. There are no incumbrances against said real estate excepting the taxes for the year 1918 which are a lien and as yet undetermined, and excepting assessment for the Ridgeway improvement on the five-year five per cent. plan, of which three installments remain unpaid amounting in all to thirty cents; the third installment of ten cents will be due in June, 1919.

I am of the opinion that said abstract discloses a good and sufficient title in fee simple in Margaret A. Galbraith to said lot No. 85 above mentioned.

I am returning the abstract herewith.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE—MARGARET A. GALBRAITH.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 8, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an abstract of title dated July 25, 1918, for certain real estate located in Clinton township, Franklin county, Ohio, of which the following described real estate is a part, to wit:

> "Being a part of Quarter township number three (3), township number one (1), range eighteen (18), United States Military Lands. Beginning at the point of intersection of the center line of Lane avenue and the center line of Fleniken pike, thence with the center line of Lane avenue westerly five hundred fifty-one (551) feet to a stake at the northeast corner of lands of William Salzgaber; thence southerly along the east line of said lands of William Salzgaber and parallel with the center line of Fleniken pike three hundred sixty-nine and seven-tenths (369.7) feet to the north line of lands now owned by said state of Ohio; thence easterly along the north line of said lands last mentioned and parallel with the center line of Lane avenue five hundred fifty-one (551) feet to the center line of Fleniken pike; thence northerly with the center line of Fleniken pike three hundred sixty-nine and seven-tenths (369.7) feet to the point of beginning, containing four and sixty-five hundredths (4.65) acres, more or less."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no material defects in the title to said real estate as disclosed thereby. No encumbrances are shown against said real estate, excepting the taxes for the year 1918, which are a lien, but are as yet undetermined as to amount, and excepting assessments for the improvement of Ridgeview road, which were for five annual payments, of which two have been paid, leaving the remaining installments, amounting to $8.34 with 5% interest, said next installment with interest being due in June, 1919.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on July 25, 1918, at eight o'clock a. m., a good and sufficient title in Margaret A. Galbraith to said above mentioned real estate, which is particularly described above.

I am returning herewith the abstract for said property.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GENTLEMEN:—I have made a careful examination of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Seneca county, Ohio, and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds as disclosed by the corrected transcript of said proceedings submitted to this department. CHIEF CLERK IN ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE ENTITLED TO EXTRA COMPENSATION FOR SERVICE PERTAINING TO WAR EMERGENCY.

Where the chief clerk in the adjutant general's department renders services upon the order and request of the governor of the state pertaining to the war emergency, she is entitled to receive compensation for such services rendered, to be paid out of the appropriation for the war emergency.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me a claim presented by V. F. N., chief clerk in the department of adjutant-general, and ask my opinion as to whether the same is legal and whether you would be warranted in issuing a warrant in favor of her for the same.

In order to get a correct understanding of this claim, it will be necessary for us to note a few matters connected therewith. On July 5, 1918, the governor of Ohio, Hon. James M. Cox, issued the following special order:

> "V. F. N., adjutant-general's department, in addition to her duties as chief clerk, will take care of extra and additional duties assigned her, as per verbal and written instructions of the governor of Ohio.
> The expense incurred is necessary in the military service."

Attached to the claim of V. F. N. there is a statement as follows:

> "On account of appropriation for War Emergency House Bill 593, amount $89.76."

Also the following certificate of Hon. James M. Cox:

> "I certify that the within account is correct, that the articles or services charged therein were required and furnished on account of the purpose above mentioned; and the same were necessary therefor, and that the charges were reasonable.

(Signed) JAMES M. COX,
Governor."

Also the following:

"To the Honorable Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

The within account is hereby approved. Pay from appropriation for War Emergency House Bill 593.

(Signed) V. F. NANGLE,
Acting Adjutant-General."

I think all the above matters will have to be kept clearly in mind in arriving at a conclusion as to whether you would be authorized in law in issuing your warrant in favor of V. F. N. in the amount of $89.76 for services rendered by her upon the instance and request of the governor of Ohio.

This case must be clearly distinguished from one in which an officer or employe is given certain additional duties by the electing or appointing body, or by the head of the department in which she serves. The courts are almost uniform to the effect that the mere addition of duties to those which an officer or employe has theretofore been performing is no warrant whatever for a claim being made for additional compensation.

It can be noted further that this principle would apply with peculiar force to the matter under consideration. V. F. N. is not a statutory official, she being merely an employe, and has no specific duties outlined in the law; hence, she could not say that she had certain duties to perform and should be required to perform only those duties. Her duties are such as may be assigned to her by the adjutant-general from day to day and from time to time.

But as said in the beginning, this case as presented is not such an one as we have been considering in this opinion. In this case V. F. N. is given additional duties to perform by the governor of the state, to be paid for out of the war emergency appropriation, as found in House Bill No. 593, page 619 of 107 Ohio Laws, and not to be paid from the allowance made to the adjutant-general's department. These duties for which V. F. N. claims compensation were duties performed by her in a sense outside of the department of the adjutant-general, and within the department of the governor of the state. If she had the time and wished to perform said services in accordance with the orders of the governor, I see no reason why she could not have performed them, and why she would not be entitled to pay for the performance of the same. The governor certified that the services were rendered, and that the reasonable value of said services is $89.76, and that the same should be paid from the war emergency appropriation made in said House Bill No. 593.

In view of all the above I would advise that you are authorized in law to issue your warrant in favor of V. F. N. in the amount of $89.76.

In passing, I might suggest that inasmuch as this money is to be paid from the war emergency appropriation for the governor, and inasmuch as there is no such an officer as acting adjutant-general, it would be better if the governor himself would sign the voucher rather than, as it is signed, by V. F. Nangle, acting adjutant-general.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—FORCE ACCOUNT—STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER ISSUES REQUISITION AGAINST COUNTY'S SHARE OF THE COST UNTIL SUCH FUND IS EXHAUSTED—ADDITIONAL COST OVER CONTRACT PRICE PAID BY HIGHWAY COMMISSION—LIABILTY OF CONTRACTOR AND SURETY.

(1) In completing an improvement under the provisions of section 1209 G. C. the state highway commissioner issues his requisitions against the county only to the point at which the fund is exhausted which the county commissioners in their agreement with the state assumed in reference to said improvement.

(2) If the improvement costs more than the original contract price, then the state highway commissioner must make some arrangements to take care of the added cost and expense of the improvement up until the time when the same may be completed.

(3) When the improvement is completed, then the difference between the total cost and expense of the improvement and the contract price is recovered from the contractor and his surety.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1918.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 22, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Acting under authority of General Code, section 1209, the state highway commissioner has taken over the work on one of the inter-county highways and is completing it, or having same done, and there has now been expended almost all of the amount for which the original contract was let, and the county commissioners and auditor wish instructions as to the payment on bills for said road after the above amount has been expended. From an examination of the above section it is evident that the bondsman must make up the difference, but the amount is necessarily undetermined until the road is completed. It appears to me that the only proper way to handle it is to continue the payment of the bills as heretofore and carry it in the form of an overdraft until the road is completed, but as the road is a state proposition, we would like your opinion before proceeding.
> Suppose also that for some reason the bondsman could not be held or was not financially responsible, then would the state be required to pay its portion of the excess cost or would the county be required to bear the entire amount?"

In answering your questions set out in your communication, I am going to consider that the improvement is one which would be controlled by the White-Mulcahy law, and the quotations which I make will be made from said law. But the principles involved would be the same whether it is an improvement under the White-Mulcahy law or under the Cass act.

In order to answer your questions intelligently it will be well for us to note the principles which seem to control in the matter of apportioning the cost and expense of an improvement among the state, county, township and abutting poperty owners.

Section 1211 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Upon completion of the improvement the state highway commissioner shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property. He shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement and his apportionment thereof either to the county commissioners or to the trustees of the township upon whose application the improvement was made."

The particular thing to which I desire to call attention in reference to this section is that when a road improvement is completed, then the state highway commissioner shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same. This section further provides that he shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement.

Section 1214 G. C. provides as follows in reference to the apportionment of that part of the cost and expense of an improvement over and above that which the state shall assume and agree to pay, and is in part as follows:

> "The county shall pay twenty-five per cent. of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement * * * * * shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. * * * * * Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement * * * * * * shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement."

The provisions of section 1213 G. C. are similar in form to the particular matters quoted from sections 1211 and 1214. From all these sections it is to be noted that the total cost and expense of an improvement is apportioned among the state, county, township and abutting property owners; that is, each one of these parties pay a certain proportion of the cost and expense of an improvement.

With this in mind, let us go further and note some provisions in reference to the contractual relations existing between the contractor and the state, and the county interested in the improvement.

Section 1218 provides that:

> "No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state."

This is the only agreement signed by the county commissioners. They are not in any respect a factor in the contract that is made in reference to the improvement itself. And it is further to be noted that this agreement entered into by the county commissioners is based entirely upon only an estimated cost of the improvement. This is quite evident from the fact that it must be made before the state highway commissioner can enter into the contract for the construction of said improvement. After this agreement upon the part of the county commissioners is made, the state highway commissioner then proceeds to enter into a contract for the construction of the improvement.

To be sure, if the improvement is completed by the one who enters into the contract with the state according to the terms of the contract, then in that event, the state, the county, the township and the abutting property owners will be called upon to pay their proportionate share of the contract price.

But supposing that one who enters into the contract fails to complete the improvement according to the plans and specifications. Then in that event, the state highway commissioner, under the provisions of section 1209 G. C. takes the same over and completes it by letting a new contract by force account, or in whatever manner he may deem for the best interests of the public. In this case how is the improvement to be paid for? We find the provisions in section 1209, (1) he paying the full costs and expense thereof from the balance of the contract price unpaid to said contractor, and (2) in the event that there is not a sufficient balance to pay for said work, the state highway commissioner shall require the contractor or the surety on his bond to pay the cost of completing said work.

If the state highway commissioner can complete the contract and keep the cost and expense within the consideration set forth in the contract itself, then the state, county, township and abutting property owners would pay their proportion of said cost and expense. But supposing the state highway commissioner cannot complete the improvement and keep the cost and expense thereof within the consideration mentioned in the contract, then what course will be pursued? This question has caused considerable trouble from the very fact set out in your communication, namely, that the state highway commissioner cannot recover from the contractor and his surety the difference between the total cost and expense of the improvement, and that set out in the contract until after the contract is completed.

But, at all events, in the first instance the state highway commissioner must pay the full cost and expense thereof; that is the provision of the statute. He pays it first up to the limit of the contract price. When the cost and expense goes beyond this, he must make provision for the same. The last session of the legislature made this provision: It created a rotary fund of $50,000 to which the state highway commissioner might resort for the necessary funds to enable him to complete a contract, then when he recovers the difference from the contractor and his surety, this amount is returned to the rotary fund. But whatever arrangements may be made by the state, or by the state highway commissioner to take care of these differences, the county in no event is liable for the same until the improvement is fully completed. In other words, the state highway commissioner issues his requisitions against the county auditor only up until the time that the amount is exhausted for which the county obligated itself in its final resolution or agreement with the state highway commissioner. Of course, the county has made arrangements for this amount and the same is in the treasury, and hence the county will have no difficulty in meeting its obligation up to this point.

After the improvement is fully completed, we have two different conditions confronting us. Suppose the state highway commissioner is able to recover from the contractor and his surety the difference between the total cost and expense of the improvement and the original contract price. If these conditions obtain, of course, no one would suffer. The state, county, township and abutting property owners would simply bear their proportionate share of the contract price of the improvement. That is, even though the road as fully completed costs more than that provided for in the contract, then in that event, the state highway commissioner would recover the difference from the contractor and his surety, and the state, county, township and abutting property owners would not be called upon to pay more than their proportionate parts of the contract price of the improvement.

But, supposing the state highway commissioner is not able to recover the difference from the contractor and his surety, due to the fact that they are insolvent, then what result will follow? Will the county bear the total difference, or will the state bear the total difference? Or will the state and the county share in this added burden?

Inasmuch as this is a question of considerable importance, and inasmuch as it is merely a supposition upon your part, and not an actual state of facts, I have decided not to answer the same at this particular time, but will reserve my opinion to the time when this state of facts actually exists, at which time I shall be pleased to answer your question if you call my attention to the same.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY RELEASE CONTRACTOR FROM CONTRACT WHEN ORDERS OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT MAKE PERFORMANCE IMPOSSIBLE.

In a case where the federal government has made it impossible for a contractor to comply with the terms of his contract with a board of county commissioners for and during the period of the war, the county commissioners, if they deem it for the best interests of the county, may exonerate him from the performance of that part of his contract which is rendered impossible of performance due to the orders of the federal government.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of July 30, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "The county commissioners some time ago made a contract for the improvement of a county road which improvement was to have been of bituminous macadam. The contractors have done a good part of the work except the construction of a bituminous top, and find that they cannot construct the improvement with a bituminous top for the reason that the United States highway council have refused the contractors' application for the necessary products.
> It will be necessary to abandon this improvement during the continuance of the war, unless a change be made from a bituminous top to a water-bound macadam top. The contractors are willing to abandon this part of the work and to allow the commissioners to readvertise for bids for the construction of a water-bound macadam top; the contractors to complete the other part of their work according to agreement."

The answer to your question can possibly be based better upon the following principle of law than upon any other, namely:

> "To the general rule that a party to a contract is not discharged by subsequent impossibility of performance, there is an exception where the performance becomes impossible by law, either by reason of (1) a change in the law, or (2) by some action by or under the authority of the government. In such cases the promisor is discharged."

This principle is laid down in Cyc. the 9th volume thereof, page 629. This principle seems to be supported by authorities therein cited.

In the question submitted by you it is impossible for the contractor to complete his work according to the terms of the contract, in that the contract calls for a bituminous top dressing to the highway under construction, and the federal government has refused the use of tar products in the building of roads, excepting under certain circumstances and conditions, which do not apply to your case. Further, you state this condition will obtain until the close of the war, which, of course, is indefinite in time.

In Cordes vs. Miller, 39 Mich. 581, the court was deciding a question of this nature. Cordes leased to Miller for a term of ten years a wooden building in Grand Rapids at a specified annual rent. The lease contained a covenant on the part of Cordes that "if said building burns down during the lease, said Cordes agrees to rebuild the same in a suitable time for said Miller." The building burned, but in the meantime the council of the city of Grand Rapids had enacted an ordinance forbidding the erection of wooden buildings. The court held that Cordes was not compelled to rebuild for the reason that he was forbidden so to do by said action of council, that he was not compelled to put up a new building of some more substantial material than wood and turn same over to Miller for the same rental. That he was released from the obligations of his contract. In the syllabus the court say:

"A covenant in the lease of a wooden building, binding the landlord to rebuild in case it burns, is released by the passage of a valid municipal ordinance forbidding the erection of wooden buildings."

It will be noted that this case is very similar in facts to the case under consideration.

In Leopold vs. Salkey, 89 Ill. 412, we find the following principle:

"Where the failure to perform a contract is in respect to matters which would render the performance of the residue a thing different in substance from what was contracted for, the party not in default may abandon the contract."

In Hughes vs. Wamsutta Mills, 11 Allen, 201, this principle is stated:

"An arrest, conviction and imprisonment for crime will exonerate a workman from the duty of giving to his employers two weeks' notice before leaving their service, under a contract by the terms of which he has agreed to give such notice, or not claim any wages due."

In People vs. The State Mutual Life Ins. Co. 91 N. Y. 174, the court lays down the following principle:

"When a registered policy life insurance company is restrained by an order of the court from further prosecuting its business and a receiver is appointed, a contract entered into by it with a general agent for his services for a specified term, is thereby annulled by the action of the state and he has no cause of action for non-performance by the company thereafter. A liability to such dissolution must be deemed to have been an unexpressed condition of the contract."

In the opinion on page 176 the court uses the following language:

"What had happened was a dissolution of the contract by the sovereign power of the state, rendering performance on either side impossible."

Other cases might be quoted to establish the principle herein being considered, but it is probably not necessary so to do.

There is one condition attached to the above principle which ought to be noted at this time, and that is that a mere temporary disability to perform the obligations of the contract, due to the fact of some law, or due to the enforcement of a law already enacted, will not permit a party to a contract to refuse to perform his obligations.

In Baylies vs. Fettyplace, 7 Mass. 325, the court laid down this principle:

"The laws of the United States, laying an embargo for an unlimited time, and afterwards repealed, did not extinguish a promise to deliver debentures, but operated a suspension only during the continuance of those laws."

On page 338 in the opinion the court say:

"Now it is clearly settled, by innumerable authorities, that whenever a contract, which was possible and legal at the time it was made, becomes impossible by the act of God, or illegal by an order of the state, the obligation to perform it is discharged; or if such ordinance be temporary, the obligation is suspended during its continuance."

In Hadley vs. Clarke, 8 T. R. 259, the court say:

"The defendants contracted to carry the plaintiff's goods from Liverpool to Leghorn. On the vessel's arriving at Falmouth in the course of her voyage, an embargo was laid on her 'until the further order of council.' Held that such an embargo only suspended, but did not dissolve the contract between the parties, and that even after two years, when the embargo was taken off, the defendants were answerable to the plaintiff in damages for the non-performance of their contract."

In view of the above principles, what answer can be given to the question submitted by you? In the first place, let me say it is my opinion that the contractor in your case could not demand as against the wishes of the county commissioners that he be released from the obligations which he has assumed. The order made by the federal government is from the very necessity of the case merely temporary in nature, and while the county commissioners could not compel the contractor to place upon the road a bituminous top covering during the period of the war, yet after the war closes the county commissioners, if they so desire, undoubtedly could hold the contractor to the obligations entered into by him in his contract with the county.

But, suppose the county commissioners do not desire to hold in abeyance the performance of this contract until the time that the war ceases and the order of the federal government is removed. What then are their rights? It seems to me clear that from the principle first above laid down that if the county commissioners and the contractor both agree that it would be for the best interests of all parties concerned that the obligation in reference to a bituminous top dressing should be waived, and if the county commissioners and the contractor can agree as to the amount that should be paid to the contractor for the work performed by him under the contract other than for the top dressing, then the county commissioners would have authority in law to release said contractor from this obligation and could enter into a new contract either with the same contractor or with another on due advertising to place upon the said improvement a water-bound covering instead of a bituminous covering.

That the county commissioners have authority in law to enter into such an arrangement with the contractor seems clear from the decision of the court in State ex rel. Jewett vs. Sayre, Auditor, 91 O. S. 85, and I would particularly refer you to the principles laid down in said case when your county commissioners come to make an arrangement with the present contractor along the lines herein suggested, if they should so decide to contract with him.

There is another matter to which I desire to call attention in reference to these changes of plans with the present contractor, and that is, that the surety company ought to agree to the modification of the plans as covered by the original contract. To be sure, the surety company could object to any such an arrangement being made, and hence it would be advisable for you to get their consent before such a change as your county contemplates, is made; or, if you do not desire to do this, your county commissioners could wait until the present contractor has fully performed the work other than the placing upon the highway the top dressing, and then exonerate the present contractor from placing thereon a bituminous top dressing, upon the county commissioners paying him the amount agreed upon. In the event that this course is followed the contractor would be released at any rate, and the surety would no longer be held at any event.

In arriving at the conclusion herein reached, I am basing it entirely upon the facts stated in your communication, and am considering that it is absolutely impossible for the contractor to place upon said road a bituminous covering. The following principle is well established:

> "A contract is not invalid, nor is the promisor discharged, merely because it turns out to be difficult, unreasonable, dangerous or burdensome."
> 9 Cyc. 625.

If the contractor could secure the tar products necessary to place a bituminous covering upon said road, he would be compelled to do this, even though it is difficult to secure the same, and even though the cost of said products is much higher now than when the contract was entered into; and under those circumstances the county commissioners would have no authority to release the contractor from the obligations of his contract in reference to the covering of said road.

In Baker et al. vs. Johnson, et al., 42 N. Y. 126, the court say:

> "The fact that performance of a contract is rendered more burdensome and expensive by a law enacted after it is entered into, has never been held to exonerate a party from its obligations."

Hence I am holding herein that the county commissioners may, if they deem it for the best interests of the county, exonerate the contractor from the placing upon the road under consideration a bituminous top dressing only in the event that it is impossible for said contractor to secure the necessary products to place such a covering thereon.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTRACTOR ENTITLED TO FULL COMPENSATION WHEN CONTRACT COMPLETED ACCORDING TO PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS, ALTHOUGH HE DOES NOT USE ESTIMATED AMOUNT OF MATERIALS.

Where a contractor submits a unit bid price and the contract entered into is upon the basis of said bid, a road contractor is entitled to the full consideration set forth in the contract, if he completes the improvement according to the plans and specifications, even though he does not use the estimated amount of material.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio,

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 2, 1918, which reads in part as follows:

> "Permit me to direct your attention to the contract between this department and Bean & Co., for the construction of section 'a,' I. C. H. 254, Wilmington-Hillsboro road, in Clinton county.
> This improvement has been built in co-operation with the trustees of Green township, Clinton county, pursuant to resolution of said township trustees, copy of which I am attaching hereto.
> The contractor is claiming a final estimate for this work on the ground that his contract has been completed, and this department is not allowing same for the reason that 9,500 cu. yds. of crushed limestone and screenings have not been rolled and water-bound in place in the road.
> I am attaching hereto a copy of this contract with the request that you kindly advise me whether in your opinion its terms require the rolling and water-binding in place of 9,500 cu. yds. crushed limestone and screenings, or whether the completion of the road according to the plans, profile and specifications is sufficient to warrant a payment of a final estimate as for the completion of the work."

Briefly stated, the facts are as follows: Bean & Co. entered into a contract for the construction of section "a," I. C. H. No. 254, Wilmington-Hillsboro road in Clinton county, for the sum of $20,949.00. The road was constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications, there being no question whatever raised as to this. But the proposal made and signed by Bean & Co. estimated that it would require 9,500 cu. yds. of crushed limestone and screenings for the construction of the road in accordance with the plans and specifications made by the state highway commissioner. This estimate of 9,500 cu. yds. was made by the highway department.

In completing the road according to the plans and specifications, it was found that about 1,500 cu. yds. less than was estimated by the state highway commissioner was required; that is, instead of Bean & Co. using 9,500 cu. yds. of crushed limestone and screenings, it used about 8,000 cu. yds.

The question now is as to whether Bean & Co. is entitled to the full consideration set out in the contract, or whether there should be a reduction made in said contract price, due to the fact that the estimated quantity of crushed limestone and screenings was not used by the contractor.

In order to arrive at an understanding as to what principles control in reference to this matter, it will be necessary for us to turn to the proposal and more especially to the contract itself.

The proposal made by Bean & Co. and signed by it reads in part as follows:

"To the State Highway Commissioner:

> The undersigned, having full knowledge of the site, plans and attached specifications for the above improvement, hereby agrees to furnish all services, labor, materials and equipment required to complete the same by November 1, 1917, according to the plans and specifications and to accept in full compensation therefor the sum of twenty thousand nine hundred forty-nine dollars ($20,949.00)."

The proposal is to the point that Bean & Co. was to receive $20,949.00 in consideration that it should furnish all services, labor, materials and equipment required to complete the highway according to the plans and specifications. With this provision of the proposal in mind, let us turn to the contract itself and ascertain its provisions, inasmuch as they have a bearing upon the question.

A provision of the agreement is as follows:

> "That for and in consideration of payments hereinafter mentioned, to be made by the party of the first part (State of Ohio), party of the second part (Bean & Co.) agrees to furnish all materials, appliances, tools and labor and perform all the work required for roadway and pavement of section 'A' of Wilmington-Hillsboro road, I. C. H. No. 254, Green township, Clinton county, Petition No. 2186-T, state of Ohio, according to the plans and specifications and to the satisfaction and acceptance of the party of the first part."

Here again we find the provision made that Bean & Co. was to furnish all materials to enable it to perform the work of improving said highway according to the plans and specifications.

When we turn to the bond that was entered into by and between Bean & Co. and its sureties, in favor of the state of Ohio, we find this condition:

> "and will perform the work embraced therein, upon the terms proposed and within the time prescribed, and in accordance with the plans and specifications furnished therefor."

Hence we find that the proposal itself, the contract entered into by and between Bean & Co. and the state of Ohio and the contract of suretyship, all were based upon the plans and specifications; that is, the work was to be done in accordance with the plans and specifications. As said before, there is no question raised as to the work being performed in accordance with said plans and specifications.

However, the question in the mind of the state highway commissioner arises from the fact that the contract itself provided that the "approximate estimate and proposal," as well as the plans and specifications, agreement, proposal and contract bond should be an essential part of the contract. When we turn to the "approximate estimate and proposal" we find not only the provision above quoted, but also the following:

"9,500 cu. yds. crushed limestone and screenings, rolled and water-bound in place ---------- $2.00 (Est. unit cost)----$19,000 00 (Total) ----------$18,949.00."

The question to be determined is whether Bean & Co. bound itself to put on said road 9,500 cu. yds. of crushed limestone and screenings. If it did, it is not entitled to the full consideration mentioned in the contract, because it is admitted that Bean & Co. did not use 9,500 cu. yds. of crushed limestone and screenings. This was merely an approximate estimate of the amount required.

We will consider further what this part of the proposal was intended to provide. We find this provision:

"The undersigned further agrees to accept the following 'Unit Bid Prices' in compensation for any small additions or deductions caused by any changes or alterations in the plans or specifications of the work.

(The bidder is required to fill in under 'Unit Bid Price,' a unit price for additions and deductions opposite each item for which there is a quantity given in the 'Approximate Estimate.' The 'Gross Sum' of the totals in the 'Total' column shall equal the sum (given above) bid for the work.)"

That is, Bean & Co. agreed that it would furnish any extra quantities of limestone and screenings that might be needed, due to small additions or deductions caused by any changes or alterations in the plans, at the same rate as is set out in the proposal, viz., $2.00 per cu. yd. I am of the opinion that this is the only force and effect that can be given to the provision above quoted.

Bean & Co. did not agree to use any particular amount of material, but did agree to furnish sufficient material to complete the work according to the plans and specifications and to accept in full compensation therefor the sum of money set out in the contract, viz., $20,949.00. If it had required more material to do this, than was estimated by the state highway commissioner, Bean & Co. would have been compelled to furnish it, and if it required less material than was estimated by the state highway commissioner, the contractor was not compelled to furnish it and no deductions could be made from the contract price, due to this fact.

In considering this question it must be kept in mind that 9,500 cu. yds. were merely an estimate. If the state highway commissioner had desired that the full amount of 9,500 cu. yds. of limestone screenings should be used, even though to do this it would make a depth thicker than provided for in the plans and specifications, such provision would have to be made in the contract.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE FOR LOT NUMBER 14 OF THE WOOD-BROWN PLACE, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 10, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an abstract of title for the following described lot of land, situated in Franklin county, Ohio, and known as Lot Number Fourteen (14) of the Wood-Brown place, as shown by plat of said addition recorded in Plat Book 5, pages 196-197, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio, being a part of the following premises, to wit:

> "Being a part of Quarter township number three (3), township number one (1), range number eighteen (18), United States Military Lands. Beginning at a point in the center of Lane avenue, where it intersects the west line of the right of way of The Columbus, Hocking Valley and Toledo Railroad, thence running in a southerly direction with and along said west line of the right of way of said railroad to the point where it intersects the north line of the land owned by Jerry O. Lisle, thence running in a westerly direction with said Jerry O. Lisle's north line 905 feet, more or less, to a point in the center of the Scioto River and Olentangy free turnpike, thence running in a northerly direction along the center of said Olentangy and Scioto River free turnpike 1,348 feet, more or less, to the center of Lane avenue, thence running in an easterly direction with the center of Lane avenue 515 feet, more or less, to the point of beginning—containing twenty-four (24) acres of land, more or less."

I have carefully examined said abstract and find no defects in the title as disclosed thereby.

There are no encumbrances or liens upon said premises except the taxes for the last half of the year 1917, in the sum of 38 cents, and the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid; also a special assessment on said premises for road improvements, amounting to 50 cents, payable in five installments. Two installments in the sum of 10 cents each are now due and unpaid together with interest amounting to the sum of 28 cents.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on August 6, 1918, a good title in Rachael F. Orr to the premises hereinbefore described.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—TOWNSHIP CLERK AND TOWNSHIP HEALTH OFFICER.

The positions of township clerk and township health officer are compatible and one man may be paid compensation for both positions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your request for my official opinion upon the following question:

> "Are the positions of township clerk and township health officer compatible, and may one man be paid compensation for both positions?"

An examination of the statutes pertaining to township clerks and township health officers does not disclose any statutory prohibition against one person holding both of said offices. Neither does the constitution contain any such prohibition. In the absence of statutory or constitutional prohibition, we are relegated to the common law to discover whether or not there is any incompatibility in said offices.

Offices are considered incompatible, under the common law rule as laid down in this state, when one is subordinate to or in any manner a check upon the other, or when it is physically impossible for one person to perform the duties of both offices. The laws pertaining to these two offices do not disclose any inconsistency between them, and I am unable to see how one could in any way be a check upon the other. Therefore, I advise you that the offices of township clerk and township health officer are not incompatible and may be held by one person.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GOVERNOR'S DEED—WHEN ONLY ERROR OCCURRING IN DEED FOR STATE LANDS IS THE OMISSION OF CERTAIN LANDS, CORRECTION IS MADE BY MAKING DEED FOR LANDS OMITTED—NOT NECESSARY TO SECURE ANY QUIT CLAIM DEEDS.

1. In a case wherein the state, in making a deed for certain school lands, failed to include therein certain lands for which a deed should have been made, it is necessary for the state, in correcting this error, to make a deed for only the lands which were omitted from the former deed, to the one entitled to said deed.

2. Where the only error in making a deed for school lands is that certain lands were omitted from the deed which should have been included therein, there is no necessity for securing quit claim deeds from any persons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have communication from your department under date of July 15, 1918, and signed by E. L. Hyneman, deputy state supervisor of school lands, in which my opinion is requested as follows:

> "We are transmitting to you the following papers:
> Correspondence with Andrews & Andrews of Hamilton, Ohio; an abstract of title to the lands under consideration; a copy of a final certificate on file in this office to the lands under consideration; a copy of a deed from the state of Ohio to William Jones covering the lands under consideration, namely, Lots Nos. 1 and 8 and a roadway running between Lots Nos. 2 and 6 which connects Lots Nos. 1 and 8.
> Andrews & Andrews assert that the description of the deed executed by the state does not clearly describe Lots Nos. 1 and 8 and the roadway connecting them. While we differed in this construction of the deed, nevertheless we expressed a willingness to issue a new deed to correct a presumed error in the first deed; but Andrews & Andrews are seeking a deed from the state describing only Lot No. 8, while our contention has been that under the statute section 8528 requires us, in executing a deed, to follow the correct description of the entire tract conveyed as shown by the final certificate.

We desire your opinion upon this controversy, namely:

1. Can we, upon application of the present owner of a part of the tract originally sold, execute a corrective deed for the entire tract?

2. Will it be necessary, if the corrective deed is issued, to have a quit claim from all of the present owners of the entire tract originally sold?

3. Can we execute a corrective deed for a part of the tract originally sold, namely, Lot No. 8?''

These questions arise under and by virtue of the laws of the state having to do with the sale of school and ministerial lands by the state of Ohio, carried into section 3233 G. C.

Section 3233 G. C., as it originally stood, read as follows:

''When the purchaser or lessee, his heirs or assigns, has made payment in full, the auditor shall give such person a final certificate, containing, in addition to the former one, the fact of the payment in full and that such person is entitled to receive from the state a deed in fee simple for such premises, on presentation of this certificate to the proper officer or officers.''

In conformity to the provisions of this section, the auditor of Butler county, on March 26, 1832, issued a certificate to William Jones, assignee of Jonathan Staggs, to the effect that full payment had been made for certain parts of section No. 16. The description set out in the certificate read in part as follows:

''Being a part of school section sixteen * * and known and designated as lot number one, including a road of one rod, to lot number eight, of said section, which said lot number eight is attached to said lot number one, and containing nineteen acres and eight-tenths of an acre, the same two lots taken together are described as follows, to wit:'' (Here is description of these two lots in metes and bounds, together with the road that connected the two lots, and ends with the statement that the lands described aggregated one hundred acres and twenty-six hundredths of an acre.)

The certificate without doubt set forth the fact that payment had been made in full for both Lots Nos. 1 and 8, together with the road connecting the two lots. Under the provisions of section 3233 G. C. this would have entitled William Jones, as assignee, to a deed for these two lots.

On January 2, 1833, the state of Ohio made a deed to said William Jones, assignee, under and by virtue of the certificate of the auditor of Butler county. The deed contains the following description:

''Eighty (80) acres and 46/100, being part of the section number sixteen, * * and designated as Lot Number One, including a road of one rod to Lot Number Eight of said section, which said Lot Number Eight is attached to said Lot Number One, be the same more or less.'

The habendum clause in said deed reads as follows:

''to have and to hold the said eighty and 46/100 acres of land, with the appurtenances thereto, unto the said William Jones, agent of Jonathan Staggs, and his heirs and assigns forever.''

It is clear from the granting clause of this deed that Lot No. 8 was not deeded at all. Lot No. 1 was clearly granted, as well as the road between the two lots. The habendum clause shows that not even the road is included in this part of the deed, but merely the 80-46/100ths acres of land forming what is known as Lot No. 1.

The abstract of title attached to your communication shows that William Jones, as assignee, transferred Lot No. 8, containing 19 8/10ths of an acre, and that through a direct chain of title this Lot No. 8 has come into the possession of Lillian Kenworthy.

Lillian Kenworthy now desires to have the error in the original deed corrected, so as to clearly show that her grantor in chain of title had title not only to Lot No. 1, but also Lot No. 8. In other words, she wishes the state to make her a deed for Lot No. 8. There is no question raised as to the title to Lot No. 1 and the roadway between Lots Nos. 1 and 8, in so far as Lillian Kenworthy is concerned, she being the grantee for only Lot No. 8, and this, therefore, is the only lot in which she is at all interested.

Under this state of facts the following questions arise:

1. Can the proper authorities make a deed for the entire tract, including both lots and the road between them, upon the application of the present owner of Lot No. 8?

2. Will it be necessary, if the corrective deed is made, to have a quit-claim deed from all the present owners of the entire tract originally sold to William Jones, assignee?

3. Can a deed be made by the state of Ohio at the present time, for Lot No. 8 only, leaving out of the deed Lot No. 1 and the road between the two lots, which had been originally paid for by William Jones, assignee?

It is necessary that we consider sections 8527 and 8528 G. C., which read as follows:

"Sec. 8527. When the purchaser has died before deed made, and the lands have passed to another, by descent or devise, and the title still remains in him, or when the person to whom the lands have so passed, has conveyed them, or his interest therein, to another person, by deed of general warranty or quit-claim, upon the proof of such facts being made to him and the attorney-general, the governor shall execute the deed directly to the person entitled to the lands, according to the true intent and meaning of this chapter, although he derives his title thereto through one or more successive conveyances from the person to whom the lands passed by descent or devise."

"Sec. 8528. When, by satisfactory evidence, it appears to the governor and attorney-general, that an error has occurred in a deed executed and delivered in the name of the state, under the laws thereof, or in the certificate of any public officer, upon which, if correct, a conveyance would be properly required from the state, the governor shall correct such error by the execution of a correct and proper title deed, according to the intent and object of the original purchase or conveyance, to the party entitled to it, his heirs, or legal assigns, as the case may require, and take from such party a release in due form, to the state, of the property erroneously conveyed."

It will be noted from the provisions of section 8528 G. C. that whenever satisfactory evidence is presented to the governor and the attorney-general, that an error has occurred in a deed executed and delivered in the name of the state, the governor shall correct such error by the execution of a correct and proper title deed. From this section it is evident that the application is not a vital matter. The question is as to whether the governor of the state and the attorney-general are satisfied that an error has occurred. If so, the governor is authorized in law to make the correction. Hence an application filed by an owner of a part of these lands in question would be sufficient to authorize the governor of the state to make a deed for the entire tract in question, provided he and the attorney-general are satisfied that an error has occurred; that is, if it would be necessary for a deed to be made covering the entire tract. This answers your first question.

In answer to your second question I will say there is no need of any quit-claim deeds by any party, in the matter submitted by you. The state in this case deeded Lot No. 1, including the road between Lots Nos. 1 and 8, to William Jones, assignee. This the state was obligated to do because of the fact that said Jones had paid the full price for said lot and road. Neither is it necessary for the owner of Lot No. 8 to make a quit-claim deed to the state, for the reason that she is entitled to a deed from the state because her grantor in chain of title, William Jones, as assignee, is entitled to such a deed.

Your question arises under this provision found in section 8528 G. C.:

> "and take from such party a release in due form, to the state, of the property erroneously conveyed."

However, in the case you submit there was no property erroneously conveyed. The state was under obligation to convey not only the land it did convey, to William Jones, assignee, but the intent was that it should also convey Lot No. 8 of school section No. 16. The above quoted provision covers only those cases in which the state makes a deed covering lands which ought not to have been included in the deed.

Therefore, in answer to your second question I will say there is no necessity for any quit-claims being made to the state for the lands in question or any part of the same. Of course, the parties now having title to Lot No. 1 and the road between the two lots would not be under obligation—neither would they desire so to do—to make a quit-claim deed to the state for this land, for the reason that they are the rightful owners of the same; and it would be a rather strange proceeding to have the present owner of Lot No. 8 make a quit-claim deed to the state for this lot, and the state in turn make a deed to the present owner for the same. This is not the meaning which should be given to the provisions of this section.

We come now to your third question. It is my opinion that the state of Ohio can make a deed for Lot No. 8, which is the only part of the premises in question at the present time. In fact, under the provisions of section 8528 G. C. it is my view that this is about the only course you can pursue. This section provides that the governor shall make a deed to the party entitled to it, as the case may require. The owners of Lot No. 1 and the roadway are not entitled to a deed because the state has already made a deed for this property. The only party entitled to a deed is the owner of Lot No. 8, namely, Lillian Kenworthy.

In rendering this opinion I am considering Lillian Kenworthy the owner of only Lot No. 8, and that this is the only part of the premises in question in which she is interested.

In conclusion I will say I am satisfied, from the record as presented to me, that an error has occurred upon the part of the state in the making of the original deed to William Jones, assignee, and that the same should be corrected along the lines herein set out.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WEST PARK—$2,458.50.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of the village of West Park, Ohio, in the sum of $2,458.50, in anticipation of the collection of special assessments heretofore levied and made for the improvement of Brown road from Triskett road to Fisher road by grading and draining.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the village of West Park and of other officers of said village relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind and to the improvement to make which said bonds are issued.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said village to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—ORDINANCE, PROVIDING FOR LEVYING ASSESSMENTS THEREFOR AND ALSO PROVIDING FOR BOND ISSUE, IS OF A GENERAL NATURE AND MUST BE PUBLISHED AS REQ' I BY SECTIONS 4228 ET SEQ.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF CUYAHOGA FALLS—$13,500.00.

Where the ordinance passed by the council of a municipality in addition to making provision for the levy of assessments to pay the cost and expense of a street improvement, other than that borne by the municipality itself, likewise makes provision for the issue of bonds of such municipality in anticipation of the collection of such assessments, such ordinance is one of a general nature which, under the provisions of section 4227 G. C., is required to be published in the manner provided in sections 4228 et seq. G .C. and such municipality is not authorized to issue and sell the bonds thus provided for until said ordinance is published in the manner provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 12, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Cuyahoga Falls, Ohio, in the sum of $13,500.00, in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement of Sackett St. from Front St. to Allen St.; Second St. from Chestnut St. to Falls St.; Third St. from Sackett St. to a point 350 feet southerly therefrom; and Fourth St. from Sackett St. to a point 350 feet southerly therefrom, by constructing sanitary sewers with manholes, laterals for house connections and all other necessary appurtenances.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully considered the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the village of Cuyahoga Falls and of other officers of said village, relating to the above issue of bonds, and regret to say that I am unable to approve said issue of bonds for the specific reason that the ordinance passed by the council of the village under date of June 5, 1918, levying assessments to pay the cost and expense of said improvement and providing for the above issue of bonds in anticipation of the collection of such assessments, was not published as required by section 4227 G. C., which provides that ordinances of a general nature or providing for improvements shall be published in the manner provided by sections 4228 et seq. G. C.

My predecessor Hon. T. S. Hogan, in an opinion under date of April 24, 1912 (Vol. II, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, p. 1693), following the decision of the circuit court of Lucas county in the case of Kohler Brick Co. vs. City of Toledo, 10 C. C. (N. S.) 137, held that an assessment ordinance does not require publication. Other than to observe that there are considerations and statutory provisions touching this question, which neither my predecessor nor the court in the case above cited took into consideration in arriving at the conclusion that an assessment ordinance does not require publication, I do not feel that there is any necessary occasion for me to consider and determine this particular question, so far as the matter before me is concerned. As above noted, the ordinance here in question not only provides for the levying of assessments to pay the cost and expense of said improvement, but it also provides for this issue of bonds in anticipation of the collection thereof.

Without considering the legal propriety of providing for both matters in one ordinance, it is certain that there is no such necessary relation between the two matters as requires both to be provided for in the same ordinance. That it is not necessary to combine both matters in one ordinance, is a proposition that was to my mind quite convincingly sustained by a later opinion of Attorney-General Hogan under date of May 20, 1914 (Vol. I, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, p. 682). In any event, however, this ordinance, providing as it does for the issue of the bonds of the municipality, is subject to the same rule with respect to the necessity of publication applicable to all other ordinances of the municipality, providing for the issue of municipal bonds.

By the provisions of section 3914-1 G. C., if not otherwise, the bonds here in question, if valid at all, are full, general obligations of the municipal corporation, and this being so, the ordinance providing for the issue of said bonds is one of a general nature within the provisions of section 4227 G. C., even if in an exact sense it is not to be considered as an ordinance providing for an improvement within the meaning of said section.

John vs. Elyria, 6 N. P. 372.
Knauss vs. Columbus, 13 O. D. 200.
Electric & Gas Co. vs. Village of Orrville, 26 O. C. D. 43 (See Dravo-Doyle Co. vs. Orrville, 93 O. S. 236).

Under the provisions of section 4227 G. C. an ordinance requiring publication does not take effect until the expiration of ten days after the first publication thereof, and it follows from this, on the conclusion here reached by me, with respect to the necessity of publishing the ordinance here under consideration, that there is no effective ordinance of the village of Cuyahoga Falls providing for this issue of bonds. The village has therefore no authority to issue bonds until publication of such ordinance is made in the manner required by law, and of course you have no authority to purchase the same until this is done.

Two other questions are presented on a consideration of this transcript, upon which, in view of my conclusion on the question above considered, I do not find it necessary to express any opinion.

With respect to the first of these questions, it may be noted that in the ordinance to proceed, passed by the village council, it was determined to pay the cost and expense of the improvements, other than that to be borne by the village itself, by the levy and collection of assessments on the benefit plan authorized and provided for by section 3812 G. C., rather than on the foot front plan likewise authorized and provided for in said section of the General Code.

The report of the estimating board appointed by council in carrying out this plan of assessment does not appear in the transcript, but looking to the assessment ordinance so-called, which expressly adopted the estimated assessments made by the estimating board, it appears that said assessments were laid at a flat rate of $2.014 per front foot on the lots and lands fronting and abutting on said improvements. In other words, the proceeding in question seems to be an assessment by the front foot made under the guise of an assessment on the benefit plan, contrary to the intent and spirit of the assessment statutes which contemplate that any plan of assessment adopted must be pursued in accordance with the statute and that the two plans cannot be commingled.

Kelley vs. Cleveland, 34 O. S. 468.
Kelley vs. Cincinnati, 28 O. C. A. 376.

As to this, however, sufficient facts do not appear in the transcript to permit me to express any opinion with respect to the question suggested, even were it necessary for me to arrive at a final conclusion regarding this matter; and neither in any event would I feel authorized to approve of said bonds, so far as this question is concerned, without additional facts showing how said estimates were made and apportioned.

The second question in connection with the consideration of this transcript arises from the fact that apparently proceedings for the improvement of four separate streets, by the construction of sanitary sewers therein, have been combined in one proceeding. As to this I am informed by a statement of fact made in the transcript that the improvements on Second St., Third St. and Fourth St. are lateral sewers running into the Sackett St. sewer for the purpose of disposing of the sewerage from that portion of the various parts of said streets.

Inasmuch as the proceedings here in question are predicated upon the powers granted in section 3812 and related sections of the General Code, with respect to the improvement of streets as such, and not upon the statutory provisions in regard to the construction of sewers on the district plan, it may be doubted whether the fact that the sewers in the other streets named are to connect with and empty into a larger main sewer in Sackett St., has the effect of making this a single improvement within the purview of the statutory provisions under which these improvements have been projected.

In an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices under date of November 20, 1917 (Vol. III, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 2155), after a careful consideration of the question involved, I arrived at the conclusion that with respect to the street improvement procedure on the assessment plan there should be a separate resolution of necessity and ordinance to proceed, for the improvement of each street or of each combination of two or more streets which in reality form one street or thoroughfare, and that there should not be a combination of two or more separate and distinct improvements in one assessment proceeding, so far as the resolution of necessity and the ordinance to proceed are concerned.

However, for reasons before suggested, I do not deem it necessary for me to express any opinion with respect to the concrete question here presented, and resting my opinion wholly upon the question presented by the circumstance that the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds was not published as required by the provisions of section 4227 G. C., I am compelled to advise that you have no authority to purchase the bonds provided for in said proposed issue and that you should reject the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPALITY MAY NOT ISSUE BONDS TO PROVIDE A FUND OUT OF WHICH TO PAY COST OF STREET IMPROVEMENTS AND REPAIRS AS MAY THEREAFTER BE DETERMINED.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MIDDLETOWN—$9,000.00.

Under section 3939 of the General Code a municipal corporation is authorized to issue bonds for the purpose of improving or repairing specifically determined streets or parts thereof, but said section does not authorize a municipality to issue bonds for the purpose of providing a fund out of which to pay the cost and expense of such street improvements and repairs as may thereafter be determined from time to time.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 13, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of the city of Middletown, Ohio, in the sum of $9,000.00, for the stated purpose of resurfacing, repairing and improving existing streets of said city.

GENTLEMEN:—I have given careful consideration to the proceedings of the city commission of the city of Middletown, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds as exhibited in the transcript submitted to me and as the result of such consideration I find myself unable to approve said issue of bonds.

This issue is provided for by ordinance of the city commission of said city in legislative session under the assumed authority of article XII of the charter of said city and of section 3939 G. C. Section 2 of article XII of said charter provides that "the city may issue bonds from time to time for such purposes as are now or may hereafter be authorized by the general assembly of the state of Ohio."

Section 3939 G. C. grants authority to municipal corporations to issue bonds, among others for the following purposes:

> "22. For resurfacing, repairing or improving any existing street or streets as well as other public highways, whether such resurfacing, repairing or improving is done directly by the municipal corporation, or contracted by it, or by the county commissioners under an agreement with the municipal corporation by which it agreed to assume and pay any part of the cost thereof."
> "23. For opening, widening and extending any street or public highway."
> "24. For purchasing or condemning any land necessary for street or highway purposes, and for improving it or paying any portion of the cost of such improvement."

Other than section 3914 G. C. authorizing municipal corporations to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for street improvements, and other than section 3821 G. C. authorizing a municipal corporation to issue bonds for the purpose of paying its share of the cost and expense of a street improvement to be paid for in part by assessments, section 3939 G. C. contains the only statutory provision authorizing a municipal corporation to issue bonds for the purpose of street improvement or repairs. This section confers like authority upon a municipal corporation to issue bonds to pay its share of the cost and expense of a street improvement to be paid for in part by assessments on benefited property, as well as authority to issue bonds to pay the cost and expense of a street improvement where the whole of such cost and expense is to be borne by the municipality.

I do not see that the authority of the municipal corporation is broader in one case than in the other, and whether such issue of bonds be for the purpose of paying a share only of the cost and expense of the improvement or for the purpose of paying the whole of such cost and expense, the authority of the provisions of section 3939 above quoted is limited to the issue of bonds to pay the cost and expense, whether in whole or in part of specific street improvements to be determined by the legislative authority of the city at the time the issue of such bonds is provided for and in neither case is the municipality authorized to issue bonds to provide a fund from which to pay the cost of improvements that may from time to time be made as thereafter determined by the municipality. See Heffner vs. City of Toledo, 75 O. S., 413.

It is evident from the stated purpose of this bond issue that the same is not for the improvement or repair of any specific streets and that the purpose of said issue is to provide funds out of which to resurface, repair and improve such of the existing streets of the city of Middletown as may in the judgment of the city authorities require improvement or repair.

I am in receipt of a letter from the city attorney of the city of Middletown, touching the question of the purpose of this proposed bond issue, in which, among other things, he says:

"I submit that, in the event any of said funds were to be used in any improvement where any part of the cost were to be assessed back against abutting property, the method of legislation would be lacking in not specifying the street to be improved. But the funds derived from this or similar bond issues in the past, is placed in a street repair fund and used only in cases strictly of repair. It would be impossible to specify the particular streets where this fund is to be used for the reason that it is used on gravel streets as the exigencies of travel require repair; a load of gravel here, a dozen loads there, a hundred loads of cinders on another, a sunken manhole on a paved street which requires only several yards of repaving or replacing of paving, but in no case where any part of the cost is assessed back against abutting property.

It is possible and probable that this fund would be used on almost every street in the city in the above designated manner. I have in mind a recent instance where the temporary diversion of traffic from a paved street over a gravel street for two blocks required the rooting up, rolling and hauling of probably fifty loads of gravel to keep the street passable. It is instances of this character for which this fund is created. The whole cost thereof is carried by the city."

It is evident that the street repairs that are contemplated from the proceeds of this bond issue are such as are ordinarily made by the municipal corporation out of the service fund and that the real purpose of this bond issue, if not to replenish this fund, is by way of aid thereto. I know of no authority for any procedure of this kind other than the authority granted by section 3939 G. C. to issue bonds to pay the cost in whole or in part of specific street improvements.

For the reasons above stated I am compelled with considerable regret to come to the conclusion that the above issue of bonds is unauthorized and that you should not purchase the same.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SPRINGFIELD TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, SUMMIT COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 14, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Springfield township rural school district, Summit county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000 for the construction, equipment, improvement and repair of certain school buildings in said district.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Springfield township rural school district relating to the above issue of bonds. The issue of these bonds is provided for under the authority of sections 7625 to 7628 inclusive of the General Code, and on the affirmative vote of more than a majority of the electors of said school district at an election held on the proposition of said bond issue.

I find the proceedings set out in the transcript submitted to me to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind, and I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL—WHEN A NUMBER OF COUNTIES ORGANIZE AND ERECT SAME THERE IS NO AUTHORITY FOR THE DISSOLUTION THEREOF.

Where a number of counties have formed themselves into a district for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a tuberculosis hospital, there is no authority in law for a dissolution of said organization, or for discontinuing the activities for which the district was organized.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 16, 1918

State Department of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of July 31, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Under the authority of section 3148 G. C. any two or more counties, not to exceed ten, may form themselves into a district hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis subject to the provision that there is no municipal tuberculosis hospital within the counties. Provision is also made that where a number of counties have already constructed and are operating a district tuberculosis hospital, other counties may join in such enterprise for the enlargement and use of such hospital.
> No direct provision is made for the dissolution of such a district. In one instance which has been brought to our attention dissension has arisen among the commissioners of the various counties as to policy, and it seems to be impossible to harmonize the conflicting interests and a desire has been expressed to dissolve the district.
> I shall be glad to have your opinion as to whether or not such a district may be dissolved, and if so, how this is to be brought about."

There is no provision made in the act which has to do with the establishing and maintaining of a district hospital, for a dissolution of the district or the discontinuance of the hospital after the same has once been erected.

Section 3148 G. C. (107 O. L. 497) provides that:

> "The commissioners of any two or more counties not to exceed ten, may form themselves into a joint board for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a district hospital, * * and may provide the necessary funds for the purchase of a site, * *."

Section 3150 G. C. provides that:

> "As soon as possible after organization, the joint board shall appoint a board of trustees to consist of one member from each county represented * *."

Section 3153 G. C. (107 O. L. 498) sets out the powers and duties of this board of trustees, which powers and duties have to do mainly with the detail work of operating said tuberculosis hospital.

We find the following provision in section 3152 G. C., in the matter of providing the necessary funds with which the institution may be maintained and operated:

"Sec. 3152. * * * The boards of commissioners of counties jointly maintaining a district hospital for tuberculosis shall make annual assessments of taxes sufficient to support and defray the necessary expense of maintenance of such hospital."

It will be noted that this duty of levying taxes is mandatory upon the boards of commissioners and undoubtedly mandamus would lie if any of the boards should refuse or fail to make such annual levy of taxes.

Said section further provides:

"The first cost of the hospital, and the cost of all betterments and additions thereto, shall be paid by the counties comprising the district, in proportion to the taxable property of each county outside of a municipality having a tuberculosis hospital as shown by their respective duplicates * * *."

Here again we find the provision mandatory in reference to the duty placed upon the various counties in providing the first cost of the hospital and the cost of all betterments and additions thereto.

It may further be said that the provisions of this act are in the main mandatory, and they all have to do with the establishing of a hospital and the maintenance and operation of the same, and, as said before, there is no provision made for the dissolution of the district when once established, or for the discontinuance of the hospital when once constructed.

The question then of course is, when the statutes make no provision for the discontinuance of a matter such as that which is provided for in the statutes, may the governing body or bodies nevertheless take legal action to dissolve and discontinue the same? It is my opinion that they could not so do. There are obligations to be satisfied, property to be disposed of and the interest of those treated in the same is to be considered, for all of which there is no provision made in the statutes. Neither do I believe that a court of equity could take jurisdiction of a matter of this kind and work out the rights of the parties interested in the same, without having some foundation in the law upon which to base its action. The courts have generally been averse to the idea that a corporation or quasi corporation may dissolve and discontinue in any other way than that provided for by statute.

In School District No. 1 vs. School District No. 4, 7 S. W. Rep. 285, in the opinion on p. 286 the court say:

"Each organized school district in the state is a body corporate, whose corporate life is of unlimited duration, and no power has been vested by law, either in the voters of such district or of all the districts in the township or in the boards of directors of such districts, or in the school commissioner of the county, to deprive them of their corporate existence, and in their stead create new districts."

In State of Oregon ex rel. vs. Hulin, 2 Ore. 306, the court uses the following language in the opinion:

"School districts are public corporations, and their corporate existence cannot be annulled except as provided in section 352, page 237 of the code, and the action for that purpose must be directed by the governor of the state."

In Bowen vs. King, 34 Vt. 156, it is stated in the syllabus:

"When such union district (school district) is once legally formed, it can only be dissolved by application to the county court under the statutes; neither of the towns out of which it is created can destroy it."

In the opinion on p. 165 the court say:

"The case then is left to stand upon the proper presumption to be raised from this long period of connected and harmonious action together, as a school district, and we are all of the opinion that it points to a fixed and permanent union district, indissoluble except in the mode pointed out by statute, rather than to the mere temporary arrangement provided for by the twenty-first section, which either party may dissolve at pleasure."

State vs. Henderson, 46 S. W. 1076, is a case which discusses at considerable length the question we have under consideration and the court arrives at the following conclusion:

"When once organized their corporate lives are unlimited and remain unchanged until they are changed in the manner prescribed by the legislature."

In this case the court was considering union school districts.

From all the above cases and others that might be cited, it seems clearly evident that an organization once formed in conformity to acts of the legislature cannot be dissolved and its operation discontinued, excepting in the manner provided for by law.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that there is no authority either in the joint board of county commissioners of the counties which make up this tuberculosis district, nor in the board of trustees, to dissolve the said union or to discontinue the work for which it was formed. The relief, if any, must be sought at the hands of the legislature itself.

While it has nothing to do with the answer to your question, yet I desire to call your attention to the fact that undoubtedly section 3153 G. C. (107 O. L. 498) is incorrectly numbered. This should be numbered 3151, instead of 3153, as is evident from the act itself.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF DELAWARE COUNTY—$40,000.00

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Delaware county, Ohio, in the sum of $40,000.00, for the stated purpose of meeting outstanding indebtedness payable from the bridge fund of said county.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 13, 1917, you adopted a resolution poviding for the purchase of the above issue of bonds subject to the approval of this department. Shortly after this resolution was adopted by you a transcript of the proceedings relating to said issue of bonds was submitted to this department, which transcript consisted only of the resolution providing for said issue. Under date of November 27, 1917, I returned said transcript to the county auditor with the information that the resolution was defective in a number of particulars, and advising him that before this department could further consider the matter, a new resolution providing for said issue of bonds would have to be adopted by the board of county commissioners in conformity to suggestions made in my letter, in which I further suggested that with the new resolution, further information should be given as a part of the transcript showing affirmatively that the items of indebtedness sought to be funded by said issue of bonds were in law and in fact legal and binding obligations of said county, which it was authorized to fund under the provisions of section 5656 G. C. No other or further transcript of the proceedings relating to said bond issue has been submitted to this department, and so far as I know, no further resolution has ever been adopted by the board of county commissioners of Delaware county providing for said issue of bonds. Under the circumstances, without any further statement in the premises, it seems clear that the only thing for you to do is to rescind your resolution providing for the purchase of this issue of bonds.

I might add, however, that from information gained by this department in conversation with present and former officials of Delaware county, it appears that a part of the indebtedness sought to be funded by this issue is of such a nature that as not to constitute a legal predicate for this issue of bonds. A part of said indebtedness is represented by claims of the Pennsylvania and Big Four Railroad Companies against Delaware county, as said county's share of the cost and expense of grade crossing elimination improvements at points where the tracks of said companies cross the Flint road on the line between Delaware and Franklin counties. By agreement between said counties and the railroad companies, these improvements were conducted to completion by the respective railroad companies, and so far as I know on information thus obtained by me, the claims of said railroad companies represent valid, binding and legal obligations against Delaware county, which it would be authorized to refund under section 5656 G. C., if from its limits of taxation it is unable to pay the same at maturity. Other items of indebtedness which the county seeks to fund by the above issue of bonds are represented by a number of promissory notes aggregating the sum of $30,000.00 held by certain banks in the city of Delaware, Ohio, and which were executed and delivered to said banks by the board of county commissioners of said county some years ago for the purpose of obtaining money to pay estimates presented by contractors from time to time for work done and material furnished in the construction and repair of a number of small bridges in said county.

In this connection it appears that at the time the county commissioners entered into contracts for the construction and repair of said bridges, there was but a small amount of money in the bridge fund of the county, which was wholly insufficient to pay the cost and expense of such bridge construction and repair. As I understand, no certificate was filed by the county auditor under section 5660 G. C., but notwithstanding this fact, the contractors entered into said contracts and proceeded with the work of such bridge construction and repair, and the contractors presented estimates from time to time on their respective contracts. There being no money in the bridge fund wherewith to pay the same, the county commissioners borrowed the money necessary from local banks as the same was needed and executed and delivered their promissory notes therefor. It is to repay said promissory notes that the above issue of bonds was provided for by the resolution above mentioned.

Under the circumstances it is more than doubtful whether the claims represented by said promissory notes are legal, valid and binding obligations of Delaware county such as may be refunded under section 5656 G. C.

I am therefore of opinion that said issue of bonds should be rejected, and your former resolution providing for the purchase of this issue of bonds rescinded.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR SAME MUST MAKE PROVISION FOR AN ANNUAL LEVY OF TAXES FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND PURPOSES.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VERONA VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT —$20,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Verona Village School District in the sum of $20,000.00, for the purpose of completing the construction of a partially built school house in said district.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript submitted to me of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Verona Village School District relating to the above issue of bonds, and regret to say that I am unable to approve said issue for the specific reason that the resolution providing for the issue of said bonds does not make provision for an annual levy of taxes for both interest and sinking fund purposes during the life of said bonds as required by section 11 of article XII of the state constitution.

The resolution providing for this issue of bonds provides that the bonds covering said issue shall be forty in number, of the denomination of $500.00 each, and numbered from 65 to 104 inclusive. The first two of these bonds, to wit: Numbers 65 and 66, are made payable April 1, 1938, and thereafter two of said bonds are to become due and payable at each recurring period of six months.

With respect to the matter of tax levies to meet the principal interest on these bonds, the resolution provides for a levy of taxes in each of the years 1917 to 1936 inclusive in the sum of $1,100.00, which is just the amount necessary to pay the annual interest on said bond issue. By said resolution no provision is made for any levy of taxes for the purpose of meeting the principal of said bonds until 1937, when the sum of $2,000.00 is to be levied for principal and $1,100.00 for interest, and thereafter a tax levy of $2,000.00 for principal, and the required amount for interest is to be levied annually up to and including the year 1946.

In a carefully considered opinion under date of September 12, 1914 (Annual Report of the Attorney-General, Vol. 2, page 1224), my predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, held that in the case of the issue of serial bonds the provisions of section 11 of article XII of the state constitution makes the requirement that in the legislation providing for the issue of such bonds, provision should be made for an annual levy of taxes between the incurring of the indebtedness and the date of maturity of the last of the series for both interest and sinking fund purposes, and that such annual levies for sinking fund purposes should be substantially equal in amount and distributed over the entire number of years during the life of said bonds.

It is obvious that the provision made for interest and sinking fund levies in the resolution here under consideration falls far short of the requirements of said constitutional provision as same has been construed by my predecessor. I have no disposition to depart from the views expressed by Mr. Hogan in the opinion above referred to, and you will recall that I have heretofore disapproved bond issues, for the reason that the provision made for tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes in the resolution providing for the issue of such bonds, required levies for sinking fund purposes to be deferred for a considerable period of time after the date of the bonds. In some of such cases the violations of the constitutional provision were not nearly so flagrant as that presented in this case. As an instance of this kind I cite to you the case of the proposed bond issue of Bellefontaine City School District in the sum of $25,000.00, which was disapproved by me by opinion of recent date solely on the point here involved.

In conclusion I may say that the provisions of section 11 of article XII of the state constitution do not require the authority issuing bonds to set out in the legislation providing for the issue of such bonds, the specific amounts to be levied for interest and sinking fund purposes in each of the years during the life of said bonds, but if such specific amounts are set out as the amounts required to be levied for such purposes annually, they must not be such as if observed will require the tax levying authority to violate the intent and spirit of said constitutional provision.

There are some other circumstances and matters relating to this issue of bonds which are not entirely satisfactory to me, but inasmuch as I feel compelled to disapprove said bond issue for the reason above stated, it will serve no useful purpose for me to discuss the other matters which I have in mind, and which were suggested by a consideration of the transcript submitted.

For the reasons above stated it is my opinion that you should not purchase said bonds, and that your resolution providing for the purchase of said bonds conditional on the approval of this department should be rescinded.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

To Robert L. Johnson, lease of 50 feet of the outer slope of the north embankment at Buckeye Lake for cottage and landing purposes	200 00
To Wm. H. Wert, lease of 31 feet of the berme embankment of the Ohio Canal in the city of Akron	333 33⅓
To John R. Beatley, lease of reservoir embankment near Russell's Point at Indian Lake	3,066 66

I have carefully examined these leases, find them correct in form and legal, and have therefore endorsed my approval thereon, and am forwarding them to the governor of Ohio for his consideration.

However, I desire to call attention to two irregularities. There are no witnesses to the signature of the lessee, in the lease made to John R. Allen. While it would be advisable to have witnesses as to his signature, the omission of the same is possibly not vital.

In the lease made to John R. Beatley, the lands leased were appraised at $3,066.66, while the consideration set forth in the lease is $182.00. Section 13966 G. C., found in the supplement to the General Code, provides that lands shall not be leased at a lower rental than the amount which would be the equivalent of six per cent. of the appraised value of the land leased. Six per cent. of $3,066.66 is $184.00. Therefore the annual rental of this land should be $184.00, instead of $182.00. However, inasmuch as this amount is for all practical purposes equivalent to six per cent. of the appraised value, I approved the lease.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMAN'S COMPENSATION—EMPLOYERS CARRYING THEIR OWN INSURANCE REQUIRED TO PAY PREMIUM INTO SURPLUS FUND OF STATE INSURANCE FUND—INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION HAS NO AUTHORITY TO WAIVE SUCH PREMIUM.

The payment of the premium into the surplus fund of the state insurance fund, provided for by section 1465-54, paragraph 2, is required from every employer who desires to carry his own insurance under section 1465-69.

The industrial commission has no discretion to waive the payment of this premium, nor can it allow an employer to carry his own insurance under 1465-69, without the payment of such premium.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 17, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have made the following request for my opinion:

"The Air Nitrates Corporation, Agent of Ordnance Department, U. S. A., for the manufacture of ammonium nitrate by the cyanid processes, is desirous of operating in Ohio at Toledo and Cincinnati, under the provisions of section 22 of the workmen's compensation law. It wishes to enjoy the privileges of the act without complying with the provisions requiring the payment of the 5% premium, and asks that in this instance an exception be made. Therefore, we would like to have you determine the following questions:

First—Can this corporation operate under the act and avoid the 5% premium assessment?

Second—Has the industrial commission any right to waive the payment of the 5% premium?''

Section 22 of the workmen's compensation act (section 1465-69 General Code), provides in substance that such employers who will abide by the rules of the commission and are found to be of sufficient financial ability to render certain the payment of compensation to injured employes or to dependents of killed employes, and the furnishing of medical, surgical, nursing and hospital attention and services and medicine, funeral expenses, equal to, or greater than provided for by the act, and who do not desire to insure the payment thereof, or indemnify themselves against loss sustained by the direct payment thereof, may, upon a finding of such facts, by your commission, elect to carry their own insurance; that is, to pay individually, such compensation and furnish such medical services, etc., directly to injured employes or the dependents of such killed employe. This section further provides the furnishing of a bond by employers who elect to operate under this section, and then this section further provides:

''And said commission shall make and publish rules and regulations governing the mode and manner of making application and the nature and extent of the proof required to justify such finding of fact by said commission, as to permit such election, by such employers, which rules and regulations shall be general in their application, one of which rules shall provide that all employers electing directly to compensate their injured, and the dependents of their killed employes, as hereinbefore provided, shall pay into the state insurance fund, such amount, or amounts, as are required to be credited to the surplus in paragraph 2 of section 1465-54 General Code * * * * *.''

Paragraph 2 of section 1465-54 provides:

''2. Ten per cent. of the money that has heretofore been paid into the state insurance fund and ten per cent. of all that may hereafter be paid into such fund, shall be set aside for the creation of a surplus until such surplus shall amount to the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000), after which time the sum of five per cent. of all the money paid into the state insurance fund shall be credited to such surplus fund, until such time, as, in the judgment of said commission, such surplus shall be sufficiently large to guarantee a solvent state insurance fund.''

It is apparent from the above quoted provisions of the compensation law, that there is no discretion whatever given to you in the matter of the amount required to be paid by employers who desire to carry their own insurance into the surplus fund, provided for by section 1465-54. The amount is fixed by law and the law requires this payment as a necessary incident to the granting of authority to any employer to carry his own insurance. I am compelled, therefore, to answer each of your questions in the negative. You cannot, under the law, allow any employer to operate under this section without paying the 5% premium provided and you have no authority whatever to waive payment of this premium.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY DITCHES—MUST BE CONSTRUCTED UNDER EXPRESS CONTRACT—BID AND CONTRACTS MUST BE IN ACCORDANCE WITH SPECIFICATIONS—EFFECT OF VIOLATION OF INJUNCTION—ASSESSMENTS.

The construction of county ditches must in all cases be under express contract, and the commissioners have no power to incur liability for such construction otherwise than by such express contract.

The county commissioners have no authority to incur a liability by verbal promise to pay an extra amount for the removal of boulders in a sum to be ascertained after the construction of the work, and then be the subject of further agreement. All bids and contracts must be in accordance with the specifications of the engineer.

An act is not rendered void by reason of the fact that the party committing it was at the time enjoined therefrom by order of a court, the consequences of violating such injunction being the liability for a proceeding for contempt of court.

The Burns law, so-called, has no application to contracts for the construction of public improvements to be paid for by assessment upon the benefited parties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1918.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR.—On June 21, 1918, you requested an opinion from this department in the following communication:

"I desire your opinion as to whether or not the county auditor should issue a warrant for the sum of $1,100, being an estimate allowed by the commissioners, on a ditch contract for the removal of boulders. The facts are as follows:

Prior to June 3, 1916, specifications for the improvement of Stillwater creek in this county, had been prepared by the county engineer, in which specifications it was provided that the contractor should remove the earth and all other material to a certain depth and width. On June 2, 1916, an abutting owner, whose lands were affected by the proposed improvement, brought an action in the common pleas court of this county, enjoining the commissioners from proceeding with the sale and construction of said ditch. On June 3, 1916, the day set for the sale of the ditch, the work was sold to one Ed Bodette, for the sum of $42,900.00; that immediately thereafter, a written contract was entered into by the said county commissioners and the said Ed Bodette whereby it was provided that the work was to be done according to the specifications as above stated, which said specifications were made a part of the contract by stipulation in the contract, and with a verbal understanding, as I am informed, that the contract was not to be effective until the injunction suit had been disposed of and the bonds sold.

The contract, as entered into on that date, provided among other things that the contractor was to be paid for the removal of all boulders measuring more than three quarters of a cubic yard, and same to be adjusted on an equitable basis between the contractor and the commissioners of the county, to the satisfaction and acceptance of the commissioners. Estimates were made for the completion of the ditch, including the sale price and engineer's expenses, etc., but not including the removal of boulders. At the time of entering into this contract on June 3, 1916, the auditor did not make a certificate that there were funds available for the payment of the same, and in truth and in fact there were no funds available for the payment of the same.

On August 7, 1916, the injunction was dissolved, and thereafter bonds sold for the construction of the improvement. The fund is exhausted and the contractor is now asking payment for $1,100, which was allowed by the commissioners, but refused by the auditor on the grounds:

1. That the commissioners had no right to vary the terms of the specifications in their contract and add the item of payment for removal of boulders.

2. That at the time of entering into said pretended contract, the board of county commissioners had been enjoined from entering into the same.

3. That at the time of entering into said contract, there were no funds in the treasury to pay for same.

4. That at the time of entering into said contract, the auditor made no certificate that there were funds in the treasury to pay the same, and in truth and in fact there were no funds in the treasury to pay for the same, as provided in section 5660 of the General Code.

I desire your opinion as to whether, under these conditions, the county auditor should issue a warrant on the treasurer for the amount. I am of the opinion that he will not be compelled to do so, by reason of the absence of the auditor's certificate."

This request is accompanied by a copy of a contract, and has been supplemented by further information contained in a letter from you, and also in a letter from counsel for the contractor, dated July 27, 1918, to the effect that at the sale of the work it was announced that the contractor would be paid upon an equitable basis for the removal of boulders. This was confined to those larger than three-quarter cubic yards in size, and this provision is carried into the written contract. This answer has been delayed by correspondence including that above and other communications, among which are arguments on behalf of the contractor by his counsel in which his position is fully set out, and arguments made and authorities cited upon the different questions involved.

The first question presented by you is in my judgment the one of prime importance and involving the most difficulty. I shall therefore briefly discuss the others, leaving this till the last.

The second objection made to issuing the warrant is that at the time of entering into the contract there was an injunction in the court of common pleas preventing the same. This was afterwards dissolved, leaving the commissioners free to carry out the contract. It is not understood generally that an injunction preventing the performance of an act in and of itself renders that act void, but rather that it places the party performing the act in contempt of court and liable to punishment therefor. This is especially true when it afterwards transpires that the injunction should not have been issued. It seems the commissioners made this contract conditional upon the dissolution of the injunction. Under the above state of facts, it cannot be said that the contract was illegal upon that ground.

The third and fourth questions may be considered together. This applies to the operation of the so-called Burns law, G. C. 5660. It is frequently, if not generally true, that at the time of entering into the contract for the construction of a county ditch the funds are not in the treasury to pay for the same. This fund is almost always raised by the sale of bonds, and it is frequently and generally true that the bonds are not sold at the time of selling the work, or not issued and in process of sale. It has been decided that the Burns law has no application to contracts of this character for public improvements to be paid for by funds raised by assessment or apportionment.

Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S. 104; State vs. Gibson, 14 O. D. 513-520; Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S. 185.

Therefore, the objection of the auditor upon this ground could not be sustained.

The first objection above stated, however, presents greater difficulty, and I am forced to conclude, an insurmountable obstacle to compelling the auditor to issue this voucher. It involves the very essential nature of the authority of the commissioners in reference to these improvements. The reading of the statutes providing for the manner of making these improvements, or rather the official authority in making them, unquestionably conveys the idea that all work done in connection with the same is the subject of express contract. The argument in favor of the contractor must claim, and does claim, that there is authority in the commissioners to become obligated by implied contract. Section 6454 which includes the provisions for specifications, is as follows:

"If the county commissioners find for the improvement, they shall cause to be entered on their journal an order directing the county surveyor to go upon the line described in the petition, or as changed by them as provided in this chapter, and survey and level it, and set a stake at every hundred feet, numbering down stream, note the intersections of lines and boundaries of lands, townships and county lines, landmarks, bench-marks and road crossings, and make a report, profile and plat thereof, and estimate the number of cubic yards of earth or other substance to be removed, and the cost per cubic yard for each working section as hereinafter provided, and of each section of one hundred feet."

It must be noted that the estimate mentioned is of the number of cubic yards of earth or other substance to be removed, and the cost per cubic yard must be given for each working section. The general practice, I believe, is to estimate the removal of earth at a uniform figure, and this, no doubt, is usually correct, or as nearly so as is practicable. However, as different parts of this work may be sold to different contractors, it is possible, and in some instances would necessarily happen, that the estimated cost per cubic yard would be different in different sections.

Section 6481 is as follows:

"When an appeal has been taken, after the transcript of the proceedings before the probate judge and the other papers in the case are returned to the auditor's office, the county commissioners shall cause such entry to be made on their journal as will give effect to the verdict and findings of the jury. In such cases and in cases where no appeals have been taken, they shall fix a time for the public sale of the construction of the improvement in sections not less than one hundred feet nor more than sixteen thousand feet in length, or it may be sold as an entirety in the discretion of the county commissioners and county surveyor or engineer."

A single section might have no earth at all to remove, and might consist entirely of blasting rock, while other sections might he nothing but soft earth and easily removed. So that each particular section whether sold alone or in connection with others must necessarily be sold not to exceed its estimated cost, under the provisions of section 6482, which is as follows:

> "The commissioners shall cause notice to be given of the time and place of sale, and direct the county surveyor to attend and superintend and conduct it. He shall receive all bids for the construction of the improvement, make contracts with the lowest responsible bidder, and take good and sufficient bonds for the labor of the construction of the improvement, conditioned for the faithful performance of the contract so made, and for the completion of the work within the time fixed in the contract in a sum not less than the estimated value of the part bid off, and contracted to be performed by each. He shall furnish each contractor with specifications of the part bid off by him. No bid shall be entertained which exceeds the estimated cost of construction."

What becomes of the application of these sections requiring an express contract for the letting of this work, and that it be in accordance with the specifications, and that it be within a maximum cost of a certain number of dollars and cents ascertained beforehand, if the commissioners may leave some portion of the work afterwards to be paid for upon the principle of quantum meruit? It is true, the facts in this case present a strong argument as to the desirability of such authority. The parties about to contract did not, and could not know exactly the composition of the subject matter of the contract. If no boulders be found larger than may be picked up and removed readily by the dredge, commingled with the earth and other substance removed, the parties, of course, should not be called on to pay a price in excess of the value of the construction in that manner; while if it turn out that the boulders are so large that they cannot be so removed, and that no one will take the contract, except for an advance of a material amount over what the mere removal of earth would cost, then, of course, such contractor ought not, and could not be required to do the work at a loss.

This difficulty, however, was as well known to the legislature in passing these acts as it is to us now, and they did not see fit to make provision for it, it being evidently considered more important that the public should be protected from the possibility of peculations or unfair dealings in the letting of such contracts than that they might in all instances be entitled to make the same for the less amount.

If the commissioners could leave the performance of any part of the work to be settled afterwards upon the principles of implied contract, then necessarily they are the judges of what proportion of the work they may so let; and if they can let any of it in that manner, they can do the whole, and it would be at their option whether to comply with these statutes or proceed independently of them.

Counsel argue that what was done amounted to a change of the specifications, and authorities are cited to the effect that where the specifications and the contract differ, the latter is to govern. These authorities have been examined, and all found to be cases of private contract. That is, cases in which the parties had full capacity without any restraint to contract as far as they wished and proceed independently of express contract when they desired.

It is not disputed that private parties not bound to act in a particular manner in accordance with the statutes, may change their contract at will, and the specifications upon which work is done, or may entirely release contractors from complying with specifications, or either party release the other from any of the terms of the contract.

But we have here a matter of express statutory authority. Admitting that the commissioners might consent to a change in the specifications upon the date of sale, if the same were publicly done to the knowledge of all bidders, and all bids alike made upon such changed specifications, let us see whether what was done in this instance is a change of the specifications.

Upon examination it appears to be something else. It is really a waiver or express contradiction of one of the specifications, for the latter, undoubtedly, must have provided what the statute required—an estimate of the cost of the removal of earth or other material upon which an estimate was made, which was to be a maximum limit of each bid; but aside from this consideration, that is, the contradiction, which of course might be indulged if there were authority to modify the estimate, it seems not a change of the specifications, but a waiver of it.

We understand by "specification" something having exact definiteness. The very essential meaning of the word involves exact certainty. Specification is defined in the Century dictionary as,

> "An article, item or particular specified; a special plan, detail or reckoning upon which a claim, an accusation, an estimate, a plan or assertion is based; as the specifications of an architect, an engineer or an indictment," etc.

This argument seems to admit the necessity of specifications which must be exactly complied with when the claim is made that such specifications can be changed. To this claim I am inclined to assent, but cannot find that it is a change of the specification to drop it entirely. What has become of the estimate per cubic yard which is a part of these specifications? It was exact and certain, it was measured in quantity and ascertained as to price. Now you have discarded the estimate of quantity by withdrawing an unascertained part, and you have left the price entirely unspecified, not only as to this unascertained quantity, which is to consist of such boulders as the chances of nature have concealed from the sight of man, but thereby incidentally all the remainder, which is earth at an ascertained price.

Contractor's counsel, answering the suggestion as to the requirement of section 6482, state that the contract was let for the exact amount of the estimate. An answer to that might be, the contracor has been paid the exact amount of the estimate, the contract was not let for the amount of the amended estimate, and could not be, for the amount was not ascertained, and this is the very difficulty of the situation. The statutes require it to be ascertained. If you assume that the commissioners could and did change this estimate, if we may so call it, or waive a part of the terms of the estimate in the manner attempted, then logically you must say that the contract was not let in accordance with any estimate at all. According to the old familiar illustration of the chain, one link being broken is the same as if all were. The estimate being unsettled in an unascertained amount, is no longer an estimate of the entire cost.

I am solicitous to be right in this matter because of the gravity of a situation where the commissioners have made an express written contract, and wish to carry it out, as they are insisting on doing in this case, especially where fairness is in favor of its being carried out, as is stated in the present case.

The case of this contractor is singularly unfortunate. He entered into his contract at a time when prices were continually advancing. He was not enjoined himself or desisted from his contract because of the injunction against the other party to it. Fair treatment would have required that he be made a party so that he might avail himself of the injunction bond, but he was left out, and left to wait the law's delay, by which he is said to have lost a large amount, and would still be the loser if he were paid according to this additional agreement. He has been paid a portion of the extra compensation given him by the agreement, but much the smaller portion of it, and remains still a heavy loser.

The legislative department of the state, however, alone has the power to take such matters into consideration. This department is concluded by the law as it finds it to be.

Without assuming to volunteer opinions or advice to one who is already represented by eminent and able counsel, it may be said that the plaintiff in this injunction case ought to be liable for damages to this contractor; that is, ought not to be allowed to escape liability by leaving the contractor out of the suit, who so far as the injunction is concerned, might have gone ahead with the work. He ought not in this manner to be allowed to escape liability by turning his back on it. No opinion, however, is ventured as to such liability and no impropriety intended by the suggestion of the consideration of it.

The first question must be answered that the commissioners had no right to do what they did attempt to do—incur a liability upon an implied contract in the face of these statutes prohibiting the same.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND LEVIES—REDUCTION—LIMITATION. PREFERENCE—BUDGET COMMISSION, DUTY RELATIVE TO TAX LIMITATION — BONDS ISSUED PRIOR TO JANUARY 1, 1914, FOR LAWFUL PURPOSE ARE VALID—BONDS ISSUED AFTER JANUARY 1, 1914, FOR WHICH INTEREST AND SINKING FUND LEVIES CANNOT BE MADE WITHIN THE SMITH ONE PER CENT LAW ARE INVALID—WHEN TAX LIMITATION MAY BE EXCEEDED.

The interest and sinking fund levies are subject to reduction by the budget commission if in themselves, and without any levies for current expenses, they would cause any of the applicable limitations of the Smith 1 per cent law to be exceeded.

All interest and sinking fund levies of a municipal corporation, on account of bonds issued since June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people, must be limited to five mills, and further limited to such an amount as together with the levies of the state and other taxing districts applicable to the same territory will produce an aggregate of not more than ten mills.

Sinking fund levies of one taxing district are not preferred to the current expense levies of another taxing district.

The budget commission in enforcing the ten mill limitation must first bring down all estimates separately to such point as to conform to the five, three and two mill limitations, of section 5649-3a G. C., and then, exercising reasonable discretion, further reduce the budgets of such districts as require reduction, having regard to the proportions indicated by section 5649-3a G. C.

All bonds issued prior to February 14, 1914, for a lawful purpose, and sold for not less than par and accrued interest, are valid, regardless of their original infirmities.

Bonds issued after February 14, 1914, upon a tax duplicate of such amount and in the face of previous valid bond issues of such sinking fund requirements as that by calculations based upon the then current duplicate it might have been demonstrated that the annual interest and sinking fund levies required to be made by Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution could not be made within the applicable limitations of the Smith 1 per cent law, are, for that reason alone and to the extent of the excess, invalid.

All municipal sinking fund levies are preferred levies, including items for accumulated deficiencies in the bond accounts and items to pay final judgments; but if the municipality asks for levies to pay the interest and principal of invalid bonds, the budget commission may disallow such levies, and if possible, within the limits of the Smith law, allow levies for current expenses in their stead.

Sinking fund levies on account of bonds issued prior to June 2, 1911, and those thereafter issued without a vote of the people are subject to reduction by the budget commission only when necessary to enforce the fifteen mill limitation of section 5649-5b G. C.

Under favor of sections 5649-5, et seq., G. C., the taxing district within which the five and ten mill limitations of sections 5649-3a and 5649-2 G. C., respectively, are insufficient to provide necessary revenue, may submit the question of extra tax levies to a vote of the people, but the approval of the electors given to the taxing authorities of one or more taxing districts levying within the same territory can not authorize a combined maximum rate in excess of fifteen mills; so that if the number of mills approved by the people, together with other levies, exceeds fifteen mills, the budget commission must reduce the special levy with other levies, so that the fifteen mill limitation will not be exceeded; and so that further, if the electors of a given territory approve levies by different authorities within that territory, which in combination will cause the fifteen mill limitation to be exceeded, the margin within the fifteen mill limitation must be apportioned by the budget commission between the two taxing districts which have been authorized to make additional levies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 19, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN.—I am in receipt of communication from the prosecuting attorney of Lucas county, who encloses a letter addressed to him by the county auditor of that county, in which certain facts relating to the tax levies in the village of Maumee are set forth. Both the auditor and the prosecuting attorney speak in their letters of consulting the tax commission with respect to the questions submitted and this fact, together with the very great importance of those questions, has impelled me to address this opinion to the commission.

I quote the following from the letter of the auditor to the prosecuting attorney:

> "The village of Maumee has submitted its budget to the county auditor to be acted upon by the budget commission at its annual meeting on the first Monday of August. This budget requests a levy for village purposes amounting to $54,632.33 of which
> $16,541.14 is for current expenses, $23,678.63 for interest and sinking fund for debt incurred after June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people, $11,612.56 for debt incurred prior to June 2, 1911, and $2,800.00 for debt incurred after June 2, 1911, by a vote of the people.
> The first two items come under that provision of the Smith law which provides a maximum levy of 5 mills. The estimated valuation of the village for 1918 is $3,428,410.00. Five mills on this valuation would produce $17,142.05, which is not sufficient to even take care of debts, leaving nothing for operating expenses.

The state and county levy will be about 2.044 mills and as this levy must be uniform in all taxing districts, leaves 7.956 for other purposes. The road levy under section 6949, amounting to 0.523 mills, must be taken care of, leaving 7.433 mills to be divided between the village and schools.

The board of education requests a maximum levy of 5 mills and they must have that levy to provide enough money to run the schools.

Now the question that I want to ask is whether the budget commission is compelled to allow the village its maximum levy of 5 mills, or whether a greater levy may be allowed for village purposes within the 10 mills, which would leave the schools less than one-half of the levy required, or whether the budget commission, under the circumstances, may allow the schools the amount necessary, thus cutting the amount necessary for village debts?"

The astonishing conditions disclosed by this letter raise questions which require consideration of the following statutes:

Section 5649-1.—"In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

Section 5649-1a.—"All bonds heretofore issued by any political subdivision for a lawful purpose which have been sold for not less than par and accrued interest and the proceeds thereof paid into the treasury, shall be held to be legal, valid and binding obligations of the political subdivision issuing the same."

Section 5649-2.—"Except as otherwise provided in section 5649-4 and section 5649-5 of the General Code, the aggregate amount of taxes that may be levied on the taxable property in any county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district, shall not in any one year exceed ten mills on each dollar of the tax valuation of the taxable property of such county, township, city, village, school district or other taxing district for that year, and such levies in addition thereto for sinking fund and interest purposes as may be necessary to provide for any indebtedness heretofore incurred or any indebtedness that may hereafter be incurred by a vote of the people."

Section 5649-3a.—"* * * The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a county, for county purposes, on the taxable property in the county on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year three mills. The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a municipal corporation on the taxable property in the corporation, for corporation purposes, on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year five mills. The aggregate of all taxes that may be levied by a township, for township purposes, on the taxable property in the township on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year two mills. The local tax levy for all school purposes shall not exceed in any one year five mills on the dollar of valuation of taxable property in any school district. Such limits for county, township, municipal and school levies shall be exclusive of any special levy, provided for by a vote of the electors, special assessments, levies for road taxes that may be worked out by the taxpayers, and levies and assessments in special districts created for road or ditch improvements, over which the budget commissioners shall have no control. * * *."

Section 5649-3c.—"The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him by the boards and officers named in section 5649-3a of this act, together with an estimate to be prepared by the auditor of the amount of money to be raised for state purposes in each taxing district in the county, * * *. The budget commissioner shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district for state, county, township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district purposes. * * * If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each township, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, within the limits provided by law. * * *."

Section 5649-4.—"For the emergencies mentioned in sections forty-four hundred and fifty, forty-four hundred and fifty-one, fifty-six hundred and twenty-nine, seventy-four hundred and nineteen and 7630-1 of the General Code, the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax sufficient to provide therefor irrespective of any of the limitations of this act."

Section 5649-5.—"The county commissioners of any county, the council of any municipal corporation, the trustees of any township, or any board of education may, at any time, by a majority vote of all the members elected or appointed thereto, declare by resolution that the amount of taxes that may be raised by the levy of taxes at the maximum rate authorized by sections 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the General Code as herein enacted within its taxing district, will be insufficient and that it is expedient to levy taxes at a rate, in excess of such rate and cause a copy of such resolution to be certified to the deputy state supervisors of the proper county. Such resolution shall specify the amount of such proposed increase of rate above the maximum rate of taxation and the number of years not exceeding five during which such increased rate may be continued to be levied."

Section 5649-5a.—"Such proposition shall be submitted to the electors of such taxing district at the November election that occurs more than twenty days after the adoption of such resolution. * * *."

Section 5649-5b.—"If a majority of the electors voting thereon at such election vote in favor thereof, it shall be lawful to levy taxes within such taxing district at a rate not to exceed such increased rate for and during the period provided for in such resolution, but in no case shall the combined maximum rate for all taxes levied in any year in any county, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, under the provisions of this and the two preceding sections and sections 5649-1, 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the General Code as herein enacted, exceed fifteen mills."

Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

One question presented by the auditor's communication, respecting the amount of $16,541.14, asked by the village of Maumee for current expenses, can be at least partially answered without going very far in the discussion of these sections of the statutes and the constitution, upon the reasoning contained in the dictum of Donahue J., in Rabe et al. vs. Board of Education, etc., et al., 88 O. S. 403, at p. 422, as follows:

> "At this time, under the amendment to the Constitution (section 11, Article XII) which provides that no bonded indebtedness of the state or any political subdivision thereof shall be incurred or renewed, unless in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and provide for a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity, it is of the utmost importance that at the time of the incurring of such indebtedness the other needs of the political subdivision proposing to issue the bonds should be taken into account, for this levy must continue during the term of the bonds in an amount sufficient to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption, even though the amount should exhaust the entire income available from taxation and without regard to the current expenses. In other words, under this provision of the constitution, the payment of interest and the retirement of bonds are to be provided for first, and the current expenses become a secondary consideration. This amendment, however, has no application to this case."

Since this dictum was uttered in 1913, the General Assembly has passed section 5649-1 G. C., above quoted, which, read in connection with the remainder of the sections constituting the Smith 1 per cent law, carries out the full import of Judge Donahue's analysis of the intent of Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution, and declares rather unequivocally that levies for interest and sinking fund shall have precedence over all other levies and shall be put on the duplicate for the full amount thereof, at least as against any levies for current expenses.

To the extent then that proper levies for interest and sinking fund purposes exhaust the levying power of the municipality under any of the limitations of the Smith 1 per cent law, it is obvious that such exhaustion must be at the expense of levies for other current purposes.

There is, therefore, no escape from the conclusion that if the levies which may be made for the village of Maumee, on account of interest and sinking fund purposes, go to the full extent of the power of that village to levy on the grand duplicate of taxable property therein, the village can have no levy whatsoever for current expenses and must find some other means of raising money for such expenses, than the levy of taxes on the duplicate.

The next question which arises is that respecting the power of the village of Maumee to levy for interest and sinking fund purposes on account of bonds issued since June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people. Levies for such purposes are not expressly exempted from any of the limitations of the Smith 1 per cent law. So far as the sections imposing such limitations are concerned, they appear to be subject to the ten mill limitation prescribed by section 5649-2 supra, and the five mill limitation prescribed by section 5649-3a, and of course the fifteen mill limitation prescribed by section 5649-5b, above quoted.

I should remark, of course, that it would be inconceivable to me, if not otherwise explained, how a village with a tax duplicate of less than three and one-half million dollars could have needed for a normal interest and sinking fund a levy of $23,678.63 for interest and sinking fund purposes, on account of debts incurred within a space of seven years, without a vote of the people.

I am informed by the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices that the debt limitations applicable to municipal corporations and provided for by sections 3939, et seq., G. C., have been grossly violated in the village of Maumee. How the village has managed to dispose of its securities, I can not imagine; but in so far as bonds issued prior to the passage of section 5649-1a G. C. are concerned, they would appear to be validated by that section, though issued in violation of the debt limitation prescribed by the municipal code. But if any of the bonds at present outstanding were issued prior to the passage of the act of 1914, and if their existence alone would exhaust the debt limitation of, for example, sections 3941 and 3952 G. C., then it is apparent that all bonds issued subsequently to the passage of section 5649-1a, without a vote of the people, must have been invalid. At any rate, it is not my present purpose to go into the question of the validity of any of the bonds of this class as dependent upon the observance of the Longworth act so-called, but as the basis for further discussion I shall assume the validity of all outstanding bonds of this class as against objections that might be raised under the Longworth act and in the face of section 5649-1a G. C.

I think it is obvious that the main question now under consideration, which is as to the extent, in amount or rate, to which the village of Maumee may lawfully levy taxes on the general duplicate for interest and sinking fund purposes on account of bonds issued since June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people, really divides itself into three parts, as follows:

1. Its power to make such levies on account of bonds issued under these circumstances between June 2, 1911 and January 1, 1913, when Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution went into effect and before section 5649-1 was amended and supplemented .

2. The right of the village to levy taxes on account of bonds issued between January 1, 1913, and February 14, 1914, when the act amending and supplementing section 5649-1 G. C., which was an emergency law, was approved and went into effect.

3. The right of the village to levy such taxes on account of bonds issued between February 14, 1914 and the present time, within which period there has been no change in the statutory law of the state, nor in the constitution, respecting the subject under consideration.

With respect to the first question, it will be noted that section 5649-1 G. C., as in force from and after June 2, 1911, to February 14, 1914, read as follows:

> Section 5649-1.—"In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes."

Of similar import to this statute were numerous provisions in the municipal code, as for instance, in section 3953 G. C., to the effect expressed in that section, which reads as follows:

Section 3953.—"For the payment of all bonds herein authorized, unless the interest thereon and redemption thereof is otherwise provided for, council shall levy each year during the periods the bonds have to run, a tax in addition to all levies authorized by law, sufficient to pay the interest thereon as it matures, and provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity."

I might say, with respect to this section, that " a tax in addition to all levies authorized by law" is not to be so construed as to authorize the levy of taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes in excess of the Smith law limitations. The Smith law, which is of course inconsistent with this provision, if interpreted as permitting levies without limit, went into force at a date later than did section 3953 G. C. in its present form (see 103 O. L. 262), and the whole legislative history of the relation between the Longworth act and the Smith law shows that no such result was contemplated (see the Smith-Alsdorf act, 101 O. L. 430).

At the time the Smith law was adopted in its original form, there were repeated sections, both in that law itself and elsewhere in the General Code, to the effect that interest and sinking fund levies, on account of bonds lawfully issued, should be made by the taxing authorities.

The question which now arises is as to whether or not section 5649-1 G. C. in its original form constituted an implied exception to the remaining provisions of the same act, so that interest and sinking fund levies on account of bonds lawfully issued would by force of its provisions have to be made regardless of any of the limitations of the law. I think a negative answer to this question is compelled by an examination of the original Smith law; that is to say, so far as that law was concerned interest and sinking fund levies, though preferred in the sense that it was the mandatory duty of the taxing authorities to make them to the extent that the limitations of the law would permit, were not exempt from the appropriate limitations thereof. To hold otherwise, would render nonsensical section 5649-2 G. C. as it was originally enacted. I do not quote that section in its original form, as it was not radically different, in the respect under consideration, from that in which it is now found. It is unquestionable, however, that this section by a necessary inference limited the taxes that might be levied to provide for future indebtedness incurred without a vote of the people.

The same inference is irresistible as applied to section 5649-3a G. C. and I can come to no other conclusion than that under the original Smith law levies for bonds issued after it went into effect, without a vote of the people, were subject to the five and ten mill limitations when made by a village.

I have not been unmindful of the phraseology of section 5649-5b G. C. as it was originally enacted. It then read:

"Section 5649-5b.—If a majority of the electors voting thereon at such election vote in favor thereof it shall be lawful to levy taxes within such taxing district at a rate not to exceed such increased rate for and during the period provided for in such resolution, but in no case shall the combined maximum rate for all taxes levied in any year in any county, city, village, school district or other taxing district, under the provisions of this and the two preceding sections and sections 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the General Code as herein enacted, exceed fifteen mills."

This section, it will be noted, does not mention section 5649-1 G. C. and it might be argued that on that account sinking fund levies were not subject to the fifteen mill limitation. I think it is clear, however, that any levy subject to section 5649-2 G. C. was likewise subject to section 5649-5b G. C., and without further discussion of this point I repeat the conclusion above expressed, that interest and sinking fund levies on account of bonds issued after the Smith 1 per cent law went into effect were under the law in its original form subject to the five mill and ten mill limitations thereof. In so holding I am in accord with numerous previous opinions of this office which I shall not take time to mention.

The effect of this holding of course is to read into sections like section 3953 G. C. the implied provision resulting from the subsequent adoption of the Smith law, that the sinking fund levies shall be subject to the limitations of the last named act. It follows that no holder of bonds issued while the law was in this state could complain if by the operation of the limitations applicable to tax levies the levies necessary to meet the sinking fund and interest requirements of his issue could not be made in any given year. It might even follow, on reasoning similar to that which I shall have occasion hereafter to employ, and particularly on the authority of Rabe vs. Board of Education, supra, though not that portion of the opinion which has been quoted, that bonds issued during the period now under discussion, as to which it could be foreseen with certainty that the necessary interest and sinking fund levies could not be made within the applicable limitations of the Smith law, the calculations being based upon the duplicate for the year of the issue, would be wholly illegal and void.

This question, however, is of no present moment, for the reason above mentioned, in dealing with the possible invalidity of the bonds, because of the direct limitations of the Longworth act. That is to say, by force of section 5649-1a G. C., which I have quoted, all bonds issued for a lawful purpose and sold for not less than par and accrued interest were validated. I can not, therefore, go so far as to say that any bonds of the village of Maumee issued prior to February 14, 1914, are illegal, in the absence of information to the effect that they were not issued for a lawful purpose, or that if issued for a lawful purpose they were, in addition to having been issued without regard to the ability of the municipality to levy taxes, also sold for less than par and accrued interest.

Let it be then, that bonds of this class are valid obligations of the village. It would follow that by force of section 5649-1 in its present form, interest and sinking fund levies referable to those bonds must be made unless they of themselves would cause the five and ten mill limitations to be exceeded. But it may be that enough of the total of such $23,700.00 which is asked for on account of the interest and sinking fund requirements of bonds issued after June 2, 1911, represents the requirements of bonds issued prior to February 14, 1914, to make it necessary for me to consider whether and to what extent levies on account of such requirements are now subject to the limitations of the Smith 1 per cent law.

As we have seen, the last amendment of this law consisted in the changes made in 1914 in the phraseology of section 5649-1 thereof and the enactment of the curative section 5649-1a. The latter has been sufficiently dealt with and I shall now consider whether or not the amendments made in section 5649-1 were such as to affect the application to sinking fund levies of sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a G. C.

The particular language of the amendment made in 1914 of section 5649-1, which requires examination in this question is the phrase "and for the whole amount thereof." Bearing in mind that this language was inserted in this section by the legislature subsequently to the last amendment of section 5649-2 and to the enactment of section 5649-3a (which has not been changed), does such subsequent amendment of section 5649-1 have the effect of requiring interest and sinking fund levies to be placed on the duplicate "for the full amount thereof," regardless of the limitations imposed by these other sections? If the amendment does have this effect, it must be on the principle that as between two inconsistent legislative enactments the later in point of time must prevail. This process is sometimes spoken of somewhat inaccurately as "implied amendment" or "implied repeal." Before the principle can operate, it must appear that the later and the earlier statutes are irreconcilably inconsistent with each other, so that both can not stand and one must necessarily yield.

It becomes necessary, therefore, to inquire whether, having regard to the whole framework of the Smith 1 per cent law and the fact that section 5649-1 G. C. is a part of that law, i. e., is a section in pari materia with the remaining sections of the law, there is such irreconcilable inconsistency between it in its present form and sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a G. C. Of course such inconsistency as might possibly exist could only relate to sinking fund and interest levies and whatever effect the subsequent amendment of section 5649-1, which deals with such levies exclusively, might have upon the other two sections named, would be limited to the application of the latter to such sinking fund and interest levies.

The answer to this question is furnished by the qualifying phrase found in section 5649-1, as amended, viz., "within the limitations now prescribed by law." In other words, the levy sufficient to provide for interest and sinking fund purposes which is to be "placed before and in preference to all other items and for the full amount thereof" is such levy only as can be made "within the limitations now prescribed by law." The legislature could scarcely, without mentioning the other sections of the Smith 1 per cent law by number, have indicated more clearly its intention to keep interest and sinking fund levies subject to the limitations applicable to them at the time section 5649-1 was amended, than by the use of this phrase. I have no hesitancy, therefore, in answering the question which I have just raised, by the statement that sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a G. C. impose limitations which continue to apply to the interest and sinking fund levies, to which they applied when section 5649-1 was amended, to the same extent as they applied to such levies before that section was amended. So that, as I have stated, it is only such interest and sinking fund levies as can be made without violating any of the applicable limitations of the Smith law that are entitled to be placed on the duplicate "for the full amount thereof," under favor of section 5649-1 G. C.

It follows, therefore, that despite the validating clause found in section 5649-1a G. C., the interest and sinking fund levies on account of bonds issued without a vote of the people since June 2, 1911, continue to be and now are subject to the five mill limitation of section 5649-3a and the ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 G. C.

To hold such levies subject to the limitation of section 5649-3a, is to say that no village can levy for the interest and sinking fund purposes of such bonds in any year more than five mills which, as applied to the village of Maumee, means $17,142.05. But it does not therefore follow that this rate in mills and this amount in dollars can be levied for such purposes by the village of Maumee, for these figures represent the result of the application of but one of two applicable limitations of the law. We have still to account for the result of the application of section 5649-2 G .C ., which is to the effect that the aggregate levies made upon any taxable property anywhere, for this and other purposes, subject to the limitations of that section, shall not exceed ten mills.

This section of itself is of course unenforceable. It requires the machinery of the budget commission to put it into complete effect. The sections above quoted show that it is the duty of the budget commission to scale down levies made in a given taxing district, so that the aggregate shall not exceed the ten mill limitation. In so doing the budget commission is bound to respect not only the needs of the political subdivisions levying within any taxing district, but also the proportions in which they are authorized to levy taxes as indicated by section 5649-3a.

State ex rel. Sanzenbacher, 84 O. S. 506. Rabe vs. Board of Education, supra. State ex rel. vs. Patterson, 93 O. S. 25.

It is obvious that if the property in a given territory is subject to the levies of the state and all four of the taxing districts mentioned in section 5649-3a G. C., the enforcement of the limitation now under discussion, through the medium of the budget commission, requires something to give way; for the aggregate rate of the levies as limited by section 5649-3a is fifteen mills, to which must of course be added the state levies (other than that for the state highway improvement fund) which are subject to the limitation of section 5649-2 G. C. If all the four taxing districts mentioned in section 5649-3a G. C. ask for levies up to the limits therein mentioned, it is obvious that in order to enforce the limitation of section 5649-2 an aggregate rate of fifteen and a fraction mills must be reduced to ten mills. Despite the fact that discretion is indubitably lodged in the budget commission when acting in this way, it would be a gross abuse of that discretion to make the reduction at the expense of one taxing district or in favor of another. So that while no strict mathematical formula need be worked out by the budget commission, all districts, however great their needs, must share in the necessary reductions.

In the case at hand it is stated that the rate of the state and the county levies can be estimated at this time at 2.044 mills. As this rate involves a county levy of considerably less in mills than the county might ask for under section 5649-3a G. C., and it is impossible in practice to reduce the county levy which must be uniform throughout the county, to meet the various situations arising in the numerous taxing districts of the county; and as finally the state levy is not subject to reduction by the budget commission at all, it is clear that, as the auditor intimates, it is useless to think about reducing this levy. The deputy auditor, who furnishes the figures which I have before me, does not make any statement respecting township levies applicable in the territory of the village of Maumee. I assume, however, that such township levies as would be subject to the two and ten mill limitations are neglible in amount and that such reductions as might be made in them by the budget commission would not materially affect the problem. Therefore, while pointing out that these levies, together with those hereinafter to be considered, must share in the necessary reductions, substantially in the proper proportions, I pass to the consideration of the respective claims of the village and the school district, which levy over common territory and come most sharply into competition with each other under the circumstances of this case.

Now, such levies as the school district must make within the limitations now under consideration are all for current expenses, such as tuition fund and contingent fund purposes; while it is obvious that the great bulk at least of the levies which the village may make, subject to these limitations, are, by reason of the requirements of section 5649-1 G. C., interest and sinking fund levies.

The question now is as to whether the current expense levies of the school district must yield preference to the sinking fund levies of the village or vice versa. Indeed, I shall consider the further question as to whether the budget commission may lawfully, in the proper discharge of its duties, afford preference to the levies of either district over those of the other.

I insert here again the statement that I am considering thus far only so much of the sinking fund levies asked for by the village of Maumee as represent the requirements of bonds issued between June 2, 1911, and February 14, 1914; all of which bonds must be considered as valid and legal obligations of the village of Maumee, because of the curative provisions of section 5649-1a G. C., enacted on the last named date. The commission will remember likewise that in the absence of specific facts on the point, I am assuming that of the total of $23,678.63 asked by the village for interest and sinking fund levies on account of bonds issued since June 2, 1911, without a vote of the people, a large enough proportion represents bonds issued prior to February 14, 1914, to raise the question now under consideration.

The first problem encountered in considering this question is again one respecting the meaning and application of section 5649-1 G. C. in its present form. It will be remembered that that section declares that interest and sinking fund levies made within the limitations applicable to them shall be placed upon the duplicate "before and in preference to all other items." Does this language have the effect of making the sinking fund levies of one district, made within the limitations of section 5649-3a G. C., applicable to such district, preferred over the current expense levies of another district levying in the same territory for the purpose of the enforcement by the budget commission of the limitation of section 5649-2 G. C.? The answer to this question is in the negative. As I have pointed out, section 5649-1 G. C. does not give preference to any sinking fund levies until "the limitations now prescribed by law" have been satisfied.

The ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 G. C. is just as much one of the "limitations now prescribed by law" as is, for example, the five mill limitation of section 5649-3a. One can not say that a sinking fund levy has been made "within the limitations now prescribed by law," when the single limitation of section 5649-3a G. C. has alone been satisfied; that prescribed by section 5649-2 must be enforced before this condition is satisfied.

If the General Assembly had intended the result now under consideration, it would have used the phrase "within the limitations now prescribed by section 5649-3a G. C.," instead of the phrase which it did use, viz., "within the limitations now prescribed by law." This reasoning will of itself yield the result that as between two taxing districts competing for the right to levy upon the property within a common territory, no levies of one district, whether sinking fund levies or other levies, are as a matter of law preferred to particular kinds of levies of another district. However, the consequences of the contrary interpretation would be so dire that, even if the sections which I have considered were on their face susceptible of the other interpretation, such a meaning would have to be rejected.

The case now under consideration illustrates what these consequences would be. If the village of Maumee is entitled to exhaust the five mill limitation of section 5649-3a G. C., on account of its sinking fund levies, regardless of the limitation of section 5649-2 G. C., then in the case at hand the practical result would be to throw upon the school district the negative burden of practically the entire reduction which would have to be made in order to enforce the ten mill limitation of the latter section. In other words, the result would be that the school district would be deprived of money needed to run its schools because the village had an abnormal bonded indebtedness. The legislature never intended any such result, partial though it was to sinking fund levies, when it amended section 5649-1 G. C.

While Rabe vs. Board of Education, supra, does not decide the question, the following language from the opinion of Donahue, J., in that case may well be applied to this question (pp. 417-419).

> "The taxing authorities are authorized to certify to the budget commissioners levies aggregating fifteen mills on the dollar of the tax valuation, and in case that is done it is the positive duty of the budget commissioners to reduce that amount to ten mills on the dollar. The only reasonable basis on which to estimate the amount of income that may be anticipated by an issue of bonds is the proportion of the maximum levy the taxing authority proposing to issue the bonds may certify to the budget commissioners to the total maximum levies that may be certified by all the taxing authorities in that district. The total maximum rate that can be certified by a board of education * * * is five mills, which is just one-third of the total maximum that can be certified * * * by all the taxing authorities in any taxing district. This court has held in the case of The State, ex rel. City of Toledo, vs. Sanzenbacher, 84 Ohio St., 506-507, that the budget commissioners are not required to reduce the levies certified to them in proportion to the amount that each taxing authority is anthorized to levy, but that in making such reduction they should give due regard to this proportion. * * *.

If all the taxing authorities within any one taxing district were to issue bonds in anticipation of taxes to be levied at the maximum rate that they are authorized to certify to the budget commissioners, without reference to the fact that it is the duty of the budget commissioners to reduce the total amount of the tax levy certified to them to ten mills on the dollar of the tax valuation, it would follow that bonds would be issued largely in excess of the income to be anticipated from taxes levied or to be levied, for it is not possible that all of these taxing authorities may levy the maximum rate they are authorized to certify to the budget commissioners."

Judge Donahue was talking about levies to pay the interest and retire the principal of bonds when he made these remarks, though he did not have before him, of course, section 5649-1 G. C. in its present form.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I am of the opinion that not only must the levies of the village of Maumee, on account of bonds issued between June 2, 1911, and February 14, 1914, be limited in rate to five mills, but that it is the duty of the budget commissioners of Lucas county further to reduce such levies, if necessary, in order to enforce the ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 G. C.

In this same connection I advise that while I have no doubt of the truth of the representation that the village school district is in need of the full levy of five mills, in order to run its schools properly during the fiscal year for which the levy is now being made, it is no more entitled to such full levy of five mills for these purposes than is the village entitled to such full levy for its sinking fund purposes. The two districts stand on a perfect legal equality before the budget commission, when that body is engaged in scaling down levies in order to enforce the ten mill limitation. It is true, as I have said, that the budget commission possesses discretion in this matter and need not scale down the two districts with perfect arithmetical equality. It may afford some preference to the one or the other taxing district, and, provided it does not abuse this discretion, its administrative determination is not open to judicial review.

State ex rel. vs. Patterson, supra.

However, the budget commissioners can not shut their eyes to the legal equality of the two districts as I have defined it, and some reduction, at least approximating a pro rata scaling down, must be made in the levies of both districts, in so far as such reduction is necessary, in order to bring the combined levies of the municipality, on account of the particular bonds now under discussion, together with the levies of the school district which are subject to the limitations under discussion, within the limitation of section 5649-2 G. C.

I should say here, however, that so far as section 5649-1 G. C. is concerned, the levies to which it gives preference and requires that they be made in full if within the limitations, are interest and sinking fund levies for bonds. It is not every levy that may be called a "sinking fund levy," that comes within the words of the statute. If—as the figures incline me strongly to suspect—the village of Maumee has in the past neglected to make proper sinking fund levies and has now accumulated a deficiency in the sinking fund, which it is seeking to make up in a single year, I am not at all certain that a levy for this purpose would be as a whole subject to the preference given by the section which I have quoted.

Properly understood, a sinking fund levy is an annual apportionment of such part of an entire bonded indebtedness as represents an aliquot part of the entire indebtedness, divided by the number of years which it has to run. Levies measured in amount by this rule of amortization are indeed entitled to preference as against the other levies of the district; but I doubt whether a levy of more than this amount in any one year, though made necessary, perhaps, in a sense, by the omission of the proper authorities to make such levies in previous years, is to the extent of the excess a preferred levy within the intendment of the section. This question is not very important in considering the relative claims of the school district and the village in the enforcement of the ten mill limitation, though it may properly influence the budget commissioners in exercising their discretion. I mention it here, however, as a starting point for further discussion in which I shall indulge when I come to deal with the distribution of the total levies which may be allowed the village as such.

It will be observed that although I divided the bonds of the class the interest and sinking fund requirements of which are the alleged foundation of the village's request for a levy of $23,678.63, into three classes, viz., those issued between June 2, 1911, and January 1, 1913, those issued between January 1, 1913, and February 14, 1914, and those issued between February 14, 1914, and the present time, I have discussed the first two classes together. Indeed, the conclusions at which I have arrived thus far in this opinion apply to both of the first two classes of bonds, for the reason that the difference, if any, between the first two classes would have to be predicated upon considerations going to their validity, arising out of the fact that from January 1, 1913, section 11 of Article XII of the Constitution, as I have quoted it, was in effect. However, the principal force of this section is exerted upon conditions present at the time of the issuance of the bonds and reflects itself in their validity, whereas, as we have seen, section 5649-1a G. C., enacted in 1914, has the effect of removing all such questions from present consideration.

There is just one point that ought to be considered and disposed of, however, before dismissing the thought of any possible distinction between the first two classes of bonds above described; that is, as to whether or not the constitutional requirement, that in the legislation under which any bonded indebtedness is incurred provision shall be made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to meet the interest on the bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, is of such force as to authorize and require the making of sinking fund levies for and on account of bonds issued by public bodies having general authority to issue them, regardless of any statutory limitation upon tax levies; that is to say, suppose it be conceded that council of the village of Maumee, for example, in January, 1913, had general power, so far as the Longworth act or other statutes limiting the incurring of indebtedness as such is concerned, to issue bonds for a specific purpose; and suppose that the council did issue such bonds, including in the ordinance under which they were issued a formal provision to the effect that there should be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds and to provide a sinking fund to retire them at maturity; would the result of such action be that the sinking fund levies thus provided for would have to be made in each year of the life of the bonds, though at the time of issuing them it may have been capable of demonstration that the available revenues from general property levies, which could reasonably be anticipated during the life of the bonds, would be insufficient for the interest and sinking fund purposes thereof in connection with those of bonds previously issued, the interest and sinking fund requirements of which would constitute burdens upon some or all of the years involved?

This question, in so far as authority is concerned, is an open one in Ohio. The nearest approach to a determination of this question is afforded by cases from states which have provisions like Article XII, section 11 in their constitutions, along with constitutional provisions limiting tax levies. Thus in the Texas constitution of 1876 was a provision to the effect that no debt should ever be created unless at the same time provision be made for levying and collecting a sufficient tax to pay the interest thereon and provide at least two per cent as a sinking fund. By amendments to this constitution it was provided that cities of certain classes might levy an annual tax to defray all their expenses at not to exceed a certain rate.

Under this state of the constitution it has been held, in the language of Dillon on Municipal Corporations, section 212, that:

> "* * * The direct requirement is that the tax shall be 'sufficient' to pay the debt, and this requirement carries with it a correlative prohibition against incurring any debt greater than such amount as may be satisfied and paid by the levy of a tax within the limit of the Constitution. In other words, the Constitution requires not only that no debt shall ever be created above such a sum as the levy directed will pay, but also that when and before the debt is created it shall be ascertained whether the maximum amount of the tax permitted by the Constitution will annually pay the interest and provide for the principal or for the sinking fund required by the constitution. The debt is not to go beyond what a tax can be levied to pay. If at the time when the debt is incurred a tax is levied which is not sufficient in amount to pay the interest and to create the prescribed sinking fund, the debt will be sustained up to the amount which is justified by the tax directed to be levied and will be held to be invalid as to the excess. The law contemplates that the provision should appear to be sufficient, based on existing valuations when made, and unless it is so the issue of bonds or the debt incurred would not be authorized. * *."

Of course this statement is applicable to the joint effect of two constitutional provisions and is not authority for what would be the result under the Ohio law, where we have to determine what the effect would be as between a constitutional provision and a statutory one. If the statute were in any wise in conflict with the constitution, it would of course yield and therefore it might be argued that in so far as the Smith law attempts to limit any sinking fund levies, it would be unconstitutional as a violation of Article XII, section 11.

However, this view in my judgment would be superficial and erroneous. While the Smith law is not a constitutional provision, it was enacted not only in the exercise of the general legislative power, but also in direct obedience to a constitutional command. I refer to Article XIII, section 6 of the Constitution which was in force when the Smith law was originally enacted. It provides that:

> "The general assembly shall provide for the organization of cities, and incorporated villages, by general laws, and restrict their power of taxation, * * *, borrowing money, contracting debts and loaning their credit, so as to prevent the abuse of such power."

To be sure, this section of the constitution is no longer in full force, because of the subsequent adoption of the so-called home rule amendment, which is Article XVIII of the present constitution. However, in section 13 of this article, there is expressly reserved the power in the General Assembly to pass laws "to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes."

So that although the Smith law no longer stands upon the foundation of a constitutional command, it still rests upon the basis of special constitutional authority. Article XVIII, section 13 was adopted by the people at the same time that Article XII, section 11 was approved by them. The two must be read together. The one commands that provision shall be made for levying taxes to pay the interest and retire the principal of all bonds subsequently issued by any subdivision, including municipal corporations. The other expressly authorizes the General Assembly to pass laws limiting the power of municipal corporations to incur indebtedness and to levy taxes. The former does not purport to confer by its own force power to levy taxes, but merely prohibits the issuance of bonds unless provision is made for levying taxes. The other expressly authorizes limitations to be imposed upon the levying power of municipalities.

It follows that so far as municipal corporations are concerned, there can be no question as to the authority of the General Assembly to place limitations upon the power of municipalities to levy taxes for any purpose and that the Smith law, being a law of this character, can not be held to be unconstitutional. Putting it in another way, Article XII, section 11, grants no authority to incur any bonded indebtedness. It prohibits the incurring of such indebtedness except upon compliance with certain conditions. It does not of its own force authorize the officers of a taxing district to comply with those conditions; but another provision of the constitution specifically authorized the legislature to limit the capacity of municipal officers, at least, to comply with those conditions.

On the whole, then, I reach the conclusion that there is no inconsistency between Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution and the Smith law, nor between the joint effect of these and statutes like the Longworth law, which on their face purport to authorize the issuance of bonds for specific purposes within certain limits which have but an indirect relation to the levying power.

I am further of the opinion that the decisions in Texas, the effect of which is described in the above quoted paragraph from Dillon on Municipal Corporations, furnish authorities which may safely be applied to the situation in Ohio under the Smith law, the Longworth law and Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution.

I call attention to the remarkable similarity of the reasoning abstracted in the above quotation to that of Judge Donahue as quoted from his opinion in Rabe vs. Board of Education, supra. True, Judge Donahue had before him a statute which limited the issuance of bonds of the particular character there involved, to such as could be provided for and paid within a given period of time by means of the levies authorized by law; but this is exactly the effect which the courts of Texas give to the constitutional provisions of that state.

In other words, when there is a constitutional requirement that no bonded indebtedness of a municipality shall be incurred unless in the legislation under which it is incurred provision is made for levying and collecting annually, by taxation, an amount sufficient to pay the interest on the bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their retirement at maturity and at the same time a law passed in pursuance of constitutional authority, limiting the amount of taxes that may be levied in any year by a municipality, the result is that an attempt on the part of a municipality to issue bonds at a time when calculations based upon the then existing tax duplicate show that the interest and sinking fund levies required by the constitution can not be made within the limits of taxation, is void.

When bonds are actually issued, they do not constitute legal obligations of the municipality, at least to the extent that the implied limitation thus arising—which is a limitation in addition to a direct debt limitation like that imposed by our Longworth act—is exceeded.

So it appears that instead of the issuance of bonds by the village of Maumee after January 1, 1913, in an amount so large that the necessary sinking fund levies added to those required by bonds previously issued would violate the limitations of the Smith law, being a present ground for violating those limitations under color of authority of Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution, such issuance in the first instance was illegal and invalidated the bonds. But, as already pointed out, bonds so issued prior to February 14, 1914, were expressly cured and validated by section 5649-1a G. C.

As to bonds of the third class issued after February 14, 1914, and up to the present time, however, the principles which I have just discussed apply in their entirety. No legislative act has been passed under the reserved power of the legislature to pass curative laws, for the purpose of making them valid, if for the reasons hereinbefore stated, it should turn out that any of them were invalid. I can not of course say that any of such bonds of the third class were invalid ab initio, for the reasons which I have just discussed.

In order to determine the question of their validity, it will be necessary to examine the circumstances as they existed at the time each issue was made. Suppose that in the year 1917, for example, the village of Maumee issued general tax bonds by action of its council, without a vote of the people. The validity of these bonds, so far as dependent upon the limitations of the Longworth act, would depend upon whether or not in amount they exceeded, with other bonds issued during the year 1917, an amount equal to one per cent of the tax duplicate of the village; and whether or not, together with the net amount of other bonds then outstanding and issued without authority of a vote of the people, they would in amount exceed two and one-half per centum of the then existing duplicate.

As regards the implied limitation resulting from the joint effect of Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution and section 5649-2 and the other applicable sections of the Smith 1 per cent law in question, its operation would depend upon whether or not a levy of approximately 5-15ths of nine and a fraction mills upon the grand duplicate of the village of Maumee, as then in force, would afford enough revenue to provide for the interest and sinking fund requirements of the issue, in addition to providing for the interest and sinking fund requirements of all bonds then outstanding during all of the years affected by the issue.

If, by examination of the records in the office of the county auditor of Lucas county and the clerk of the village of Maumee, it should appear that the bonds were issued by the village of Maumee after January 1, 1913, to the present time, under such circumstances as that a negative answer would have to be given to either or both of these questions, then such bonds are invalid, at least as the predicate of the levy of taxes at the present time, except that such bonds so issued prior to February 14, 1914 have been validated as against either of these objections, by section 5649-1a G. C.

It follows from what I have said that there is at least a very strong possibility that some, if not all, of the bonds of the class now under discussion, viz., those issued without a vote of the people since February 14, 1914, are invalid. If they are, then of course there need be no concern over the inability of the village to levy taxes to meet principal and interest thereon. If they are not invalid for the second of the above suggested reasons, viz., because of the joint operation and effect of Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution and the Smith law, then the amount of $23,678.63 must be excessive or else there must have been a considerable shrinkage of the tax duplicate of the village since the bonds were issued; if the former, then of course the budget commission would have an additional reason for reducing this item; if the latter, then because of the effect of compliance with Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution it might be argued that the levies for such bonds would take precedence over those bonds previously issued, i. e., issued before January 1, 1913; for as to the latter, the purchasers of them had no assurance that provision had been made for levying and collecting annually, by taxation, a sufficient amount to meet the principal and interest thereof; but on the contrary, they knew that they had bought bonds, behind which was not the entire duplicate of the village of Maumee, but merely a levy on that duplicate under all the applicable limitations of the Smith law, with the possibility that insufficient revenues might at any time be produced because of the shrinkage of the duplicate.

It would seem, however, that such an argument could not be sustained, because to do so would impair the obligation of the contracts of the prior bonds, the holders of which might indeed anticipate a shrinkage of the duplicate but would not be required to anticipate the issuance of later bonds under a constitutional provision subsequently adopted, which would take precedence over them in the distribution of the limited levies. This interesting question need not be determined at this stage of the proceeding.

,From what I have said it follows, I think, that the interest and sinking fund levies asked for the purpose of meeting the interest and sinking fund requirements of bonds of the third class above described, issued by the village of Maumee, stand in no better situation, as regards the powers and duties of the budget commission, in enforcing the five and ten mill limitations of the Smith law, than the levies on account of bonds of the other two classes. Indeed, they may stand, for reasons which I have pointed out, in even a worse situation, in that the effect of Article XII, section 11 of the Constitution may have been to make the bonds invalid from the beginning.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the budget item of $23,678.63, asked by the village of Maumee for interest and sinking fund, for bonded debt incurred after June 2, 1911 without a vote of the people, must be reduced by the budget commission to such an amount as will be produced on the estimated duplicate for this year by a rate which together with the rates levied by the state, the county, the township and the school district, and subject to section 5649-2 G. C., will not exceed ten mills in the aggregate.

In making this reduction, the budget commission should first reduce the amount to such a figure as would require a levy of five mills before making any reduction in the budget of the board of education.

State ex rel. vs. Sanzenbacher, supra.

Thereupon they should reduce the budgets of the board of education and the village (and the township, if need be,) until the aggregate of all the levies, including the county and state levy within the village of Maumee, is within the ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 G. C.

As above suggested, this process need not be worked out with mathematical precision. Neither the village nor the board of education can complain if the scaling down to the amounts which will produce a five mill levy is not made exactly pro rata.

State ex rel. vs. Patterson, supra.

The figure which will remain, which will be something less than the $17,142.05 which represents a tax on the duplicate of the village at the rate of five mills, will be the amount that the budget commission can allow the village under the law for all purposes, subject to the five and ten mill limitations.

It is obvious that if this amount is necessary to meet a single year's interest and sinking fund requirements on account of valid bonds of the village of Maumee, now outstanding, no allowance at all can be made to the village for current expenses; but if a lesser amount than this figure will suffice for this purpose, the remainder asked for sinking fund purposes, being either on account of bonds which are invalid for one reason or another, or on account of the accumulated deficiency in the sinking fund arising from failure to make proper levies in past years for these purposes or for the purpose of meeting final judgments, would invoke a question which has been referred to but not passed upon previously in this opinion.

So far as levies on account of the invalid bonds are concerned, I am clearly of the opinion that if there are any such and if the amount thereof is so great as to bring the total sinking fund levy within the limits which must be allotted to the levies of the village, subject to the five and ten mill limitations, the difference, if any, between those limits and the amount of the sinking fund levies may be levied for current expenses.

This statement leaves open for further consideration the question as to the status, as preferred levies, of levies for accumulated deficiencies in the sinking fund and so-called "sinking fund" levies made for the purpose of meeting final judgments. As I have intimated, such levies are not within the exact words of section 5649-1 G. C.

However, in view of the decision of the Supreme Court in State ex rel. vs. Zangerle, 94 O. S. 447, I feel unable to advise that any of these levies are not preferred levies. In that case the relator sought mandamus to compel the budget commissioners to place on the duplicate, as preferred levies, the amount computed to be necessary for sinking fund and interest purposes, including the payment of final judgments and the expenses incident to the management of the sinking fund (See statements of facts, page 449). Though the question may not have been discussed, the court did in fact award the mandamus as prayed for by the relator.

If that part of the so-called "sinking fund" levy of a municipal corporation, which is accumulated for the payment of final judgments, is preferred under section 5649-1 G. C., I can think of no reason on which to predicate a holding that levies for accumulated deficiencies in the bond accounts are not to be likewise treated.

It is therefore my opinion that the entire sinking fund levy asked for by the village of Maumee, and allowable under the five and ten mill limitations applicable to said village, must be made, except that deductions may be made therefrom by the budget commission on account of any levies asked for to supply the interest and sinking fund requirements of invalid bonds; so that unless the deduction of such levies for invalid bonds will entitle the village to levy for current expenses, no such current expense levies may be allowed.

So much for the powers and duties of the budget commission under the facts as they may now be imagined to exist. I shall now undertake to mention such steps as may be taken by the village of Maumee or the board of education of the school district, to obtain relief.

In the first place any valid bonds at present outstanding and necessitating the abnormal sinking fund levies mentioned, may be refunded by the council of the village of Maumee under authority of section 3916 G. C., which provides that:

> "Section 3916.—For the purpose of extending the time of payment of any indebtedness, which from its limits of taxation the corporation is unable to pay at maturity, or when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation, the council thereof may isue bonds of the corporation or borrow money so as to change but not to increase the indebtedness, in such amounts, for such length of time and at such rate of interest as the council deems proper, not to exceed six per cent per annum, payable annually or semi-annually."

In the second place there may be recourse to the procedure outlined in sections 5649-5 et seq. G. C., which I have not quoted. I question very much whether these sections, which authorize any taxing district to submit to the electors the proposition of increasing the tax levy for purposes otherwise subject to the limitations of sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a G. C. during a period of five years, will be of much practical value, for such vote of the electors does not authorize the fifteen mill limitation prescribed by section 5649-5b G. C. to be exceeded.

It appears that about $14,500.00 is asked for by the village of Maumee for purposes outside of the five and ten mill limitations, but within the fifteen mill limitation. I assume that the school district, the county and the township may have requested levies for similar purposes.

Inasmuch as the municipal levies asked for will require about four mills, it would appear that they would have to be reduced in order to enforce the fifteen mill limitation, and of course for reasons already pointed out they are subject to reduction for that purpose. I do not need to repeat these reasons. They are applicable to the levies outside of the ten and five mill limitations, but subject to the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith law, though in making them so an interpretation of section 5649-5b G. C. would be required. That section, however, is so unmistakably clear in its terms that I do not feel it necessary to repeat, as to its relation to section 5649-1 G. C., what I have previously said with regard to the relation of the latter section to sections 5649-2 and 5649-3a G. C.

Of course I have no facts upon which to base any conclusion whatsoever as to the necessity for reducing the levies for debt incurred prior to June 2, 1911, and for debt incurred after June 2, 1911, by a vote of the people. As I have said however, it seems very likely that these levies will have to be reduced because of the practical certainty that like levies will be required by the county, the school district and the township. If, however, it is true that no such other levies will be required, then there is a small margin within which the village or the board of education, or both, may acquire authority to make additional levies by submitting the question of such levies to a vote of the electors of the municipality or the district, under section 5649-5 G. C. No matter what the result of the vote may be as an expression respecting the number of mills of additional taxes which may be levied, the actual levy for any year may not be such as to go beyond the fifteen mill limitation; and if two districts, such as the school district and the village, should both secure the approval of the electors to additional levies which in the aggregate would cause the fifteen mill limitation to be exceeded, they must share pro rata in the margin which actually exists between the aggregate amount of other levies in the territory affected and fifteen mills. Such question may be submitted this year and the budget commission, if necessary, may reconvene after the November election for the purpose of seeing that the fifteen mill limitation is enforced. The additional levies may then go on the duplicate for this year.

As to the school district, it may, if the enforcement of the tax limitations precludes it from operating its schools according to the minimum requirements of the law, receive aid as a weak school district under favor of sections 7595 et seq. G. C., upon complying with the terms of those sections, and particularly section 7595-1 G. C.

I can think of no other suggestions of means for relief which are available to the village of Maumee and the village school district of the village of Maumee, within the scope of the law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT—HOW ELECTED—RIGHT OF COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT TO NOMINATE.

1. The county superintendent has a right to nominate a person who shall be considered by the electing body as district superintendent, when such electing body meets to elect a district superintendent of a supervision district.

2. If a majority of the board, that is, the electing body, concur, they may elect a person as district superintendent who was not so nominated by the county superintendent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1918.

HON. FRANK CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

"O. C. Minnich, county superintendent of Huron county, Ohio, submitted to me a letter for an opinion as to whether or not the presidents of the boards of education constituting a supervision district in this county acted in accordance with law in the employment of a district superintendent. The following is a copy of said letter:

'NORWALK, OHIO, July 17, 1918.

HON. FRANK CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney of Huron County, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Would you please submit an early opinion upon the following:

A call is issued in accordance with section 4742 General Code of Ohio, for a meeting of the presidents of the boards of education of a legally constituted rural school supervision district, for the purpose of electing a district superintendent. The presidents meet at the designated place, twenty minutes after the specified time. The county superintendent of schools, two candidates for the position to be filled, and some interested spectators, also assemble with the presidents. The chairman takes his place at the desk in the front of the room and says: 'The election of a secretary is in order.' The president of one of the boards of education is nominated for this position, it is seconded, the motion is put and carried. The secretary-elect takes his place at the desk with the chairman in the front of the room. The chairman then says, addressing himself to the audience in general: 'Are there any nominations for superintendent?' A silence of from five to ten seconds follows. One of the presidents then moves that the meeting go into executive session, it is seconded and carried without the chairman asking for remarks before putting the motion. The spectators and the candidates for the position withdraw from the room. The county superintendent of schools remains with the presidents of the boards of education. The maker of the motion 'to go into executive session' declares the intention of his motion to have been to exclude the county superintendent from the meeting, also, the second of the motion declares this to have been his intention as well. The county superintendent of schools states he has come in person to make his nomination for a district superintendent in accordance with section 4739 G. C. of Ohio, and as has been his custom for the past four years, and that he is ready to make his nomination and desirous of conforming with the statutes. The maker of the motion 'to go into executive session' declares the county superintendent now has no legal right nor privilege in the meeting and cannot therefore make any nomination whatsoever, nor are we willing to have him leave the room and later return to make his nomination; he should leave the room immediately as we have so voted. The chairman orders the clerk to call the roll as to the intention of the presidents of the board of education when voting upon the motion 'to go into executive session,' instructing those whose intentions were to bar the county superintendent from the meeting to vote yes, those whose intentions were to have him remain in the room to vote no. Five answer yes, two answer no. The county superintendent leaves the room. The presidents of the boards of education proceed and elect a district superintendent. Is the election legal?

Thanking you in advance for giving this matter your immediate attention, as I feel these boards of education should be given a fair opportunity to know the law and to elect a superintendent in conformance therewith, I am,

Very truly yours,
O. C. MINNICH,
County Superintendent.'

"Will you kindly advise me at once as to what your opinion is as to the legality of the action of the presidents of the boards of education in electing a district superintendent as detailed in the letter submitted to me by Mr. Minnich."

Section 4738 of the General Code provides how the supervision districts of a county school district are formed and section 4739 provides:

"Each supervision district shall be under the direction of a district superintendent. Such district superintendent shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education within such district. * * *. The district superintendent shall be employed upon the nomination of the county superintendent but the board electing such district superintendent may by a majority vote elect a district superintendent not so nominated."

Pursuant to the above quoted section the presidents of the various boards of education of a supervision district of your county met, and I am taking it, as is provided by section 4742 G. C., that the president of the board in the village or rural district having the largest number of teachers acted as the chairman of such meeting. While there is nothing in the statute which provides that a secretary of said body should be elected, it was perfectly proper, in order that the proceedings might be recorded and the results of such meetings certified to the county board, that a secretary of the meeting be elected; the same was accordingly done in your case.

After the organization of said electing body was perfected as above mentioned, the chairman of the meeting called for nominations for a district superintendent. That act on his part was proper and it was then the right and the duty of the county superintendent to nominate a person, so that the electing body would have such nominee for consideration.

If the county superintendent does nominate a person for such district superintendent, the person so nominated must be considered by the electing body, but such electing body may also consider others than the nominee of the county superintendent; and if, when a vote is taken, a majority of the "board," which board means the electing body, vote to elect a person as such district superintendent, other than the person nominated by the county superintendent, then such person, who so receives said majority vote, must be considered the duly elected superintendent for such district.

In the case under consideration the county superintendent was present when nominations were called for district superintendent and if he had a nomination to make it was not only his right but his duty to make it at that time. True he was asked to leave the room when the board went into executive session, but his nomination, if he had one, should have been left with the electing body before leaving.

I can hardly conceive what could have been in the minds of the members of the electing body in your case, that would cause them to exclude a county superintendent from their meeting. Their body is a public body and there should be no occasion when their actions will not bear public view. In fact it seems to me that the intention of the legislature in just such a matter is that their actions shall be public, for in section 4752 G. C., after a motion or resolution is made to employ a teacher or superintendent, it is provided that:

> "The clerk shall call the roll and record the names of those voting 'aye' and those voting 'no'."

The clerk's record is a public record, open to inspection at all reasonable times, and if the record be a public one and the board a public body, there can be little reason for secret or star chamber sessions.

I am assuming, of course, that the election in your case was had by a majority of the members of the electing body. There is nothing before me to indicate otherwise, and applying the principle that all duties performed by a public board or body are presumed to be done in accordance with law, I must take it that a majority or more of the members of such electing body concurred in the selection of the district superintendent.

Holding these views, then, I must advise you, in answer to your question, that the election of said district superintendent was perfectly legal and in accordance with law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TREASURER OF TOWNSHIP IN WHICH PART OF A CITY FORMS PART OF SAID TOWNSHIP—SALARY.

A township treasurer of a township in which a part of a city is located and forms a part of the township, is not entitled to receive a salary in excess of one hundred and fifty dollars in any one year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21 ,1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of August 5, 1918, in which you request my opinion on the following question:

> "In a township in which a portion of a city is located, is the township treasurer entitled to receive not more than $300.00 in any one year?"

It will be necessary for us to place an interpretation upon the provisions of section 3318 G. C. (107 O. L. 652), which section reads as follows:

> "Section 3318.—The treasurer shall be allowed and may retain as his fees for receiving, safe keeping and paying out moneys belonging to the township treasury, two per cent of all moneys paid out by him upon the order of the township trustees, but in no one year shall he be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and fifty dollars, except that in a township wherein a city is located and such city is a part of such township, a township treasurer shall be entitled to receive from the township treasury not more than three hundred dollars in one year."

It will be noted that the basic part of this section is that which provides that the township treasurer shall in no one year be entitled to receive from the township treasury more than one hundred and fifty dollars. The other part of the section contains an exception to the fundamental principle laid down in the main part of the section. This exception is to the effect that when a city is located within a township and is a part of the township, the treasurer shall be entitled to receive not more than three hundred dollars in any one year.

The question now is, would this exception include a township in which a part of a city is located? I am of the opinion that the exception to the general proposition, laid down in this section, could not be made to include a township which has only a part of a city located therein. The statute does not say, when a township has within it a city or a portion of a city, but merely provides that when a township has a city located within it the salary shall be not to exceed three hundred dollars.

Hence, from the reading of the statute I am of the opinion that your question must be answered in the negative; that is, that the township treasurer of a township having within its confines a part of a city is entitled to receive not more than one hundred and fifty dollars in any one year. This seems evident from the principle of law generally followed by the courts, that when the provisions of a statute, having to do with the salary of an officer, are ambiguous, the doubt must be resolved in favor of the state or the governing body fixing the salary.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—MATRON—DUTIES—SALARY.

Under the provisions of section 3085 G. C., the trustees of a county children's home have authority in law to assign duties other than those provided for in said section, to the matron and other employes of the home, and to pay such compensation for the services to be rendered, as they may, in their judgment, consider to be fair and just. Such assignment of duties and fixing of compensation should be done by resolution or by-laws.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1918.

HON. CHARLES M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of August 5, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "The trustees of our county children's home employed Mrs. Lightle, wife of the superintendent, as matron for the home, and her contract will not expire until March 1, 1919.
> Recently a little girl, inmate of the home, was operated upon for a disease of the hip, necessitating the keeping of the hip in a plaster cast, and requiring a great deal of extra service in the way of nursing, etc., the little girl being practically helpless.
> Mrs. Lightle is willing to render the extra service, but thinks she should receive extra pay, and the trustees wish to give her extra pay during the time the little girl requires this care. Can they legally do so? That is, can the trustees, at this time, while her contract is still in force, increase her salary as matron? Or, can they pay the matron an extra amount for services as nurse?"

The answer to your question can be based upon the provisions of section 3085 G. C. as found in 107 Ohio Laws, page 60. This section reads as follows:

> "Subject to such rules and regulations as the trustees prescribe, the superintendent shall have entire charge and control of such home and the inmates therein. Upon the approval of the trustees the superintendent may appoint a matron, assistant matrons, and other necessary employes whose duties shall be the care of the inmates of the home, and to direct their employment, giving suitable physical, mental and moral training to them. Under the direction of the superintendent, the matron shall have the control, general management and supervision of the household duties of the home, and the matron, assistant matrons, and other employes shall perform such other duties and receive for their services such compensation as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct. They may be removed by the superintendent or at the pleasure of a majority of the trustees."

This section was amended in 1917, yet the provisions of the section as they stood prior to this amendment in so far as they would apply to your particular question were not materially changed.

(1) I note from your communication that the matron of the county children's home is under a contract of employment, the terms of which do not expire until March 1, 1919. Undoubtedly, a contract entered into by and between the matron and the proper authority was based upon the provisions of this section. That is, in the contract of hire there were no particular duties assigned to the matron, but her duties were to be such as those set out in this section. At least, I am considering this to be the case for the purpose of this opinion.

(2) Under the provisions of this section, the trustees of the home undoubtedly could require the matron to perform the services mentioned without additional compensation. It is to be noted that the matron is merely an employe along with the assistant matrons and other necessary employes, and that her duties "shall be the care of the inmates of the home" and "shall perform such other duties * * * as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct."

Hence, when the matron was employed and her compensation fixed, it was fixed with a view to the provisions of this section, and undoubtedly the care of the inmates of the home would include such services as would have to be rendered in the case mentioned by you. The home in reality stands in loco parentis and the duties which you suggest in your communication would, of course, be assumed by the parents of a child, and hence in case of those children committed to the county children's home, the duty would devolve upon the matron or some other employe in the institution.

Further, when the matron was employed for a term to expire on March 1, 1919, she took her employment in view of the provisions of this statute, and would be bound, therefore, to perform such other duties as might be assigned to her from time to time by the trustees. This section virtually became a part of the contract of hire.

(3) If the services mentioned in your communication had been rendered by the matron without any extra agreement between her and the trustees of the home, then in that event it would be quite clear that she could not in law claim extra compensation from the trustees for the services rendered. The courts are uniform upon a proposition of this nature.

In Carey vs. Hallack, 9 Cal. 198, the court say:

> "Where a party employed receives a regular specific monthly salary for his service, the presumption of law is that all services rendered by him for his employer during that period, which are of nearly a similar nature to those of his regular duties, are paid for by his salary. And to overcome this presumption he must show an express agreement for extra pay, otherwise he cannot recover."

In Coughton vs. Kitterman, 52 Pac. 898 (Court of Appeals, Kansas), the court laid down this proposition:

> "A person employed as housekeeper at an agreed price per week cannot recover from the estate of such employer, who dies during the employment, compensation for services as nurse in addition to her weekly wages as housekeeper when it does not appear that any agreement was ever made to pay for such extra services, or that the employer had any knowledge that she expected to charge therefor."

(4) With the above kindred propositions out of the way, let us now consider specifically the question which you submit, and that is, whether the trustees of the home, who are desirous so to do, may in advance make arrangements with the matron to the effect that if she personally renders the services mentioned in your communication, she should receive compensation in addition to that which she receives by virtue of her contract of employment.

The statute says that the employes, including the matron of the home "shall receive for their services such compensation as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct," and, as said before, this same section provides that the employes, including the matron, "shall perform such other duties as the trustees may by by-laws from time to time direct."

From these provisions it is my opinion that if the trustees of the home consider the services mentioned by you to be services beyond those which ordinarily devolve upon the employes of the home, then they might agree by resolution or by-laws to pay the matron of the home such extra compensation as might to them seem fair and just. The law seems to have left this matter entirely within the discretion of the trustees of the home to regulate from time to time.

But, as said before in this opinion, I feel that the trustees could under the law, and also in justice to the matron, in view of her contract of hire, require her to perform the services mentioned by you, and that without any additional compensation; so that this opinion simply goes to the effect that if the trustees of the home consider the services mentioned by you to be duties other than those ordinarily to be performed in the home, then they may pay an additional compensation for the rendition of said services.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION—DEPOSITS MADE BY MISTAKE IN STATE TREASURY MAY BE WITHDRAWN.

Where the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station paid into the state treasury money to be credited to a certain fund, and it afterwards develops that the said station really had no money to deposit, the state auditor would be warranted in issuing his warrant in favor of the station for the amount so deposited, provided the warrant is drawn against the same fund in which the money was originally deposited.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication as of date July 1, 1918, signed by Mr. C. A. Seiple, auditor of accounts, in your office. This communication reads as follows:

> "We are inclosing herewith voucher No. 2162 with letter of explanation attached thereto. The same was issued by the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station in favor of W. H. Kramer for $1,316.10. Your decision is desired as to whether or not the auditor of state can legally issue his warrant in payment thereof."

To this communication is attached a letter received by you from the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station. This communication reads as follows:

> "Regarding our voucher No. 2162 payable to the undersigned for $1,316.10. This amount was received from the sale of wool and was sent to the state treasurer on October 27, 1917, our revenue voucher No. 177 and was credited to the animal husbandry rotary fund.

The check received from Elza Wood in payment of this wool was deposited in our local bank and sent by them to the Vinton County National bank, McArthur, Ohio, on which the check was drawn. This check was protested and returned to me, since which time I have been carrying the protested check and trying to collect the amount from Mr. Wood.

On April 20th the amount $1,316.10 with interest making a total of $1,359.00 was sent to your office for collection. If this voucher can be paid, it will relieve me from personally carrying this account and it will then be carried as an open account of the station."

The facts briefly stated are these: The Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station sold wool to one Elza Wood to the amount of $1,316.10, in payment of which Mr. Wood sent his check to the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station. Upon receiving the check the station sent to the state treasurer on October 27, 1917, the amount represented by the check, which amount was credited according to law to the animal husbandry rotary fund. It afterwards turned out that the bank upon which the check was drawn had not funds with which to take up the same; neither has Mr. Wood up to this time made payment for the wool purchased by him. The question now is as to whether you would be authorized in law to return the amount so deposited by you to the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station.

It is my opinion that you have authority to do so. The transaction between the Ohio Agricultural Experiment station and yourself was based upon a mutual mistake of fact; while both parties considered that there was $1,316.10 which could be credited to the animal husbandry rotary fund, yet the fact was that there was no such amount of money which could be credited to said fund.

It is almost universally held that where money is paid under a mistake of fact, it can be recovered back, or the party to whom it is paid is warranted in law in paying the same back. This would be all the more true in those cases in which the transaction took place between two different departments of the same government.

From all the above, it is my opinion that you would be authorized in drawing your warrant for said amount in favor of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, providing you draw it upon the same fund in which the money was originally placed.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE HOME PURCHASING ASSOCIATION COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 21, 1918.

HON. WM. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I return herewith the proposed articles of incorporation of The Home Purchasing Association Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, advising you that the same should not be filed and recorded by you.

The purpose clause of the articles to which you call attention is as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of soliciting and selling contracts in serial form of the denomination of $100.00 to $1,000.00; to hold moneys thus received as a trust fund; to loan only to contract holders upon the maturity of said contracts when secured by real estate mortgage and other valuable securities; to receive, hold and assign mortgages; to do all things necessary and incident to the carrying on of such business."

I am unable to determine from this language just what the nature of the business, which the incorporators of this company propose that it shall do, is. The language is so vague and indefinite in meaning that the articles should not be filed for this reason alone. Indeed, the language gives rise to the suspicion that the object of the incorporators is to evade the legislation of this state respecting building and loan associations; but this, of course, can not be determined until the language is made sufficiently specific to enable one to tell what the business of the proposed corporation is to be.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

"THROUGH" AS USED IN SECTION 13031-6 G. C. DEFINED.

The word "through" as used in section 13031-6 G. C. does not necessarily mean from end to end or from side to side, but does mean "within."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 22, 1918.

HON. GEORGE F. CRAWFORD, Prosecuting Attorney, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

> "I desire your opinion or interpretation of the word 'through' in section 13031-6 G. C., as amended in 103 O. L., page 188, this section being a part of the White Slave law of the State of Ohio.
> The section reads in part as follows:
> "Any person who shall knowingly transport or cause to be transported or aids or assists in obtaining transportation for, by means of conveyance, through or across this state, any female with the intent or purpose to induce, entice, * * *. Any person who shall commit the crime in this section mentioned may be prosecuted, indicted, tried and convicted in any county into or through which he shall have so transported any female as aforesaid."

Now, the question is, has the word "through" a significance or difference from the word "across" as used in the section, and if it is different, what would be considered such transportation through the state as would bring a case within this section? For instance, is the transportation of a female from one point in the state to another point in the state a transportation of a female through the state, as defined by this section?

I find one case that seems to me in point somewhat on this matter, being Provident Life & Trust Co., vs. Mercer County, reported 170 U. S., page 593, at page 602. In this case it was held that a railroad company entering a county from without, and passing 20 miles within the territory, and to within two miles of the border of the opposite side, was such a passing through the county as would render subscribers liable to pay their subscriptions.

As each word of a statute should be given effect, if possible, it would seem to me that the legislature intended a narrower meaning to the word "through" than the word "across" and that the word "through" would apply to a case where a female would be transported from one point in the state to another point within the state."

That part of section 13031-6 G. C. which is necessary for our consideration is quoted in your inquiry, and it will not be necessary for me to again quote the same here, but simply accept and again call to your attention the quotation therefrom. It is the word "through" as used in said section that you desire me to construe or give definition to.

The word "through" ordinarily means from one side to the other; into or out of at opposite, or at another point; or from one limit to the opposite limit. If this were the only definition given, and it is the one which is nenerally given, then your proposition would be comparatively an easy one. But under certain circumstances I find that the word "through" has a more limited or restricted meaning than that above given. To illustrate: In St. L. M. & S. E. R. R. Co. vs. Houck, 97 S. W., 963, the court had under consideration the construction of the words "through" or "into." The case arose from a stock subscription to a railroad company in which it was provided that the railroad company must go "through" or "into" the city before the stock subscribed by the city was payable. The court held that the company had performed its part of the contract, and the stock subscribed was payable at the time the company built its line to a point outside of the city where a junction was made with an old line over which trains were transported from the new line into the city. If in that case the words "through" and "into" could be given the above construction, then under the section above referred to by you, they would have a different meaning from the general definition above given; that is, from one side to the other, or into and out of at opposite points, or from one limit to the other, and instead thereof the passing into and going over any portion of the county would be sufficient, for the latter portion of the section provides that any person who shall commit the crime in this section mentioned may be prosecuted, indicted, tried and convicted in any county into or through which he shall have so transported any female as aforesaid.

By the use of the word "into," it seems to me that the restricted meaning is given to the word "through"; that is, that the legislature did not intend to give the word "through" the broad meaning which it ordinarily has, but that it meant the crime should be considered completed and punishment might be had therefor if the transportation was merely had "into" any county in the state whether the transportation was had entirely across said state or not.

The case which, however, is cited by all the authorities upon this question is referred to by you and marks the line of construction to be followed herein more clearly than any or all other cases in the books contained. It is entitled Provident Life etc. Insurance Company vs. Mercer County, 170 U. S. 593, in which case it was held that the word "through" does not always mean from end to end or from side to side, but frequently means "within." In that case Mercer county, Kentucky, subscribed for stock of the Louisville Southern Railroad Company. The obligation was not to be binding until the railway of said company shall have been so completed through such county that a train of cars shall have passed over the same. The railroad was not completed through Mercer county, but the railroad was completed through Mercer county to the depot of the Southwestern road at Harrodsburg, the county seat. A train of cars moved by an engine passed over said road to Harrodsburg. Harrodsburg lies entirely within the county and the road was at no time completed beyond Harrodsburg or entirely across the county from side to side.

The question then was, had the railroad company sufficiently completed its contract that collection could be made on the stock subscribed by Mercer county. Mr. Justice Brewer delivered the opinion of the court, and on page 603 of said report, used the following language:

> "That condition is that the bonds shall not be binding until the railway of the said company shall have been so completed through such county that a train of cars shall have passed over the same. It is contended that the word 'through' means clear through the county from one end of the county to the other; and that while the railway enters the north line of the county and runs within the county limits a distance of nearly twenty miles, it does not touch the south line nor come within a nearer distance of it than two miles. So it is said the railway does not run through the county, and therefore the condition upon which the bonds could become binding and valid obligations did not, and does not, exist. It is true the primary meaning of the word 'through' is from end to end or from side to side, but it is used in a narrower and different sense. Its meaning is often qualified by the context. Thus if one should say that he had spent the summer traveling through New England, it would not be construed as carrying an affirmation that he had been from one side clear to the other or from one end clear to the other, but that his travels had been within the limits of New England. The book which is said to have a wider circulation than any except the Bible, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, opens with this sentence: 'As I walked through the wilderness of this world I lighted on a certain place where there was a den and laid me down in that place to sleep.' Does the writer mean that he passed from one end of the wilderness to another and that at the further end found the den, or simply that he traveled in the wilderness and lighted on the den? Obviously the latter. Many similar illustrations might be cited. They show that 'through' does not always mean from end to end or from side to side, but frequently means 'within.'"

No other or clearer construction could be conceived when the last sentence of said section 13031-6 is considered along with the other considerations of the word "through" as used in said section.

I must advise you from a consideration of all the above that the word "through" as used in section 13031-6 G. C. does not necessarily mean from end to end or from side to side, but that it does mean "within."

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION NOT PREVENTED BY 1465-46 G. C. ADVISING OF ACCEPTANCE UNDER 1465-98—WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—INCLUDES MARITIME EMPLOYMENTS NOT INTEGRAL PART OF INTERSTATE RAILROAD—INCLUDES CERTAIN EMPLOYES INTERSTATE RAILROAD UPON ELECTION.

1. There is no inhibition in the Ohio Workmen's Compensation Act to prevent the Industrial Commission from giving information as to whether or not the acceptance provided for by section 1465-98 G. C. had been filed.

2. Maritime employments so far as the Ohio Compensation act is concerned do not differ in any way from other employments to which the act is applicable, unless the particular maritime employment constitutes an integral part of the operation of a common carrier by rail engaged in interstate commerce.

3. The Ohio Workmen's Compensation act applies to employers and employes engaged in this state in intrastate and also in interstate and foreign commerce, except common carriers by railroad, and some of their employes who may become subject to it in a limited way by the election provided for in section 1465-98 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted the following request for my opinion:

"I enclose herewith a communication from P. J. Monahan, of this department, addressed to the commission with reference to a request from Messrs. Payer, Winch & Minshall for information as to whether or not the Pelee Island Sand & Gravel Co. and its employes have filed 'written acceptances' mentioned in section 51 of the Compensation law.

Will you please let us have your opinion as to whether or not compliance with this request would be in violation of section 1465-46 of the Workmen's Compensation law of Ohio; also whether it is necessary for employers coming in the class of maritime employers to elect to come under the Workmen's Compensation law and whether such election should be certified to the Industrial Commission, accompanied by the election of the employes."

The questions as stated in the communication from Mr. Monahan are:

First. May the commission, upon request, furnish information as to whether or not an employer has filed the written acceptances provided for by section 51 of the Compensation act (section 1465-98 G. C.), that is, does section 5 of the act, (section 1465-46) prohibit the giving of this information.

Section 1465-46 G. C. provides:

"The information contained in the annual report provided for in the preceding section, and such other information as may be furnished to the board by employers in pursuance of the provisions of said section, shall be for the exclusive use and information of said board in the discharge of its official duties, and shall not be open to the public nor be used in any court in any action or proceeding pending therein unless the board is a party to such action or proceedings; but the information contained in said report may be tabulated and published by the department, in statistical form, for the use and information of other state departments and the public. Any person in the employ of the board who shall divulge any information secured by him in respect to the transactions, property or business of any company, firm, corporation, person, association, co-partnership or public utility to any person other than the members of the board, while acting as an employe of the board, shall be fined not less than one hundred dollars ($100.00) nor more than five hundred dollars ($500.00), and shall thereafter be disqualified from holding any appointment or employment with the board."

The information prohibited from being given is that furnished to the commission under the provisions of section 1465-45 G. C., which does not in any way prohibit information being given as to whether or not an employer has filed the acceptances provided for by section 51 of the act, (section 1465-98 G. C.), which reads as follows:

"The provisions of this act shall apply to employers and their employes engaged in intrastate and also in interstate and foreign commerce, for whom a rule of liability or method of compensation has been or may be established by the congress of the United States, only to the extent that their mutual connection with intrastate work may and shall be clearly separable and distinguishable from interstate or foreign commerce, and then only when such employer and any of his workmen working only in this state with the approval of the state liability board of awards, and so far as not forbidden by any act of congress, voluntarily accept the provisions of this act by filing written acceptances, which, when filed with and approved by the board, shall subject the acceptors irrevocably to the provisions of this act to all intents and purposes as if they had been originally included in its terms, during the period or periods for which the premiums herein provided have been paid. Payment of premiums shall be on the basis of the payroll of the workmen who accept as aforesaid."

This section is one of the sections relating to the compliance by employers with the terms of the Workmen's Compensation act, and there is no more reason for keeping secret the fact that an employer and any of his workmen accepted the provisions of the act by filing the written aceptances provided for, than there is for keeping secret the fact that employers have complied with this act by paying in the ordinary premiums due or by electing to operate under section 22.

The second question is whether in view of the recent amendment to the federal law governing maritime employments it is necessary for employers coming in the class of maritime employers to elect to come under the Workmen's Compensation act in Ohio under section 1465-98 G. C.

It will be noted that this section only refers to:

"Employers and their employes engaged in intrastate and also in interstate and foreign commerce, for whom a rule of liability or method of compensation has been or may be established by the congress of the United States."

The only such "rule of liability" established by Congress of the United States is the Federal Employers' Liability act, which relates only to "every common carrier by railroad while engaged in commerce between any of the several states or territories, etc." The act applies only to persons engaged "In something having direct and substantial connection with railroad operations and not with another kind of carriage recognized as separate and distinct from transportation on land and no mere adjunct thereto. It is unreasonable to suppose that Congress intended to change long established rules applicable to maritime matters merely because the ocean-going ship concern happened to be owned and operated by a company also a common carrier by railroad. The word "boats" in the statute refers to vessels which may be properly regarded as in substance a part of a railroad's extension or equipment as understood and applied in common practice."

So. Pacific Co. vs. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205.

The first two paragraphs of the syllabus in this case provide:

"The Federal Employers' Liability act applies only where the injury occurs in railroad operations or their adjuncts, and cannot be extended to interstate maritime transportation merely because the vessel in the case is owned and operated by an interstate carrier by railroad.

The word 'boats' in the statute refers to vessels which may be properly regarded as but part of a railroad's extension or equipment as understood and applied in common practice."

This decision and other decisions of the Supreme Court make it clear that the Federal Employers' Liability act has no application whatever to maritime commerce, no matter whether the same be intrastate or interstate, unless the maritime operation is an adjunct or a part of the railroad operation. The mere fact that a railroad company owns and operates a steamship line does not bring the steamship operation under the Federal Employers' act, even though it be interstate commerce.

So. Pac. Co. vs. Jensen, 244 U. S. 205.

In an opinion to your commission rendered by me July 14th, 1917 (Volume II, Opinions of the Attorney-General 1917, page 1219), I held that the provisions of the Ohio Compensation act, including section 1465-98 were unenforcible

"As to all employers engaged in employments maritime in nature, under maritime contracts with an employer engaged in maritime pursuits upon any of the navigable waters of the United States, whether the employment be interstate or intrastate."

This holding was based upon the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Southern Pacific R. R. Co. vs. Jensen, above referred to, which held that the state compensation laws were unenforcible as to maritime employments, not on account of the Federal Employers' Liability act, but because, as stated in the opinion in the Jensen case,

"Exclusive jurisdiction of all civil cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction is vested in the Federal District courts 'saving to suitors, in all cases, the right of a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it.' The remedy which the Compensation statute attempts to give is of a character wholly unknown to the common law, incapable of enforcement by the ordinary processes of any court and is not saved to suitors from the grant of exclusive jurisdiction."

This ruling of the United States Supreme Court was based upon Article III, section 2 of the Constitution of the United States, which extends the judicial power of the United States to "all cases of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction," and Article I, section 8, which confers upon Congress the power

> "To make all laws which may be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof."

Section 9 of the Judicial act of 1789, 1 Stat. 76-77, vested the District courts of the United States with

> "Exclusive original cognizance of all civil actions of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction * * * saving to suitors in all cases the right to a common law remedy, where the common law is competent to give it."

This section stood, as above quoted, at the time of the decision of the Jensen case (see sections 24 and 256 of the Judicial Code), but since the announcing of that decision it appears from Mr. Monahan's statement that the said section has been amended by an act of Congress approved October 6, 1917, so that it now reads:

> "THIRD: Of all causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, saving to suitors in law cases, the right of a common-law remedy, where the common-law is competent to give it, and to claimants the rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation law of any state."

Mr. Monahan's question suggests implications which divide it into two parts, not separate and independent, but distinct though interdependent. They may be stated as follows:

> (1) Since the amendment of October 6, 1917, and as a result thereof, does the Ohio Workmen's Compensation law in its compulsory features, or as a main body of law, apply to maritime employments and injuries occurring in the course thereof?
> (2) If the Ohio law does not apply in its main or compulsory features to such maritime employments and injuries resulting therefrom, does section 1465-98 of the General Code apply to such employments and authorize the employers and their employes voluntarily to accept the provisions of the Ohio law to the extent therein mentioned?

I am satisfied that the above statement of these two questions and their interdependent relations is correct, and that the second question does not arise unless the first question be answered in the negative.

I have already quoted section 1465-98. The first Federal Employers' Liability act was passed in 1906 and it was held invalid by the Supreme Court of the United States in In Re Employers' Liability Cases, 207 U. S., 463, because it was not limited to interstate commerce, that it, it included the regulation of master and servant, or of servants among themselves, as to things which were not interstate commerce; the act attempted to regulate persons because they engaged in interstate commerce and did not alone regulate the business of interstate commerce and thus included subjects wholly outside of the power of Congress.

After this decision Congress passed the second Federal Employers' Liability act in April, 1908, and its constitutionality was established in Second Employers' Liability Cases, 223 U. S. 1. This act applies only to common carriers by railroad and their employes while both are engaged in interstate commerce. It is stated in the syllabus of that case:

> "State legislation, even if in pursuance of a reserved power, must give way to an act of Congress over a subject within the exclusive control of Congress. Until Congress acted on the subject the laws of the several states determined the liability of interstate carriers for injuries to their employes while engaged in such commerce; but Congress having acted its action supersedes that of the state, so far as it covers the same subject. That which is not supreme must yield to that which is."

This decision as to the constitutionality of the Federal Employers' Liability act was announced in 1911. The original Ohio Compensation act, which was optional, was passed in 1911 (102 O.L.524), and the present compulsory act, containing section 1465-98 (original section 51) was passed in 1913 (103 O. L. 72), and section 1465-98 was largely intended to be in the nature of a disclaimer on the part of the legislature of any intention to interfere in any way in the field which had been or might be occupied by federal legislation. This was largely on account of what was said in the Second Employers Liability cases above referred to , for when Congress enters a field in which it can legitimately operate, state legislation is excluded.

I call attention to the fact that not only does section 1465-98 provide for optional compensation, but it also limits such compensation to that on account of injuries occurring in intrastate work to workmen working only in this state; whereas the main body of the law, if applicable to a given appointment at all, does not lose its force apparently because of the fact that the injury occurred outside of the state of Ohio and in the course of an interstate activity. I call attention to the fact that the whole operation of section 1465-98 is conditioned upon the establishment by Congress of a rule of liability or method of compensation for the employers and their employes to whom the section applies and who may take advantage of it. All these features of the section taken together lead me to the conclusion that if it be determined that the class of employments now under consideration is one to which, by virtue of the amendment of the Federal Judicial code above referred to, the compulsory features of the Ohio Workmen's Compensation act would otherwise apply in their entirety, section 1465-98 has no application thereto.

I return, therefore, to the task of determining, first, whether or not maritime employments, as such, are in the present condition of federal and state legislation subject to the complete application of the Ohio Workmen's Compensation act in its general or compulsory features.

As previously stated, it is now thoroughly settled that but for the amendment to the Federal Judicial code the Ohio Workmen's Compensation law would have no application to maritime employments, whether interstate in character or not. What, then, is the effect of the amendment? As we have seen, it saves from the grant to the Federal courts of exclusive jurisdiction of "all causes of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction" "the rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation law of any state," and it saves them "to claimants." This short saving clause invokes consideration of several points regarding the jurisdiction of the Federal courts in admiralty and the interpretation of section 1465-70 of the General Code of Ohio. I have given careful consideration to these points and, without elaborating my reasons at this time, give it as my opinion that the effect of the amendment of the Federal Judicial code is such that the compulsory features of the Ohio

Workmen's Compensation law now apply to such maritime employments as are not covered by the Federal Employers' Liability act—that is to say, to such maritime employments as are not purely interstate in character and upon a vessel or other instrument of interstate commerce which constitutes virtually a part or an extension of a railroad.

When I say that the compulsory features of the law apply I mean that without any voluntary election on the part of employer and employe alike maritime employers are required to pay into the state insurance fund the appropriate premiums which may be established for this class of employments.

It is probably true that the Federal courts of admiralty still retain their appropriate jurisdiction of all maritime causes.

> Southern Pacific Co. vs. Jensen, supra; Schuede vs. Zenith S. S. Co., 244 U. S. 646; Schuede vs. Zenith, S. S. Co., 216 Fed. 566; The Fred E. Sander, 208 Fed. 724; The Fred E. Sander, 212 Fed. 545; and other cases which might be cited.

But the express saving of both rights and remedies under the Workmen's Compensation acts of the several states from the grant of exclusive jurisdiction to such courts undoubtedly has the effect of destroying the foundations upon which many of these opinions proceeded, and of giving full scope to the operation of Workmen's Compensation laws as against the claim that their principles are in conflict with those formerly known to the admiralty courts.

The decision may still leave some doubt as to the effect to be given to all the provisions of the Ohio law when relied upon as the foundations of causes of action or defenses in admiralty courts; but that is a Federal question upon which I do not deem it necessary to express an opinion. The weight of authority in the several states which have workmen's compensation acts most like that of Ohio is to the effect that, regardless of what may be the attitude of the courts of admiralty in this respect, such Workmen's Compensation acts will be given full effect in the state courts.

> See also State ex rel. Jarvis vs. Daggett, 87 Wash. 253; Shaughnessy vs. Northland S. S. Co. 94 Wash. 325.

There is absolutely no dissent on this point so far as states having optional Workmen's Compensation laws are concerned.

> Lindstrom vs. Mutual Steamship Co., 132 Minn. 328; Kennerson vs. Thames Towboat Co., 89 Conn. 367.

And it is at least clear that in admiralty full effect will be given to all features of Workmen's Compensation acts in death cases.

> Bjolstad vs. Pacific Coast Steamship Co., 244 Fed. 634.

Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, then attorney general, expressed the opinion in a letter to the commission under date of March 3, 1914 (Annual Report of the Attorney-General for that year, Volume I, page 300; 11 O. L. R. 549), that admiralty would recognize the negative force of section 1465-70 of the General Code, which creates immunity from common law or statutory action in favor of an employer who has complied with the act, save when the injury has occurred through his own wilful act or that of his agents or servants or the failure to comply with some lawful safety requirements. His opinion was, of course, predicated upon an assumption as to the then existing law which was rejected by the subsequent decisions in the Jensen case and other similar cases; but the amendment of the Federal Judicial code has removed the effect of these decisions in this particular, and this opinion, if correct at the time it was written but for the considerations upon which the Jensen case was founded, now applies to the situation. I see no reason, why I should not adhere to the conclusions expressed in that opinion and advise you that they are now to be followed. Though doubt may be felt upon the point just discussed, the effect of that doubt as bearing upon the main question involved is minimized by the fact that the majority of the state courts hold that the attitude of admiralty in this respect is immaterial so far as the application of their respective Workmen's Compensation acts in the state courts is concerned.

This conclusion makes it unnecessary to consider section 1465-98 G. C. for reasons which have already been stated, except in so far as maritime employments in connection with railroad operations interstate in character may be involved. As I have previously stated, such employments are affected by the Federal Employers' Liability act to the extent that the latter applies to injuries occurring while the injured employe is engaged in interstate commerce. Examples of such employments may easily be imagined. For instance, a car ferry operated by a railroad, if there be any such in Ohio, would be a "boat" within the meaning of the Federal Employers' Liability act, as it would constitute a "part of a railroad's extension or equipment" as understood and applied in common practice; and hence if an employe engaged in the operation of such a ferry should be injured while the ferry was transporting interstate commerce the liability of his employer would be governed by the Federal act. Under the rule in the Jensen case it would seem that a stevedore or dock laborer employed by a railroad and engaged in unloading ships at docks owned by a railroad would come within the class of maritime employes; and if injured while engaged in interstate commerce the liability of his employer would be governed by the Federal Employers' Liability act. All such employments are to be regarded as in a class separate from other maritime employments for the purposes of this opinion. In other words, within the purview of the federal legislation they take their predominant aspect from the fact that they are railroad employments which may be interstate in character rather than from the fact that they are maritime employments. They come within a field the boundaries of which are marked out by the overlapping of railroad employments and maritime employments respectively, as such, together with the fact that as railroad employments they are subject to the possibility of being concerned with interstate transportation.

As to this class of employments, then, the maritime character thereof may be ignored for present purposes and they are to be considered as governed by the same rules with respect to the application of section 1465-98 as other railroad employments partly interstate in character. It will not be necessary, therefore, in this opinion to deal with the class of maritime employments which has just been described; but I refer the commission to the opinion of former Attorney General Hogan to your commission, under date of December 22, 1914. (Opinions of Attorney General, 1914, p. 1611). This opinion and the decision referred to in it govern this question at present and I do not feel warranted in reviewing it.

I may add, however, to this opinion the remark that I am not unmindful of the view taken by the Washington court and intimated by Mr. Justice McReynolds in the Jensen case, to the effect that the Limited Liability acts of Congress are rules of liability for maritime cases. But they are not rules enacted by Congress under its power to regulate commerce; but rather, as pointed out in decisions which have been cited, under its power to define and regulate the exercise of the jurisdiction in admiralty. Moreover, they are not really "rules of liability" within the meaning of this section at all, but merely limitations on the gross liability which a single vessel owner may be made subject to. Such rules are not the kind of rules about which the state legislature was thinking when it passed section 1465-98.

I answer Mr. Monahan's second question, therefore, by saying that section 1465-98 of the General Code does not apply to maritime employments, as such, at all, but that it does apply to maritime employments upon boats or in other places which constitute adjuncts or extensions of railroads; in other words, that a maritime employment which is a part of a railroad operation is to be considered for the purpose of section 1465-98 as a railroad employment, and its maritime character is to be ignored. So considered it appears that such employment would not be subject to the compulsory features of the Ohio Workmen's Compensation act, but would be of such character as to afford to the employers and employes concerned therein the option of electing to be governed by the provisions of the Ohio Workmen's Compensation law as to injuries to workmen working only in this state, occurring in the course of purely intrastate employment, where such employment can be separated from interstate employment.

My conclusions, therefore, upon this inquiry are as follows:

First: There is no inhibition in the Ohio Workmen's Compensation act to prevent the commission from giving information as to whether or not the acceptance provided for by section 1465-98 G. C. had been filed.

Second: Maritime employments so far as the Ohio Compensation act is concerned do not differ in any way from other employments to which the act is applicable, unless the particular maritime employment constitutes an integral part of the operation of a common carrier by rail engaged in interstate commerce.

Third: The Ohio Workmen's Compensation act applies to employers and employes engaged in this state in intrastate and also in interstate and foreign commerce, except common carriers by railroad, and some of their employes who may become subject to it in a limited way by the election provided for in section 1465-98 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

WATERWORKS—NO AUTHORITY FOR THE PUBLICATION OF RULES AND RATES.

There is no direct statutory authority for the publication of the rates and rules of the waterworks department of a municipality.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion as follows:

> "We are referring you to section 3957 G. C., which provides that the by-laws and regulations made by the director of public service for the control of the waterworks shall have the same validity as ordinances.

1. Is there any authority of law for the director of public service in cities, or the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, when establishing code of rates, rules, etc., to advertise the same in newspaper?

2. If such publication be legal, would it be governed by the laws of publication covering ordinances?"

Section 3957 G. C. to which you refer provides as follows:

"Such director may make such by-laws and regulations as he deems necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of the waterworks. Such by-laws and regulations shall have the same validity as ordinances when not repugnant thereto or to the constitution or laws of the state."

It will be observed that this section lacks a provision similar to that found in the sections relating to the orders and regulations of municipal boards of health. The provision in this respect is that of section 4413 of the General Code, which is as follows:

"The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. Orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, advertised, recorded and certified as are ordinances of municipalities, and the record thereof shall be given, in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances."

There is no general provision requiring the publication of any municipal regulations other than ordinances and rules of the board of health. It necessarily follows that there is no direct statutory authority for the publication of the rates and rules of the waterworks department of a municipality.

From the form in which your question is submitted I assume that council has not attempted to authorize the director of public service or the board of trustees of public affairs to make any publication other than that directly authorized by the statute. Accordingly I do not pass upon the question as to the power of council in this respect.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CORPORATIONS — TAXATION — MONEYS, CREDITS AND INVESTMENTS, WHERE SITUATED—"FIXED PROPERTY" FOR TAXATION DEFINED.

The moneys, credits and investments of a corporation are "situated" for the purpose of section 5405 G. C. in the taxing district wherein the corporation has its principal place of business, where such principal place of business is in a given county in which the return is made.

The term "fixed property" as used in section 5405 G. C. in prescribing the rule of apportionment embraces all tangible personal property other than that which is continuously used in a transitory manner like the rolling stock of a railroad; and the term includes such tangible personal property as is so used and also intangible property, such as moneys, credits, investments in stocks, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 23, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion upon the following:

> "1. An Ohio corporation has all of its property located in Stark county. Its principal office is located in the city of Massillon and its plant, together with all of the personal property necessary to its operation, is located in an adjoining township. Section 5405 G. C. provides as follows:
> 'Returns shall be made to the several auditors of the respective counties where such property is situated, together with a statement of the amount thereof which is situated in each township, village, city or taxing district therein.'
>
> In complying with this provision where should the company state that its moneys, credits and investments in stocks and bonds, etc., are situated?
> 2. This section further provides that the county auditor shall ascertain and determine the value of the company's property and deduct from the amount thereof the assessed value of the company's real estate and apportion the remainder to such cities, villages, townships or taxing districts pro rata in proportion to the value of the real estate and fixed property included in the return, in each of such cities, villages, townships or taxing districts.
> Which of the several items enumerated in section 5376 as amended 107 O. L. 32, are subject to this apportionment and what is the basis of the apportionment, that is, what is meant by 'real estate and fixed property' as used in this section?"

In considering your first question the following factors must be taken into account:

Intangible property cannot with any accuracy be said to be "situated" anywhere; that is to say, in the nature of things it can not have any independent situs. Hence, at common law, and in the absence of statute incorporeal property was assigned location wherever its location was necessary by applying the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam. It is now established, however, that it is within the power of a state to deal with intangible property on the footing of situs, as Mr. Justice Holmes puts it in Wheeler vs. Sohmer, 233 U. S., 434-439—that is, to assign to intangible property an artificial location dependent upon some such factor as the place where the tangible evidence of the property may be kept, the place where the business is conducted which originates the intangible property, etc., and in so doing to reject the principle mobilia sequuntur personam.

Legislation directed to this end would, of course, most appropriately take the form of an express declaration that for a given purpose—in this instance property taxation—the intangible property in question should be deemed to be situated or located at some such place. But it is well established that statutory expressions containing no direct mention of the subject of situs or location may be construed and applied as intended to accomplish this end. Thus, the statutes about which you inquire require corporations, wherever organized, to list for taxation inter alia

"moneys and credits" in this state. (Section 5404 G. C.) Under this statute it has been held that moneys and credits originating in the conduct of the business of a foreign corporation in the state of Ohio have a taxable situs in this state.

> Hubbard vs. Brush, 61 O. S. 252; Ins. Co. vs. Bowland, 196 U. S. 611; Simes vs. Best, 1 O. C. C. n. s. 41.

The exact point in this state at which such intangibles will have their situs depends upon whether or not the foreign corporation has an office or principal place of business in this state, as may be realized by comparing the last two of the above cited cases. Indeed, even as to natural persons the principle of business situs as an exception to the principle of mobilia sequuntur personam has been recognized.

> Jack vs. Walker, 96 Fed. 578; Grant vs. Jones, 39 O. S. 506; Meyers vs. Seeberger, 45 O. S. 232.

Though the result in these cases is dependent upon the application of the statute requiring an agent to list all moneys and credits in his possession and under his control as agent, thus making the maxim mobilia sequuntur personam applicable to the residence of the agent rather than that of the principal.

In the case you submit, however, it does not seem that any of the exceptions recognized by the Ohio statutes and cases already referred to apply because the principal office and the plant of the corporation are both located in the same county and there is no question of interstate situs whatsoever.

We have other provisions in our statutes, however, relating to situs such as that of section 5371 G. C. which, as it now stands, contains the following expressions:

> "* * * Merchants' and manufacturers' stock, and personal property upon farms, shall be listed in the township, city or village in which it is situated. All other personal property, moneys, credits and investments, except as otherwise especially provided, shall be listed in the township, city or village in which the person to be charged with taxes thereon resides at the time of the listing thereof, if such person resides in the county where the property is listed, and if not, then in the township, city or village where the property is when listed."

So far as intangibles are concerned this section merely declares the rule of mobilia sequuntur personam. The declaration that if the owner does not reside in the county the property shall be listed "in the township, city or village where the property is" means nothing with respect to intangible because, as we have seen, such property is inherently incapable of natural location.

Again, there is section 5371-4 of the General Code (107 O. L. 31) which provides as follows:

> "Property pertaining to a business carried on by a person, firm, partnership, association or unincorporated company, shall be listed in the township, city or village in which such business is carried on. Provided, however, that if such business is carried on in more than one township, city or village in the same county, the value thereof shall be ascertained and apportioned to and assessed in the several townships, cities or villages in which such business is carried on."

This section recognizes and applies the principle of business situs, but it does not relate to the property of incorporated companies and therefore can not be considered in connection with your question.

The so-called Parrett-Whittemore law contained an express provision on the subject of your first inquiry in the form of section 5406-3 G. C. This section was intended to articulate with sections 5404 et seq. about which your question arises; but it was repealed in 107 O. L., 45, and no substitute for it was provided for in the repealing act.

There are no other statutory provisions, past or present, which in any way relate to the subject under consideration. Whatever may have been the effect of section 5406-3 as an effort to depart from the rule mobilia sequuntur personam, there is at present in force no statute which in any way modifies this, the common law principle, which governs your first question.

This being true we must assign to the intangible property of the corporation in question the location of the corporation itself. In the case you submit, the choice of locations is between the place where the principal office of the corporation is located and the place where its manufacturing enterprises, which presumably constitute its chief activities, are conducted.

I have no hesitancy in advising that the first of these places is that at which the corporation has its domicile and accordingly is the place at which its intangible property has its taxable situs.

> Salt Co. vs. Davis, 21 O. S., 555; Pelton vs. Transportation Co., 37 O. S. 450; Hubbard vs. Brush, supra; Simes vs. Best, supra.

In other words, the corporation "resides" at its principal place of business, and on the principle that movable things take their situation from the residence of their owner, which applies to intangible property in this state for the purpose of taxation, it follows that the moneys, credits and investments of the corporation about which you inquire are "situated" for the purposes of section 5405 of the General Code in the taxing district in which the company has its principal place of business.

I may say that I am not at all sure, having regard to all the provisions of section 5405, that the first sentence thereof is intended to apply to property which has no situation of its own. The whole section is as follows:

> "Return shall be made to the several auditors of the respective counties where such property is situated, together with a statement of the amount thereof which is situated in each township, village, city, or taxing district therein. Upon receiving such returns, the auditor shall ascertain and determine the value of the property of such companies, and deduct from the aggregate sum so found of each, the value as assessed for taxation of any real estate included in the return. The value of the property of each of such companies, after so deducting the value of all the real estate included in the return, shall be apportioned by the auditor to such cities, villages, townships, or taxing districts, pro rata, in proportion to the value of the real estate and fixed property included in the return, in each of such cities, villages, townships, or taxing districts. The auditor shall place such apportioned valuation on the tax duplicate and taxes shall be levied and collected thereon at the same rate and in the same manner that taxes are levied and collected on other personal property in such township, village, city or taxing district."

Without at this time discussing your second question, it is obvious that after the real estate included in the return by a corporation of its property which is located in a given county is deducted from the aggregate value thereof, the remainder is to be located, for the purposes of taxation and by the rule of apportionment, in the districts in which the "real estate and fixed property included in the return" is located.

Whatever the term "fixed property" in this context means, it is at least clear that it is a qualifying term and prima facie does not embrace all taxable property other than real estate, yet before a taxing district is entitled to any part of the valuation of the property located in the county, it must have in it "real estate and fixed property," or either, and the apportionment to the district is based upon the relative value of such real estate and fixed property as compared to the whole value of such real estate and fixed property in the county. Hence, as the ultimate result of the process required by section 5406, the "situation" of intangible property will become perfectly immaterial unless such property were deemed to be "fixed property." That is to say, even if all the intangible property of a corporation might be regarded as situated within a given taxing district by the application of the rule mobilia sequuntur personam, which as I have held would apply to the case you submit, yet such property would not reach the duplicate of such taxing district except in proportion to the relative amount of real estate and fixed property in such district, and if there be no real estate and fixed property belonging to the corporation in that taxing district, then none of the intangible property which would otherwise be situated therein would be placed upon the duplicate of that district for taxation purposes.

However, the first sentence of section 5405 seems to assume that all property of the company which is taxable in the county must be assigned some situation therein and in some taxing district thereof, for the purpose of the original return at least. For this reason I do not feel able to advise that the corporation which you describe in making its return may omit to assign any situation to its intangibles, though I point out that the assigning of such a situation is of no practical value or importance unless intangible property be regarded as fixed.

This brings me to your second question the discussion of which I may preface by repeating the statement that the phrase "fixed property" evidently is more restricted in its import than the phrase "all other property" would be.

Conceivably the term "fixed property" might mean any of the following:

(1) Immovable property, i. e., that which is in law immovable, in which sense, contrasted as it is with "real estate," it would be meaningless because nothing is in contemplation of law immovable excepting real estate and interests therein which so far as the tax laws of Ohio are concerned are all comprised under the heading of "real property." For example, mineral rights and the like would be "real estate" for the purpose of taxation in Ohio. Therefore this meaning must be rejected.

(2) Property which though legally movable is in use stationary, in which sense the term would include such things as office furniture, books, light machinery, merchants' stocks, etc.

(3) Property which though legally movable is not only stationary in use but is attached in a more or less permanent way to particular real estate and adapted to the purposes for which that real estate is used—in other words such "fixtures" as would not be considered either "land" or "buildings" for the purpose of taxation. This meaning would exclude such articles of tangible property as are given as examples of the second possible meaning of the term.

(4) All tangible personal property—in which sense it would include animals, highly movable in character but capable of an independent situs of their own under section 5371 of the General Code.

(5) A meaning which might be described as something between the second and fourth of the meanings already suggested and which would include all tangible personal property excepting such as in use would be constantly in movement such as automobile trucks not ordinarily housed in one particular place to the exclusion of others, boats used for commercial transportation of a private character, etc.

The first of these suggested meanings having been eliminated the choice among the other four must be made, I think, by considering the legislative history of what are now sections 5404 and 5405 of the General Code. Its subject matter appeared first in the tax law of 1859, 56 O. L., 183, as section 16 thereof. That section provided a scheme for the taxation of the property of all corporations whose taxation was not specifically provided for otherwise in the act—just as the present sections do. Among the kinds of companies, however, to which it then related were some for whose taxation specific provision has since been made. Most significant among these were railroad companies. Indeed, the legislature seems to have had particularly in mind the case of railroad companies in framing section 16 as the following language quoted from that section will show:

> "The president, * * * shall list for taxation, * * * all the personal property, which shall be held to include road bed, water and wood stations and such other realty as is necessary to the daily running operations of the road, moneys and credits of such company or corporation, within the state, at the actual value in money, in manner following; in all cases return shall be made to the several auditors of the respective counties where such property may be situated, together with a statement of the amount of said property which is situated in each township, incorporated village, city or ward therein; the value of all movable property shall be added to the stationary and fixed property and real estate, and apportioned to such wards, cities, incorporated villages, or townships, pro rata, in proportion to the value of the real estate and fixed property in said ward, city, incorporated village or township, * * *."

The tax commission will at a glance recognize some of this language and remember where it has gone in the subsequent history of the taxing laws of our state.

When railroads were taken out of the operation of this section it was first amended by merely striking out the words "railroad company" leaving in the section the anomalous reference to road bed, water and wood stations and other similar terms, (See 73 O. L. 138).

When the statutes were codified in 1880 the reference to "water and wood stations" was left out, but what is now section 5405 G. C. appeared in what was then section 2744 R. S. as follows:

> "In all cases return shall be made to the several auditors of the respective counties where such property may be situated together with a statement of the amount of said property which is situated in each county, village, city or ward thereof. The value of all movable property shall be added to the stationary and fixed property or real estate and apportioned * * * in proportion to the value of the real estate and fixed property * * *."

In the codification of 1910 this language was retained. The present form of the statute dates from its amendment in 102 O. L., 60.

I call attention to the fact that in the original there were two words which were left out in the amendment of 1911—"stationary" which in the original was coupled with the word "fixed," the meaning of which is now under consideration, and the word "movable" which was contrasted in the original with "stationary and fixed" property. In other words, in the original statute which, as has been remarked was intended to apply to railroad companies with other corporations, it seems clear that all property of such companies, excepting real estate, was divided into two classes, viz: (1) "movable property," and (2) "stationary and fixed property and real estate." The legislature in making this provision was undoubtedly thinking about the rolling stock of railroads, such as engines and cars, and intended to set such rolling stock over against all other species of tangible property at least. The problem still exists under said original section, however, to determine whether moneys, credits and investments which, as has been observed, were incapable of acquiring any independent situs of their own, were intended to be clased as "movable" or as "stationary and fixed." Undoubtedly the reason impelling the legislature to contrast rolling stock with some other property was that the rolling stock did not have any natural fixed situs. The same reason might well have been applied to intangible property.

Again, in the original section, though the first classification was as above outlined, the apportionment was to be made, not on the basis of "stationary and fixed property and real estate," but on the basis of "real estate and fixed property," thus omitting the word "stationary."

In this connection it will be further observed that in the amendment of 1911 the word "stationary" was dropped. I do not attach any significance either to the change in phraseology from one clause to another in the original section nor to the omission of the word "stationary" in the amendment of 1911. In my opinion the phrase "stationary and fixed" was intended by the legislature in 1859 to be synonymous with the word "fixed" as subsequently used and the meaning of the word "fixed" having thus been determined its retention in 1911 must be regarded as indicative of an intention on the part of the General Assembly to the effect that the meaning of the word should be the same as it had previously been, viz: equivalent to "stationary and fixed." In this view I am supported by the only case which I have been able to find bearing on the question. I refer to Railway Co. vs. Kelsey, 9 O. Dec. Rep. 227, affirmed by the supreme court without report. The reporter's syllabus of that case is as follows:

> "Revised statutes, 2774, did not change the prior law, and the rules for the taxation of a railroad company, whose line runs through several counties of this state are: 1st. The value of the rolling stock is to be apportioned to the different counties and cities not as to value, but in proportion to the length of the road in each. 2nd. The fixed property is to be apportioned in the proportion that the value of the part in each county or city bears to the total in the state. 3rd. The value of moneys and credits are to be apportioned in each locality in the same proportion as the fixed property."

The syllabus refers to a change made by Revised Statutes, section 2774, in the prior law. The court was considering whether or not the act of 1862, above referred to, changed the original law enacted in 56 O. L. 183. The amendment as we have seen provided a new scheme for the assessment of railroads by boards of county auditors and the rule of apportionment therein was as follows:

> "To each city, village, township or district, or part thereof therein, shall be apportioned such part thereof, as shall equalize the relative value of the real estate, structures, and stationary personal property of such company therein, in proportion to the whole value of the real estate, structures and personal property of such railroad company in this state, and so that the rolling stock of such company shall be apportioned in the same proportion that the length of such road in said county bears to the entire length thereof in all of said counties or county, and to each city, village and district, or any part thereof therein."

The controversy in the case was as to whether the moneys and credits of the railroad company should be apportioned like the rolling stock was required to be apportioned under section 2774, viz. according to the miles of main track or in proportion to the "real estate, structures and personal property." The court held that the latter rule of apportionment was correct and in so holding based its conclusion upon the reasoning set forth in the syllabus, viz., that the railroad act of 1862 was no different in respect to its rule of apportionment for moneys and credits than the general corporation act of 1859 which formerly applied to railroads had been. In other words, so far as apportionment was concerned the court was of the opinion that the only change made in the statute was to require rolling stock to be apportioned according to the miles of main track instead of in proportion to the "stationary and fixed property" in each taxing district. The court therefore necessarily considered and decided what the meaning of the original law of 1859 was as to the apportionment of moneys and credits. On this point the court said at page 230:

> "The moneys and credits of the company have relation to its other property and should be accredited as much to one dollar thereof as to another, and as such moneys and credits have no special locality, the statute provides that they shall be apportioned to each county, city, village and township, in the same proportion that the fixed property is."

This decision, then, which as careful perusal of the entire opinion shows was influenced by the practice which had been followed and of which apparently the court was cognizant, establishes the result that moneys, credits and investments, i, e., all intangible property, is outside of the classification of "fixed property" as that classification was created by the law of 1859. As I have previously stated that in my opinion the term "fixed property" as it now appears in the statute after the amendment of 1911 has the same meaning as that which it had acquired previously to that amendment, it follows that the term "fixed property" does not include intangible property such as moneys, credits and investments.

The case cited did not, of course, pass directly upon the question as to whether any tangible property was to be regarded as outside of the classification of "fixed" property. I think it is clear, however, that any property having the attributes of the rolling stock of a railroad would not be regarded as "fixed"; that is to say, any tangible personal property which in use would be constantly in motion from one place to another is not within the scope of the term "fixed property." Whether there is any property belonging to corporations other than public utilities and having these characteristics I can not say. I can conceive of such a case as, for example, motor trucks or motor vehicles used by manufacturing or mercantile corporations for transportation purposes and not so kept as to return regularly to some particular garage as their home station. Thus such a company might provide motor vehicles for the use of its traveling salesmen who would tour some district of the state soliciting orders for the product of the company. Such property could not be regarded as "fixed" and it would necessarily take its taxable situs from the domicile of the company—the company's principal place of business.

Section 5371, above quoted, might be regarded as furnishing a test which is to be applied here. That section as we have seen requires merchants' and manufacturers' stocks and personal property upon farms to be listed in the district in which it is situated, thus giving to such tangible personal property an independent situs of its own. It further requires all other personal property, tangible and intangible, to be listed in the district in which the person to be charged with taxes thereon resides, except that if such person does not reside within the county where the property is listed it shall be listed in the township, city or village where the property is when listed. This last provision, though meaningless as I have stated when attempt is made to apply it to intangible property, is perfectly capable of application to tangible property such as office furniture, vehicles, domestic animals, other than those upon farms, and the like. The principle which I have in mind may be phrased thus:

That property is to be regarded as "fixed" for the purposes of section 5405 which has an independent situs of its own by virtue of section 5371 of the General Code. To apply this principle, however, would produce results which I do not think the legislature intended. For example, as applied to a railroad company under the tax law of 1859 it would result in all office furniture in the county wherein the railroad had its principal place of business being listed in the taxing district wherein that principal place of business was situated, whereas all such property in all the other counties of the state would be situated in the several taxing districts in which it might be found. In other words such property would be regarded as "fixed" in the counties other than the one in which the principal place of business of the company was located and as otherwise in the county wherein such place of business was located.

I find myself therefore obliged to reject the provisions of section 5371 as a test in determining the meaning of section 5405. I come back therefore to the meaning previously suggested which I may epitomise as follows:

The term "fixed property" includes all tangible personal property which in use is being kept on tax listing day at some particular place though it may be taken from that place occasionally and even habitually if it is always returned to that place for safe-keeping or otherwise when not in use. The term excludes all intangible property such as moneys, credits and investments and such tangible property as vehicles which are not only habitually moved about from place to place when in use but which are not assignable to any particular place as a place of safe-keeping or rest.

From this statement it will be seen that I can make but a partial and imperfect answer to your question as to what items of those mentioned in section 5376 represent property which is subject to apportionment and what come within the classification of "fixed property." Section 5376 is not framed on this basis. However, I may undertake such an answer to your question as I find myself able to give.

Section 5376 G. C. provides as follows:

> "Such statements shall truly set forth all live stock, all vehicles, all tools and machinery, all household goods and furnishings, all jewelry, all moneys, all credits, all bonds and corporate stocks, all annuities, and the value of each of all said items; the average value of the materials and manufactured articles required to be listed by manufacturers; the average value of the goods and merchandise required to be listed by merchants; all property required to be listed by pawnbrokers, and the value thereof; the monthly average amount or value, for the time he held or controlled them within the preceding year, of all moneys, credits, or other effects, within that time invested in, or converted into bonds or other securities not taxed, to the extent he may hold or control such bonds or securities on tax listing day, and no indebtedness created in the purchase of such bonds or securities shall be deducted from the credits required to be listed herein; all other personal property, of every kind, character or description, and the value thereof."

The following is a tabular statement of the classification of items mentioned in this section for the purposes of section 5405 G. C.:

Fixed Property.	Apportioned Property.
Live stock on farms or kept at any particular place.	Live stock, if any, so used for transportation purposes and not having any definite or assignable location of its own.
Vehicles subject to the classification above expressed respecting live stock.	Vehicles subject to the classifications above expressed respecting live stock.
Tools, machinery, household goods (office furniture), furnishings.	Moneys.
Jewelry.	Credits.
Manufacturers' stocks.	Bonds and corporate stocks.
Materials.	Annuities.
Machinery, etc.	Effects converted into non-taxable securities.
Merchants' stocks (other than those of peddlers).	Peddlers' stocks.
Property in pawn.
Other personal property.

It is to be sure possible, at least in an academic sense, that any given class of tangible property, excepting probably manufacturers' stocks, may acquire a transitory character by the manner in which the owner uses it. That is to say, by a transitory character I mean that the property is habitually and continually in a state of transit so that it can have no situs anywhere excepting at the domicile of its owner. This, an incorporated company might well, through its agents, peddle goods, for this purpose having horses and wagons and stocks of merchandise continually "on the move" from place to place. Such property would, of course, not be "fixed."

In short, I can do no more than repeat the statement that I have already made to the effect that the items set forth in section 5376 of the General Code are not divisible into classes for the purpose of section 5405 of the General Code at all.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE CITY OF LORAIN—$37,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 26, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re: Bonds of the city of Lorain, in the sum of $37,500.00, for the purpose of extending the water mains of the waterworks of said city.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the city of Lorain in the issuance of the above described bonds, and beg to advise you that said proceedings are in all respects legal, and that the bonds when issued will constitute valid and binding obligations of the city, payable according to their tenor.

In this connection I may state that the transcript discloses the fact that the proceeds of the bonds are intended to be used in carrying out an agreement made between the council of the city and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, the general tenor of which is that the corporation, which is securing housing facilities for a large number of laborers engaged in war shipping industries, is to put in all necessary municipal improvements, and the city is to pay such part as it would ordinarily pay for the making of such municipal improvements by way of reimbursement to the corporation.

This procedure would be, of course, violative of those provisions of the General Code which require municipal improvements to be made upon contracts entered into by the director of public service after competitive bidding. However, this fact does not in my judgment affect the validity of the bonds, which are issued for a perfectly lawful purpose, but goes to the legality of the proceedings for the expenditure of the fund created by the sale of the bonds after such sale takes place.

I therefore approve the bonds for purchase, and retain the transcript for the purpose of comparison with the bonds when printed and delivered, though the form of the bonds which is set forth in the transcript is perfectly satisfactory.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE LOT 34 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, August 28, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an abstract of title for the following described lot of land, situated in Franklin county, Ohio, and known as lot number thirty-four (34) of the Wood Brown Place, as shown by plat of said addition recorded in plat book 5, pages 196-197, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio, being a part of the following premises, to-wit:

> Being a part of quarter township number three (3), township number one (1), range number eighteen (18), United States military lands. a westerly direction with said Jerry O. I have carefully examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any encumbrances or liens upon said premises except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined as to amount and unpaid; and except a special assessment on said premises for road improvement, amounting to 41c, inclusive of interest.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract discloses that on August 19, 1918, the heirs of George W. Lakin had a good and sufficient title to the premises hereinbefore described, subject, however, to the dower interest of Mary E. Lakin, widow of said George W. Lakin. It does not appear from said abstract that an affidavit has been prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 2768 General Code (103 Ohio Laws, 99) showing the heirs at law or next of kin of said George W. Lakin at the time of his death and presented to the county auditor for transfer of said premises of said George W. Lakin to his heirs at law, and recorded in the office of the county recorder.

Would therefore advise you to see that said affidavit is placed on record prior to your acceptance of the deed for said premises.

I am returning herewith the abstract of title submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract, when taken in connection with the additional information that I have referred to above, disclosed on August 19, 1918, at 7 a. m., a good and sufficient title in Henry G. Watson to the premises hereinbefore described.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted.

MUNICIPALITY—CITY ENGINEER—POWER OF APPOINTMENT AND REMOVAL OF.

The power of appointment and removal of the city engineer is vested in the mayor if such engineer is the head of a sub-department established in the department of public service by the director thereof; if no such sub-department has been so established the engineer is a general employe of the department of public service and is to be appointed and removed by the director thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You request my opinion as follows:

"We are respectfully calling your attention to sections 4246 and 4247 G. C., and might cite you to opinion, page 337 of the Annual Reports of the Attorney General for 1912, giving the director of service the power of making appointments.

Question: Is the selection or removal of a city engineer vested in the director of public service?"

The following sections of the General Code furnish, I believe, a rather clear answer to your question:

"Section 4246.—The executive power and authority of cities shall be vested in a mayor, president of council, auditor, treasurer, solicitor, director of public service, director of public safety, and such other officers and departments as are provided by this title."

"Section 4247.—Subject to the limitations prescribed in this subdivision such executive officers shall have exclusive right to appoint all officers, clerks and employes in their respective departments or offices, and likewise, subject to the limitations herein prescribed, shall have sole power to remove or suspend any of such officers, clerks or employes."

"Section 4250.—The mayor shall be the chief conservator of peace within the corporation. He shall appoint, and have the power to remove, the director of public service, the director of public safety, and the heads of the sub-departments of the departments of public service and public safety, * * *."

"Section 4327.—The director of public service may establish such sub-department as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, deputies, inspectors, engineers, harbor masters, clerks, laborers and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

I think a mere reading of these sections makes it obvious that your question can not be answered unequivocally either way. It all depends upon whether there is a sub-department of engineering in the department of public service. Such a sub-department, if it exists, would be established by the director of public service and by no other authority. If the director establishes such a sub-department then the head of it is subject to appointment and removal by the mayor. If no such sub-department has been created then any engineer who would be employed in the department of public service, no matter how dignified his title might be, would be merely a general employe of the department and not the head of a sub-department. As such, he would be subject to appointment and removal by the director of public service.

The answer to your question, then, depends upon whether or not the engineer is the head of a sub-department created by the director of public service within his department.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BEQUEST TO GRANDSON NOT SUBJECT TO.

A bequest to a grandson, whose mother is living and is also a beneficiary of the grandfather's will, is not subject to the collateral inheritance tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 5, 1918.

HON. FRED W. MCCOY, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion upon the following question:

> "Mr. S. of this place willed his daughter and only child, Mrs. G., who is now living, $100.00 and the balance of his estate to her son—G., grandson of S., who is now living.
> Is the bequest to the grandson under the circumstances subject to this tax?"

Section 5331 of the General Code imposes a tax upon interests in property passing by death "to a person in trust, or otherwise, other than to or for the use of the father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, * *"

Section 5333 of the General Code, which would have to be applied if the bequest to the grandson were taxable, in order to arrive at the value of his taxable interest, provides as follows:

> "When a person bequeaths or devises property to or for the use of father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child, during life or for a term of years, and the remainder to a collateral heir, or to a stranger to the blood, the value of the prior estate, shall be appraised, within sixty days after the death of the testator, in the manner hereinafter provided, and deducted, together with the sum of five hundred dollars, from the appraised value of such property."

Section 5333 throws light upon the meaning of the phrase "lineal descendant" as used in section 5331; for it makes it rather clear that the general assembly did not intend to exclude from the scope of that term any person in the direct line of descent from the decedent. In other words, any descendant of the decedent who is not a "collateral heir or a stranger to the blood" within the meaning of section 5333 appears to have been regarded by the general assembly as a "lineal descendant." Section 5333 further makes it apparent that the question as to whether or not a given person is a "lineal descendant" of the decedent can not depend upon the fact that there are other "lineal descendants" living, more nearly related to the decedent than he. In other words, the phrase "lineal descendant" is not limited to the nearest surviving lineal descendant, but applies to any who would come within the natural scope of that phrase.

Of course, if there were no other provisions in the statute one would say that the phrase "lineal descendant" would naturally include a grandson. Such other expressions as we find in the statute do not tend to show that the phrase is used in any other than its natural sense. It would rather emphasize its use in that sense.

If authority is needed for the proposition that the phrase "lineal descendant" naturally includes a grandson, I might refer you to In re Winchester's Estate, 140 Cal. 468. The exact result in that case may not be law in Ohio because of the phraseology of the amendment to section 5331 as compared with that of the original statute; but in so far as it touches the question now under consideration it was, in my opinion, correctly decided.

I might add that the phrase "adopted child" as used in the statute probably is limited in its scope to the person sustaining that relation to the decedent; so that probably the issue of an adopted child would be persons whose interests are subject to the tax. This is because section 5331 as originally enacted added the phrase "or the lineal descendants of an adopted child" to the catalogue of excepted persons, and this phrase was dropped when the section was amended in 1913. Hence it might be argued that because the whole phrase is "lineal descendant or adopted child" the legislature must have intended the same kind of a limitation with respect to the persons entitled to claim exemption under the first term as it apparently intended to impose with respect to those so entitled under the second term of the phrase. Such an argument, however, would not be well founded in my opinion. Going back to the original section we find the following language therein, which has also been omitted from the section as amended:

> "The wife or widow of a son, the husband of the daughter of a decedent."

Here we have the words "son" and "daughter" used in one part of the statute and the phrase "lineal descendant" in another. The general assembly evidently did not intend the latter phrase to be synonymous with "son" or "daughter," or it would have used those words throughout. In the original, then, "lineal descendant" undoubtedly included a grandson. The amendment did nothing to change this meaning, which remains the same as that which the phrase acquired in the original. This examination of the history of the statute, then, affords additional reasons for arriving at the result which I have previously expressed.

For all the foregoing reasons, I am of the opinion that a bequest to a grandson, whose father or mother is living, is exempt from the collateral inheritance tax—or, more accurately, not within the statute imposing the tax at all. Of course, I do not need to add that the issue of a daughter are just as much "lineal descendants" as the issue of a son would be.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TUITION—WHEN BOARD OF EDUCATION NOT LIABLE WHEN PUPIL ATTENDS SCHOOL IN ADJOINING DISTRICT.

Where a pupil lives more than one and one-half miles from the school to which he has been assigned in his own district, and there is located a nearer school in his own district, but such pupil attends a school in an adjoining district, which school in the adjoining district, although nearer than the school to which the pupil is assigned, is farther than the school which the pupil might have attended in his own district, under such circumstances tuition cannot be collected from the board of education of the district of the residence of such pupil by the board of education of the district where such pupil attended school.

Where a pupil lives more than one and one-half miles from the school to which he has been assigned in his own district, but attends school in another district, which is farther from the residence of such pupil than the school in his own district, the board of education of such district where such pupil attends school cannot collect tuition from the board of education of the district where the pupil resides.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 5, 1918.

HON. A. C. MCDOUGAL, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter requesting my opinion reads:

"I desire to have your opinion on the following statement of facts on behalf of the board of education of the Woodsfield Village School district of Woodsfield, Ohio.

"Last year the John Feldner children were assigned to the Standing Stone school, No. 14, which is more than three miles from their residence by the public road, The Feldner children attended the Woodsfield village schools, 652 rods from the Feldner residence by the public road, the Woodsfield Village School district being an adjoining district to that in which the Feldners reside. The distance from the Feldner residence to No. 12 rural school is 570 rods by the public road and the distance from the Feldner residence to No. 5 rural school is about 560 rods.

"School districts Nos. 14, 12 and 5 are all in the Center Township School district, the Woodsfield Village School district being an adjoining district in the same township.

"The question arises as to whether or not Center township pays for the schooling of the Feldner children in the Woodsfield Village School district or whether Mr. Feldner should pay it.

"For this school year the Feldner children have been assigned to No. 12 school, being in the Center Township School district, the district in which they reside, the distance being 570 rods from the Feldner residence to No. 12. May they attend the Woodsfield village schools at the expense of the Center Township district?"

Pertinent to your inquiry is section 7735 G. C., which reads in part:

"When pupils live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district where they reside, they may attend a nearer school in the same district, or if there be none nearer therein, then the nearest school in another school district, in all grades below the high school. * * *."

Applying the same to your case we have in substance the following:

The children of John Feldner, who live in Center Township Rural School district, were assigned to the Standing Stone school, No. 14 of said district, which Standing Stone school was more than three miles from the Feldner residence. The Feldner children, instead of attending the school to which they had been assigned in their own district, attended the Woodsfield school, which is located in an adjoining district. The Woodsfield school is located 552 rods from the Feldner residence. In Center Township Rural School district there is located school No. 5, which is 560 rods from the Feldner residence, and school No. 12, which is 570 rods from the Feldner residence.

The first question is: Can the Woodsfield village board of education collect tuition for such Feldner children from the Center Township rural board of education, on account of the attendance of said Feldner children at the Woodsfield school?

The section above quoted provides that when children live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they are assigned in the district in which they reside, such pupils have a right to attend a nearer school in the same district. In your case you say that the children lived more than three miles, so that they could not be required under said section to attend the school to which they had been assigned. The section provides, though, that if there be no nearer school than the one to which they have been assigned in their own district, then they may attend the nearest school in another school district. That condition does not arise in this case because schools Nos. 5 and 12 are both nearer to the Feldner residence than is the Woodsfield school, and while the children would have had a right to attend a nearer school in their own district, they did not have a right to attend a school located outside of their district when there was a nearer school located within the district. In other words, several conditions must attach before a board of education is required to pay the tuition of pupils who attend a nearer school than the one to which they have been assigned in their own district. (1) They must live more than one and one-half miles from the school to which they have been assigned, and, (2) there must be no nearer school in their own district. When both of these conditions attach, then a pupil may attend a nearer school in another district and the board of education of the district of the residence of such pupils must pay the tuition of such pupils who attend such nearer school in the other district. (The above, however, is subject to the further condition that said schools are not centralized and the transportation is not provided.)

In Boyce vs. Board of Education, 76 O. S., 365, the children of the plaintiff were assigned to a school which was more than one and one-half miles from their home. They sought admittance in a school in an adjoining district, which school was farther from their residence than the one to which they had been assigned. Admittance was refused and a mandamus action was commenced, in the petition in which it was alleged that the road along which the pupils would be compelled to travel, in going to and from the school to which they had been assigned, was shaded on both sides with large trees and was dangerous to travel. In a per curiam opinion the court say, at page 368:

> "It is equally clear from the language which the legislature has employed that the only purpose to be accomplished by the section is to relieve school children from the necessity of attending a school in their own district which is more than one mile and a half from their residence if there is a nearer school in another district. Since the petition admits that the school which is under the control of the defendants is more remote from the residence of the relator than is the school of the district in which he resides, the circuit court correctly determined that the statute does not authorize the transfer."

So in our case, since it is admitted in the statement of facts that the Feldner children could have attended a nearer school in their own district, the tuition to which they would have been entitled, had there been no such nearer school, cannot be collected from the board of education of the district of their residence.

In your second question you say that the children have this year been assigned to school No. 12 and you ask if they can attend the Woodsfield school and collect tuition from the board of education of their residence for such attendance.

The Boyce case, above mentioned, settles your question precisely, for you state in your letter that school No. 12 is only 570 rods from the Feldner residence and that the Woodsfield school is 652 rods from their residence. So that, the tuition could not be collected from said board of education of the district of the residence of said pupils.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue has been submitted for my approval, and I am therefore retaining said transcript until proper bond form is submitted and approved.

COUNTY RECORDER—INDICES KEPT BY HIM NOT "RECORDS"—NO FEES FOR SEARCH CAN BE CHARGED.

The indexes required or authorized to be kept by a county recorder are no part of the record. To consult such indexes at the request of a citizen is not a "search of the record without copy" for which a fee may be charged.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 7, 1918.

HON. JOHN L. CABLE, Prosecuting Attorney, Lima, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion as follows:

"Section 2779 of the General Code, referring to the fee to be collected by the county recorder, provides in part:

'For each search of the record without copy, fifteen cents.'

The present county recorder and those who have held office prior to him in this county have, at the request of persons coming into the office gone to the abstract index and advised them as to who holds the title to a lot inquired about and also advised from this same abstract index, the number, and amount of mortgages and made no charge for the same.

Will you please give me a definition of the above term, 'for each search of the record without copy, fifteen cents'?

Also advise if the recorder has any authority to refer to this abstract index record without making a charge for the same—this index record showing the number of the lot or the quarter section of land and is in fact an abstract of that particular real estate, all appearing upon the one page.

I call your attention to section 12930 of the General Code."

Section 12930 of the General Code, to which you refer, makes it a penal offense for a salaried county official to remit a fee.

You have sufficiently quoted from section 2779 of the General Code. The following other provisions of the General Code with respect to the duties of the county recorder may be considered:

"Section 2757.—The recorder shall keep four separate sets of records, namely: First a record of deeds, in which shall be recorded all deeds, powers of attorney, and other instruments of writing for the absolute and unconditional sale or conveyance of lands, tenements and hereditaments; second, a record of mortgages, in which shall be recorded all mortgages, powers of attorney, or other instruments of writing by which lands, tenements, or hereditaments are or may be mortgaged or otherwise conditionally sold, conveyed, affected, or incumbered in law; third, a record of plats, in which shall be recorded all plats and maps of town lots, and of the sub-divisions thereof, and of other divisions or surveys or lands; fourth, a record of leases, in which shall be recorded all leases and powers of attorney for the execution of leases. All instruments entitled to record shall be recorded in the proper record in the order in which they are presented for record."

It will be observed that none of the indexes which the recorder is required or authorized to keep are mentioned in this section, which prescribes the "records" which he shall keep. The indexes which it is the recorder's duty to keep are: The general alphabetical indexes (section 2764), a daily register of deeds and mortgages (section 2765), and when the county commissioners so order "sectional indexes," or as you describe them "abstract indexes" (section 2766).

It is my opinion that these indexes are not "records." It is not the duty of the county recorder to consult the indexes upon the request of a citizen, and he may lawfully refuse to do so. Indeed, in a refined sense it may be said that he has no right to perform this service. This technical view, however, is extreme, and it would seem to be not improper for the recorder, on the making of a request such as that described in your letter, to consult the abstract index and inform the inquirer what it shows. No fee is prescribed for this service, and it must be regarded as a mere gratuitous accommodation. At all events, a recorder who has extended such an accommodation and charged no fee for it is not subject to prosecution under section 12930 of the General Code.

You ask me to advise you as to the meaning of the phrase "for each search of the record without copy." In my opinion, this phrase contemplates a search of one of the records mentioned in section 2757 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VILLAGE OF BRYAN, O.—$90,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 7, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re: Bonds of the village of Bryan, Ohio, in the sum of $90,000.00, for the stated purpose of enlarging, purchasing and installing new additional power machinery for the municipal electric light and waterworks plant and making water main extensions in said village.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the village of Bryan, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and regret to say that I am compelled to disapprove said issue specifically for the reason that the ordinance of council providing for said issue of bonds does not make provision for annual tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes, as required by section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political sub-divisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The financial statement of said village, which has been submitted with and as a part of said transcript, shows that the village has now outstanding "waterworks and electric light bonds" in the aggregate amount of $81,000.00. As to these bonds the clerk certifies that the income from the waterworks and electric light plant in said village is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses and interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to the sinking fund to retire all of such outstanding waterworks and electric light bonds.

It is quite possible that the authorities of the village of Bryan, in providing for the issue of bonds here in question, contemplated that the income from its waterworks and electric light plant would be sufficient to provide for the payment of interest on these bonds and to create a sinking fund for their retirement as well. This may or may not explain the failure of council to provide for annual tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to these bonds, in the ordinance providing for their issue.

These bonds, however, if otherwise legal, would be direct obligations of the village as such, and a charge, so to speak, against the taxable real and personal property in said village. This being so, it would be the duty of the council of the village to levy taxes annually for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to these bonds, at least to the extent that the income from the waterworks and electric light plant might not be sufficient for the purpose, and to this end it was the duty of council, in enacting the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds, to make provision for such annual tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes, in regard to the isue of bonds therein provided for.

Link vs. Karb, 89 O. S. 326.

In addition to the objection in the proceedings relating to this bond issue, just noted, I note that on May 1, 1918, the village issued electric light and waterworks bonds in the sum of $40,000.00. In view of this fact, the present proposed issue is subject to the approval of the Capital Issues committee which has assumed jurisdiction to pass upon the purpose of all bonds, which, added to other bonds issued since April 5, 1918, exceed in the aggregate the sum of $100,000.00.

The transcript does not show such approval by the Capital Issues committee and irrespective of any other consideration I would not feel justified in approving this bond issue for purchase by you, without the approval of such committee.

Again, I note that though this issue of bonds was offered to the trustees of the sinking fund of the village, before the same was offered to you, said bonds were not offered to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district.

The provisions of sections 3922 to 3924 inc. G. C. are somewhat uncertain with respect to the question of their application to bonds issued by villages. This department, however, in passing upon the validity of village bonds purchased by you, has uniformly required the village authorities to offer such bonds to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district, before approving their purchase by you. Of course if a separate board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district has not been appointed by the common pleas court and qualified, in the manner provided by section 7614 G. C., the board of trustees of the sinking fund of the village under the provisions of said section may also act as the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district.

Railway vs. Norwalk, 22 C. C. (N. S.) 590.

However, there is nothing in the transcript to show that the board of trustees of the sinking fund of the village of Bryan is acting in such dual capacity, or that this issue of bonds was offered to and rejected by such board of trustees of the sinking fund, in the capacity of a board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district, as well as in its primary capacity as a board of trustees of the sinking fund of the village.

In this connection I might say that I would not be disposed to disapprove of the bond issue here in question on the two grounds last discussed, without awaiting further information with respect to these objections, or without, if need be, giving the village authorities an opportunity to comply with the requirements noted in said respective objections, by securing the approval of the Capital Issues committee and by making an offer of this bond issue to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district.

A consideration of the transcript of the proceedings relating to this bond issue suggests two other questions which I do not find it necessary to decide, but which are proper to be noted by me at this time. The first relates to the stated purpose for which these bonds are to be issued. In this connection I note that this issue is one on a vote of the electors of the village and is in part "for the purpose of enlarging, purchasing and installing new additional power machinery for the municipal electric light and waterworks plant." The question suggested is whether to this extent the stated purpose of the bond issue is a single one, or whether the same comprehends two separate and distinct purposes, which should have properly been voted on as separate propositions.

Section 3939 G. C. (107 O. L. 553), in paragraph "11" thereof, authorizes a municipal corporation to issue bonds for erecting or purchasing waterworks for supplying water to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof.

Paragraph "12" of the same section authorizes the issue of bonds for erecting or purchasing works for the generation and transmission of electricity, for the supplying of electricity to the corporation and the inhabitants thereof.

Paragraph "2" of this section of the General Code provides for the issue of bonds of the municipal corporation "for extending, enlarging, improving, repairing or securing a more complete enjoyment of a building or improvement authorized by this section, and for equipping and furnishing it."

It may be stated as a general principle that where the question of issuing bonds for several different purposes is submitted to the voters, a failure to specify the amount to be used for each purpose and to submit the different propositions separately renders the election illegal and the bonds invalid, and that the test whether a proposition for the issuance of municipal bonds is a single one is whether or not the several parts of the project for which the bonds are to be voted are so related that united they form in fact but one combined and rounded whole.

The legislation relating to this issue of bonds does not recite in so many words that these bonds are issued for the purpose of purchasing and installing machinery in a combined waterworks and electric light plant. It fairly appears, however, that this is the case and in view of this fact I am not disposed to question the legality of the stated purpose of the bond issue in the light of the principle above noted and the express provisions of paragraph "2" of section 3939, supra. However, I have made no exhaustive study of this question, and, as before noted, I do not find it necessary to express any settled opinion upon the question.

As hereinabove stated, it appears from the financial statement, made a part of the transcript, that this village has outstanding waterworks and electric light bonds in the sum of $81,000.00. It likewise appears from said financial statement that about $47,000.00 of these outstanding waterworks and electric light bonds, in addition to street assessment bonds and other bonds entitled to deduction, will have to be deducted from the total amount of the outstanding bonds of the village, in order to permit the present issue within the five per cent. net limitation prescribed by the Longworth law with respect to bonds issued under vote of the electors.

The certificate made by the village clerk in regard to the outstanding waterworks and electric light bonds of the village has already been referred to. If these outstanding bonds were waterworks bonds and it appeared that the income from the waterworks plant of the village was sufficient to cover the cost of operating expenses, interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund for the retirement of such bonds, the village authorities would be entitled to deduct the amount of such waterworks bonds from the whole amount of the outstanding bonds of the village and thereby permit the proposed issue of bonds to be made within the five per cent. net limitation of the Longworth law.

However, I know of no statutory provision requiring any part of the income of an electric light plant to be devoted to interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to bonds issued for the construction or improvement of such plant; nor do I know of any statutory provision which under any circumstances permits deduction of municipal electric light bonds from the total bonded indebtedness of the municipality for the purpose of determining the net indebtedness of a municipality with respect to any of the limitations of the Longworth law.

The question here suggested is whether or not municipal bonds, issued for the erection or improvement of a combined waterworks and electric light plant owned by the municipality, can be deducted on a showing that the income from such combined plant is sufficient to cover the cost of operating expenses, interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund for the retirement of such bonds when due.

The question is one of considerable difficulty, but in view of the fact that I am required to disapprove this bond issue on the present legislation of council, for the reason first herein above noted, it is not necessary for me to decide this question and my only purpose in noting same is to insure proper consideration of the question in any future proceedings by council of the village relating to the proposed issue of bonds.

On the consideration first herein above noted, I am of the opinion that the issue of bonds here in question is not valid and that you should not purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE VILLAGE OF CENTERBURG, O. $2,418.57.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 10, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re: Bonds of the village of Centerburg, Ohio, in the sum of $2,418.57, in anticipation of the collection of assessments for the improvement of Hartford street in said village, by constructing sanitary sewer therein with all necessary manholes, flush tanks and lateral connections with vitrified sewer pipe.

GENTLEMEN:—I have made a careful examination of the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the village of Centerburg, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find that said proceedings are in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind. I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said village of Centerburg, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

The bond form submitted with and as a part of said transcript is not entirely satisfactory and I am therefore holding the transcript for the preparation and approval of a proper bond form.

Very truly yours,

WHERE ELECTION OFFICERS SUGGEST NAMES AT PRIMARY, AND PARTIES NOMINATED, BOARD OF ELECTIONS HAS NO AUTHORITY TO GO BACK OF RETURNS.

Where a political party has not nominated candidates for certain offices and the judges and clerks of that party on the day of the primary, at the various polling places furnished the voters affiliated with that party with a list of candidates to be voted for, the result being that the candidates, suggested by the election officers, received more than eight per cent. of all the votes cast, and the returns of the election have been made to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections; HELD: there is but one duty for said board of deputy state supervisors of elections and that is to declare the result from the returns made to them.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your inquiry as to whether a valid nomination is made under the following circumstances:

A political party not having the names of candidates printed on the official ballot, the judges and clerks of that party on the day of the primary, at the polling places furnished the voters affiliated with that party with a list of candidates for these county offices which are vacant, on the ballot, owing to no declarations of candidacy having been filed, and the voters so furnished with such names by the judges and clerks wrote in said names on the ballot, the result being that the candidates whose names were so written received more than eight per cent. of all the votes cast at the election.

You ask first, may the board of deputy state supervisors of elections refuse to place the names of such candidates on the election ballot? You also ask, if such candidates were not legally nominated, what would be the legal procedure necessary to prevent their names being placed on the ballot at the election?

Sections 4949 and 4969 G. C. provide for nominations for offices or places on the primary ballot, under the primary election act.

Section 4984-1 G. C. provides that no valid nomination shall be made for an office for which nominations are sought to be made and for which no nominating petitions have been filed, unless the name of the person attempting to be nominated shall have been written on at least eight per cent. of the ballots containing such vacancy, which have been voted at such primary election.

As I understand your first question, the candidate voted for received more than eight per cent., and what you desire to know is concerning the right or authority of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections to refuse to place the names of such candidates on the election ballot, owing to the facts stated as to how such names were furnished by the judges and clerks.

Section 4983 G. C. provides for the returns of the result of the election of the different precincts to be made to the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, with any tickets cast and counted, or left uncounted, concerning the legality of which there has been doubt.

Section 4984 G. C. provides for a canvass of the vote and certifying to the result thereof by the deputy state supervisors on the following Thursday after the primary.

Section 4967 G. C. provides among other things that all statutory provisions relating to general elections shall, so far as applicable, apply to and govern primary elections.

Section 5090 G. C. provides for the counting of "disputed ballots" at a general election.

Sections 5093, et seq., provide for the transmission of returns of elections to the deputy state supervisors and for the canvass and abstract of same.

In State ex rel. Pardee vs. Pattison, Governor, 73 O. S. 305, the supreme court held that in certifying the election of an officer, the power of the deputy state supervisors of elections is limited to certifying that the successful candidate has been elected and they have no power to decide upon a disputed term of office.

Under the provisions of a former statute (section 2981, R. S.), defining the duties of the canvassers of election returns, which require that:

> "In making the abstracts of votes they shall not decide upon the validity of the returns, but shall be governed by the number of votes stated in the poll-books," the duties of such canvassers are merely ministerial, and they have no power to decide such returns, or any part of them, invalid by reason of fraud at the election or in the returns thereof as made to the clerk; and have no power to exclude such returns, or any part thereof, from the count for such reasons.

> Dalton vs. State, ex rel., 43 O. S. 652 (reversing State, ex rel. vs. Dalton, 1 O. C. C. 139, 1 O. C. D. 82).

In State ex rel, vs. Tanzey, 49 O. S. 656, it was held that the authority of the election board extends no further than to make the abstract specified, and that the board had no power to hear evidence, to contradict the tally-sheet or to explain the same; nor had it power to act on any information which it may have acquired outside of said tally-sheets.

It is pretty well settled that canvassing boards are limited to the tally-sheets returned to them, unless otherwise expressly provided by statute. You will recall that there is no express provision for contest of election under the primary act, and in the instant case, since there was only the one set of candidates, there would not be contesting parties for the offices in question.

I am of the opinion that the board of deputy state supervisors of elections has only one duty and that is to determine from the returns made whether or not the parties have received at least eight per cent. of the vote necessary under section 4984-1 G. C., there being only one candidate, as I understand, for each office, and in consequence no necessity of the determination of which one or two or more persons has the highest vote for the particular office. The board of deputy state supervisors has no authority to go back of the returns.

As far as your second question is concerned, viz., what would be the legal procedure necessary to prevent the names of candidates who are not legally nominated from being placed on the ballot, inasmuch as my opinion is that the nominees in question were legally nominated, it is not necessary to determine what procedure would be necessary if a contrary conclusion had been reached.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN ASHTABULA, BROWN, BUTLER, CLERMONT, GEAUGA, HIGHLAND, LICKING, MAHONING, MORGAN, PORTAGE, PREBLE, SENECA, SUMMIT AND WILLIAMS COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 12, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 5, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, the following final resolutions:

Cleveland-Buffalo Road—I. C. H. No. 2, section N (O) & P, Ashtabula county.

Ripley-Hillsboro Road—I. C. H. No. 177, section A, Brown county.

Eaton-Middletown Road—I. C. H. No. 184, section A-1, Butler county.

Cincinnati-West Union Road—I. C. H. No. 30, section 1-1, Clermont county.

Bethel-Chilo Road—I. C. H. No. 257, section J, Clermont county.

Cleveland-Meadville Road—I. C. H. No. 15, section K-1, Geauga county.

Hillsboro-Chillicothe Road—I. C. H. No. 258, section A, Highland county (In duplicate).

Newark-Mt. Vernon Road—I. C. H. No. 377, section E-1, Licking county.

Youngstown-Lisbon Road—I. C. H. No. 82, section D, Mahoning county (In duplicate).

McConnelsville-Athens Road—I. C. H. No. 162, section H, Morgan county.

Alliance-Yale Road—I. C. H. No. 76, section "a", Portage county.

Eaton-Greenville Road—I. C. H. No. 210, section C, Preble county.

Tiffin-Fostoria Road—I. C. H. No. 270, section B-1, Seneca county, types A and B.

Lima-Sandusky Road—I. C. H. No. 22, section P, Seneca county.

Cleveland-Massillon Road—I. C. H. No. 17, section N-1, Summit county.

Bryan-Pioneer Road—I. C. H. No. 306, section L, Williams county, type A.

Bryan-Edgerton Road—I. C. H. No. 309, section B, Williams county, types A, B, C and D.

I have carefully examined said final resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and have therefore endorsed my approval thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C., with the exception of the final resolution having to do with the Tiffin-Fostoria, I. C. H. No. 270, section B-1, (type A), Seneca county, improvement, which I am returning without my approval for the reason that neither the certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that the money is in the treasury of the county, nor the certificate of the clerk of the board of county commissioners, that the final resolution is a correct copy, is signed by said respective officers.

I will call attention to a few irregularities which appear in some of the resolutions I have approved and suggest that they be corrected. The final resolution covering the improvement of the Hillsboro-Chillicothe road, I. C. H. No. 258, section A, Highland county states that the preliminary application of the county commissioners was made on November 5, 1918, which apparently should be November 5, 1917.

The final resolution pertaining to the improvement of the Eaton-Middletown road, I. C. H. No. 184, section A-1, Butler county, does not state the date upon which the preliminary application of the county commissioners of Butler county was made.

The final resolution in regard to the improvement of the Bryan-Edgerton road, I. C. H. No. 309, section B, Williams county, type B, sets forth that the county commissioners made their preliminary application on February 25, 1919, which no doubt should be February 25, 1918. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TERM OF DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT WHEN COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION REDISTRICTS COUNTY—SCHOOL DISTRICTS UNITED FOR HIGH SCHOOL PURPOSES CANNOT BE SEPARATE DISTRICT. WHEN—COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION APPOINTS DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT, WHEN.

1. Where a county board of education has re-districted the county school district and has changed the district lines of any district supervision therein by adding a rural or village district, or by taking a rural or village district therefrom, and the newly created district employs a district superintendent, such district superintendent can be employed for the term of only one year.

2. Where districts unite for high school purposes, but have employed no superintendent in said district, such district so united for high school purposes cannot be formed into a separate district under section 4740 G. C.

3. Where a district superintendent is not elected by the electing body of a supervision district for any reason prior to September 1*st in any year, then the county board shall appoint a district superintendent for such district for the term of one year.*

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1918.

HON. JOHN C. D'ALTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your several communications and I gather the statement of facts upon which you desire my opinion to be in substance as follows:

In 1915 the Lucas county board of education created a supervision district from Richfield, Spencer, Sylvania village, Sylvania rural and Berkey districts. The presidents of the boards of education of said districts duly met and elected Mr. A. P. Stalter as district superintendent for the school year beginning September 1, 1915, and ending August 31, 1916. In 1916 the county was re-districted and the supervision district above mentioned was changed by striking out Spencer district and adding Springfield district thereto, so that the district in 1916 consisted of Richfield, Springfield, Sylvania village, Sylvania rural and Berkey districts, and the presidents of said districts duly met and attempted to elect said A. P. Stalter for a term of three years to begin September 1, 1916. In 1918 Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts united under section 7669 for high school purposes and made an application under section 4740 to be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent and said application was granted by the county board of education. The boards of education of said two districts, Sylvania village and Sylvania rural, are attempting to re-elect Mr. A. P. Stalter, as district superintendent, but are dead-locked, one board voting for him and the other board voting for Mr. E. S. Poling. Mr. A. P. Stalter claims to have one year yet on his contract as district superintendent and claims that by virtue of said contract he is entitled to act as the district superintendent of the pretended 4740 district composed of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts. Upon said statement of facts your several questions arise as follows:

1. Could the presidents of the boards of education of said supervision district elect Mr. A. P. Stalter as district superintendent for a term of three years, the same to begin September 1, 1916?

2. Could a 4740 district be created from the Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts in 1918?

3. If a 4740 district could be so created, has Mr. A. P. Stalter a right to superintend the schools for said district for the year beginning September 1, 1918?

4. If the boards of education of said separate district failed to elect a district superintendent, may the county board of education elect such district superintendent in their place and stead?

The first question we must determine is, could the presidents of the rural and village boards of education of said supervision district elect Mr. A. P. Stalter as district superintendent for a term to begin on the first of September, 1916, and to extend for a period of three years? In your statement of facts you say that said county was re-districted into supervision districts in 1916 and that the supervision district, which for 1915 was composed of Richfield, Spencer, Sylvania village, Sylvania rural and Berkey districts, in 1916 was changed so as to strike therefrom Spencer district and add thereto Springfield district. This made the supervision district a new district and under the provisions of section 4741 G. C. a district superintendent must have been elected therein. That such district superintendent could not be elected for three years but that he could only be elected for one year in such new district has been determined by this department in Opinion No. 1252, rendered to George F. Crawford, prosecuting attorney, Greenville, Ohio, on June 3, 1918. That part of said opinion which is necessary for consideration reads as follows:

"Section 4741 G. C. provides in part:

'The first election of a district superintendent shall be for a term not longer than one year. Thereafter he may be re-elected in the same district for a period not to exceed three years * * *.'

The language of said section is so clear that a construction of the same seems almost unnecessary in order to determine its meaning, for it says the first election of any district superintendent shall be for a term not longer than one year, and that thereafter he may be elected for a term of not to exceed three years. Whenever a supervision district is changed, either by adding to such district or by taking from such district any territory of the county school district, then the supervision district is a new district, that is, it is a different district from what it was before such redistricting was had. It is noted from section 4738 * * * that supervision districts may be formed from one or from more than one village or rural school districts of the county school district, and each supervision district, when so formed, shall elect a district superintendent, either by the boards of education of such districts, which compose such supervision district, if there are three or less districts in such supervision district, or by the presidents of such boards of education of the districts which compose such supervision district, if there are more than three in such supervision district. When, then, a new supervision district is formed by adding to an old supervision district another district, the electing body is a new electing body and it will be the first election for such new electing body. That some of the electing body has participated in a previous election of a district superintendent cannot, in any manner, affect the status of the body as a whole.

Therefore, but one conclusion can be reached and that is that where the county board of education has redistricted the county school district and has changed the district lines of any supervision district therein, the district superintendent of such newly created supervision district can be employed for but one year at the first election held in such newly created supervision district."

The above answers your first question so completely that nothing more may be said thereon except to state the conclusion in relation thereto, that is, that Mr. A. P. Stalter could not be elected for three years in the new supervision district, it being the first election of a district superintendent therein, and his contract, instead of being for three years, was from year to year, i. e., one year at a time.

The next question is not so easy to determine, that is, as to whether or not the districts of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural could be established in 1918 into a separate district. You will remember that the two said districts were a part of the supervision district which was composed of Richfield, Springfield, Sylvania rural, Sylvania village and Berkey districts. Under the provisions of section 7669, et seq., of the General Code, the districts of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural united for high school purposes, or, in other words, joined for high school purposes, and I take it selected two members from each board as a high school committee to conduct or manage such high school. After the said districts were so joined for high school purposes, and I take it after the first grade high school had been properly established therein, then an attempt was made to have such union of districts created into a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent, and as is provided by section 4740 G. C. Said section 4740, as amended in 107 O. L., 622, reads in part as follows:

> "Any village or wholly centralized rural school districts or union of school districts for high school purposes which maintains a first grade high school and which employes a superintendent shall upon application to the county board of education before June 1st of any year, be continued as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent until the board of education of such district, by resolution, shall petition to become a part of a supervision district of the county school district. * * *."

The said district was a union of school districts for high school purposes and therefore came within one of the classes of districts which might become separate districts under the provisions of said section. But two other things are necessary before such district can be so formed. First, the district must maintain a first grade high school and, as noted above, I am assuming that the first grade high school was properly in existence at the time the application to become such separate district was made to the county board of education, and, second, the district must employ a superintendent. This is the place where we find difficulty in ascertaining how such application could have been granted by the county board of education. The "district" was a union of school districts for high school purposes and had been so formed in the year 1918. To be specific, the resolution thereon was passed on the third day of June, 1918. It had never existed as a union district prior to that date. It had no superintendent. It is urged that the superintendent of the supervision district, of which this union district was a part, was the superintendent of such union district. The answer to that is that the district superintendent was the superintendent of the entire district and not the superintendent only of the union district. In other words, the five separate districts made up the supervision district of which Mr. A. P. Stalter was district superintendent and the union district, that is, the district which was united for high school purposes, was a new creation and took no part and could take no part in the employing of the district superintendent when such district superintendent was so employed. As a union district, the statute makes no provision for its representation in the employing of a district superintendent. What the statute does say is that the district superintendent shall be elected by the presidents of the village and rural boards of education of such supervision district when there are more than three boards so located in said supervision district. No provision is made for the election of a superintendent in a union of school districts for high school purposes.

It is not necessary to determine here, and the question will not be determined, as to whether or not it is possible for a union of school districts for high school purposes to elect a district superintendent. The joint boards are attempting to elect a superintendent and are dead-locked. No action thereon is taken and no action can be taken by such joint boards because section 7705, which permitted two or more districts to unite and appoint the same person as superintendent, was repealed in 1914. There is no substitute provision therefor contained in the new school code. So that the said union district of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts, not having had a superintendent, and not being able to elect one in the manner above suggested, it was impossible for such district to qualify as a separate district under the direct supervision of the county superintendent.

Another reason is given why the district could not be so created and that is that the same was not done prior to June 1st of this year, that is to say, the union was perfected since June 3d. But, having reached the above conclusion it is not necessary for me to decide this question and no opinion will be expressed as to whether the date of June 1st of any year, as contained in section 4740, is merely directory or if the same is mandatory to the extent that any action taken by the county board, in relation to a separate district, would be void if performed after June 1st in any year.

Answering your second question, then, I must advise you that under the circumstances in the above matter it was impossible to create a 4740 district from the districts of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts, above mentioned.

The next question is, who shall superintend the schools of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts. I learn from the superintendent of public instruction that when the county board of education attempted to create said districts into a separate district, it at the same time created the remainder of this county into supervision districts, thus intending to redistrict the entire county into supervision districts. If the schools of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural districts contain not less than thirty teachers, and if, when Lucas county school district was re-districted into supervision districts, it was the intention of the county board to create a supervision district of said rural and village districts, then and in that event the boards of education of said districts could select the district superintendent, provided the same was done prior to the first day of September. If, however, for any cause a district superintendent has not been appointed by September 1st by the local boards, then under section 4741 the county board of education must appoint such superintendent for a term of one year. If, on the other hand, the two districts of Sylvania village and Sylvania rural do not employ thirty or more teachers, then under the provisions of section 4738 the county board of education may, at their discretion, require the county superintendent to personally supervise said teachers, provided the entire amount of teachers in the county school district, which the county board of education requires the county superintendent to personally supervise, does not exceed forty teachers therein. When the county superintendent is thus directed to supervise said teachers, this supersedes the necessity of the district supervision of said schools.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEMBER PUBLIC HEALTH COUNCIL, STATE DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH, STATE OFFICER.

A member of the public health council of the state department of health is a "state officer."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1918.

HON. JAMES E. BAUMAN, Deputy Commissioner of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked for my opinion upon the following question:

> "A question has been raised as to whether or not a member of the public health council of the State Department of Health is a state officer. I should be glad to have your opinion on this matter."

You do not advise me as to the exact manner in which the question you submit has been raised—i. e., as to the purpose for which a member of the Public Health council is or is not to be regarded as a "state officer"; so I shall therefore answer your question generally.

Referring to the act establishing the State Department of Health under its present organization (107 Ohio Laws, 522), I observe that the members of the Public Health council are appointed by the Governor for definite terms of office (section 3, section 1234 G. C.); vacancies in their positions are to be filled for the unexpired term (section 3, section 1234 G. C.); the council shall hold meetings at stated periods and its members are to receive compensation for participating in its conferences and their necessary traveling and other expenses incurred in the performance of their official duties (section 3, section 1234 G. C.); the members are to appoint the commissioner of health, who shall be the executive officer of the health department (section 2, section 1233 G. C.).

The public health council as a board has the powers enumerated in section 4 (section 1235 G. C.), as follows:

> "(a) To make and amend sanitary regulations to be of general application throughout the state. Such sanitary regulations shall be known as the sanitary code;
> (b) To take evidence in appeals from the decision of the commissioner of health in a matter relating to the approval or disapproval of plans, locations, estimates or cost or other matters heretofore required to be submitted to the state board of health for approval;
> (c) To conduct hearings in cases where the law heretofore required that the state board of health shall give such hearings; to reach decisions on the evidence presented, which shall govern subsequent actions of the commissioner of health with reference thereto;
> (d) To prescribe by regulations the number of divisions and qualifications of directors of divisions;
> (e) To enact and amend by-laws in relation to its meetings and the transaction of its business.
> (f) To consider any matter relating to the preservation and improvement of the public health and to advise the commissioners thereon with such recommendations as it may deem wise.

The public health council shall not have nor exercise executive or administrative duties."

I may say, of course, that all the duties of the public health council are necessarily "executive or administrative," and it could not be given "legislative" power in the exact sense without violating the constitution. The statement at the end of section 4 and the use of the word "legislation" in section 2 should, therefore, be understood in a qualified sense as relating to the adoption of rules and regulations to carry out the general statutes of the state respecting public health.

There are other provisions of the act which might be quoted. I think, however, I have referred to enough of its provisions to show clearly that members of the public health council are, generally speaking, state officers. That they are public officers is clear because they exercise sovereign powers in an independent capacity, and are members of a body which is continuous and intended not to do a particular thing but to discharge a given set of public functions from time to time as occasion may arise. The members have terms of office and receive compensation.

That the members are officers of the state seems equally clear; the department is designated "a state department of health," and the regulations which are to be made by the council are to be "of general application throughout the state." The sovereign power exercised is, therefore, that of the state and is not limited in its application by boundary lines other than those of the state itself.

It seems clear to me that all the indicia of state officers are to be found in the statute which creates the positions of members of the public health council.

I am therefore of the opinion that, for general purposes at least, such members are state officers.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MOTHER'S PENSION— MOTHER LIVING WITH HER MOTHER ENTITLED TO, WHEN—DOMESTIC SERVANT ENTITLED TO, WHEN.

If the other necessary conditions required by the Mother's pension law be satisfied, a mother who makes her home with her mother and her step-father is entitled to the pension, if such home is a proper place for the children of such mother and without the pension the mother would be required to absent herself from her children in order to work for her own support, though she might be able to leave the children with her relatives during her absence.

An applicant under the Mother's pension law who is at the time of application employed as a domestic servant in the home of another is, the other conditions of the law being satisfied, entitled to the pension if its allowance will enable her to set up a home for herself and children elsewhere, but not if the application is made for the purpose of enabling her to bring her children to reside with her in the home in which she is employed as a servant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1918.

HON. J. S. TAYLOR, Probate Judge, McConnelsville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested my opinion upon the following questions:

"Under the Mother's Pension act, section 1683-2 of the General Code, found on page 877 of Ohio laws, Volume 103, would a mother having two small children, who lives with her mother and step-father, be entitled to any allowance under this act?

Would a mother, having a dependent child, and who is employed in a private home as a domestic be entitled to an allowance under this act?"

You have really not stated sufficient facts for me to give you an unequivocal answer to either of these questions. The applicable statutes are sections 1683-2 and 1683-3 of the General Code. These sections are to be given the liberal construction enjoined upon the courts in the case of the juvenile court act, to which they are supplementary and in pari materia with which they are, inasmuch as they are administered by the juvenile judge which liberal interpretation is provided for by section 1683 General Code. The sections which I have mentioned provide, in part, as follows:

"Section 1683-2.—For the partial support of women whose husbands are dead, or become permanently disabled by reason of physical or mental infirmity, or whose husbands are prisoners or whose husbands have deserted, and such desertion has continued for a period of three years, when such women are poor, and are the mothers of children not entitled to receive age and schooling certificate, and such mothers and children have a legal residence in any county of the state for two years, the juvenile court may make an allowance to each of such women as follows: * * * Such homes shall be visited from time to time * * *."

"Section 1683-3.—Such allowance may be made by the juvenile court, only upon the following conditions: First, the child or children for whose benefit the allowance is made must be living with the mother of such child or children; second, the allowance shall be made only when in the absence of such allowance, the mother would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and when by means of such allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children, except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable; third, the mother must in the judgment of the juvenile court be a proper person, morally, physically and mentally for the bringing up of her children; fourth, such allowance shall in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman; fifth, it must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with such mother; sixth, a careful preliminary examination of the home of such mother must first have been made under the direction of the court by the probation officer, the agent of an associated charities organization or humane society, or in the absence of such probation officer, society or organization in any county, the sheriff of such county shall make such investigations as the court may direct, and a written report of the result of such examination or investigation shall be filed with the juvenile court, for the guidance of the court in making or withholding such allowance."

Although the latter of these two sections enacts certain conditions upon which the allowance known as the "mother's pension" may be granted, it is clear that it does not state all of them. A complete catalog of such conditions could be formulated only by having regard to the provisions of section 1683-2 as well as those of section 1683-3, and would be substantially as follows:

(1) The husband must be either dead, permanently disabled, a prisoner (whose wages while he is in prison do not go to the wife in sufficient amount to support the child or children), (section 1683-6), or must have deserted for a period of three years.

Your letter does not advise me whether these conditions exist, but I assume, of course, that one or another of them does in each of the cases mentioned by you.

(2) The wife or widow must be "poor" to the extent that in the absence of such allowance she would be required to work regularly away from her home and children and by means of the allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children except that she may be absent for work for such time as the court deems advisable.

Such facts as you state in each of these cases raise some question as to the application of this condition, which will hereinafter be discussed.

(3) The wife or widow must be mother of children not entitled to receive age and schooling certificates.

You do not state the facts with respect to this condition, but assume that they exist, so that it is satisfied.

(4) The mother and children must have a legal residence in some county of the state for two years.

You do not state the facts in this regard but I assume that the necessary condition exists.

(5) The child or children must be living with the mother.

Your questions evidently relate to this condition, and its application to the facts you state will be further considered in this opinion.

(6) The mother must, in the judgment of the juvenile court, be a proper person for the bringing up of her children.

In the absence of any statement of facts on this point I assume that both mothers are in your judgment such proper persons.

(7) The allowance must in the judgment of the court be necessary to save the child or children from neglect and to avoid the breaking up of the home of such woman.

In a sense such facts as you state raise questions with respect to the application of this condition which will be further discussed in this opinion.

(8) It must appear to be for the benefit of the child to remain with the mother.

This seems to be a slightly different way of stating the condition that the mother must be a proper person for the bringing up of her children.

(9) A careful preliminary examination of the home of the mother must be made.

Coming now to the facts stated by you, it appears that in the first case the mother lives with her mother and step-father. This fact raises questions in the light of the above enumerated conditions, as follows:

(1) Has the mother a home?

(2) May it be said that she is living with her child or children when other persons are members of the domestic establishments in which she resides?

(3) Inasmuch as she has a home can it be said that she would be required to work regularly away from her home and children, and that by means of the allowance she will be able to remain at home with her children?

(4) Is the home a proper place for the children in view of the fact that adults other than the mother reside there?

With respect to the first of these questions I think that it need not appear under the statute that the mother's home is one of which she is the head, except in so far as the fact that other adults share her place of residence and have the control of it, coupled with their personal characters, may tend to establish the conclusions that the surroundings are not fit for the children. In other words, if the mother and stepfather are of good character and the establishment maintained by them is a suitable place in which to bring up children under the discipline of their mother, I think such establishment may be regarded as the mother's "home," if that is her usual place of residence, the fact that she may stay there by sufferance or under some more or less temporary arrangement with the mother and step-father being, in my opinion, immaterial.

The fact that the mother lives with her mother and step-father may have some bearing upon the question as to whether she would but for the allowance be required to work regularly away from her children. You do not say whether or not this is the case. If the mother is at present working out by the day, or if she is in such financial straits as that she will have to obtain outside employment in order to support herself or the children, or both, then this condition would be satisfied. The law aims at keeping the children and the mother together in a home. The fact that the mother may be able to leave the children with her relatives while she works out and thus give them some care is immaterial on the one hand, and the fact that other persons than the mother live in the home is immaterial on the other hand, if such other persons are of proper character.

I can not say, therefore, as to the first case which you submit that the fact that the mother lives with her mother and step-father is of itself sufficient to disqualify her from receiving a mother's pension.

In submitting your second case you state that the mother is employed in a private home as a domestic servant and that she has a dependent child. You do not say whether she is now keeping the child with her in the house where she is employed or not; nor do you state whether or not, if the child is not at present with her in that place, she desires the allowance for the purpose of bringing the child to live with her there. It will be necessary for me, therefore, to consider three possible statements of fact in order to answer your second question.

Assuming that the purpose of the mother in applying for an allowance is to enable her to keep the child at a place other than that in which she is employed, which place is to be her home and that of her child, I think it is very clear that she would be entitled to the pension, the other necessary facts existing. The very object of the law is to enable a mother who must work in order to support herself and her children to spend a proper proportion of her time caring for her children in their home. If the making of the allowance will enable the mother to provide a home for her child, so that such domestic service as her necessities require her to perform may be rendered for such part of each day only as may be acceptable to the judge, this object would be achieved.

In this connection the fact that the child may be at present with her in the residence in which she is employed as a domestic servant would be of no consequence if her purpose in obtaining the allowance is to set up an establishment of her own as the home of herself and child. So that two of the cases which I have imagined may be answered without difficulty by saying that whether the child is with her at present in the residence where she is employed as a domestic servant or not she is entitled to the allowance, the other conditions existing, if it will enable her to provide a home at another place for the child.

Greater difficulty is presented in considering the question as to whether or not this mother is entitled to the allowance for the purpose of enabling her to keep the child with her in the place where she is employed as a domestic servant. Upon careful consideration I am of the opinion that a negative answer must be returned to this question. The reason upon which such an answer would be predicated is that the residence of another in which the mother would be living in the capacity of a domestic servant would not be a "home" within the meaning of the statute. To be sure, I have held in considering your first question that the home of the mother and child need not belong to the mother in the proprietary sense, so that she may live with relatives and still have a "home." But I would draw the line between the mother's residence in a place for the purpose of domestic service at that place and her residence in the home of a relative, where such domestic service as she may render to the establishment may be attributed rather to the ties of relationship than to the contractual obligation of service. In common parlance, a domestic servant would not be referred to as living at home, and this popular conception of the situation is, in my judgment, that which is embodied in the statute.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that if the allowance is applied for by the second mother whom you have described for the purpose of enabling her to keep her child with her in the place where she is employed as a domestic servant, the application should not be granted.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPALITY—SUBDIVISION—OWNER OF LOTS THEREIN MAY RE-PLAT WITHOUT VACATING FORMER PLAT.

The owner of lots within a municipal corporation may subdivide them and re-plat them without first having vacated the former plat under section 3593 et seq. G.C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

> "I wish to submit to you the question of procedure when the owner of lots within a municipality rearranges the lot lines, thereby making new lots or a re-plat of all or part of a former duly accepted plat.
> The question which has been raised is this: Must the owner of the property proceed under favor of section 3593 et seq. G. C., and in the first place have the property vacated?
> There have been numerous instances under my observation where one or more lots of a plat have been re-platted and the only formality required was that which was required in the original platting which is covered by section 3584."

Upon my request for additional information you submit the following under date of August 27th:

> "It often happens that after a plat of certain lots within a municipal corporation has been placed on record, some of the lots lying together are acquired by a single owner who desires to re-arrange them, thereby making out of his lots a greater or less number with different frontages and different lines as lot boundaries.

It has been the practice to permit the owner in question to re-plat his lots and have the re-plat recorded after the usual formalities as to acknowledgment and acceptance by the proper city authorities.

In your opinion may said procedure be had in any event, or must the owner of the lots in question in all events first vacate them under favor of section 3593, thus creating an out-lot which he then may plat anew?"

Section 3584 G. C., to which you refer, reads as follows:

"A proprietor of lots or grounds in a municipal corporation, who subdivides or lays them out for sale, shall cause to be made an accurate map or plat of such subdivision, describing with certainty all grounds laid out or granted for streets, alleys, ways, commons or other public uses. Lots sold, or intended for sale shall be numbered by progressive numbers, or described by the squares in which situated, and the precise length and width shall be given of each lot sold, or intended for sale. Such map or plat shall be subscribed by the proprietor, or his agent, duly authorized by writing, acknowledged before an officer authorized to take the acknowledgment of deeds, who shall certify the acknowledgment of the instrument, and recorded in the office of the recorder of the county."

This section points out the method to be followed in platting lots within a municipal corporation, and of course must be followed regardless of whether or not it is necessary to vacate the former plat.

Section 3593 G. C., to which you refer, and the following sections provide the method of vacating a plat. Said sections read as follows:

Section 3593.—"Upon the application of two-thirds of the proprietors thereof, the court of common pleas may alter or vacate the plat of any municipal corporation, addition thereto, or parts thereof, within the county, as hereinafter specified."

Section 3594.—"Application for vacating or altering a plat, addition, or part thereof, shall be by petition in writing, filed with the clerk of the court of common pleas, and the applicant or applicants shall give thirty days' notice thereof by publication in a newspaper printed and of general circulation in the county. The notice shall set forth briefly the part or parts of the plat or addition to be vacated."

Section 3595.—"If the petitioners produce to the court satisfactory evidence that such notice has been given, and that two-thirds of the persons owning lots or parts thereof in the corporation or the addition, as the case may be, or their authorized agents or attorneys, have made application to have the whole or a part of such corporation or addition altered or vacated, the court shall, in its discretion, proceed to alter or vacate such corporation or addition, or any part of either. The vacation of a municipal corporation, addition, or part thereof, shall not vacate any part of a state or county road."

I am of the opinion that it would not be necessary to proceed under the three last above quoted sections simply to rearrange or subdivide certain lots in the municipality or an addition thereto. That is, that these sections were not meant to apply to a situation such as you have in mind, but are only applicable when it is the plan of an owner or owners of lots in a municipality to rearrange the whole scheme of an addition, or a part thereof, by changing not only lot lines, but changing the streets and alleys thereof. Or, in other words, that these sections only apply when the contemplated change will affect the public generally (such as vacating streets) or other lot owners therein.

This is not the case in the question presented by you, for the rearrangement of lot lines only can in no way affect the public or other lot owners in the addition. This view is borne out by the sections above quoted relating to vacation of plats. Section 3594 G. C. provides for filing an application for vacating or altering a plat and for the publication of notice. This it seems to me shows that the legislature had in mind only such proceedings as would affect the public and provided such publication so that persons who might be interested would have notice of such proceeding in order that they would have opportunity to present their objections to such scheme.

Section 3595 G. C. provides for the proceedings in court.

Section 3596 G. C. provides for a record of the proceedings and a method by which an interested person may be made a party defendant.

Section 3599 G. C. provides for rendering judgment in favor of persons damaged by reason of such vacation.

All these sections show that the proceedings under them are not applicable to such a case as you present. If a lot owner desires to subdivide his lot into two or more parts and sell it in that manner, it can in no way affect any person or persons, and the legislature would not compel him to give public notice of his intention, because the public would have no interest in any way nor would the legislature provide a way of making interested persons parties defendant when there could be no interested persons. The publication of notice and the court proceedings would in this case be not only expensive but unnecessary, and I do not think such was the intent or purpose of these sections.

For the foregoing reasons I advise you that the owner of lots within a municipal corporation may subdivide them and re-plat them without first having vacated the former plat under section 3593 et seq. G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPALITY—COUNCIL—POWER TO CREATE POSITIONS AND FIX TERMS IN VARIOUS DEPARTMENTS.

Council of a municipal corporation has no power to create any position in the department of public service. An ordinance which assumes to create such a position and to fix a term for it is, therefore, of no effect as fixing such term.

Council has power to provide a fixed term for the position of deputy auditor, co-extensive with that of the principal.

Whether or not council has authority to provide a fixed term for the position of deputy treasurer depends upon its power to create the position as that of a real deputy. If the position is that merely of an assistant or clerk, however called, council may not fix a term for it because of the provisions of section 486-17a General Code (civil service law), unless it is one of those exempt from the classified service under section 486-8 G. C.

Council may fix a term of office for the position of smoke inspector created as the head of an independent municipal department.

Council has no authority to create the position of inspector of food products, and consequently none to fix a term of office for it; no term of office may be fixed by any municipal authority for this position because of the provisions of section 486-17a General Code (civil service law).

Council has no authority to fix a term for the position of assistant clerk of council. Section 4210 of the General Code fixes a term of office for all employes of council, and this section controls as to all those whose duties are "legislative." Such employes of council as do not perform such "legislative" duties, however, have an indefinite tenure of office by virtue of the civil service law.

Assuming that the clerk to the mayor is the incumbent of a position in the unclassified service of a city, council would have the authority to fix a term for that position.

By virtue of the civil service law a stenographer to the trustees of the sinking fund is entitled to serve during good behavior. Therefore an ordinance of council fixing a term of service for such stenographer would yield to the civil service law and be ineffective.

Assuming that a "clerk and stenographer to city solicitor" is the incumbent of a position in the unclassified service the city council has authority to fix a term therefor.

By virtue of the civil service law the police surgeon and fire department surgeon are entitled to serve during good behavior. An ordinance of council attempting to fix a term for the incumbents of these positions must therefore yield to the civil service law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 18, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date submitting an ordinance of a certain city passed in the year 1912 and containing the following provisions:

> "To create the offices of deputy auditor, deputy treasurer, smoke inspector, inspector of food products, assistant clerk of council, clerk to mayor, stenographer to trustees of sinking fund, clerk and stenographer to solicitor, police surgeon, fire department surgeon and superintendent of waterworks and electric light plants, fixing duties, amount of compensation, and amount of bond of each of said offices.
> 'Section 1.—That the following offices be and hereby are created: Deputy auditor, deputy treasurer, smoke inspector, inspector of food products, assistant clerk of council, clerk to mayor, stenographer to trustees of sinking fund, clerk and stenographer to solicitor, police surgeon, fire department surgeon and superintendent of waterworks and electric light plants.
> Section 2.—Officers shall be appointed to fill each of said offices as provided by law and their terms of office shall commence with the date their appointment shall be made and shall terminate with close of the 31st day of December of the years ending with odd numbers, thus making each of the terms ending the same as of the official making these appointments, * *. Wherever bond is required, it may be signed by a responsible surety company, and the premium on such bond shall be paid by the city * * * out of the same fund hereinafter provided for the payment of their respective salaries.
> Section 3.—Said officers shall perform the duties and render such services as usually devolve upon their respective office, and shall perform such other duties and render such further service as may be prescribed by council, or the head of such respective department."

Section 4 of the ordinance fixes salaries for each of the positions named in the first section.

Section 5 authorizes the auditor to draw warrants for the said salaries upon the appropriate funds.

With respect to this ordinance you submit the following questions:

Question 1. Can council legally provide a fixed term for the officers and employes herein designated?

Question 2. Where council has provided a fixed term, can the salary be increased or diminished during such term?

Your first question is really divisible into as many parts as there are positions which are enumerated in the ordinance submitted.

It also has a civil service aspect which it may be necessary to consider.

Council has attempted in the ordinance which has been quoted to do the following things with respect to the positions in question:

(1) To create them (section 1).
(2) To fix terms of office for them (section 2).
(3) To define—though very generally—their respective duties (section 3).
(4) To fix their salaries (section 4).

You inquire about the authority to do but one of these things, viz: fix terms. I think it is very clear, however, that unless the power to fix terms is expressly or by implication conferred upon council as an independent power, or unless the council has in this instance in section 2 passed legislation which, while perhaps not effective in a technical sense, is in another sense valid because it conforms to some provision of the law with respect to terms of office, this power concerning which you inquire cannot be claimed by council, unless as an implication arising from the power to create the office. That is to say, if council has no authority to create an office or position or employment in the service of the city, and no express authority to fix terms of office as an independent power, and no such authority flowing as an implication from any other source, it would seem clear that as to the positions of which these statements might be made your first question would have to be answered in the negative.

There is at least one position in the catalog mentioned which I think falls within the class of those to which the statements just made do apply. I refer to that of superintendent of waterworks and electric light plants. Council has no authority to create this position. It is one which exists in the department of public service. The council of a city has not general legislative power with respect to the creation of executive departments and positions. Its power in this respect is special and limited. It arises from section 4214 of the General Code, which provides that—

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, * * * shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix * * * their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each * * *, if any be required. * * *"

Section 4327 G. C. provides that—

> "The director of public service may establish such sub-department as may be necessary and determine the number of superintendents, * * * and other persons, necessary for the execution of the work and the performance of the duties of this department."

I must admit that the phrase "determine the number" is slightly indefinite in meaning. However, it seems to me that the existence of this power in the director of public service and the exception made in section 4214 as to the power of council in this respect are together enough to preclude the idea that one municipal authority can be said to have power to create positions of certain kinds and another the authority to determine the number of such positions which shall exist. Strictly speaking, of course, number is one thing and name, nature or definition is another. Therefore it might be argued that council would have the authority to create superintendencies, clerkships, positions of engineers, and the like, for the service department, and the director of public service would then be required to determine how many of such positions within the catalog of kinds of positions created by council he would desire to have in his department. Conversely, it might also be argued that the director of public service would be required first to act by determining how many employes he would want in his department, specifying their duties, and that the council should then act by formally creating the positions in the department and fixing salaries for them. But as I have said, I do not believe that either course of reasoning is correct and, in my opinion, the authority to determine the number of superintendents, clerks, other employes, etc. vested by law in the director of public service for his department excludes the power of council to create positions in the department of public service.

Now, if council has no authority to create a position no authority to fix a term for such position can arise by implication from such a source; and if such power exists it must be found elsewhere. Nowhere in the Municipal Code is there reposed in council any authority to fix terms of office or employment. Section 4213 of the General Code implies that any municipal officer, clerk or employe may have a term, for it provides that—

> "The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, * *."

But any implication that may arise from this section is not strong enough to vest the power to fix terms where none are fixed by law in any particular agency of the municipal government, such as the council.

I know of no other provision of the Municipal Code in any way shedding light upon the question as to whether a term of office or employment can be fixed for officers or employes in the department of public service. If such power exists—which the facts submitted do not require me to determine—it resides, in my opinion, in the director of public service and not in council. The authority of council is limited to fixing salaries for the positions created by the director of public service. I answer your first question, therefore, in so far as it relates to the superintendent of waterworks and electric light plants in the negative.

As to the deputy auditor I observe that at the time this ordinance was passed (September 17, 1912) section 4276-1 of the General Code was in force and provided as follows:

> "The auditor of any city may, when authorized by council ordinance, appoint a deputy who, in the absence or disability of the auditor, shall perform the duties of the auditor."

This section, in my opinion, confers upon council the authority to create the position of deputy auditor. The refined argument might be made to the effect that council has less authority than this, in that the power to determine whether or not he will appoint a deputy still resides in the auditor under the section quoted, after council has authorized such action. That is, the position is in a sense not a permanent one in the city government in which there may be said to be a "vacancy" at any time, that it would be the duty of the auditor to fill. However, I believe the power to authorize the appointment of a deputy is broad enough to authorize council to provide that such deputy shall hold his position for such term as may end with that of the official making the appointment, subject to removal. This is in fact nothing more than the consequence which the law itself would attach to the appointment of a deputy. The relation between a deputy and his principal is such as that the deputy's "natural" term of office, so to speak, may be said to be co-terminous with that of his principal. He does not hold over until his successor is elected and qualified.

Now a deputy of this character is, in my opinion, in the unclassified service of the municipal civil service by virtue of the state civil service law, so that no question can arise as to the effect of the provisions of that law respecting the tenure of incumbents of positions in the classified civil service upon an ordinance or a principle of law like those under discussion.

Without going further into the question as regards the deputy auditor, I am of the opinion that the action of council in giving such deputy auditor a term of office was at the very least not inconsistent with the law which would otherwise apply, whether it added anything to that law or not; so that the deputy auditor may be said to have a term of office.

The question is different as regards the deputy treasurer, for there is no express provision of law authorizing council to provide for a deputy for the city treasurer. It might be argued that because the legislature had seen fit to empower council to authorize the appointment of a deputy auditor by express provision the power to grant similar authority to the city treasurer is lacking. On the other hand, it might be argued that under the general section above quoted council might provide for a clerkship in the office of the treasurer which might be given the name of "deputy," whether the position would have all the legal attributes of a deputy or not. The argument on this side would say of section 4276-1 that the deputy therein provided for is a real deputy having authority to act for and in place of his principal; whereas, regardless of the name under which a similar position in the treasurer's office might be created it would not partake in law of the characteristics of a deputy.

I am inclined to the view that council has authority to create clerkships in the office of the treasurer, whether that office be regarded as one of the "departments" of the city government or not. If council may also, notwithstanding the lack of the express provision which exists with respect to the auditor's office, provide for the positions of real deputies in the office of the treasurer, then all that has been said respecting the answer to your question as it relates to the deputy auditor would apply also to the deputy treasurer.

If, however, it should be determined that the so-called "deputy treasurer," the position of whom is created by the ordinance under consideration, is not in reality a "deputy" within the meaning of the civil service law, then the question would arise as to whether or not, the position being within the classified civil service, it might be given a definite term. This question is similar to others which will be hereinafter considered in this opinion and will be postponed until all the positions which are in the classified civil service have been identified.

It is quite probable, however, that in the city about which you inquire the "deputy treasurer," if considered as a mere clerk, might be one of those subordinates whose position the treasurer might designate as in the unclassified service. If this is the case, the civil service question would not arise and the authority of council to fix a definite term for the position would exist as in the case of the mayor's clerk, hereinafter discussed.

The position of smoke inspector seems to be regarded as one existing independently of the department of public service. I can not find any express provision respecting this position in the Municipal Code. Municipalities are given general power to > "regulate and prevent the emission of dense smoke, to prohibit the careless or negligent emission of dense smoke from locomotive engines, to declare each of the foregoing acts a nuisance, and to prescribe and enforce regulations for the prevention thereof; to prevent injury and annoyance from the same, * * * and to provide for the regulation of the installation and inspection of steam boilers and steam boiler plants." (Section 3650 G. C.)

This has been held in Cincinnati vs. Gass, 1 O. N. P. (n. s.) 169, to confer upon the council the authority to create as a separate department the position of supervising engineer to regulate and compel the proper consumption of smoke. It was evidently upon this theory that the position of "smoke inspector" was created.

Obviously, if the position is an independent one council may create it and in creating it may define a term of office for it, unless the civil service law prevents such action. However, complete provision for this position would necessitate designating the appointing power, and this ordinance, while providing that the salary of the smoke inspector shall be paid out of the general fund, thus indicating that the position was not within the department of public service or that of public safety, does not provide who shall appoint the smoke inspector, but says that all the officers named in the ordinance "shall be appointed * * * as provided by law." The appointing power of the mayor is found in section 4250 General Code. It provides:

> " * * * He shall appoint, and have the power to remove, the director of public service, the director of public safety, and the heads of the sub-departments of the departments of public service and public safety, * * *."

I assume, however, that there must be some other ordinance providing for the appointment of the smoke inspector, and I assume also that, being the head of an independent department, he is to be appointed by the mayor. Under the civil service law of the state, of course, such a position would be in the unclassified service as one of the "heads of departments appointed by the mayor" (section 486-8 G. C.). Therefore the civil service law does not in any way affect the question as to the smoke inspector; and the power of council in providing for this department of the city government to give the incumbent thereof a term of office is plenary—just as broad as the power to provide for the position at all may be. Assuming that the position is legally created therefore, I reach the conclusion that the position of smoke inspector is one for which the council may legally provide a fixed term.

The inspector of food products does not hold a position analogous to that of the smoke inspector. He is the head of a sub-department in the department of health, and the position is so recognized in the section providing the source of the payment of salaries which the ordinance creates. The statutory provision on this subject is that of section 4458 G. C., which provides that—

"The board of health may appoint, define their duties and fix the compensation of, such number of inspectors of * * * milk, meat, butter, cheese, and substances purporting to be butter or cheese, or having the semblance of butter or cheese, and such other persons as is necessary to carry out the provisions of this chapter, * * *."

This section is like that which relates to the positions in the department of public service, and all that I have said about the superintendent of waterworks and electric light plants applies to the food inspector, with the additional remark that council has not even the authority to fix the salary of the food inspector. It is very clear, therefore, that inasmuch as council has no authority whatsoever as to the position of food inspector, the answer to your first question in so far as it relates to this position is in the negative.

Assistant clerk of council is a position provided for under authority of section 4210 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem, a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

Here is a self-executing provision of the general law respecting the employes of council. In so far as the ordinance of council is inconsistent with this provision the general law, of course, controls. In strict accuracy council, of course, has no control whatever over the terms of its employes, such terms being fixed by law. I answer your first question, in so far as it relates to the assistant clerk of council, therefore, by saying that council has the authority to create the position but, strictly speaking, no authority to provide a fixed term for it; yet the position is one which is held subject to a fixed term because of the provisions of the general law.

In this connection, however, it may be that section 4210 itself must yield to the subsequently enacted civil service law of 1915, which will be hereinafter discussed. I can not positively decide this question because I have no means of knowing what duties were to be performed by the assistant clerk of council provided for in this ordinance. If his duties were "legislative" he would be in the unclassified service by virtue of subdivision 5 of section 486-8 of the General Code. If his duties, however, consisted of such activities as the serving of special assessment notices I suspect that he would not be within the section which I have just mentioned and would therefore hold a position in the classified service. To the extent that the provisions of the civil service law with respect to the tenure of incumbents of positions in the classified service conflict with previously enacted statutes providing for fixed terms, I would have no hesitancy in arriving at the conclusion that the civil service law would prevail. It is true that it is not every general law, though subsequently enacted, which controls a specific provision with respect to particular cases. Having regard to the peculiar nature of the subject-matter of the civil service legislation, however, I can reach no other conclusion than that its provisions were intended to supplant, and do supplant, all inconsistent provisions with respect to particular offices and positions which were in the law when the civil service law was passed and went into effect. While I have said, therefore, that the position of clerk of council is one which is held subject to a fixed term because of the provisions of the general law, I must add that if the duties of the position are not "legislative" it is, in spite of the general law which I have quoted, not held subject to a fixed term if the civil service law otherwise provides.

The position of clerk to the mayor is like that of deputy treasurer, if the latter be considered as a mere clerkship in the treasurer's office. That is to say, there is no specific provision for the creation of any such position; and if the mayor's office be not regarded as a "department of the city government," section 4214 can not be regarded as a grant of authority to council to act in the premises. However, I assume that council has authority to create a clerkship in the office of the mayor. I doubt, however, whether the provisions of the civil service law relating to the classified service would have application to this position in the ordinary city; because section 486-8 G. C. gives to all elective officers, other than state officers, the right to appoint in the unclassified service "two secretaries, assistant or clerks and one personal stenographer." I assume that in a city of average size the mayor would not require more than one clerk; and the ordinance gives rise to the inference at least that the mayor's clerk is the only person other than perhaps a stenographer in his office force in the particular city under consideration. If this is true, then, for reasons already stated, I would advise that council has unquestioned authority to define a term of office for the mayor's clerk. If, however, the facts are such that the person is not in the unclassified service, then the civil service question noted in the discussion of the question respecting the deputy treasurer would be raised. This question will be hereinafter discussed.

The trustees of the sinking fund, as such, have no direct statutory authority to employ a clerk. Section 4509 G. C. authorizes council to create a clerkship in this office. That being the case, council has the implied power to constitute a term of employment for this position, unless the civil service law dictates a contrary answer. I might say in this connection that this clerkship is not in the unclassified service; for the only "principal appointive executive * * * boards or commissions" who are entitled to any appointments outside of the civil service are those which are "authorized by law to appoint such secretary, assistant or clerk and stenographer." In my opinion, an ordinance of the city is not a "law" within the meaning of paragraph 8 of section 486-8 of the General Code.

The complete discussion of this question will therefore be postponed until the application of the civil serivce law, which is a point common to many of the questions raised by your letter, is reached.

The city solicitor is not authorized directly by law to appoint a clerk and stenographer. What I have said about the clerk to the mayor applies fully to this position in the solicitor's office. Council has undoubted authority, in my opinion, to create the position; indeed the power of council, whether under section 4214 G. C. or its general legislative power, to supply an office force for the solicitor is recognized in section 4306 of the General Code, which provides what may be done "when council allows an assistant or assistants to the solicitor." In a city of average size I imagine that the position of "clerk and stenographer" to the solicitor would be in the unclassified service, the solicitor being an "elective officer" and as such entitled to "two secretaries, assistant or clerks and one personal stenographer" in the unclassified service.

If the facts are otherwise, however, then the civil service question mentioned in several of the other cases which have been discussed will be raised, but for such question, however, it is clear that the council would have authority to provide a term for this position.

The police surgeon and fire department surgeon are both positions in the department of public safety. Council has express authority under sections 4374 and 4377, as well as section 4214 G. C., to create these positions. They are in the classified service, as indeed are the entire regular police and fire departments of any city. The question as to whether or not this fact precludes the council from annexing terms of office to the creation of the position is one which is perhaps even more sharply raised in connection with these positions than in connection with others in which its presence has been noted. I pass therefore to the consideration of this question.

The question may be phrased thus:

> Where a term of office is not fixed by law, but the power to create a term of office for a municipal position may be otherwise fairly inferred from the grant of power to create the office or position which is reposed in council, is there anything in the civil service law which is so far inconsistent with the idea of a definite term as to reverse the inference in so far as positions in the classified service are concerned, and lead to the conclusion that council is without power to provide such a definite term for such classified civil service positions, leaving the tenure therein to be indefinite but subject to the provisions of the civil service law alone?

So far as the constitution of the state, which probably reflects itself in the provisions of the present civil service law as furnishing the intent which is to be imputed to the legislature when none has been expressed, is concerned, it must be said that there is nothing therein which would give rise to an inference of the kind under consideration, for the civil service amendment to the constitution, Article XV, section 10, deals only with "appointments and promotions" and not at all with tenure of positions of offices, nor even with removals.

Turning now to the civil service act itself I find that section 486-2 first enacts into law the requirement of the constitution, and then says that

> "thereafter (after the taking effect of this act) no person shall be appointed, removed, transferred, laid off, suspended, reinstated, promoted or reduced as an officer or employe in the civil service of the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof, in any manner or by any means other than those prescribed in this act or by the rules of the state or municipal civil service commissions within their respective jurisdictions as herein provided."

Unless the word "removed" can be given some effect beyond its natural meaning so as to prohibit the creation of an office or position with a fixed term or tenure, it is obvious that this provision does not give rise to any inference of the kind for which we are now searching.

Section 486-17 General Code makes certain provisions as to reductions, lay-offs and suspensions which do not apply.

Section 486-17a provides, in part, as follows:

> "The tenure of every officer, employ (employe) or subordinate in the classified service of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, holding a position under the provisions of this act, shall be during good behavior and efficient service; but any such officer, employe or subordinate may be removed for incompetency, inefficiency, dishonesty, drunkenness, immoral conduct, insubordination, discourteous treatment of the public, neglect of duty, violation of the provisions of this act or the rules of the commission, or any other failure of good behavior, or any other acts of misfeasance, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office. * * *"

In my opinion this section not only gives rise to the inference for which we are seeking but is itself an express provision on the subject. It is the controlling law of the state so far as cities subject to the general laws are concerned. In the face of this provision ordinances like the one submitted by you, in so far as they relate to positions in the classified service, are abrogated where they attempt to fix definite terms.

Now the ordinance enclosed by you was passed in 1912 when the section just quoted was not in effect. It has been in effect, however, since 1915, and I am assuming that your question relates not to the validity of the ordinance when it was passed but rather to its present effect. If I am in error as to this I shall be glad to consider the original validity of the ordinance further upon advice from you correcting me on this point. So far as the present force of the ordinance is concerned, however, it is clear that its provisions as to terms of office of positions in the classified service can have no present effect; for more than two years have elapsed since the civil service law has been in effect and there must have been appointments to each of these positions under the present civil service law. The tenure of office or employment under such appointments is referable to the civil service law, and not to the original ordinance, which is not wholly repealed but merely yields to the civil service law in this particular. At the present time, therefore, the positions which I have enumerated as being certainly or possibly within the classified civil service are positions with respect to which there is no fixed term of office.

Of course, the answer to your second question is dependent upon that to your first in each case. The mere fact that council has attempted to provide a fixed term is of no consequence. The question is as to whether there is actually a term of office for a given position—not whether council has attempted, though without authority, to establish such term of office. If a term of office or employment has been lawfully established by the council, then section 4213 of the General Code above quoted plainly dictates a negative answer to your second question. Section 4213 governs whether the term is one which is fixed by council itself or by the general law, as in the case of the employes of council.

I may add that I have not considered the civil service questions which exist with respect to the positions of superintendent of waterworks and electric light plant and inspector of food products. As regards the latter, it seems reasonably clear that the section which I have quoted from the civil service law affords another ground for denying validity to the action of council in fixing a term for it. With respect to the former the situation is not so clear inasmuch as the position may constitute the head of a sub-department in the department of public service. In an opinion of recent date I have advised you that the appointing power with respect to the positions of heads of sub-departments in the department of public service resides in the mayor. The fact that this is the case raises a question under subdivision 3 of section 486-8 G. C., which places in the unclassified service "all heads of departments appointed by the mayor," with a proviso that "nothing contained in this act shall exempt the chiefs of police departments and chiefs of fire departments * * * from the competitive classified service." The police and fire departments are sub-departments rather than departments proper, and the question is raised as to whether or not the whole paragraph has the effect of exempting all appointments by the mayor, as well of heads of sub-departments as of those of heads of departments proper, from the requirements of the provisions of the civil serivce law respecting the classified service. I do not decide this question because I have held that the action of council in attempting to fix a term for the position of superintendent of waterworks and electric light plants is wholly nugatory for other sufficient reasons, while the application of the civil service law to the case is involved in considerable doubt.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CLERK OF COURTS— TOWNSHIP CLERK—AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE HUNTER'S LICENSE TO MINOR UNDER SEVENTEEN YEARS. SECTION 12967 MAY BE VIOLATED EVEN THOUGH MINOR HAS HUNTER'S LICENSE.

1. Under sections 1421 and 1422 G. C. (107 O. L. 487) the clerk of the court of common pleas or a township clerk is authorized in law to issue a hunter's license to a minor under seventeen years of age.

2. Under section 12967 G. C. any person selling a gun or ammunition to a minor under seventeen years of age, or knowingly permitting such minor to use his gun, is liable to prosecution under said section, even though such minor has a hunter's license.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 20, 1918.

HON. CHARLES L. BERMONT, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 7, 1918, in which you request my opinion as follows, your question arising under the provisions of sections 1422 and 12967 G. C.:

> "The clerk of common pleas court and the juvenile officer of this county have asked for my opinion upon a proposition and as the same condition probably prevails all over the state I desire your opinion upon it.
> It seems, by the provisions of section 1422 G. C., that the clerk is authorized to issue a hunter's license to a minor over sixteen years of age, but section 12967 G. C. does not permit a minor under seventeen years of age to use any sort of fire-arm.
> Is it your opinion that the clerks should issue license to minors under seventeen years of age and the juvenile officer should enforce the provisions of section 12967?"

In order to fully understand section 1422 G. C. (107 O. L. 487), we will consider the provisions of section 1421 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Section 1421.—No person shall hunt, pursue or kill with a gun any wild bird or wild animal within this state without having first applied for and received a hunter's license and paid the fee, as required herein. Every applicant for a hunter's license who is a non-resident of the state of Ohio and who is a citizen of the United States of America, shall pay a fee of fifteen dollars to the officer issuing the same. Every applicant for hunter's license who is a citizen of the United States of America, and a resident of the state of Ohio, shall pay a fee of one dollar, provided that the owner, tenant or children of the owner, manager or tenant of lands within this state may hunt upon such lands without a hunter's license."

It will be seen that this section forbids any one to hunt, pursue or kill with a gun any wild bird or wild animal within this state, without having first applied for and received a hunter's license and paid the fee as therein required, irrespective of how young he may be.

Section 1422 G. C. (107 O. L. 487) adds another qualification which is as follows:

" * * * Persons under sixteen years of age shall not be allowed to hunt under the provisions of this act, unless accompanied by their parent or other person in loco parentis."

From all these provisions it is evident that no person can hunt without a license, whatever his age may be, and that all persons under sixteen years of age, in addition to having a license, must be accompanied by parent or other person in loco parentis, before he can hunt.

Section 1422 G. C. also provides as follows:

"Hunter's license shall be issued by the clerks of common pleas courts and township clerks. Every applicant for a hunter's license shall make and subscribe an affidavit, setting forth his name, age, occupation, place of residence, personal description, and citizenship, and the other officer authorized to issue licenses shall charge each applicant a fee of twenty-five cents for taking such affidavit, issuing such license and attaching his seal of office thereto, and clerks of common pleas courts and township clerks to whom such application is made are hereby empowered and required to administer the oath and to take and certify the affidavit herein required and to collect and receive the fees therefor as herein provided."

Under this section it would seem that it becomes the duty of clerks of common pleas courts and township clerks to issue licenses to all those persons who make application for the same in accordance with the provisions of the statute.

Section 12967 G. C. reads as follows:

"Whoever sells, barters, furnishes or gives to a minor under the age of seventeen years, an air-gun, musket, rifle, shotgun, revolver, pistol or other fire-arm, or ammunition therefor, or, being the owner or having charge or control thereof, knowingly permits it to be used by a minor under such age, shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned in jail not more than thirty days, or both."

Inasmuch as no person is permitted to sell any kind of a gun or ammunition to a minor under seventeen years of age, and no one is allowed to permit a gun to be used by a minor under such age, the question arises whether the clerks aforesaid are justified in issuing a license to a minor under seventeen years.

As said before, the provisions of the statutes, relative to the issuing of a license, are general and apply to all persons, irrespective of their age. I do not believe that the clerk would have the right to refuse to issue a license to any one, whatever his age may be, provided he complies with the provisions of the statutes. But the mere fact that a minor under seventeen years might have a hunter's license does not warrant any one in selling him a gun or ammunition or permitting such minor to use a gun owned by him.

Sections 1421 and 1422 G. C. relate to the party desiring to hunt, while section 12967 G. C. pertains to the party who sells a gun or ammunition to a minor under seventeen years or knowingly permits such minor to use a gun owned or under control of said party. For this reason I do not think there is any conflict between the provisions of these statutes.

A clerk has no authority to refuse to issue a license to a minor under seventeen years, provided he complies with the conditions of the statutes, but on the other hand no one is permitted to sell a gun or ammunition to a minor under seventeen years, or knowingly permit him to use his gun, even though he should have a hunter's license. To be sure it seems absurd to issue a license to a minor under seventeen years, to hunt with a gun, when the criminal statutes provide that he can not secure the necessary implement and accessories with which to hunt, but such a course seems clearly warranted under the provisions of the sections above quoted.

Therefore in answer to your questions I will say that a clerk of the court of common pleas or township clerk is warranted in law in issuing a hunter's license to minors under seventeen years of age, and that a juvenile officer or any other person is warranted in enforcing the provisions of section 12967 G. C. against any one who sells a gun or ammunition to a minor under seventeen years of age, or who knowingly permits such minor to use his gun, even though said minor has a hunter's license.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—NO AUTHORITY TO REMOVE OBSTRUCTIONS IN PUBLIC HIGHWAYS WITHIN A VILLAGE WITHOUT CONSENT.

Where the proprietor of an addition to a city located outside the corporate limits thereof files a plat showing a circular park located on the line of a previously established and existing state road, with curved driveways extending beyond the line of such state road, without at the same time initiating and carrying through proceedings for the alteration of the state road itself, the recording of such plat does not operate to vacate so much of the public highway as lies within the confines of such circular park. If, subsequently, curbing and other obstacles are erected within the bounds of the highway in order to form such park, such obstacles are unlawful. But where the territory of the subdivision subsequently becomes a part of an incorporated village, the duty to restore the public highway through the middle of such circular park and remove such obstacles belongs to the village authorities, and neither the state highway commissioner nor the county commissioners have any jurisdiction in the premises.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 20, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of July 15, 1918, which is too lengthy to quote in full. However, the facts upon which you request an opinion are as follows:

The East Broad street road runs through the village of Bexley. In said village there is situated what is known as the Broad Street circle—a circular plot of ground around which the road (Broad Street) is diverted, instead of cutting through the center thereof. It is claimed that this condition is extremely dangerous to automobile traffic, and The Columbus Automobile Club has requested that you as State Highway commissioner take jurisdiction over the matter of causing the East Broad street road to go directly through this circular plot, instead of on either side thereof.

The question arises whether you have jurisdiction or authority to go within the confines of the village of Bexley and carry out the matter herein suggested. It is your opinion that you have not such authority, and that of Hon. C. D. Saviers, attorney of the Automobile Club, that you have such authority.

I have carefully considered the letter addressed to you by the Automobile Club, bearing date July 12, and I know of no provision of law that would warrant your going into the village of Bexley and making the change suggested, unless said village first gives consent to your so doing.

The legislature seems to have manifested a definite and specific intention to the effect that no authority, whether state, county or township, shall go into a village for the purpose of making an improvement upon the roads located therein, unless they first secure the consent of the village.

If the state highway commissioner goes into the village and uses the money of the state for the suggested change, said money will have to be taken from the inter-county highway, main market road or the maintenance and repair fund. These are the only funds at your disposal for carrying out such work.

We will consider what provisions the legislature has made in reference to this matter. If you were to attempt to carry out the improvement as suggested, without the co-operation of the county commissioners or township trustees, you would be controlled by the provisions of section 1231-3 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Section 1231-3.—The state highway commissioner may extend a proposed road improvement into or through a village when the consent of the council of said village has been first obtained, and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said village duly entered upon its records, and said council may assume and pay such proportion of the cost and expense of that part of the proposed improvement within said village as may be agreed upon between said state highway commissioner and said council. * * *."

From this section it is evident that the state highway commissioner can not assume jurisdiction over an improvement within a village, unless he first obtains the consent of the council of said village.

Suppose, on the other hand, that the state highway commissioner should assume jurisdiction over this improvement, with the co-operation of the county commissioners or township trustees. In that event he would be controlled by section 1193-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 123) which reads in part as follows:

> "Section 1193-1.—When, upon the application of county commissioners or township trustees and under the supervision of the state highway department, the improvement of an inter-county highway or main market road is extended into or through a village, or an improvement constituting an extension of an improved inter-county highway or main market road is constructed within a village, it shall not be necessary for the village to assume any part of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement. If no part of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement is assumed by the village, no action on the part of the village, other than the giving of its consent, shall be necessary: * * *."

Here again we find the specific provision made that the state highway commissioner can not construct an improvement into, within or through a village upon the application of the county commissioners or township trustees, unless the consent of the village is first given.

Suppose we consider the doing of the work suggested as a mere maintenance and repair, and not an improvement within the provisions of either section 1231-3 or section 1193-1; you would then be controlled by section 7467 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Section 7467.—* * * The state, county or township or any two or more of them may by agreement expend any funds available for road construction, improvement or repair upon roads inside of a village or a village may expend any funds available for street improvement upon roads outside of the village and leading thereto."

From said provision it is evident that the course last mentioned could not be followed excepting by an agreement with the village authorities.

While your letter does not particularly call into question the jurisdiction of the county commissioners over matters such as suggested therein, yet when we turn to sections 6949 to 6953 G. C. (107 O. L. 107), we find that the county commissioners have no authority to construct an improvement into, within or through a village unless the council thereof first gives its consent to such a course. I cite this latter proposition with the idea of calling attention to the fact that it seems to have been the intention of the legislature not to permit the improvement or construction of roads within a village, whether by the state or county, unless the village gives its consent thereto.

Thus far we have been considering the question merely from the standpoint of the right of the state or county to go within the confines of a municipal corporation for the purpose of improving the public highways therein located.

We will now view the matter from the standpoint of the powers conferred upon the municipality, in reference to its authority over the streets of the same.

It is contended by those who argue that the state has authority to go within the village of Bexley and change the road so that it will run directly through the circle in question, that this circle was never legally established upon the public highway, and hence it is a nuisance and obstruction therein; that Logan M. Bullitt, in laying out this plat, did not follow the statutes pertaining thereto, and that he had on authority in law to place the circle in question within the limits of the highway and change the highway so as to pass around on either side of the circle. They argue that inasmuch as this is an obstruction and nuisance to public travel, never having been legally established, the state, notwithstanding the fact that same is now within the confines of the village of Bexley, has authority in law to remove it.

In East Portland vs. Multnomah Company, 6 Ore. 62, the court lays down two fundamental propositions in regard to the jurisdiction over the highways of the state. They are as follows (syllabus):

> "1. The paramount and primary control of highways in a state, and of streets in cities is vested in the legislature.
> 2. The state may transfer its control of streets to a municipal corporation by act of the legislature."

In the opinion (p. 65) the court say:

> "The primary and paramount control of the streets having been vested in the legislature, and that body having by special act and in general terms given up its jurisdiction thereof to the city, the city may and should control them. Any other conclusion than this, and the one already reached, would abridge the authority of the legislative assembly invested by Article II, section 2 of the Constitution, by preventing that body from investing municipal corporations with one of the very powers necessary to the end of efficient municipal government."

We have already investigated the powers which the legislature has seen fit to confer upon the state and the county, relative to the public highways located within municipalities.

Let us now turn to the powers granted to municipalities, as to their authority over the streets therein located.

Section 3714 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Municipal corporations shall have special power to regulate the use of the streets, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council shall have the care, supervision and control of public highways, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds, bridges, aqueducts, and viaducts, within the corporation, and shall cause them to be kept open, in repair, and free from nuisance."

This section seems to confer complete power upon the municipalities of the state, in the supervision and control of the public highways and streets of the same, and I call particular attention to the latter part of said section, viz., that they "shall cause them to be kept open, in repair, and free from nuisance."

From this provision it is apparent that if the circle in question is a nuisance, the municipality of Bexley has been given exclusive jurisdiction to remove the nuisance from the highway or the street located within said village.

Section 3631 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "To hold and improve public grounds, parks, park entrances, free recreation centers and boulevards, and to protect and preserve them. * *."

I quote this provision with the view that if this circle should be considered in the nature of a park, and the roads encircling the same considered boulevards, the municipality itself seems to be given the jurisdiction to protect and preserve them.

Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, section 1138, lays down a fundamental proposition which appears to control in this case. It reads as follows:

> "* * * It may, however, be said that, as a general rule, a grant to a city, incorporated village, or incorporated town of the power to control and regulate the streets confers exclusive authority over the streets; and that the creation of a city, village, or incorporated town, or the extension of its limits, vests in the municipality the power and jurisdiction to regulate and control highways which have hitherto been under the control of the county or township organization, and transfer to the city, village, or incorporated town the duty of maintaining and repairing them, unless the statute otherwise provides. * * *."

There are several decisions of our own courts which also throw considerable light upon the question which we have under consideration.

In Railroad Co. vs. Defiance, 52 O. S. 262, the court held as follows in the first branch of the syllabus:

> "Where a part of a county road is taken into a municipal corporation by the annexation of contiguous territory, it is subject to the control and supervision of the municipal authorities, who may improve it by grading, or otherwise, at the expense of the corporation. * * *."

In the opinion (p. 299) the court uses the following language:

> "The highways so brought within the corporate limits of the defendant, were removed from the control which the county commissioners theretofore had over them, and became subject to the control, supervision and care of the municipal authorities, like other streets and highways of the corporation. By express statutory provision, the council is given 'the care, supervision and control of all public highways, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, public grounds and bridges within the corporation,' and is charged with the duty of causing 'the same to be kept open and in repair, and free from nuisance'. Section 2640, Revised Statutes. The duty thus devolved upon the council is attended with the power to do whatever may be necessary in the proper and lawful performance of the duty, including the power to improve such ways, or parts thereof, in any lawful manner, when, and as, the public convenience may demand. Grading a street, and changing its grade, when necessary for its convenient use by the public, are lawful modes of improving the street, and keeping the same open and in repair."

In City of Steubenville vs. King, 23 O. S. 610, the second branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "Where territory, including a public road connecting with the streets of a city, is annexed to the city, and the road continues to be used as a street or thoroughfare, it thereby becomes a 'public highway' of the city within the meaning of section 439 of the Municipal Code (66 O. L. 222), although it has never been 'accepted and confirmed by an ordinance specially passed for such purpose,' as provided in section 440."

In the opinion (p. 613) it is stated:

> "If the road in question was a legal public highway at the time of its annexation to the city, we think the simple fact of annexing it to the city, and its continuous subsequent use as a street, constituted it a 'public highway' of the city, within the meaning of section 439 of the code, and subjected it to the control and care of the city authorities."

Lawrence Railroad Co. vs. Commissioners of Mahoning county, 35 O. S. 1 is a case similar to the one now under consideration. In this case a railroad company had without authority of law taken possession of a certain public highway located outside the limits of the municipality of Youngstown and had erected and maintained thereon an obstruction and nuisance. Afterwards, this particular part of the public highway was annexed with other territory to the municipality of Youngstown. The question then arose as to whether the county commissioners of Mahoning county or the municipality of Youngstown would be the proper party to maintain an action against the railroad company for damages on account of said nuisance and obstruction.

The fifth branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "Where an obstruction is created in a state or county road, and the corporate limits of a municipal corporation are extended over a part of the road so obstructed, the county commissioners can not maintain an action for the obstruction of that part of the highway which is within the limits of the corporation."

In the opinion (p. 9) the following language is used by the court:

"True, it was held in Wells vs. McLaughlin, Butman vs. Fowler, 17 Ohio, 99, 101, that the county commissioners might lay out, within or through a municipal corporation, a public highway. We do not decide that that may not still be done. But the Municipal Code of 1869 (66 Ohio L. 222, section 439), re-enacted in 1878 (75 Ohio L. 388), provided that 'the council shall have the care, supervision, and control of all public highways, bridges, streets, avenues, alleys, sidewalks, and public grounds within the corporation, and shall cause the same to be kept open and in repair and free from nuisance'. And see 66 Ohio L. 149, sections 8, 199. Under the act of 1873, the damages recovered must be appropriated by the commissioners in repairing the road or removing the obstruction; but as control of highways in the corporation is confided to the corporate authorities, the commissioners could not apply such moneys within the corporate limits. Hence, if an action for damages, sustained by reason of such obstruction within the corporate limits of Youngstown, can be maintained, the action must be prosecuted by the city, and the recovery of the plaintiffs in this case must be confined to injury to the road outside of the city limits.'

Hence, whether we consider the question from the standpoint of the power and authority granted by the legislature to the state and the counties thereof, to enter a municipality with the view of improving the public highways therein; or whether we view it from the standpoint of the authority granted to the municipalities of the state over their public highways and streets, the conclusion seems clear that the state, through the state highway commissioner, would have no jurisdiction to enter the village of Bexley to remove the circle in question and to improve the highway therein, unless it first obtains the consent of the council of said village.

In arriving at this conclusion I am aware that there are a few decisions of our courts which would tend to some extent in the opposite direction. These are:

Wells vs. McLaughlin et al., 17 Ohio Rep., 99; Lewis vs. Laylin, 46 O. S. 663; Railway vs. Cummins, 53 O. S. 683.

However, in view of the recent acts of the General Assembly, I am of the opinion that these decisions could not be so construed as to give the state authority to enter the corporate limits of the village of Bexley and carry out the work herein considered.

I may add that the information which I have before me seems rather clearly to indicate that there never has been a legal abandonment of the public highway as originally established through the middle of this circle. To be sure, no adverse private possession has been asserted as against the public right inasmuch as the proprietor of the subdivision dedicated the circle to the public. The curved driveways which form the circle were designated by him as public streets, and undoubtedly are such streets. As the situation then seems to be, there should be a public way through the middle of the circle; and, if my information is correct, such a public way now exists at that place. In that public way, however, are curbs, trees, poles, and perhaps other things which constitute obstacles to public travel along the line of the original road.

I have not verified the information which is before me by consulting the road records of Franklin county. On the assumption that the information is correct, it seems that a situation exists at the place referred to which constitutes an unlawful state of affairs. Unless the public highway through the middle of the circle is properly vacated or altered by action of the public authorities who have jurisdiction in the premises, the obstacles to which I have referred should be, of course, removed in order to comply with the law as regards the rights of the public. But for the reasons which I have stated I am clearly of the opinion that the government of the village of Bexley is the only proper public authority to initiate measures which may bring relief.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL BOARD OF HEALTH HAS NO AUTHORITY TO EXPEND FUNDS TO MAINTAIN WATERWORKS.

The board of health of a municipal corporation has no authority to expend funds under its control for the purpose of maintaining the operation of the municipal waterworks, the revenues of which are insufficient to maintain it, on the pretext of preventing an epidemic of disease; and council has no authority to borrow money for the use of the board of health under section 4450 of the General Code for such purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 20, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of recent date requesting my opinion as follows:

> "The rates in effect covering the waterworks of a municipality of this state are inadequate to produce sufficient revenue for the operation of the plant, which has occasioned a shortage in the funds of the waterworks. In view of this condition, the board of health declares the lack of funds in the waterworks and the necessity of running such waterworks an emergency under section 4460 G. C. and authorizes issuance of a certificate of indebtedness with the help of council, levy to be made at the next budget.
> This certificate was issued in December, 1917, payable March, 1919, against the public health fund, levy to be made in the health fund to pay the same, and the disbursements have been made by the board of health, not by the waterworks.
> QUESTION: Is such procedure legal?"

Sections 4450 and 4451 of the General Code provide as follows:

> "In case of epidemic or threatened epidemic or during the unusual prevalence of a dangerous communicable disease, if funds are not otherwise available, the council of a city may borrow any sum of money that the local board of health deems necessary to defray the expenses necessary to prevent the spread of such disease. Such money may be borrowed until the next levy and collection of taxes is made, at a rate of interest not to exceed six per cent, per annum. Thereupon the board may expend the amount so authorized to be borrowed, which amount, or so much thereof as is expended, shall be a valid claim against the municipality from the fund so created."

Section 4451.—"When expenses are incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter, upon application and certificate from such board, the council shall pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred and certified. The council may levy and set apart the necessary sum to pay such expenses and to carry into effect the provisions of this chapter. Such levy shall, however, be subject to the restrictions contained in this title."

As far as the merely formal requirements of these sections are concerned your statement of facts makes it evident that they have been complied with; in other words, the manner in which action was taken is proper.

The question which I have encountered, however, is whether or not the purpose for which the expenditure described by you was made is one within the purview of the sections quoted.

Without the order of the board of health or the ordinance of council described by you before me I must assume to raise the question which I shall discuss, that both are predicated upon the supposed fact that the cessation of the operation of the waterworks would cause an epidemic to be "threatened"; that is to say, I must presume that the measures which you describe were taken for the declared purpose of preventing a threatened epidemic by keeping the waterworks in operation when to allow them to cease would give rise to the menace or "threat" of an epidemic. Unless I make some such assumption I could not say that there is any question at all for me to decide, for section 4450 G. C. speaks of what may be done "in case of epidemic or threatened epidemic, or during the unusual prevalence of a dangerous communicable disease," and unless action taken under the assumed authority of its provisions is referable to one of these conditions it would be on that account alone invalid.

The assumption which I have made reduces the question to this: May a board of health for the purpose of avoiding a threatened epidemic make such expenditures as may be necessary to keep running municipal waterworks which for lack of sufficient revenues otherwise would have to cease operations for a time, and may the council borrow money to be expended by the board of health for this purpose?

Section 4450 G. C. considered by itself is broad in its terminology. It says that when the conditions which I have previously enumerated exist, and funds are not otherwise available, there may be borrowed and expended by the board of health

"any sum of money * * * necessary to defray the expenses necessary to prevent the spread of such disease."

But broad as this language is, its application is limited by the principle present in the statute and in both sections which I have quoted that "expenses necessary to prevent the spread of such disease" must be those which the board of health is authorized to incur for the purpose of preventing the spread of disease. The board of health is to expend the money (section 4450) and such expenditures are expressly designated as "expenses * * * incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter" (section 4451).

It is clear to me that the board of health cannot claim section 4450 as authority to engage in any enterprise or activity which its members may consider necessary or expedient to prevent a threatened epidemic. It may make any expenditure which it sees fit for the purpose of carrying on such activities as it is authorized by law to carry on with a view to preventing the spread of communicable disease, but not otherwise.

In short, section 4450 must be read in connection with the other sections of the chapter relating to the powers and duties of the board of health; and unless we find in such other sections authority broad enough to enable the board of health virtually to take over the operation of the municipal waterworks when the agencies which exist under authority of the municipal code for the conduct of such waterworks are inadequate for financial reasons to maintain such operation, the answer to your question must be in the negative, for I think it is very clear that in effect the board of health in the case described by you did take over for a time the operation of the waterworks in the sense that that board supplied the funds therefor.

Among the other sections of the chapter relating to the power and duties of the board of health I find the following, which deserve consideration in this connection:

> Section 4413.—"The board of health of a municipality may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government, for the public health, the prevention or restriction of disease, and the prevention, abatement or suppression of nuisances. Orders and regulations not for the government of the board, but intended for the general public, shall be adopted, advertised, recorded and certified as are ordinances of municipalities, and the record thereof shall be given, in all courts of the state, the same force and effect as is given such ordinances."

Here again is a very broad grant of power. The board of health may make such orders and regulations as it deems necessary for its own government and for the public health, and for the prevention and restriction of disease. However, these orders and regulations are of two kinds; those intended for the government of the board, and those intended for the government of the general public. There is no authority in this section for the board of health to issue and enforce orders relating to the conduct of any other branch of municipal government. Thus, though the board of health might deem it necessary for the public health, and for the prevention of disease, that a filtration plant be installed in connection with existing waterworks of a municipality, it could not claim authority under this section to compel the municipality to install such a plant.

In this connection sections 4414 and 4415 providing penalties may be considered.

I cannot, therefore, justify the proceedings described by you upon the theory that the board of health had power to order the municipality to continue the operation of its waterworks under section 4413 G. C.

The power of the board of health to do and perform by its officers and employes what the offending parties should have done, is mentioned in section 4422 of the General Code. This power, however, relates only to the abatement of nuisances, especially to the correction of unsanitary conditions existing on particular premises The group of sections in which section 4422 appears contains no provisions from which the inference may be drawn that the board of health has power to take over the operation of municipal waterworks on the ground of prevention of disease.

Sections 4425 et seq. of the General Code enumerate the particular powers of the board of health both "in time of epidemic and threatened epidemic." This is the particular group of sections in which section 4450 is found and the phraseology of the clause in which the condition of action under section 4450 is set forth is exactly the same as the first clause of section 4425 with the exception of one word.

Section 4425 recites what may be done by the board "in time of epidemic or threatened epidemic, or when a dangerous communicable disease is unusually prevalent."

Section 4450 tells how funds may be raised in case of epidemic or threatened epidemic or during the unusual prevalence of a dangerous communicable disease.

I find myself strongly impelled by this substantial verbal identity to the conclusion that section 4450 is available to procure funds only for the purposes set forth in section 4425 of the General Code. I do not feel that it is necessary to determine this question in the present case inasmuch as I have been unable to justify the expenditure under sections other than those beginning with section 4425.

In regard, however, to sections 4425 et seq. I find that they authorize the board of health to impose quarantine on public conveyances and means of travel (section 4425); to remove persons suffering with infectious or contagious disease to quarantine hospitals or other places of detention, (section 4428); to quarantine private houses where cases of contagious or infectious disease exist (sections 4429-4430); to employ persons necessary to execute its orders and properly guard any quarantined place, (section 4431); to disinfect rooms, clothing, bedding and other articles, and to appraise and destroy articles and buildings, (sections 4433 and 4434); involving the payment of compensation to the owner thereof, (section 4435); to furnish necessaries of life and medical attention to quarantined persons, to be paid for by the municipality except in certain cases (section 4436); to inspect and disinfect school buildings and to close schools (section 4448); to supply agents and afford inducements and facilities for gratuitous vaccination, (section 4449).

As will be observed, these powers and duties of the board of health to be exercised and discharged by it in case of actual or threatened epidemic, are specifically enumerated. In other words, the legislature has seen fit to say just what a board of health may do in case of threatened epidemic.

As previously intimated I incline strongly to the view that section 4450 is merely a means of procuring funds necessary to enable the board of health to do things which it is specifically authorized to do in such cases, but even if section 4450 were susceptible to a broader interpretation we have seen that it has no other or general authority sufficiently broad to enable it to do the thing which it has done with the money borrowed in the case described by you.

From what I have said relative to the purport of the sections which relate particularly to the prevention of epidemics, it is clear that such power could not be claimed under any of these sections.

I find no other provisions of the General Code giving any authority to the board of health with respect to the operation of a municipal waterworks. On the contrary, certain municipal institutions are brought directly within the control of the board of health; thus the contagion hospital (section 4452 et seq.) and the sewage disposal plant (section 4467 et seq. G. C.) are institutions with which the board of health has more or less to do.

The significance of these facts lies in the statement that if the board of health were intended to have a hand in the maintenance or operation of municipal utilities other than the contagion hospital and the sewage disposal works, the general assembly would have expressed such an intention.

But I have already said too much upon a subject that is really very simple. The claim of authority in the board of health to keep a waterworks running as a means of avoiding an alleged threatened epidemic is really too preposterous to be seriously considered. I doubt very much whether a case of actually threatened epidemic could be made out of the circumstances of the case which you state even if it could, to admit the power of the board of health to take action would be to introduce a very dangerous principle, for if the board of health can keep a waterworks running as a means of preventing an epidemic, there is practically no limit to the extent to which the board of health may intermeddle with the proprietary functions of a municipality upon the same pretext.

It is, of course, obvious that the director of public service of a city or the board of trustees of public affairs of a village can at any time cause a municipal waterworks to produce sufficient revenue by the simple and just expedient of raising water rates. I may say, however, that I know of no authority in a municipal corporation to borrow money for the purpose of alleviating a temporary deficiency in the fund produced by the collection of water rents. However, my opinion is not invited upon the question as to what would have been the proper way for the municipality in question to meet the exigencies of the situation which confronted it.

I content myself, therefore, with the statement that the proceeding outlined by you was wholly unauthorized and illegal.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF CINCINNATI NOT ENTITLED TO FINES ASSESSED FOR VIOLATION OF STATUTES RELATING TO DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Fines and penalties collected in the municipal court of Cincinnati for the offenses defined in the chapter of the statutes relating to the department of agriculture are governed by the provisions of section 1177-14 General Code, and are to be paid to the Board of Agriculture of the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 20, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On August 7th you made a request to this department for an opinion as to the proper disposition of fines in cases prosecuted by the department of agriculture in the municipal court of Cincinnati. A letter has also been received from the law department of Cincinnati in reference to the same subject, anticipating such request. This letter enclosed contains a copy of the opinion of the assistant city solicitor to the effect that such fines are payable under section 1558-30 General Code to the city. Section 1177-14 of the General Code, which taken in consideration with the other section just referred to, relating to the question involved, is as follows:

> "All fines, fees and costs collected under prosecutions begun, or caused to be begun, by the secretary of agriculture, shall be paid by the court to the secretary of agriculture within thirty days after collection, unless error proceedings have been properly begun and prosecuted and in case the judgment of the justice of the peace is sustained the fine shall be paid within thirty days after such judgment or affirmance, and by the secretary paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund."

Section 1558-30, which is in reference to the duties of the clerk of the municipal court of Cincinnati, requires him to pay over all moneys received by him as clerk to the proper parties, which requirement is followed by this language:

"he shall receive and collect all costs, fines and penalties; and shall pay all costs and subject to the provisions of section 3056 of the General Code, the balance of such fines and penalties monthly to the treasurer of the city of Cincinnati * * *."

Section 3056 referred to, is the provision for the payment of fines and penalties collected in police court to the Law Library Association. The opinion of the city solicitor contains the following:

"The statute under which the department of agriculture is calling upon you to account to it for fines collected by you in cases prosecuted by it is general in its nature, while the act creating our municipal court, and defining your power and duties as clerk thereof is a special law, nowhere providing that you shall act in accordance with section 1177-14, but on the contrary specifically providing and directing that you shall receive and collect all costs, fines and penalties and pay the same monthly to the city treasurer subject to the provisions of section 3056. Said section 1177-14 provides, as you will notice, that the court shall pay to the board all fines, etc., and justices of the peace appear to be the character of court referred to. You are not the court and therefore in view of that fact, and the provisions of the law defining your power and duties, my opinion is that you can not legally comply with the demand of the department of agriculture of Ohio in the premises."

A case decided by the circuit court is cited as authority.

State ex rel. Library Association vs. Henry, 23 O. C. C. (n. s.) 541.

Whether one agrees with this conclusion or not, it must be admitted that it indicates the real ground upon which the question must be decided.

The subject is within the general terms of two different statutes dealing generally with entirely different subjects, but both including the subject of disposition of these costs. The well known rule of construction requires both to be given effect if it be possible without doing violence to the language of either.

"Two or more statutes which are in pari materia must each be looked to in ascertaining the meaning and intent of each.

It is only where two statutes are so repugnant to each other that it must be presumed that the legislature intended that the latter should repeal the former, that a repeal by implication exists, and where there is a reasonable field of operation for both under a just construction, both will be given effect."

City of Birmingham vs. Southern Express Co. 164 Ala., 529.

"Statutes in pari materia are those which relate to the same person or thing, or to the same class of persons or things. In the construction of a particular statute, or in the interpretation of any of its provisions, all acts relating to the same subject, or having the same general purpose, should be read in connection with it, as together constituting one law. The endeavor should be made, by tracing the history of legislation on the subject, to ascertain the uniform and consistent purpose of the legislature, or to discover how the policy of the legislature with reference to the subject-matter has been changed or modified from time to time. * * * So far as reasonably possible the several statutes, although seemingly in conflict with each other, should be harmonized, and force and effect given to each, as it will not be presumed that the legislature, in the enactment of a subsequent statute, intended to repeal an earlier one, unless it has done so in express terms; nor will it be presumed that the legislature intended to leave on the statute books two contradictory enactments.

Where there is one statute dealing with a subject in general and comprehensive terms and another dealing with a part of the same subject in a more minute and definite way the two should be read together and harmonized, if possible, with a view to giving effect to a consistent legislative policy; but to the extent of any necessary repugnancy between them, the special will prevail over the general statute. Where the special statute is later, it will be regarded as an exception to, or qualification of, the prior general one; and where the general act is later, the special will be construed as remaining an exception to its terms, unless it is repealed in express words or by necessary implication."

The above quotations are made from the text of this digest because they are nothing more nor less than settled rules of construction upon the subject. These rules are all simply aids in arriving at the intention of the legislature, which is always to prevail. Each of the propositions above stated can be sustained by a multitude of authorities.

Applying these rules what are we to say was the intention of the legislature in passing section 1558-30? This section is found in a statutory provision creating a court and fixing its jurisdiction and procedure, and defining the duties of its judge and clerk. It in no sense was made to favor municipal corporations on one hand, nor affect the activities of the agricultural department on the other; nor does it contain any purpose to make a different ultimate disposition of fines and penalties than was already required by the existing law, but simply prescribed how and when the clerk who received these fines when assessed in this court should perform the duties already imposed upon him by express provision or necessary implication of other statutes of paying the same to the proper authority to receive them.

Section 1177-14 is in the law creating and regulating the department of agriculture, and is an evident provision to make the department supply funds for carrying on its activities, or rather to replace other funds used for that purpose. These two sections are perfectly capable of reconciliation by reading 1177-14 as an exception to the other. If there were an irreconcilable conflict, of course, the one last passed would prevail. Let us see how that is: Section 1177-14 was in force before the creation of the municipal court of Cincinnati in substantially the same form as at present. There is no indication from any source that the legislative purpose partially to reimburse the state in this manner has ever been changed; on the contrary this identical section was re-enacted March 21, 1917, indicating a consistent and steadfast purpose on the part of the legislature to devote these funds to that purpose.

Now, if the rule requires the very last utterance of the legislature to be a repeal of all older provisions, then this is the last in that sense. I do not contend for this effect of it, however, but do call attention to it as indicating the fixed legislative intent in reference to this subject. If the state is to receive these fines, what difference can it make in what court they are assessed, or is it to be presumed that the legislature intended the benefit to depend upon the mere accident as to what court entertained a prosecution; or to state it in another form, and with an additional element of sanction, that the General Assembly by establishing a municipal court in Hamilton county intended that thereby fines for such offenses committed in that county should go to a different recipient than for those committed in other counties.

Stress is laid upon the clause requiring the payment to be made by the court to the secretary of agriculture, but if you are standing upon words rather than the ideas they express, it is sufficient to say that the word "court" is broad enough to include the municipal court. The fact is that this is the same language carried from one revision to another. The clerk is nothing but an officer of the court, and when he pays it the court pays it. The last clause of the section, it is true, mentions only the judgment of the justice of the peace, but it is to be said as to this that the last clause is unnecessary; that is, the requirements of the first clause could be fully carried out if the last were not enacted, and the only office performed by the last clause is to extend the time thirty days after the affirmance of the judgment. Inasmuch as the municipal court of Cincinnati succeeds to the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace there is no difficulty in giving effect to the latter clause in cases in the municipal court just the same as those before the justice. The real provision is that the payment shall be made within thirty days after the affirmance of the judgment. It may be that this conclusion is to some extent not in harmony with the decision of State ex rel. vs. Henry, supra, although the question arises upon the construction of a different statute.

I am informed that it was claimed or thought by the representatives of the state at the time that this case had not received as full consideration as it deserved, and that a motion was made for a re-hearing, and afterwards on account of some arrangement the motion was not insisted upon. I am not assuming to criticise the decision, but only claim that the conclusion arrived at in this opinion is founded upon the application of long settled elementary principles, and that by their application the real intention of the legislature is arrived at in the present case, and that this conclusion is fortified by authorities too numerous even to begin on. Even taking State ex rel. vs. Henry, supra, as a governing authority in this case the decision must be the same because the last act passed does give these fines to the department of agriculture for the benefit of the state.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ASSIGNEE OF LIQUOR LICENSEE MAY NOT AS SUCH BECOME TRANSFEREE OF ANOTHER LIQUOR LICENSE.

One who, in the capacity of an assignee, has become the transferee of a liquor license may not in said capacity as assignee become the transferee of another liquor license and continue that business for the purpose of realizing upon assets belonging to the estate of the insolvent debtor of whom he is the assignee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 23, 1918.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have asked me to advise you as to my opinion respecting the question submitted to you by the Summit County Liquor Licensing board, which is as follows:

"John A. Albertoni, a licensee in this county, made an assignment appointing Dean F. May as assignee and Mr. May is continuing the business. Among the debts (sic) was a chattel mortgage, held by Albertoni against William C. Marlot, also a licensee. Instead of Marlot making an assignment, he turned his fixtures, stock, lease and license over to Dean F. May, assignee for Albertoni, to satisfy this mortgage, and closed his place of business.

Now Mr. May wishes to have permission to continue the business of William C. Marlot until he has enough money to pay this mortgage.

Kindly advise whether we can allow Dean F. May to continue the business of William Marlot while he is also the assignee of John A. Albertoni."

This question invokes consideration of the following provisions of the Constitution and the State Liquor License law:

Constitution, Article XV, Section 9:

" * * * License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage * * *."

Section 1261-34 General Code:

" * * * License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage, * * *."

Section 1261-50 General Code:

"Upon the application of any licensee who desires to sell or transfer his business to another, joined with the application of the latter, and upon the payment of a fee of fifty dollars the county licensing board shall, unless the proposed purchaser or transferee shall not have the qualifications required by law of a licensee, endorse upon the license certificate of the original applicant the words: 'Transferred to_____,' inserting the name of the transferee with the date; and the person to whom the said license is transferred shall hold the license for the remainder of the said license year, and shall have all the privileges and obligations of the original licensee under the license. The said fee so paid to the county licensing board shall be immediately transmitted to the secretary of the state board, in the same manner as application fees heretofore provided for herein, together with a report of the transfer thereof.

The said transferee must, however, in the application for transfer, set forth all the facts required to be set forth by an original applicant. The said transferee shall be in all respects qualified by law as is an original applicant. * * *"

Section 1261-52 General Code:

" * * * If a guardian or a receiver or other officer of a court shall be appointed for a licensee or for one holding an interest in a license, or if in any way a licensee's business shall come under the control of any court in the state, the said license or interest therein shall be treated by the court as personal property and the purchaser at any sale shall have all the privileges and duties of a purchaser in the case of the death of a licensee, as provided for herein.

In all cases the court shall, before ordering a sale or an assumption of a license, appoint three appraisers to appraise said license and the interest of the licensee therein, which said appraisers shall be sworn to appraise said interest according to its true value. Any creditor of the deceased or of the owners of the license shall have all rights with reference to the appraisement or sale and the distribution of the assets as any creditor has with reference to any personal property left by any decedent. No license shall be sold or assumed for a sum less than two-thirds of the appraisement. * * *"

The section last quoted provides expressly for the continuance of the business of a deceased licensee by his executor or administrator, who must within three days file an original application, without fees, and submit his qualifications as an applicant for the consideration of the liquor licensing board. The section also provides for the continuance of the business by survivors in interest in the license; but it does not expressly provide, as will be observed, for the continuance under similar conditions of the business of an insolvent licensee by his assignee in insolvency. It would appear, so far as the liquor license law is concerned, that an assignee in insolvency would have to be authorized to continue the business of his assignor through a joint application for transfer under section 1261-50, supra. It is true that the general statutes regulating proceedings in insolvency provide that the assignee may be authorized by the court, on written application of three-fourths in number and amount of the creditors of the assignor, to carry on "any business carried on by the assignor at the time of the assignment" (G. C. section 11125.). It is my opinion, however, that while this section may have to be complied with by the assignee of a person engaged under license in the business of trafficking in intoxicating liquors, the order of the probate court is not efficacious to vest the rights of a licensee in the assignee. At any rate, I assume that the assignee in the case stated by the Summit County Liquor Licensing board has complied with all relevant provisions of the law which would entitle him to continue the business of his assignor as a licensee. I am convinced that under favor of whatever statute the first of the two transactions referred to in the communication of the Liquor Licensing board was consummated, the assignee, if carrying on the business of the original assignor legally, must have qualified as a licensee under the state law.

It now appears that among the assets of the assignor was a chattel mortgage on the fixtures used by another licensee in the business of the latter. In proceeding to liquidate this asset the assignee is met by the proposition on the part of the debtor that the latter will turn over the fixtures, stock, lease and license to the assignee in satisfaction of the claim. Some question exists in my mind as to whether the assignee would be entitled to make such an arrangement under the insolvency laws; but that question is not properly before me and I feel obliged to eliminate it from consideration and assume that the point is not being contested and will not be raised.

Now in the case of the second transaction above referred to it is made clear by the statements in the letter of the county board that no assignment has been made, so that the assignee of the first insolvent debtor does not appear in the character of an officer of the court appointed for the second licensee. So far as this transaction is concerned it stands upon the same footing as it would if the claim against the second licensee had been pressed by the first licensee in person, and the second licensee had attempted to deliver his personal property and assign his license to the first licensee.

It is perfectly clear that if the first licensee had applied to the County Liquor Licensing board with the second licensee for transfer of the second license, he, the first licensee, could not have qualified as the transferee of the second license; for he would then have held in his own right two licenses and the provision against the granting of a license to one interested in the business of selling liquors at another place, etc., would have been directly violated.

If the case at hand differs in its legal aspects from that just supposed, it does so only because the assignee's interest in the business which he is conducting as the successor of the first licensee may be said to be not within the intendment of the constitution and statutes, prohibiting the granting of a license to a person who is interested in the business conducted at another place.

As bearing upon this question, I call attention to the language of the statute and that of the constitution in this regard. The prohibition is against the granting of a license to an applicant "who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place," etc. Later on in the same provision of the constitution and in the same paragraph of the statute appears a prohibition against the granting of a license "unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought. I can not assume that the word "pecuniarily" was carelessly introduced into the Constitution nor into the statute in the context in which it is found. The fact that it appears in connection with the second prohibition is, to my mind, evidence that it was not intended to be understood in connection with the first prohibition. Its use implies a limitation that does not exist when it is not used. The phrase "in any way pecuniarily interested" is of narrower scope than the phrase "in any way interested." It seems to me, therefore, that the kind of interest in a business conducted at another place which would preclude the issuance of a license to an applicant may be less direct than a pecuniary interest.

It would be rather difficult to define the exact scope of the phrase "in any way interested." I do not feel obliged to do so in considering this question. I do feel, however, that any person whose "interest" in a business conducted at a place is such that he must be the licensee for that place is thereby precluded from becoming the licensee for another place. It is true that nowhere in the liquor license law is there an explicit provision to the effect that no person may hold two licenses, and therefore it might be argued that a single person might hold one license in an individual or proprietary capacity and another license in a trust capacity, as the representative of others and not for himself. I do not even have to decide this question in the instant case because it appears that both licenses, if they could be held by the same person, would be employed by him in the same capacity or as trustee for the same ultimate beneficiaries, viz: the creditors of the first licensee. I feel sure that the statute which is now under examination prohibits this thing and precludes a single person in the capacity of an assignee from operating one place where liquors are retailed as the assignee of the original licensee for that place, and at the same time becoming the licensee for another place through succession in the capacity of assignee to the business at another place as an asset of the first insolvent debtor. In the eye of the law he would be attempting to exercise the privilege under both licenses in the same capacity, for to the extent that he is interested in one he is surely interested in the other.

I do not care to go further than this for the purpose of the present case. The question as to what constitutes an "interest" within the meaning of the section under consideration is not clear. I refer you to the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, pages 290 and 883, in which certain questions submitted by the State Liquor Licensing board along this line were considered and an unreported decision of the Court of Appeals of Lucas county was referred to. These opinions shed no light upon the present question but their examination will serve to illustrate the difficulty of attempting to lay down any general definition of the term the application of which is involved in the case under consideration.

For the reasons which I have stated, then, I am of the opinion that one who, in the capacity of an assignee, has become the transferee of a liquor license may not in said capacity as assignee become the transferee of another liquor license and continue that business for the purpose of realizing upon assets belonging to the estate of the insolvent debtor of whom he is the assignee.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF FITCHVILLE TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT—$4,750.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

Re: Bonds of Fitchville Township Rural School district, Huron county, Ohio, in the sum of $4,750.00 for the purpose of providing funds for the repair of a school house in said school district.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and of other officers of Fitchville Township Rural School district, Huron county, Ohio, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—LEGISLATION MUST CONTAIN PROVISION FOR TAX LEVY. DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF OLMSTED FALLS RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, CUYAHOGA FALLS, O.—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Olmsted Falls Rural School district, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000.00, for the stated purpose of funding certain indebtedness which said school district because of its limits of taxation is not able to pay at maturity.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Olmsted Falls Rural School district, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds. From the examination made by me of said transcript I find that I am unable to approve the above issue of bonds for the reason that in its legislation providing for this issue of bonds, the board of education has made no provision for an annual levy of taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to said bonds as required by section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The provisions of the State Constitution above set out are obviously mandatory and the failure on the part of the board of education to observe the requirements of these provisions leaves me no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove the bonds.

In addition to what is above stated, I note that the amount sought to be funded by this issue of bonds is a part of the contract price for the construction of a school building in said school district. The resolution providing for said issue of bonds finds and determines that said contract price, as well as the indebtedness to be funded, is a valid, subsisting and binding obligation of the school district. In view of the provision of section 5660 General Code, which requires the money necessary to pay for contracts of this kind to be in fund before the contract is let, it does not clearly appear how the contract price or any part thereof can be a valid, binding and subsisting obligation of the school district which said district would be required or authorized to fund under section 5656 G. C. as an indebtedness which it is unable to pay at maturity by reason of its limits of taxation. In other words, the school district would not be authorized to raise money by an issue of funding bonds under section 5656 General Code for the purpose of paying any part of the contract price for the construction of a school building when it at the time had in the proper fund sufficient money to pay such contract price, and under the provisions of section 5660, as before noted, the school district is required to have in fund the money necessary for the payment of the contract price before the contract is entered into.

Those observations sufficiently indicate the doubt in my mind with respect to the validity of the indebtedness for which these bonds are to be issued. As to this, however, I may say that the transcript contains no statement of facts touching this matter other than such as may be inferred from the recitals of the legislation providing for this issue of bonds, and in the absence of a fuller statement of such facts I am not disposed to express any final opinion so far as this particular question is concerned. The first objection above noted to this issue of bonds is, however, insuperable and I am compelled to advise you that you should not accept and purchase said issue of bonds.

I am herewith enclosing the transcript submitted, which you will please return to the clerk of the board of education. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOTS NOS. 29, 30, 31, 32, 44 AND 45 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 25, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an abstract of title covering the following lot of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and state of Ohio, and described as follows:

> Being lots Nos. twenty-nine (29), thirty (30), thirty-one (31), thirty-two (32), forty-four (44) and forty-five (45) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on August 17, 1918 a good title in Donato and Maria Mirabelli, to the premises hereinbefore described.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

APPROVAL OF LEASES OF CANAL LANDS TO MIAMI CONSERVANCY DISTRICT

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 20, 1918, in which you enclose a certain contract, under and by virtue of which the state of Ohio leases to The Miami Conservancy District, for a period of five years, certain surplus waters to be taken from the Miami and Erie canal.

I have carefully examined this contract of lease and am of the opinion that it is correct in form and legal and have therefore endorsed my approval thereon.

Section 14009 G. C. (107 O. L. 418) provides as follows:

> " * * * said superintendent of public works may sell or lease the right to use such surplus water for hydraulic or other purposes, for any term not exceeding twenty-five years for a certain annual rental, or otherwise, as he may deem most beneficial for the interests of the state * *."

This might be construed to require a certain annual rental in money, but I do not feel that such a strict construction should be placed upon this section. Furthermore, the words "or otherwise" would seem to indicate that the superintendent of public works might lease surplus water upon some other consideration than an annual rental to be paid in money.

I will also call attention to section 14011 G. C. (107 O. L. 419), in which provision is made that any lease of water by the superintendent of public works "shall be subject to the rights of the state for purposes of navigation, and for the maintenance of the state reservoirs as public parks and pleasure resorts."

I note that the lease made by you is subject to the rights of the state for the purposes of navigation, but it is not made subject to the rights of the state "for the maintenance of the state reservoirs as public parks and pleasure resorts." In approving this lease I am therefore assuming that the water which is being leased by you is not essential for the maintenance of the state reservoirs as public parks and pleasure resorts.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY CORONER—INQUEST OVER RESIDENT OF ONE COUNTY DYING IN ANOTHER COUNTY.

1. When a resident of one county meets with an accident in such county and is taken to a hospital in an adjoining county for treatment, in which county he dies, if there is ground for suspicion that death was due to violence or criminal negligence, the coroner of the county in which the death occurred should hold the inquest.

2. In such case the coroner of the county in which the death occurred and the inquest is held cannot compel the attendance of witnesses from the county in which the accident occurred, but if such witnesses attend the inquest they may be paid as provided by section 3012 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of August 5, 1918, which reads:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> First. A resident of another county meets with an accident in his home county and is rushed to a Columbus hospital for treatment and dies therein after a period of time. Is such body 'found within the county' within the meaning of section 2856 G. C., and is it within the province of the coroner of Franklin county to ascertain whether or not death was caused by unlawful means?

Second. If the coroner of Franklin county has jurisdiction in such cases, can he compel the attendance of witnesses from the foreign county at his office in Franklin county, and if so, what are to be their fees and by whom payable?"

In your first question you ask whether it is within the province of the coroner of Franklin county "to ascertain whether or not death was caused by unlawful means in a case where a resident of another county meets with an accident in his home county" and dies in Franklin county. I take it you mean to ask whether or not the coroner of Franklin county may hold a coroner's inquest in such cases. Before determining in which county the inquest should be held it is, of course, necessary to determine whether an inquest should be held at all.

Section 2856 G. C. reads:

"When informed that the body of a person whose death is supposed to have been caused by violence has been found within the county, the coroner shall appear forthwith at the place where the body is, issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, administer to them the usual oath, and proceed to inquire how the deceased came to his death, whether by violence from any other person or persons, by whom, whether as principals or accessories before or after the fact, and all circumstances relating thereto. The testimony of such witnesses shall be reduced to writing, by them respectively subscribed, except when stenographically reported by the official stenographer of the coroner, and, with the finding and recognizances hereinafter mentioned, if any, returned by the coroner to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county. If he deems it necessary, he shall cause such witnesses to enter into recognizance, in such sum as may be proper, for their appearance at the succeeding term of the court of common pleas of the county to give testimony concerning the matter. The coroner may require any and all such witnesses to give security for their attendance, and if they or any of them neglect to comply with his requirements, he shall commit such person to the prison of the county, until discharged by due course of law."

From this section it will be seen that inquests are only to be held when the body has been found within the county and the death is supposed to have been caused by violence.

It was said by former Attorney-General Ellis, in an opinion rendered under date of October 6, 1905, found in Reports of the Attorney-General for that year, page 125; "of course if the coroner has knowledge that death was the result of a mere accident and not by criminal negligence" or violence, an inquest would be unnecessary.

It was held in the case of State ex rel vs. Bellows, 62 O. S., 307:

"Within the meaning of section 1221 Revised Statutes (now section 2856 G. C.) providing for inquests by the coroner, a dead body 'is found within the county' when it is ascertained to be in the county; and death is supposed to have been caused by violence whenever the coroner from observation or information has substantial reason for believing or surmising that death was caused by unlawful means."

If in the "accident" you refer to there is ground for a suspicion that death was caused by criminal negligence or violence, an inquest should be held.

As to the county in which this inquest should be held, whether in the county where the accident occurred or where the death occurred, the following is found in 13 C. J., 1248:

"An inquest is properly held in the territory of the coroner in whose jurisdiction the body is found, without regard to where the death occurred or where the injury was received."

A number of cases are cited in support of this statement. Among them is the case of Moore vs. Boxbutte county, 78 Nebr., page 561, in which it was held:

"Jurisdiction to hold an inquest is conferred upon a coroner by his finding and custody in his county of the body of a person who has apparently come to his death by violent, mysterious or unknown means, and such jurisdiction is not defeated by the mere fact that the violence was inflicted or the death occurred in another county."

In that case the court said at page 563:

"As to the latter contention, it seems to us sufficient to say that whether a death, caused by the conduct of another or of others, in this case the railway trainmen, is due to innocent accident, or to wrongful and unlawful negligence or malice, can only be ascertained, if at all, by inquiry more or less thorough, and that it is the principal function of coroners to make inquests for the purpose of discovering the facts in such cases. As respects the former of these objections, we think that, doubtless, when a coroner finds in his county the body of a person who has evidently come to his death by violent means, although he may have reason to suspect, or even may know, that the violence was inflicted outside his own county, he has a very wide discretion in determining whether the circumstances are such as to require an official investigation at his hands."

In the case of Pickett vs. Erie Co., 3 Pa. Co., 23, it was held:

"An inquest is properly held in the county where the body is found, without regard to where the death occurred."

The court at page 74 said:

"The evident meaning and intent of the law is that the coroner's inquest should be held where the body is found. It must be on view of the remains, and of course it would not be held in their absence, although an inquest should be summoned and met where the death occurred."

The statutes considered in these cases are much like our own and in answer to your first question I am of the opinion that if in such case you refer to there is ground for suspicion that death was due to violence or criminal negligence, the coroner of Franklin county should hold the inquest.

Section 2858 of the General Code reads:

"The coroner may issue any writ required by this chapter, to any constable of the county in which such body is found, or if, in his opinion the emergency so requires, to any discreet person of the county. Every constable, or other person so appointed, who fails to execute any warrant to him directed, shall forfeit and pay twenty-five dollars, to be recovered upon the complaint of the coroner, before any court having jurisdiction thereof. Any coroner who refuses or neglects to perform any duty herein required of him, shall, upon indictment and conviction in the court of common pleas and the proper county, be fined not to exceed five hundred dollars. All such forfeitures and fines shall be for the use of the county."

I can find no statute authorizing the constable or other person to go outside his county in serving subpoena for coroner's inquest, or do I know of any provision of statute which authorizes the service of such subpoena by a constable or other person of such other county. This being true, I am forced to the conclusion that the coroner, in holding an inquest concerning a death which occurred in some other county, cannot compel witnesses to attend from such other county. If they do attend, however, they may be paid under the provisions of section 3012 G. C., which section provides in part:

"Each witness in civil causes shall receive the following fees: * * *; for attending a coroner's inquest, $1.00 for each day and the same mileage allowed a witness in the taking of depositions, to be paid from the county treasury; * * *."

These fees are payable, as the section indicates, from the treasury of Franklin county. Sections 2856 and 2857 G. C. provide that the findings of the coroner are to be returned to the authorities of Franklin county. It is true that if any prosecution is to be had in the case to which you refer, such prosecution must be had in the other county where the accident occurred, and it might seem strange, in view of this fact, that Franklin county should pay the expense of the inquest. However, the duty rests upon the coroner of Franklin county and no provision is made for any reimbursement to Franklin county for the expense of the inquest by the county in which the accident occurred. Neither is there any machinery provided for the forwarding of any report of the coroner of Franklin county to the authorities of such other county. However, it would seem that in the interest of justice it would be the duty of the coroner of Franklin county to forward such information as he may obtain to the proper authorities of the county in which the "accident" or violence occurred.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—MAINTENANCE AND REPAIR ON OWN MOTION LIMITED TO STATE ROADS—NO AUTHORITY TO USE AUTOMOBILE MONEY TO REPAIR AND MAINTAIN UNIMPROVED INTER-COUNTY HIGHWAYS.

1. The jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, upon his own motion, is limited to those parts of the inter-county highways which come within the classification of "state roads" as defined in section 7464 G. C.

2. Upon the application of county commissioners or township trustees for state aid, in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, the state highway commissioner has authority to use the funds derived from the registration of motor vehicles to pay the state's proportion of the cost and expense of such maintenance and repair.

3. The state highway commissioner has no authority in law to use the funds derived from the registration of motor vehicles, either upon his own motion or upon the application of the county commissioners or township trustees, to repair and maintain inter-county highways which have not been improved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 26, 1918

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 4, 1918, which reads in part as follows:

> "For your information I beg to quote the following from the Journal of the highway advisory board as of September 4, 1918:
> 'Greene County—I. C. H. No. 60, section "X". Authority requested for expenditure of $6,000.00 M. & R. funds. Matter referred to the Attorney-General.'
> A letter to Commissioner Cowen from Deputy Commissioner Hinkle was presented requesting authority for the expenditure of $6,000.00 maintenance and repair funds for the repair of section X, inter-county highway No. 60, Greene county, the request containing the following statements:
> 'Present type and condition of road: Gravel part of which is in very bad condition.
> Nature of improvement to be made: Complete resurfacing with waterbound gravel (perhaps about one mile) and general maintenance of the whole stretch of road as a waterbound gravel.
> This fund is not to be used in cooperation with county funds.
> Remarks: This work has cost considerably more than originally estiated by the resident engineer. I am hoping that the above requested funds will finish the resurfacing work and do the necessary maintenance work for the remainder of the year.'
> The secretary was authorized to submit the matter to the Attorney-General of Ohio for an opinion as to whether or not maintenance and repair funds may legally be expended on this road."

There is a statement of facts, made by Mr. A. H. Hinkle of your department, embodied in your communication. It will not be necessary to quote this in full, but it shows that the road in course of improvement is an inter-county highway, partly as said system was originally established and adopted and partly as a result of a changed location of the inter-county highway, which change was made necessary in view of the establishing of the aviation field near Dayton, O., and also due to the fact that a change was made necessary to adapt the road to the Miami conservancy district.

I am assuming that the entire road in question is a part of the inter-county highway system of the State of Ohio, although there seems to be some uncertainty as to whether the state highway commissioner approved the part of the road which was re-located on a different line from that on which it originally ran.

In considering whether you would be authorized in using six thousand dollars of maintenance and repair money in the improvement of this particular highway, it will be well for us to bear in mind that inter-county highways are not necessarily state roads.

I will first take into consideration the provisions of section 6309 G. C., which forms a part of the law pertaining to the registration of motor vehicles and the payment of a license fee for the same. This section reads as follows:

> "Section 6309.—The revenues derived by registration fees provided for in this chapter shall be paid by the secretary of state weekly into the state treasury. Any surplus of such revenues which may remain after the payment of the expenses incident to carrying out and enforcing the provisions of this chapter shall be used for the repair, maintenance, protection, policing and patrolling of the public roads and highways of this state, under the direction, supervision and control of the state highway department."

I will direct your attention to two matters in connection with this section, as follows:

(1) Provision is specifically made that all the revenues derived by registration fees, after the expenses incident to carrying out the provisions of the chapter are defrayed, are to be "used under the direction, supervision and control of the state highway department."

(2) It is also therein provided that the revenues are to be used in the repair, maintenance, protection, policing and patrolling "of the public roads and highways of this state."

The provisions of this section are broad enough, if taken alone, to indicate that these funds might be used upon any road or highway of the state which is not a private road or highway. However, it must be remembered that this section is not a grant of power, and further that it must be taken in connection with other sections of the General Code.

Section 1221 G. C. (107 O. L. 131) reads as follows:

> "The state highway improvement fund produced by the levy hereinafter provided for, shall be applied to the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the inter-county and main market road systems as follows:
> 1. Seventy-five per cent of all the money paid into the treasury by reason of the levy for the state highway improvement fund shall be used for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the inter-county highways as the same have been heretofore designated or as they may hereafter be established or located by the state highway commissioner in the manner provided by law, and for the maintenance of the state highway department, including the state's portion of the salaries of the county surveyors. Money appropriated or available for inter-county highways shall be equally divided among the counties of the state.

2. Twenty-five per cent of all the money paid into the treasury of the state by reason of the levy for the state highway improvement fund shall be used for the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the main market roads of the state as the same have been heretofore designated or as they may hereafter be established by the state highway commissioner in the manner provided by law. The money to the credit of the state highway improvement fund for use on the main market roads of the state as herein provided shall be so expended as to distribute equitably, as far as practicable, the benefits from such expenditure to the different sections and counties of the state.

3. The funds derived from the registration of automobiles shall be used for the maintenance and repair of the inter-county highways and main market roads of the state. The state highway commissioner may use part of said funds as may be necessary in establishing a system of patrol or gang maintenance on the inter-county highways and main market roads. and for that purpose may employ such patrolmen, laborers and other persons and teams and purchase or lease such oilers, trucks, machinery, tools, material and other equipment and supplies as may be necessary."

Here we find a provision that seventy-five per cent. of the proceeds derived from the state levy shall be used in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the inter-county highways, twenty-five per cent. of the money so derived from the state levy shall be used in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the main market roads of the state, and "the funds derived from the registration of automobiles shall be used for the maintenance and repair of the inter-county highways and main market roads of the state."

Based upon this latter provision, it will be necessary for us to branch off into two directions in order to fully understand the scope and extent of this provision. The first branch consists of the repair and maintenance of inter-county highways and main market roads by the state highway commissioner upon his own motion, and the second the repair and maintenance of inter-county highways and main market roads upon the application of the county commissioners or township trustees.

Let us consider now the first branch. Section 7464 G. C. reads as follows:

"The public highways of the state shall be divided into three classes, namely: State roads, county roads and township roads.

(a) State roads shall include such part or parts of the inter-county highways and main market roads as have been or may hereafter be constructed by the state, or which have been or may hereafter be taken over by the state as provided in this act, and such roads shall be maintained by the state highway department.

(b) County roads shall include all roads which have been or may be improved by the county by placing brick, stone, gravel or other road building material thereon, or heretofore built by the state and not a part of the inter-county or main market system of roads, together with such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, and all such roads shall be maintained by the county commissioners.

(c) Township roads shall include all public highways of the state other than state or county roads as hereinbefore defined, and the trustees of each township shall maintain all such roads within their respective townships; and provided further, that the county commissioners shall have full power and authority to assist the township trustees in maintaining all such roads, but nothing herein shall prevent the township trustees from improving any road within their respective townships, except as otherwise provided in this act."

This section classifies the roads of the state and specifically provides that the state highway department must maintain state roads, the county commissioners the county roads, and the township trustees township roads. The roads coming within these classes are definitely described in said section.

Section 7467 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"The state, county and township shall each maintain their respective roads as designated in the classification hereinabove set forth; provided, however, that either the county or township may, by agreement between the county commissioners and township trustees, contribute to the repair and maintenance of the roads under the control of the other. * * *."

Here again we find a specific provision that the state is under obligation to maintain state roads, the county to maintain county roads and the township to maintain township roads.

However, the section of the General Code which more particularly than any other section confers power upon the state highway commissioner, in reference to the repair and maintenance of roads, is section 1224 G. C. (107 O. L. 133), which reads in part as follows:

"Section 1224.—The state highway commissioner shall maintain and repair to the required standard, all inter-county highways, main market roads and bridges and culverts constructed by the state, by the aid of state money or taken over by the state after being constructed. * * *."

Here too we find that the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner, in the repair and maintenance of inter-county highways and main market roads, is limited to those inter-county highways and main market roads which have been constructed by the state or have been taken over by the state after being constructed. In other words, his jurisdiction is limited to what section 7467 G. C. defines as state roads.

There is one other provision of section 1224, supra, to which I might refer and that is as follows:

" * * * Nothing in this chapter shall be construed so as to prohibit a county, township or municipality or the federal government, or any individual or corporation from contributing a portion of the cost of the construction, maintenance and repair of said state highways. * * *."

Thus we see that while it is obligatory upon the state highway commissioner to maintain and repair state roads, a county, township, municipality, the federal government or any individual or corporation may voluntariy contribute toward this end, if they or any of them so see fit to do.

From all the above I think it is clear that the state highway commissioner upon his own motion has no jurisdiction in the repair and maintenance of roads other than those inter-county highways and main market roads which have been constructed or which have been taken over by the state after being constructed by a county or township; or, in other words, his jurisdiction in the repair and maintenance of roads is limited to state roads.

We will now consider the second branch herein referred to which is based upon section 1221, supra; that is, those cases in which the counties or townships make application to the state highway commissioner for state aid in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways and main market roads.

Section 1191 G. C. (107 O. L. 121) reads in part as follows:

> "The commissioners of any county may make application to the state highway commissioner for aid from any appropriation by the state from any fund available for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of inter-county highways. Such application shall be filed prior to March first of the calendar year in which such appropriation may be made or become available. * * *."

This section further provides:

> "The board of county commissioners of any county or the board of township trustees of any township thereof shall, however, be authorized to make said application for aid from any appropriation by the state from any fund available for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of inter-county highways at any time after the first day of May of the calendar year in which such appropriation may be made or become available provided that at the time such application is made the state highway commissioner has not entered into any contract or incurred any obligations on behalf of the state involving the expenditure of the funds for which application is made. * * *."

It appears from this section that the county commissioners of any county or the township trustees of any township may make application to the state highway commissioner for state aid in not only the construction and improvement, but also in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways. This section is also clear to the effect that the state highway commissioner has authority to grant state aid from any fund that is available for the construction or improvement or for the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways.

Under section 1221, supra, the funds derived from the registration of automobiles are to be used for the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways. So if the county commissioners of any county or the township trustees of any township under section 1191 G. C. should make application to the state highway commissioner for state aid in the maintenance or repair of inter-county highways, he would have authority, if he grants state aid under the application, to take the amount, so agreed upon by him as state aid, from the maintenance and repair fund of the department. Of course under these provisions the application for state aid would not be made in reference to those parts of the inter-county highways which come within the classification of state roads, because these the state highway commissioner must repair and maintain upon his own motion, as provided in sections 7464 and 1224 G. C.

The application for state aid in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways would apply to other parts of inter-county highways than those which could be included under the class "state roads." This gives the provision set out in section 1221 G. C. its full force and effect. It provides:

> 3. The funds derived from the registration of automobiles shall be used for the maintenance and repair of the inter-county highways and main market roads of the state. * * *."

The two branches above discussed give this its full force and effect; that is the state highway commissioner upon his own motion can use these funds only for the repair and maintenance of those inter-county highways and main market roads which can be brought within the classification of state roads; while upon the application of county commissioners or township trustees, under section 1191 G. C. he can grant state aid in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways and main market roads other than state roads and supply the state aid from the funds derived from the registration of automobiles.

However, I do not wish it to be understood that the funds derived from the registration of automobiles may be used upon all parts of the inter-county highways and main market roads, even though county commissioners or township trustees should make application for state aid in said repair and maintenance. The very terms "maintenance" and "repair" indicate that a road has already been improved and brought up to a certain standard. You can not repair and maintain a road unless it has been improved. Hence an inter-county highway or main market road that has not been improved can not be maintained and repaired, because there is nothing to maintain or repair. This idea is brought out more fully when we consider the other terms used in subdivision 3 of section 1221, viz., "policing" and "patrolling." These same terms are also used in section 6309 G. C., above quoted. It can not be conceived that the legislature had in mind the patrolling and policing of mere dirt roads.

From all the above we can draw the following conclusions in reference to the use of the funds derived from the registration of automobiles.

1. The state highway commissioner must maintain and repair those parts of the inter-county highways and main market roads which come within the class of roads known as state roads, and his jurisdiction upon his own motion is limited to these roads. In maintaining and repairing these roads he uses the funds above indicated.

2. When county commissioners or township trustees under section 1191 G. C. make application for state aid in the repair and maintenance of inter-county highways or main market roads, the state highway commissioner may, if he so desires, grant state aid and take the sum granted as state aid from the said funds. Of course, under the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 1221 G. C. he could use money from the regular inter-county highway fund, in the maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, upon application of county commissioners or township trustees.

3. However, the principles laid down in the second conclusion herein could not be made to apply to those parts of the inter-county highways and main market roads of the state which have not been improved, the words "repair" and "maintenance" necessarily implying an improved condition of the road.

Therefore the answer to your question is readily given. You are upon your own motion attempting to repair a part of the inter-county highways of the state which can not be brought under the classification of state roads. Hence you have no authority in law to use for this purpose funds derived from the registration of motor vehicles.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstracts of title covering the following lots of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

Being lots Nos. twenty-six (26), twenty-seven (27) and thirty-six (36), of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstracts and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstracts do not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstracts disclosed on September 23, 1918, as to lots 26 and 27, and on September 25, 1918, as to lot 36, a good title in George H. R. Tyler, to the premises hereinbefore described.

I am returning herewith the abstracts submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CITY OF ALLIANCE—COUNCIL HAS NO AUTHORITY TO APPROPRIATE MONEY TO PAY SUBSTITUTE JUDGE AND BAILIFF OF MUNICIPAL COURT.

Council of the city of Alliance has no authority to appropriate money in payment of services rendered by persons who served, respectively, as substitute judge of the municipal court of Alliance during the vacation of the regular judge and as substitute bailiff of said court during the vacation of the regular bailiff.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date in which you submit for my opinion the following question:

> "During the absence of the judge of the Municipal court of the city of Alliance on his vacation a substitute, appointed by the mayor, acted in that capacity.
> During the absence of the bailiff of said court on his vacation a substitute bailiff was designated and rendered services in that capacity.
> After these services were rendered the council of the city of Alliance in framing a semi-annual appropriation ordinance inserted therein an appropriation for the payment of certain compensation for the services thus rendered. Vouchers against such appropriation have been drawn and approved by the judge and clerk of the Municipal court. The city auditor doubts his authority to honor such vouchers. May he legally do so?"

The following provisions of the act establishing the municipal court of Alliance (107 Ohio Laws, 660) must be examined in connection with this question:

> Section 1. Section 1579-195 General Code:
> "That there be and hereby is created a court of record for the city of Alliance and the townships of Lexington and Washington, in the county of Stark, state of Ohio, to be styled 'The Municipal Court of Alliance, Ohio' * * * *."
> Section 2. Section 1579-196 General Code:
> "Said municipal court shall be presided over by one judge, to be designated herein as a 'municipal judge,' which office is hereby created, and whose term of office shall be for a period of four years, and said judge shall receive such compensation, payable out of the treasury of Stark county not less than twelve hundred dollars per annum, payable monthly, as the county commissioners may prescribe, and out of the treasury of Lexington township, Stark county, Ohio, not less than two hundred dollars per annum, as the township trustees may prescribe, and out of the treasury of Washington township, Stark county, Ohio, not less than one hundred dollars per annum, as the township trustees may prescribe, and such further compensation, not less than fifteen hundred dollars per annum, payable in monthly installments out of the treasury of the city of Alliance, Ohio, as the council or legislative authority may prescribe. Said municipal judge at the time of his election or appointment, and during the continuance of his office shall be a qualified elector and resident of either the township of Lexington or the township of Washington, county of Stark, and State of Ohio, and have been admitted to the practice of law in the state of Ohio for not less than five years. * * *"

Section 29. Section 1579-223 General Code:

"The bailiff shall be appointed by the judge of such court and hold office during the pleasure of the court, and may be removed at any time by the judge of the Municipal court. Every police officer of the city of Alliance shall be ex-officio a deputy bailiff of the Municipal court and the chief of police shall assign one or more such police officers from time to time to perform such duties in respect to cases within the jurisdiction within said court as may be required of them by said court or the clerk thereof."

Section 30. Section 1579-224 General Code:

"One bailiff shall be designated as hereinafter provided for in this act. * * * Such bailiff shall receive such compensation not less than six hundred dollars per annum payable out of the treasury of the city of Alliance in monthly installments as the council may prescribe. * * *"

Section 35. Section 1579-229 General Code:

"Whenever the incumbent of any office created by this act, excepting the municipal judge shall be temporarily absent or incapacitated from acting, the judge shall appoint a substitute who shall have all the qualifications required of the incumbent of the office. Such appointee shall serve until the return of the regular incumbent, or until his incapacity ceases. In case said judge shall be incapacitated from sitting in any case, or by reason of absence or inability be unable to attend sessions of said court, the mayor of the city of Alliance may appoint some attorney having the qualifications required by this act, to act in his stead until said judge is able to resume his said position. Such appointments shall be certified by the court or mayor as the case may be and entered upon the record."

I find nothing in the act other than the provisions thereof which I have quoted which in any way bears upon the question under consideration. It is my opinion that the services of the substitute judge and the substitute bailiff about which inquiry is made were gratuitous. The positions are in no sense municipal offices. The council of the city of Alliance has, to be sure, full control over the finances of the corporation, for purposes, however, of discharging such functions as may be local and municipal, and such only, except in cases where it is expressly authorized or required by statute to appropriate money for other purposes. The conduct of this municipal court is not an enterprise within the scope of the general corporate powers of the city of Alliance, as such. Such general corporate powers are those enumerated in the Municipal Code, and it is now well settled that municipal corporations subject to the Municipal Code have such corporate powers, and such only, as are conferred upon them by the statutory law of the state. Additional corporate powers can be obtained according to the trend of recent decisions of the Supreme Court of this state under favor of Article XVIII, section 3 of the Constitution only by the adoption of a charter. Whether by this means the city of Alliance might obtain authority to organize and conduct a municipal court or to contribute, beyond the scope of the act in 107 Ohio Laws, 660, to the support and maintenance of the Municipal court therein provided for, is a question which need not be considered because it does not appear that the city of Alliance has adopted a charter.

Not only is the organization and maintenance of a Municipal court not one of the ordinary functions of a municipal corporation, but in this case it is very clear that the particular court in question is not one for the maintenance of which the city of Alliance can claim general corporate power to raise money; for it is very clear from the statutes which I have quoted that the court is not even in a remote sense an organ of the government of the city of Alliance, but is rather an inferior local court established for the city of Alliance and certain adjoining townships as well. While the salary of the bailiff is to be paid by the city of Alliance, that of the judge is to be paid by the county, the city and the townships in prescribed shares.

From all the foregoing I arrive at the conclusion that the council of the city of Alliance has no authority to appropriate money in payment of any service rendered to or through the court established under the act referred to excepting that which may be found expressly conferred upon it by the terms of that act. No authority to allow any compensation payable from any source—whether from the treasury of the city of Alliance or from that of Stark county or those of the townships involved—to substitutes is found in the act. Such substitutes may be appointed as provided in section 35, but they are entitled to no compensation from any source for the services they may render—a fortiori it can not be said that they are entitled to compensation from the treasury of the city of Alliance; nor for the reasons above set forth can the council of the city of Alliance lawfully appropriate the funds of that city in payment of compensation for services rendered by substitute officers of the court on the theory that while such officers may have no enforceable claims against the city of Alliance, yet the council in the exercise of its control over the finances of that city may lawfully recognize a species of moral obligation in the premises and expend the public funds of the municipality in discharge thereof. For, as I have pointed out, the authority of the council of the city of Alliance to devote public moneys in the treasury of that city to the support of the court and its activities is limited to that which is found in the act creating the court, and can not be predicated upon the general powers of the council because the maintenance of the court is not one of the general corporate powers of the city of Alliance, and because, too, the court as established is not one of the organs of government of the city of Alliance.

For all these reasons I advise that, in my opinion, the city auditor of Alliance may not lawfully issue his warrants upon the vouchers which have been presented to him.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

IN LUNACY PROCEEDINGS, SHERIFF MAY SERVE WARRANT ANY WHERE IN STATE BUT NOT OUTSIDE OF STATE—PROBATE JUDGE CANNOT HOLD INQUEST OUTSIDE OF COUNTY.

1. When the probate judge issues a warrant to a sheriff or some other suitable person, under section 1954 G. C., to arrest and bring before him a person alleged to be insane, such warrant is authority for such sheriff or other suitable person to make the arrest anywhere in Ohio. If made by a person other than the sheriff, the expense of such arrest should be paid under section 1981. If made by the sheriff, such sheriff may be allowed his expenses, including railroad fare and livery hire under section 2997. He may also be allowed $1.00 for serving a warrant and 8 cents per mile for mileage under section 2845 G. C.

2. A warrant issued by the probate court to the sheriff or some suitable person, under section 1954 G. C., does not authorize such person or sheriff to make the arrest outside of Ohio and there is no provision for payment of any expense incurred in making the arrest in or returning such insane person from another state.

3. The probate judge of one county in Ohio may not hold an inquest of lunacy in any county but the county in which he is elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1918.

HON. HOMER Z. BOSTWICK, Probate Judge, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 27, 1918, as follows:

> "Under sections 1954 and 1955 G. C., providing for the apprehension and examination of persons alleged to be insane, three questions present themselves for answer. The writer begs leave to submit these questions for your determination and respectfully asks an answer to each.
> 1. Has the probate judge authority to issue a warrant to the sheriff, commanding him to go into any other county of the state and arrest an alleged insane person and bring him before said probate judge for examination, said insane person having a residence in this county, but being temporarily absent?
> 2. Has the probate judge authority to bring a resident of this county back to this county for inquest of lunacy, when said resident of this county is absent from the state of Ohio and temporarily in another state?
> 3. Can the probate judge of any county in Ohio hold an inquest of lunacy outside his county, that is, in another county than the one for which he is elected?"

Section 1953 of the General Code, which provides the form of affidavit which a resident citizen of a county must file with the probate judge of the county in the commitment of an insane patient to the hospital, reads:

> "For the admission of patients to a hospital for the insane, the following proceedings shall be had. A resident citizen of the proper county must file with the probate judge of such county an affidavit, substantially as follows:

The State of Ohio, _____ County, ss:

_____the undersigned, a citizen of _____ county, Ohio, being sworn, says that he believes _____ is insane, (or, that in consequence of his insanity, his being at large is dangerous to the community.) He has a legal settlement in _____ township, in this county.

Dated this _____ day of _____, A. D. _____, (R. S. section 702.)"

Section 1954 G. C. provides:

"When such affidavit is filed, the probate judge shall forthwith issue his warrant to a suitable person, commanding him to bring the person alleged to be insane before him, on a day therein named, not more than five days after the affidavit was filed, and shall immediately issue subpoenas for such witnesses as he deems necessary, two of whom shall be reputable physicians, commanding the persons in such subpoenas named to appear before him on the return day of the warrant. If any person disputes the insanity of the party charged, the probate judge shall issue subpoenas for such person or persons as are demanded on behalf of the person alleged to be insane."

It will be noted that the probate judge may issue his warrant for the arrest of the person alleged to be insane to a "suitable person." This person may or may not be the sheriff of the county. I am of the opinion that when this warrant is issued to such suitable person, such warrant is authority for such person to take the alleged insane person into custody in any county in the state of Ohio, and the expense of arresting such insane person and bringing him before the court may be paid, if the person to whom the warrant was issued is a person other than the sheriff or deputy sheriff, under the provisions of section 1981 G. C., which section provides in part:

Section 1981.—"The probate judge shall make a complete record of all proceedings in lunacy. The cost and expenses, other than the fees of the probate judge and sheriff, to be paid under the provisions of this chapter, shall be as follows: * * * to the person other than the sheriff or deputy sheriff making the arrest, the actual and necessary expense thereof and such fees as are allowed by law to sheriffs for making arrests in criminal cases; * * *."

The statute seems to contemplate that the sheriff, if the court has issued the warrant to him, shall be paid according to the statutes relating to that office.

Secion 2845 G. C. provides in part:

Section 2845.—"For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the sheriff shall charge and collect the following fees and no more: For the service and return of the following writs and orders: * * * warrant to arrest, each person named in the writ, one dollar; * * * in addition for the fee for service and return the sheriff shall be authorized to charge on each summons, writ, order or notice, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, a fee of eight cents per mile going and returning, provided, that where more than one person is named in such writ, mileage shall be charged for the shortest distance necessary to be traveled; * * * *."

Section 2997 G. C. provides:

"In addition to the compensation and salary herein provided, the county commissioners shall make allowances quarterly to each sheriff for keeping and feeding prisoners, as provided by law, for his actual and necessary expenses incurred and expended in pursuing or transporting persons accused or convicted of crimes and offenses, in conveying and transferring persons to and from any state hospital for the insane, the institution for feeble-minded youth, Ohio hospital for epileptics, boys' industrial school, girls' industrial home, county homes for the friendless, houses of refuge, children's homes, sanitariums, convents, orphan asylums or homes, county infirmaries, and all institutions for the care, cure, correction, reformation and protection of unfortunates, and all expenses of maintaining horses and vehicles necessary to the proper administration of the duties of his office. The county commissioners shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes and subpoenaing witnesses in civil and criminal cases, and may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office. Each sheriff shall file under oath with the quarterly report herein provided a full, accurate and itemized account of all his actual and necessary expenses, including railroad fare, street car fare and livery hire mentioned in this section before they shall be allowed by the commissioners."

It will be seen from these sections that the sheriff may be allowed one dollar for serving the warrant under section 2845 and mileage of eight cents per mile.

Section 2997 provides that the commissioners "shall allow the sheriff his actual railroad fare and street car fare expended in serving civil processes" and, "may allow his necessary livery hire for the proper administration of the duties of his office." While a warrant to arrest is ordinarily not looked upon as a civil process, yet a lunacy inquest is certainly not a criminal proceeding, and I am inclined to look upon the serving of a warrant in such cases as the "serving of civil process" within the meaning of this provision of section 2997, and am therefore of the opinion that the sheriff may be allowed all expense incurred for railroad fare in bringing a person charged with lunacy before the court, by reason of this section 2997 G. C. Any livery hire necessary to bring such person before the court may also be allowed by the county commissioners under this section.

Replying to your second question, I am of the opinion that a warrant issued by the probate court of a county in this state to the sheriff or some suitable person under the provisions of 1954 G. C., would not authorize such person or sheriff to make any arrest of any alleged insane person beyond the confines of this state, neither do I know of any provision of law for the arrest and return of such insane person, nor of any provision for the payment of any expense incurred in making such arrest and returning such insane person from without the state.

In reply to your third question, beg to advise that the probate judge must exercise his jurisdiction for and in the county in which he has been elected. When he leaves that county and goes into another county, he no longer continues to retain the powers and jurisdiction of the probate judge. I am of the opinion that the probate judge of any county in Ohio is without authority, therefore, to hold inquests of lunacy outside of his own county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS—WHEN TERRITORY TRANSFERRED FROM ONE TO ANOTHER—DIVISION OF FUNDS UNDER 4692 G. C.

No particular form is provided by our school laws for the division of funds in process of collection when territory is transferred from one school district to another and an order from the county board, which instructs the county auditor to pay over "all money derived for school purposes from said territory at the December, 1918, distribution" is sufficient.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1918.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

"The county board of education of this county of Fayette recently transferred a portion of the Jefferson Township Rural School district to the Union Township Rural School district, both of said districts being entirely within the Fayette county school district.

This transfer was made by virtue of section 4692 of the General Code. The resolution passed by the county board of education provided, among other things:

'That as equitable division of the funds and indebtedness of the transferred territory, the auditor of Fayette county, Ohio, be instructed to pay to the said Union township board of education all money derived for school purposes for said territory at the December, 1918, distribution.'

The auditor insists that this division should be made in a fixed amount so that there would not remain anything for him but to pay to the Union township board of education, the amount fixed by the county board of education. The taxes on the real estate in the transferred territory can be easily ascertained, but in order to determine the amount of personal tax paid in the transferred territory it would be necessary to go over the list of persons paying personal tax in the entire school district and pick out those residing within the transferred territory. This could only be done by information obtained from persons residing therein and who knew the residents residing within the detached territory.

I would appreciate your opinion as to the manner in which this 'division of funds,' etc., should be made and whether it has been properly done in the instant case."

Section 4692, under which the transfer of territory mentioned by you was made, reads, in reference to the division of funds, as follows:

" * * * The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory, either in the treasury or in the course of collection. * * *."

In your case the board found that the equitable division of the funds of the transferred territory would be that amount of money which would be derived for school purposes from the territory so transferred. That is to say, the board in substance found that the funds which should be divided were the funds which would be collected and that there were either no funds in the treasury of the school district, or, if there were funds in the treasury of the school district, that said funds should be applied on whatever indebtedness the district had, because no order is made in reference to any indebtedness and I believe it is only fair to assume that the district perhaps had no funds on hand and no indebtedness, and that it was the desire of the board that the district to which the territory was attached be the recipient of all taxes to be raised on the property and that the district from which the territory was detached should lose nothing except taxes upon the property so transferred. Your question is, can the county board order a distribution, the amount of which is to be ascertained say when the distribution of the December taxes is made, or must the board say that a certain sum in dollars and cents is the amount that one district shall receive from the other.

To divide means to sever into two parts; to cause to be separated; or to portion out. In the above instance the board did cause the fund to be severed into two parts; the part which was collected upon the territory transferred was one part and the part which was collected on the territory which was not transferred was the other part. The board also caused the fund to be separated, that is, that the amount collected in the territory so transferred was separated into one part—and the amount collected on the territory which was not transferred was separated into the other part. The board also caused the fund to be portioned out, that is, that the amount collected from the territory transferred was portioned to the district to which the territory was attached and the amount which was collected from the territory which was not transferred remained with the district for which the levy was made. So that it seems to me that every element of the definition of "divide" or "division" is fulfilled by the action taken by the county board.

I recognize it would be far less work for the county auditor to set over just a certain amount than to be compelled to make the division according to the taxes collected, but if the above plan is an equitable plan, that is to say, if the district to which the territory was transferred should in equity receive all the taxes upon the property of such transferred territory, whether the same be real or personal, then might it not be said that to do equity in that case the county auditor is in better position than is the county board of education to make the calculation that is required that the division be carried out. At any rate, there is nothing in the statute which requires the division to be made in any particular manner and I must conclude that the plan used by the county board in your case is sufficient.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SHELBY VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT. $10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, September 28, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Shelby Village School district, in the sum of $10,000, for the purpose of funding present indebtedness of said school district.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Shelby Village School district in the issuance of the above described bonds, and find that such proceedings were in all respects in conformity to the provisions of the General Code and Constitution of Ohio, and that the bonds when duly executed will constitute valid and binding legal obligations of Shelby Village School district, payable in accordance with the terms thereof.

The bond form has not been submitted to me. I am directing a letter to the clerk requesting that such form be submitted immediately.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF HURON COUNTY, OHIO.—$25,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Huron county, Ohio, in the sum of $25,000.00, for the purpose of providing additional funds for the construction of I. C. H. No. 289, section "K," road improvement, located in Lyme and Ridgefield townships, said county.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Huron county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county to be paid according to the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF CHARITIES—GUARDIANSHIP OF WARDS TRANSFERRED TO THE OHIO SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' HOME—MAY NOT RETRANSFER CHILDREN RECEIVED FROM COUNTY, DISTRICT OR SOME PUBLIC HOME—MAY CONSENT TO ADOPTION, WHEN.

1. In cases where the Board of State Charities transfers its wards to the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, the guardianship of the board, as provided in section 1352-3 G. C., does not cease.

2. When children are transferred from a county, district or semi-public children's home, or other institution, to the Board of State Charities, there is no provision of law whereby said children may be re-transferred by the Board of State Charities to the district home or other institution from which they came.

3. The Board of State Charities is not authorized in law to give consent to adoption provided for in section 8025 G. C. But it would be authorized to give the consent under the conditions as provided for in section 8024 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 1, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of August 23, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Section 1352-3 G. C. provides that the Board of State Charities shall under certain conditions receive as its wards dependent and neglected minors and states that the Board of State Charities is ipso facto vested with the sole and exclusive guardianship of such child or children.
> To what extent does this guardianship prevail in the event of the subsequent transfer of wards of the Board of State Charities to the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home.
>
> In such case, is the Ohio Board of State Charities relieved from any further responsibility, or does said responsibility continue during the child's minority?
> Section 1352-3 G. C. provides for the transfer of children from county, district or semi-public children's homes or other institutions to the guardianship of the Ohio Board of State Charities for placement in foster homes.
> If the children thus transferred are found ineligible for placement in foster homes, is there any provision of law by which this guardianship may be vacated and such children returned to the guardianship of the institution from which they were originally transferred?
> Dependent children transferred to the Ohio Board of State Charities from county, district or semi-public children's homes are placed in foster homes for legal adoption; under such conditions, is the Ohio Board of State Charities competent to give consent as provided for in section 8025 G. C. for the legal adoption of said children?"

Your communication naturally divides itself into three different questions, the first of which may be stated as follows:

> In the event that the Board of State Charities transfers one of its wards to the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, does the guardianship of the board cease at that time and they no longer have any responsibility in reference to the child so transferred?

In answer to this question I will say that there is no direct provision of law which warrants the transfer of a ward of the Board of State Charities to the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home. In so transferring the wards the Board of State Charities undoubtedly assumes that it has authority so to do from the provisions of the section above noted, and it is my opinion that the provisions of said section are broad enough to warrant the Board of State Charities in so transferring its wards. The question then is as to whether the transfer of a ward causes the guardianship of the Board of State Charities to cease and the same pass to the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Home.

It is my opinion that the guardianship of the Board of State Charities does not so cease. It is provided in section 3252-3 G. C. that the board shall retain the guardianship of children under its charge during their minority; while the provisions of section 1933 G. C., having to do with the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, provide that said home shall be warranted in discharging the children under its care when they become sixteen years of age. This section reads as follows:

> "Unless for good cause sooner discharged all children admitted to the home shall be supported and educated until sixteen years of age. The trustees may retain such children until they arrive at the age of eighteen years, and members of a graduating class may be retained until the close of the school year."

I do not feel that the Board of State Charities would lose its guardianship over its wards when transferred to the said home any more than itwould lose its guardianship over its wards when they are placed in the care and charge of a private family, and I, therefore, answer your first question to the effect that the guardianship of the board follows the wards that are placed in the home.

In reference to this matter I might note the provisions of section 1943 G. C., which section reads as follows:

> "When pupils are discharged, the trustees through the superintendent, so far as practicable, shall keep in communication with them to enable the trustees to report to the governor and general assembly in regard to these children of the state.
> To that end the trustees or superintendent shall encourage and provide for the holding of annual reunions of the ex-pupils at the home and invite them to attend as the guests of the home and state, and shall keep a record showing the names, addresses and occupations of those who attend. Such reunions shall be held during the children's regular vacation season, when the holding thereof will not interfere with the management of the home, and the ex-pupils who attend shall be under the same control and receive the same accommodations as the children and officers of the home."

This section places a certain duty upon the trustees of the home in reference to keeping in communication with children discharged from the home, but this, I feel, would in no wise conflict with the guardianship of the said children to be exercised by the Board of State Charities.

Your second question might be phrased as follows:

> When the Board of State Charities receives children from a county, district, or semi-public children's home, or other institution, transferring the guardianship to said board, could the board by agreement, or is there any provision by which the board might again transfer said children back to the institution from which they were received?

I find no such provision of law. In fact the provisions of section 1352-3 G. C. seem to infer that when the board has assumed jurisdiction over children it must make provision for them notwithstanding the fact that they may not be eligible for placement in private homes. For example, this section provides that > "The board shall thereupon ipso facto become vested with the sole and exclusive guardianship of such child or children"

That is, when a child is transferred from a home to the board the sole and exclusive guardianship of such child passes to the board. This section further provides that when necessary,

> "any children so committed or transferred to the board may be maintained by it in a suitable place until a proper home is found."

It further provides that > "Children from whom on account of some physical or mental defect it is impracticable to find good, free homes, may be so placed by the board upon agreement to pay reasonable board therefor not to exceed $3.50 per week."

From these provisions it seems to have been the intention of the legislature to give full control and guardianship over the children, when transferred, to the board, no difference what their physical or mental status might be. From these provisions which seem to negative the fact that the children might be returned to the institution from which they came, and from the fact that there is no provision of law whatever made for such re-transfer of the children, it is my opinion that the board could not transfer children who have come under its jurisdiction back to the home from which they originally came.

Your third question is as to whether the Ohio Board of State Charities is competent to give consent in the matter of the adoption of children as provided for in section 8025 G. C., which section reads as follows:

> "When such child is an inmate of an orphan asylum, or children's home, organized under the laws of this state, and has been previously abandoned by its parents or guardians, or voluntarily surrendered by its parents or guardians to the trustees or directors of such asylum, or children's home, then the written consent of the president, or in his absence, or disability, the vice-president, of the board of trustees or directors of such asylum, or children's home, shall be received by the probate court in place of the consent of the parents or guardians."

It is to be noted from a reading of this section that it is only the trustees or directors of an orphans' asylum or children's home organized under the laws of this state who are given the authority to consent to the adoption of a child. I do not believe that the Board of State Charities is of such a nature that it could be brought within the terms "orphans' asylum" or "children's home," and, therefore, it could not give its consent to the adoption of a child under the provisions of section 8025 G. C.; but in connection with your question 1 desire to call attention to the provisions of section 8024 G. C., which section reads as follows:

> "Any proper person not married, or a husband and wife jointly, may petition the probate court of their proper county, or the probate court of the county in which the child resides, for leave to adopt a minor child not theirs by birth, and for a change of the name of such child. A written consent must be given to such adoption by the child, if of the age of fourteen years, and by each of his or her living parents who is not hopelessly insane, intemperate, or has not abandoned such child, or if there are no such parents, or if the parents are unknown, or have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then by the legal guardian, or if there is no such guardian, then by a suitable person appointed by the court to act in the proceedings as the next friend of the child."

We note here that if there are no parents living, or if the parents are unknown, or if they have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then the consent may be given by the legal guardian of the child. It is my opinion that the board becomes the legal guardian of a child transferred to it under the provisions of section 1352-3 G. C., and therefore if the conditions obtain as set out in section 8024 G. C., then the board might give its consent, it being the sole and exclusive guardian of the child and being its legal guardian. But if it has parents living who are not hopelessly insane or intemperate, or who have not abandoned the child, and they are not unknown, then the parents would have to give the consent to the adoption of the child, even though it was at the time under the jurisdiction of the Board of State Charities.

In answering this question I might refer to the provisions of section 1672 G. C. I do not believe that the legislature had in mind the Board of State Charities when it used the term "association, corporation or individual" as found in said section, and therefore am of the opinion that the provisions of this section do not authorize the Board of State Charities to consent to the adoption of a child.

In connection with the answers given to your first questions, I will call attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Mr. Turner, found in Volume II, Opinions for the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 1038. I think Mr. Turner's opinion was correct and that the jurisdiction of the Board of State Charities is at all times to be modified by the jurisdiction given the juvenile court as set out in the opinion above referred to.

In passing I might say that in considering the question of guardianship in this opinion I am merely referring to the guardianship of the child and not of the estate of a child. I note this distinction because section 1946-3 G. C. makes the superintendent of the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home the guardian of the estate of all minors under the age of sixteen years, duly admitted and residing in said home, providing the father is deceased and the child has no other legal guardian.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—AUTHORITY TO BORROW MONEY TO COMPLETE ROAD ON DEFAULT OF CONTRACTOR.

1. When the county commissioners have issued bonds to the amount equivalent to the estimated cost and expense of a road improvement, and it is afterwards ascertained that, owing to the fact of the failure of the original contractor to complete the improvement, it will cost more than the estimated cost and expense, the county commissioners are authorized to issue and sell additional bonds up to an amount which equals the increased cost as estimated by the county surveyor.

2. If the county commissioners recover, from the contractor and his surety, the difference between the contract price and the total cost and expense of the improvement, or any part of the same, it would be placed in the special fund, from which, under section 5654 G. C., it would be transferred to the sinking fund or the debt fund of the county, to be used in the redemption of the outstanding bonds of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of August 15, 1918, in which you enclose a letter received by you from the auditor of Columbiana county, Ohio. His letter reads as follows:

> "Please advise as to the following:
> Columbiana county issued bonds to the amount of $39,500.00 to construct the Thomas road; contract was let to M. P. Connelly & Son. They partially completed their contract and failed. The county commissioners then took over the road and are endeavoring to complete the contract, but it will require probably an amount in excess of $8,000.00 above the amount the bonds were sold for to complete the road.
> Have the county commissioners a right to borrow money for this purpose, with the expectation of collecting it in the future from the bonding company?"

You request that I render an opinion upon the question submitted by the county auditor. My opinion must be based mainly upon the provisions of section 6929 G. C. (107 O. L. 101); but before noting the provisions of this section, I will call attention to other sections which are to some extent, at least, related to and connected with section 6929.

Section 6911 G. C. (107 O. L. 96) provides that when the board of commissioners has determined that any road shall be constructed, it "at the same time shall order the county surveyor to make such surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications as may be required for such improvement." So it will be seen that before the improvement is begun, the county surveyor must make an estimate of the cost and expense of the proposed improvement.

Section 6919 G. C. (at p. 98 of 107 O. L.) provides in part as follows:

> "The compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement shall be apportioned and paid in any one of the following methods, as set forth in petition:" (Here are four methods set out, any one of which may be set forth in the petition and adopted by the county commissioners).

I call particular attention to the fact that under this section it is not the estimated cost and expense of the improvement which is to be borne by the township, the county and abutting property owners in certain proportions, but the total cost and expense that is to be apportioned among these different units and paid for according to the method directed.

The next thing I will consider is how the county and the township make provision for their respective shares of the cost and expense of an improvement.

Section 6926 G. C. (107 O. L. 100) provides as follows:

> "The proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the county shall be paid out of any road improvement fund available therefor. For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the county's proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of constructing, reconstructing, improving, maintaining, and repairing roads under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy annually a tax not exceeding two mills upon each dollar of the taxable property of said county. * * *."

Section 6927 G. C. (107 O. L. 101) reads as follows:

"For the purpose of providing by taxation a fund for the payment of the proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by the township or townships interested, in which such road may be in whole or part situated, the county commissioners are hereby authorized to levy a tax not exceeding three mills in any one year upon all the taxable property of such township or townships. * * *."

Under these two sections the county's as well as the township's share of the cost and expense of an improvement may be paid from a fund to be created by the levying of a tax by the county commissioners, or the county's share may be paid from any fund available therefor.

Section 6929 (107 O. L. 101) makes provision that the county commissioners may anticipate the collection of the taxes which are levied by them from time to time and issue bonds to take care of the cost and expense of an improvement. The provisions of this section, in so far as they relate to the matter at hand, are as follows:

'Section 6929.—The county commissioners, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments, or any part thereof, may whenever, in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said county in any amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, costs, and expenses of such improvement. Such bonds shall state for what purpose they are issued and shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts and to mature at such times as the commissioners shall determine, subject to the provision however that said bonds shall mature in not more than ten years. * * *."

Let us keep in mind now, in placing a construction upon this section, that the township, the county and the abutting property owners are obligated to pay the total cost and expense and not merely the estimated cost and expense of an improvement, and that the county and township would be authorized, if the money were already in the fund, to pay the total cost and expense therefrom, whether said total cost and expense should be less or more than the estimated cost and expense of the improvement.

So if Columbiana county and the township interested in the improvement under consideration had money in the funds which are created by a levy of taxes, there is no question whatever that the county and township would be authorized to take the additional $8,000.00, required for the completion of the improvement, from these respective funds. However, from the communication of the county auditor I take it that there is no money in these funds which can be used for the completion of this improvement by the county commissioners.

Under section 6929, supra, the bonds which are issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes are to be issued in an amount "not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, costs, and expenses of such improvement."

Here, now, is where the difficulty arises. The county surveyor made an estimate of the cost and expense of the improvement. The contract was let for an amount not greater than the estimated cost and expense, but owing to the fact that the county commissioners were compelled to complete this contract under force account, the total cost and expense is going to exceed the estimated cost and expense. Under these circumstances, can the county commissioners issue bonds to take care of the increased cost and expense?

If we place a fairly strict construction upon the language used in section 6929, it is doubtful whether the county commissioners could issue bonds in excess of the estimated cost and expense of the improvement as made by the county surveyor. But I do not feel that such a construction should be placed upon this section. The object of the legislature evidently was to prevent the county commissioners from issuing bonds in an amount greater than would be necessary for completing the improvement, and inasmuch as the contract could not be awarded for a greater sum than the estimated cost and expense of the improvement, it was undoubtedly thought best by the legislature that the county commissioners should be limited in their power to issue bonds to the estimated cost and expense of the improvement. But as said, the primary thought no doubt was to prevent the county commissioners from issuing bonds in excess of the amount which would provide for the actual cost and expense.

The county surveyor evidently now estimates that it will cost an additional $8,000.00 to complete this improvement. This would be the only basis upon which the county auditor could make a statement that it will cost approximately $8,000.00 over and above the original contract price to complete it.

Hence it is my opinion that if the county surveyor will report to the county commissioners that in his opinion it will require $8,000.00 over and above the amount heretofore realized from the sale of bonds, the commissioners would have authority in law to issue an additional $8,000.00 of bonds under the same terms and conditions as the former bonds were issued; for it must be borne in mind that taxes will have to be levied to take care of the total cost and expense of the improvement, which would include this $8,000.00 as well as the former sum, and if taxes must be levied, bonds may be issued in anticipation of the collection of the taxes.

I have not taken into consideration, in the above reasoning, that the original contractor gave a bond for the faithful performance of his contract. If this improvement is fully completed and the county commissioners recover from the original contractor and his surety, the difference between the contract price and the total cost and expense of the improvement, the sum so realized would be placed in this special fund, for the completion of the road, and as it would no longer be needed for that purpose, the same would be transferred, under section 5654 G. C., to the sinking fund or the debt fund of the county, for use in the redemption of the bonds which had been issued by the county commissioners.

In passing I might suggest that the highway laws as they pertain to the jurisdiction of the county commissioners are very uncertain in reference to the course which should be followed by the county commissioners in those cases wherein the original contractor fails to carry out his contract. While the laws pertaining to the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner are perfectly clear in reference to conditions such as suggested, yet there is no provision whatever made as to how the county commissioners should proceed under such circumstances. We must decide this entirely by analogy to other provisions of the statutes. The county commissioners of Columbiana county, when the original contractor failed, proceeded to complete the contract under force account. The only provisions of the statute which would warrant the county commissioners in so proceeding are found in section 6948-1 G. C. which reads as follows:

> "If the county commissioners deem it for the best interest of the public they may, in lieu of constructing such improvement by contractor, proceed to construct the same by force account."

The provisions of this section evidently were not especially intended to apply to a case wherein the original contractor failed. The intention of the legislature in enacting this section evidently was to give the county commissioners in the matter of a road improvement the right to proceed in one of two different ways; either to proceed to advertise and award the contract under the general provisions of our statutes or to construct the improvement under force account. But I am of the opinion that courts would hold by analogy that in those cases wherein the original contractor failed the county commissioners might proceed either to again advertise for bids and award the contract for completing the improvement to the lowest responsible bidder, or they might proceed under the provisions of section 6948-1 G. C. to complete the improvement by force account, as the county commissioners did in the matter now under consideration.

In passing there is a second matter to which I desire to call attention and that is the course which the county commissioners ought to pursue in those cases in which the original contractor fails to complete his contract and there is not sufficient money in the fund with which to complete the same. It is my opinion that the county commissioners by a proper resolution should order the county surveyor to make an estimate of the cost and expense of completing the improvement over and above the amount which was realized from the sale of the bonds for the improvement. The county surveyor should make a report to the county commissioners of his estimate. The county commissioners should then approve his estimate and proceed under section 6929 to issue the additional bonds necessary to complete the improvement, not in excess, however, of the estimate made by the county surveyor. It will be immediately noticed that this procedure is not outlined by statute but must be drawn by analogy from the provisions of the statutes having to do with the construction of roads by county commissioners.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF TRUMBULL COUNTY, OHIO.—$10,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In Re: Bonds of Trumbull county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000.00 in anticipation of the collection of taxes to pay the respective shares of said county and of Brookfield township of the cost and expense of improving the Warren-Sharon I. C. H. No. 329 road under the provisions of section 6909-6956 G. C.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Trumbull county, Ohio, of the board of township trustees of Brookfield township in said county, and of other officers, relating to the above issue of bonds and to the improvement for which said bonds are issued. I find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind and I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WEST UNITY VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, WILLIAMS COUNTY, OHIO.—$80,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 2, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—.

In Re: Bonds of West Unity Village School district, Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $80,000.00, for the stated purpose of building, enlarging and improving school facilities in said school district (consisting of purchasing a site and building and furnishing a new school building.)

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of West Unity Village School district, and as a result of such examination I regret to say that I am unable to approve the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds. This issue of bonds is one by the board of education of the above named school district under the assumed authority of sections 7625 to 7628, inclusive, of the General Code, on a vote of the electors of the school district, and this issue of bonds is disapproved specifically for the reason that the resolution of the board of education under date of June 25, 1918, providing for the submission of the bond issue proposition to the vote of the electors is not legally sufficient for the purpose. Under the provisions of section 7625 General Code before a board of education can submit to the electors of the school district the proposition of issuing bonds for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting a school house or houses, to complete a partially built school house, to enlarge, repair or furnish a school house, or to purchase real estate for playground for children, or do any or all of such things, such board of education must determine that for the proper accommodation of the schools of the school district, it is necessary to do one or more of the things mentioned in the statute, and that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of sections 7629 and 7630 are not sufficient to accomplish such purpose. Within a certain stated limitation as to amount a board of education is authorized under the provisions of section 7629 General Code to issue bonds for the purpose of obtaining or improving school property without the vote of the electors, and under the provisions of section 7625 General Code before such board of education can provide for an issue of bonds under this section and those immediately following, it must affirmatively appear by the determination and finding of the board of education that the funds at the disposal of the board or that can be raised under the provisions of section 7629 General Code are not sufficient for the purpose. In other words, this determination and finding by the board of education is jurisdictional to the exercise of the power of the board of education to provide for an issue of bonds on a vote of the electors under the provisions of sections 7625 to 7628, inclusive. The resolution adopted by the board of education of West Unity Village School district providing for the submission of this bond issue proposition to the vote of the electors of the school district contains no such determination or finding, and for that reason fails to show any authority in the board of education to submit the question to the vote of the electors.

In addition to the defect in the proceedings above noted an examination of the transcript discloses one other defect sufficient to negative any authority on your part to purchase this issue of bonds at the present time. The financial statement of the school district attached to and made a part of the transcript shows that the school district now has an outstanding bonded indebtedness of $8,100.00. It likewise appears from the statement of the clerk of the board of education that the school district has no board of sinking fund commissioners. Under the provisions of section 7614 General Code, however, inasmuch as it appears that the school district has an existing bonded indebtedness, it is the mandatory duty of the board of education of the school district to provide for the management of the sinking fund of the school district by a board of sinking fund commissioners, to be appointed or designated in the manner required by said section, and under the provisions of section 7619 General Code the board of education is required to offer the proposed issue of bonds to such board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district before otherwise disposing of said bonds; while under the provisions of section 1465-58 General Code you are authorized to purchase only such school bonds as shall first have been offered to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district and by such board rejected. Were there no other defect in the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds I would not be disposed to disapprove the issue on the ground just stated, without affording the board of education an opportunity of providing for the appointment and qualification of a board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district and of offering the proposed issue to such board.

In conclusion I note two other defects in the proceedings which, though perhaps not of such nature as in themselves to defeat the validity of the bonds, are sufficient to show that the statutory provisions relating to school districts and legislation necessary to the issue of school bonds were not correctly appreciated and applied. In the first place, I note that the legislation and proceedings of the board of education relating to the issue of these bonds up to the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds pursuant to the vote of the electors were carried on in the name of "West Unity Special School District." This is manifestly erroneous for the reason that there is now no such classification of school districts as special school districts, inasmuch as all the school districts of the state are now either city school districts, village school districts, rural school districts or county school districts (See section 4679 General Code). The resolution of the board of education providing for this issue of bonds in some places speaks of the school district as "West Unity Village School District" and in other places as "West Unity Rural School District." In this connection it is sufficient to observe that the legal name of the school district is "West Unity Village School District."

The other objection that I have in mind with respect to the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds is the stated and declared purpose of the issue, as set out in the resolution providing for the submission of the bond issue proposition to the vote of the electors of the school district. In this resolution it is recited that the board of education has determined that for the proper accommodation of the pupils of said school district "it is necessary to improve the building and property of said school district," and the resolution provides for the submission of the question of issuing bonds of said school district in an amount of $80,000.00 "for the purpose of building, enlarging and improving school facilities." The purpose stated is exceedingly indefinite, and it is sufficient to say in this connection that an issue of bonds under the authority of section 7625 General Code should be for one or more of the specific purposes mentioned in said section.

By reason of the defect first above noted herein I am compelled to advise you that the proposed issue of bonds of this school district is invalid and that you should not purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF SALE OF CERTAIN ABANDONED CANAL LANDS IN NEWARK, OHIO, TO THE PHARIS TIRE AND RUBBER COMPANY OF NEWARK, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 3, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of June 5, 1918, in which you enclose record of proceedings (in duplicate) leading up to the sale of certain abandoned canal lands in Newark, O., to The Pharis Tire and Rubber Company of Newark. These are proceedings had under an act passed by the General Assembly on March 21, 1917.

After a careful examination of said act, it is my opinion that the option rests with the lessees of said abandoned canal lands to surrender their leases and then receive a deed from the State of Ohio on condition that they pay into the treasury of the state the appraised value of said lands as fixed by the superintendent of public works.

The proceedings had in reference to the sale of a part of said canal lands to The Pharis Tire and Rubber Company seem to be regular and in conformity with the provisions of said special act and I therefore approve the same and consent to the sale of the lands therein described.

I am of the opinion that when said The Pharis Tire and Rubber Company surrenders the lease which it now holds from the state and pays the sum of six thousand dollars, the company would be entitled to a deed from the state.

I am forwarding said record of proceedings to the Governor of Ohio for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES—MARSHAL—ON COMMITMENT IN STATE CASE TO WORKHOUSE IN ANOTHER COUNTY.

Where defendants are committed in a state case by the mayor of a village in one county to a workhouse in another county, by reason of an agreement under section 12384, the marshal may be paid the fees prescribed by section 12835 of the General Code. Special provision having been made by statute for fees in such cases, the decision of the court of appeals in the cases of Haserodt vs. State, 6 Ohio App., 654, has no application. These fees are paid, as provided by section 12385, out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners.

Section 12385 does not authorize the payment of any other fees in the case to the marshal, nor any fees to the mayor for his services in the case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1918.

HON. C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of September 14, 1918, as follows:

"We have had several cases under the so-called 'Tramp Law,' section 13409, General Code. In four cases defendants were sentenced to the Columbus workhouse by the village mayor. The prosecutions were all under the statute and not under ordinance.

In view of the decision of the court of appeals, as announced in circular No. 347, September 19, 1917, by the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, holding that a chief of police is not entitled to fees in state cases, the question arises whether our village marshal is entitled to fees for transporting these prisoners to the workhouse.

The bureau plainly states that no fees can be taxed for either a chief of police or marshal.

1. Does this decision in any way affect the fees prescribed by statute for conveying to workhouse?

2. The offense being under the statute (section 13409) and not under an ordinance, can the marshal be allowed the fees prescribed by section 4132, General Code? And can they be paid out of the county treasury? Or, must they be paid from the village treasury? Or from the township treasury? You will note the mayor here is acting as ex-officio justice of the peace.

3. The defendants, in the aforesaid cases, having been convicted, and sentenced and transported to the workhouse, can the county commissioners, in any event, allow the fees of mayor and marshal, to be paid from the county treasury?

4. There being no constable available, if the mayor, acting as ex-officio justice of the peace, should appoint the marshal as special constable for that particular case, would the marshal be entitled to the fees of constable, and could the commissioners allow and pay them from the county treasury?"

The decision in the case of Haserodt vs. State, 6 Ohio App. Rep., 354, had reference to the general provisions of the statute regarding the fees of chiefs of police in state cases, and only affected the fees of marshals in state cases in so far as these fees were based upon the same general provisions of the statute. However, special provision is made in the statutes for fees in connection with the transportation of prisoners in such a case as submitted by you.

Section 12384 of the General Code provides:

"The commissioners of a county, or the council of a municipality, wherein there is no workhouse, may agree with the city council, or other authority having control of the workhouse of a city in any other county, or with the board of district workhouses having a workhouse, upon what terms and conditions persons convicted of misdemeanors, or of the violation of an ordinance of such municipality having no workhouse, may be received into such workhouse under sentence thereto. The county commissioners, or the council of a municipality, are authorized to pay the expenses incurred under such agreement out of the general fund of the county or municipality, upon the certificate of the proper officer of such workhouse."

I take it that some agreement exists under this provision of law by virtue of which the prisoners referred to in your communication are committed to the Columbus workhouse by the village mayor.

Section 12385 G. C. provides:

"The sheriff, or other officer, transporting a person to such workhouse shall have the following fees therefor: Six cents per mile for himself, going and returning, and five cents per mile for transporting each convict, and five cents per mile going and coming for the services of each guard, to be allowed as in penitentiary cases, the number of miles to be computed by the usual routes of travel, to be paid in state cases out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners, and, in cases for the violation of the ordinances of a municipality by such municipality on the order of the council thereof."

It will be noticed that this section makes specific provision for the fees of the transporting officer. There is nothing indefinite about it like was found in the general provisions of the statutes regarding the fees of chiefs of police and marshals in the case of Haserodt vs. State, supra, and therefore this section is not disturbed by that decision. However, attention might be called here to the fact that this statute only covers cases like you present, viz., those where the prisoner is being transported from one county to a workhouse in another county.

Section 4132 G. C., to which you refer in your second question, reads as follows:

"The officer having the execution of the final sentence of a court, magistrate, or mayor, shall cause the convict to be conveyed to the workhouse as soon as practicable after the sentence is pronounced, and all officers shall be paid the fees therefor allowed by law for similar services in other cases. Such fees shall be paid, when the sentence is by the court, from the county treasury, and when by the magistrate, from the township treasury."

This is a general provision concerning the fees of an officer for conveying prisoners to the workhouse, and is without application to the situation you present, in view of the provisions of section 12385, above set out. It will be noted, too, that since the prosecutions to which you refer are made under state statute, the fees of the marshal are to be paid out of the general revenue fund of the county on the allowance of the county commissioners, as provided in section 12385 G. C.

Answering your third question, beg to advise that while in such cases the fees of the marshal for transporting a prisoner to a workhouse in another county are to be paid out of the county treasury, this section does not warrant the payment to the marshal or the mayor of any other fees in connection with the prosecution. This department has heretofore held, as the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices has ruled, following the case of State vs. Haserodt, supra, that the marshal can collect no fees in state cases, and in prosecutions such as those set out by you this would be true. The fees of the mayor are to be governed by the other provisions of the statute the same as in other state cases.

I take it that your fourth question is asked with a view to securing the payment of fees to the marshal for transporting prisoners to the workhouse in such cases as you refer to, and on the assumption that no provision is directly made by statute therefor. In view of the provisions of section 12385, to which reference has heretofore been made, it would seem unnecessary to give consideration to this last question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES—PROBATE JUDGE—APPROVING BOND UNDER SECTION 5906.

No fees may be charged by the probate judge for approving sureties on a bond under section 5906 for the manufacture or storage of explosives. Neither is such approval of the probate judge required to be entered upon the journal of the court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 4, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of recent date as follows:

> "May a probate judge legally tax any fees for approving sureties on a bond under section 5906 G. C., or any other section of the law that states he may or shall approve such sureties? Is such approval an official action required to be entered upon the journal of the court, and, if so, is same to be indexed?"

Section 5906 of title 2, chapter 7, relative to explosives, reads:

> "A person, partnership or corporation shall not manufacture such explosives or store more than one hundred pounds thereof without giving bond in the sum of five thousand dollars in each county in which such explosives are manufactured or stored, to the county commissioners of such county, with such surety or sureties as is approved by the judge of the probate or common pleas court of such county, conditioned for the payment of all damages that may be caused to persons or property by reason of an explosion of any of such substances and without filing with the chief inspector of workshops and factories a sworn statement that such bond has been approved and filed."

The fees of the probate judge for the services rendered by him are set out in sections 1601 and 1602 of the General Code. In neither of these sections can be found any fee for such service as the judge performs under section 5906, above set out.

Section 1603 provides:

> "For other services for which compensation is not otherwise provided by law, the probate judge shall be allowed the same fees as are allowed the clerk of the court of common pleas for similar services."

The fees of the clerk of the common pleas court, to which reference is made in section 1603, just quoted, are provided for in sections 2900 and 2901 G. C. I can find no provision in these sections covering any such service as is rendered by the probate judge under section 5906 G. C. It is true that section 2900 provides that the clerk shall receive "for taking undertaking, bond or recognizance, twenty-five cents." It has been suggested that this service is perhaps similar to that rendered by the probate judge under section 5906, but I am not inclined to this view. It seems to me that the service of the clerk, to which reference is made in section 2900, is quite different from that rendered by the probate judge, and after careful examination of the statutes I can find no provision authorizing the payment to the probate judge of any fee for his approval of the bond under section 5906 G. C., and must therefore conclude that no fee may be allowed him for this service.

Answering your further inquiry as to whether or not the approval of the bond under section 5906 is such an official action as should be placed upon the journal, Section 1594 G. C. provides in part:

> "Section 1594.—The following books shall be kept by the probate court: * * * *.
> "5. A journal in which shall be kept minutes of official business transacted in the probate court, or by the probate judge, in civil actions and proceedings.
> "11. A record of bonds, in which shall be recorded bonds of executors, administrators, guardians, trustees and assignees which have been taken and approved by him."

I do not believe the approval of the explosive bond under section 5906 should be entered on either of the above records, nor do I know of any other provision requiring or authorizing any record of such action to be made. The approval of the bond itself would seem a sufficient record of such act by the probate judge.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF CLAYTON TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, PERRY COUNTY, OHIO.—$5,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

> In Re: Bonds of Clayton Township Rural School district, Perry county, Ohio, in the sum of $5,000.00, under the authority of section 7630-1 General Code, for the purpose of constructing and equipping a new school building to replace building destroyed by fire.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Clayton Township Rural School district, Perry county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school distrtict, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—LIABLE TO CONTRACTOR FOR OBSTRUCTION OF WORK, WHEN—HOW MAY BE ADJUSTED.

Where a municipality enters into a contract for the improvement of a street and then fails to permit the contractor to proceed with said improvement according to the terms of the contract, said contractor would have a claim against the municipality for damages on account of said failure. To adjust this claim for damages the council of the municipality by ordinance or resolution may authorize the city solicitor or the director of public service to adjust said claim for an amount specified by council in its ordinance or resolution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of August 29, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "We are enclosing herewith several communications between this office and Mr. W. F. MacQueen, city solicitor of Niles, Ohio, and respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:
> May the $3,200.00 additional legally be paid the contractor?"

To said letter a number of communications are attached which are too long to quote in full, but, briefly stated, the facts upon which you desire my opinion are as follows:

On September 2, 1916 the director of public service of the city of Niles entered into a contract with James DeJute, for the improvement of a part of South Main street of said city. The contract provided that the work was to be completed in the spring of 1917, one clause of the contract reading:

> "It is further agreed that the necessary fill shall be made immediately after the completion of this contract, and that the balance of said contract shall not be performed until after the weather conditions permit the completion thereof in the spring of 1917."

The necessary fill was made in the fall of 1916, but it afterwards developed that the county commissioners of the county in which Niles is located began the construction of a bridge located upon this same street and upon that part of the street which was to be improved under the terms of the contract. This made it impossible for the contractor to carry out the conditions of the contract and the director of public service of the city of Niles requested the contractor to discontinue his work until after the bridge was completed. This continued until June 1, 1918.

Owing to the increased cost of labor and material, the contractor objected to proceeding with the improvement under the consideration set out in the contract. The officers of the city of Niles were willing that the contractor should be given an additional consideration and the council upon motion authorized the director of public service to enter into a supplemental contract, by virtue of which the contractor was to receive thirty-two hundred dollars additional compensation. This supplemental contract was entered into and under it the contractor proceeded to complete the improvement according to the plans and specifications upon which the original contract was let.

The question now is as to whether the city of Niles under the circumstances is warranted in law in paying said contractor the additional sum of thirty-two hundred dollars, as provided in the supplemental contract. I am of the opinion that the director of public service had no authority in law to enter into the supplemental contract with the contractor.

You suggest in a communication to the city solicitor of Niles, under date August 29, 1918, that the director of public service had no authority to enter into the supplemental contract with Mr. DeJute, for the reason that it did not comply with the provisions of section 4328 G. C. This section provides in short that the director of public service enter into no contract in which the consideration exceeds five hundred dollars, unless such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council.

In the case submitted by you, the council gave authority to the director of public service to enter into the supplemental contract, but only upon motion, and not by ordinance. However, it is my opinion that section 4328 G. C. does not apply to the contract under consideration. This contract was a supplemental one and section 4328 applies only to original contracts or agreements. This was distinctly held by the court in Burke vs. Cleveland, 6 O. N. P. (N. S.) 225. The decision of the court of common pleas was affirmed without report by the supreme court of the state and hence is entitled to considerable weight. Notwithstanding the fact that the supplemental contract did not run counter to the provisions of section 4328 G. C., it is my view that the same is void and of no effect for the reason that no certificate had been made by the proper municipal officer, stating that the money required to carry out the obligations of the contract was in the treasury of the city of Niles. For this reason we can entirely lay aside the consideration of this supplemental contract. The contractor could not recover by virtue of the contract; neither has he, or the city, any rights arising from the same.

You further ask whether there is any method under and by virtue of which the city of Niles could legally pay the contractor for damages he suffered because of the failure of the city to deliver the street to him at the time provided for in the contract. The contractor undoubtedly had the right to assume that he would be given possession of the street and be permitted to carry out the terms of his contract in the fall of 1916 and the spring of 1917.

The city of Niles made a specific and definite contract with DeJute, to the effect that he might perform the obligations of the contract to be performed by him in the fall of 1916 and the spring of 1917. If the city had desired this part of the obligation dependent upon any other conditions whatsoever, it should have embodied such stipulations in the contract.

It is true the city of Niles did not directly interfere with the progress of the work by the contractor. This interference was caused by the acts of a third party, namely, the commissioners of the county of Trumbull. Notwithstanding this, I am of the opinion that the city of Niles is responsible for the acts of the county commissioners. This street was in the possession of the city. The contractor had no authority whatever over this street and he could not be held, like the city itself, to be bound by the acts of the county commissioners.

In support of this view I will call attention to a decision or two of the courts.

In The Ross Road Machine Co. vs. M. S. Forbus, 23 W. L. B. 217, the court rendered a decision in reference to a matter very similar to the one under consideration, the decision being rendered by the superior court of Cincinnati. In this case the plaintiff, the Ross Road Machine Co., entered into a contract with the defendant, M. S. Forbus, to perform all the labor in the rolling required on certain streets in Cincinnati. Mr. Forbus had entered into a contract with the city of Cincinnati for the improvement of said streets and the plaintiff then entered into a contract with Mr. Forbus to do all work necessary for the rolling of the streets. The plaintiff rolled a number of the streets but the defendant prevented it from rolling certain other streets provided for in the contract between the plaintiff and defendant.

The plaintiff brought action against the defendant for damages due to a breach of contract. The defendant set up, by way of answer to the petition > "that without fault on the part of the defendant, but solely through the fault of the city of Cincinnati, they (the defendants) have been unable to perform his said separate contract for the improvement of Vine street, and that no rolling has been required or done by plaintiff or defendants on said street."

In other words, the city had intervened and had prevented Mr. Forbes from improving Vine street, and inasmuch as the same had interfered with him, he was not able to carry out his part of the contract with the plaintiff, The Ross Road Machine Co., in so far as the contract applied to Vine street. The plaintiff in the case demurred to the answer of Mr. Forbus on the ground that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court held the demurrer to be well taken and sustained the same. It held that Mr. Forbus had entered into an absolute agreement to employ plaintiff to roll Vine street and that, impliedly at least, such agreement included an agreement that the city would allow such contract to be performed, and if the city did not do so, it became a breach of contract upon the part of the defendant. The court held that if the defendant had not desired to stand responsible for a possible interference upon the part of the city, he ought to have embodied such a condition in his contract.

This case is very similar to the one we are considering. The city of Niles entered into an absolute agreement with Mr. DeJute, for the improvement of a certain street. Over this street both the city and the county have certain rights. If the city desired to relieve itself from any acts which might be performed by the county, in reference to said street, it ought to have embodied such a condition in the terms of its agreement with Mr. DeJute.

I will also direct your attention to the case of Pennsylvania Rd. Co. vs. Reichert, 58 Md. 261. In this case the Pennsylvania Rd. Co. had agreed with Casper Reichert to construct for him a ditch or trestle which would connect with the Cumberland & Pennsylvania Rd. Co. It afterwards developed that the Cumberland & Pennsylvania Rd. Co. refused consent to the Pennsylvania Rd. Co., to construct said trestle under the terms of its agreement.

Reichert brought action for damages against the Pennsylvania Rd. Co. The defendant defended on the ground that it was prevented from carrying out the terms of its contract because of interference upon the part of the third party. The court held this defense not to be well taken; that the Pennsylvania Rd. Co. had entered into an unconditional agreement or undertaking to build said trestle and that it was bound so to do or be answerable in damages for not so doing; that if it had desired to be relieved from its undertaking or agreement upon certain conditions, those conditions should have been embodied within the terms of its contract with Mr. Reichert.

Hence from the above and other decisions which might be noted, I am of the opinion that the city of Niles is answerable in the case submitted to me, for the acts of the commissioners of said county. It seems to be agreed upon the part of the city of Niles and the contractor that he was greatly delayed in the performance of his contract on account of the acts of the county commissioners; that in the meantime the price of labor and material necessary for the improvement of said street had greatly increased and that therefore the contractor was damaged because of the fact that the commissioners interfered with his completing the contract according to its terms and specifications and that he was damaged without any fault whatever upon his part. If this be true, the conclusion evidently is that the contractor has a right of action against the city for damages suffered by him in the improvement of said street.

That the contractor would have a right of action against the city, if he were unreasonably delayed in performing the part of the contract to be performed by him, seems to be clearly held by the court of appeals for Delaware county in City of Delaware vs. The Metropolitan Construction Co., 21 C. C. (N. S.) 137. The first branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "Whether or not a contractor was hindered, to his damage, in the completion of a street improvement by the action of the city engineer in suspending the work at times and by obstruction of the street by the building of a bridge and failure to cause railway tracks to be removed, are questions for the jury under the evidence, and a finding by the jury in favor of the contractor upon such an issue will not be disturbed by a reviewing court where not manifestly against the weight of the evidence."

In the opinion on p. 142 the court say:

> "The ground of recovery as claimed by said contractor was based upon the allegations in said amended second cause of action of the defendant in error that said contractor was unnecessarily and wrongfully obstructed, delayed and hindered in the prosecution of carrying out said contract within a reasonable time by the action of the plaintiff in error, and that as a result thereof said contractor suffered loss and damage as claimed in said cause of action. It need scarcely be remarked that the rights of the parties hereto are to be governed by the provisions of said contract, of which the specifications attached thereto form a part. As is usual in such cases, the specifications point out the manner in which the work of the improvement shall be done, the kind of material to be furnished and the prices to be paid therefor, and in this instance no time limit was named for the completion of said improvement. One of the streets to be improved was represented to be one of the main thoroughfares of said city and it was undoubtedly the intent and purpose of the contracting parties that the work thereon should be done in a reasonable time after the work was commenced to avoid inconvenience to the traveling public and other resulting disadvantages to the inhabitants of said city. It is sufficient to say that in the absence of a time limit being fixed for the performance of the contract the implication is that a reasonable time for performance is intended."

Further on in the opinion (p. 143) the court lays down the following principle of law:

"As already stated, no time limit having been fixed in said contract for the completion of said work, said city would have reason to expect that said improvement would be completed within a reasonable time, and in the absence of intervening causes over which the contractor had no control, the contractor would be liable for a breach of such contract, and, on the other hand a corresponding obligation would rest upon said city not to unreasonably delay the contractor in the prosecution of his work, for one party to a contract may make it impossible to perform the contract, or may delay the performance, or if a contractor has himself suffered damage by reason of such delay he may recover damages."

The case I am considering is considerably stronger to the effect that the contractor would have a right of action for damages against the city because of the fact that in this case the contract specifically provided that Mr. DeJute was to complete it in the spring of 1917, while in Delaware vs. Construction Co., supra, there was no time limit set out in the contract.

If the city is liable for damages to the contractor, the question then arises as to whether the city might adjust this claim for damages and settle the same amicably. It is my opinion that it can do so.

Dillon in his work on Municipal Corporations, section 822, lays down the following proposition:

"As a general proposition, municipal corporations have, unless specially restricted, the same powers to liquidate claims and indebtedness that natural persons have, and from that source proceeds power to adjust all disputed claims, and when the amount is ascertained to pay the same as other indebtedness. It would seem to follow therefrom that a municipal corporation, unless disabled by positive law, could submit to arbitration all unsettled claims with the same liability to perform the award as would rest upon a natural person, provided, of course, that such power be exercised by ordinance or resolution of the corporate authorities. * * *."

In the City of Shawneetown vs. Baker, 85 Ill. 563, the court laid down the following proposition in the second branch of the syllabus:

"As a general proposition, municipal corporations have the same power to liquidate claims and indebtedness that natural persons have, and from this proceeds the power to adjust all disputed claims, and, when the amount is ascertained, to pay the same, as other indebtedness."

The court in its opinion fully sustains the principle set forth in the syllabus.

In Kane vs. City of Fon du Lac, 40 Wis. 495, the court lays down this proposition in the syllabus:

"A city, unless restricted in that respect by its charter, may submit a disputed claim against it to arbitration; and the common council of the defendant city had the right, in such a case, to entrust the selection of the arbitrators to the city attorney."

It would seem to be clearly logical that inasmuch as the municipal corporation has the power to sue and to be sued, it would also have the power to adjust claims against it. It would be a peculiar doctrine to hold that a city might be sued and yet could not avoid the necessity of a suit by adjusting the claims which might be brought against it. In other words, the power to be sued carries with it the power to adjust. This appears to be the theory upon which the courts and text writers have based their findings.

In Springfield vs. Walker, 42 O. S. 543, the court in its opinion quoted with approval the following from Dillon on Municipal Corporations (p. 546):

> "As a general proposition, municipal corporations have the same powers to liquidate claims and indebtedness that natural persons have, and from that source proceeds power to adjust all disputed claims, and when the amount is ascertained, to pay the same as other indebtedness. It would seem to follow, therefore, that municipal corporations, unless disabled by positive law, could submit to arbitration all unsettled claims with the same liability to perform the award as would rest upon a natural person, provided, of course, each power be exercised by ordinances or resolution of the corporate authorities."

Hence from all the above I am of the opinion that the city of Niles can at this time adjust the matter of damages with Mr. DeJute. The council could adopt an ordinance designating one of the city officials—either the city solicitor or perhaps the director of public service—to adjust this claim with the contractor, fixing a limit beyond which he could not go in said adjustment.

If the contractor and the officer so designated by the council can agree upon the amount of damages which should be paid to him by the city, whether it be thirty-two hundred dollars or some other amount, the officer so designated could make his report to the council and the same could be paid. Of course the city would have to make provision for the payment of the amount agreed upon. However, I am making no suggestions as to this matter, as it is not referred to in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CHARTER—NON-CHARTER—POWER TO ADOPT AND ENFORCE POLICE OR SANITARY REGULATIONS—MAY NOT PASS ORDINANCE PROHIBITING DRIVING OF MOTOR VEHICLES WITHOUT LICENSE.

A non-charter municipality to which, by the General Code, power has been delegated to adopt and enforce particular police or sanitary regulations, may exercise this power by passing ordinances making such regulations, even though similar regulations are provided by the general statutes of the state; and may punish violations of such ordinances by fines, which, when recovered, belong to the municipal treasury.

Such municipal regulations may be identical with, more drastic than, or more lenient than those of the state law, and may prescribe different penalties for their violation, without necessarily conflicting with the general law. Only when they purport to affirmatively authorize something which the general law prohibits or to prohibit something which the general law purports affirmatively to authorize, can there be said to be a "conflict" between them and the general law; but in case such conflict is established, the general law controls and the municipal ordinance must be regarded as invalid.

Such a municipal corporation may not, under favor of such a specific grant, merely make the violation of the state law a municipal offense and annex a penalty to the commission of that offense, which, if a fine, is upon recovery to belong to the municipal treasury. The municipal power is that to "regulate" and unless the power to enforce the state regulation has been specifically granted, such power to regulate must be exercised by prescribing substantive rules of conduct.

In cases in which the municipal code grants to municipal corporations police powers in very general terms, such as "to provide for the public health," or "to preserve the public peace," a "conflict" between an ordinance passed in the exercise of such power and the state law upon the same subject more readily appears. In such case it may be deemed to have been the intent of the General Assembly that its enactment should be exclusive and amount to an exception to the general grant. Where this is the case a municipal ordinance on the same subject as that of the state law may be held invalid.

The case of Fremont vs. Keating, 96 O. S. 468, is authority for the conclusion that all municipal corporations, both charter and non-charter, have power emanating directly from Article XVIII, section 3 of the Constitution, as amended, to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with the general law. If this grant of power be looked to as the source of the authority of the municipality to adopt a particular police regulation, the question of conflict with the general law must be solved by determining whether or not it attempts to sanction something which is prohibited by general law applicable throughout the state, or to prohibit something which for reasons existing generally throughout the state has been sanctioned by the general law. If either of these conditions exist the ordinance will be invalid.

Under existing charters which have been examined, it does not appear that there is any perceptible difference between the powers of charter municipalities and those of non-charter municipalities with respect to the adoption of police regulation. The same may be said as regards powers of municipalities which have adopted additional laws passed by the General Assembly.

A municipality may not pass an ordinance prescribing in effect a municipal penalty for the violation of the state law covering the driving of automobiles without a license. Any municipality may, however, require of its residents a license for the operation of motor vehicles or other vehicles upon its streets, and may punish by fine the violation of such ordinances.

Any municipality may adopt and enforce by fine an ordinance prohibiting the standing or driving of vehicles on its streets without lights.

There is great doubt as to the power of any municipality to adopt and enforce an ordinance prescribing and punishing the offense of resisting an officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of recent date in which you submit for my opinion the following:

> "We respectfully call your attention to court decision 96 O. S., 468, Article XVIII, section 3, Constitution of Ohio, Opinion of the Attorney-General No. 1080 under date of March 16, 1918, and Opinion No. 2063, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, page 1839, and respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters: > Question 1.—Can a non-charter governed city pass ordinances covering driving automobiles without license (see section 12,620 G. C., allowing machine to stand without lights. See section 12,614-3 G. C., 107 O. L., 58, resisting and obstructing an officer. See section 12,858 G. C.) and try such cases under ordinance and cover the fines into the municipal treasury?

Question 2.—Can a charter governed city proceed as set forth above?"

You have verbally advised me that the ordinances mentioned by you are intended as illustrations or examples merely and what you particularly desire is a reconsideration of the opinion of 1916, in the light of the decision of the Supreme Court cited by you, and with regard to the powers of non-charter and charter cities respectively.

The opinion of 1916 is so short that I feel it will not unduly burden this opinion to quote it in full:

"COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1916.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of November 15, 1916, wherein you ask the following question:

'In cases in which the state laws provide fines and penalties for violation of state laws, and further provide, either specifically or by general statute, that such fines when assessed in municipal courts, police courts, mayors' courts, or other courts, shall be paid into the treasury of the county, may the council of a municipality legally pass ordinances covering the same points, try such cases under said ordinances, and thereby divert the fines into the treasury of the municipality?'

Your question is so general that I shall not undertake to answer same except generally. The rule of law in Ohio is that a municipality, within the limits of the powers granted to it, may enact ordinances to punish the same acts as are punished by state laws, and having done so may punish the offenders under said ordinances. A prosecution under the ordinance, however, would not bar a prosecution under the state statutes.

See Koch vs. State, 53 O. S., 433.

In cities other than charter cities it has been held, prior to the amendment of section 3664 G. C., 103 O. L., 168, that an ordinance could not be passed punishing assault and battery.

Wellsville vs. O'Connor, 1 O. C. C., n. s., 253.

The case of in Re Smith, 14 N. P. n. s., 497, decided that an ordinance could not be passed punishing the act of resisting a person called to assist an officer.

In Hughes vs. Cincinnati, 14 N. P., n. s., 494, it was held that drunkenness not amounting to a disturbance of the peace could not be punished by ordinance.

Jeffries vs. Defiance, 25 W. L. B., 68; in re Fitzsimmons, 13 N. P., n. s., 104.

It would seem from the foregoing decisions that the power of council of non-chartered cities to pass ordinances prescribing a punishment is limited to the powers conferred on municipalities by the legislature, but that in certain cases council may pass ordinance punishing the same acts as would constitute misdemeanors under state laws.

Answering your question, therefore, I am of the opinion that council of non-chartered municipalities may legally pass ordinances within the powers granted to them by statute covering the same acts as are covered by the penal statutes of the state, try such cases under said ordinances and cover the fines collected thereunder into the treasury of the municipality."

The decision referred to by you is that in the case of The City of Fremont vs. Keating, the citation of which you have given. The syllabus in that case is as follows:

"1. Section 6307, General Code, is in direct conflict with the provisions of section 3 of Article XVIII of the Constitution of Ohio, authorizing municipalities to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws, and is therefore unconstitutional and void.

2. Where imprisonment may be imposed as a punishment for the commission of an offense, the accused is entitled to a trial by jury.

3. In such case, the fact that imprisonment was not actually included as a part of the punishment imposed by the sentence of the court cannot affect the right of the accused to a jury trial."

The opinion of Donahue, J., is as follows:

"Section 3 of Article XVIII of the Constitution of Ohio, as amended September 3, 1912, provides among other things that municipalities shall have authority to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

Section 12604, General Code, provides that 'Whoever operates a motor cycle or motor vehicle at a greater speed than eight miles an hour in the business and closely built-up portions of a municipality or more than fifteen miles an hour in other portions thereof or more than twenty miles an hour outside of a municipality, shall be fined.' etc.

This statute is a police regulation, and, under the section of the constitution above referred to, the municipality has the right to adopt and enforce within the limits police regulations in regard to the same subject matter, not in conflict with this statute.

Notwithstanding this right conferred upon municipalities by the constitution of Ohio, section 6307, General Code, specifically provides that local authorities shall not regulate the speed of motor vehicles by ordinance, by-law, or resolution. It is sufficient to say that the general assembly of Ohio cannot deprive a municipality of its constitutional rights. This section is clearly in violation of section 3 of Article XVIII of the Constitution of Ohio, and void.

Section 17 of the ordinance under which this prosecution was brought provides that no vehicle shall be operated at a greater speed than eight miles per hour in the business or closely built-up portions of the city, or fifteen miles an hour in any other portion of the city, excepting bicycles, which are provided for under another ordinance.

This section of the ordinance is not in conflict with the provisions of section 12604, General Code, and was passed by the council in the exercise of its constitutional authority, and is therefore a valid and subsisting ordinance of the city of Fremont, Ohio.

It is claimed, however, that this ordinance is in conflict with the general law on the same subject matter, for the reason that it prescribes a different punishment than that prescribed by the statute of the state.

This question is not important in the disposition of this case, for even if it were conceded that a municipality has the authority under the provisions of section 3 of Article XVIII of the Constitution of Ohio, as amended September 3, 1912, to prescribe a different punishment than provided in the statute covering the same subject matter, nevertheless this ordinance in question provides that imprisonment may be a part of the penalty. In such case, the accused is entitled to a jury, and it is the right of the defendant to be so tried, regardless of whether the sentence imposes a term of imprisonment or not. Inwood vs. State, 42 Ohio St., 186; Thomas vs. Village of Ashland, 12 Ohio St., 124, and Summons vs. State, 75 Ohio St., 346, 350, 351.

It does not appear from the record that the defendant waived a jury, and without such a waiver the mayor had no authority to hear or determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant, and for this reason the judgment of the court of appeals is affirmed."

Obviously this decision, in so far as it holds or assumes that councils of municipalities have power, springing directly from the constitution, to adopt such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws and hence have no means of express delegation of such power by the General Assembly, whether they have adopted charters or not, is inconsistent with the opinion of 1916, which held, it will be observed, that the council of such a city would have to look to the General Code for authority to adopt police regulations pertaining to particular subjects.

So far as non-charter cities are concerned, however, it is obvious that the opinion of 1916 fully covers such cases as may be dealt with by statute conferring police powers upon municipal corporations, and nothing in that opinion to that effect is impaired by the decision cited. That is to say, in so far as the opinion holds, in the language of its concluding paragraph, that "councils of non-charter municipalities may legally pass ordinances within the powers granted to them by statute covering the same acts as are covered by the penal statutes of the state, try such cases under said ordinances and cover the fines collected thereunder into the treasury of the municipality," this conclusion stands unimpaired by anything decided in Fremont vs. Keating, supra. It is only the conclusion of the immediately preceding paragraph of the opinion, to the effect that "the power of council of non-charter cities to pass ordinances prescribing a punishment is limited to the powers conferred on municipalities by the legislature," that appears to be shaken by the general trend of the opinion and syllabus in the Fremont case.

I might make the same criticism of the question you now submit as was made respecting the question submitted in 1916. It is so general that I must answer it in very general terms. I may say, however, that even a general treatment of the question raises problems that have seemingly given rise to the greatest difficulty in the courts of this state and of other states having similar constitutional provisions, and I am bound to say that some of the conclusions which I shall reach cannot be advanced with much assurance in the present state of the law on these subjects.

My investigation leads me to divide the first general question, which you say you wish to have considered, into several parts as follows:

(1) Where the legislature of the state has by explicit enactment delegated regulatory or police powers to municipal corporations with respect to particular subject matters, and there is a general law of the state embodying general regulations applicable within the territory of municipal corporations respecting the same subject matters, may the council of a non-charter municipality adopt a code of regulations regarding such subject matters, as is covered by state law, and provide for the enforcement of the same by penalties in the nature of fines, which when recovered are to go into the municipal treasury?
