APPROVAL—CASE OF CANAL LANDS TO THE WESTERN OHIO RAILWAY COMPANY; O. C. McCLELLAND AND TO THE COMMISSIONERS OF LUCAS COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 21, 1917, enclosing leases in triplicate for my approval, as follows:

> To the Western Ohio Railway Company, marginal strip of berme bank of the Miami and Erie canal north of Piqua, being a renewal of a former lease; valuation $3,166⅔.
> To O. C. McClelland, crossing over abandoned Ohio canal in Madison township, Licking county, Ohio; valuation $100.00.
> To commissioners of Lucas county, Ohio, crossing under Miami and Erie canal in Lucas county for sanitary sewer; valuation $250.00.

I have carefully examined said leases and find them correct in form and legal. The one lease is to The Western Ohio Railway Company, and in connection therewith I desire to call attention to the provisions of section 13965 G. C., in which it is stated that land "may be leased for any purpose or purposes other than for railroads operated by steam." However, the section further provides that the superintendent of public works may—

> "* * prescribe regulations for the crossing of the canals, canal basins or canal lands by any railroad operated by steam * * or for the necessary use, for railroad purposes, of any part of the berme banks of a canal, canal basin or any portion of the canal lands for a distance not exceeding two miles, * *."

It is my view that the terms of the lease to said railroad company are within the provisions of the above quoted section. Hence I am endorsing my approval upon said three leases and am forwarding the same to the governor of Ohio for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MORGAN, MUSKINGUM AND SCIOTO COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 27, 1917, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions on the following improvements:

Morgan County—Sec. H, McConnellsville-Athens road, I. C. H. No. 162. (In duplicate.)
Muskingum County—Sec. R, National road, I. C. H. No. 1.
" " Sec. Q, National road, I. C. H. No. 1.
" " Sec. S, National road, I. C. H. No. 1.
Scioto County—Sec. O, Ohio River road, I. C. H. No. 7.

I have carefully examined said final resolutions, find the same correct in form and legal, and have therefore endorsed my approval thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FOREIGN CORPORATION—DELIVERING GOODS DIRECT FROM FACTORY TO PURCHASERS IN THIS STATE—NOT REQUIRED TO COMPLY WITH LICENSE FEE LAW OR INITIAL FRANCHISE TAX LAW.

A foreign corporation delivering goods direct from its factory to purchasers in this state on orders taken in this state or otherwise is not required to comply with either the license fee law prescribed by sections 178 et seq. G. C. nor with the initial franchise tax law prescribed by sections 183 et seq. G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you under date of December 17, 1917, with which you enclose for opinion a letter addressed to you by Mr. H. Gerald Chapin, an attorney of New York city, in which he inquires whether or not under the facts stated by him a certain New York corporation is required to obtain permission to do business in this state. The letter of the attorney to you is as follows:

"Will you please inform me whether under your statutes a New York corporation would be obliged to obtain permission to do business in Ohio under the following circumstances:

"The company maintains a manufactory in New York. A citizen of Ohio who does a business of his own in an Ohio city and who is not employed by the New York corporation, orders goods from time to time.

He solicits orders on his own account which he forwards to the New York concern, the New York concern making collections direct. The New York corporation pays to the Ohio dealer a commission on such orders. The Ohio dealer pays all the expenses of his own business, including rent, etc., the New York corporation paying absolutely nothing towards the maintenance of his business. The Ohio dealer does business entirely in his own name.

"If it is your practice to require that a foreign corporation obtain a certificate to do business, under such circumstances, will you please forward me blanks, which I assume you have, for the purpose."

In this opinion I will briefly consider the question whether the corporation referred to in the attorney's communication is required to comply with the license fee law relating to foreign corporations, which has been carried into the General Code as sections 178 to 182, inclusive, as well as whether said corporation is required to comply with the initial franchise tax law provided for in sections 183 to 192, inclusive, of the General Code.

In Opinion No. 236, addressed to you under date of May 3, 1917, in answer to an inquiry as to whether or not The Rubber Goods Manufacturing Company, a New Jersey corporation, was required to comply with said statutory provisions under facts set out in said inquiry, I considered at some length said statutory provisions and certain general principles of law applicable to questions of this kind. I do not deem it necessary to again cover this ground with respect to the questions at hand, nor for the purposes of these questions do I deem it necessary to here quote the statutory provisions above noted further than to note the provisions of sections 178 to 183, respectively, of the General Code. These sections read as follows:

"Sec. 178. Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, and that the business of such corporation to be transacted in this state, is such as may be lawfully carried on by a corporation, organized under the laws of this state for such or similar business, or if more than one kind of business, by two or more corporations so incorporated for such kinds of business exclusively. No such foreign corporation doing business in this state without such certificate shall maintain an action in this state upon a contract made by it in this state until it has procured such certificate. This section shall not apply to foreign banking, insurance, building and loan, or bond investment corporations."

"Sec. 183. Before doing business in this state, a foreign corporation organized for profit and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state shall make and file with the secretary of state, in such form as he may prescribe, a statement under oath of its president, secretary, treasurer, superintendent or managing agent in this state, containing the following facts:

1. The number of shares of authorized capital stock of the corporation and the par value of each share.

2. The name and location of the office or offices of the corporation in Ohio, and the names and addresses of the officers or agents of the corporation in charge of its business in Ohio.

3. The value of the property owned and used by the corporation in Ohio, where situated, and the value of the property of the corporation owned and used outside of Ohio.

4. The proportion of the capital stock of the corporation represented by property owned and used and by business transacted in Ohio."

From the terms of section 178 of the General Code, it is apparent that the conditions imposed therein, and in the sections immediately following, apply only to foreign corporations transacting business in this state or which seek to do so; while the provisions of sections 183 et seq. of the General Code, apply only to foreign corporations doing business in this state and owning or using a part or all of its capital or plant in this state.

With respect to the application of both sections 178 and 183 of the General Code, it may be noted that irrespective of such statutes a foreign corporation is only liable to regulations prescribed by the state or to franchise taxes imposed by such state when the corporation is in fact doing business in such state, and what constitutes "doing business" is to be determined from what it actually does, and that it cannot consist in the corporation doing what it has a right to do without the consent of such state.

Statutes of similar import to those of our own state above noted, applying to foreign corporations of different kinds, have been enacted in practically all of the states, and the provisions of these statutes in respect to what constitutes "doing business" within the meaning of this term as used in such statutes have been construed in many of the decisions of the courts of the several states and of the United States. In these decisions, however, the courts for the most part have refrained from formulating any general rule for determining when a foreign corporation is "doing business" within the meaning of such statutes, but have contented themselves in determining whether under the facts in the particular cases such corporations are within the particular statute.

With respect to mercantile and commercial corporations it may be noted that in so far as any general rule can be gathered from the decisions the phrase "doing business" within any particular state, as applied to such corporations, implies corporate continuity of conduct in respect to such business such as might be evidenced by the investment of capital, the maintenance of an office for the transaction of business and those incidental circumstances which attest the corporate intent to avail itself of the privilege of carrying on the business and activities such as appertain to the ordinary business and purpose of the corporation.

Penn Collieries Co. v. McKeever, 183 N. Y. 98;
Simmons-Burks Clothing Co. v. Linton, 90 Ark., 73;
Kilgore v. Smith, 122 Pa. 48;
Caesar v. Cappell, 83 Fed. Rep., 403, 422;
Cooper Mfg. Co. v. Ferguson, 113 U. S. 727;
Toledo Commercial Co. v. Glen Mfg. Co., 55 O. S., 217, 222, 223.

Further, as a principle of immediate application to the question at hand may be noted that though corporations are not citizens within the meaning of the provisions of the federal constitution, guaranteeing to the citizens of each state all the privileges and immunities of citizens in the several states, the right to engage in interstate commerce does not depend upon citizenship and the capacity of a foreign corporation to do so must be determined by its own charter as granted by the state of its creation and by the law of the state in which it is carrying on business. A manufacturing company, therefore, incorporated and doing business under the laws of one state can send its commercial travelers soliciting sales through other states and may ship its goods to the purchasers or to its agents for delivery to purchasers. In like manner foreign corporations may employ commercial agents in different states, and such agents will be entitled to the same protection in transacting interstate commerce as if they were employed by non-resident individuals.

Judson on Taxation, 2d Ed., Sec. 167.

In the case of Toledo Commercial Co. v. Glen Manufacturing Co., supra, it was held that the sale and delivery on orders secured by traveling agents of a corporation of goods manufactured by such corporation in another state was not the "doing of business" by such corporation in this state within the meaning of statutory provisions which, as amended, have been carried into the General Code as sections 178 et seq. thereof. The court in its opinion in this case says:

> "The holdings are numerous that it is the right of persons and of corporations residing in one state to contract and sell their commodities in another, unrestrained except where restraint is justified under the police power. This rule does not deny the right of any state to impose conditions upon the power of foreign corporations to establish themselves within its boundaries for the performance generally of their business, involving the exercise of corporate franchises and powers, but does hold that the selling through traveling agents and delivering of goods manufactured outside of the state, does not fall directly within the purview of their corporate powers. * * * * The distinction to be noted is that the sale and delivery of merchandise is a right possessed in common by all the citizens of the state; the exercise of corporate franchises and powers, is not—it is a special privilege conferred only on corporations. And the sale and delivery in one state of goods manufactured in another state, by a citizen of that state, is interstate commerce."

Applying these principles to the questions at hand, I am of the opinion that upon the facts stated by Mr. Chapin in his communication to you the corporation in question is not required to comply with either of the statutory provisions above noted. From the attorney's communication it appears that the goods of the corporation in question are disposed of in this state in two ways: In one instance, as I read said communication, the goods of the company are sold direct to the person in Ohio referred to in said communication on his orders, which goods, I assume, are received by such person as his own and consumed or resold by him as such; in the other instance, the goods manufactured by this corporation are sold and delivered to various customers in this state on orders taken on his own account by the person referred to in said communication and forwarded to the corporation at its home office.

It is obvious in view of the principles before noted herein that in neither instance is the corporation in question doing or transacting business in this state within the meaning of sections 178 and 183, respectively, of the General Code; and it is further evident that in neither instance does the corporation own or use any part of its capital or property in this state within the purview of section 183 of the General Code. Of course, should it be disclosed that the person in Ohio referred to in said communication receives goods from said corporation as the property of the corporation, and that from a stock of such goods he makes sales to consumers in this state on account of such corporation a different question would be presented. However, on the facts stated in the attorney's communication as I interpret them I am of the opinion, in direct answer to the questions here presented, that the corporation in question is not required to comply with either the license fee law prescribed by sections 178 et seq. of the General Code or with the initial franchise tax law prescribed by section 183 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—VALIDITY OF ELECTION OF MEMBER WHOSE NOMINATION PETITION DID NOT CONTAIN REQUIRED NUMBER OF SIGNATURES.

Where a person filed a nomination petition for member of the board of education, which had less than twenty-five signers thereon, and where no objections thereto were filed or considered, and the deputy state supervisors of elections, irrespective of the number of signers, placed the name on the ballot, and at the election the person received the highest number of votes, he was duly elected as a member of said board of education, and irregularities in the making of the nomination would not affect the validity of his election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. OTHO W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me the following request for opinion:

> "We have this condition in one of the school districts in this county, at the recent election. One of the members of the board of education filed a purported petition as a member of the board of education. That is, to become a candidate for that position. He had less than twenty-five signers on his petition, but the deputy state supervisors of election, irrespective of this number of signers, put his name on the ballot (I am informed that this was an oversight), with the result that this party was one of the five who received the highest number of votes, and therefore, so far as the votes are concerned, was elected as a member of the board.
> "I desire your opinion on the point as to whether or not a candidate who files a petition that has not twenty-five signers on it, even though the deputy state supervisors of election may put his name on the ballot, and he should receive the required number of votes to elect him, will be deemed to be elected? Or, in other words, whether it is necessary that a candidate have at least twenty-five names on his petition, and if he fails in having that number, whether that will have any bearing upon his right to hold a position on the board of education? That there may be no misunderstanding, I will say this is a rural district."

Section 4997 G. C. provides for nominations for the office of member of the board of education and reads as follows:

> "Sec. 4997. Nominations of candidates for the office of member of the board of education shall be made by nominating papers signed in the aggregate for each candidate by not less than twenty-five qualified electors of the school district, of either sex, in village districts and in city school districts by not less than two per cent. of the electors voting at the next preceding general school election in such city school districts."

Section 5005 G. C. reads as follows:

"When so filed, certificates of nomination and nomination papers shall be preserved and be open, under proper regulations, to public inspection. If in apparent conformity with the provisions of this chapter, they shall be deemed to be valid unless objection thereto is duly made in writing within five days after the filing thereof."

Inasmuch as you state that the deputy state supervisors of elections, irrespective of the number of signatures on the nomination paper, placed the name on the ballot, it appears that no question was raised or objection made to the nomination paper so filed.

So we have the plain question whether or not a person, whose name is placed on the official ballot by the election officers and who has received the highest number of votes for the office for which he was voted, can have his right to such office questioned after the election, owing to some defect or irregularity in the manner of his nomination.

While I do not find that this exact question has been passed upon by the courts of Ohio, still the adjudications on election matters are uniform in upholding the right of an elector to have his ballot counted after it has been cast and deposited in the ballot box. Nor will the act or omission to act of any election officer deprive the voter of this right, so long as his expressed will is ascertainable, and it is reasonably certain that his ballot has not been changed.

As stated by the court in State ex rel. v. Markley, 9 C. C. (N. S.) 551, affirmed without report in 76 O. S. 636 (third paragraph of the syllabus):

"The will and judgment of voters cannot be rendered ineffectual through a disregard by the judges of election of their duty as laid down in the statute, whether such disregard be due to fraud, accident, mistake, misapprehension or negligence; and where such omitted duties with reference to the ballots cast were of a ministerial character, oral evidence is admissible to show the true character of the ballots as to which there is doubt, and to identify with certainty the poll books and tally sheets, and when the ballots in question are found to be truthful, they should be counted for the candidate for whom the voters intended they should be counted if that intention can be ascertained."

I quote the above, not that it is directly in point, but only to show the manifest tendency of our courts to sustain the expressed will of the voter after his ballot has been cast, and not permit the acts or omissions of the election officials to deprive him of his rights.

In Schuler v. Hogan, 168 Ill. 369, the supreme court, under a somewhat similar statute, although the proceeding was one in contest, held that the failure to object to a certificate of nomination was a waiver of all objections that might exist to the presence of the name of one's opponent on the official ballot. In this case also the court held that a provision of the Illinois election laws, requiring that a convention making a nomination for a county office shall represent a political party which cast at least two per cent. of the total county vote at the last general election, would be regarded as directory merely, where no objections to the certificates of nomination were made or considered.

In Attorney-General v. Campbell, 191 Mass. 497, the court held in the third paragraph of the syllabus that under their election laws when a ceritficate of nomination for a state office has been filed with the secretary of the commonwealth and is "in apparent conformity with law," it is "valid unless objections thereto are made in writing," and are filed in the manner prescribed by the election laws.

In Blackmer v. Hildreth, 181 Mass. 29, there was a failure to comply with a statute in regard to the nomination papers, but the court held that the irregularities did not invalidate the election. In that case Mr. Justice Hammond said in the opinion of the court at page 32:

> "But with the preparation of the ballot the influence of these provisions end. If there be irregularities like those in this case they do not accompany the ballot and taint it in the hands of the voter. This view of the statute gives due weight and scope to the provisions in question, and preserves the sanctity of the right of suffrage and its free and honest exercise. To hold otherwise would be to lose sight of the purpose for which these provisions were made, namely, to provide the method and time for the preparation of the ballot, and would subject our elections to intollerable and perplexing technicalities in no way material to the substantial merits of the controversy or to the freedom and result of the action of the voters. Its natural tendency would be to thwart rather than to secure a true expression of the popular will."

Coming then to your specific inquiry, it is my opinion it is now too late to raise the question that the person, having received the required number of votes to elect him in the manner stated in your inquiry, was not legally elected, owing to some defect in his nomination paper. All objections to nomination papers should have been raised prior to the time of the printing of the person's name on the official ballot.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS—WHEN COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY ACT—BOARD OF EDUCATION—MEMBER MAY RESIGN AND BE APPOINTED TO FILL LONGER TERM—SCHOOL DISTRICT TRANSFERRED TERRITORY MUST BE CONTIGUOUS TO OTHER TERRITORY.

When a local board of education neglects or refuses to provide transportation for pupils, as provided by law, the county board of education shall provide same and charge the expense thereof to the local district.

When a local board acts in providing transportation, the county board has no power to interfere with such act unless the local board grossly abuses the discretion placed in it or acts fraudulently.

A and B are members of a local board of education. A's term expires on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1918. B's term expires on the corresponding day, 1920. B removes from the district and creates a vacancy. Can A resign and be appointed to fill the vacancy in B's term? Yes.

Where by annexations of territory a rural school district is divided into three separate integral parts, must the county board of education transfer such territory so that it is contiguous to the other territory of the district to which it belongs? Yes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

"(1) Section 7731 of the school laws of Ohio state 'When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils, the county board of education shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district.'

Suppose a local board of education maps the transportation route so that forty-five children fall to one transportation conveyance and when they cannot be all placed in one wagon, a trailer is attached to the wagon and a complaint is filed with the county board of education stating that such transportation is unsafe and, therefore, petition the county board to provide adequate transportation. Can the county board of education, according to the provisions of section 7731, provide the transportation petitioned for?

(2) Mr. A. and Mr. B. are members of a local board of education. Mr. A.'s term expires January 1, 1918, and Mr. B.'s January 1, 1920. Mr. A. is a candidate for re-election in November, 1917, but is defeated. Mr. B. is about to remove from the school district, thereby creating a vacancy. Mr. A. at once tenders his resignation. Can the present board of education reappoint Mr. A. to fill the vacancy of Mr. B. when it shall have been created?

(3) Section 4685 reads: 'The territory included within the boundaries of a city, village or rural school district, shall be contiguous except where an island or islands form an integral part of the district.'

In making a map showing all of the school districts of the county school district, the county board of education discovers that in a township rural school district, through annexation within the civil township, the territory of this township rural school district now stands in three integral pieces; that is, is not contiguous. Is it mandatory that the county board of education proceed to transfer territory until the territory in question shall be a part of a district with contiguous territory?"

You ask three separate and distinct questions and I shall take them up in the order in which they are asked and numbered in your letter.

Referring to question No. 1:

Section 7731 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 625, reads as follows:

"In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school, the transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils shall be optional with the board of education. When transportation of pupils is provided the conveyance must pass within one-half mile of the residence of such pupils or the private entrance thereto. When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils, the county board of educa- tion shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district. When the county board of education certifies to the county auditor the amount paid for such transportation the county auditor shall transfer such amount from the funds due the said board of education to the county board of education fund."

The above section of the General Code places the duty of providing transportation, that is, of providing the means of transportation, in the rural and village boards of education. It is a duty therefore that the boards in the first instance have a right to exercise and cannot be interfered with unless in the exercise of such right or duty the board grossly abuses the discretion placed in it or acts in a fraudulent manner.

Where authority is placed in a local board of education to perform certain functions, the said local boards cannot be interfered with unless there is a gross abuse of discretion in the performance of said functions.

Youmans vs. Board of Education, 13 C. C., 207;
Board of Education vs. Minor, 23 O. S., 211;
State vs. McCann, 21 O. S., 205;
State vs. Board of Education, 76 O. S., 297.

A provision very similar to the one contained in the above quoted section (7731) was contained in section 7610 G. C. prior to the amendment of said section on the twenty-first day of March, 1917. In said last mentioned section it was provided that if the board of education in any district failed in any year to estimate and certify the levy for a contingent fund or if the amount so certified was deemed insufficient for school purposes, or if such board failed to provide sufficient school privileges for all the youth of school age in the district, or failed to provide for the continuance of any school for at least thirty-two weeks in the year, and numerous things therein referred to, then the county commissioners of the county to which such district belonged, upon being advised and satisfied thereof, was authorized to do and perform any and all of such duties and acts "in as full a manner as the board of education is by this title authorized to do and perform the same."

In Board of Education vs. Commissioners, 10 O. N. P., n. s., 505, in which case the provisions of said section 7610 were under consideration, the court on page 507 says:

"The school electors of each school district elect a board of education for their district schools; into the hands of this board of education the law of our state commits, in general, all the powers granted respecting the maintenance of schools in such district; such as the determination of the number of school houses necessary, the selection and purchase of sites, the building and equipment of school houses, the assignment of pupils thereto, the rules and regulations governing the conduct of pupils, the course of study, text-books and grading, the hiring and payment of teachers and other instructors, and the raising of money by taxation to meet proper and legal expenditures; these powers are broadly vested in the local board, who, in the judgment of the law are best qualified by residence, interests and local knowledge, to exercise them carefully, wisely and with discrimination, to the best interest of the school children of the district, which is the ultimate aim and just purpose of all school legislation.

As a rule courts will not interfere with board of education in the exercise of these functions. * * *

It will be noted that some of these powers committed to the county commissioners after default on the part of the board of education, such as certifying the levy, hiring and paying teachers, etc., are ministerial merely in their nature, and that some of them are judicial. As to the ministerial acts, the law is simple; if the local board of education fails to perform them the county commissioners step in, upon being advised and satisfied of such default, and perform them in the place and stead of the local boards.

As to the exercise of judicial powers, the case is different. The county commissioners in such cases cannot interfere merely by reason of a difference of opinion; they certainly have no higher powers than the courts have; that is, they can only interfere and assume the functions of the local board, when that board has acted, or declined to act, in such a way as to show a gross abuse of discretion."

In Board of Education vs. Shaul, et al., 4 O. N. P., n. s., 433, the court held:

"Where a township board of education voluntarily or willfully fails to perform any of its ministerial duties, the county commissioners may step in and perform such duties as authoritatively and in the same manner as though it was a board of education which was acting.

But with reference to the judicial duties of a township board, such as the suspending at its discretion of the schools in certain subdistricts, or the abolishing of the subdistricts and the providing in either instance for the conveyance of the pupils to other public schools or to one or more centralized schools, the county commissioners are without authority to interfere or to reverse orders made by the township board in that behalf; and the fact that the action of the township board was contrary to the will of the people and against their protest does not change the rights of the board in that regard."

A ministerial act "is one which a person performs in a given state of facts, in a prescribed manner, in obedience to the mandate of legal authority, without regard to or the exercise of his own judgment upon the propriety of the act being done." Nash vs. State, 66 O. S., 558.

Judicial acts involve the investigation and determination of a state of facts, an act of choice or discretion or judgment as to the propriety of actions to be taken in reference to the facts thus ascertained. Board vs. Commissioners, 10 O. N. P., 510.

So that in your case the county board of education could exercise no greater powers under the provisions of section 7731 G. C. than could the county commissioners under the provisions of section 7610 G. C., and when the local board of education exercised its discretion in reference to the transportation of pupils, that discretion was in the nature of a judicial act and could not be interfered with unless there was a gross abuse thereof or unless the local board acted fraudulently.

Our courts have recently spoken on the matter of discretion when exercised by boards of education. In the case of Cline v. Martin, 24 O. C. C., n. s., 81, one of the questions under consideration was whether or not a county board of education had abused its discretion in transferring territory from one rural district to another. On page 85 of said report the court says:

"The statute nowhere limits the authority of the county board in this matter, and there is nothing in the evidence submitted to the court that would indicate an abuse of authority on the part of the county board, and we do not think that a court would be justified in imposing a limitation by construction, or in any way interfering with the acts of such board in arranging the lines of the district and otherwise acting under said provisions of the statute, in the absence of proof clearly establishing fraud or gross and intentional abuse of discretion. And not finding in the present case, on the part of the county board, any equitable grounds of fraud, or mistake, and not finding its acts wrongful, fraudulent, collusive or arbitrary, we do not feel that the board abused its discretion."

Also on the same subject, in Johann vs. Board of Education, 26 O. C. C., n. s., 209, 212, the court say:

"The statutes investing county boards of education with the power to change the boundary lines of school districts evince a legislative purpose to repose a discretion in the judgment of such boards, and when such boards act within the power conferred by statute, their judgment is only subject to review by the courts, when it appears that they have acted fraudlently, or that they have grossly abused the discretion vested in them."

I must conclude, then, from all the above, that while the action of the local board of education in the matter of the transportation may be one as to which honest men might exercise a different judgment, yet it is in the nature of a judicial act and the local board which has the authority to act, having acted in the matter the county board can only act in case the act of the local board would be shown to be fraudulent or to be clearly an abuse of discretion on its part. Accordingly, then, I advise you, in answer to your first question, that the local board having acted, the county board cannot act in the same matter except as provided above.

Coming now to your second question, in which you state that Mr. A. and Mr. B. are members of a local board of education, that Mr. A.'s term will expire on the first Monday in January, 1918, and that the term of Mr. B. will expire on the first Monday in January, 1920; that Mr. B. is about to remove from the school district and thereby create a vacancy, and inquire whether or not Mr. A. may tender his resignation and have the same accepted by the board and be elected to fill the vacancy made by the non-residence of Mr. B., I beg to advise there is nothing in the statute to prohibit any such course in case the remaining members of the board of education desire to so elect Mr. A. to the position made vacant by the non-residence of Mr. B.

In your third question you inquire whether or not it is mandatory with the county board of education, in the arrangement of the rural school districts, for the territory of each district to be contiguous.

Section 4685 G. C. reads as follows:

"The territory included within the boundaries of a city, village or rural school district shall be contiguous except where an island or islands form an integral part of the district."

The above language is very clear, and where in your case a township rural school district has, through annexations of territory to various districts, been so divided that the territory of the township rural school district is now in three integral pieces, it is mandatory upon the county board to transfer territory until the territory of each district is contiguous.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS—ELEMENTARY AND HIGH SCHOOL PUPILS.

The provisions of section 7731 G. C., in reference to the transportation of pupils apply only to elementary pupils and do not apply to the transportation of high school pupils.

Transportation for high school pupils is provided for in sections 7748 and 7749 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. JAMES P. WOOD, JR., Prosecuting Attorney, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your inquiry of November 10, 1917, reads as follows:

> "I desire your opinion on the following: Section 7731 provides in part that:
> 'In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school.'
> The question has arisen in several school districts in this county as to whether or not the provisions of this section apply to high school pupils as well as to elementary pupils. The section apparently makes no distinction between these two classes of pupils. Section 7749 provides for the transportation of high school pupils when there has been a centralization of schools, but I cannot see that this section modifies the provisions of section 7731, which requires all pupils to be transported regardless of rank."

Section 7731, as amended in 107 O. L., p. 625, reads in part as follows:

> "In all rural and village school districts where pupils live more than two miles from the nearest school, the board of education shall provide transportation for such pupils to and from such school the transportation for pupils living less than two miles from the school house by the nearest practicable route for travel accessible to such pupils shall be optional with the board of education. When transportation of pupils is provided the conveyance must pass within one-half mile of the residence of such pupils or the private entrance thereto. When local boards of education neglect or refuse to provide transportation for pupils, the county board of education shall provide such transportation and the cost thereof shall be charged against the local school district. * * * *."

Said section makes provision for the transportation of pupils in all village and rural school districts, and is the general section upon the subject of transportation and applies to all schools except those for which provision is specially made in other sections of the General Code.

Section 7730 G. C. provides in part (107 O. L., 638):

> "The board of education of any rural or village school district may suspend any or all schools in such village or rural school district. Upon such suspension the board in such village school district may provide and in such rural school district shall provide, for the conveyance of all pupils of legal school age, who reside in the territory of the suspended district, to a public school in the rural or village district, or to a public school in another district. * * * *"

This section provides for the transportation of pupils in districts where a part or all of the schools are suspended, and the pupils are assigned to another school or schools of the district or to another school or schools of another district, and it is the general provision of law with reference to the transportation of pupils in suspended school districts.

Section 7733 G. C. provides:

"At its option the board of education in any village school district may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of the district or any adjoining district, to the school or schools of the district, the expense of conveyance to be paid from the school funds of the district in which such pupils reside. But such boards as so provide transportation, shall not be required to transport pupils living less than one mile from the school house or houses."

This section applies only to the transportation of pupils of a village school district or of a district which adjoins a village school district and the transportation instead of being from the district to another district, or from schools which are suspended, it applies to the transportation or conveyance of pupils "to the school or schools of the district." That is, the board of education of a village district may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of such village district, or, under the provisions of said section may provide for the conveyance of the pupils of an adjoining district to the school or schools of such village district, and the expense of such conveyance shall be paid from the school funds of the district in which such pupils reside. Such board of education, however, could not provide for the conveyance of pupils of an adjoining district at the expense of such adjoining district, without an agreement with the board of education of such adjoining district therefor.

Section 7748 G. C. refers to the transportation of high school pupils and reads:

"A board of education providing a third grade high school as defined by law shall be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school residing in the district at any first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year. Should pupils residing in the district prefer not to attend such third grade high school, the board of education of such district shall be required to pay the tuition of such pupils at any first grade high school for four years, or at any second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year. Such a board providing a second grade high school as defined by law shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year; except that, a board maintaining a second or third grade high school is not required to pay such tuition when the maximum levy permitted by law for such district has been reached and all the funds so raised are necessary for the support of the schools of such district. No board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years; except that it must pay the tuition of all successful applicants, who have complied with the further provisions thereof, residing more than four miles, by the most direct route of public travel, from the high school provided by the board, when such applicants attend a nearer high school or in lieu of paying such tuition the board of education maintaining a high school may pay for the transportation of the pupils living more than four miles from the said high school, maintained by the said board of education to said high school. Where more than one high school is maintained, by agreement of the board and parent or guardian, pupils may attend either and their transportation shall be so paid. A pupil living in a village or city district who has completed the elementary school course and whose legal residence has been transferred to a rural district in this state before he begins or completes a high school course, shall be entitled to all the rights and privileges of a resident pupil of such district."

That is, under the provisions of said section a board of education which maintains a high school, shall pay the tuition of pupils of said district who reside more than four miles from such high school, but if such board provides transportation for such pupils to the high school maintained by the board, then the board is exempted from the payment of any tuition at another high school for such pupils who so reside more than the four miles from the high school maintained by the board.

Section 7749 G. C. provides:

"When the elementary schools of any rural school district in which a high school is maintained, are centralized and transportation of pupils is provided, all pupils resident of the rural school district who have completed the elementary school work shall be entitled to transportation to the high school of such rural district, and the board of education thereof shall be exempt from the payment of the tuition of such pupils in any other high school for such a portion of four years as the course of study in the high school maintained by the board of education includes."

This section refers to the schools where centralization is had, and provides that all pupils who are residents of the rural school district who have completed the elementary work, shall be entitled to transportation to the high school of such rural district, and that when the board of education provides such transportation, it shall be exempt from the payment of such tuition of pupils at other high schools for such portion of four years as the course of study in the high school maintained by the board of education includes. That is, if it is a third grade high school, it would be for a period of not less than two years, and if it be a second grade, it would cover a period of not less than three years, and if it be a first grade high school, it would cover the full period of four years, and a rural board of education by furnishing transportation to its high school pupils in such centralized district, would entirely relieve itself of the payment of tuition for its high school pupils to other high schools in the state for such a portion of four years as the course of study in the high school maintained by the board of education includes.

The above sections and the matters referred to by them severally indicate that section 7731, which is the general section on transportation, refers only to the pupils of the elementary schools in rural and village school districts. Special provision having been made for the pupils of the districts where schools are suspended and where the pupils are assigned to other schools, and where the schools are centralized, and for high school pupils, can lead to no other conclusion, it seems to me, than that the said section 7731 applies only to the pupils of elementary schools, and that the transportation of high school pupils being provided for in certain cases will exclude the payment of transportation for high school pupils in all other cases. In other words, a board of education being a body of limited jurisdiction, can do only those things which are authorized by statute.

I therefore advise you that the provisions of section 7731 do not apply to the transportation of high school pupils.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—LEGALITY OF CONTRACT BETWEEN MEMBER AND SAID BOARD, ENTERED INTO PRIOR TO TIME SAID PERSON BECAME MEMBER OF SAID BOARD.

A member of a board of education cannot have an interest in a contract for the transportation of pupils with the board of which he is such member.

One who has a contract for transportation with a board of education relinquishes his interest in such contract when he qualifies and takes his place on such board after being elected thereto.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. WAYNE STILWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your recent request for my opinion reads as follows:

> "A man who received a contract for conveyance of pupils some months ago was elected a member of the board at the recent election. Can he serve as a member of the board and hold his contract or does section 4757 G. C. apply?"

Several questions may naturally arise from the facts contained in your inquiry, the first being: May a member of a board of education have an interest in a contract with the board of which he is such member?

Pertinent to the above is section 4757 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "No member of the board of education shall have directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer. * * * *"

The above quoted language seems very plain and in effect provides that if a person is a member of a board of education, he shall not have any pecuniary interest, either directly or indirectly, in any contract with the board. In this case the board of education has entered into a contract with a certain person (whom we shall designate as A.), in which contract A. agreed to transport the pupils of the district to and from the school or schools therein, and while it is not mentioned in your inquiry, it is only fair to presume that there is a money consideration to be paid to A. for said services. This gives A. a direct interest in the contract and such interest would, on account of the amount to be paid for such services, be a pecuniary interest therein. The contract, of course, is an executory

one. That part of it which has been performed or which can be performed before the first Monday in January, 1918, (which day is the beginning of the terms of new members of the board), is not affected, and it is only to that part of the contract which is covered by whatever services are necessary to be performed and by whatever money is necessary to be paid after the said first Monday in January, 1918, that our attention will be directed.

Assuming for the time being that A. qualifies and takes his place upon the board and that he continues to furnish the services of transportation, and for said services presents his bill to the board for allowance and for an order upon the treasurer, the question then is, can the board act upon the bill, or, in other words, can recovery of the amount so earned, after he is a member as aforesaid, be had?

In placing a construction upon the above quoted language of said section, and in a case in which a person was both a member of a board of education and a member of a partnership which had a contract with the board, it was held in Grant v. Brouse, et al., 1 O. N. P., 145, that:

> "Section 2974 R. S. (4657 G. C.) expressly provides that 'no member of a board shall have any pecuniary interest, either direct or indirect, in any contract of the board.' The real question which arises is, are the acts complained of prohibited by this statute. To us it appears plain that the statute was intended to and does embrace in its prohibition the alleged transaction. 'No member of a board shall have any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board,' seems so plain as not to need construction. The fact that Cornelius A. Brouse was at this time a member of the firm of C. A. Brouse & Company necessarily implies that he had a pecuniary interest in the contract of sale made by the firm with the board, and being so it was a contract the board was prohibited from making and therefore one it had no right to make; nor did it have any right to allow the bill of the firm or draw an order for its payment on the treasurer of the board."

In the above case contract was entered into between the board and the partnership having a common member and the language of said section is given direct application, and it is specifically determined that the board has no right to draw an order for the payment of the bill of the firm.

The same construction would apply equally to our case, and even though the services of transportation were rendered by A. while a member of the board, the board would be powerless to draw an order for the payment for said services.

The case of Grant v. Brouse, supra, was cited with approval in State ex rel v. Egry, 79 O. S., 400, 418, wherein the court uses the following language:

> "In Commonwealth v. The Commissioners of Philadelphia County, 2 S. & R., 195, Tilghman, C. J., in considering the effect of a statute upon the right of the county commissioners to purchase chairs from a member of their own board said: 'The meaning of the law, where the words are ambiguous, may be best known by considering the mischief which it was intended to prevent. Now, it is certain that it is dangerous to permit a body of men entrusted with the public money to purchase from themselves the articles required for the public service, because men are generally partial to themselves, and therefore, inclined to sell their own goods to the best advantage, but being both buyers and sellers they could have the game completely in their own hands. One would suppose, therefore, if words will bear it, that the manner of contracts, either for the sale of goods or employment in the public works, were intended to be prohibited.'"

If the above view is taken in a case in which the language of the statute is ambiguous, it can be urged with much greater force when the language is so clear, plain and explicit as is that which is contained in the statute under consideration.

It seems clear, then, from the above, that a member of a board of education cannot have an interest in a contract with the board of which he is such member, and in this instance the member who has contracted with the board to furnish transportation of pupils comes within the provisions of said statute.

The next question then that naturally arises is, if a person has contracted with the board and the contract is not completed, can he become a member of the board while the contract is in force.

It is within the province of the legislature to say what the qualifications of the members of the boards of education shall be.

Cline v. Martin, 94 O. S., 420;
Mills v. Board of Education, 54 O. S., 631; 9 O. C. C., 134.

The legislature may also say what acts shall stand as a disqualification for membership on a board of education.

29 Cyc., 1380.

At no place in our statute is found language to the effect that a person who has a contract with a board of education shall be by that act alone disqualified from becoming a member of such board. What the statute does say is that no member of a board of education shall have an interest in any contract. If, then, a person who has a contract with a board of education is elected as a member of such board, and after being so elected duly qualifies and takes his place upon such board as a member thereof, he by that act causes a forfeiture and a relinquishment of all his rights under such contract. The contract becomes void and no further rights thereunder can accrue to either the board of education or the member who was formerly a party thereto.

It was held in Bellaire Goblet Co. v. The City of Findlay, et al., 5 O. C. C., 418, 429, and in a case where the same person was a gas trustee and also an officer in a corporation which sold its product to the city that:

"Section 6969 of the Revised Statutes in effect provides that an officer elected or appointed to any office of trust or profit, shall not be interterested in any contract for the purchase of any property under severe penalty.

"Section 7976 of the Revised Statutes provides that an officer or member of the council of any municipal corporation, who is interested directly or indirectly in the profits of any contract, etc., shall be fined or imprisoned, or both.

"So that this dual relation existing as to Mr. Gorby, prevented him from acting upon this so-called contract as a member of the board of gas trustees. The records show he did not act. Yet the board consisted of five members; each one of the members was entitled to be heard, each one of the members was entitled to act, but on account of the personal interest of Mr. Gorby, he could not act, so that in fact five members constituted the board, and in law five members was a legal board, but through the personal interest of Mr. Gorby the board, for the purpose of acting upon this contract, was reduced to four, which was not a legal board, and hence had no power to act.

"It is said by Thurman, Judge, in the case of Bloom v. Richards, 2 Ohio St. 395:

'That the infliction of a penalty for the commission of an act is equivalent to an express prohibition of such act, seems to be settled by a great weight of authority.'

"Also in the case of Doll v. The State, 45 Ohio St., 449, Williams, Judge, says:

'To permit those holding offices of trust or profit to become interested in contracts for the purchase of the property for the use of the state, county or municipality, of which they are officers, might encourage favoritism and fraudulent combinations and practices not easily detected, and thus make such officers charged with the duty of protecting those whose interests are confided to them, instruments of harm. The surest means of preventing this was to prohibit all such contracts.'"

In our case, however, the statute expressly prohibits the act, and therefore any attempt on the part of the board of education and a member to enter into a contract would be invalid. In this instance the great weight of authority is not only followed, but the language of the statute itself wherein the prohibition is contained. If, then, there is no way to prevent the person who has a contract with the board from becoming a member of the board, and if the contract with the board would be an invalid one, then a person who has such contract and does so become a member of the board necessarily invalidates and makes void the contract to which he was a party prior to his becoming a member of the board.

In Pickett v. School District No. 1, etc., 25 Wisc., 551, it is held:

"It is a violation of the trust for several persons, holding together a fiduciary relation to others, to contract with one of their own number in matters relating to such trust. Paine, J., says:

'The general principle upon which this proposition must rest is, that no man can faithfully serve two masters whose interests are in conflict, and as man usually and naturally prefer their own interests to those of others, where one attempts to act in a fiduciary capacity for another, the law will not allow him, while so acting, to deal with himself in his individual capacity.'"

In Cumberland Coal Co. v. Sherman, 30 Barb., 553, Davies, J., uses the following language:

"Neither are the duties or obligations of a director or trustee altered from the circumstances that he is one of a number of directors or trustees, and that this circumstance diminishes his responsibility, or relieves him from any incapacity to deal with the property of his cestui que trust. The same principles apply to him as one of a number, as if he was acting as a sole trustee. * * * * * *

"In the language of the plaintiff's counsel, it is justly said: 'Whether it be a director dealing with the board of which he is a member, or a trustee dealing with his co-trustees and himself, the real party in interest, the principal, is absent; the watchful and effective self-interest of the director or trustee seeking a bargain, is not counteracted by the equally watchful and effective self-interest of the other party, who is there only by his representatives, and the wise policy of the law treats all such cases as that of a trustee dealing with himself.'"

In the case of People v. The Township Board of Overyssel, 11 Mich., 222, Manning, J., said:

"All public officers are agents and their official powers are fiduciary. They are entrusted with public functions for the good of the public—to protect, advance and promote its interests and not their own; and a greater necessity exists than in private life to remove from them every inducement to abuse the trust reposed in them, as the temptations to which they are sometimes exposed are stronger and the risk of detection and exposure is less."

In Waymire et al. v. Powell, et al., 105 Ind., 328, the first syllabus of the case reads:

"A board of county commissioners can make no contract of any kind with one of its members and no legal allowance can be made by such board to a county commissioner for services voluntarily rendered or things voluntarily furnished the county by him."

Mitchell, J., page 352, says:

"Upon every claim that is presented for allowance the county is entitled to the unbiased judgment of its board of commissioners. The law does not yet recognize it as a fact that members of boards of commissioners, or of any other tribunal, can sit as judges in their own cases. * * * *"

It seems clear to me, from the above and many other authorities examined, that no order can be drawn by the board in favor of one of its members for any services which such member would perform, and especially in the face of a statute which specifically prohibits the board from entering into any contract with a member thereof.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that a person who has had a contract with the board of education for the transportation of pupils may be elected to and may become a member of a board of education, but from the time he becomes such member he cannot further carry out the conditions of his contract, for a member of a board of education shall not have, directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board of which he is a member, except as clerk or treasurer.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHICH MAINTAINS NO HIGH SCHOOL—LIABILITY FOR TUITION OF PUPIL WHO ATTENDS IN ANOTHER DISTRICT.

A board of education which maintains no high school is liable for tuition of a high school pupil who attends high school in a district other than in the district of the residence of such pupil, due notice in writing being given to the clerk of the board of education wherein such pupil resides of the name of the school to be attended and the day the attendance is to begin, even if such pupil at the same time attends the normal department of such high school in addition to the regular high school attendance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. JAMES W. DARBY, Prosecuting Attorney, McArthur, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion covers the following statement of facts:

> "Miss W. E., a Boxwell-Patterson graduate from the eighth grade of Huntington township, Gallia county, Ohio, came to Wilkesville county normal school, located at Wilkesville, Vinton county, Ohio, during the term of 1915-16.
> "Mr. L., a high school inspector, visited the county normal school and found that Miss W. E. had only one year of high school work completed. He therefore directed her to take half high school work and half normal work so that she could complete her high school work. This she did for the full eight months of school and received her high school credit for the same. We asked the Huntington township school board to pay her high school tuition, but they have refused to do so on the ground that she was a normal student. The Huntington township school board maintains no high school of any kind. The Wilkesville board asks that the Huntington board pay the above named tuition on the ground that she, Miss E., was a regular high school student, taking up a certain amount of the high school teacher's time and denying that time so taken up to the Wilkesville scholars. * * * *"
> "The question is, can the Wilkesville board of education recover the tuition from the Huntington township board or can it only recover a part?"

Upon my request for additional facts you state that the Huntington township rural school district board of education has entered into no contract with the board of education of the same or an adjoining township for the education of its high school pupils and that the Huntington township rural school district board of education has not paid high school tuition for Miss W. E. for four school years, and that due notice in writing was given to the clerk of the board of education of the Huntington township rural school district that Miss W. E. would attend the Wilkesville high school and the date the attendance was to begin and that the said board of education paid the tuition at said high school for the first half of the school year, and it is only as to the payment for said second half that any question is raised.

Your question involves a consideration of those sections of the General Code which refer to county normal schools and those which refer to the payment of tuition of high school pupils.

Section 7654-1 of the General Code provides:

> "Boards of education which maintain first grade high schools in village or rural districts may establish normal departments in such schools for the training of teachers for village and rural schools. Not more than three such normal schools shall be established in any one county school district, and not more than one such department shall be maintained in any village or rural district. At least one such school in each county shall be located in a rural district or in a village with less than 1,500 population, and not more than one such school in each county shall be located in a village having a population of 1,500 or more. Schools desiring such a department shall make application therefor to the superintendent of public instruction and a copy of such application shall be filed with the county superintendent. The superintendent of public instruction shall examine all applications and shall designate such schools as may establish such departments."

It is a condition precedent, therefore, that the board of education which desires to establish a normal department in the schools of its district shall maintain a first grade high school and that the normal department is operated as a department of such first grade high school for the training of teachers for village and rural schools.

Section 7654-2 G. C. provides:

"Each high school normal department shall offer at least a one-year course for the training of teachers. The entrance requirements of such departments shall be fixed by the superintendent of public instruction. Such departments may offer short courses during the school year, but shall not offer summer courses unless practice departments are maintained during such courses."

Section 7654-5 G. C. provides:

"The board of education in any village or rural school district which maintains a normal training department approved by the superintendent of public instruction shall receive from the state the cost of maintaining such department in a sum not to exceed one thousand dollars per annum for each school so maintained. Such amount shall be allowed by the auditor of state upon the approval of the superintendent of public instruction * * *."

So that, where the board of education does maintain such normal training department in connection with and as a part of a first grade high school, the cost of so maintaining such department shall be paid by the state, provided such cost does not exceed the sum of one thousand dollars per annum. Nothing is said in any of the aforesaid sections with reference to the payment of tuition and none can be charged and collected in such normal training department. Therefore whatever tuition may be charged, if any is charged, must be in connection with the high school work outside of the normal training department, and it is then as to that part of your inquiry that my attention shall now be directed.

Tuition of pupils who are eligible to attend high schools is provided for by section 7747 et seq., of the General Code. Section 7747 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 621, reads:

"The tuition of pupils who are eligible for admission to high school and who reside in village or rural districts, in which no high school is maintained, shall be paid by the board of education of the school district in which they have legal school residence, such tuition to be computed by the month. An attendance any part of the month shall create a liability for the entire month. No more shall be charged per capita than the amount ascertained by dividing the total expenses of conducting the high school of the district attended, which may include charges not exceeding five per cent per annum and depreciation charges not exceeding five per cent per annum, based upon the actual value of all property used in conducting said high school by the average monthly enrollment in the high school of the district. The district superintendent shall certify to the county superintendent each year the names of all pupils in his supervision district who have completed the elementary school work, and are eligible for admission to high school. The county superintendent shall thereupon issue to each pupil so certified a certificate of promotion which shall entitle the holder to admission to any high school. Such certificate shall be furnished by the superintendent of public instruction."

This section gives the authority generally for the collection of high school tuition by one board of education from another board of education which maintains or provides no high school. But before the last mentioned board, that is the board of education of the residence of such pupil, can be charged such tuition, a notice in writing must be given to the clerk of the board of education in which the pupil resides, in which notice the name of the school to be attended and the date of attendance is to begin shall be stated, and the notice shall be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of attendance. Said provision is found in section 7750 G. C., which provides in part as follows:

"* * * In case no such agreement is entered into, the school to be attended can be selected by the pupil holding a diploma, if due notice in writing is given to the clerk of the board of education of the name of the school to be attended and the date the attendance is to begin such notice to be filed not less than five days previous to the beginning of attendance."

You state that such due notice in writing was given to the clerk of the board of education of the Huntington township rural school district that said Miss W. E. would attend the Wilkesville high school and that the first half of her tuition at such school was paid, but refusal is made as to the last half year on the ground that said student was enrolled in the normal department of said high school at the same time she was taking her high school work. I know of nothing in the statutes that relates to the payment of tuition for high school pupils which compels any high school student to take any particular class or amount of work at a high school in order that the tuition of such pupil may be collected from the board of education of the district in which such pupil resides when such board of education of the residence of such pupil maintains no high school.

It is provided in section 7748 G. C. that no board of education is required to pay the tuition of any pupil for more than four school years and that if the board of education maintains a third grade high school it shall only be required to pay the tuition of graduates from such school at a first grade high school for two years, or at a second grade high school for one year, except that where pupils which reside in the district prefer not to attend a third grade high school, then the board shall pay the tuition at a first grade high school for four years, or a second grade high school for three years and a first grade high school for one year. But there is nothing in any of said sections which prevents a pupil from attending a first grade high school for any number of years over four. The only condition is that the board shall not be required to pay the tuition for more than four years. Manifestly, then, if in your case Miss W. E., who was entitled to attend the high school, could take whatever work she desired or was capable of taking in said high school, and the board of education maintaining such high school was entitled to tuition on account of the attendance of such pupil, the fact that she took work in the normal department, in addition to the high school work, is no bar to the claim for tuition because you state as a fact in your letter that she received her high school credit for the full eight months' work taken by her in the high school. That said pupil was also a student in the normal department made her no less a student in attendance at the regular high school outside of such normal department. She attended the classes in such high school. She received instruction at said high school and she procured her full year's credit just the same as though she had not been in attendance at the normal department. Now the board of education of the district of her residence could justify its action in paying one-half of the year's tuition and then refuse to pay the other half is not explained.

I can come to but one conclusion and that is that the Wilkesville board of education is entitled to recover for the tuition of Miss W. E. from the board of education of the district of her residence for the last half of said school year.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIABILITY OF OFFICER OF MUNICIPAL WATERWORKS—FOR FURNISHING WATER TO PERSONS AND INSTITUTIONS WITHOUT CHARGE AND WITHOUT AUTHORITY OF LAW.

Where departments, institutions or individuals receive water from a municipal waterworks without charge and without authority of law, the officer responsible for the management of such waterworks may be held civilly liable for water so furnished, and a reasonably accurate estimate of the water so furnished, based upon the circumstances of each particular case, may be the basis of recovery.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date, you submit the following question for answer:

> "Our examiners of public utilities have ascertained for a long time past that much water is furnished free by the waterworks departments of various cities in addition to such water as may be furnished free under the provisions of section 3963 G. C. As such water is furnished without any method of measurement, the financial value could not be ascertained and would be most difficult to estimate in numerous cases. In fact, it could not be safely estimated. We have criticised this for a long time, and while we have made correction in certain instances, we have been unable to cause correction in others.
> Question: Can departments, institutions or individuals receiving such water without authority of law, or the officer responsible for the conduct of the waterworks, or both, be held financially responsible for such free water on an estimate which might be made but could not be definitely verified?"

Your question involves a construction of the provisions of section 3963 General Code. This section provides as follows:

> "No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes, the cleaning of market houses, the use of any public building belonging to the corporation, or any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institutions, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons, or orphan or delinquent children, or for the use of public school buildings; but, in any case where the said school building, or buildings, are situated within a village or cities, and the boundaries of the school district include territory not within the boundaries of the village or cities in which said building, or buildings, are located, then the directors of such school district shall pay the village or cities for the water furnished for said building or buildings."

This section enumerates the purposes for which a city or village may furnish water free of charge. The enumeration of these purposes excludes all others. There is, therefore, an implied duty placed upon those in charge of a municipal water plant to charge all other persons for water received by them.

This was the holding of Honorable U. G. Denman, attorney-general, in an opinion to your department under date of May 16, 1910, and recorded in the attorney general's report for 1910, at page 376. A like holding was made by Honorable T. S. Hogan, attorney-general, in an opinion to Honorable Stanley K. Henshaw, under date of June 26, 1912, and recorded in volume 2, page 1979, of the reports of the attorney-general for the year 1912.

You state that in a number of instances officers have been furnishing water free of charge to others than those mentioned in section 3963 General Code, and you inquire as to the civil liability of those who receive water without charge and of the officer who is guilty of furnishing such water free of charge without authority of law.

Where persons or institutions receive service from a municipal corporation free of charge, which under the statutes is to be paid for, such persons or institutions would be required to pay the usual charge made to other persons for such service. There is an implied contract to pay what such service is reasonably worth.

Under the provisions of section 4326 General Code, the director of public service is given the management of the municipal waterworks. This section reads as follows:

"The director of public service shall manage municipal water, lighting, heating, power, garbage and other undertakings of the city, parks, baths, playgrounds, market houses, cemeteries, crematories, sewage disposal plants and farms, and shall make and preserve surveys, maps, plans, drawings and estimates. He shall supervise the construction and have charge of the maintenance of public buildings and other property of the corporation not otherwise provided for in this title. He shall have the management of all other matters provided by the council in connection with the public service of the city."

This section places upon the director of public service the duty of managing the waterworks plant of the city and to collect for the service rendered, unless he is authorized by section 3963 General Code, to furnish water free of charge.

Therefore, if such officer furnishes water to persons or institutions without charge, in violation of law, after attention is called thereto by your examiners, he would also be civilly liable to the municipality for any and all losses incurred by his official conduct.

You state that it is not now possible to ascertain the exact amount of water used by these individuals and institutions. Under such circumstances, it is permissible to make a reasonable estimate of the amount of water consumed. Such estimate must be based upon such facts as might be reasonably ascertained; for example, the size of the pipe supplying such water, the length of time the water is used and the continuous or intermittent use of the water, or any other circumstance that would tend to show the amount of water consumed.

If the municipality has a flat rate for charges to consumers who have no meters, such flat rate would apply. If there is no flat rate, then a reasonably accurate estimate of the amount of water used would be sufficient upon which to base a recovery.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STREET IMPROVEMENT—COUNCIL CANNOT PROVIDE FOR BOND ISSUE FOR CITY'S SHARE OF COST OF BOND ISSUE IN ANTICIPATION OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENT FOR PROPERTY OWNERS' SHARE.

It would be illegal for a city council to provide in one ordinance for an issue of bonds for the city's portion of the cost and expense of a street improvement and for an issue of bonds in anticipation of special assessments for the property owners' share, since there should be separate and distinct ordinances or legislation for each particular issue.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You submit for my opinion the following request:

> "The city's portion of a special assessment improvement is a general bonded debt, when covered by bond issue, the property owners' portion, of course, being assessment bonded debt. The records of the sinking fund to be consistent would have to treat the general portion separate and distinct from the assessment portion.
> QUESTION: Is it legal for the officers of a municipality to combine the city's portion and the property owners' portion into one, and issue bond or bonds covering both; in other words, a combined bond issue?"

Section 3821 G. C. provides:

> "A municipality may issue and sell bonds as other bonds are sold to pay the corporation's part of any such improvement, and may levy taxes in addition to all other taxes authorized by law to pay such bonds and the interest thereon."

Section 3939 G. C., as amended 107 Ohio Laws, 553, reads, in part:

> "When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. per annum, as said council may determine and in the manner provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes:

22. For resurfacing, repairing or improving any existing street or streets as well as other public highways.

23. For opening, widening and extending any street or public highway.

24. For purchasing or condemning any land necessary for street or highway purposes, and for improving it or paying any portion of the cost of such improvement.

* * * *"

A city may provide under either of the foregoing sections for its share of the cost of a particular street improvement.

Heffner v. City of Toledo, 75 O. S. 413.

Section 3914 G. C. provides for the issuing of bonds for the property owners' share in anticipation of special assessments, and reads as follows:

"Municipal corporations may issue bonds in anticipation of special assessments. Such bonds may be in sufficient amount to pay the estimated cost and expense of the improvement for which the assessments are levied. In the issuance and sale of such bonds the municipality shall be governed by all restrictions and limitations with respect to the issuance and sale of other bonds, and the assessments as paid shall be applied to the liquidation of such bonds."

It is also provided in said section 3914 that the assessments as paid shall be applied to the liquidation of such bonds.

Section 3892 G. C. reads:

"When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

The latter section provides for the collection of special assessments in anticipation of which bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued, and requires that said assessments when collected shall be paid to the treasurer of the corporation and applied by him to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose.

Section 3949 G. C. provides:

"The 'net indebtedness' prescribed in sections three and ten (G. C. sections 3941 and 3948) of this act shall be the difference between the par value of the outstanding and unpaid bonds and the amount held in the sinking fund for their redemption. In ascertaining the limitations of one per cent, four per cent and eight per cent herein prescribed, the following bonds shall not be considered:

a. Bonds issued prior to April 29, 1902.

b. Bonds issued to refund, extend the time of payment of, or in exchange for, bonds representing an indebtedness created or incurred prior to April 29, 1902.

c. Bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, either in original or refunded form.

d. Bonds issued for the payment of obligations arising through emergencies caused by epidemics, floods or other forces of nature.

e. Bonds issued to meet deficiencies in the revenues, as provided for in section 3931 of the General Code.

f. Bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing, constructing, improving and extending waterworks when the income from such waterworks is sufficient to cover the cost of all operating expenses, interest charges and to pass a sufficient amount to a sinking fund to retire such bonds when they become due."

It might be well to state that while the above quoted section has not been expressly amended, the limitations of one per cent, four per cent and eight per cent have been changed by the operation of other sections. Under the provisions of section 3940 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 578, the one per cent limitation was changed to one-half per cent, and under the provisions of section 3952 G. C. on and after October 1, 1911, the four per cent limitation was reduced to two and one-half per cent and the eight per cent limitation to five per cent.

It is obvious from the provisions of said last quoted section that bonds issued in anticipation of the collection of special assessments, either in original or refunded form, are placed in a different classification from other bonds in considering what is meant by the "net indebtedness" of a municipality.

From all the foregoing sections from which quotations have been made and to which reference has been had heretofore it is gathered that the legislature has provided one scheme for bonds that are issued to provide funds for the city's share of a street improvement on the assessment plan, and a different one for bonds that are issued in anticipation of special assessments for the property owners' share. In view of this fact it would seem to follow that the legislature intended that there should be a separate proceeding in respect to the issue of each particular kind of bonds. If such had not been the intention of the legislature it would have been unnecessary for it to enact all of the separate and distinct provisions for each particular kind of bonds.

Our supreme court in the case of Gas and Water Co. v. City of Elyria, 57 O. S., 374, had occasion to consider the question of the right of the city council to provide in one piece of legislation or proceeding for the issue of bonds for the purchase of waterworks and the erection of a new waterworks. Branch 4 of the syllabus reads as follows:

"The purchase of waterworks, and the erection of new ones, are distinct measures, requiring different proceedings; and a resolution of council which combines both as one, and provides for the submission, in that form, of the question of the issue and sale of the bonds of the municipality for both purposes combined, is unauthorized, and ineffectual for either purpose; nor can it be made effectual for either, by the elimination of the other in the proceedings subsequent to the resolution. It is the policy of the statute that each measure for which it is proposed to issue and sell the bonds of the corporation shall stand on its own merits, unaided by combination with others, and that it be voted upon as an independent measure, by the council and electors, uninfluenced by such combination."

In view of all the foregoing, then, I advise you that it is my opinion that it would be illegal for a city council to provide in one ordinance for an issue of bonds for the city's portion of the cost and expense of a street improvement and for an issue of bonds in anticipation of special assessments for the property owners' share, since there should be separate and distinct ordinances or legislation for each particular issue.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CORPORATIONS—MAY INCREASE PREFERRED STOCK WITHOUT AMENDING ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION—CHANGES IN PREFERENCES, RESTRICTIONS, ETC., MUST BE EFFECTED BY AMENDMENT OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

Though a corporation in this state may increase its preferred stock without amending its articles of incorporation, such increased preferred stock will carry the same dividend rate and be entitled to the same preferences and be subject to the same restrictions, designations, etc., applicable to the preferred stock originally provided for in the articles of incorporation, and that any change in the dividend rate of such increased preferred stock or in the preferences, restrictions, designations, etc., to which the same is entitled or subject must be effected by amendment of the articles of incorporation by proceedings to amend such articles in the manner provided in section 8719 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you under date of December 13, 1917, in which you say:

"I desire an opinion from your department whether this department may receive and file an increase of capital stock without an amendment to the articles of a corporation, increasing the preferred stock which is already provided for in the articles of incorporation; the new increase, however, having a different yearly dividend and different designations, preferences, restrictions, etc., from the preferred stock previously provided for in the articles."

I am advised by a representative of your department that the corporation in question is one that has been organized for some time and that by its articles of incorporation it has both common and preferred stock, and it appears that the corporation desires to increase the amount of its authorized preferred stock, such new issue of preferred stock to carry a different dividend rate and otherwise to be entitled to different preferences and to be subject to different restrictions, designations, etc., from those applying to its present authorized issue of preferred stock.

The dividend rate, preferences, restrictions, designations, etc., applicable to the present preferred stock of said company as stated in its articles of incorporation are such as are authorized by the provisions of sections 8668 and 8669 General Code, and before the amendment of the last named section in 107 O. L. 411 these sections read as follows:

> "Sec. 8668. When the capital stock is to be both common and preferred, it may be provided in the articles of incorporation that the holders of the preferred stock shall be entitled to yearly dividends of not more than eight per cent, payable quarterly, half yearly, or yearly out of the surplus profits of the company each year in preference to all other stockholders. Such dividends also may be made cumulative."
> "8669. A corporation issuing both common and preferred stock may create designations, preferences, and voting powers, or restrictions or qualifications thereof, in the certificate of incorporation, and if desired, preferred stock may be made subject to redemption at not less than par, at a fixed time and price, to be expressed in the stock certificates thereof."

The matter of increase of the authorized capital stock of corporations in this state is now provided for by section 8698 General Code as amended 107 O. L. 414. Applicable to the question at hand this section provides, in part, as follows:

> After the organization of the corporation, if its authorized common stock is fully subscribed for and an installment of ten per cent on each share of stock has been paid thereon, the common stock may be increased by a vote of the holders of a majority of all its stock, at a stockholder's meeting called by a majority of its directors, at least thirty days' notice of the time, place and object of which has been given by publication in some newspaper of general circulation and by letter addressed to each stockholder whose place of residence is known.
> After the organization of the corporation, the authorized capital stock may be increased at any time by issuing preferred stock, within the limits permitted by law, upon the written consent of three-fourths of all of its stockholders, representing at least three-fourths of both its subscribed and issued capital stock.
> After the organization of the corporation, if its authorized common stock is fully subscribed for and an installment of ten per cent on each share of such stock has been paid thereon, the authorized capital stock may also be increased by both common and preferred stock or common only, at a meeting of the stockholders at which all are present in person or by proxy and waive in writing notice of such meeting and also agree in writing to such increase, naming the amount thereof and the proportion of common and preferred stock when both are increased. In increasing the authorized capital stock at any time by both common and preferred, the total authorized preferred stock of such corporation after such increase shall not exceed the limits provided by law.

Whenever after organization a corporation increases its capital stock, the president and secretary thereof shall file a certificate setting forth the action taken and the amount of the increase, showing the proportion of common and preferred stock when both are increased, with the secretary of state, and no corporation shall issue or dispose of such increased stock until such certificate is filed. If the original articles of incorporation do not provide for preferred stock a certificate of increase providing for preferred stock shall not be filed unless accompanied by a certificate of amendment to the articles of incorporation providing for the preferred stock, which shall be filed and recorded in the manner provided by law.

For the purposes of this section restrictions or limitations on the voting power of any of the authorized capital stock shall not apply; and no increase of the authorized capital stock shall be made by increasing the par value of the shares."

The provisions above noted authorize an increase in either the common or preferred stock of a corporation, or of both, but there is nothing in said provisions authorizing an increase in the preferred stock of a corporation which authorizes any change whatever in the provisions of the articles of incorporation with respect to the rate of dividend, preferences, restrictions, designations, etc., applicable to the preferred stock of the corporation, and clearly any increase in the preferred stock of the corporation by proceedings under the above quoted provisions of section 8698 G. C. would be entitled to the same dividend and preferences and be subject to the same restrictions and other designations provided for in the articles of incorporation, and any changes that may be desired as to such increased preferred stock with respect to the matter of dividends, preferences, restrictions, designations, etc., can be effected only by an amendment of the articles of incorporation.

"Where the method of dividing profits between preferred and ordinary shareholders is fixed by the incorporation paper, no alteration therein can be made (unless in the method, if any, provided by law for altering that instrument); and this is true although the relative rights of shareholders are not required by law to be determined by that instrument."

Machen Modern Law of Corporations, Volume 1, Section 536.

In this connection it will be noted from the provisions of sections 8668, 8669 and 8698 of the General Code that in this state the relative rights of shareholders of common and preferred stock, other than those prescribed by law, are required to be determined, if at all, by the articles of incorporation.

Full power to effect the purposes of the corporation in question with respect to its increased preferred stock is provided by section 8719 General Code, as amended 107 O. L. 415. This section provides:

"Sec. 8719. A corporation organized under the general corporation laws of the state may amend its articles of incorporation as follows:

4. So as to increase or decrease the number of shares into which its capital stock is divided; to provide for preferred stock, or dispense with unissued preferred stock; to change unissued common stock to preferred stock, within the limits permitted by law; to change unissued preferred stock to common stock; to add any or all of the provisions permitted by sections 8668 and 8669 of the General Code, or to make new provisions of such nature with respect to newly authorized preferred stock; or to amend or eliminate such provisions as to unissued preferred stock; or to add to the articles anything omitted from, or which lawfully might have been provided for originally, or to take out of the articles any unnecessary provisions or provisions which might lawfully have been omitted from them originally. But the authorized capital stock of a corporation shall not be increased or diminished by such amendment."

Answering your question specifically, therefore, on a consideration of the statutory provisions applicable thereto, I am of the opinion that though a corporation in this state may increase its preferred stock without amending its articles of incorporation, such increased preferred stock will carry the same dividend rate and be entitled to the same preferences and be subject to the same restrictions, designations, etc., applicable to the preferred stock originally provided for in the articles of incorporation, and that any change in the dividend rate of such increased preferred stock or in the preferences, restrictions, designations, etc., to which the same is entitled or subject must be effected by amendment of the articles of incorporation by proceedings to amend such articles in the manner provided in section 8719 General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PRIVATE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES—CONTRACT IN VIOLATION OF ACT REGULATING SAME.

The act regulating private employment agencies covers persons, firms or corporations who agree to help others to find employment as teachers where a fee is charged for such service.

A contract to furnish services to secure employment or help for the applicant, which contract contains provisions for the furnishing of other services to be performed for such applicant at a fee in excess of two dollars is in violation of the provisions of the act regulating private employment agencies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you submitted the following inquiry to this department for answer:

"The commission desires your opinion as to whether a person, firm or corporation that charges a fee to applicants for employment on a contract enforcing the purchase of other business features at a price exceeding $2.00, is entitled to a license to operate a private employment agency."

There is submitted with your inquiry a brief by Messrs. Doud, Crawfis, Bradford and Dones, attorneys at law, on behalf of their clients covering the question which you submit, and other questions in reference to an application for license as an employment agency.

The brief of counsel and the circular and other printed matter have been carefully considered. Many questions are raised by the attorneys above named, which you do not submit to this department.

The particular question submitted appears to arise from a contract to furnish to teachers certain service. In this contract, a copy of which is submitted, the service to be given or rendered is divided into seven classes as follows: Correspondence, lectures, privileges, agency, compensation, purchase discounts and identification card.

Your question arises under the classification of service termed "Agency." This is the fourth class of service and reads as follows:

> "Assistance in finding a teaching position. Uniting the superintendents' wants and the teachers' desires in one common medium of service without cost to the teacher."

Under this paragraph the corporation or club as it is called agrees to aid persons in finding positions as teachers. The entire service is rendered at a cost greatly in excess of $2.00, and there is no provision for a person to contract for any one branch of the service, but he must contract for the seven classes at the fee fixed.

A substitute clause is submitted wherein it is attempted to designate that a certain sum being less than $2.00 is to constitute the fee for the agency service, but there is no provision therein which will permit any one to secure the agency service at the fee fixed, independent of the other service to be contracted for. In other words, the sum designated for the agency service is an arbitrary one which cannot be taken advantage of by any one unless the entire fee for the seven classes of service is paid. This fee is greatly in excess of the $2.00 specified in the act regulating private employment agencies.

> "No person, firm or corporation shall open, operate or maintain a private employment agency for hire, or in which a fee is charged an applicant for employment or an applicant for help, without obtaining a license from the commissioner of labor statistics, and paying to him a fee according to the population of the municipality as shown by the last preceding federal census, viz:
> | | |
> |---|---|
> | In cities of 50,000 and upward | $100 00 |
> | In cities of 16,000 to 50,000 | 75 00 |
> | In cities of less than 16,000 | 50 00 |
> | In villages | 25 00 |
> The commissioner may refuse to issue or renew a license to an applicant if, in his judgment, such applicant has violated the law relating to private employment agencies, or is not of good moral character."

This section covers all persons, firms or corporations which charge a fee to an applicant for employment or an applicant for help.

In section 894 General Code the term "applicant for employment" is defined. This section reads:

> "The term 'applicant for employment' as used in the laws governing private employment agencies shall mean any person seeking work of a moral character, and 'applicant for help' shall mean any person seeking help in any legitimate enterprise. Nothing in such laws shall limit the meaning of the term 'work' to manual labor, but it shall include professional service and all other legitimate service. All moneys received from fees and fines as provided by the laws governing private employment agencies, shall be paid into the state treasury by the commissioner of labor statistics in the manner provided by law."

Although you do not submit the question it is contended in the brief of the attorneys above named that this act does not apply to persons seeking positions for others as teachers. This contention is not sound. The act clearly contemplates that all persons who aid others in securing work, whether that work be of manual labor or for professional service, shall be included within the terms of the act where a fee is charged the applicant for such service.

It is clear therefore that the act will cover persons or corporations who agree to help others to find employment as teachers.

Under the provisions of section 890 General Code, a limit is placed upon the amount that may be charged to applicants seeking employment. This section reads as follows:

"When a registration fee is charged for receiving or filing applications for employment or help, it shall not exceed two dollars, for which a receipt shall be given containing the date, name of applicant, amount of fee and character of employment or help desired. If the applicant does not obtain a situation or employment through the agency within one month after registration, and makes a demand therefor within thirty days after the expiration of such period, the fee paid by him shall be returned to the applicant by the person in charge of the employment agency."

The fee herein fixed shall not exceed two dollars.
Section 893 General Code reads as follows:

"Except an employment agency of a charitable organization, a person, firm or corporation furnishing or agreeing to furnish employment or help, or displaying a sign or bulletin, or offering to furnish employment or help through the medium of a circular, card or pamphlet, shall be deemed a private agency, and subject to the laws governing such agencies."

The copy of contract submitted is a printed form upon the back of which is contained certain information which may be designated a circular or pamphlet within the meaning of the above section.

It is my opinion that the contract submitted comes clearly within the provisions of the act regulating private employment agencies.

This act was enacted for the purpose of alleviating certain evils which had arisen in the business of seeking positions for others for hire. These statutes provide the manner in which private employment agencies may conduct their business. A limitation is placed upon the charge that may be made for receiving or filing applications for employment or help. Any provision of a contract by which a larger fee would be secured for receiving or filing such applications would be in violation of section 890 General Code.

In the present case other services are rendered for which a fee may be legally made, but this fee is in excess of the two dollar limitation contained in the act now under consideration. There is no provision which specifies the amount that is charged for the agency service, or that permits any person to secure the agency service independent of the other services rendered.

To permit persons to combine service as an employment agency with other services, at a fee in excess of two dollars, where the agency service could not be secured independently at a fee of two dollars or less as limited by section 890 General Code, would lay down the bars and permit various subterfuges by which the provisions regulating private employment agencies could easily be evaded. This would tend to bring about the same conditions which existed prior to the enactment of this act, which condition this act sought to remedy.

It is my opinion that a contract to furnish services to secure employment or help for the applicant, which contract contains provisions for the furnishing of other services to be performed for such applicant at a fee in excess of two dollars, is in violation of the provisions of the act regulating private employment agencies.

You ask further whether or not a person, firm or corporation entering into such a contract is entitled to a license to operate as a private employment agency. Persons or firms entering into such contracts if granted a license could not continue their present form of contract. The service as an employment agent should be independent of any other service unless the fee for all services rendered would come within the limitation fixed by section 890 General Code.

It is within the discretion of your department to determine the persons who shall be entitled to a license to operate a private employment agency. From the conclusions above reached you can determine the right of the person in question to secure such a license.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—EFFECT OF FAILURE TO ELECT MEMBER FOR SHORT TERM IN JANUARY, 1913, UNDER JUNG-SMALL LAW —IN CASE NO ELECTION IS HELD—OLD MEMBER HOLDS OVER—WHEN PERSONS ARE CANDIDATES FOR RE-ELECTION BEFORE EXPIRATION OF TERM—DOES NOT EFFECT PROPERLY ELECTED CANDIDATES.

Where there is a failure to elect a member of a board of education for the short term under the provisions of the Jung-Small school board law in 1913, no such election can be had for such short term thereafter.

In case there is no election for a member of a board of education, the old member will hold over for the full term of four years.

Where the present members of a board of education, whose terms do not expire, are candidates for re-election, but who do not receive sufficient votes to be elected, the fact that they were such candidates can make no difference in the election of those persons who were properly elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 5, 1918.

HON. OTHO W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

"I desire your opinion on the matters hereinafter set forth, relative to the board of education of the Galion city school district.

"On August 25, 1913, the board of education adopted the following resolution:

'RESOLUTION

Reorganizing the board of education of the Galion city school district so as to comply with the provisions and requirements of the General Code of the state of Ohio.

Be it resolved by the board of education of the Galion city school district, state of Ohio:

That in full compliance with the requirements of section 4698, both inclusive of the General Code of the state of Ohio, the board of education of said Galion city school district be reorganized and composed as follows: All members in office at the time this resolution takes effect shall serve the unexpired terms for which they were respectively elected and until their successors are elected and qualified. To fill the place of the three (3) members of the board of education whose terms expire on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914, two (2) members of said board shall be elected at the general election for the year 1913, so as to reduce said board to five (5) members, and on and after said last mentioned date the board of education of the Galion city school district, state of Ohio, shall be composed of five (5) members, who shall possess the qualifications required by law and shall be elected at large by the qualified electors of said school district.

To further carry out the intent and purposes of the provisions of the General Code above referred to it is hereby provided that the two (2) members of said board to be elected in the year 1913 be elected each for a term of four (4) years. At the general election for the year 1915, three members of said board shall be elected, one of said members for a term of two years (2), and each of said other two (2) members for a term of four (4) years. In the years following the year 1915, two (2) members shall be elected in the year preceding, and three (3) members shall be elected in the year following the calendar year divisible by four, and their terms shall be for four (4) years each and until their successors are elected and qualified.

That the clerk of this board is hereby authorized and directed to notify the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of the passage of this resolution, by mailing a copy of this resolution to said board.

Passed August 25, 1913.

On the _____ day of _____, 1917, this resolution was amended, as follows:

'RESOLUTION

Amending the resolution of August 25, 1913, reorganizing the board of education of the Galion city school district so as to comply with the provisions and requirements of the General Code of the state of Ohio, by providing for the election of five (5) members of said city school district in 1917, at the general election for the said year.

Whereas, it is provided by the General Code of Ohio and by resolution of the board of education of the Galion city school district, that said board of education shall be composed of five (5) members elected for a term of four (4) years each, and until their successors are elected and qualified; and,

Whereas, at the general election in November, 1915, one member should have been elected for a term of two (2) years and two members for a term of four (4) years each, but by error in the preparation of the ticket at said election of 1915, there was no valid election for members of said board of education at said election, and it now becomes necessary at the general election in November, 1917, to elect three (3) members of said board of education for a term of two (2) years each from the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1918, to fill out unexpired terms of members of said board of education, and two (2) members for the full term of four (4) years each from the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1918, now, therefore,

Be it resolved by the board of education of the Galion city school district, three-fourths (¾) of all the members thereto concurring:

That said resolution of August 25, 1913, reorganizing the board of education of the Galion city school district, etc., be and it hereby is amended so as to provide for the general election in November, 1917, as follows:

That three (3) members of the board of education of the Galion city school district shall be elected at the general election in November, 1917, for the term of two (2) years from the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1918, and two (2) members of said board of education shall be elected at said general election in November, 1917, for the term of four (4) years from the day preceding said first Monday in January, 1918.

That the clerk of this board is hereby authorized and directed to notify the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of the passage of this resolution, by mailing a copy of this resolution to said board.

As the facts are given to me, they are about as follows:

In the year 1915 the board of education was composed of the following members, whose respective terms expired as here indicated:

E. J. Gelsenleiter, term expiring first Monday in January, 1916;

J. L. Gugler, term expiring first Monday in January, 1916;

C. C. Coyle, term expiring first Monday in January, 1916;

B. E. Place, term expiring first Monday in January, 1918;

J. J. Schaefer, term expiring first Monday in January, 1918.

An election was had in November of 1915, at which election three members, as it was supposed, were to have been elected, and according to the resolution adopted on August 25, 1913, one of the three to be elected should be elected for two years, and two of the three to be elected should be elected for the term of four years. The ballot was silent as to this long and short term, and for some reason or other, I do not know the facts, but anyway, they were advised that the election was invalid, for the reason that the ballot did not indicate this long and short term. The three receiving the highest number of votes, however, in 1915, were C. C. Coyle, Albert

Helfrich and Theodore Poister. C. C. Coyle, being one of the three that received the highest number of votes at the election in 1915, is the same C. C. Coyle that was already on the board, whose term expired on the first Monday of January, 1916. Helfrich and Poister were new members. But, being advised by the attorney general's office that the election held in November, 1915, was invalid, E. J. Gelsenleiter, J. L. Gugler and C. C. Coyle held over. No one of the three newly elected members attempted to qualify under that election. Hence, these three men have ever since been acting on this board of education.

In the November election, 1917, it was supposed that there would be elected five members on this board of education. That is to say, that the three members who were holding over would only hold over until such time as their successors could be elected and qualified, this being presumptively in November of 1917, and the terms of B. E. Place and J. J. Schaefer expiring on the first Monday of January, 1918, made it necessary to elect an entirely new board of education. So in November, 1917, there were eleven candidates, B. E. Place (now on board), A. J. Helfrich, F. E. Cook, E. J. Gelsenleiter (now on board), J. L. Gugler (now on board), J. J. Schaefer (now on board), C. C. Coyle (now on board), Carl Monat, M. G. Nungesser, Ralph Sloan and O. L. Huffman.

You will note that all of the five present members of this board were on this ballot in November of 1917. At the election of November, 1917, the vote stood as follows:

B. E. Place	716
A. J. Helfrich	595
F. E. Cook	592
E. J. Gelsenleiter	544
J. L. Gugler	542
J. J. Schaefer	541
C. C. Coyle	489
Carl Monat	486
M. G. Nungesser	453
Ralph Sloan	310
O. L. Huffman	254

The first question naturally arising is as to whether or not E. J. Gelsenleiter, J. L. Gugler and C. C. Coyle are holding over for only two years, or whether it is for four years. If they do hold over, what effect would it have on the ballot in November, 1917, if any, their names being on the ballot?

Second, were there to be five members, or only two members elected in November, 1917?

Third, under the foregoing facts, who is the newly elected board of education, and to whom should certificates of election be issued; or, by reason of the facts above mentioned, is it possible that the entire election held in November of 1917 would be void?

Having the facts fully before you, I believe, I will ask you for a full consideration thereof, and that you give me your opinion, answering the questions above asked, and such others as may suggest themselves to you, that this matter may be fully straightened out."

The resolution of the board of education of the city school district of Galion,

Ohio, which was passed on August 25, 1913, was an endeavor on the part of the board to comply with the provisions of what is commonly known as the Jung-Small school law, as found in 103 O. L., 275.

Section 4689 G. C., as therein amended, provides in part:

> "In city school districts containing according to the federal census a population of less than fifty thousand persons, the board of education shall consist of not less than three members nor more than five members elected at large by the qualified electors of such district."

The city of Galion comes within said class, that is, it is now and was in 1913 a city of less than 50,000 persons.

Section 4699 G. C., as amended in said act, provides:

> "Within thirty days after this act shall take effect the board of education of each and every city school district in which the number of members does not conform to the provisions of section 4689, shall by resolution determine within the limits prescribed by said section the number of members of said board of education. Said resolution shall provide for the classification of the terms of members so that they will conform to the provisions of section 4702, General Code, taking into consideration the terms of office of existing members whose terms do not expire or terminate on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914. * * *"

In your case the terms of three members of the board of education expired on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914.

Section 4701 G. C. of said act provides:

> "Whenever the number of members of the board of education of a city school district, as fixed by the resolution provided for in section 4699, shall be more than the number of members whose terms expire or terminate on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914, the additional members of such board shall be elected at the general school election in the year 1913 for such terms of two or four years as may be necessary to comply with the two provisions of sections 4698 and 4702."

The number of members of the board of education of such city school district was fixed at five and it was provided that two members of the board should be elected at the general election in 1913 for a term of four years.

General Code section 4702, as amended in said act, provides:

> "The term of office of all members of boards of education in city school districts, except as provided in section 4701, shall be four years. All members in office at the time this act takes effect shall serve the unexpired portions of the terms for which they were respectively elected and until their successors are elected and qualified, unless their terms shall expire or shall have been terminated as provided by sections 4698 and 4701.
> If the number of members of a board of education of any city school district to be elected at large as fixed pursuant to section 4699 be * * * odd, one-half of the remainder after diminishing the number by one shall be elected in the year preceding, and the remaining number shall be elected in the year following the calendar year divisible by four. * * *"

It was further provided by the resolution of said board that the remaining three members of the board who were not elected in 1913 should be elected in 1915, one of said members for a term of two years and the other two members for terms of four years, and that thereafter three members of such board shall be elected in the year following the calendar year divisible by four and for a term of four years. At the election in 1915 three members were elected but failed to qualify and the old members held over. At the November election in 1917 there were eleven candidates, it being presumed that the terms of all five members would expire and that an entirely new board was to be elected, and one of your questions is, which of the eleven candidates were elected and for what term.

I desire at the outset to call your attention to the case of State vs. Strawsburg, 96 O. S., —, decided by our supreme court July 3, 1917, wherein the court said:

> "The board of education of Springfield consisted of seven members, the terms of four of whom were to expire in January, 1914, and the terms of the other three in January, 1916. The portions of that law pertinent to the consideration of this case are now sections 4698 and 4702, General Code. The Springfield city school district comes within the class, which, under the provisions of section 4698, General Code, is required to have a board of education consisting of not less than three nor more than five members.
> By a resolution passed July 14, 1913, said board of education attempted to meet the requirements and comply with the provisions of that act. It was therein determined that the number of members of said board should be five, one should be elected at large; that the three members whose terms did not expire until January, 1916, should hold their positions until that date; that at the general election in November, 1913, there should be elected two members to serve the full term of four years; and that at the election in November, 1915, two members should be elected for the full term of four years and one for the fractional term of two years. Two members were elected for the full term of four years at the election of November, 1913.
> In the election of November, 1915, the defendants and five others were candidates for the office of members of the board of education of such district. The ballots on which their names appeared were headed 'For members of board of education, vote for not more than three.'
> No designation of or reference to the term, or length thereof, of any candidate was made on any ballot, nor had there been any such designation upon the ballots in the primary election whereat said candidates were nominated. The defendants * * * received the highest number of votes at said election. They were declared elected as members of said board of education, certificates of election for a term of four years each were issued, and in pursuance of that authority they assumed to qualify and enter upon, and ever since have discharged, the duties of such position—more than fifteen months—the validity of their election not having been challenged until the bringing of this suit in quo warranto, April 14, 1917.
> It is now contended that because of such want of designation of terms, whether for four years or two years, on the ballot or elsewhere, it is impossible to ascertain which of said candidates were elected for the four year term and which one for the two year term, and that, therefore, there was no valid election for either term and the certificates of election issued were unauthorized.
> An examination of the sections of the General Code, above cited, discloses that as applying to the city of Springfield their several provisions were not in accord, and, therefore, could not be observed and applied.

Under their provisions no existing term should be disturbed. If necessary to accomplish the reduction in numbers required by law, two-year terms could be provided by resolution; but an election to such two-year terms was limited to the year 1913. It was expressly provided in above sections that all elections thereafter should be for four-year terms; thenceforward one-half of the remainder, after diminishing the total number of members of the board by one, should be elected in the year preceding the calendar year divisible by four, and the remaining number the year following such calendar year. Under that provision, directory in its nature, two members would be elected in 1915, three in 1917, and so on. There was no provision whatever for a two-year term member to be elected in 1915, and if only two members should be elected the board would consist of but four members instead of five members, as had been determined by the board under authority conferred by law.

These provisions are inconsistent; they cannot all be enforced; therefore the rational solution of the situation seems to lie in such construction and application of the law as to make it feasible and practicable and capable of accomplishing the obvious design and purpose of its enactment, which was to create boards of education, the terms of the members of which should be four years, and, presumably to bring about that condition and situation at the earliest possible time. The mere order in which members are elected seems quite immaterial, and that provision might well have been regarded by the board as only directory. In the theory that all three of the defendants were in fact elected for four-year terms that is the only provision disregarded; and, as we have seen, it is a provision in direct conflict with other and more important and essential provisions of the law.

Although the resolution provided for the election of a short-term member in 1915, such was not authorized by law, and thereafter all matters concerning the election, including notice, proclamation, form of ballots and certificates of election, proceeded in a manner consistent only with the theory that three members for the full term of four years were being elected. Therefore, for the reasons we have indicated, the tenure of those members should not now be disturbed."

I have quoted at length from the above case because of the similarity of the facts in that case and yours. In that case, as in yours, the resolution provided that three members should be elected in the year 1915, two for the term of four years and one for the term of two years. In the Springfield case certificates of election were issued to the three members. This, the court held, was valid and proper. In your case, however, no certificates of election were issued and the members who were elected failed to qualify and the old members held over until their successors should be duly elected and qualified. Under the law, as set forth in State ex rel. vs. Strawsburg, supra, there was no authority to elect the short term member in any year, except the year 1913, and none having been elected for the short term in that year, none could be elected for the short term in any year thereafter. In your case, prior to the passage of the resolution of August 25, 1913, and for that matter up to the first Monday in January, 1914, the said board of education consisted of six members, the terms of three of which members expired on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1914, and the term of the remaining three expired on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916. So that, in order to have a board of five it was necessary to elect two members in 1913 whose terms would begin on the first Monday in January, 1914, the terms of the other three members not yet at that time expiring. This was accordingly done and B. E. Place and J. J. Schaefer were so elected in 1913 and said persons duly qualified and took their office on the first Monday in January, 1914, and are serving for the full term of four years and their terms will expire on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1918.

In order that two members of said board could be elected in the year preceding the calendar year divisible by four, and three members of the board of five be elected in the year following the calender year divisible by four—that is, in order that two members of the board of five could be elected in 1915 for the term of four years and three members of said board of five could be elected in the year 1917 for the term of four years, and so on—the board passed a resolution which provided that at the November election in 1915 one member should be elected for the short term of two years from and after the first Monday in January, 1916, and two members should be elected for the full term of four years from and after the first Monday of January, 1916. But instead of following that resolution when the election was had in 1915, no designation of term was mentioned on the ballot and the election was considered invalid and those persons who were voted for failed to qualify and the old members held over. The very thing which your board attempted to do, that is, to elect one member in 1915 for the short term and two for the long term, is the thing which the court says in State ex rel. vs. Strawsburg, supra, would be unlawful; that is, that no short term election could be had under said law in any year except 1913. And, the very thing which was considered in your case to be unlawful, that is, that the election was invalid because no long and short term is designated, is the very thing which the court holds in State vs. Strawsburg, supra, to be lawful, and certificates of election should have been issued to the three persons who were voted for at the November election in 1915. This, however, was not done and I know of no authority to do the same now. The three members whose terms would have expired on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916, held over and will hold over for the full term of four years, or until the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1920.

Bearing directly upon this last proposition is the case of State vs. Metcalf, 80 O. S., 261, wherein the following language is used:

> "It has never been the policy of the state to create vacancies in office for the mere purpose of giving somebody an opportunity to fill them. Piling vacancy upon vacancy is an anomaly. * * * The policy to discourage the needless creation of vacancies is recognized in a number of decisions of this court. As instance, The State ex rel. vs. Howe, 25 Ohio St., 588, where it is held by McIlvaine, J., that the general assembly may provide against the recurrence of vacancies by authorizing incumbents to hold over their terms in cases where the duration of their terms is not fixed and limited by the constitution, and that from this it results that the evils contemplated as likely to result from vacancies in office are guarded against by confining the exercise of the power to fill vacancies to those cases where no one is authorized by law to discharge the public duties; which, we think, is the constitutional scope of that power. Also, by the case of The State ex rel. v. Bryson, 44 Ohio St., 457, where it is observed that the office (that of fire engineer) could not be regarded as vacant while filled by one lawfully entitled to it, nor could an appointment made ostensibly to fill a vacancy create one. Also, in The State ex rel. v. McCracken, 51 Ohio St., 123, where, at page 129, it is observed that: 'The recognized policy of the state is to avoid, if practicable, the creation of a vacancy in an elective office, and where the right to hold over is given in language that is not limited, and the same is not otherwise qualified, a court would hardly be justified in seeking for an unnatural construction by which a limit would be placed upon the right. In contemplation of law there can be no vacancy in an office so long as there is a person in possession of the office legally qualified to perform the duties.'"

In opinion No. 596, rendered by this department to Hon. Henry W. Cherrington, September 6, 1917, it was held:

> "The two members (of boards of education) whose terms expired on the first Monday in January, 1916, and who are holding over, will continue to so hold said positions until the first Monday in January, 1920, and that their successors shall be elected at the November election in 1919."

There being, then, no vacancies or terminations of terms, as far as the three members are concerned, whose terms would have expired on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916, it is only for the filling of the other two terms that an election was had this year. I note by the result of the election that the two members whose terms will end on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1918, that is, the terms of B. E. Place and A. J. Helfrich, received the highest number of votes and were therefore re-elected to their places on the board. That other persons were voted for for positions which were not vacant or were not to be filled, can make no difference in this particular case.

Answering then, your questions in the order in which they are asked, I advise you:

(1) The three members whose terms would have expired on the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1916, are holding over and will so hold over until the day preceding the first Monday in January, 1920.

(2) It can have no effect upon the legality of the election of 1917 that those three members were candidates for members of the board.

(3) There were only two members elected at the November election in 1917.

(4) The newly elected board of education consists of the three hold-over members and the two old members who were re-elected, which makes the board of education the same as it was prior to the time of election and certificates of election should be issued to the two persons who received the highest number of votes at said election in 1917.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SALE OF CANAL LAND TO THE AMERICAN BOTTLE CO., NEWARK, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1918.

HON JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 29, 1917, in which you enclose in duplicate certain final resolution and proceedings had by your department relative to the sale of a portion of the abandoned canal lands in Newark, Ohio, to The American Bottle Company, which is the present lessee.

This sale and the proceedings leading up thereto are had under an act found in 107 O. L. 512, entitled:

> "To abandon the north fork feeder of the Ohio canal, in the city of Newark, Licking county, Ohio, and to provide for the leasing and selling of the land included therein."

Section 3 of said act provides as follows:

> "Any lessee of the state occupying any portion of the canal feeder herein abandoned may surrender his lease to the superintendent of public works for cancellation, and take a deed for the same by paying into the state treasury the amount of the appraisement as fixed by the superintendent of public works at the time of such sale."

Section 4 of the same act provides that the sale must be made "subject to the approval of the governor and attorney-general."

In compliance with this act you have appraised the said property at the sum of $2,500.00.

I have examined the proceedings had by your department and find the same to be correct and legal, and that the sale of the property therein described to The American Bottle Co., at the appraised value thereof, would be legal and in conformity to the provisions of said special act.

I therefore approve the said proceedings and the sale and have endorsed my approval thereof upon the resolutions submitted by you and am forwarding same to Hon. James M. Cox, governor, for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—PLANS AND SPECIFICATIONS—CANNOT BE CHANGED AFTER CONTRACT IS EXECUTED.

There is no provision of law authorizing or permitting a change in the plans and specifications upon which a contract for the improvement of a public road is made, after the contract is executed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 15, 1917, setting out a copy of letter received by you from the board of county commissioners of Coshocton county. Your letter reads in part as follows:

> "On August 27, 1917, this department entered into contract with T. J. Norman & Son, of West LaFayette, for the construction of section 'D' of the Newcomerstown-Coshocton road, I. C. H. No. 407, Coshocton county. The improvement calls for the construction of roadway, bridges and culverts and pavement of the combined type of 24,889 square yards of water-bound macadam and 4,107 square yards of monolithic brick.

I am now in receipt of the following letter from the board of county commissioners of Coshocton county: * *

In this letter, as you will see, the board of county commissioners request a change of contract making the improvement all of one type of pavement.

I respectfully ask for your opinion as to whether I can legally make a change of contract as desired by the commissioners of Coshocton county."

Briefly stated, the question is whether, after a contract is let and the work partly completed, the plans and specifications under which the contract was let can be changed, and material used other than that specified in the contract, or rather, in the plans and specifications which became a part of the contract. In other words, it is the desire of the county commissioners to so modify the plans and specifications that the 24,889 square yards of waterbound macadam provided for therein may be eliminated, and that the same number of square yards of brick be substituted therefor, the reason given being that it will be impossible to complete the waterbound macadam road for an indefinite period, owing to the priority order of the federal government, relative to shipment of certain material, and that a brick surface could be completed within a reasonable length of time, because brick could be hauled from either Newcomerstown or Coshocton in trucks.

The object in the minds of the county commissioners is a worthy one. But if you will refer to an opinion rendered to your department on June 16, 1917 (No. 369), you will find I anwer this specific question, to the effect that after a contract is let and the work entered upon, the plans and specifications under which the contract was originally let can not be modified. On page 5 of said opinion I quote my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, who held to the same effect, that there is no authority for changing the plans and specifications under which a contract was let, after the contract is awarded.

On page 6 of said opinion I held as follows:

"In other words, the taxpayers and those assessed for the making of the improvement have a right to demand that the contract be let to the lowest and best bidder. In order that the contract may be let to the lowest and best bidder, the bid must have been made with a view to certain plans, estimates and specifications. Those who bid upon the work rely upon the fact that the road will be constructed in the manner set out in the plans and specifications, and they bid accordingly."

On page 8 I laid down the following proposition:

"Any taxpayer would have the right to enjoin the payment of money for the construction of this work with a six-inch foundation. This for the reason that the plans and specifications call for an eight-inch foundation of sandstone, and for the further reason that the work might have been let for a much less sum had the specifications provided for a six-inch foundation instead of an eight-inch foundation."

In that case both the county commissioners and the original contractor were agreeable to making the change in the plans and specifications. So that the opinion rendered to you in that matter exactly covers the facts now under consideration, and said opinion is as plain as it is possible for me to make it.

The theory upon which our statutes relative to the building of public highways proceed is that the contract must be let to the lowest and most responsible bidder, after due advertisement, and the contract must be based upon certain plans and specifications, which plans and specifications become a part of the contract itself. This principle would be entirely avoided if the plans and specifications could be modified after the contract was let. Who knows whether other contractors might not have bid much lower than the bid submitted by the contractor who was the successful bidder, provided they had known that, instead of waterbound macadam, brick would be used for the surface of the improvement?

The contractor states that he will put down brick at his original bid per square yard, but who knows whether other parties might put down brick for a less amount than for waterbound macadam?

From this it is readily seen that the principle of letting the contract for the building of public highways to the lowest responsible bidder would be entirely abrogated if it were permitted to change the plans and specifications after the contract was let.

Further, if the plans and specifications are modified in any respect, the surety of the contractor would be released from his contract, in which he guarantees that the contractor will complete the work according to the plans and specifications. In other words, the surety agrees to stand good for the original contractor, on the theory that the contract will be completed according to the original plans and specifications.

Any taxpayer of Coshocton county or any abutting property owner who will be assessed for said improvement would have the right to enjoin the payment of money upon the part of the state or the county, for an improvement differing from that which is contracted for and based upon the original plans and specifications.

From all the above it is clear that it is legally impossible to modify the plans and specifications upon which a contract is based, after the contract is once entered into.

Hence answering your question specifically, there is no provision in law which would warrant the change in the plans and specifications under which a contract is entered into, so that 24,889 square yards of waterbound macadam surface might be eliminated and a brick surface substituted therefore.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,

CORPORATIONS—POWERS FOREIGN TO THE PRINCIPAL PURPOSE FOR WHICH SAME ORGANIZED CANNOT BE CONFERRED UPON SAME BY AMENDMENT.

A corporation incorporated and organized for the purpose of manufacturing glass and glassware and the purchase and sale of goods connected with such manufacture, and of bottler's general supplies cannot legally amend its articles of incorporation so as to authorize said corporation to engage in farming of all kinds, the growing and marketing of fruits, and dairying, and the acquiring, possessing and managing of real estate necessary or proper for such purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you with which you enclose a certificate of amendment to the articles of incorporation of

The Edward H. Everett Company, Newark, Ohio. In your communication you state that the purpose clause is so broad that you hesitate to allow it, and you ask my opinion with respect to the matter.

By memoranda attached to your communication it appears that this company was incorporated October 1, 1885, for the following purpose set out in its articles of incorporation:

> "That the purpose for which said corporation is formed is the manufacture of glass and glassware, and the purchase and sale of goods connected with such manufacture, and of bottler's general supplies."

It further appears that by certificate of amendment filed August 25, 1902, the original articles of incorporation of this company were amended

> "so as to authorize this company to lease land in Licking county and in adjoining counties in Ohio for the mining and boring for natural gas and oil, and piping and transportation thereof through tubing and the sale of same; also for the quarrying of stone, dressing and crushing of the same, the manufacturing of sand and transporting and sale of same or its products; also for the quarrying of clay and the sale of brick, tile and other clay products."

The proposed amendment to the articles of incorporation set out in the certificate accompanying your communication provides:

> "That the articles of incorporation of this company be amended so as to authorize this company to engage in farming of all kinds, the growing and marketing of fruits, and dairying, and the acquiring, possessing and managing of real estate necessary or proper for such purposes."

Without discussing the obvious questions suggested by the amendment to the company's articles filed in 1902 above noted, and without discussing the question as to what uses a manufacturing company can legally make of surplus lands acquired by it for a purpose, it may be, in keeping with the principal purpose for which said company was incorporated and organized, I have no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that the proposed amendment to the articles of incorporation is illegal for the reason that said amendment, when read as a whole, assumes to confer upon the company independent powers wholly foreign to the purpose for which said company was incorporated and organized.

Corporations organized under the laws of this state can be incorporated for one principal purpose only.

> State ex rel v. Taylor, 55 O. S. 61, 67.

The sole principal purpose of the corporation here in question is that disclosed in its original articles of incorporation, and in furtherance of such purpose the company may exercise such express powers as may be given it by its articles of incorporation read in connection with the law, and it may further exercise such implied or incidental powers as may be reasonably necessary for the purpose of carrying out the express powers granted to the corporation. Such incidental powers it has a right to exercise whether stated in the articles of incorporation or not. But, on the other hand, such corporation has no right to exercise powers wholly foreign to the principal purpose for which the company is incorporated, and it is obvious that no additional rights in this respect can be conferred upon the corporation by incorporating such illegal power in the articles of incorporation either originally or by way of amendment.

I am of the opinion in answer to your request, therefore, that the certificate of the proposed amendment should not be filed.

I am returning to you herewith certificate of amendment and check for $5.00 submitted with your letter of December 11th.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND—OF CONTRACTOR PERFORMING PUBLIC WORK—REQUIREMENTS.

The provisions of the act found in 107 O. L., 642 do not operate to the exclusion of the provisions of other acts in reference to bonds. This act merely requires that an additional obligation, provided for in section 1 thereof, shall be added to bonds usually required by law in matters set out in the act, and that the form of bond provided in section 4 thereof be substantially followed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1918.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 18, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "Section 2365-1 to and including section 2365-4 of the General Code, as amended March 30, 1917, and found in the annual report, Vol. 107, at pages 642 and 643, provides for the execution of a bond by contractors doing certain public work. Other sections of the General Code, including section 2365, relate to the subject of bonds given by contractors doing public work.
> I desire to inquire whether or not the act passed by the last legislature above referred to operates to the exclusion of the other form of bond which had previously been in use or whether two bonds are required, one to comply with the law as it formerly stood and the other being in the form prescribed by the last legislature."

We will first note the purpose of the act to which you call attention. The title thereof reads as follows:

> "To protect persons performing labor and furnishing materials for the construction and repair of public works."

Section 1 of said act, which is section 2365-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 642), provides:

> "That when public buildings or other public works or improvements are about to be constructed, erected, altered or repaired under contract, * * it shall be the duty of the board, officer or agent, contracting on behalf of the state, county, city, village, township, or school district, to require the usual bond as provided for in statute * *."

From this provision it is quite evident that it was not the aim and purpose of this act to in anywise do away with the bonds which are provided for in other acts and sections of the General Code. The usual bond provided for by statute must be given.

However, section 1 further provides that the bond shall contain an additional obligation and reads as follows:

> "* * with an additional obligation for the payment by the contractor, and by all sub-contractors, for all labor performed or materials furnished in the construction, erection, alteration or repair of such building, works or improvements."

So that the only requirement is that the usual bond which is given, as provided by other acts and sections, must have, as a part of the bond, an additional obligation for the purposes set out in section 1 of said act. However, this act provides that the form of the bond shall be substantially as therein set out. This provision will not materially interfere with the provisions of other acts and sections of the General Code for the reason that the form of the bond in said acts and sections is not specifically set out.

Therefore, bonds given for the purposes set out in the act under consideration should be substantially in the form set out in section 4 of said act, especially in reference to the additional obligation protecting sub-contractors, material men and laborers.

On account of this act providing that the usual bond, as provided by statute, shall be given, and merely providing further that an additional obligation, to the effect as set out in section 1 of the act, shall be added, there will hardly be any cases arise in which the provisions of other statutes or sections of the General Code, relative to bonds, will not fit into the provisions of this act. But if there are former acts in reference to bonds that cannot be harmonized with this act, then this act should be held to apply and control, because it is a later one. It would repeal by implication any provision of a former act or section of the General Code which cannot be reconciled with said later act.

Hence in view of all the above, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that said act found at p. 642 of 107 O. L. does not operate to the exclusion of other acts relative to bonds, unless said last mentioned acts are of such a nature that they cannot be harmonized with the former; that these provisions fit into the other provisions; and that only one bond is required, which shall be substantially in the form as set out in section 4 of said act, and especially with reference to the additional obligation mentioned in section 1 thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—RESOLUTION PROVIDING FOR QUIT CLAIMING THE INTEREST OF THE STATE IN CERTAIN CANAL LAND TO J. HARRY WIENER.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 4, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Herewith I am transmitting duplicate copies of resolutions providing for quit claiming the interests of the state in certain canal lands in Akron to J. Harry Wiener who is the owner of the title record of the lands involved.

There has been a contest between the state and the predecessors of Mr. Wiener in regard to this land running back some ten years without any advantage accruing to either side.

This arrangement we believe is for the best interests of all parties concerned, and I therefore respectfully request your concurrence thereto."

The proceedings which are submitted to me by you for approval were had under and by virtue of the provisions of sections 13964 of the General Code, and arose by virtue of the fact that J. Harry Wiener, of Akron, Ohio, is the owner of certain real estate located in said city of Akron adjoining certain canal lands owned by the state of Ohio. For quite a number of years past said J. Harry Wiener and those in chain of title with him to the real estate now owned by him have been paying taxes upon certain lands the title to which was afterwards claimed to be in the state of Ohio. In order to adjust this difficulty in a manner satisfactory to all parties concerned said J. Harry Wiener made application to the superintendent of public works under and by virtue of said section asking that he fix the boundary line between the lands of the state of Ohio and the lands of the said J. Harry Wiener. He further agreed that if the state of Ohio would make him a quit claim deed for the portion of the disputed lands which fell to him by virtue of the boundary line being established by the superintendent of public works, as set forth in the records of the department of public works, he would pay the state of Ohio the sum of $600.00. The superintendent of public works finding this arrangement to be equitable and just to all parties concerned has carried out the understanding of the department of public works and the said J. Harry Wiener, and these proceedings are now submitted to me for consideration.

This is not in any sense a sale of lands by the state to J. Harry Wiener. If it were, the sale would be subject to the provisions that whenever the appraisement exceeds the sum of five hundred dollars the land must be sold to the highest bidder after due advertisement. This is merely a proceeding under section 13964 General Code, under and by virtue of which the superintendent of public works fixes and establishes the boundary line, which shall be final and conclusive as to all parties thereto having notice thereof, excepting those under legal disability.

I have examined these proceedings carefully and am of the opinion that they are legal and that upon the said J. Harry Wiener paying to the treasurer of state the sum of $600.00 a quit claim deed should be made by the governor of Ohio to the said J. Harry Wiener for the lands so falling to said J. Harry Wiener by virtue of the establishing of the boundary line as shown by the records in the office of the superintendent of public works.

I have therefore endorsed my approval upon the resolution submitted to me and have forwarded the same to the governor of Ohio for his consideration.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY CHARGE—QUALIFICATIONS—HOW AND BY WHOM DETERMINED—INDIGENT POOR—UPON WHOM DUTY RESTS TO PROVIDE THEREFOR—PROPERTY OF COUNTY CHARGE.

1. The duty of determining whether a person is qualified to become a county charge rests with the superintendent of the county infirmary under the provisions of section 2544 G. C.

2. The course mapped out in section 2544 G. C. is the only one by virtue of which a person may be found by the superintendent of the infirmary qualified to become a county charge.

3. Primarily the duty to provide for the indigent poor rests with the trustees of each township and the proper officer of each municipal corporation, and this condition continues until the indigent poor becomes a county charge under the provisions of section 2544 G. C.

4. When a person becomes a county charge, he is to be provided for in the infirmary of the county, or may be otherwise provided for as set out in section 2544 G. C.

5. The property of a county charge who is confined in the infirmary is subject to be used for his care and keeping under the provisions of section 2548 General Code, et seq., but if the county charge is provided for otherwise than in the infirmary his property is not subject to be used for his care and keeping.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1918.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: I have your communication of December 4, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "Section 2544 of the General Code provides for the admission to the county infirmary through the township trustees, and I find no other provision in the code for the admission of one to the county infirmary.
> Sections 2548 and following provide for the commissioners taking charge of property of a person who has become a public charge, and the last sentence in 2548 provides for the use of the proceeds of the property 'so long as he remains in the infirmary.'
> Does a person become a county charge when actually in need, or is it only after he has been admitted to the infirmary through the trustees, and can the commissioners determine that a person is a county charge and order and require the superintendent of the infirmary to receive him, or is section 2544 inclusive, and is the superintendent under that section the person to determine whether or not a person should become a county charge?"

The matters set out in your communication and those which are incident thereto make it necessary for one to go to the very foundation of the matter of the law relating to indigent poor. We must do this in order to determine when an indigent poor is a "charge of the county," or when he is a charge of a township or a municipality, and I shall therefore consider these questions generally before answering your questions specifically.

Probably the section of the General Code which lies more nearly at the foundation of this whole matter is section 3476 General Code, which reads as follows:

> "Subject to the conditions, provisions and limitations herein, the trustees of each township or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein, respectively, shall afford at the expense of such township or municipal corporation public support or relief to all persons therein who are in condition requiring it."

This section, of course, is broad enough to include all persons who are given relief, no difference where they reside, because it includes all the townships and all the municipal corporations of each county.

Section 3480 General Code provides:

> "When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief or the services of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. * *"

Section 3481 General Code provides that when complaint is so made to the township trustees or to the proper official of a municipality, that they must make a visit and investigation in reference to the matter as to whether the person reported is entitled to relief, and if so the provisions of section 3476 General Code, above quoted, make it obligatory upon the township trustees or the proper official in a municipal corporation to afford the necessary relief, whether this relief be in the nature of food or clothing, or in the nature of medical relief.

From the provisions of these three sections it is clearly evident that the primary responsibility for affording relief to the indigent poor rests with the township trustees or with the proper official of a municipal corporation. In other words, no person in need of relief is primarily a county charge.

With this in mind we will turn to the provisions of the statutes in order to ascertain the conditions under which a person becomes a county charge. The section of the General Code which lies at the foundation of this matter is section 2544, which reads as follows:

> "In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary, and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

The peculiar thing about the provisions of this section is that there is no condition set forth therein specifically stating under what condition a person may be found to be a county charge. The section is that when the trustees of a township are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, and if the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, then such person shall become a county charge; but there is nothing set out in said section indicating what facts or conditions exist before one may become a county charge. There is one section of the General Code which furnishes a sort of a clue to this matter, and I must state that it is only a clue. The section to which I refer is section 3488 General Code, which reads as follows:

> "When the trustees of a township in a county having no county infirmary are satisfied that a person in such township ought to have public relief, they shall afford such relief at the expense of their township as in their opinion the necessities of the person require. When more than temporary relief is required, they shall post a notice in three public places in the township, specifying a time and place at which they will receive proposals for the maintenance of such person, which notice shall be posted at least seven days before the day therein named for receiving proposals."

The particular matter to which I desire to call attention in said section is the following phrase:

"when more than temporary relief is required."

Sections 3489 and 3490 General Code then proceed to the effect that if more than temporary relief is required, the township trustees may certify the amount expended upon such poor persons to the county commissioners, who shall cause the amount so paid to be refunded to the proper township; that is, in those cases where the legal settlement of such a person is not within the state or is unknown.

It will be noted that under the provisions of section 3488 General Code this section merely applies to those counties in which there is no county infirmary. If the legislature had proceeded further in section 3488 and provided that in event there is a county infirmary in the county, and in event that more than temporary relief be required, then the fact should be certified to the superintendent of the infirmary, thus making the indigent poor a county charge, we would have a full and complete scheme in reference to the whole matter in which the condition would be plainly evident under which a person might become a county charge; but the legislature stopped short of making such a provision.

However, I am clearly of the opinion that, reading to a slight extent between the lines of this section, we must arrive at the conclusion that the question as to whether an indigent poor person shall remain the charge of the township or the charge of the municipality, or whether he shall become a county charge, depends upon the question of whether the relief which is required is merely temporary or whether it is permanent in nature.

With this fundamental principle in mind, let us now turn again to the provisions of section 2544 General Code. Supposing that the superintendent of the county infirmary decides that the person is a proper one to become a county charge, what then is done? This section provides that:

"They shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution * *" but the provision does not end there, inasmuch as it goes on and adds the phrase "or otherwise." This makes it clearly evident that not all the indigent poor who become county charges are necessarily inmates of the county infirmary. This is made clearly evident from the other provisions of the General Code. For example, section 2546 provides that the county commissioners may contract for the medical relief for persons under their charge in the respective townships. This provision can refer to no other persons than the county charges who are provided for "otherwise" than in the county infirmary.

Section 2545 General Code provides that the superintendent of the infirmary shall make a report to the board of state charities once each quarter. In this report he must state "the names of all persons to whom relief has been given outside of the infirmary;" also, section 2538 General Code provides for a report of the county commissioners. In the report, among other things, they must set out the > "total amount paid in the county for outdoor relief during each month, including medical attention."

It is quite clear that all these provisions have reference to the matter of the "county charges" who are provided for not in infirmaries, but in some manner outside of infirmaries.

With the above principles established the answers to your questions will not be difficult to give. While you do not number the questions, yet there are a number contained in your communication. You ask:

> "Does a person become a county charge when actually in need, or is it only after he has been admitted to the infirmary through the trustees?"

The answer to this question is evident—the person does not become a county charge until he is found to be such under the provisions of section 2544 General Code, but, as was said heretofore, it is not absolutely necessary that a person be admitted to the infirmary to become a county charge, and this for the reason that he might be provided for as is set forth in said section, "otherwise," but he cannot become a county charge except as provided in section 2544 G. C.

Another question that you propose is:

> "Can the commissioners determine that the person is a county charge and order and require the superintendent of the infirmary to receive him?"

Under the above it is clearly evident that the county commissioners are not the proper officials to determine whether one is a county charge or not, but this matter rests with the superintendent of the infirmary, and the provisions of section 2544 General Code are exclusive in furnishing the method by which the attention of the superintendent of the infirmary is called to the fact that some indigent poor person in the county has the right to become a county charge.

You also ask, indirectly at least, as to when the property of an indigent person may be taken under the provisions of section 2548 and 2550 General Code, inclusive. The provisions of these sections are not entirely clear in reference to this matter, that is, whether the property of a county charge who is provided for outside the infirmary as set out in section 2544 General Code would be subject to have his property sold under the provisions of said section, or whether the provisions of said section would be limited to the property of a person who is provided for within the infirmary.

Section 2548 General Code begins "when a person becomes a county charge," and this might be construed to mean the property of a county charge who became such under the provisions of section 2544, whether provided for within the infirmary or otherwise, might be sold and the proceeds used for his care and keeping; but section 2550 General Code provides that "upon the death of such person or when lawfully discharged from the infirmary." When these sections are construed as a whole I am of the opinion that the property of a county charge cannot be sold unless the county charge becomes a resident of the infirmary, and is provided for therein. If a person becomes a county charge under section 2544 General Code and is therein provided for "otherwise" his property would not be subject to be used for his care and keeping.

My predecessor, Honorable Edward C. Turner, in rendering the opinion found on page 358, Vol. I, Report of the Attorney-General for 1915, made a finding to the effect that a county charge may be provided for either within or without the county infirmary, but held that under ordinary circumstances and conditions provision should be furnished within the county infirmary.

I agree with his reasoning and conclusion, and therefore affirm the same. While in the main, his opinion does not apply to the matters here under discussion, yet to the extent that it does, I am of the opinion that the same is correct.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL—HAS POWER TO MAKE INVESTIGATION FOR LEGISLATIVE PURPOSES—MAY ENTER INTO CONTRACT FOR SUCH PURPOSE—TRANSFER OF FUNDS—APPROPRIATIONS.

Council of a city has an implied power to make an investigation "for the purpose of securing information upon which to base proper legislation," and it may authorize a committee of council to enter into a contract on behalf of the city for the purpose of having such investigation made.

Council of a city cannot transfer funds from one fund to another except as to funds raised by taxation.

Where no provision is made therefor in the annual budget, council cannot appropriate by a supplementary appropriation ordinance moneys from the gas, water and electric funds for the purpose of payment for an investigation of such plants to be made by council for information upon which to base legislative action.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 21, 1917, you submit the following statement of facts and questions:

> "Early in the year 1917, the mayor of the city of Hamilton, Ohio, appointed committees on each of the gas, water and electric light plants, to make investigations and recommend to council what they might determine to be for the best interests and efficiency of the several plants mentioned. The items herein were not provided for in the budget made for that year as covered by section 5649-3d, G. C., nor were they embodied in the semi-annual appropriations in accordance with section 3797 G. C.
> We are enclosing herewith written statement of our state examiner showing the full legislation and procedure in the matter, in which it will be noted that the firm of M. and S., consulting engineers (copy of contract enclosed herewith), who performed the work and rendered exhaustive report, were paid under the special appropriation ordinance shown herein, the vouchers being approved by the committee on claims of council. Council practically had entire charge of the matter; neither the service director nor the mayor had anything to do with the same. On October 3, 1917, $3,000.00 was paid to the firm mentioned; $1,000 being taken from each of the funds of the water, gas and electric light plants.

We enclose herewith copy of the opinion or brief of the city solicitor upon the matter.

QUESTION 1: Was such procedure regular and legal?

QUESTION 2: If the procedure was not legal, therefore the amount of $3,000.00 was illegally spent, and if so, who is liable for the amount?"

With your letter is submitted a copy of the ordinance making the appropriation in question and also of the ordinance which authorized the service committee of council to enter into the contract which is now in question.

Section 1 of the appropriation ordinance reads as follows:

> "That there be and is hereby appropriated out of the unappropriated moneys in the gas, water and electric funds, the sum of three thousand ($3,000) dollars, for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of securing expert investigation service for the investigation of municipal plants to secure information upon which to base proper legislative action of council, that the money to be appropriated from each of said funds shall be in amount equal to the cost and expense of paying for such expert investigation of the plant from the funds of which the money is appropriated."

This section specifically provides that the investigation is "to secure information upon which to base proper legislative action of council."

Section 1, of the ordinance, authorizing the service committee of council to enter into the contract reads as follows:

> "That the service committee of council be and is hereby authorized to enter into a contract to secure expert investigation services for the investigation of municipal plants for the purpose of securing information upon which to base proper legislative action by the city council."

A copy of the contract entered into for such investigation, is submitted and the duties of the consulting engineers are stated in the following terms:

> "Said party of the first part has employed and does by these presents employ said party of the second part to examine, investigate and report on the water, gas and electric light plants systems and properties belonging to said party of the first part; said examination, investigation and report to include a valuation of the properties, a statement of the present physical condition and fitness to perform the work required of said plants, systems and properties, a discussion of the financial relation of their operation and earnings, recommendations for betterments to bring such plants, systems and properties to a high state of efficiency for the immediate future and for their development with the growth of the city and such other information and recommendations as may be proper and necessary to maintain said plants, systems and properties in a high state of efficiency so as to meet the demands for service both present and anticipated and said party of the first part agrees to pay said party of the second part the sum of three thousand ($3,000.00) dollars for such service, payable when the examination and investigation is completed and the report thereon submitted to the city council of said party of the first part."

The facts submitted and the questions asked, involve several legal principles.

You first call attention to the provisions of section 5649-3d, General Code, and state that the items of appropriation were not provided for in the annual budget under the provisions of said section. This section reads as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year the various boards mentioned in section 5649-3a of this act shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which money has to be provided, from the moneys known to be in the treasury from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue, and all expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof, but no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget nor for a greater amount for such purpose than the total amount fixed by the budget commissioners exclusive of receipts and balances."

It has been held by one of my predecessors, that this section applies to moneys raised from taxation and not from receipts from other sources.

In an opinion to Honorable J. J. Brown, under date of February 26th, 1912, and reported in Volume 2, page 1633, of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, the Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney-General, held as follows:

> "Section 5649-3d limiting appropriations to the purpose set forth in the annual budget and to the amounts fixed by the budget commission relates to moneys raised by taxation only, and expressly excludes moneys designated as 'receipts and balances' such as those of the general fund derived from the transfer of balances left in other funds at the close of the preceding fiscal year."

After careful consideration of the above opinion, I concur in the above conclusion. Therefore, if the appropriation in question was made from receipts other than those received by taxation, the appropriation would not be in violation of said section 5649-3d General Code.

You also call attention to the provisions of section 3797 General Code, and state that the appropriation now in question was not embodied in the semi-annual appropriation ordinance as provided by the above section. Said section 3797 reads as follows:

> "At the beginning of each fiscal half year, the council shall make appropriations for each of the several objects for which the corporation has to provide, or from the moneys known to be in the treasury, or estimated to come into it during the six months next ensuing from the collection of taxes and all other sources of revenue. All expenditures within the following six months shall be made from and within such appropriations and balances thereof."

This section has also been under consideration by my predecessors. In an opinion to your department, under date of September 19, 1913, and reported at page 398, Volume 1, of the Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, held as follows:

> "The city council may not legally enact supplementary appropriations increasing the amount appropriated in the regular semi-annual appropriating ordinance.

If the particular subject is not contained in the regular appropriating ordinance, council may with certain restrictions legally pass a supplementary ordinance making specific appropriations for such subject.

The mere fact that an item may not have been provided for in the budget of the administrative officer as revised by council for its own purposes, at the time of making up the tax levying ordinance, does not of itself preclude council from making a subsequent appropriation for that purpose, either at the time of making the regular semi-annual appropriation or at a subsequent date."

I also concur in the above conclusion.

It appears from your statement of facts that the semi-annual appropriation ordinance did not contain an appropriation for the purpose covered by the appropriation and contract now in question. It was therefore legal for the council to pass a supplementary appropriation ordinance covering the matter in question.

It is stated in the ordinance that the purpose of the proposed expenditure is to secure facts upon which to base proper legislative action of council. While such a declaration should have weight it is not conclusive as to the purpose of the appropriation.

Under the provisions of section 4211 General Code, the council of a city has legislative power only, and cannot enter into contracts. Said section 4211 of the General Code reads as follows:

"The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever, and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

In the case of McCormick v. The City of Niles, 81 O. S., 246, it is held:

"The liability of a municipal corporation to pay for the publication of ordinances, resolutions and legal notices required by law to be published, must rest on express contract, and not upon a mere account for the rendition of such services.

Where the statute has not prescribed the person who shall execute such a contract in behalf of a municipal corporation, it is consistent with section 1536-653, Revised Statutes, for the council, by ordinance or resolution, to authorize the clerk thereof to execute such contract according to the directions of the council."

In this case the right of contracting for the publication of ordinances was in question, and it was held that council had authority to direct the clerk of council to enter into such contract. The publication of ordinances is a part of the legislative duty as such ordinances are not effective until they are published as required by the statutes.

In municipalities of other states, the council has authority to enter into contracts on behalf of the corporation.

In such states the right of council to enter into contracts through committees is recognized. The rule is stated in section 1177 of McQuillin on "Municipal Corporations," as follows:

> "Municipal contracts may be made through appropriate committees of the common council, or committees of other bodies, but power to make contracts by a committee can be exercised only by the concurrent action of at least a majority; and the chairman, as such, has no authority to make the contract."

The contract now under consideration, was executed by the committee under the direction of council, by the chairman and the other members of the committee. The formal execution of the contract therefore was a compliance with the above rule.

The question arises, however, as to the authority of council to enter into such contract. Council has no specific authority to enter into such contract and its authority must be implied, if at all, from its power to legislate in behalf of the city.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Gayman, 11 C. C. N. S. 257, the validity of a joint resolution of the general assembly to investigate charges of corruption was under consideration. It was declared in the resolution that the investigation was to be made for further legislation. The court, however, considered the effect of the resolution and held that the proposed investigation was not in fact to be made for the purpose of aiding legislation and held the resolution to be void.

As to the implied authority of the general assembly to make such investigation, the court through Giffen, J., says, at page 261:

> "If we are wrong in this conclusion the question still arises whether the committee can act after the final adjournment of the general assembly. The right to investigate and gather information in the manner here proposed exists, if at all, as an incident of and by implication from the power to legislate conferred by the constitution. An act duly passed by the general assembly is a complete exercise of the power to legislate; but a resolution to investigate for the purpose of further legislation, passed by the same body, is the exercise of a right incident to that power, and if that power itself be surrendered the incidental right goes with it."

The court does not directly hold that the general assembly had such inherent power.

In the case of State ex rel. v. Oglevee, Auditor, 36 O. S., 324, it is held:

> "Neither branch of the general assembly can alone appropriate money from the treasury; but where a fund is provided by law for the contingent expenses of either branch, the disbursement of the funds for such purposes is subject to the control of such branch.
> Hence, where a sum is allowed by the house of representatives for cleaning the hall occupied by that body, after its adjournment, the party rendering the service in pursuance of the resolution is entitled to be paid therefor out of the contingent fund previously appropriated for the use of the house."

It appears from the above holding that the general assembly has a right to contract for services performed for either branch of the legislature.

At the time the above decision was rendered and that of State ex rel. v. Gay-man, supra, the legislative power of the state was vested in the general assembly by the provisions of section 1, article II of the Constitution, which then read as follows:

> "The legislative power of this state shall be vested in a general assembly, which shall consist of a senate, and a house of representatives."

There is, however, no provision in the constitution which grants to, or prohibits the general assembly from entering into contracts.

Under the terms of section 4211, General Code, the legislative power of a city is vested in council. In order to perform this duty the members of council would have an implied power to make investigations so that they could intelligently perform such duty and legislate for the best interests of the community. Council would have the right to make such investigation independent of any administrative or executive officer. To deny such right might in many cases hamper council in the proper performance of its duties.

Council, therefore, has an implied power to make an investigation "for the purposes of securing information upon which to base proper legislation," and it may authorize a committee of council to enter into a contract on behalf of the city for the purpose of having such investigation made.

It is within the proper discretion of council to determine to what extent such an investigation shall be made. The determination of council should not be set aside or held to be in excess of its powers except upon clear abuse of its discretion. This is not shown in the present case.

The contract now in question was within the discretion of council. It was entered into by the members of the committee authorized by council and made in the name of the city. It was, therefore, valid if the appropriation was properly made.

It appears that the money to pay for this contract was appropriated "out of the unappropriated moneys in the gas, water and electric funds." These funds were provided for carrying on these respective plants. They are not created as funds from which council may make expenditures for legislative purposes. Expenditures made by council for its use should be made from a fund created and provided for that purpose, as is done in providing funds for payment of publication of ordinances and of salaries of the clerk of council and his assistants.

The effect of the appropriating ordinance was to transfer three thousand dollars from the gas, water and electric funds to a council or legislative fund.

A transfer of funds can only be made from funds raised by taxation under the provisions of section 3799, General Code, which reads:

> "By the votes of three-fourths of all the members elected thereto, and the approval of the mayor, the council may at any time transfer all or a portion of one fund, or a balance remaining therein, except the proceeds of a special levy, bond issue or loan, to the credit of one or more funds, but there shall be no such transfer except among funds raised by taxation upon all the real and personal property in the corporation, nor until the object of the fund from which the transfer is to be effected has been accomplished or abandoned."

The expenditure now in question was not provided for in the annual budget and therefore money raised from taxation could not be used for that purpose, as that would be in violation of section 5649-3d, General Code, supra. The only money that could be reached by a supplementary appropriation ordinance as that now in question was that coming under the term "receipts and balances," and not from that raised by taxation. The money known as "receipts" is not raised by taxation, and this could not be transferred from one fund to another.

A part of the funds expended was taken from the water fund.

Section 3959 General Code provides:

> "After paying the expenses of conducting and managing the waterworks, any surplus therefrom may be applied to the repairs, enlargement or extension of the works or of the reservoirs, the payment of the interest of any loan made for their construction or for the creation of a sinking fund for the liquidation of the debt. The amount authorized to be levied and assessed for waterworks purposes shall be applied by the council to the creation of the sinking fund for the payment of the indebtedness incurred for the construction and extension of waterworks and for no other purpose whatever."

Section 3960 General Code reads:

> "Money collected for waterworks purposes shall be deposited weekly with the treasurer of the corporation. Money so deposited shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund. When appropriated by council, it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. Such director shall sign all orders drawn on the treasurer of the corporation against such fund."

Under the provisions of these sections monies raised for waterworks purposes shall be used for that purpose and "shall be kept as a separate and distinct fund." When appropriated by council it shall be subject to the order of the director of public service. The amount appropriated in the present case from the waterworks fund was in violation of the above sections.

Council did not have authority to make the appropriation in question from the water, gas and electric funds. The contract in question, however, has been fully executed and the city of Hamilton has secured the benefit thereof. The city solicitor has approved the consent in these terms: "O. K. as to form and legality."

Under the above circumstances no finding should be made against any of the officers for the illegal expenditures of the funds, but attention should be called to the illegal appropriation and transfer of funds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL OFFICERS—ELECTED AT NOVEMBER ELECTION AND UNABLE TO ASSUME THEIR DUTIES BECAUSE OF SERVICE IN UNITED STATES ARMY—PREDECESSORS HOLD OVER UNTIL THEY QUALIFY—WHEN COUNCIL MAY DECLARE VACANCY—HOW FILLED—HOW OFFICE FILLED AFTER NEWLY ELECTED OFFICIALS QUALIFY.

1. Where persons were elected last November to the offices of city auditor, city treasurer and city solicitor, and where they are not able to enter upon the duties of the offices to which they were respectively elected, due to the fact that they are serving in the United States army, and who do not qualify until they are able to enter upon their duties, the officers elected in November, 1915, will serve until the members elected in November, 1917, do qualify.

2. However, if the said persons elected last November do not qualify within ten days, then the council of the municipality might, if they desired, declare a vacancy, in which event the mayor should fill the vacancy for the unexpired term, this being under section 4242 General Code.

3. But if the persons elected in November, 1917, do qualify by taking the oath of office and giving bond and are not able to enter upon the duties of the office to which they were elected due to the fact that they are serving in the United States army, then the mayor of the municipality should appoint some person to perform the duties of the office until the disability is removed and they are able to perform the duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of recent date in which you make inquiry in reference to the matter of the election of three persons at the last November election for city officers, one being elected city auditor, one city treasurer, and the other city solicitor. The three persons are in the army of the United States, and therefore, for the present, at least, are not able to enter upon the performance of the duties of their respective offices. You ask what legal steps should be taken in reference to making provision for the performance of the duties of these various offices. Practically the same principles of law will apply to the three conditions.

First, let us notice the provisions of the statutes in reference to the election and terms of these three officers. Section 4275 General Code provides that the auditor shall be elected for the term of two years, and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. Section 4293 General Code provides that the treasurer shall be elected for a term of two years and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified. Section 4303 General Code provides that the city solicitor shall be elected for a term of two years and shall serve until his successor is elected and qualified.

From the provisions of these sections the persons who took their offices on January 1, 1916, will continue to serve as said officers until their successors are elected and qualified—that is, they shall serve until two conditions obtain: First, the election of their successors; and, second, the qualification of their successors. So, if any of the persons elected at the last November election do not qualify, then the officers elected in November, 1915, and who took their offices on January 1, 1916, would continue to hold the offices until the persons elected last November—and who are now in the army—would qualify by taking the oath of office and filing the required bond.

This proposition, however, would have to be modified to some extent on account of the provisions of section 4242 General Code, which reads as follows:

> "The council may declare vacant the office of any person elected or appointed to an office who fails to take the required official oath or give any bond required of him, within ten days after he has been notified of his appointment or election, or obligation to give a new or additional bond, as the case may be."

From this provision, if the persons so elected should not qualify within ten days after receipt of notice of election, then the council might, if it desired to do so, declare the office vacant. In this event the vacancy would have to be filled under and by virtue of the provisions of section 4252 G. C.

But, supposing the persons elected last November qualified by taking oath and filing bond, then the officers elected in 1915 would not hold over any longer than until the bond prescribed by law is filed; and this for the reason that they hold only until their successors are elected and qualify. What, then, will be done in reference to the duties of the offices in the event that the persons elected thereto qualify, the said persons not being able to perform the duties due to the fact that they are in the army of the United States?

In reference to this question it is well for us to remember that the statute makes no provision whatever for deputy or assistants to the city treasurer; but the statute in reference to the city solicitor makes provision merely for an assistant, provided that council consents. The statute in reference to the city auditor makes provision for a deputy to the city auditor, provided council consents.

While these provisions are somewhat different in each case, yet I do not believe they would have any effect upon the answer to be given to your question. I believe that the provisions of section 4252 General Code would control in each case.

The above discussion applies to those officers who qualify but are not able to enter upon the performance of their duties due to the fact that they are serving in the United States army, and in this event I am of the opinion that the provisions of section 4252 General Code would apply inasmuch as it provides:

> "In case of the death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer * * * the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed."

It is my opinion that the plain intendment of this statute is such that the conditions suggested by you would come under its terms and provisions. The persons elected are not now able to perform the duties of the office to which they were elected, because of the fact that they are serving in the army of the United States. In other words they are disabled from the performance of these duties, but this disability will not necessarily remain during the entire term for which they were elected. They may be honorably discharged from service in the army and thus be able to perform the duties of the office to which they were respectively elected. Hence it is my opinion that the mayors of the different municipalities involved might appoint some person to fill the vacancy due to the disability of the persons elected thereto to perform the duties of the present time, and that the persons appointed would hold office until the disability is removed—that is, until the persons would be discharged from service in the United States army, and thus be able to enter upon the performance of the duties of the respective offices.

It must be remembered that the language used is not "other disability." If it were, then under the familiar rule of ejusdem generis "disability" would have to be given a meaning similar to the specific causes which precede it. In the statute under consideration the general term "disability" is used, and as said I am of the opinion that it is broad enough to include the conditions under consideration.

Hence, answering your question specifically:

1. If the persons elected last November should not qualify by taking oath and filing bond then in that event the respective officers who took office on January 1, 1916, would hold over until they do qualify by taking oath and filing bond.

2. However, under the provisions of section 4242 General Code, if the persons elected should not qualify within ten days after receiving notice of their election, then the council of the municipality might, if it so desires, declare said office vacant, in which event the mayor would fill the vacancy under the provisions of section 4252 General Code.

3. In the event that said persons have qualified and are not able to enter upon the duties of their office then in that event the mayor of the municipality, under section 4252 General Code would appoint some person to fill the vacancy until the disability is removed.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ORDINANCE—NOT EFFECTIVE UNTIL EXPIRATION OF THIRTY DAYS —OFFICER TAKING OFFICE DURING REFERENDUM PERIOD RAISING HIS SALARY—WILL DRAW SALARY AS IT EXISTED PRIOR TO INCREASE.

The provisions of an ordinance passed by the council of a city do not, with some exceptions, become effective until thirty days after it is filed with the mayor. Hence, if an officer enters upon his duties for the term for which he is elected before an ordinance, raising his salary, becomes effective under the principles of the referendum, he will draw the salary as it existed prior to the increase, during the term for which he is elected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of December 5, 1917, which is as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:

STATEMENT OF FACTS

Under an existing ordinance the salary of an elected officer of a municipality, elected for a term of two years, is $1,200.00 per year. On December 15, 1917, council passes an ordinance fixing the salary for said position at $1,500.00 per year. Under the provisions of section 4227-2 General Code, the last ordinance mentioned will become operative on January 14, 1918.

Question: May the officer in question legally be paid at the rate of $1,500.00 per year from and after January 14, 1918, or must he serve his entire elective term of 1918 and 1919 at the salary of $1,200.00 per year?"

The facts upon which you desire an opinion are briefly these: Under an existing ordinance of a certain city the salary of a certain official of the city is fixed at $1,200.00. Then your supposition is that on December 15, 1917, council of said city should pass an ordinance fixing the salary of said official at $1,500.00 per year, which under and by virtue of the principle of the referendum would not become effective until thirty days after it is filed with the mayor, which would make it become effective something like January 14, 1918. Upon these facts your question is as to whether an officer who takes his position on January 1, 1918, would draw a salary of $1,200.00 up to the fourteenth day of January, 1918, and from that time on a salary of $1,500.00, or whether he would draw $1,200.00 from the beginning of the term for which he was elected to the end thereof. Of course, there would be another alternative in that he might begin with a salary of $1,500.00 and continue to draw the same up to the end of the term for which he was elected.

The particular sections which give rise to this question are sections 4213 and 4227-2 of the General Code, which read as follows:

> "Sec. 4213. The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."
> "Sec. 4227-2. Any ordinance, or other measure passed by the council of any municipal corporation shall be subject to the referendum except as hereinafter provided. No ordinance or other measure shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city or passed by the council in a village, except as hereinafter provided.
> When a petition signed by ten per cent of the electors of any municipal corporation shall have been filed with the city auditor or village clerk in such municipal corporation, within thirty days after any ordinance, or other measure shall have been filed with the mayor, or passed by the council of a village, ordering that such ordinance or measure be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such city auditor or village clerk shall, after ten days, certify the petition to the board of deputy supervisors of elections of the county wherein such municipality is situated and said board shall cause to be submitted to the electors of such municipal corporation for their approval or rejection, such ordinance, or measure at the next succeeding regular or general election, in any year, occurring subsequent to forty days after the filing of such petition.
> No such ordinance or measure shall go into effect until approved by the majority of those voting upon the same. Nothing in this act shall prevent a municipality after the passage of any ordinance or other measure from proceeding at once, to give any notice, or make any publication, required by such ordinance or other measure."

As suggested above, there are three different views which may be taken with reference to the salary of said official, which are as follows:

The official taking office on January 1, 1918, might begin with a salary of $1,500.00 and draw the same during the entire term for which he is elected; or he might begin with a salary of $1,200.00 and draw the same during the entire term for which he is elected; or he might begin with a salary of $1,200.00 and draw said salary up to the time that the ordinance goes into force and effect under the principles of the referendum, as set forth in said section 4227-2 G. C., at which time he would begin with a salary of $1,500.00 and draw the same until the expiration of the term for which he is elected.

Which one of these different propositions is selected to be the correct one depends altogether upon the question as to what construction we place upon the ordinance increasing the salary of said officer from $1,200.00 to $1,500.00 in the light of the provisions of law as found in said above quoted sections. The first principle of law to be considered is that "the salary of any officer * * * shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected." The other principle of law is that "no ordinance * * * shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city * * *."

With the three propositions above set forth and the two principles of law just stated in mind, let us proceed with the consideration as to what is the correct conclusion to be reached in reference to your query. Of course, if the ordinance passed by the council on December 15, 1917, and filed with the mayor, becomes effective immediately upon publication, to the extent at least that the change in salary takes effect at that time or on or before January 1, 1918, then the first of the above propositions would be true, that is, the officer would begin with a salary of $1,500.00 and continue to draw the same until the expiration of the term for which he is elected. But if said ordinance does not become effective for the purpose of making the change in salary until thirty days after the same is filed with the mayor of the city, then the second of the above propositions would be true, that is, the officer would begin with a salary of $1,200.00 and continue to draw the same until the expiration of the term for which he is elected. This for the reason that the salary of an officer cannot be increased during the term for which he was elected and if the change becomes effective on or about January 14, 1918, it would come within the purview of section 4213 G. C. and would not affect the salary of the officer during the term for which he was elected. In my opinion there is no reasoning whatever which could lead us to the conclusion that the third proposition above set forth is correct; namely, that the officer might begin the term of office with a salary of $1,200.00 and draw the same up to the time at which the ordinance would become fully effective under the principles of the referendum and from that time on draw a salary of $1,500.00. The increase in salary either becomes effective before January 1, 1918, or after said date. If it becomes effective before said date, the officer would begin with $1,500.00 and end with that amount, because the principle set forth in section 4213 cannot apply to such conditions. But if the change becomes effective after January 1, 1918, then the principle set forth in section 4213 would apply and the increase in salary could not be made to apply to the officer taking office on January 1, 1918; he would draw $1,200.00 from the beginning of his term to the end of the same. Hence, we must select either the first or the second of the propositions above enumerated.

So we will proceed from now on upon that theory. Section 4227-2 G. C. provides "no ordinance shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city." This provision is made to give opportunity to the people to have any ordinance referred to them for approval or disapproval, should they desire to have it referred to them. This is what is styled as the principle of the referendum. In considering this question, it must always be borne in mind that the law making bodies of the state and of the cities of the state are no longer supreme in the matter of law making.

Section 1 of article II of the constitution provides as follows:

> "The legislative power of the state shall be vested in a general assembly consisting of a senate and house of representatives, but the people * * * reserve the power to adopt or reject any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly * * *."

That is, the people of the state enter into the factor of making laws and virtually become a part of the law making machinery of the state. They reserve to themselves the right to approve or disapprove the acts which are passed by the legislature and filed by the governor with the secretary of state. This is the view that is taken of the principles of the initiative and referendum by our courts.

In Pfeifer et al, vs. Graves, 88 O. S., 473, the court say:

> "The language of section 1b is to be fairly and reasonably interpreted so as to carry out the purpose of the people who adopted the dual form of direct and indirect legislation prescribed therein."

On page 486, the court in considering section 1 of article II of the constitution, state:

"The first named is a delegated power—from the people to their legislative agents or representatives. The second is a reserved power; it comprehends all of the sovereign power of legislation not thus delegated."

In State ex rel. vs. Hildebrandt, Secretary of State, 94 O. S., 154, the court say in the first branch of the syllabus:

"The term 'legislature,' in section 4, article I of the United States constitution, comprehends the entire legislative power of the state; and, as so used, includes not only the two branches of the general assembly but the popular will as expressed in the referendum provided for in sections 1 and 1c of article II of the Ohio constitution."

On page 161 the court reasons as follows:

"These various sections disclose that, while the legislative power has been delegated to the bi-cameral body composed of the senate and house of representatives, the people of Ohio have by the aforesaid provisions of their constitution determined the manner by which such legislative power may be exercised, under what circumstances the laws passed by it may become operative without an appeal to the people, and have further imposed the conditions under which such laws may become operative or inoperative as they may have been adopted or rejected by the popular vote designated as the 'referendum'."

From these decisions of our courts and from reason also we readily see that the people become a vital and essential part of the machinery of legislation in the state at large.

The same principle applies to municipalities. Under the provisions of section 4227-2 G. C. the people of municipalities have been given the right to have referred to them, for their approval or disapproval, ordinances passed by the council. They virtually become a part of the law making machinery of the city. The mere fact that the council of a municipality adopts an ordinance is not conclusive upon the question as to whether the principles embodied in the ordinance will become the law of the municipality or not. Council no longer has the final say in the matter as to what principles shall be enacted in law by means of ordinances or resolutions. The people have the right to speak. And until they do speak, either by permitting the ordinance to become effective without any action or by approving the same at the polls by a majority vote, the provisions of the ordinance are held in abeyance. If they take no steps to have it referred to them and quietly permit it to become a law, it will become effective in thirty days from the time it is filed with the mayor of a city. But even in reference to this it must be remembered that the people of the municipality virtually place their stamp of approval upon the same by quietly permitting it to become a law of the municipality. If they ask to have it referred to them the ordinance will not become effective until "approved by the majority of those voting upon the same * * * at a regular or general election occurring subsequent to forty days after the request to have same referred to the people is filed with the city auditor." Instead of approving the same at the polls, the people may decide in the exercise of their sovereign rights to disapprove the same, in which case it will not become a law at all. The position of the people in reference to law making under the principles of the referendum is exactly parallel to the position of the governor of the state in the matter of law making. No act passed by both houses becomes effective from that fact alone. The act must be referred to the governor and he is given a period of ten days within which to decide whether he will permit the act to become a law without his action in reference to the same or whether he will approve the same by signing it or disapprove the same by vetoing it. No one would hold for a minute that an act is in force or effect simply because it has passed both branches of the legislature. The thing that gives the act vitality is either the tacit approval of the governor or his signing the same, and if he does not see fit to do one or the other of these things, he can veto the same and prevent its becoming a law at all.

In view of all the above, to what conclusion can we come in reference to your query, or rather to what conclusion must we come?

The statutes says no ordinance shall go into effect until thirty days after it shall have been filed with the mayor of a city. The principles above enunciated demand that the provisions of an ordinance should not go into effect until a certain time after it has been filed with the mayor in order that the people may have the right to refer the said ordinance to themselves for approval or disapproval, should they desire so to do.

The question involved is really whether the principles contained in an ordinance shall be anticipated or not. If we can anticipate the going into effect of the ordinance for the purpose of the change in salary, why not anticipate it in reference to contractual rights and remedies? If we anticipate its going into effect for one thing, why not anticipate its going into effect for all things?

It is my opinion that the going into effect of the ordinance can not be anticipated for any purpose whatever, and that the provisions of the old ordinance must be relied upon entirely as to the status of the law until the new ordinance goes into force and effect under the principles of the referendum. The provisions of the new ordinance during the referendum period are held in abeyance. The ordinance works no change or effect whatever upon the rights of persons until the thirty-day period has expired. No rights can be predicated upon it; no remedies can be secured from it. If it does not go into effect for a period of thirty days as provided in the statute, then the repealing clause of the ordinance does not go into effect until this period has expired. If the repealing clause is not in effect, then the old ordinance in reference to salary remains in full force and effect until the end of said referendum period. The provisions of both ordinances can not be in force and effect, hence the provisions of the new ordinance are not effective as to salary until the end of the referendum period. Therefore if the change in salary takes place after the first of January, 1918, it could not affect the salary of the city official taking office on the first of January, 1918, and this from the provisions of section 4213 G. C. Hence the conclusion is sound that he must draw a salary of $1,200.00 during the term for which he was elected at the November election in 1917 and upon which he had entered at the time the change in salary took place.

Further, if we should select the other alternative above suggested we would under certain circumstances get into grave difficulties. Suppose we assume that the change in salary took place when the council acted in the matter of passing the ordinance; then the change would be effective before January 1, 1918, and the official elected last November would be entitled to $1,500.00 from the beginning of his term. Section 4227-2 G. C. specifically states that the ordinance shall not be effective until thirty days after it is filed with the mayor, thus making this specific ordinance take effect after the middle of January. How could the new official draw salary under an ordinance which is not yet in effect and while there is still an ordinance in effect fixing his salary at $1,200.00?

Further, suppose a petition should be filed with the city auditor and the question should be put up to a vote of the people at the next regular and general election and suppose further that the people by their vote disapprove of the ordinance, then we would have this situation: The officer would begin his term on the theory that the change in salary took place in December, 1917, and therefore he would be entitled to $1,500.00 from the beginning of his term. But he would awaken on the morning after the election and find that no change in salary had really been made at all because the people refused to approve the ordinance and it fell and never would become effective.

Hence, from reasoning and from the practical working out of the matter, I feel confident that the only correct conclusion is to the effect that the ordinance becomes effective for no purpose until the last turn is made by the legislative machinery, namely, until the people quietly approve it by permitting it to become a law at the end of the referendum period or until they approve the same on election day, should they ask for a referendum.

In addition to the reasoning herein set out I desire to call your attention to opinion No. 493, rendered to the public utilities commission on August 3, 1917. In said opinion I was placing a construction upon our constitutional provisions in reference to the referendum on a state of facts similar to those submitted by you and much that was stated in said opinion will apply to the matter now before me.

In rendering the above opinion I am not unmindful of the fact that this department has not always been uniform in reference to the effect of the referendum upon the question of change in salary. Mr. Denman, in an opinion rendered on January 10, 1910 (reports of the attorney-general for 1910-1911, page 1045), held that a change in salary made by an ordinance would not become effective as to persons whose terms began during the ten-day period during which the ordinance must be published before it would become effective. This was a much stronger holding than the one which I have made, due to the fact that everything had been done in reference to said ordinance so far as legislation was concerned that could be done because the principle of the initiative and the referendum was not in force and effect at that time.

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, rendered an opinion December 29, 1911 (reports of the attorney-general for 1911-1912, page 1619), which if applied to the facts presented in your communication would permit the official, entering upon the duties of his office on January 1, 1918, to draw a salary of $1,200.00 up to the time that the ordinance would become effective and from that time on a salary of $1,500.00.

In an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on October 15, 1915 (reports of the attorney-general for 1915, page 2005), he held practically the same as did Mr. Hogan. But notwithstanding these holdings of my predecessors it is my opinion that the conclusion reached by me in reference to the matter set out in your communication is correct.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the officer taking his position on January 1, 1918, would draw the salary of $1,200.00 from the beginning of the term for which he was elected to the end thereof, and this under the principles as set out in section 4227-2 G. C.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

JUDGE OF ELECTIONS—WHO SERVED AT ELECTION—INELIGIBLE TO OFFICE OF MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—HOW VACANCY CAUSED THEREBY FILLED.

1. A person who served as a judge of elections is ineligible to office of member of the board of education, for which position he received sufficient votes to elect him at the last election.

2. A person who receives a smaller number of votes than his opponent is not considered elected because of the ineligibility of the successful candidate.

3. Where a person receives sufficient votes to elect him as one of a group of persons who are elected members of a board of education, and such person is ineligible to hold said position, a vacancy occurs which shall be filled by the remaining members of the board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

HON. WAYNE STILWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion on the following matter:

> "A question has arisen with regard to the election of a member of the Millersburg school board and I have been asked to secure your opinion. * * * Mr. R. L. P., who received third highest vote, and whose name was on the ticket, was a judge of elections. He had, sometime previous to the election, verbally asked that his name be not printed. Knowing that he was disqualified by reason of his service as judge (section 5092) he did not file an expense account or try to qualify in any way for the office. Mr. C. R. W., who was fourth highest, filed his expense account and claims that he has been duly elected."

Section 5092 G. C. reads as follows:

> "No person, being a candidate for an office to be filled at an election, other than for committeeman or delegate or alternate to any convention, shall serve as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, or as a judge or clerk of elections, in any precinct at such election. A person serving as deputy state supervisor or clerk thereof, judge or clerk of elections contrary to this section shall be ineligible to any office to which he may be elected at such election."

So that when Mr. R. L. P. served as a judge of elections on the election board in the Millersburg school district, he thereby became ineligible to be a candidate for member of the board of education and no certificate of election could be issued to him as such member. That Mr. C. R. W. who was a candidate and who received fewer votes than did R. L. P. at such election, filed his expense account, would not make C. R. W. the duly elected member at such election. This question was squarely passed upon in State ex rel. v. Speidel et al, 62 O. S., 156, where Davis, J., at page 159, uses the following language:

> "The election may fail altogether * * * * by reason of ineligibility of the successful candidate * * * * but that could not elect a man who in fact has received a smaller number of votes than his opponent."

Following the above decision, then, I must advise you that there is a vacancy in the membership of said board which is caused by the ineligibility of the candidate who was voted for and the same should be filled as other vacancies are filled and under the provisions of section 4748 of the General Code, which reads in part as follows:

> "A vacancy in any board of education * * * * shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

KENNEL—AS USED IN SECTION 5652-1 G. C. DEFINED—THE PHRASE "NOT CONSTANTLY CONFINED" DOES NOT APPLY TO UNREGISTERED DOGS BELONGING TO REGISTERED KENNEL WHERE SUCH DOGS ARE TAKEN OUT FOR EXERCISE.

(1) The term "kennel" as used in section 5652-1 G. C. (107 O. L., 534), means any pack or collection of dogs, over the age of three months, kept together for the purposes of hunting or for sale.

(2) The phrase "not constantly confined," as used in the statutory provision designating the conditions under which unregistered dogs over the age of three months may be seized and impounded, refers to dogs at liberty without restraint, and the statutory provision requiring the seizure and impounding of such unregistered dogs has no application to unregistered dogs belonging to a registered kennel where such dogs are taken out for exercise under leash or other restraint.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is in receipt of a communication in which you ask an opinion as follows:

> "(1) Section 5652-1 G. C., (107 O. L. 534) provides a registration fee against every owner of a kennel of dogs of $10.00 per year. Does this apply to any person who breeds and sells dogs, or does it apply only to a professional breeder and dealer in dogs?
> (2) The kennel provision of this law, where a kennel is registered, provides that dogs which are constantly confined need not be registered. When a kennel keeper takes out such dogs for exercise that are in leash, are they to be considered to be confined to the extent that a sheriff could not seize them because they had no tag, while being so exercised?"

As explanatory of some of the provisions of section 5652-1 General Code I note the provisions of section 5652 General Code, which reads:

> "Sec. 5652. Every person who owns, keeps or harbors a dog more than three months of age, annually, before the first day of January of each year, shall file together with a registration fee of one dollar for each male or spayed female dog, and a registration fee of two dollars for each female dog unspayed, in the office of the county auditor of the county in which such dog is kept or harbored, an application for registration for the following year beginning the first day of January of such year, stating the age, sex, color, character of hair, whether short or long, and breed, if known, of such dog, also the name and address of the owner of such dog."

Section 5652-1 General Code provides as follows:

"Every owner of a kennel of dogs shall in like manner as in section 5652 provided, make application for the registration of such kennel, and pay therewith to the county auditor a registration fee of ten dollars for such kennel. Provided, however, that the owner of such dog kennel shall, in addition to paying such kennel fee, comply with all of the requirements of section 5652 with respect to every dog more than three months of age belonging to such dog kennel not kept constantly confined in such kennel."

The term "kennel" has been defined as meaning the house or other shelter place provided for dogs, or as meaning a number of dogs kept together. Thus, in the Standard Dictionary the term is defined as follows:

"1. A house or other shelter for a dog or for a pack of hounds.
2. A number of dogs kept together; a pack of hounds."

In the Century Dictionary the term is defined:

"1. A house or cot for a dog, or a pack of hounds.
2. A pack of hounds; a collection of dogs of any breed or of different breeds."

The term as used in section 5652-1 General Code seems to comprehend something of the idea denoted in both definitions. However, I am inclined to the view that the major idea denoted by the use of the term "kennel" in this section is that of a pack or collection of dogs rather than the place where the dogs are kept.

In the case of The State v. Tripp, 84 Conn., 641, the court had under consideration the prosecution of the defendant on the charge of killing a couple of dogs belonging to a registered or licensed kennel registered in the name of two persons as owners, under a statute which provided that any owner or keeper of a kennel might apply, on or before the first day of May, to the town clerk of the town in which such kennel was located for a kennel license; that the town clerk should issue to such applicant a kennel license for one year from the first day of May, which license was required to specify the name of the kennel, the name of the owner and the keeper of the same, and that every dog kept in such kennel so licensed should when at large wear a collar bearing a metal tag or plate upon which should appear the number of the kennel license, the name of the town issuing such license and the year thereof, which plates or tags were to be furnished by the town clerk.

Another section of the act provided that the dog warden should take into his custody any dog found at large without the required tag or plate on its collar, and that after notice was given of the capture of the dog, unless it was redeemed within a certain fixed time by the payment of a sum of money in no case exceeding three dollars, it should be killed by such warden. Another section applicable to dogs belonging to a licensed kennel provided that every person who should unlawfully kill or injure such a dog should be fined or imprisoned.

The court in the case above noted, in affirming a judgment of the lower court convicting defendant of an offense of unlawfully killing dogs belonging to a registered kennel, in its opinion uses the following language:

> "The fact that a part of the pack of hounds which formed the licensed kennel were kept at the house of each of the owners in the same town did not vitiate the license. The word 'kennel' as used in the statute does not mean the house or place in which the dogs are kept, but a pack or collection of dogs usually kept or bred for hunting, or for sale."

After mature consideration I am unable to arrive at a more satisfactory definition of the term "kennel" as used in this act than that given in the case of State v. Tripp, supra, and in answer to your first question I am of the opinion that the term "kennel" as used in this act means any pack or collection of dogs over the age of three months kept together for the purpose of hunting or for sale.

With respect to your second question I note the provisions of section 5652-7 General Code and a part of the provisions of section 5652-8 General Code, which read as follows:

> "Sec. 5652-7. County sheriffs shall seize and impound all dogs more than three months of age, except dogs kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel found not wearing valid registration tags. Upon affidavit made before a justice of the peace, that a dog more than three months of age and not kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel is not wearing a valid registration tag and is at large, or is kept or harbored in his township, such justice of the peace shall forthwith order the sheriff of the county to seize and impound such animal. Thereupon such sheriff shall immediately seize and impound such dog so complained of. Such sheriff shall forthwith give notice to the owner of such dog, if such owner be known to the sheriff, that such dog has been impounded, and that the same will be sold or destroyed if not redeemed within four days. If the owner of such dog be not known to the sheriff, he shall post a notice in the county court house describing the dog and place where seized, and advising the unknown owner that such dog will be sold or destroyed if not redeemed within four days."
> "Sec. 5652-8. County commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act, shall provide nets and other suitable devices for taking dogs in a humane manner, and, except as hereinafter provided, shall also provide a suitable place for impounding dogs, and make proper provision for feeding and caring for the same, and shall also provide humane devices and methods for destroying dogs. * * *"

Without extended discussion of the statutory provisions applicable to your second question above quoted, I am of the opinion that the phrase "not constantly confined," as used in the statutory provision designating the conditions under which unregistered dogs over the age of three months may be seized and impounded, refers to dogs at liberty without restraint, and that the statutory provision requiring the seizure and impounding of such unregistered dogs has no application to unregistered dogs belonging to a registered kennel where such dogs are taken out for exercise under leash or otherwise restrained.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ASSESSMENT—WHEN SAME NOT CERTIFIED TO AUDITOR WITHIN TWO YEARS—LIEN AGAINST PROPERTY EXTINGUISHED—PERSONAL LIABILITY RUNS SIX YEARS.

Where a village officer fails to certify an assessment for collection to the county auditor within two years after the same is payable, the lien of such assessment against the property is thereby extinguished. The owner of such property at the time such assessment was made, is personally liable to pay such assessment and where six years have not elapsed since said assessment became payable, the statute of limitations has not yet run against the personal liability of such owner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you submitted the following statement of facts and inquiry:

> "The clerk of a village of the state of Ohio, either through neglect of duty, carelessness or inefficiency, failed to certify to the county auditor for collection an assessment for a street improvement which was due and payable July 15, 1912, which certification to the county auditor has never been made up to the present time. The owner of the property against which the assessment was originally made sold said property in February, 1915.
> QUESTION: In view of section 3906 G. C., together with other statutes of limitation, can anybody at the present date be held liable for the amount of the assessment unpaid? If so, who, and for what remaining period of time?"

Section 3906 General Code, to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "The lien of an assessment shall continue two years from the time it is payable, and no longer, unless the corporation, before the expiration of the time, causes it to be certified to the auditor of the proper county, for entry upon the tax list for collection, or causes the proper action to be commenced in a court having jurisdiction thereof, to enforce such lien against such lots or lands, in which case the lien shall continue in force so long as the assessment remains on the tax list uncollected or so long as the action is pending, and any judgment obtained, under and by virtue thereof, remains in force and unsatisfied."

By virtue of this section the lien of the assessment continues only two years, unless the assessment has been certified to the county auditor. It does not affect, however, the personal liability of the owner of the property at the time the assessment was made to pay such assessment.

Section 3897 General Code reads as follows:

> "Special assessments shall be payable by the owners of the property assessed personally, by the time stipulated in the ordinance providing therefor, and shall be a lien from the date of the assessment upon the respective lots or parcels of land assessed. When presented with a receipt from the contractor, in whose favor an assessment is confirmed, or his assigns, showing such assessment on any property for any improvement to have been paid, the auditor or clerk shall at once record the fact upon the margin of the record of the assessment, with the date of such presentation, from which time such property shall be released from the lien."

Under the provisions of this section the owner of the property is personally liable for the assessment.

In the case of Corry v. Gaynor, 21 O. S. 277, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

> "In an action to recover a personal judgment for the amount of an assessment for the improvement of streets, it must appear that the defendant was the owner of the lot assessed at the date of the assessment and it is not sufficient to aver that he was such owner at the commencement of the suit."

In the case of city of Toledo v. Barnes, 8 C. C. 684, a personal judgment for the collection of a special assessment was sustained.

The above authorities support the proposition that the owner of property at the time an assessment is made, is personally liable to pay such assessment. By virtue of section 3898 General Code, his liability is limited to his interest in the property assessed.

This section reads as follows:

> "If payment is not made by the time stipulated, the amount assessed, together with interest, and a penalty of five per cent. thereon, may be recovered by suit before a justice of the peace, or other court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of the corporation, against the owner or owners, but the owner shall not be liable, under any circumstances beyond his interest in the property assessed, at the time of the passage of the ordinance or resolution to improve."

As the amount of the assessment and the value of the property are not stated in your inquiry, the extent of the liability need not be further considered.

The next question to be considered is the application of the statute of limitation. If any limitations of action apply in this case, it will be the six-year limitation contained in section 11222 General Code. This section reads as follows:

> "An action upon a contract not in writing, express or implied, or upon a liability created by statute other than a forfeiture or penalty, shall be brought within six years after the cause thereof accrued."

In the case of Hartman v. Hunter, Treasurer, 56 O. S., 175, the second branch of the syllabus reads:

> "A civil action brought by the treasurer of a county under section 1104, Revised Statutes, to enforce assessments for the contruction of township ditches, is by the second clause of section 4891, Revised Statutes, barred in six years after the cause of action arises."

In the case of City of Cincinnati v. Fogarty, 13 O. N. P., N. S., 631, the syllabus reads:

> "An action for recovery of unpaid street assessments is an action upon a liability created by statute, and is therefore controlled by the six years statute of limitations."

In each of the above cases the assessment had been made prior to the amendment of section 2670 General Code, which now contains the clause

"nor shall any statute of limitations apply to such action."

This clause was inserted in this section by act shown in 95 Ohio Laws, 93, and passed on April 4, 1902.

Said section 2670 General Code reads as follows:

> "Judgment shall be rendered for such taxes and assessments, or any part thereof, as are found due and unpaid, and for penalty and costs for the payment of which the court shall order such premises to be sold without appraisement. From the proceeds of the sale the costs shall be first paid, next the judgment for taxes and assessments, and the balance shall be distributed according to law. The owner or owners of such property shall not be entitled to any exemption against such judgment, nor shall any statute of limitations apply to such action. When the lands or lots stand charged on the tax duplicate as forfeited to the state, it shall not be necessary to make the state a party, but it shall be deemed a party through and represented by the county treasurer."

This section applies to actions by a county treasurer to foreclose the lien for taxes or assessments against the property. It does not apply in the present case for the reason that the assessment in question has not been certified to the county auditor.

It appears from the statement that the assessment in question was due and payable July 15, 1912. The six-year period therefore will not expire until July 15, 1918. The statute of limitations has not yet run against the person who owned the property at the time the assessment was made.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the person or persons who owned the property in question at the time the above assessment was made, can be held personally liable for the amount of the assessment unpaid. There is no liability, however, against the property as that has been barred by virtue of the provisions of section 3906 General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN MONEY IS BORROWED TO CREATE A FUND OUT OF WHICH TO PAY FOR LABOR, ETC., THEREAFTER FURNISHED IN THE COMPLETION OF SCHOOL BUILDING—DOES NOT CREATE SUCH AN INDEBTEDNESS THAT MAY BE FUNDED UNDER SECTION 5656—DISAPPROVAL BOND ISSUE—MARION CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The only indebtedness that a board of education of a school district is authorized to fund under the provisions of sections 5656 and 5658 G. C. is such indebtedness as represents an accrued existing, valid and binding legal obligation of the school district. Where a board of education, instead of issuing bonds for the purpose, borrows money from a bank or banks for the purpose of creating a fund out of which to pay bills or estimates for labor and material thereafter furnished in the completion of a school building, such transaction, for want of authority in the board of education to borrow money for such purpose in this manner, does not have the effect of creating a legal indebtedness to such bank or banks which the board of education is authorized to fund by the issue and sale of bonds under the provisions of the above mentioned sections of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Marion city school district, in the sum of $45,000.00, for the purpose of funding and extending time of payment of certain indebtedness which said school district from its limits of taxation is unable to pay at maturity.

I am herewith returning, without my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Marion city school district relating to the above bond issue.

The resolution providing for the issue of said bonds recites that said bonds are issued for the purpose of extending the time of payment of certain indebtedness of the board of education of Marion city school district heretofore incurred in the payment for the completion of a new high school building and equipment therefor.

In answer to my request for more specific information as to the nature of the indebtedness sought to be funded by the proposed bond issue the clerk of the board of education of said school district wrote me as follows:

"In the building and completion of a new high school building and the equipment for same, our funds became exhausted before same was completed and accomplished. We took the matter to our local banks and, rather than stop all until bonds could be issued (and thus lose the use of this school for perhaps this school year) the banks advanced us the money and accepted as evidence our notes—pending the issuance of bonds, upon the completion of building and installation of equipment, and in accordance with law—all expenditures having been properly authorized by a yea and nay vote at time they were authorized. These bonds are to cancel that indebtedness and that only."

The issue of the bonds here in question is provided for under the assumed authority of sections 5656 and 5658 General Code. It is clear from the provisions of these sections that before any indebtedness can be funded or the time of payment thereof extended by the issue of bonds under their provisions said indebtedness must be a present existing, valid and binding obligation of the board of education or other political subdivision therein named issuing such bonds. I do not understand from the information at hand that the money borrowed by the board of education of Marion city school district from the banks of that city was so borrowed for the purpose of paying and discharging the then existing, valid and binding obligations against the school district incurred in completing the structure and equipment of the high school building. If this were the case the act of the board of education in borrowing this money from the bank would itself be the funding of an existing indebtedness under the authority of the sections of the General Code hereinbefore noted, and the indebtedness so incurred by the board of education to the banks in the transaction would be a legal and binding obligation which, when due and payable, could be funded and the time of payment thereof extended by an issue of bonds under the authority of said sections of the General Code. As before noted, however, I do not so understand this transaction. On the contrary, it seems clear from the information given me by the clerk of the board of education that after this money was borrowed from the banks the same was used by the board of education in paying bills or estimates for labor and material thereafter furnished in completing the construction and equipment of the high school building. In other words, as stated by the clerk in his letter, instead of issuing bonds for the purpose of creating a fund out of which to complete said building the money necessary therefor was borrowed from the banks on the notes of the board of education. I know of no statutory provision authorizing a board of education to borrow money for such purpose in the manner here indicated, and for this reason I am unable to hold that the indebtedness of the board of education to the banks is a valid and binding obligation such as the board of education is authorized to fund under the provisions of sections 5656 and 5658 General Code. The obligation of the board of education to the banks is a moral obligation of the highest character which in any event should be paid, if there is any means whereby the board of education may do so. It is manifest from the provisions of sections 5656 and 5658 General Code, however, that the only obligations that can be funded under their provisions are those which represent existing, valid and binding legal indebtedness, and, as before noted, I am unable to find that the indebtedness sought to be funded by the proposed bond issue is of this character.

For this reason I am unable to approve this bond issue and am compelled to advise you not to purchase same. However, under all the circumstances I deem it advisable that your action rescinding your former resolution providing for the purchase of these bonds should be general in terms rather than upon the specific ground of illegality above noted. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—BOND ISSUE UNDER SECTION 7629 G. C.—HOW LIMITED—DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—AKRON CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The authority of a board of education of a school district to issue bonds under the provisions of section 7629 General Code for the purpose of improving public school property is limited to the issue of bonds for specific improvements determined by the board at the time the issue of the bonds is provided for; and the resolution of the board of education providing for such bond issue should indicate the fact that such bonds are issued for such specific improvements.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Akron city school district in the sum of $250,000.00, for the purpose of improving property in said school district.

I am herewith returning, without my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Akron city school district relating to the above bond issue.

The transcript shows that at a regular meeting of the board of education of said school district on November 27, 1917, the board adopted a resolution providing for the issue and sale of bonds in the sum of $125,000.00 for the purpose of purchasing sites for and erecting school buildings in such school district. Pursuant to this resolution the bonds therein provided for were offered to the board of sinking fund trustees of the city of Akron, in its capacity as the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of Akron city school district, and thereafter, pursuant to said resolution, said issue of bonds was offered to the industrial commission of Ohio and by that body accepted. Thereafter, on December 18, 1917, at a meeting of the board of education of said school district held by way of adjournment from the regular meeting of the board under date of December 11, 1917, one of the members of the board of education offered a resolution as a substitute for the $125,000.00 bond resolution adopted by the board on November 27, 1917, above noted. The resolution so offered at the meeting under date of December 18, 1917, was adopted and provided for the issue and sale of bonds of said school district in the sum of $250,000.00 "for the purpose of improving public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes for such purpose to be levied." There is nothing in this later resolution to indicate whether or not it was intended in the issue and sale of bonds therein provided for to accomplish, in whole or in part, the purpose intended by the issue and sale of the bonds provided for in the first resolution. In the absence of a clear indication on the face of the later resolution that the same was intended to cover all of the purposes sought to be accomplished in the adoption of the first resolution, and in face of the fact that affirmative official action was taken looking to the disposition of the bonds provided for in the first resolution, it may well be doubted whether or not the adoption of the second resolution as a substitute for the first was effective to work a repeal or rescission of the first resolution. This being so, and if by the second resolution it is intended to accomplish, in whole or in part, the purpose sought to be accomplished in the adoption of the first resolution, it is manifest that the second resolution cannot be legally effective for such purpose as long as the first resolution stands without repeal or rescission.

In the second place, I am of the opinion that the second resolution is defective inasmuch as it does not indicate that the board of education in its adoption had in mind any specific improvements to public school property to be made by it. In other words, so far as this resolution is concerned, the proceeds of bonds issued and sold pursuant thereto might be placed in a fund and improvements of school property be made by the board from such fund from time to time as the board might hereafter determine. I do not think it is legally competent for a board of education to issue bonds for any such purpose. I recognize, of course, that said resolution in providing for the issue of said bonds "for the purpose of improving public school property" uses the exact language contained in section 7629 of the General Code, under the authority of which the resolution was adopted. The fact that this general language is used in section 7629 is not, to my mind, authority for the proposition that the board of education may issue bonds under its provisions for other than specific improvements of public school property determined upon by the board at the time of the adoption of the resolution.

To further illustrate the point I have in mind, it may be noted that section 3939 of the General Code (the same being one of the sections of the Longworth act so-called), provides in general terms that a municipal corporation may issue bonds for the purpose of improving streets. Under this general language it would hardly be contended, I think, that a municipal corporation could issue bonds for the purpose of creating a fund out of which to pay the cost of street improvements that might thereafter be made from time to time. On the contrary, it was held in the case of Heffner v. City of Toledo, 75 O. S. 413, that this could not be done.

It may be further observed that if as a matter of fact the board of education in the adoption of the second resolution intended by the use of a part of the proceeds realized from the sale of these bonds to accomplish the purpose intended in the adoption of the first resolution, it is manifest that the second resolution would be defective for such purposes for the reason that by the first resolution it was intended to obtain public school property as well as to improve same within the terms of section 7629 General Code.

The transcript is defective in a number of other particulars. For instance, there is no statement in the transcript of the tax duplicate valuation of taxable real and personal property in said school district, nor of the tax rates for all purposes on the taxable property of the school district. Again, there is no statement as to the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in said school district for the year 1916; nor is there any statement as to the amount, if any, of other bonds issued by the board of education under section 7629 General Code during the school fiscal year 1917. It is obvious that this information would be required in order that it may be ascertaind whether said above bond issue in the sum of $250,000.00 was within the two mill limitation prescribed by said section of the General Code. Again, though the transcript shows that said bonds were offered to the trustees of the sinking fund of the city of Akron in their capacity as the board of sinking fund commissioners of said school district, there is nothing in the transcript to show that such offer was rejected, and under section 1465-58 General Code it is only bonds which have been so offered and rejected that the Industrial Commission is authorized to purchase.

The objections last noted might be cured by further information, but inasmuch as the resolution providing for the issue of these bonds is itself considered by me to be defective I have no discretion to do otherwise than to advise you not to purchase said bonds on the present legislation of the board of education.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TEACHER—ASSISTANT COMES WITHIN THAT TERM—MINIMUM SALARY MAY BE WAIVED—ASSISTANT—WHO COMPLIES WITH THE LAW RELATIVE THERETO—COMES WITHIN TEACHER'S PENSION LAW—WHEN ENTIRE SALARY IS PAID TO TEACHER—BOARD OF EDUCATION NOT LIABLE FOR PREMIUM FOR TEACHER'S PENSION FUND.

1. A person who is employed as a teacher but is designated as an "assistant" comes within the term teacher as that term is commonly used by our school laws.

2. *The provisions of section 7595, in relation to the minimum salary, is a provision for the teachers and may be waived by them. 3. Persons who are hired to teach in the public schools and who comply with all of the provisions of law in relation to securing certificates, and teach in the day schools, come within the provisions of the teacher's pension laws of this state, although such persons may be designated as "assistants."

4. *Where a teacher receives the entire amount of his salary, the board of education cannot be required to pay to the trustees of the teacher's pension fund $2.00 per month for each month of such teacher's employment, thus making an amount over and above what the teacher had contracted to receive. COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1918.

Hon. F. B. Pearson, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A letter from Mr. E. F. McKee, city solicitor of Springfield, Ohio, contains questions of such general interest that I am convinced the same warrant my opinion to you in relation thereto. The letter reads in part as follows:

> "A teacher who has served twenty years in the Springfield schools and who is now denied reappointment is applying for teacher's pension under the last provision of General Code section 7891. The first year of the twenty was as 'assistant' teacher on one-half the salary of regular teachers in the first year. The teacher was otherwise regularly employed, (a) having been appointed at the regular time and with all other teachers, (b) being required to have and having the teacher's certificate according to law, and (c) having taught all day and every day for the school year, though subordinate to another regular teacher. * * *
> It now appears that the board of education of this school district has for the past several years been employing a number of persons to teach in the public schools, who were by the school board designated as 'assistants.' These assistants were (a) appointed at the regular time and with all other teachers in the public schools, (b) required to have, and having, a teacher's certificate according to law, and (c) teaching all day and every day during the school year, though subordinate to another 'regular' teacher. The board of education considering these employes as 'assistants' only, and not regular teachers, paid them only approximately $20.00 per month during such employment, instead of the minimum of $40.00 per month required under section 7595 G. C. to be paid to any person employed to teach in any public school in Ohio. It appears, however, that the board did not require such assistants to comply with the provisions of section 7877 G. C. and did not deduct $2.00 from the monthly salary of any such assistants."

Questions:

1. Is a person so employed as such assistant a teacher as the term is commonly used in our schools?
2. If such assistants are teachers is the board indebted to them for the difference in amount between the amount received and the minimum amount provided by law?
3. Are such assistants to be regarded as "teachers" under the provisions of the General Code which apply to teacher's pensions, to wit, sections 7875 to 7896 G. C.?
4. Is the board of education indebted to the trustees of the teacher's pension fund in the sum of $2.00 per month for each of such assistants and for each month of such employment since such law became effective?

The first question calls for a determination of the matter as to whether or not a person who is employed by a board of education as an assistant to a regular teacher can be regarded as a teacher himself, as that term is commonly used in our school laws.

The term "teacher" is not defined in the school laws except as to pension matters, but in the new Standard dictionary the term is defined as:

> "One who teaches or instructs, especially one whose business or occupation is to teach others; instructor; preceptor."

So that as far as the general definition is concerned those persons who were employed for the purpose of and whose duty it was to teach, whether they were termed assistants, regulars, or known by any other name, would within the general definition be considered teachers, unless some provision of our code prevented the application of said definition to such persons.

Section 7703 G. C. provides that the superintendent of schools may, subject to the approval and confirmation of the board of education, appoint all the teachers. Section 7699 G. C. provides that upon the appointment of any person to any position under the control of the board of education the clerk must promptly notify such person verbally or in writing of his appointment and the conditions thereof, and request and receive from him within a reasonable time to be determined by the board his acceptance or rejection of such appointment, and an acceptance within the time determined shall constitute a contract binding both parties thereto. The above provision applies specifically to teachers and I am informed it is the usual way of entering into the contract with teachers to teach in the public schools. That is to say, sometimes an application is filed and other times not, but the superintendent recommends or designates certain persons that he would appoint as teachers and the board of education approves or confirms the act, and the clerk notifies according to said section the teacher and the teacher accepts the appointment, thereby, under the provisions of said section, completing the contract.

Section 7690 provides that the board of education shall fix the salaries of all teachers.

Teachers are also required to have certificates to teach and it is provided by section 7786 that no clerk of a board of education shall draw an order on the treasury for the payment of a teacher for services until the teacher files with such clerk "a legal certificate of qualification" or a true copy thereof covering the entire time of the service. So that, it would seem as though everything that was required to be done and performed, either by the board of education or by a teacher, in relation to a contract between such person and the board, had been done and performed in the case you mention. The persons secured certificates to teach and were appointed to certain teaching positions in the public schools. They were contracted with at a certain price and they performed their services during the entire day and for the entire term provided for the schools. Under section 4750 G. C. the board of education has a right to make such rules and regulations as it deems necessary for the government of its employes, and if under the provisions thereof the board determined that for the proper conduct of the schools it was necessary to have certain persons assist certain other persons in their work and that one should be called a regular, but all performing the services of teachers, the fact that the board did promulgate such a rule and designate certain persons as assistants would make those persons no less teachers than the persons who were called regulars, or were known by any other name, provided they were hired for and were performing the duties required of persons who teach in the public schools.

I can come to but one conclusion, then, and that is that those persons who were designated as assistants, but who were employed to teach during the full time of each and every day of the school year were no less teachers than those persons who were designated as regulars.

Coming now to the second question, viz., if such assistants are teachers, is the board of education indebted to them for the difference in amount between the amount received by them and the minimum amount which is provided for teachers by law? General Code section 7595 provides that no person shall be employed to teach in the public schools of Ohio for less than fifty (formerly forty) dollars a month and in your case that provision of law was violated. The board entered into contracts with certain persons whom they designated as assistants and the contracts provided that such persons should receive the sum of twenty dollars per month instead of the minimum salary of $40.00 which the law at that time provided. The minimum salary provision in said section 7595 of the General Code is for the benefit of teachers and it was held in Layne Admr. v. Board of Education, 83 O. S., 474, that where a teacher had waived such provision and had entered into a contract for a lesser amount, recovery could not be had of such minimum provided by law.

Following said decision, then, and in direct answer to the second question asked by Mr. McKee, I advise that the board of education is not indebted to such assistant teachers for the difference in amount between the amount received by them and the minimum amount provided by law.

The third question reads:

> Are such assistants to be regarded as "teachers" under the provisions of the General Code which applies to teacher's pensions, to wit, sections 7875 to 7896 G. C.?

The term "teacher," as above mentioned in this opinion, is defined for the purpose of the pension act in section 7881 G. C., as follows:

> "The term 'teacher' in this chapter shall include all teachers regularly employed by either of such boards in the day schools, including the superintendent of schools, all superintendents of instruction, principals, and special teachers, but in estimating years of service, only service in public day schools or day high schools, supported in whole or in part by public taxation, shall be considered."

In your case the teacher was one which was regularly employed by the board of education of the city school district and was employed to teach and did teach in the day schools of such district. Such day schools were supported in whole by public taxation and therefore such person comes squarely within the definition of "teacher" as defined by said section.

In his fourth question Mr. McKee inquires if the board of education is indebted to the trustees of the pension fund in the sum of $2.00 per month for each of such assistants and for each month of such employment since such law became effective.

Section 7877 G. C. provides that when the board of education of any school district has declared the advisability of creating a school teachers' pension fund, the clerk shall give notice to the teachers of such resolution. After the election of a board of trustees of such fund, as is provided by section 7876 G. C., the sum of $2.00 shall be deducted by the proper officers from the monthly salary of each teacher "and from the salary of all new teachers, such sum to be paid into and applied to the credit of such pension fund; and such sum shall continue so to be deducted during the term of service of such teacher." Said section further provides:

> "All persons employed for the first time as teachers by a board of education which has created such a pension fund shall be deemed new teachers for the purpose of this act, but the term new teachers shall not be construed to include teachers serving under reappointment. New teachers shall by accepting employment as such accept the provisions of this act and thereupon become contributors to said pension fund in accordance with the terms hereof. And the provisions of this act shall become a part of and enter into such contract of employment."

Under the provisions of the above quoted section it was the duty of the board of education to deduct from the salary of each teacher the sum of $2.00 per month and to pay the same to the trustees of the pension fund of such district. This the board of education failed to do. The money instead was paid to the teacher and the teacher instead of paying the same, as provided by law, also permitted the terms of the law, which were for the benefit of such teacher, to be violated. The question is, can such teacher secure the benefits ordinarily accruing to teachers under the provisions of said section when the teacher has been a party to the violation of the provisions of said act.

In Venable v. Schafer, et al., 7 O. C. C., n. s., 337, the plaintiff was a teacher in the schools of Cincinnati for a period aggregating twenty years. During one year of that time he was granted a leave of absence on account of ill health, during which year his son substituted for him. The son received a salary as such substitute, but contributed nothing toward the pension fund. The court held that the full time of employment had not existed and that Professor Venable could not recover pension under the provisions of the pension statutes, but "that Professor Venable is entitled to all the money he has paid into the pension fund, with interest, but that the trustees of said fund are not required to and may not pay him a regular pension."

Section 7891 G. C., referred to by you, provides that:

> "A teacher who resigns, upon application within three (3) months after such resignation takes effect, shall be entitled to receive one-half of the total amount paid by such teacher into such fund. If at any time a teacher who is willing to continue in the service of the board of education is not re-employed or is discharged before his term of service aggregates twenty years, then such teacher shall be paid back at once all the money he or she may have contributed under this law. But if any teacher who has taught for a period aggregating twenty years is not re-employed by the board of education, such failure to re-employ shall be deemed his retiring, and such teacher shall be entitled to a pension according to the provisions of this act."

It is to the last sentence of said section that you particularly refer in your inquiry. Standing alone it would seem as though, no matter what the conditions were, that if a teacher had been employed for twenty years and was not re-employed by the board, then such teacher should be entitled to a pension according to the provisions of the act. But, the provisions of the act include not only the provisions of the act in 102 O. L., 445, which is the act amending said section 7891, but all the provisions of the chapter upon teachers' pensions, and before teachers are entitled to pensions under the provisions of said chapter, it is necessary that they contribute to the pension fund as is provided by the terms thereof. I do not believe that any such teachers can violate the law by accepting the entire amount of their contract price, even though that amount is below the minimum required by law, and then require the board, or a subsequent board, to make further contributions on their account and in that manner permit such teachers to become the recipients of the advantages provided by such funds.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the board of education is not indebted to the trustees of the teachers' pension fund in the sum of $2.00 per month for each of such assistants. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BALLOTS—AS USED IN SECTION 3396—DEFINED—NOT SYNONYMOUS WITH VOTES—SECTION 3395—CONSTRUED—ELECTIONS—TOWN HALLS.

1. The word "ballots," as used in section 3396 G. C., means the official ballot furnished the voter on which to express his choice, and is not used synonymously with "votes."

2. When an election under the provisions of section 3395 et seq. G. C. results as follows:

Town hall, yes	665
Town hall, no	537
Total	1,371

a majority of all the ballots has not been cast at such election in the affirmative, and the trustees therefore are not authorized to levy the necessary tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication submitting for opinion the following:

"In accordance with sections 3395 and 3396 of the General Code the trustees of Liberty township, this county, gave notice of an election upon the question of building a town hall, which election was held November 6 of this year. The results were as follows:

Town hall, yes	665
Town hall, no	537
Unmarked	169
Total	1,371

Sec. 3396 G. C., provides:

'* * If a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax, * *.'

The question I wish to ask is as follows: Are the words 'ballots' and 'votes' synonymous? Are the trustees to proceed with building of the town hall?

I am familiar with holding in the case of Dexter v. Raine et al., 18 W. B. 61, but in that case the statute provided 'if a majority of the vote cast,' and not as does section 3396, 'if a majority of the ballots cast.'"

The provisions of law on the submission of the construction of a town hall are found in the following sections:

"Sec. 3395. If in a township, it is desired to build, remove, improve or enlarge a town hall, at a greater cost than is otherwise authorized by law, the trustees may submit the question to the electors of the township, and shall cause the clerk to give notice thereof and of the estimated cost, by written notices, posted in not less than three public places within the township, at least ten days before election."

"Sec. 3396. At such election the electors in favor of such hall, removal, improvement, or enlargement shall place on their ballots 'Town Hall —Yes,' and those opposed 'Town Hall—No.' If a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax, but not in any year to exceed four mills on the dollar valuation. Such tax shall not be levied under such vote for more than seven years. In anticipation of the collection of taxes, the trustees may borrow money and issue bonds for the whole or any part therefor, bearing interest not to exceed seven per cent, payable annually."

It will be noted that the question is decided in the affirmative "if a majority of all the ballots cast at the election" are in the affirmative.

The legislature, in the enactment of laws covering how the result of an election on different propositions submitted to the people shall be determined from the vote cast, has used varying language, but only in a few instances has the word "ballot" been used in this connection. Usually the language is:

"A majority of all the votes cast at the election";
"A majority of all the votes cast on such proposition";
"A majority of all the electors voting upon such question";
"A majority of the voters voting at such election";
"A majority of those voting thereon."

However, in a few instances, such as in section 3528 G. C., providing for an election for incorporation of a village, and section 3577-1 G. C., on the question of detachment of territory, we have language similar to that found in section 3396.

Is the word "ballots," as used in section 3396 G. C., synonymous with the word "votes" as used in other sections relating to elections, is the first question submitted by you.

Our supreme court, in State ex rel. v. Board of Elections, 80 O. S. 471, had before it the question of the constitutionality of the voting machine statute, and was called upon to determine what constitutes "ballot" as used in section 2 of article V of the Ohio constitution, which ordains that "all elections shall be by ballot."

Shauck, J., at p. 489 says:

> "In a school for the study of English, it might be both interesting and useful to consider the meanings of the word 'ballot' in primitive times, and the process by which its present meaning has been derived. But when the word was originally used as a part of the organic law of the state, the process of derivation had been completed and its meaning in the connection had become plain and well understood. It was not doubted then, nor has it ever been really doubted since, that it is a printed or written expression of the voter's choice upon some material capable of receiving and reasonably retaining it, prepared or adopted by each individual voter and passing by the act of voting from his exclusive control into that of the election officers, to be by them accepted as the expression of his choice."

So our supreme court has decided that as far as the word "ballot," as used in the constitutional provision above cited, is concerned, it means the expression of the voter's choice upon some material, rather than the material upon which such expression of choice is indicated.

The precise question, as far as I have been able to gather, has not been passed upon by our courts, nor are the courts of other jurisdictions fully in accord with the definition of the word "ballot" as given by our supreme court.

Our election laws provide for the preparation and printing of "ballots." They provide for what constitutes an "official ballot." They further provide that the election officers shall deliver the "ballot" to the elector desiring to and being qualified to vote. There are also provisions for marking the ballot, and the voter after marking same "shall fold his ballot" without displaying the marks made thereon, and after receiving the same from the qualified voter the judges deposit the "ballot" in the ballot box.

So far as our election laws are concerned, they use the term "ballot" when referring to the paper containing the names to be voted for, prior to giving same over to the voter, as well as to that paper on which is registered the voter's expression of his will.

Section 5089 G. C. provides for a proclamation of the result "when the result of the ballot is ascertained."

Section 5090 G. C. provides for the preserving and counting of disputed ballots.

In Cashman v. Entwistle, 100 N. E. 58, the supreme court of Massachusetts had before it this identical question and held that:

> "In view of the legislative policy to make an acceptance of a city charter turn upon the affirmative votes of a majority of those voting on the question, the word 'ballots' was synonymous with 'votes,' and that only the ballots carrying votes on the question of repeal were to be counted, and hence that, as there was a 'majority of the ballots cast' in favor of repeal, the old charter was repealed, and the plan receiving the larger number of votes was adopted as the new charter."

The court, in discussing the question as to whether ballots and votes were synonymous, admits that a technical construction of the words used might lead to the conclusion that the word "ballots" refers to the official ballots furnished by public authority, but states that broader and sounder considerations lead to the conclusion that the statute means that only the ballots on which were votes touching the particular question were to be counted.

At p. 59 the court says:

> "It is a fundamental principle of our system of representative government that the will of the majority expressed according to law must prevail. But the majority of those who actively participate in the affairs of state and not of the entire body of voters, controls. Elections must be settled as a practical matter by those manifesting interest enough to vote. Failure on the part of some of the electorate to take the trouble to express their views by depositing their ballots cannot stop the machinery of government. Apathy is not the equivalent of open opposition. It is the nature of our institutions that the majority of those who vote must accomplish the avowed purpose of all elections, which is the choice among candidates or the approval of policies. This principle is expressed in the provisions of our constitution to the effect that in elections of civil officers those having a plurality of the votes cast shall be elected, and that amendments of the constitution shall be adopted by the majority of those voting thereon. Those who come to an election and cast a blank ballot in principle are no more efficacious in expressing their convictions than those who absent themselves altogether. Both classes must be presumed to be willing to abide by the decision made by the majority of those voting, unless there is an express provision of law to the contrary. First Parish in Sudbury v. Stearns, 21 Pick. 148; Carroll County v. Smith, 111 U. S. 556, 563, 4 Sup. Ct. 539, 28 L. Ed. 517."

In section 3397 G. C., which follows the section in which the word "ballots" is used, will be found this significant language:

> "After such affirmative vote, the trustees may make all needful contracts," etc.

In section 3398 G. C. will be found the following:

> "In all cases where the trustees have been authorized by such affirmative vote, to purchase," etc.

It will be noted that in the case of Cashman v. Entwistle, supra, the court based its decision upon the "legislative policy" of that state, and the quotation from the opinion expressly states that the proposition as to the absent voter and the voter who deposits a blank ballot are willing to abide by the decision made by the majority of those voting, does not obtain if there is any express provision of law to the contrary.

It is a well settled principle of interpretation that an examination of the history of the legislation leading up to the enactment in question may be used to throw light upon doubtful expressions, and with this in view we will take up some, at least, of the legislative provisions on this question.

The first expression of the legislature on the subject is found in 46 O. L. 76, under date of February 24, 1848, when an act to authorize the erection of town halls was passed. The first section of this law provided that the "* * * legal voters of any township * * * may assemble on the first Monday of April in each year at the usual place of holding elections * * * and then and there decide by ballot for or against levying a tax * * * for the purpose of erecting a town hall * * *."

This section further provided for a ten days' notice

"that the voters will be called upon to vote for or against the erection of such hall at said election."

Section 2 provided:

"That every voter who is in favor of levying a tax * * * for the erection of such hall shall indorse on his ballot 'town hall'; and if a majority of all the legal voters at such election vote 'town hall', then the trustees * * *."

Section 2 was amended in 58 O. L. 55, but did not change the mode of voting.

In 61 O. L. 58, under date of March 25, 1864, the former acts and amendments thereto were repealed, and the legislature passed a new act which, in addition to townships and incorporated towns, included certain cities, and the manner of voting under this act was identical with that provided in the prior law.

In 63 O. L. 84, under date of April 2, 1866, the prior enactments were repealed and a new act to authorize the erection, improving, enlarging or constructing additions to town halls was passed. The first section practically followed the language of section 1 of the former acts and provided:

"That the legal voters of any township * * * may assemble on the first Monday of April in any year at the usual place of holding elections * * * and then and there decide by ballot for or against levying a tax * * * for the purpose of erecting a town hall * * * ten days' notice shall be given * * *."

Section 2 of this act read:

"That every voter who is in favor of levying a tax on all the property * * * for the erection of such hall * * * shall endorse on his ballot 'town hall' * * *; and if a majority of all the ballots cast at said election are endorsed as aforesaid * * *."

In 66 O. L. 339, under date of May 7, 1869, sections 2 and 3 of the act of 1866 were amended, but the mode of voting remained the same, to wit:

"* * * shall endorse on his ballot 'town hall';"

and it was still provided that:

"If a majority of all the ballots cast at said election are endorsed as aforesaid," the trustees should levy the tax.

In 75 O. L. 92, under date of April 5, 1878, section 1 of the act of 1866 was amended so as to provide that:

"The voters of any township may at a regular April or October election decide by ballot for or against levying a tax on all the property subject to taxation therein for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting a town hall * * * provided ten days' previous notice shall be given * * *."

In the revision of 1880, section 2 of the act found in 66 O. L. 339, and section 1 of 75 O. L. 92, appeared as section 1479 R. S., which read as follows:

"Sec.. 1479. In any township in which a town hall, or the removal, improvement, or enlarging of a town hall, costing more than is heretofore provided in this chapter, is desired, the trustees may submit the question to the electors, and for this purpose shall cause the clerk to give notice thereof, and of the estimated cost, by written notices, posted up at not less than three public places within the township, at least ten days before the spring or fall election, and at such election the electors in favor of such hall, removal, improvement, or enlargement, shall put on their ballots, 'Town Hall Yes', and those opposed 'Town Hall—No'; and if a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax, but not in any year exceeding four mills on the dollar valuation, and such tax shall not be levied under such vote for more than seven years; and the trustees may, in anticipation of the collection of taxes, borrow money and issue bonds therefor, bearing interest not exceeding seven per centum, payable annually, for the whole or any part of the amount required."

In the act which introduced into Ohio the so-called "Australian ballot," passed April 30, 1891 (88 O. L. 449), will be found the following provision, appearing in section 14 thereof:

"Whenever the approval of a constitutional amendment or other question is to be submitted to a vote of the people, such question shall be printed on the ballot after the list of the candidates. The ballot shall be so printed as to give each elector a clear opportunity to designate by a cross mark (X) in a blank enclosed space at the left hand of or within the lines enclosing the name of each candidate, his choice of candidates and his answer to the question submitted."

The present provision concerning voting for propositions or questions submitted to the electors is found in section 5020 G. C.

In 97 O. L. 189 is an act passed in 1904 which revised the laws relating to elections. Section 1479 R. S., contained therein, read identically the same as section 1479 R. S. of the revision of 1880, quoted above, with the sole exception that immediately preceding the word "election," as first used in said section, the words "spring or fall," as found in the revision of 1880, are omitted in the act found in 97 O. L. 189.

Section 1479 R. S. became sections 3395 and 3396 G. C., supra.

From the foregoing legislative history it appears that in the first instance the voters endorsed on his ballot "town hall," and if a majority of all the legal voters at such election voted "town hall," then the tax could be levied. Subsequently it was provided that the voter should endorse on his ballot "town hall," and if all the ballots cast at said election were so endorsed, then the tax might have been levied.

It was in the revision of the statutes by the commission created in 1875 (72 O. L. 87) and by virtue of the adoption of such revision by the legislature in the act passed at the second session of the sixty-third general assembly on June 20, 1879, in the act to revise and consolidate the general statutes of Ohio as found in section 1479 R. S., that provision was made for a yea and nay vote, and we find that:

> "At such election the electors in favor of such hall * * * shall put on their ballots 'town hall—yes' and those opposed 'town hall—no'; and if a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax * * *."

Prior to that time provision was only made for registering a vote for "town hall." Since that time the statutes have provided for both an affirmative and negative vote on such proposition.

The codifying commissioners of 1910 rewrote section 1479 R. S., splitting it up into two sections, viz., 3395 and 3396 G. C., with but slight changes in the wording thereof. Section 3396 G. C. provides that the electors in favor of the hall

> "shall place on their ballots 'town hall—yes' and those opposed 'town hall—no.' If a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are in the affirmative, the trustees shall levy the necessary tax * * *."

So it might seem that the retention of the term "ballots" throughout the varying changes that have been made in the statute, had some significance and that the continuing mind of the legislature carried the same concept throughout. While the terms "ballots" and "votes" are sometimes used interchangeably and in some instances synonymously, this is not always the case.

In Clary v. Hurst, 138 S. W. (Tex.) 566, at p. 569 it is stated:

> "'Ballot' and 'vote,' though sometimes used synonymously, are not synonymous and a 'ballot' is the instrument by which a voter expresses his choice between candidates or in respect to propositions; while his 'vote' is the choice or election as expressed by his ballot."

So too in Town of Eufaula v. Gibson, 98 Pac. 577, the Oklahoma supreme court held that the term "votes," in their constitution requiring a majority of the votes at a special election for the relocation of a county seat, is not the equivalent of "ballots," and that distinguished, illegal and blank ballots will not be considered in making up the aggregate number on which such majority is to be computed. In this case, which was a controversy growing out of a special election upon the location of a county seat, the primary question was as to what constituted a majority under the Oklahoma statute, and whether distinguished, illegal and blank ballots should or should not be excluded from estimation in making up the aggregate number on which such majority is to be computed. Dunn, J., in a lengthy and exhaustive opinion reviews the authorities on the question.

At p. 566 in the opinion the court says:

> "The law relating to candidates for public office requires the successful party to receive but a plurality or majority of the valid, legal, intelligible ballots, but not a majority of the votes cast, as in the county seat elections. Hence in our judgment it was proper and necessary to open the ballot boxes, as the ballots themselves are the best evidence of the ultimate fact to be established."

At p. 572 the court calls attention to the case of Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, and commenting thereon says:

> "This decision is against the weight of authority in the United States and was subsequently criticised in the case of Sawyer v. Insurance Co., 37 Wis. 503-534, where the court stated that it had been subjected to the criticism, that the court decided it in accordance with 'the logic of war, rather than the logic of the law.' And in a later case, Bound v. Ry. Co., 45 Wis. 543, Mr. Chief Justice Ryan, speaking of the decision then being rendered by the court and not agreeing on one proposition decided, said:
> 'I deplore the decision on this point, not merely because I think it wrong, but because I am apprehensive that it will be classed with such cases as * * * Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, which have long been a reproach to the court, as judgments proceeding upon policy rather than principle.'"

In Smith v. Board of Com'rs., 64 Minn. 16, the court had before it a question arising out of an election held under the county seat removal act. In its discussion of the election law the court recognized at least a technical distinction between "ballots" and "votes," using the following language:

> "From the whole tenor of the act it seems apparent that no distinction was attempted to be made between 'ballots' and 'votes,' and that the technical difference between 'ballots cast' and 'votes cast' was not in mind."

In State ex. rel. v. Blaisdell, 119 N. W. 300, the North Dakota supreme court considered some questions arising under an election for the creation of a new county. At p. 363 the court says:

> "A ballot as distinguished from vote in the legal sense and in a general way, is the piece of paper upon which the voter expresses his choice. Under the Australian system * * * the voter is permitted to express his choice or vote upon many offices and perhaps many questions on the same ballot. It is but an application of the same principle that prevailed when the choice of the voters was expressed viva voce or by any of the old methods. In other words, notwithstanding he may use but one ballot, the voter expresses as many separate votes or expresses his choice as many times as there are candidates or questions for or against which he votes."

In the above case the constitution of North Dakota provided that the question would be adopted by a majority of all the legal votes cast in each county of such election, and the court held:

> "That 'votes cast' are the totals of the separate votes or expression of voters' preference for or against the changing boundaries."

In State v. Custer, 66 Atl. 306, 308, it was held that while the terms "ballot" and "vote" are sometimes confused, and while they may sometimes be used synonymously, the "ballot" is in fact the instrument by which the voter expresses his choice between two candidates or two propositions, and his vote is his choice or election between the two, as expressed by his ballot, and when his ballot makes no choice between any two candidates or on any question, then he cast no "vote" for either of the candidates or on the question. These "ballots" are not "votes."

"The official ballot," so-called, is not complete when furnished to the elector as he enters the booth to prepare his "ballot." It is a mere form for a "ballot." When marked and prepared by a voter so as to indicate his choice or election, then, and not until then, does it become his constitutional "ballot."

It will be recalled that section 3396 G. C. still provides that the electors in favor of the hall "shall place on their ballots" their choice. Of course under the provisions of our present election law the voter does not place the words indicating his choice. The form of ballot is prepared and his choice is expressed by the prescribed marking of the "X" in the required blank space, but since originally the legislative requirement was that the elector place the words indicative of his choice on the ballot, I am inclined to the view that the ballot thus referred to was the paper or material on which he was to register his choice. If I am correct in this conclusion, then under well recognized principles the use of the same word "ballots later in the section would be construed to have the same meaning, and in the computation of what constituted the majority in the affirmative, all of the ballots cast at the election would have to be taken into consideration.

I feel that I have said too much upon the question, but the importance of the matter and the divergence of the courts' opinions on this and related questions are such that said matter is not entirely free from doubt. At the risk of being considered prolix, I have assembled such authorities as are here presented.

There seems to be, at least on the question of determining what constitutes a majority, a distinction under the election laws, when the question is one of candidates and when it is one of a vote on a proposition, but be that as it may, from a full consideration of the matter, especially in the light of the legislative history heretofore set forth, it is my view that a proper construction of the term "ballots" in section 3396 G. C. is that it was not and is not used as synonymous with "votes," and I so hold.

Your next inquiry is, are the trustees authorized to proceed with the building of the town hall, the result of the vote on the proposition being:

Town hall—Yes	665
Town hall—No	537
Total	1,371

You refer to the case of Dexter v. Raine, et al., 14 W. L. B. 61; affirmed without opinion, 18 W. L. B. 301. Under the section construed by the court in that case it was provided:

> "If a majority of the votes cast shall be in the affirmative the commissioners shall proceed," etc.

The superior court of Cincinnati in a per curiam decision held:

> "We are of the opinion that the words 'majority of the votes cast' in the connection in which it appears should be held to mean majority of the votes cast on the question, Com'rs. of Marion County v. Winkley, 29 Kas. 36. The fact that no other county question or election was submitted to the voters at the April election, also warrants this conclusion.
> Municipal and township ballots upon which both 'yes' and 'no' appeared were not votes cast upon the question. They were void and of no effect. A vote is but the expression of the will of the voter. State v. Green, 37

> Ohio St. 230. Where no will is expressed no vote is cast. The man who casts a ballot expressing no will, does not cast a vote any more than he who absents himself from the polls."

The supreme court on October 18, 1887, affirmed the judgment of the superior court without report.

This ruling might appear somewhat in conflict with the decision of the supreme court in Enyart v. Trustees, 25 O. S. 618, but an examination of that case will disclose that the language construed was "a majority of the electors of said township at some regular election, shall vote in favor of said levy," which is quite different from "if a majority of all the votes cast at the election."

So too in the case of State ex rel. v. Foraker, 46 O. S. 677, the language sought to be construed was "and if a majority of the electors voting at such election," and the court, commenting upon Gillespie v. Palmer, 20 Wis. 544, says:

> "The court, holding that 'votes' is not synonymous with voters, determined that a majority of all the votes cast on the subject was sufficient to adopt the amendment"; and continuing said:

> "But no such question can arise under our constitution on the meaning of words, the language being, 'a majority of all the electors voting at such election.' While 'electors' may not be the exact synonym of voters, it is in no sense synonymous with votes."

In Brush v. Orgill, 9 N. P. (N. S.) 632, the common pleas court of Cuyahoga county, Ohio, had before it the question whether blank ballots are to be regarded as "votes cast on the question." The statute under consideration provided:

> "And if at such election a majority of the votes cast on such question shall be against said grant, the same shall be ineffectual and void."

Under the authority of Dexter v. Raine, et al., supra, the court held that blank ballots are not votes cast on the question and cannot be counted so as to swell the necessary number of votes for the grant, in order to make it carry. By the same logic they cannot be counted to swell the number of votes necessary to defeat the grant where it stands, unless a majority vote against it.

Under the Beal local option act, section 6131 G. C., it is provided:

> "If a majority of the votes cast at such election shall be in favor of prohibiting the sale * * * then from and after thirty days from the date of holding such election no person * * * shall sell * * *."

In the case of In re South Charleston Beal Law Election, 3 N. P. (N. S.) 373, the court held that ballots on which no choice is indicated are not votes and are not to be considered in determining what is a majority "of all votes" cast.

I have called attention to the above cases because you have cited the case of Dexter v. Raine, supra, and if my conclusion had been that the word "ballots" in the section under consideration was synonymous with "votes," these cases would be authority for casting out blank and unmarked ballots in arriving at what constituted the votes cast at the election. But in view of the fact that I have arrived at the opposite conclusion, the case of Dexter v. Raine, cited by you, and the other related cases have no application.

The question submitted to the voters is one involving the levying of a tax and the raising of funds from the taxpayers of the township, for a public building, and to my mind more caution is necessary in the determinaton of a question of that character than in ordinary cases, and any doubt that might arise should be resolved in favor of the taxpayers.

Hence, having come to the conclusion that "a majority of all the ballots cast at the election" refers to a majority of the paper writings on which opportunity is given the voter to express his choice, and which have been deposited in the ballot box, it is my view that under the canvass as shown by this election a majority of all the ballots cast at the election are not in the affirmative, and the trustees are without authority to levy the necessary tax.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CITY SOLICITOR—LEGAL ADVISER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION—WHEN BOARD MAY EMPLOY OTHER COUNSEL.

The city solicitor is the legal adviser of a board of education of a city school district and where he stands ready to perform the duties involved in the trial of a case in which he represented the adverse party before he became such solicitor, there is no authority of law for a city board of education to employ counsel other than such city solicitor at the expense of the public treasury.

Where the city solicitor refuses to act on account of his interest in a case in which the board of education is a party, the board of education may employ counsel to represent it in such case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1918.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Referring to your recent inquiry I note your request as follows:

> "A former superintendent of schools of the Lancaster city school district was arrested and convicted on a criminal charge. A suit is now pending against said board of education, the same having been brought by said ex-superintendent for salary claimed to be due him from said board.
> "The present city solicitor was attorney for the said ex-superintendent in the suit brought against him in the criminal court. On account of his former connection with this criminal case, and in view of the fact that the ousting of said former superintendent was the main issue in the election of the present school board, in which election said solicitor participated against the election of said board, it is the opinion of said board that circumstances are and will continue to be such that the said city solicitor cannot be depended upon to give the proper support to the best interests of the public in acting as counsel for the board of education as defendant in said action pending against said board wherein said ex-superintendent is the plaintiff.
> "Your opinion is desired as to whether or not said board of education, under the circumstances as above related, may employ outside counsel, at a reasonable fee, for services rendered or to be rendered to the board of education, in this particular action of said ex-superintendent against said board of education, said fee to be paid out of the contingent fund of the board of education."

General Code section 4761 G. C. provides in part:

"* * * In city school districts the city solicitor shall be the legal adviser and attorney for the board of education thereof and shall perform the same services for such board as herein required of the prosecuting attorney for other boards of education of the county."

In the same section of the General Code it is provided that the prosecuting attorney of the county shall be the legal adviser of all boards of education of the county except the board of education in city school districts, and that when there is a civil action between two or more boards of education in the same county the prosecuting attorney shall not be required to act for either of them. No such provision is made to apply to a city solicitor because there is only one board of education in a city district and he is, therefore, by said section made the sole adviser of that board.

To further distinguish the rights and duties of a city solicitor and of a prosecuting attorney in relation to being the legal advisers of boards of education in their respective school districts, I desire to call attention to certain sections of the General Code in the chapter headed prosecuting attorney, and particularly to sections 2916, 2917 and 2918 thereof.

Section 2916 G. C. provides for the powers and duties of the prosecuting attorney in relation to county and state matters. Section 2917 provides that the prosecuting attorney shall be the legal adviser of the county and township officers, except that a board of township trustees may employ other counsel under certain conditions. Section 2918 provides:

"Nothing in the preceding two sections shall prevent a school board from employing counsel to represent it, but such counsel, when so employed, shall be paid by such school board from the school fund. * * *"

Without deciding whether or not this last above quoted section gives a board of education authority to employ counsel outside of the prosecuting attorney, but simply using the same by way of illustration, it is noted that no similar provision of law is found in the statutes in relation to city solicitors. In other words, that part of section 4761, above quoted, is the only statutory authority to be found which provides legal advice for a city board of education.

In opinion No. 839, annual reports of the attorney-general for 1915, volume 2, page 1778, the question was being considered as to whether or not a board of education could employ counsel other than the city solicitor in a case in which the city solicitor was representing the city and where the city and the board of education were adverse parties. After quoting that part of section 2918, above quoted, that official held:

"I am of the opinion that said provision of the statute (2918) being general in its nature, relates to those boards of education which would ordinarily be represented by the prosecuting attorney under authority of section 4761 G. C., and that said provision is not applicable to the board of education of a city school district which, under provision of the latter part of said section 4761, is ordinarily represented by the city solicitor."

While that opinion held that the board of education did have a right to employ counsel, it was only because the city solicitor was actually representing an adverse party whom the law compelled him to represent because of his official position.

In the case of Caldwell v. Marvin, et al., 8 O. N. P., n. s., 387, the court on page 390 says:

> "It is claimed in this case that no valid contract could have been made by any board of education for services of attorneys in a quo warranto proceedings. The city solicitor, under section 3977 R. S. (4761 G. C.) was the legally constituted attorney or legal counsel of the board, and until he refused or failed to act, no additional legal counsel could be employed. When, however, he elected to act for the de facto board and not for the board de jure, other counsel was necessary. The ordinary and necessary method of conducting a legal proceeding is with the assistance of legal counsel. If the right of a board of education to exercise some single power was challenged in a quo warranto proceeding, there would be no question of implied right to employ counsel in the absence of legally constituted counsel, or upon the failure or refusal of such counsel to act. Why should the rule be different where the right to exercise any power, whatever, is questioned and proper to be established? The public is interested in having its legally elected officers perform their duties, even though less interested than in having such duties performed."

In that case the contest was between a de jure and a de facto board of education. The city solicitor could only act for one board. The other board was permitted to employ counsel to represent it. I can find no case, however, which extends the same principle to a case where the city solicitor had, prior to the time he became such official, represented the adverse party.

If, however, the city solicitor, on account of his interest in any case in which the board of education is a party, desires to not act for and on behalf of the board of education, then I am of the opinion that following the rule laid down in Caldwell v. Marvin, supra, the board of education could employ counsel to represent such board because there would then exist a case where there would be "absence of legally constituted counsel" because of a "refusal of such counsel to act."

So that answering your question specifically I advise you that I know of no authority of law which will permit the board of education of a city school district to employ counsel other than the city solicitor at the expense of the district unless the city solicitor, on account of his interest in the case, refuses to act, in which event the board has the implied right to employ counsel.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—CONTRACT—BETWEEN SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS AND FRANK TEJAN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department contract entered into on November 14, 1917, between yourself and Frank Tejan, of Dayton, Ohio, for furnishing all labor and materials necessary for repair of bank at Carthage aqueduct, in the sum of $2,543.60, together with the bond securing the same.

I have examined said contract and bond and find the same to be in substantial compliance with law and have this day approved the same and have filed the original copy of said contract and the bond in the office of the auditor of state, having received from him a certificate to the effect that there is a sum sufficient in his hands to pay the contract price.

I am herewith returning to you the extra copies of the contract submitted.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

LICENSE FEES—FOR WATER CRAFTS—TO WHAT SCHOOL DISTRICT SAME SHALL BE CREDITED.

The license fee of $10.00, required to be paid under the chapter of which section 6330 G. C. is a part, shall be paid into the county treasury and credited to the school fund of the local district where such boat or water craft is lying or plying at the time such license is granted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your request you state:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following question:
> Section 6330 G. C. reads as follows:
> 'The license fee of ten dollars, required to be paid under this chapter, shall be paid into the county treasury and credited to the school fund.'
> What particular school fund is meant by the above quoted section?"

Section 6330 of the General Code, which is quoted in full in your inquiry, the language of which you desire to have construed, is found in chapter 23, title 2 of part second of the General Code, which chapter is entitled "navigation." The particular subject to which said section refers in said chapter is "occupancy of water-crafts as residence" and was first enacted as a part of the statute law of this state April 21, 1896, at which time house bill No. 95 of said session of the general assembly was passed. The enactment was made to require persons who reside on boats or other water-crafts, and who engage in any business or traffic on the navigable waters of the state, to procure a license therefor. The act in its original form was carried into the General Code with no material change and its sections are now numbered 6324 to 6330, both inclusive, of the General Code.

In substance it is provided that a person who desires to occupy a boat or water-craft as a place of residence or abode, or for the purpose of engaging in business, trade or traffic, on a navigable water or its tributaries within the jurisdiction of this state, shall file an application therefor with the probate court of the county in which such boat or water-craft shall lie or ply. Said applicant must also furnish satisfactory proof to the court that he is a person of good character and must file in such probate court a statement subscribed and sworn to by him, setting forth his legal residence, the name of the boat or water-craft on which he resides or intends to reside, the business, trade or traffic to be engaged in, and if he is the head of a family the names and ages of the members composing such family. After complying with the above and upon the payment of a license fee of $10.00, and a fee to the probate judge of $2.00, the said applicant is then entitled to a license which shall be granted to him by the probate court and shall be valid for himself and family for and during the period of one year from the date of such license. The probate judge shall record the license in a book kept for that purpose and he shall pay the license fee into the county treasury and it shall be "credited to the school fund." There was not at the time said act was originally enacted, nor is there now, any county school fund to which said license fee could be credited. There is now a fund designated as the "county board of education fund," but said fund was not established by law until section 4744-3 was enacted in 1915 (106 O. L., 396), and which was long after the enactment of section 6330 to its present form, so that when the legislature provided that said license fees should be "credited to the school fund" it could not have meant any county school fund, for there was no county school fund, nor could it have meant the "county board of education fund," for no such fund was then provided for, but there was only one school fund that was provided for and that was the school fund of a local school district.

It will be necessary to look to other sections of the General Code to ascertain which local school district fund could have been meant by the legislature when it said that said license fees should be "credited to the school fund." In the same chapter of the General Code in which section 6330 is found is also section 6321, which provides that an owner or keeper of a wharf-boat, who refuses or fails to hail or cause to be hailed a passing steamboat, upon request of a person who wishes to embark thereon, or who has freight to ship thereon, shall forfeit not less than ten dollars nor more than one hundred dollars, to be collected by an action brought before the mayor of the municipal corporation, or a justice of the peace where such offense was committed, and that the sum so collected shall be paid into the municipal or township treasury where such action is brought, one-half for the use of the school fund and the other half for the use of the municipal or township fund. That is to say, if the offense is committed within the limits of a municipal corporation, then the sum so collected shall be paid, one-half into the municipal treasury and the other half into the school treasury of the school district of such municipal corporation, but if the offense is committed without the limits of a corporation and within the limits of a township, then of the sum so collected one-half shall be paid into the township treasury and the other half into the treasury of the school district where such offense was committed. Here is a specific designation as to how and where distribution shall be made and it is the only place in said chapter in which is found such specific designation of a fund collected under any of the provisions of the sections of said chapter. It would seem, then, that, inasmuch as the legislature was speaking upon a subject in reference to which such specific designation of distribution was provided, it could have meant but one local district school fund and that is the school fund of the district in which such boat or water-craft was at the time of the granting of such license lying or plying.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the license fee of $10.00, required to be paid under the chapter of which section 6330 G. C. is a part, shall be paid into the county treasury and credited to the school fund of the local district where such boat or water-craft is lying or plying at the time such license is granted.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

NOTICE—REQUIRED BY SECTION 6252—LEGALITY OF SAME WHEN PUBLISHED IN THE ONLY NEWSPAPER OF A CITY (OTHER THAN COUNTY SEAT) OF 8,000 POPULATION.

Where in a city in a county, other than the county seat, which contains a population of eight thousand or more, there is but one paper which comes within the terms of section 6252 General Code, as to the publication of the notices therein provided for, in such city, the publication of such notices in the one newspaper so qualified, will be in compliance with the provisions of section 6252 General Code, and it is not necessary to publish such notice in another newspaper published outside of said city, but having general circulation therein.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of November 28th, you ask opinion upon the following:

> "The next to the last sentence of section 6252 G. C., reads as follows:
> 'In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city.'
> We find opinions in the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1910-1911, page 437, and in the Annual Reports of 1911-1912, Vol. 2, page 1281, construing this section, especially as to the question of the census, but what is now confronting us is this:
> In a city in a county other than the county seat which contains a population of 8,000 or more there are not two papers of opposite politics, but only one paper is published (either democratic or republican as the case may be), hence, is this law complied with if any advertisement mentioned in section 6252 G. C., be published in said one newspaper, or does it require two newspapers of opposite politics in order to make such publication legal in such city?"

You call attention to two opinions of the attorney-general. Neither of the opinions touch upon the question which you now submit.

Section 6252 General Code, to which you call attention, reads as follows:

> "A proclamation for an election, an order fixing the times for holding court, notice of the rates of taxation, bridge and pike notices, notice to contractors and such other advertisements of general interest to the taxpayers as the auditor, treasurer, probate judge or commissioners may deem proper, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspapers published thereat. In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city. This chapter shall not apply to the publication of notices of delinquent tax and forfeited land sales."

Your question pertains to a construction of the following sentence in said section, to wit:

> "In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seats of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city."

From your statement of facts it appears that there is only one paper published in the city in question which can meet the requirements of the above provisions.

In the case of Village of Elmwood Place v. Schanzle, 91 Ohio State, 354, a like question as to publication of ordinances of a municipality was under consideration. The syllabus in that case reads as follows:

> "In a municipality where there is only one newspaper published and of general circulation, the publication in that paper of ordinances of a general nature, in the manner and for the period required by section 422 et seq. General Code, is a compliance with the requirements of those sections."

The court, through Johnson, J., in the opinion, quotes the pertinent parts of the statutes then under consideration. At page 355 he says:

> "The statutory requirements touching the subject are included in section 4227 et seq., General Code. Pertinent parts are as follows:
> In section 4227, 'Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation,' and section 4228, 'Ordinances and resolutions requiring publication shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, published and of general circulation in such municipality, if such there be.' Section 4229 provides the number of times ordinances, resolutions, etc., 'shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics of general circulation therein, if there are such in the municipality' and section 4232 provides that 'in municipal corporations in which no newspaper is published, it shall be sufficient publication of ordinances * * to post up copies thereof at not less than five of the most public places in the corporation, to be determined by the council, for a period of not less than fifteen days prior to the taking effect thereof.'
> It will be observed that the existing statutes contain no express provision on the subject with reference to a municipality in which but one newspaper is published."

The above sections pertain to publication by municipal corporations and do not apply to publications which are authoried by section 6252 General Code. The language of the statutes, however, is similar and the same principles of law will apply.

Since the rendering of the above opinion, one of the sections of the General Code under consideration has been substantially amended. This is section 6255, General Code.

This section at that time read as follows:

> "For sufficient publication of a notice of advertisement, required by law to be published for a definite period, at least one side of the newspaper in which such publication is made shall be printed in the county or municipal corporation in which such notice or advertisement is required to be published."

This section has since been amended to read as follows:

"Whenever any legal publication is required by law to be made in a newspaper or newspapers published or printed in a municipality, county, or other political subdivision, the newspaper or newspapers used shall have at least one side thereof printed in such municipality, county or other political subdivision; and whenever any legal publication is required by law to be made in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation in a municipality, county, or other political subdivision, without further restriction or limitation upon a selection of the newspaper or newspapers used, such publication shall be made in a newspaper or newspapers at least one side of which is printed in such municipality, county, or other political subdivision, unless there be no such newspaper or newspapers so printed, in which event, only, such publication shall be made in any newspaper or newspapers of general circulation therein."

The language of the original section has been changed and additional matter inserted. It is now provided therein that "whenever any legal publication is required by law to be made in a newspaper or newspapers of general circulation in a municipality, etc., without further restriction or limitation upon a selection of the newspaper to be used," then such publication shall be made as therein provided.

In the case now submitted, section 6252 General Code, does restrict and limit the selection of the newspaper in which such publication shall be made to those having a political preference, and these must be of opposite politics. Therefore, the provisions of section 6255 General Code as above amended and quoted do not apply to the publications now under consideration.

The ruling therefore contained in the case of Village of Elmwood Place v. Schanzle, supra, will apply.

It is my opinion, therefore, that where in a city in a county other than the county seat, which contains a population of eight thousand or more, there is but one paper which comes within the terms of section 6252 General Code, as to the publication of the notices therein provided for, in such city, the publication of such notices in the one newspaper so qualified will be in compliance with the provisions of section 6252 General Code, and it is not necessary to publish such notice in another newspaper published outside of said city but having general circulation therein.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

RIGHT OF WAY—SECURED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—IN WHOSE NAME TITLE SHOULD BE TAKEN—ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—COMMISSIONERS SHOULD VACATE UNDER SECTION 6860 G. C.

1. Where the county commissioners, under the provisions of section 1201 G. C., secure right of way by means of a deed, the title in and to the easement or right of way should be taken in the name of the board of county commissioners, their successors and assigns forever.

2. To avoid unnecessary misunderstandings relative to that part of the road which is abandoned because of the direction of the road having been changed, the county commissioners should vacate the same under sections 6860 et seq. G. C.; that is, if they no longer desire to keep the same open as a public highway.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 12, 1918.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 12, 1917, enclosing form of deed, which communication reads as follows:

"It is proposed that a part of one of the roads in our county be improved by the state highway commissioner with the co-operation of the county commissioners.

Section 1201 of the General Code provides that in such cases county commissioners shall procure necessary rights of way.

I am herewith enclosing form of deed for your approval. Of course, this deed should be acknowledged and the acknowledgment clause added.

I am sending this to you for the reason that I am in doubt as to whom the grantee in the deed should be and the exact form of the deed, in view of the fact that the county commissioners make the purchase, but the improvement is to be done by the state highway commissioner.

I would also be glad for you to give any other directions in regard to the matter that may seem proper."

The form of deed submitted reads as follows:

"Know all men by these presents that

WHEREAS, It is proposed by the state of Ohio, by and through Clinton Cowen, State Highway Commissioner of said state, to improve Main Market Road No. ------ in Franklin township, Warren county, state of Ohio; and

WHEREAS, Said improvement is to be constructed with the co-operation of the county commissioners of said county; and

WHEREAS, The line of said proposed improvement deviates from said existing highway; and

WHEREAS, Section 1201 of the General Code provides that the county commissioners shall provide requisite right of way for such improvements;

Now, therefore, ----------, the grantor ----, in consideration of ---------- Dollars ($----------) to ---------- paid by Warren county, Ohio, acting by and through the board of county commissioners of said county, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, do ---- hereby grant and release unto the state of Ohio, its successors and assigns forever, the right of way for said proposed highway improvement on, over and upon and across a piece of land owned by ----------, said grantor; the right of way herein granted being situated in the township of Franklin, county of Warren and state of Ohio, and being described as follows: (Space for description).

The state of Ohio, grantee, to have and to hold said right of way unto itself and its successors and assigns forever, and to have the right to construct and forever maintain thereon a public highway and the said grantor ----, for ----------, -------- heirs, executors and administrators, hereby covenant with the said grantee, its successors and assigns, that said grantor ____ is the true and lawful owner of said premises, and is well seized of same in fee simple and has good right and full power to bargain, sell and convey the same in manner aforesaid, and that the same are clear and free from all incumbrances, and further that said grantor ____ will warrant and defend the same against all claims of all persons whatsoever.

In witness whereof, said _____, grantor ____, and _____, his wife, have hereunto set their hands this _____ day of _____, A. D. 1917.

Signed in the presence of:

_____."

Under section 1201 G. C. the county commissioners, if they cannot agree relative to securing lands for a right of way, must take steps in the way of appropriation proceedings, as set out in said section. Evidently in your case an agreement has been reached and a deed would be the proper form of instrument by which to reduce this agreement to writing.

I desire to make a few suggestions in reference to the form of deed.

(1) While the recitals of any instrument are not to very vital, yet in this case I believe I would insert a recital to the effect that the state highway department has made the necessary surveys, maps, plans, profiles and specifications relative to the proposed improvement, which said surveys, etc., change the direction of the highway from that which it now takes; also a recital stating that said surveys, maps, plans, profiles, specifications, etc., have been adopted by the county commissioners of the county of Warren, under and by virtue of the provisions of section 1200 G. C. These recitals logically would come after thesecond recital set out in the form of deed.

(2) It is my opinion that the grantee of the deed should be the board of county commissioners of Warren county, Ohio, its successors and assigns forever. I am aware that under the provisions of sections 7464 and 7467 G. C. the state, after the completion of this particular road, will be required to maintain the same, but this applies merely to the maintenance and repair of the road and has nothing in particular to do with the easement. It is my view that the easement or right of way remains in the county, and that if there were any additional burden to be placed upon the highways of the state, in the way of a telephone, telegraph or pipe line, etc., the county commissioners would be the proper authorities to grant this right, due to the fact that the easement in the highway, so far as the public is concerned, rests in the board of county commissioners of the various counties.

(3) It might be well to provide in the deed for the release of dower, providing, of course, the grantor is a married person. Undoubtedly it was your intention to carry the names of both parties through the deed, but even with this, a clause releasing dower would be altogether proper as well as legal.

(4) It might also be well for your county commissioners, under sections 6860 et seq. G. C., to take such steps as would enable them to vacate the part of the road which will be abandoned by virtue of the change in the direction of the road. While section 6860 G. C. provides that said act shall not enable the county commissioners to vacate an inter-county highway or main market road, yet after the direction of the highway has been changed and the road completed, the part of the road abandoned will no longer be an inter-county highway or main market road. Of course, this suggestion is made upon the theory that your county commissioners will no longer desire to keep open that part of the road abandoned by virtue of the change in the direction of the road.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—WHEN SAID OFFICIAL CERTIFIES THAT MONEY IS IN TREASURY SUBJECT TO A CERTAIN USE—MONEY CANNOT BE USED FOR ANY PURPOSE UNTIL OBLIGATION ENTERED INTO BY COMMISSIONERS IS FULLY SATISFIED.

Under the provisions of section 5660 G. C., when the certificate of the county auditor is filed with the county commissioners, to the effect that there is money in the treasury subject to a certain use, and the county commissioners entered into a contract providing for the use of said money, the money in reference to which the certificate is made and to the amount of the certificate is appropriated and set aside for a special purpose and cannot be used for any other purpose until the county is fully discharged from the obligation entered into by it under said contract or final resolution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 12, 1918.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 18, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "The law, as I understand it, provides that roads may be improved by the state highway commissioner with the co-operation of the county commissioners and the cost thereof paid partly by the state and the balance by assessments made on the property. The law, however, provides that in the first instance the county shall pay the amount which will afterward be assessed and be reimbursed upon the collection of the assessments or the sale of bonds in anticipation of such collection.
> In a county in which contracts have been made under these provisions of law and in which it has been certified by the auditor that sums of money aggregating approximately $10,000.00 are in the treasury to the credit of the proper fund (with which to pay in the first instance the cost of the improvement other than that paid by the state) and in which county there is now in the process of collection additional funds for road purposes, would it be proper for the auditor to certify contracts or draw warrants upon the money now in the treasury (which has been certified as above stated) for the payment of necessary improvements and repairs and then use the money now in the process of collection to fulfill the county's obligations under contract made by the highway commissioner after the first of March, when such money will be available.
> I might further state that in this particular case the contracts made by the highway commissioner probably cannot be performed or even started before the money now in the process of collection will be collected."

As I understand them, the facts upon which you desire an opinion are as follows:

The commissioners of your county have entered into a contract, or rather adopted final resolutions, to the effect that they will stand good in the first instance for the payment of $10,000.00 toward the cost and expense of a certain road improvement over which the state highway commissioner has assumed jurisdiction. As a basis for this final resolution, and preliminary thereto, the county auditor has certified to the county commissioners that there is $10,000.00 in the county treasury subject to be used for the purposes of said improvement.

The question arises as to whether the county commissioners could use a part or all of this $10,000.00 for other road improvements, provided they would replenish the fund from moneys to be collected by taxation and otherwise, before the same would be needed for the road improvement over which the state highway commissioner has assumed jurisdiction. You state that neither said $10,000.00 nor any part of it will be needed before some time next spring or summer.

In order to answer this question it will be necessary to note the provisions of but one section, viz., section 5660 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 5660. The commissioners of county * * * shall not enter into any contract, agreement or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money, unless the auditor * * * first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn * * *. Such certificate shall be filed and forthwith recorded, and the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the county * * * is fully discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or as long as the order or resolution is in force."

It will be seen from this section that whether we call this final resolution, which is entered into upon the part of the county commissioners, a mere resolution, or a contract which it really is, the provisions of said section apply. The final resolution or agreement as entered into is of no force or effect unless the auditor certifies that the money is in the treasury. This is a jurisdictional step in the whole proceeding. The statute further provides that when this certificate is made and the resolution or contract entered into, the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the county is fully discharged from the contract or resolution. In other words, the funds, in regard to which a certificate is made, are practically appropriated or set aside for a special purpose, this purpose being set out in the contract or resolution which is entered into, in view of the certificate.

Said section 5660 practically provides that this money cannot be again appropriated or used for any purpose until the county is fully discharged from the obligations of the resolution or contract. Of course in your case the county is not discharged from the obligation. It still remains, and from the provisions of the statute and the evident intention of the legislature this money cannot be used for any purpose other than that for which it has practically been set aside by the action of the county auditor and the county commissioners, unless the county is first discharged from the obligation into which it has entered, and a part or all of the money so appropriated still remains.

This, as I understand it, answers your question specifically.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

PROSECUTIONS UNDER SECTION 13008—COSTS—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE, ETC., HAVE FINAL JURISDICTION IN PROSECUTIONS BROUGHT UNDER SECTION 13423—SECTION 13008 DOES NOT REPEAL SECTION 12970 BY IMPLICATION.

1. The provisions of section 13439 G. C., relative to costs, do not apply to prosecutions brought under section 13008 G. C. The provisions of section 3019, covering costs, do apply to prosecutions brought under said section 13008, provided the state fails to convict.

2. In those prosecutions brought under section 13423 G. C., a justice of the peace, mayor or police judge has final jurisdiction to try the accused and said officers do not sit as examining magistrates and hence have no authority to bind the accused over to the court of common pleas or the probate court.

3. The provisions of section 13008 G. C. do not repeal by implication any part of the provisions of section 12970 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of December 17, 1917, in which you ask my opinion on the following questions:

"(1) In cases under section 13008 G. C., brought before a justice of the peace, a mayor or a police judge, as examining magistrate, if the defendant is bound over to the grand jury, or be dismissed for lack of sufficient evidence, are the minor court costs payable under section 13439 G. C., or do they follow the case as a felony, and in the event of ultimate failure to convict, or because of dismissal by the magistrate, become payable under and within the limitations of section 3019 G. C.?

(2) Should a justice of the peace, a mayor, or a police judge, decide not to exercise final jurisdiction in any case brought before him under section 13423 G. C., but bind same over to the common pleas court, or probate court, may the county auditor pay the minor court costs under the provisions of section 13439 G. C., or is the auditor's authority to pay such costs limited strictly to cases where the magistrate has exercised final jurisdiction?

(3) Do the provisions of section 13008 G. C. repeal by implication any portion of section 12970 G. C.?"

Section 13423 G. C. provides that:

"Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction, within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to;" (Then follows an enumeration of fifteen cases over which the said officials have jurisdiction.)

This section is closely related to section 13432 G. C. and the chapter of which said section 13432 is a part. Said section reads as follows:

"Sec. 13432. In prosecutions before a justice, police judge or mayor, when imprisonment is a part of the punishment, if a trial by jury is not waived, the magistrate, not less than three days nor more than five days before the time fixed for trial, shall certify to the clerk of the court of common pleas of the county that such prosecution is pending before him."

These two sections formed but one section in the Revised Statutes, viz., section 3718a R. S. Said section of the Revised Statutes began as follows:

"Any justice of the peace, police judge or mayor of any city or village shall each have jurisdiction within his county (then follows enumeration of a list of cases after which the section proceeds as follows:)

In any such prosecution where imprisonment may be a part of the punishment, if a trial by jury be not waived, the said justice of the peace shall, not less than three nor more than five days before the time fixed for trial, certify to the clerk of the court of common pleas of his county that such prosecution is pending before him." (Then follows provisions for a jury and trial.)

I desire to call particular attention to the words "any such prosecution;" that is, the prosecutions for those offenses enumerated in the first part of said section. From these two provisions of section 3718a R. S. it is quite evident that the officers mentioned had jurisdiction finally to try prosecutions for those causes set out in the section.

In the General Code, the codifying commission made the first part of said section 3718a R. S. to be section 13423 G. C., and the latter part to be section 13432 et seq., placing said sections in different chapters and also dropping the words "any such" as found in the section of the Revised Statutes.

However, there is nothing whatever to indicate that there was any intention on the part of the legislature that the provisions of section 13432 et seq. should no longer apply to prosecutions under section 13423. So that we must still read section 13432 as being vitally related to and connected with section 13423. That is, section 13423 enumerates the class of cases over which justices of the peace, judges of the police court and mayors have jurisdiction as provided in section 13432.

Inasmuch as the words "any such" are no longer in the section, the question might be raised as to whether the provisions of section 13432 et seq. might not be made to apply to all prosecutions in which imprisonment may be part of the penalty, limited, of course, to misdemeanors. Indeed, some lower courts have so held.

In State v. Pohlman, 13 N. P. (N. S.) 254, the court held:

"Section 13432 G. C. gives final jurisdiction to justices of the peace in cases in which imprisonment is a part of the punishment, and a jury is not waived, and where it is attempted to carry such a case to the probate court, a motion to discharge the accused will lie."

However, this holding of the probate court was overruled in State ex rel. v. Renz, 5 Ohio Appellate 421, 425. But you limit your question to prosecutions brought under section 13423 G. C. Under section 13432 G. C., the officers therein named are given jurisdiction, as said before, to try prosecutions brought under section 13423, whether imprisonment is a part of the penalty or not. If a jury is not waived by the accused in a case where imprisonment may be a part of the penalty, so as to enable the said officers to try the accused without a jury, he shall then proceed, as set out in section 13432 et seq., to impanel a jury.

The officer has no power to declare whether or not he will assume jurisdiction, for he must assume it. He has no power or authority, in prosecutions brought under section 13423, to bind the accused over to the probate court or to the court of common pleas. In such cases he is not an examining magistrate, nor can he become one. He is a trial court, either trying the case with or without a jury, and mandamus will lie to compel him to exercise such jurisdiction. This was distinctly held in the case of:

State ex rel. v. Smith, 69 O. S. 196.

The officer before whom a person is prosecuted, for a matter set out in section 13423, has no greater warrant to bind over the accused in those cases where imprisonment may be a part of the penalty than he has where the penalty is merely a fine. The statute states that he shall proceed to trial, as therein set out.

Another general observation I desire to make, before proceeding to answer your questions specifically, is that the chapter, of which section 13432 is a part, relates only to misdemeanors and not to felonies. Of course if the offense charged is a felony, the officers mentioned in section 13432 could act in no other capacity than that of examining magistrates, hearing the evidence with a view to binding the accused over to the proper court.

Your first question has to do with section 13008 as well as other sections of the General Code. Said section 13008 reads as follows:

> "Sec. 13008. Whoever, being the father, or when charged by law with the maintenance thereof, the mother, of a legitimate or illegitimate child under sixteen years of age, or the husband of a pregnant woman, living in this state, being able by reason of property, or by labor or earnings, to provide such child or such woman with necessary or proper home, care, food, and clothing, neglects or refuses so to do, shall be imprisoned in a jail or workhouse at hard labor not less than six months nor more than one year, or in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years."

Section 13439 G. C. reads as follows:

> "In such prosecutions, no costs shall be required to be advanced or secured by a person authorized by law to prosecute. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise, or convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, all costs of such case shall be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor, who, after correcting errors therein, shall issue a warrant on the county treasury in favor of the person to whom such costs and fees are payable. All moneys which are to be paid by the county treasurer as provided in this chapter shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of such county."

It will be noted that the crime set forth in section 13008 is a felony, in that imprisonment in the penitentiary may be a part of the penalty.

As said before, the chapter of which section 13439 is a part, applies only to those cases in which the offense charged is a misdemeanor and in reference to which the officers therein set out have final jurisdiction. With this in mind we will consider exactly to what section 13439 applies in reference to costs. It provides that if the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, or convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, then in such cases the costs are paid as therein set out.

However, it must be remembered that this section states: "in such prosecutions;" that is, the prosecutions provided for in this chapter. The words "trial magistrate" are also used in said section. Hence it is clearly evident that section 13439 does not apply to costs, excepting in those cases wherein the justice has final jurisdiction to hear and determine. Hence if a person charged with an offense under section 13008 is bound over to the proper court, the provisions of this section would not take care of the costs, neither would they if he be dismissed for lack of sufficient evidence.

You then ask whether the provisions of section 3019 G. C. would apply as to costs in such a prosecution. This section reads, so far as felonies are concerned, "In felonies wherein the state fails," the costs may be taken care of as provided in said section. That is, if a person is charged with the offense set out in said section 13008 G. C., and an affidavit is filed with a justice of the peace, a police judge or mayor, and the accused is either dismissed for lack of evidence by the examining magistrate, or if he is bound over and the grand jury fails to indict, or if he is brought to trial and is found not guilty by the jury, or, in other words, in any case where the state fails to convict, the provisions of section 3019 G. C., relative to costs, would apply. I think this fully answers your first question.

Your second question is to the effect that if a justice of the peace, mayor or police judge should decide not to exercise final jurisdiction in any case brought before him under section 13423, but should bind the same over to the common pleas or probate court, would section 13439 apply as to costs?

This question has been answered in the general observations I have made. Said officers have no authority to decide whether or not they will exercise final jurisdiction in those prosecutions brought under section 13423 G. C. They must exercise final jurisdiction. Hence they have no authority to bind the accused over to the common pleas or probate court. Therefore the provisions of section 13439 G. C. would apply to such cases as you suggest in your second question, in that said officers would necessarily be compelled to exercise final jurisdiction.

I am aware that under section 4533 G. C. it might be held that the mayor of a city, if he felt it to be for the best interests of the public, could inquire into the complaint with a view either to discharging the accused or recognizing him to the proper court; that is, it might be held that in prosecutions under section 13423 G. C. the mayor of a city would not be compelled to exercise final jurisdiction in the matter, but might sit as an examining, rather than a trial, magistrate.

However, it is my opinion that such is not the case. The provisions of sections 13423 and 13432 are of a later enactment than those of section 4533, relative to the matter under consideration. The provisions of section 4533 are general, relating to all misdemeanors prosecuted in the name of the state, while those of section 13423 are special and hence should control in this matter.

In Martindale v. State of Ohio, 2 O. C. C. 2, at p. 3 the court seems to have had this principle in mind when it used the following language:

> "But the prosecution in the present case is under a special statute, which gives a justice jurisdiction not to examine into the offense but to 'hear the prosecution' and 'if a trial by jury be not waived' said justice shall proceed to impanel a jury."

Hence it is my opinion that section 13432 G. C. would apply equally as well to a mayor as to a judge of a police court or justice of the peace, and that all of said officers would sit as trial magistrates in those prosecutions brought under section 13423 G. C., and not examining magistrates.

In your third question you ask whether the provisions of section 13008 G. C. repeal by implication any portion of section 12970 G. C.

I have already quoted section 13008 G. C. in answer to your first question.

Section 12970 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Whoever, having the control of or being the parent or guardian of a child under the age of sixteen years, wilfully abandons such child, or tortures, torments, or cruelly or unlawfully punishes it, or wilfully, unlawfully or negligently fails to furnish it necessary and proper food, clothing or shelter, shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than two hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months, or both."

In noting the provisions of these two sections, it is clearly apparent that the offense charged in section 12970 G. C. is a misdemeanor, while that charged in section 13008 G. C. is a felony. The question now is as to whether section 13008, in so far as it covers the same subject matter as set out in section 12970, repeals section 12970. As a general proposition we can say that it would so repeal section 12970 which covers the same subject matter.

In Sherman v. State, 17 Fla. 888, the court was considering an act of the legislature of 1832, which made an "assault with intent to kill" a misdemeanor, together with an act of the legislature of 1868, which made the same offense a felony. The court held that:

> "The law of 1832 is therefore superseded and repealed by the act of 1868."

In Hayes v. State, 55 Ind. 99, the court was considering an act of the legislature or 1852 making "the keeping of gaming apparatus" under certain conditions a felony, and a later act of 1875, making the same offense a misdemeanor. Held:

> "The two provisions cannot stand together. So much of the act herein first set out as makes it a felony to be keeper of any gaming apparatus, for the purpose indicated, is impliedly repealed by the amendment of 1875 which makes the offense a misdemeanor only and punishes it accordingly."

In Commonwealth v. McGowan et al., 2 Parsons Eq. Cas. 341, the court lays down the following proposition:

> "Where a statute makes that a felony which before was only a misdemeanor, the misdemeanor is merged and there can afterwards be no prosecution for the misdemeanor."

Other cases might be cited along this same line, but the above is sufficient to establish the proposition as above set out.

However, I desire to call attention to a certain matter in connection with the two sections about which you inquire, which it seems to me would prevent the general rule from being applied to these two sections. There is a condition set out in section 13008 G. C., entirely different from anything found in section 12970, and which tends very much to aggravate the offense of a father or mother in not providing for his or her child. This provision is as follows:

> "Sec. 13008. * * * being able by reason of property, or by labor or earnings, to provide such child * * * with necessary or proper home, care, food and clothing * * *."

Neither this provision nor anything like it is found in section 12970 G. C. This provision very much aggravates the offense and for this reason it seems the legislature saw fit to make it a felony, rather than a mere misdemeanor. I am aware that section 12970 uses the words "wilfully, unlawfully or negligently," but it is my opinion that these words are not as strong as those found in section 13008, and I feel that the provisions set out in section 13008 had something to do with the legislature's providing a more severe penalty in the one case than in the other. Hence it is my opinion that section 13008 G. C. does not in any respect impliedly repeal any of the provisions found in section 12970 G. C.

Bishop in his Work on Statutory Crimes, section 168, lays down the following proposition:

> "Two different punishments, for precisely the same offense, with no variation in its elements and no modifying discretion in the court, cannot, in the nature of things, subsist together."

It will be noted that the author makes it clear that it would be different if there were a variation in the elements of the crime.

In section 171 the same author says:

> "If the new statute adds aggravations not in the old law of the offense and creates a higher penalty; or omits an aggravating quality and provides a lower penalty; or if the new statute is applicable to a particular class only of persons who owe special duties in the matter, the new punishment does not supersede the old."

It is my opinion that the conclusions of the author substantiate the conclusion drawn by me.

There is a case reported in 25 C. C. (N. S.) 447, styled State of Ohio v. Bone, in which the court held as follows in the syllabus:

> "The father could have been prosecuted under either section 12970 or section 13008 of the General Code, but prosecution under the latter section could not be had in the municipal court."

In the opinion on p. 448 the court held as follows:

> "There can be no question but that the father could have been prosecuted under either section 12970 or section 13008 of the General Code, although prosecution under the latter section could not be had in the municipal court."

While this case was not fully considered by the court and it did not have under particular consideration the question as to whether section 13008 G. C. repeals section 12970 G. C., yet the finding of the court in said case goes to the effect at least that section 13008 does not in any respect repeal the provisions of section 12970. In this case the supreme court overruled a motion for an order directing the court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court.

Whether a person is prosecuted under section 12970 or section 13008 G. C., must be determined from the charge made against him, as set forth in the affidavit which is filed with the proper official. While it might under a loosely drawn affidavit be difficult to determine whether a person is being prosecuted under the one section or under the other, yet ordinarily the form of an affidavit would readily disclose the section under which the accused is being prosecuted. To be sure, if it is under section 13008, the officials mentioned in section 13432 would have no power other than as examining magistrate, who could hear the evidence with a view to binding the accused over to the proper court.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—RESIGNATION—TO WHOM PRESENTED.

A member of a board of county commissioners who wishes to resign should present his resignation to the probate judge, auditor and recorder, those officials being designated to fill a vacancy in such board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1918.

HON. JAMES F. FLYNN, Prosecuting Attorney, Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your recent request for my opinion you say:

> "One of the members of our board of county commissioners contemplates resigning to join the service. Section 2397 G. C. provides that the probate judge, auditor and recorder shall appoint a successor, but there is no provision of the statute which I am able to find stating further to whom the resignation should be sent. It is my opinion that it should be sent to the governor and upon receipt of the same that he notify each of the above named officers of the vacancy so that a successor may be named.
> Kindly advise me as to what is your opinion with reference to the question as to whom the resignation of the county commissioner should be sent, also give me your opinion as to when the three above named officers should take action with reference to a successor and whether or not the governor should send them notice if he is the one to whom the resignation should be sent."

Section 2395 G. C. provides that the board of county commissioners of a county shall consist of three persons, who shall be elected biennially and shall hold their respective offices for two years commencing on the third Monday of September next after their election.

Section 2396 G. C. provides that when a county commissioner is elected to fill a vacancy occasioned by death, "resignation" or removal, he shall hold his office for the unexpired term for which his predecessor was elected.

Section 2397 G. C. provides that if a vacancy occurs more than thirty days before the next election for state or county officers, or within thirty days from that time, and the interest of the county requires that the vacancy be filled before the election, "the probate judge, auditor and recorder of the county, or a majority of them, shall appoint a commissioner who shall hold his office until his successor is elected and qualified."

There is no other special provision to be found in the statute law of this state which grants a county commissioner the right to resign or which provides to whom a resignation shall be made, or in any way other than the above makes any reference to a resignation by a county commissioner. The decisions of the several states are somewhat at variance in reference to the question of the time when a resignation will take effect, but they seem to be united on the proposition that a person who holds an office has a right to resign, and especially when the power is given to the appointing board to fill a vacancy caused by a resignation.

Throop, in his work on Public Officers, section 704, says: That an office may be resigned either expressly or by implication; that where no particular mode of resignation is prescribed by law, an express resignation may be made by parol or in writing. If by parol, as by the incumbent declaring to the appointing power that he resigns his office or will continue to serve no longer and requests an acceptance of his resignation. A resignation by implication is by the same author held to be practically a forfeiture of the office and occurs where the incumbent commits some act or omission which clearly indicates an intent to abandon the office or which disqualifies him from continuing longer to hold it. So that granting for the purposes of this opinion that it is permissible for a county commissioner to resign, your question is, to whom should such resignation be handed or made. There is nothing in our statutes which provides that the resignation may be made to any particular person or board, but it is held in Mechem's Public Offices and Officers, section 413, that:

> "Statutes usually prescribe to whom the resignation of a public officer is to be made, but in the absence of such a provision it is properly made to that officer or body which is by law authorized to act upon it by appointing a successor * * * * * to fill the vacancy."

In Edwards v. United States, 103 U. S., 471, Edwards had been duly elected as supervisor of St. Joseph township. He resigned by handing his written resignation to the clerk of the township. There was nothing to show that the clerk ever presented said resignation to the appointing board, and on page 478 the court says:

> "According to the common-law rule, the resignation would not be complete, so as to take effect in vacating the office, until it was presented to the township board, and either accepted by them or acted upon by making a new appointment. A new appointment would probably be necessary in this case, because the township board was not the original appointing board. The supervisor is not their officer, representative, or appointee. They only represent the township in exercising the power, vested in them, of filling a vacancy when it occurs. THIS MAKES THEM THE PROPER BODY TO RECEIVE THE RESIGNATION, BECAUSE THEY ARE THE FUNCTIONARIES WHOSE DUTY IT IS TO ACT UPON IT."

In State ex rel. Kirtley v. Augustine, 113 Mo. 21, a county treasurer presented his resignation to the county court under the misapprehension that the county court was the proper tribunal to receive it, and the resignation was accepted and the fact certified to the governor, who in that case was the appointing power, to fill a vacancy, and a successor was designated. The resigning officer attempted to recall the resignation, but as to that question the court held that after a successor was designated the resignation was beyond recall, even though made to the wrong person. But on page 24 McFarlane, J., quoting with approval from the court of appeals, says:

> "It is well established law, that, in the absence of express statutory enactment, the authority to accept the resignation of a public officer rests with the power to appoint a successor to fill the vacancy. The right to accept a resignation is set up incidental to the power of appointment."

In Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th edition, Vol. 1, section 416, the author says:

> "It is also a common law principle that the right to accept the resignation of an officer is incidental to the power of appointing him."

In Van Orsdall v. Hazzard, 3d Hill (N. Y.) 243, a member of a regimental court martial got permission to be excused from serving because of the dangerous illness of a member of his family, and the question was as to whether or not this was such a resignation as would permit another to be appointed in his place, in other words, whether or not there was a vacancy within the meaning of the militia law. After determining that a vacancy did exist, the court held that such resignation was properly made to the appointing power.

In State ex rel. v. Boecker, 56 Mo., 17, the clerk of a county court tendered his resignation to take effect at a future date. The paper was filed in the office of the court and afterward, and before the day the resignation was to take effect, the clerk forwarded to the county court his written withdrawal, but in the meantime, and without the consent of the clerk, and against his express directions, the resignation had been forwarded to the governor, who had power to fill the vacancy, and another person had been appointed clerk.

HELD:

> "That under a proper construction of the state constitution such resignation was not legal and complete unless sent to the governor and accepted by him with the knowledge and consent of the clerk; that the filing of the document with the county court was a nullity, giving that body no jurisdiction; that the paper was constructively still in the possession of the clerk; that in law the office of the county clerk did not become vacant; and that with the sanction of the court the clerk might at the same term legally withdraw his resignation notwithstanding the new appointment of the governor."

Other decisions along the same line as the above have been examined and the same principle is enunciated as in these. So that, it would seem from all the above that the county commissioner referred to in your inquiry should deliver or make his resignation to the three officials whose duty it is to fill a vacancy. No formal acceptance of said resignation is necessary, but an acceptance by the appointing board, or a filling of a vacancy, being equivalent to an acceptance of such resignation, is all that is required.

So that, answering your first question, I advise you that a member of a board of county commissioners, who desires to resign, shall direct or make such resignation to the probate judge, auditor and recorder of the county in which such commissioner holds his office.

In your second question you inquire when the three above named officers should take action with reference to a successor of such commissioner. There is nothing in the statute by which provision is made for any form or method of procedure in the selecting of such successor, but where a duty devolves upon a public official, it is a well established principle that such duty should be performed, if no time is mentioned, promptly.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—SHERIFF—PROBATION OFFICER.

The sheriff of a county may not be appointed or act as probation officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1918.

HON. C. W. PALMER, Probate Judge, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date as follows:

> "If it is not presumptuous, I should like to have your opinion as to whether the sheriff of the county may be appointed and act as probation officer for the juvenile court, and whether or not the compensation as such probation officer should be turned into the sheriff's fee fund."

On December 8, 1910, former Attorney-General U. G. Denman rendered an opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, found at page 446 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1910-1911, in which he held that a sherff may not act as probation officer or receive any compensation or fees of any kind in the capacity of probation officer. In that opinion Mr. Denman stated:

> "It appears, from a review of the history of the juvenile court law, that the purpose of having probation officers was to secure individuals, other than the then existing officers, to assist in the handling of juvenile cases. Among such officers who have, under the juvenile court law, been largely supplanted in the handling of these cases by such probation officers, are the sheriffs and their deputies. The section above quoted shows that a probation officer, in the serving of 'warrants and other process of the court,' is 'clothed with the powers and authority of sheriffs.' A probation officer not only performs all the duties in such cases which were formerly performed by the sheriffs, but he performs additional duties, such as making 'examination and investigation into the facts and circumstances,' being 'present in court to represent the interests of the child,' furnishing 'to the judge such information and assistance as he may require,' etc. In other words, the probation officer may perform all duties of the sheriff in such cases, and also a number of additional duties. The law provides that 'sheriffs * * * * shall render assistance to probation officers in the performance of their duties, when requested so to do,' but the law does not specifically state that a sheriff may be a probation officer.
> It appears to me from the above that a probation officer must perform certain duties in addition to those which are to be performed by the sheriff, and that the performance of all the duties of a probation officer by a sheriff would at least interfere with the faithful performance of the duties of his office as sheriff. Since section 1663 requires a sheriff to render assistance to a probation officer, it would seem that the statute differentiates the two positions and considers them as positions which should be held by different persons. Such differentiation is also emphasized by section 1660, which provides that:

'The warrants * * * * may issue to a probation officers of any court or to the sheriff of any county, * * *.'

It appears to me, therefore, that it is the policy of the juvenile court law that probation officers should be persons other than regular officers of the law such as sheriffs. If, however, a sheriff could also act as a probation officer, in such case, under section 1660, warrants, etc., should issue to him as sheriff because he is a regular officer of the county for the serving of such warrants, etc., and since practically the only reason for issuing such warrants, etc., to a probation officer, under the changed conditions of the law, is to procure a person other than the sheriff to serve such warrants, etc., A further reason for this conclusion arises from the fact that if the warrants issued to the sheriff, as such, he must, under section 2977 of the General Code, pay all fees, costs, etc., arising therefrom into the treasury of the county, whereas is such warrants issued to the sheriff not as sheriff but as probation officer, he could, as probation officer, retain to his own personal use such fees or expenses as might be incurred in the handling of such warrants, etc. In other words, if the sheriff could act as a probation officer in such matters, he could evade the provisions of the county salary law.

As to your third question, it might be argued that a sheriff could act as probation officer to the extent that he would perform services not required of a sheriff but rather the additional services which are required of a probation officer and that he could, under section 1662, General Code, receive some compensation for such additional services. To argue thus would be to say that a person, namely a sheriff, may be appointed as probation officer, but may not perform all the duties of such position of probation officer, for the reason that he would be compelled to perform some of such duties as sheriff. Such a condition is so inconsistent as to be impossible for the reason that one probation officer, must have as much power and be able to perform as many duties as another."

I agree with the reasoning of the above opinion and in the conclusion arrived at, and therefore advise you that the sheriff of a county may not be appointed or act as probation officer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ADOPTION—MOTHER MAY CONSENT TO SAME—WHEN DIVORCED HUSBAND CONCEALS HIS WHEREABOUTS FOR PERIOD OF ONE YEAR.

A woman obtained a divorce from her husband. By the terms of the decree she was awarded the custody of their child and he was required to contribute to its support. This he did, residing in the same community for one year, when he left and concealed his whereabouts and has not been heard from.

HELD, that this constitutes an abandonment by him of his child and that the mother is qualified, under section 8024, to give the legal consent to the adoption of the child.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On August 17, 1917, the following communication was received at this department from Mr. A. C. Crouse, chief probation officer, division of domestic relations, court of common pleas of Hamilton county, Ohio:

> "We have an interesting case here which I am referring to you at the suggestion of Mr. Williams, of the board of state charities.
> Five years ago Mrs. H. secured a divorce from her husband in the insolvency court in this county. In the decree the two children, Alice and Mary, were placed in the custody of the mother. The father was ordered to pay $5.00 per week for the support of the two children. One year later the father left the city and the state and has never since been heard of by members of his family. About this time the mother placed Mary with a relative. This relative has cared for the little girl since that time and now desires to adopt the girl so that she may be made an heir to the relative's estate. The mother is willing to consent to the adoption.
> When the relative went to Judge Lueders, of the probate court, to have the adoption papers prepared, Judge Lueders refused to consent to the adoption unless the case was brought to his court, the child declared a dependent and committed to an institution which has the right to consent to an adoption. The judge said that in no other way could the adoption be made legally so long as there was no evidence of the death of the father.
> The case was thereupon brought to my attention. When I learned that the family had been in the divorce court and the custody of the children had been fixed by the insolvency court, I refused to bring the case into this court because of the decisions of the courts for many years holding that a court which fixes the custody of a child has continuing jurisdiction. The latest opinion on this matter I have in mind is that of the court of appeals, for Sandusky county, in the case of the Cleveland Protestant Orphan Asylum et al. v. Hazel Taylor Soule, found on page 151, 24th Ohio Circuit Court Reports, new series.
> The relative who desired to adopt the child thereupon appealed to Judge Jos. B. Kelly, of the insolvency court. Judge Kelly said that he would put on an entry consenting to the adoption. Judge Lueders, of the probate court, however, holds that he has no right to recognize such an order from the insolvency court. The result is that the child is being deprived of a privilege which she should be permitted to enjoy.
> I had a talk with Judge Lueders the other day about the matter, and he suggested that we bring the child into this court and declare it to have been abandoned, commit it to the children's home, and permit the children's home to consent to the adoption. We are willing to do this but we have some doubt as to its legality.
> I would be very glad to have an opinion from your department as to how this case might be handled under our laws and decisions."

This inquiry purports to be made at your suggestion, and the answer, therefore, is directed to you.

The inquiry upon examination is found to involve two questions: First, where is lodged the authority to consent to an adoption in accordance with section 8024 General Code under the circumstances above set out. Second, how is the above question, if at all, affected by the order of the insolvency court in a divorce case whereby the custody of the child in question was decreed to the mother?

The proceedings for the adoption are contained in the section above mentioned, which is as follows:

> "Sec. 8024. Any proper person not married, or a husband and wife jointly, may petition the probate court of their proper county, or the probate court of the county in which the child resides, for leave to adopt a minor child not theirs by birth, and for a change of the name of such child. A written consent must be given to such adoption by the child, if of the age of fourteen years, and by each of his or her living parents who is not hopelessly insane, intemperate, or has not abondoned such child, or if there are no such parents, or if the parents are unknown, or have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then by the legal guardian, or if there is no such guardian, then by a suitable person appointed by the court to act in the proceedings as the next friend of the child."

By the above the written consent of each parent is required unless coming within the exceptions mentioned in the section, the one here applicable being included in the phrase "or has not abandoned such child." If the father has abandoned the child, the consent of the mother alone is sufficient as is indicated by the phrase after the provision for the consent of the parent:

> "Or if the parents are unknown, or have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then by the legal guardian."

This means if both of the parents are unknown, or if both have abandoned the child, and it is the plain intent of the section that as long as there is one parent qualified to give the consent it is to be given by such parent before resorting to the other sources of consent therein provided.

We have then to examine the question as to whether this father has abandoned his child. In the ordinary sense such abandonment is understood to be leaving a child with whom he stands in the ordinary relation and has the ordinary authority of a parent; that is, a child which is living with him. This, however, is not a necessary interpretation, and it is submitted that the language does not require such restricted meaning.

The definition of "abandon" in Century Dictionary is as follows:

> "1. To detach or withdraw oneself from; leave.
> (a) To desert; forsake utterly; as to abandon one's home; to abandon one's duty.
> (b) To give up, cease to occupy oneself with; cease to use, follow, etc.;
> (c) To resign, forego, or renounce, relinquish concern in;
> (d) To relinquish the control of; yield up without restraint;
> 2. * * * * * * * * *
> 3. To relinquish or renounce."

"Abandonment" is defined as follows:

> 1. Act of abandoning or the state of being abandoned; absolute relinquishment; total desertion.

2. * * * * * * * * *
3. In law:
   (a) * * *
   (b) The voluntary leaving of a person to whom one is bound by a relationship of obligation, as a wife, husband, or child; desertion."

There is a question, and different minds reach a different conclusion as to whether there could be an abandonment of a child by a father who has been deprived of its custody by the decree of a court. The facts are not all given in this case as they actually existed, either as to the cause of the divorce or the terms of the decree. If, as a matter of fact, this father had abandoned his child before the divorce there is no question as to the mother's right to give the consent. The decree of the court probably gave the father a right to visit the child at certain times and under certain conditions, as such decrees usually do, and the final answer might determine upon this ground. At any rate we have in the opinion one connection left between this father and child—he had the privilege which he should have been willing and anxious to accept, of contributing to its support. This duty he has utterly ceased to perform, and in a manner which shows him regardless not only of his natural obligation, but of the respect he owes to the law and to the judgment of the court. If it had been impossible for him to comply with this order, it was his duty to make it known to the court in order to escape the guilt of contempt of court. If he is dead he cannot do this, of course, but in that event his consent is not necessary; if he is living he has certainly abandoned his child as far as it is possible for a parent to do so.

In the first place, this divorce was granted for his aggression, so that he himself by his own wilful conduct and his failure to meet this obligation as a member of society and the head of a family has resulted in his separation from the child and the loss of its custody and control; and this, under the purview of this statute which should have a liberal construction, may well be considered as the beginning of the abandonment. This he has supplemented by severing the last tie and neglecting the last obligation to which he was bound to his child, not only by the order of the court pronounced against him, but by the natural obligations of humanity and parental affection. He had, as shown above, a portion of the parental connection left; just how far it extended depends upon the decree of the court, but it was at least something and that something quite substantial. It is therefore submitted that he has to all intents and purposes and in legal contemplation, abandoned his child.

This conclusion is announced with diffidence and with respect for the opinion of the learned court, from whose judgment it seems to differ, as it is probably upon this ground that the probate judge declined to decree the adoption, although this does not absolutely appear from the inquiry. Unless, then, the right to this consent has been in some manner affected by the proceedings or decree of some of the courts in which this unfortunate family has appeared, the mother is qualified to give the consent alone upon the ground that the father has abandoned the child.

Proceeding now to the second branch of the inquiry as to what if any effect upon the above conclusion the proceedings in any of the courts may have, there has been no actual proceeding in any but the insolvency court in the divorce case in which the custody of the child was fixed. This decree of the court is not ipso facto sufficient to give the mother the right to consent to this adoption. The decree of the court gives the mother the custody of the child, subject to be modified by a further order of the court, which under such circumstances always retains continuing jurisdiction. This right to the custody and the decree giving it are not sufficient to supersede or set aside the authority of the statute in reference to the adoption. Section 8024 must be complied with under all circumstances, as it is an absolute, positive and clear requirement necessary to the jurisdiction of the court to establish the new status.

It is true, as stated above and as suggested in the inquiry, that the court still has jursdiction. It is the practice for it to retain jurisdiction and have what is called "continuing jurisdiction," and this continuing jurisdiction has the effect of lis pendens so far as any other proceeding in any other court may be attempted. The decree you cite is only declaratory of a well established principle established by a line of decisions going back so far that its origin is lost in antiquity. It is, however, a good example of the application of the principle.

Orphan Asylum v. Soule, 24 C. C. N. S., 161.

The same principle is applied by the probate court of Lucas county in a case practically on "all fours" with the instant case. In re Maud Faye Olson 3 N. P. 305, the syllabus of which is as follows:

> "Where, in a proceeding in the probate court to set aside the adoption of a child on account of failure to secure the consent of the mother who is under none of the disabilities to consent prescribed by Sec. 3137, Rev. Stat., the court would have to grant such request, but by such proceeding the child has once been brought under the jurisdiction of the court under this section, the court will have jurisdiction over such child for all the purposes which this section has in view, and which the best interest of the child demand."

This awkward syllabus not only ratifies the principle above mentioned and shows its application to the exact case, but is also pertinent as bearing upon the right of the parent to have a consent, and furnishes an instance of the fact that if the jurisdiction of the court appears on the face of its record from the necessary facts therein cited, yet if the statements thereof be untrue and be shown so afterward the court is without jurisdiction and the order voidable. It was in that case set aside by direct attack.

It is apparent that the highest degree of care should be taken by the court in determining this question of consent to the adoption when the proposed consent comes from other than the parents of the subject. It is, however, true beyond question that under the state of facts in the present case the authority to give this consent is not complicated by any previous act of the court touching these parties.

The more extended the consideration given the question and the more complete the examination of authorities, the more the above conclusion becomes settled.

The courts have gone the limit in giving continuing jurisdiction over the person and property of children to that court which first acquires or assumes jurisdiction—this, however, without additional legislation, and in no case extends to the subject of adoption. While this subject seems to call for the exercise of the highest authority of any, and is the most closely associated with the interests of the child, fixing or changing as it does its name and identity, its relation to the world and to its environment—in short, going further and changing the life of the child—than any other proceeding or measure that is taken with reference to such child, yet, in another sense it has no connection with the custody or control of the child. That is to say, that even though such child be adopted and changes its parentage and position and relationship to the world in general thereby, it is still subject to the same laws and the same authority by which such custody and control are taken over by the public as is every child under other circumstances; and the same as another child having natural parents. Adoption is entirely artificial, wholly statutory. While it effects the most important change possible in the affairs and career of him who is the subject of it, yet it is a creature of technicality and is only accomplished by strict performance of certain statutory requirements, which are created only by reason of the force of legislation regardless of any natural reason or any other control whatever.

The supreme court in a recent case has held that where a court granting a divorce awards the custody and control of children such children become the wards of that court and the jurisdiction of the court over the custody and control is a continuing jurisdiction, and such decree for the custody and control of the minor children cannot be affected by the appointment of a guardian by a probate court, and that no other court can, by proceedings in habeas corpus, acquire any jurisdiction further than to enforce the decree of the first court.

In re: Angeline E. Crist, 89 O. S., 33.

It is apparent that this decision goes to the last limit and leaves no further distance to be traveled by any other in the same direction.

It is conceived, however, that by the expression "wards of that court" it is not meant that the court intends to assume and perform the ordinary duties of guardianship, but that the term is used in a more general sense like that in which it is stated in English books, that is, orphans are wards of chancery. The statement is not that the probate court cannot appoint a guardian, but that the custody and control of the children cannot be affected by such appointment; that is, the power would still remain in the court granting the original decree to make any order touching such custody.

The suggestion arises in a discussion of this question that this disposition of it results in curtailing the desired effect of an adoption; that the person adopting a child does so principally to have the custody and control of the child and that by giving the above effect to the statutes and the decision above cited, the adoption would become an idle and empty ceremony and in many cases might deter parties from such adoption. This argument, however, is not really reached. The interpretation of the statutes in question is plain and is arrived at by reference to well known rules without reaching the question of the effect and consequence of the act, Such consequences rest with the legislature enacting the statutes and with the court rendering the decision. However, as is generally the case with this argument ab inconvenienti the difficulty in more imaginary than real or it will disappear upon an application of the law to actual cases. There is a point where the powers of these two courts meet and changing it to the one side or the other in nowise removes the difficulty or the apparent conflict. There is no kind of doubt of the jurisdiction of the probate court in everything pretaining to adoption. It is equally well settled that the court rendering a decree under the divorce and alimony statutes has continuing jurisdiction over the custody of children. You therefore necessarily have in the probate court the right to establish the adoption and in the common pleas court the right to prevent its full consummation. The same thing is true of guardianship. It would indeed be a far cry to say that this per curiam opinion in the case of in re Crist has deprived the probate court of its jurisdiction to appoint guardians even guardians of the person, yet such guardian of the person cannot get the custody of the child under and by virtue of his appointment because the other court has the jurisdiction and power continuing in it over the subject. This difficulty as has been stated, will be found an imaginary one because always and universally, with only the rarest exception, would there be a conflict or difference of opinion. When the probate court decided that a person was proper to become the parent of a child by adoption, the common pleas court would always recognize that situation and award such person the custody; likewise in the case of the appointment of a guardian of the person. But whether this be true or not, you have positive power and authority in two different courts in reference to these two subjects and there seems to be no difficulty about fixing the line of demarcation as between them.

This matter cannot properly be disposed of without further reference to the suggestion made by the probate judge that a commitment be made to the children's home for the purpose of giving some one unquestioned authority to consent to this adoption. This plan looks feasible and certain upon casual inspection but will not stand the test of examination. In reality it would be found most precarious and dangerous. As has already been stated this decree of adoption may be collaterally attacked. It is true it may be said to have the force of a judgment to bind parties and privies. It would not, however, bind one of the parties. The infant upon coming of age might collaterally attack it, or directly either, by showing that the legal consent was not obtained. This commitment would not be legal or binding to fix any status on this child or confer any authority upon the children's home officials to give the consent because it would be really a false commitment made upon a false showing, not for the purpose of providing for the wants of the child, but for the ulterior purpose of disposing of the child itself and changing its status and its identity in life. It is doubtful whether it may not be directly or collaterally attacked by those who would be otherwise the heirs of the adopting parent, and in every aspect of the case would be most ill-advised and improper. This is in no manner intended as a criticism upon the opinion of the learned judge who makes the suggestion, but rather a suggestion to him of the objections to the course proposed.

You are therefore informed that it is my opinion that the consent to the adoption in the case set out in this inquiry can be given by the mother alone.

This opinion is given with hesitation and caution, as it seems probable that it may differ from that of the learned court, although his refusal may proceed upon other grounds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SALE OF LAND IN CITY OF CLEVELAND—TO C. H. GALE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 14, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 27, 1917, in which you enclose record of proceedings had relative to the sale of a certain tract of land in the city of Cleveland, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, to C. H. Gale, said Gale being lessee of this land from the state.

The proceedings leading up to the sale and the sale itself are being conducted under an act found in 107 O. L. 620, which relates to this one particular transaction. I have examined said proceedings, in view of the provisions of said act, and find the same in conformity with said provisions. I therefore approve the appraisement placed upon said land, namely, $4,320.00, and am endorsing my approval on said resolutions and forwarding the same to Hon. James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—VILLAGE OF WEST CARROLLTON.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of the village of West Carrollton, Ohio, in the sum of $3,800.00, in anticipation of assessments to pay the cost and expense of improving Central avenue in said village over and above the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by the county commissioners.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in accordance with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are signed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said village.

No bond form accompanied said transcript, and I am this day instructing the clerk of the village to have same prepared and forwarded to this department for approval before the bonds covering said issue are printed. The transcript relating to this bond issue will be retained until a copy of such bond form is received.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—VILLAGE OF WEST CARROLLTON.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of the village of West Carrollton, Ohio, in the sum of $4,000.00, to pay the village's share of the cost and expense of paving Central avenue in said village over and above the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by the county commissioners.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in accordance with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are signed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said village.

No bond form accompanied said transcript, and I am this day instructing the clerk of the village to have same prepared and forwarded to this department for approval before the bonds covering said issue are printed. The transcript relating to this bond issue will be retained until a copy of such bond form is received.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SALE OF CANAL LANDS TO SAMUEL F. VAN VOORHIS, NEWARK, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 12, 1918, in which you enclose, in duplicate, certain resolutions having to do with the sale of a portion of the old North Fork feeder of the Ohio canal in the city of Newark, Ohio, to Samuel F. Van Voorhis, who now holds a lease from the state for said lands, the appraised value of the lands being five thousand dollars ($5,000.00).

This sale is sought to be made under and by virtue of section 3 of an act of the general assembly, passed March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 512). This section reads as follows:

> "Any lessee of the state occupying any portion of the canal feeder, herein abandoned, may surrender his lease to the superintendent of public works for cancellation, and take a deed for the same by paying into the state treasury the amount of the appraisement as fixed by the superintendent of public works at the time of such sale."

I have carefully examined the proceedings had by you in reference to the sale of the property therein described to said Samuel F. Van Voorhis, and I find the same regular and in conformity to the provisions of said special act.

I have, therefore, approved the same and am placing my endorsement upon the said resolutions, and have forwarded the same to the governor of the state for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP BOARD OF HEALTH—JURISDICTION IN VILLAGES WHEN NO OFFICERS ELECTED IN VILLAGE—FAILURE TO ELECT OFFICERS DOES NOT DISSOLVE MUNICIPAL CORPORATION.

1. The mere fact that a municipal corporation fails to elect the necessary officers of the corporation and to make use of the powers granted in its charter, does not dissolve the corporation; neither does such failure cause a forfeiture of its right to be a corporation.

2. In case a village ceases to elect officials and there is no one with authority to levy taxes and carry on the functions of the village, the township board of health has jurisdiction over matters pertaining to health within said village and may pay the expenses thereof out of the proper township fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 16, 1918.

HON. A. W. FREEMAN, Commissioner of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 8, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "We have in Ohio several communities which have heretofore been incorporated as villages. In two of these municipalities, i. e., Calais, Monroe county, and Centerville, Gallia county, no officers have been elected for several years and to all intents and purposes the municipal charter has been vacated, but this has not been done in accordance with the provisions of the statutes for the surrender of incorporation privileges.
> In the village of Calais at the present time there is an outbreak of scarlet fever with no legally organized board of health or health officer. The state department of health has the authority to appoint a health officer in a municipal corporation where the local authorities fail or refuse to make such an appointment, but the compensation of the health officer and any expense incurred must be paid by the local community. In this village there is no fund for the payment of such expense and we have been unable to find anyone who will accept the responsibility of acting as health officer without compensation and without the authority to create expense.
> Please inform me if there is any way whereby such communities as have heretofore been incorporated, and because of non-use such incorporation has practically been nullified, the incorporation can be declared void, thereby placing such community under the supervision and jurisdiction of the township trustees."

The question involved in your communication is practically as to whether the mere neglect or failure of a municipality to elect officials would in and of itself dissolve the corporation, or whether the failure of the officials of a municipal corporation to perform the duties devolving upon them would give rise to such conditions that the charter of the corporation might be declared forfeited.

We will first consider whether the neglect or failure on the part of a municipality to elect officials would in and of itself dissolve the corporation.

Dillon in his Work on Municipal Corporations, in section 331, uses the following language, relative to this matter:

> "Here (that is in the United States) it is the people of the locality who are erected into a corporation, not for private, but for public or quasi public purposes. The corporation is mainly and primarily if not wholly an instrument of government.. The officers do not constitute the corporation, or an integral part of it. The existence of the corporation does not depend upon the existence of officers. * * * but the mere neglect or mere failure to elect officers will not dissolve the corporation, certainly not while the right or capacity to elect remains. In this respect municipal corporations resemble ordinary private corporations, which exist per se, and consist of the stockholders who compose the company. The officers are their agents or servants, but do not constitute an integral part of their corporation, the failure to elect whom may suspend the functions, but will not dissolve the corporation."

In Buford et al. v. State of Texas, 72 Tex. 182, the court say in the syllabus:

"The failure to elect officers by a municipal corporation does not dissolve the corporation."

In State ex rel. v. Dunson et al., 71 Tex. 65, it is stated in the syllabus:

"A municipal corporation is not dissolved by the failure to elect officers."

On p. 70 in the opinion the court say:

"The inhabitants of a given territory have no inherent power to create therein a municipal corporation. This can be done only by a special act of the legislature, or by compliance with the general law providing the manner in which the inhabitants may give life to such a corporation. The inhabitants of a municipal corporation are as powerless to dissolve it, unless this be done in the mode prescribed by law, as they are to create such a corporation in a mode not prescribed by law. The petition shows that the town of Nacogdoches was duly incorporated under the act of January 27, 1858, and that corporation must be deemed to exist until in some manner known to the law it is dissolved. The inhabitants may have failed to elect proper officers since the year 1882, but under the great weight of authority this does not operate a dissolution."

From all the above it seems clearly evident that the mere fact that a municipal corporation ceases to elect officers and fails to make use of the charter rights granted to it under the law, does not from that fact alone dissolve the corporation.

The next question that might be asked is as to whether such acts would work a forfeiture of the rights of a corporation to exist.

Dillon in his Work on Municipal Corporations, in section 333 thereof, says:

"The doctrine of a forfeiture of the right to be a corporation has also, it is believed by the author, no just or proper application to our municipal corporations. * * * In short, unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature, the nature and constitution of our municipal corporations, as well as the purposes they are created to subserve, are such that they can, in the author's judgment, only be dissolved by the legislature, or pursuant to legislative enactment. They may become inert or dormant, or their functions may be suspended for want of officers or of inhabitants; but dissolved, when created by an act of the legislature, and once in existence, they cannot be, by reason of any default or abuse of the powers conferred, either on the part of the officers or inhabitants of the incorporated place. As they can exist only by legislative sanction, so they cannot be dissolved or cease to exist except by legislative consent or pursuant to legislative provision."

In Butler et al. v. Walker et al., 98 Ala. 358, the court say:

"A municipal charter is not forfeited by non-user for any period of time, and such charter can be forfeited only by legislative action by repeal, or judicial action adjudging a forfeiture."

In Swamp Land Dist. v. Silver, 98 Calif. 51, the court say in the syllabus:

"A municipal corporation cannot be deprived of its existence by non-user of its powers or a failure on the part of its officers to act as a corporation. It can be deprived of its charter only by act of the legislature or a judicial sentence based upon legislative provision and sufficient facts."

In the opinion on p. 54 the court reasons as follows:

"It is claimed by the appellant that the district 'lost its corporate existence by reason of the non-user of its functions and by reason of the total failure on the part of its officers and land owners to act as a corporation;' but there is no such thing in this country as forfeiture of a charter of a municipal corporation through the acts or misconduct of its agents or officers. Any neglect to use the powers in which the public or individuals have an interest may be corrected by the courts."

From all the above it is clear that a municipal corporation does not forfeit its right to exist from the mere fact that it no longer elects officers for the same, or that the officers do not perform their duties.

This being the case, we will go one step further and inquire how a municipal corporation may be dissolved. In answering this question your inquiry will be answered both positively and negatively.

In Hambleton v. Town of Dexter, 89 Mo. 188, the court say:

"Towns incorporated under 2 Wagner Statutes, pages 1319 and 1320, can be disincorporated only in the manner authorized by said statutes."

In the opinion on p. 192 the court say:

"These towns when they are once incorporated can only become disincorporated by resorting to the proceeding pointed out by the statute."

In State ex rel. v. Dunson et al., supra, the court held in the opinion as above quoted:

"The inhabitants of a municipal corporation are as powerless to dissolve it, unless this be done in the mode prescribed by law, as they are to create such a corporation in a mode not prescribed by law."

The legislature of our state has provided a specific method by which villages may be dissolved. This method is set out in sections 3513 and 3514 G. C., and in view of the above authorities, the legislature having provided a distinct method by which villages may be dissolved, this is the only method that could be followed in the dissolution of villages. This method in brief consists of filing a petition, signed by at least forty per cent of the electors, with the village council, which shall call an election, and upon an affirmative vote of the majority of such electors at a special election which shall be provided for by council, the corporate powers of such village shall cease.

This really fully complies with your request in that you do not inquire what course you could follow if the corporation should be held still to be in existence by me. However, I desire to make a suggestion or two. You state that you could appoint some person as health officer of said village, if it were not for the fact that there is no money in the treasury and no means provided for his salary and the necessary expense incurred by him after appointment, in the performance of his duties. That you could appoint such health officer is clear from the provisions of section 4405 G. C.

Section 4451 G. C. provides as follows, relative to the expenses incurred:

> "When expenses are incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter, upon application and certificate from such board, the council shall pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred and certified. The council may levy and set apart the necessary sum to pay such expenses and to carry into effect the provisions of this chapter * * *."

The courts are unanimous upon the proposition that mandamus would lie to compel the council to provide the necessary funds and pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred. This of course brings us to the question as to whether there is a council in the village of Calais.

Section 4215 G. C. provides that the members of the council of a village shall be elected "for terms of two years and shall serve until their successors are elected and qualified." Unless Calais has been without an election for a great length of time, it is possible that a sufficient number of the old members of council are still remaining to enable the council to transact business. If so, they could be compelled to make provision for the necessary expense incurred in the matter about which you inquire.

In the event there are not a sufficient number of persons holding over under and by virtue of a former election, to enable the council to transact business, of course we would be up against another proposition.

The courts have pretty generally held in this country, as well as in England, that the proper officials of a municipality may be mandamused to hold an election for the purpose of electing municipal officers. This might afford a remedy or solution of the question submitted by you.

I am aware, however, that these latter suggestions are of no assistance to you, for the reason that there is no council existing in Calais, which can be mandamused to make the necessary levy to take care of the expense incident to the matter in hand. So we will turn from the village of Calais and make a few suggestions along other lines.

I will first call your attention to section 1237 G. C., which may help out until you can make arrangements for the proper local officials to act.

The question then arises as to who are the proper local officials to act under the circumstances in the matter submitted by you. I desire to make the following observations relative thereto: The questions with which the board of health has to do are of vital concern to the people of the state as a whole, and not merely to the people of the local subdivisions thereof. While the law making power of the state has seen fit to delegate much power and authority relative to questions of health, yet much power and authority is retained in the possession of the state agencies which have to do with the matter of health. This clearly shows that the legislature considered the matters pertaining to the health of the different communities to be of great interest and concern to the state as a whole.

Another general observation I desire to make is that all villages are, for many purposes, at least integral parts of the township in which they are located. The electors thereof vote for all township officials. The property within the village is taxed for township purposes. Whatever vitally affects the village, to a certain extent affects the township in which the village is located, and if the village for any reason decides to disorganize as a corporation, the inhabitants thereof and the property therein immediately, and from the fact of this disorganization alone, become a part of the township in which said village is located.

With these general observations before us, we will consider the provisions of two sections of the General Code.

Section 3391 G. C. provides that in each township the trustees thereof shall constitute a board of health which shall be for the township outside the limits of any municipality.

Section 4404 G. C. provides:

> "The council of each municipality shall establish a board of health, composed of five members to be appointed by the mayor and confirmed by council who shall serve without compensation and a majority of whom shall be a quorum. * * * But in villages the council, if it deems advisable, may appoint a health officer, to be approved by the state board of health who shall act instead of a board of health, and fix his salary and term of office. * * *"

It is evident from these sections that the legislature saw fit to confer upon municipalities the jurisdiction in reference to health matters within their limits, and upon the townships jurisdiction of health matters outside the limits of municipalities. But it seems to me that when the legislature saw fit to delegate these important powers to the villages and townships of the state, it must have had in mind that said subdivisions would be acting, living, vital things, and not dormant, sleeping, inactive things. It further appears to me that the legislature must have had in mind that in all cases there would be somebody with power and jurisdiction to look after health matters which so vitally concern the people of the state as a whole.

What is the condition of the village of Cailais? It has held no election for years. In all probability it has no council. It has no one with power to levy a tax. It has no fund, therefore, from which to pay the salary and expenses of a health officer. To all intents and purposes, so far as things vital to itself are concerned, it no longer exists.

In view of all the above, it is my opinion that under such circumstances the township board of health would have authority in law to take charge of matters relating to health, within the limits of said dormant corporation. As said before, the village is a part of the township and the taxes levied by the township trustees, to take care of matters of health, are levied upon the property of the municipality, as well as upon the property of the township outside of the municipality.

Hence answering your question specifically, while the corporation of Calais is not dissolved from the mere fact that it no longer elects officials, yet it is dormant and inactive and therefore the board of health of the township in which the village is located would have authority to take charge of matters pertaining to the health of the community within said village, and pay the necessary expenses thereof out of the proper fund of the township. To be sure, as soon as the village of Cailais elects officers and makes it possible to carry on the functions of the village, the jurisdiction of the township board of health would cease, in so far as it pertains to matters within the corporate limits of said village.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

DOG LAW—PERSONS PURCHASING OR TRADING REGISTERED DOGS—MUST HAVE SAME REGISTERED IN THEIR OWN NAMES—PERSON MOVING TO ANOTHER COUNTY MUST HAVE DOG REGISTERED IN LATTER COUNTY.

(1) A person registers his dog on or before January 1, 1918, and thereafter sells same;

HELD: That the party purchasing such dog is required to again register the same in his own name and pay the prescribed fee therefor.

(2) A person who registers a dog on or before January 1, 1918, and thereafter during the year moves to another county, taking said dog with him, is required to register said dog again in the second county for the year 1918.

(3) Where two persons, who have registered their respective dogs for 1918, make a trade of such dogs during the year they are required to again register the same and pay the prescribed fee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 18, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a letter from you under date of December 20, 1917, asking an opinion of me as follows:

"We would respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions touching the new dog law to be found in 107 O. L. 534:

(1) A person engaged in the buying and selling of dogs, not having a dog kennel, registers his dogs on or before January 1, 1918. He then sells the reigstered dogs. Will the party, or parties, purchasing such dogs be required to again register the same under the new owner's name and pay the same fee?

(2) A party who registers his dogs on or before January 1, 1918, and afterwards during the year moves to another county, will he be required to register the dogs again in the other county during the year 1918?

(3) To parties who have registered their dogs for 1918 make a trade during the year. Will they be required to again register the same and pay the regular fee?"

The questions presented by you call for a consideration of the provisions of sections 5652 and 5652-2 General Code, as amended and enacted in the act referred to in your communication. Said sections read as follows:

"Sec. 5652. Every person who owns, keeps or harbors a dog more than three months of age, annually, before the first day of January of each year, shall file together with a registration fee of one dollar for each male or spayed female dog, and a registration fee of two dollars for each female dog unspayed, in the office of the county auditor of the county in which such dog is kept or harbored, an application for registration for the following year beginning the first day of January of such year, stating the age, sex, color, character of hair, whether short or long, and breed, if known, of such dog, also the name and address of the owner of such dog."

"Sec. 5652-2. Every person immediately upon becoming the owner, keeper or harborer of any dog more than three months of age or becoming the owner of a dog kennel, during any year, shall file like applications, with fees, as required by sections 5652 and 5652-1 for registration for the year beginning January first prior to the date of becoming the owner, keeper or harborer of such dog or owner of such dog kennel."

Without discussion of the provisions of section 5652-2 General Code, it is evident that said provisions require your first question to be answered in the affirmative if the dog or dogs involved in the transaction are more than three months of age.

From the provisions of section 5652 General Code it appears that the registration of dogs and the payment of fees therefor must be done in the office of the county auditor of the county in which such dogs are kept or harbored, and these provisions require your second question to be answered in the affirmative if the dog or dogs involved in the transaction are of the required age, and the registration of such dog or dogs in one county will not exempt them from liability to registration in another county where they may be taken and kept.

With respect to your third question it is apparent that if the dogs traded remain in the county where registered the provisions of section 5652-2 General Code would alone require an affirmative answer to said question; while if the trade involved the removal of the dogs from the county where respectively registered, the provisions of both the above quoted sections of the General Code would likewise compel an affirmative answer to this question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE OF CANAL LANDS TO E. R. DEFENBAUGH—C. J. CHANDLER—J. M. COVERDALE—THE BUCKEYE CEREAL CO.—JOHN C. PETTIT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 18, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 12, 1918, in which you enclose, in triplicate, for my approval, leases of canal lands as follows:

	Valuation.
To E. R. Defenbaugh, for strip of marsh land on north shore of Buckeye Lake	$1,100 00
To Clarence J. Chandler, portion of the berme embankment, Miami and Erie in the city of Defiance	1,000 00
To J. M. Coverdale, 2.3 acres, part of canal basin at Adams Mills	300 00
To The Buckeye Cereal Company, railway crossing over Ohio Canal in Massillon, Ohio	1,666 00
To John C. Pettit, portion of abandoned Hocking Canal in Logan, Ohio	100 00

I have carefully examined these leases, find them correct in form and legal, and have therefore endorsed my approval upon the same and forwarded them to for governor of Ohio for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—DUTY OF COUNTY AUDITOR AND COMMISSIONERS UNDER 5548 G. C.—REAPPRAISEMENT OF SEVEN TAXING DISTRICTS IN FRANKLIN COUNTY IN 1917 IMPROPER.

1. Under section 5548 G. C. (107 O. L. 38), it is the duty of the county auditor to make a finding covering each of the taxing districts of his county, and it is likewise the duty of the county commissioners under said section to make an order confirming, modifying or setting aside such finding of the county auditor as to each of the taxing districts aforesaid. An order confirming merely a part of the county auditor's finding and being silent as to the remainder of such finding does not authorize the auditor to proceed under said section.

2. The duty of the county auditor under the tax law is to ascertain from the best sources of information within his reach and determine as near as practicable the true value in money of each separate tract and lot of real property in each and every taxing district in his county, and then, acting under section 5548, supra, make a finding which he shall submit to the county commissioners. It is neither within the letter nor the spirit of the law for a county auditor to submit a finding which he knows and at the time admits has no basis in fact.

3. Under all the facts that have come to hand in relation to the reappraisement of the real property in seven certain taxing districts of Franklin county, Ohio, in 1917, HELD: Such reappraisement of said real estate in said seven taxing districts of said county possesses such infirmities as to warrant the tax commission of Ohio in advising such county auditor to restore the valuations of the real property in said seven districts to the valuations and assessments as they stood immediately prior to the reappraisement by the auditor in 1917.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 19, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication enclosing a letter from Hon. H. Sage Valentine, county auditor of Franklin county, asking advice as to whether or not his action and the action of the other officers in the assessment of real estate in certain wards of the city of Columbus and in certain townships of Franklin county was legal, and whether or not the act of the board of revision, in ordering the postponement of the reappraisement of real estate in the several taxing districts until such time as all the real estate in Franklin county might be appraised, was proper.

The communication sets out in detail and by copies from the records of the respective officers the action of the auditor in making his findings under section 5548 G. C., the action of the county commissioners in making their order as provided in that section, the action of the board of revision on the report of the reappraisement as made by the county auditor, the filing by A. J. Kiner, as treasurer of the county, of a complaint against said reappraisement, on the ground of illegality, and the action of the board of revision on said complaint, together with the certificate sent by the board of revision to the county auditor.

As you have all of this record before you and as it is somewhat voluminous, I have not deemed it necessary to set same out herein, but will address myself to a general consideration of the serious entanglement in the taxation work arising under all the circumstances.

The situation presented is that the county auditor has been ordered by the board of revision, as shown by the certificate of said board, under date of January 5, 1918:

> "to strike from the tax list and duplicate of said county the valuations or assessments of lots and lands, exclusive of new buildings, within the first, third, eleventh and sixteenth wards of the city of Columbus and the townships of Marion, Prairie and Clinton within said county, made for the current year and to restore to said tax list and duplicate, for the purpose of taxation in the current year, the valuations of said lots and lands in said wards and townships appearing on the tax list and duplicate for the year next preceding the current year."

This certificate was the result of the finding made by the board of revision upon the blanket complaint filed by Kiner as treasurer, alleging that the reappraisement was illegal.

In considering the questions involved, it will be necessary for us to refer to certain sections of the statute relating to taxation.

Section 5548 G. C. (107 O. L. 38) among other things makes the county auditor the assessor for all the real estate in his county, for purposes of taxation. It became his duty, on or before the second Monday in April, 1917, and annually thereafter, between certain dates, to ascertain whether the real property in the different taxing districts was—> "assessed for taxation at its true value in money as the same then appears on the tax duplicate."

This section further provides that if he finds that it is assessed at its true value in money he should, subject to further provisions, enter such valuation upon the tax list and duplicate for the current year. This section also states:

> "In such event, and unless he finds that such property is not assessed at its true value in money, in each such subdivision, such assessments shall constitute the valuation for taxation for the current year, subject to the provisions hereinafter made. Said county auditor shall submit his findings concerning the valuation of such real estate to the board of county commissioners of his county, and said board shall, at a hearing fixed within not less than ten nor more than twenty days thereafter, confirm, modify, or set aside the same by order entered on the journal of said board. * * If by such order it is determined that the real estate in any such subdivision is not on the duplicate at its true value in money, then such county auditor shall proceed to assess such real estate in such subdivision or subdivisions."

Acting under authority of this section, the county auditor made certain findings and determined that the real property in all of the taxing districts, except seven, was on the duplicate at its true value in money. This finding was duly filed with the county commissioners, and, as shown by the record, under date of April 20, 1917, the commissioners made an order, but it is my opinion that they did not make the order that they were authorized by law to make. Instead of making an order on the findings as filed by the county auditor, they confined themselves in their order to that part of the finding of the auditor that related to the seven districts in which he found that the real property was not on the tax duplicate at its true value in money, and made no finding as to the real property in those districts which he had found to be on the duplicate at its true value in money. This was not the order that should have been made under section 5548, supra, and it is my view of the law that a lawful and proper order of the board of commissioners is jurisdictional, and without same the county auditor would not be authorized to proceed with any reappraisement.

Assuming that he was duly authorized, the auditor proceeded with the reappraisement of the seven taxing districts referred to, and reported such reappraisement to the board of revision under date of November 9, 1917. On November 10, 1917, such board ordered:

"That the reappraisement as submitted to the board of revision be retransmitted to the county auditor according to section 5605-6 of the General Code."

I take it that the sections referred to are sections 5605 and 5606 G. C. The auditor, assuming that all steps had been taken according to law, added the valuations in the reappraised districts for 1917 to the county real estate duplicate and such values as reappraised were entered upon the tax lists for Franklin county, and the taxes thereon figured at the current rate, and the extensions were made on the books of the treasurer of the county, and all of this was completed by the auditor and the books turned over to the treasurer prior to December 21, 1917.

The record shows that the blanket complaint made by Kiner as treasurer, complaining against the valuation and assessments made of the real estate in the seven taxing districts referred to, because same were made in a manner contrary to the statute providing therefor, was filed with the board of revision on December 21, 1917. This complaint of Kiner, treasurer, was filed under authority of section 5609 G. C. (107 O. L. 43). Under this section one of the things provided is that any taxpayer may file such complaint as to the valuation or assessment of his own or another's property, and gives the same right to the county treasurer. These complaints may be made within any year and filed on or before the time limited for the payment of taxes for the first half year.

It will be noted that under section 5609 G. C. certain officials of the various subdivisions, including the county treasurer, are authorized to file complaints. This must give to the officer the right to file such complaint in a representative capacity; otherwise the provision would have little or no meaning, for he would have a right as an individual to file a complaint. In a representative capacity, since the property of his district would be exempt from taxation, he would not have to file a complaint on account of the property of that subdivision.

So it is my conclusion that the authority given him is to file such complaint as he deems proper as a representative of the taxpayers of the particular subdivision that he represents. This complaint among other things, as provided in this section, can be for an "illegal valuation," and, as I understand the complaint filed by Kiner as treasurer, it charges that the valuation complained of, to wit, these seven districts, was made contrary to law and therefore was illegally valued.

In this complaint of the treasurer he avers that the county auditor in his finding of the valuation of property within Franklin county in April 1917, to the commissioners of said county—

> "alleged or made it appear that only the real estate in said wards and townships within said county was not appraised at its true value in money, whereas in fact the real estate of all the subdivisions within said city of Columbus and county of Franklin is valued at an amount substantially less than its true value in money, all of which was known to the auditor of Franklin county at the time he made his finding to said county commissioners, and which fact he admits to be true."

From the statements in this complaint as well as from various sources, it is apparent that the auditor at the time he filed his findings with the county commissioners, from all the examination he had made was satisfied that the real property in all of the taxing districts of Franklin county was not assessed at its true value in money, but that for convenience he concluded to take up the work in the manner as found, to wit, in the seven taxing districts where the reappraisement was made. Both our constitution and the legislative enactments thereunder provide for assessments of property for taxing purposes by a uniform rule and at a true value in money. A procedure such as is evidenced in this case certainly would offend against such rule.

So it seems to me, keeping in mind the spirit of our taxation system, that the county auditor in making the representations he did in the findings presented to the commissioners, wandered outside the pale of his authority. The incorrectness of the finding of the auditor, as I understand it, was known to him at the time he presented it to the commissioners, and it has been admitted all the time that all of the taxing districts of Franklin county, as far as the real estate therein being appraised at less than its true value in money was concerned, were in identically the same shape as the seven districts which were reappraised.

Believing as I do that a proper and legal order on behalf of the commissioners was jurisdictional, and that the finding of the county auditor was one of convenience, rather than of correctness, and further being of the opinion that if this entire matter was before a tribunal duly authorized to decide it, an order would issue restoring the valuations assessed on the real property of these seven subdivisions to the valuation as appeared on the tax list prior to this reappraisement by the county auditor, I will suggest that the tax commission advise the county auditor that under all the peculiar circumstances of this case was that the assessed value of the real property in the seven taxing districts under discussion be corrected so as to appear on the taxing lists at the same valuation as it did prior to the reappraisement by the auditor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DISTRICTS—ITEMS OF INDEBTEDNESS THAT MAY BE FUNDED UNDER AN ACT OF THE LEGISLATURE (107 O. L. 575)—WHERE THERE IS AN EXISTING, OUTSTANDING, BOUNDED INDEBTEDNESS, THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF SUCH DISTRICT MUST PROVIDE A SINKING FUND—HOW SAID FUND MANAGED AND CONTROLLED—BONDS MUST BE OFFERED TO SINKING FUND COMMISSION—RESOLUTION OF BOARD OF EDUCATION FOR BOND ISSUE—WHAT SAME MUST CONTAIN.

The only items of indebtedness which can be funded by a school district under the act of the legislature of March 21, 1917, entitled, "An act to authorize municipal corporations and school districts to adjust their fiscal operations to the limitation on tax levies by funding existing deficiencies," 107 O. L. 575, are those due and payable on or before July 1, 1917, or thereafter coming due during the current fiscal school year ending August 31, 1917.

Where a school district has an existing outstanding bonded indebtedness the board of education of such school district is required by the provisions of section 7614 General Code to provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of the same, said fund to be managed and controlled by a board of commissioners to be appointed in the manner provided in said section; and bonds thereafter issued by the board of education of such school district for the purpose of funding deficiencies in the funds of the school district under the provisions of the above act must be offered to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district and by such board rejected before they can be legally purchased by the Industrial Commission of Ohio under the provisions of section 1465-58 G. C.

Conformable to the requirements of section 11 of article XII of the state constitution, the resolution of the board of education providing for the issue of bonds of a school district should make provision for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Washington township rural school district, Logan county, Ohio, in the sum of $15,000.00, for the purpose of funding certain deficiencies of said school district.

I am herewith returning, without my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Washington township rural school district, Logan county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

The issue of said bonds is provided for for the purpose of funding a certain alleged deficiency of said school district under the authority of the "Terrell Act" so-called, passed March 21, 1917, and entitled "An act to authorize municipal corporations and school districts to adjust their fiscal operations to the limitation on tax levies by funding existing deficiencies." (107 O. L. 575.)

So far as applicable to the consideration of the proceedings relating to this bond issue this act, in section 1 thereof, provides that the board of education, by resolution passed not later than the second Monday in July, 1917, may direct the clerk of the board of education and the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district, if there be such board, to make up a financial statement of such school district as of the first day of July, 1917. The officers so directed shall immediately examine the records, books and accounts of their respective offices and make a financial statement and file the same with the clerk of the board of education not later than the second Monday in August, 1917. If they find that a deficiency exists in any funds under their respective supervision they shall certify the amount thereof, together with the various funds affected, and the deficiency in cash, under oath, on such statement.

Section 2 of said act provides that thereupon the board of education, by resolution passed by an affirmative vote of a majority of all the members elected or appointed thereto not later than the first Monday in October, 1917, may declare it necessary to issue and sells bonds of the school district for the purpose of funding the existing deficiency of such school district in the amount certified.

Section 6 of the act defines a "deficiency" for the purposs of said act, and, so far as applicable to school districts, provides that a "deficiency" shall be the aggregate sum

(1) of all obligations of the school district outstanding on July 1, 1917, and due on or before said date, or to become due thereafter during the then current fiscal year, whether in contracting such obligations the provisions of section 5660 of the General Code were complied with or not, for the payment of which sufficient funds are not in the treasury on July 1, 1917, or estimated to come into the treasury thereafter during the then current fiscal year from taxes or other sources of revenue, to the extent of the excess of such obligations over and above such funds on hand and estimated future receipts, applicable to the payment thereof and not needed to pay the ordinary fixed charges against the appropriate funds and the normal current expenses therefrom for the remainder of the fiscal year.

(2) The difference, if any, between the amount which should be in the sinking fund on July 1, 1917, to provide for the payment of interest falling due thereafter during the current fiscal year and as an accumulation to provide for the redemption of all outstanding bonds as they mature according to the plan of maturity thereof and the amount actually held in such sinking fund or otherwise available for such purpose on said date.

The act provides for the issue of bonds by the board of education for the purpose of funding deficiencies on a vote of the electors of the school district, and other provisions of said act prescribe the procedure for submitting the question of a bond issue for such purpose to the electors at the regular election for municipal and school officers in the year 1917.

The transcript shows that at a special meeting of the board of education of said school district on September 19, 1917, called in apparent compliance with the provisions of the General Code providing for such meetings, the clerk of the board of education submitted a report in writing of the financial condition of the school district on July 1, 1917, as follows:

"At the request of the president of the board of education I have made careful examination of the records, books and accounts of your board of this Washington township with the view of making and spreading upon the records the financial statement of the conditions of the finances of said school district as of July 1, 1917; I beg leave to report that contracts have been made in pursuance of the instructions given by the voters in said township in ordering an issue and sale of bonds for the construction of the school building at Lewistown in said township necessary to carry out the instructions of said voters and made necessary for the increase in the cost of all material and all above the amount of said bond issue, as follows:

Heating and ventilating	$4,890 00
Plumbing and sewerage	2,725 00
Septic plant for sewerage	1,500 00
Thermostats	700 00
Auditorium and equipment	1,200 00
Walks and grades	1,000 00
Money borrowed from bank in Lewistown	1,000 00
Money to pay interest on bonds March 1, 1918	1,000 00
Expense of laboratory equipment, gymnasium equipment, for domestic science and manual training	985 00
Total	$15,000 00

and I spread the same on the record in your office as of August 1st, 1917.

Respectfuly submitted,

OLAF HOUSE,

Clerk of the Board of Education of Washington Township, Logan County, Ohio."

Thereupon at said meeting the board of education adopted a resolution reciting the facts stated in the report of the clerk, and finding that by the financial report made by the clerk at the request of the board there was shown to be an indebtedness of the school district in the sum of $15,000.00. Said resolution further ratified the action of the president in calling for said report, and found and determined the necessity of issuing and selling bonds of said school district "for the purpose of funding the deficiency of said school district that now exists by reason of said contracts and expenditures in the sum of $15,000.00." This resolution further provided for the submission of the question of the issue of said bonds to the electors of the school district at the general election to be held November 6, 1917. Notice of said election was published in the manner provided for in said act, said notice advising the electors that at said election there would be submitted to said electors the question of granting authority to the board of education "of said township to issue and sell school bonds of said township in the sum of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000.00), the proceeds from such issue and sale to be used by the board of education of said township in furnishing and fully equipping by heating, ventilating, plumbing, sewerage, including septic plant for sewerage, thermostats, auditorium, laboratory, domestic science, manual training, walks and grades for the new school building now being erected by said board of education at Lewistown in said township," under and by virtue of the act of the legislature above noted. The returns of the vote at said election were duly canvassed by the board of education, the same showing a majority of sixty-seven votes in favor of the issue of said bonds. Thereafter, the board of education adopted a resolution providing for the issue of the bonds in question.

It is apparent from the report filed by the clerk that some time prior to July 1, 1917, the board of education of said school district had issued and sold bonds for the construction of this school building, and in this connection I may state that the records in the office of the superintendent of public instruction show that in the school year 1916-17 the board of education issued and sold bonds in the sum of $41,000.00, for the purpose, I presume of constructing said school building at Lewistown.

It further appears from said report that the items of indebtedness represented by the contracts set out in said report are not items of indebtedness covered by the proceeds of the bonds issued and sold by the board of education for the purpose of constructing said building, but are outside and in excess thereof.

By reason of the fact that there are other vital defects in the proceedings relating to this bond issue which compel my rejection of the same, I do not find it necessary to discuss some of the questions arising on a consideration of this transcript with respect to the procedure of the board of education under the act of the legislature above noted. For instance, I do not feel that I am called upon at this time to consider the question whether or not the provisions of the Terrell act, in so far as the prescribed time within which the board of education and all other officers of the school district therein named shall act in arriving at the fact and amount of the deficiency of the school district and in submitting to the electors the question of a bond issue to fund the same, are mandatory or directory, only.

Looking to other matters presented on consideration of this transcript it may well be doubted whether or not the request of the president of the board of education made to the clerk to prepare the financial statement made by him was a legal equivalent to the direction of the board of education to the clerk in that behalf prescribed by section 1 of the act above noted, and this though it appears that the act of the president in making such request was afterwards ratified by the board.

With respect to the alleged items of indebtedness making up the deficiency sought to be funded by the proposed bond issue, it is apparent that at least one item, to wit, that of money to pay interest on bonds March 1, 1918, has no proper place in said statement. Under said act it is only obligations of the school district outstanding on July 1, 1917, and due on or before said date or to become due thereafter during the current fiscal year of the school district, which can be included within items of indebtedness going to make up the "deficiency" which may be funded under the provisions of said act.

Sufficient facts do not appear in the transcript to enable me to determine whether or not the money borrowed from bank in the sum of $1000.00 has any proper place in the items making up the deficiency sought to be funded by this bond issue.

With respect to the other items going to make up the reported deficiency it may be doubted on a consideration of the statutory provision that only claims against the school district due and payable on or before July 1, 1917, or thereafter coming due during the current fiscal year of the school district, can be considered in the aggregate making up the deficiency to be funded under this act, whether they have any proper place in the report filed by the clerk. These contracts are for furnishing and equipping the school building and property, and as a general rule it may be stated that no obligation would arise against the school district on such contracts until the same have been performed, and only to the extent of performance on or before August 31, 1917, could said contracts under ordinary circumstances be said to represent an obligation of the school district within the purview of this act. At any rate, I do not feel that I can sustain any of the items going to make up reported deficiency as matters proper to be incorporated in said report without further information, which, of course, might be supplied. Inasmuch, however, as previously indicated herein, as this issue of bonds on the present legislation of the board of education must be rejected for other reasons no useful purpose will be served by requesting further information on the matters just considered.

The transcript states that there is no board of commissioners of the sinking fund of this school district. It appears, however, that the school district has a present outstanding bonded indebtedness, and for this reason under the terms of section 7614 General Code, it is the mandatory duty of the board of education to provide a sinking fund for the extinguishment of said bonded indebtedness to be managed and controlled by a board of commissioners of such sinking fund, and under the provisions of section 7619 General Code, it is the duty of the board of education to offer the bonds provided for in the present issue to such board of commissioners of the sinking fund of said school district before otherwise disposing of the same; while under the provisions of section 1465-58 General Code, which is specially made applicable to the sale of bonds issued under authority of the Terrell act, before the Industrial Commission of Ohio is authorized to purchase bonds issued by a school district such bonds must be first offered to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district and by such board rejected. Of course, if a school district has no existing and outstanding bonded indebtedness, the appointment of such board of commissioners of the sinking fund is not necessary and bonds issued by the school district may be offered direct in the first instance to the Industrial Commission of Ohio, but that is not the case here.

Again, the proceedings relating to this bond issue are vitally defective for the reason that the resolution providing for the issue of said bonds does not provide for an annual levy by the board of education for the purpose of paying interest on said bonds and for the purpose of providing a sinking fund for the redemption of the bonds at maturity, as required by section 11 of article XII of the state constitution, as adopted September 3, 1912.

On the considerations above noted I am of the opinion that said bond issue is invalid and that you should not purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—SUPERINTENDENT OF A DETENTION HOME AND PROBATION OFFICER.

The superintendent of a detention home may also be appointed probation officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1918.

HON. E. O. DILLEY, Probate Judge, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date as follows:

> "Would you be kind enough to give me your thought as to whether or not a superintendent of a detention home, having been appointed by the probate court, could likewise be appointed a probation officer, filling both positions at one and the same time? Will you kindly advise me at your earliest convenience?"

Section 1662, as amended in 107 O. L., page 19, reads:

> "The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be a woman, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer and there may be one or more assistants. Such chief probation officer and assistants shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed three thousand dollars per annum and that of the assistants shall not exceed fifteen hundred dollars per annum. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

Section 1663 G. C. reads:

"When a complaint is made or filed against a minor, the probation officer shall inquire into and make examination and investigation into the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged delinquency, neglect or dependency, the parentage and surroundings of such minor, his exact age, habits, school record, and every fact that will tend to throw light upon his life and character. He shall be present in court to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard, furnish to the judge such information and assistance as he may require, and take charge of any child before and after the trial as the judge may direct. He shall serve the warrants and other process of the court within or without the county, and in that respect is hereby clothed with the powers and authority of sheriffs. He may make arrests without warrant upon reasonable information or upon view of the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter, detain the person so arrested pending the issuance of a warrant, and perform such other duties, incident to their offices, as the judge directs. All sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables, marshals and police officers shall render assistance to probation officers in the performance of their duties, when requested so to do."

Section 1670 G. C. reads:

"Upon the advise and recommendation of the judge exercising the jurisdiction provided herein, the county commissioners shall provide by purchase or lease, a place to be known as a 'detention home' within a convenient distance of the court house, not used for the confinement of adult persons charged with criminal offenses, where delinquent, dependent or neglected minors under the age of eighteen years may be detained until final disposition, which place shall be maintained by the county as in other like cases. In counties having a population in excess of forty thousand, the judge may appoint a superintendent and matron who shall have charge of said home and of the delinquent, dependent and neglected minors detained therein. Such superintendent and matron shall be suitable and discreet persons, qualified as teachers of children. Such home shall be furnished in a comfortable manner as nearly as may be as a family home. So far as possible delinquent children shall be kept separate from dependent children in such home. The compensation of the superintendent and matron shall be fixed by the county commissoners. Such compensation and the expense of maintaining the home shall be paid from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon the itemized voucher, sworn to by the superintendent and certified by the judge. In all such homes the sexes shall be kept separate, so far as practicable."

In the case of State of Ohio ex rel. v.Gebert, 12 O. C. C., n. s., 274, the common rule of incompatibility is stated as follows:

"Officer are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

After careful examination of the statutes above quoted I am unable to find any incompatibility between the two offices you refer to and therefore advise you that they may be held by one and the same persons, provided that in making appointment compliance is had with the civil service laws of the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

VOTING PLACES—HOW RENT PAID IN COUNTIES NOT HAVING REGISTRATION CITY—CITY MAY NOT CHARGE COUNTY RENT FOR VOTING PLACES.

1. The bill for rent of voting places in counties having no registration city or cities should be paid by the county and charged back to the city as other expenses in odd numbered years.

2. There being no provision of law providing that a city may charge the county rent for the use of its buildings for voting places, such city cannot charge said rent to the county for the use of same in the even numbered years.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1918.

HON. CHARLES L. BERMONT, Prosecuting Attorney, Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you ask an opinion of this department as follows:

"In the city of Mt. Vernon, Ohio, there are three voting precincts in which voting places must be rented.

"The city has been paying the rent for these places until this fall, when one of the examiners from the bureau of accounting instructed the city auditor not to pay the bill, that it was a bill for the county.

"The county auditor took the matter up with two of the county examiners from the state department and they instructed him not to pay the bill, that it was a city bill.

"I desire your ruling on this matter as to whether this bill should be paid by the county and charged back to the city as other election expenses in odd numbered years or whether it should be paid by the city.

"In case it should be paid by the county what is to prevent the city from charging the county rent for the use of their buildings for voting places in the even numbered years?"

Under date of July 8, 1912, the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices requested an opinion from one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, which opinion (No. 504) is found in attorney general's reports for 1912, vol. 1, at page 301. At that time the bureau submitted certain schedules relating to the payment of election expenses and asked for a review of same. Such schedules purported to be made up in conformity to an opinion of the attorney general under date of February 27, 1912, attorney-general's report, 1912, vol. 1, page 200. In the schedule submitted, as shown at page 303, it will be seen that the bureau sought to provide that the expenses of room for voting place in a municipality having no registration city was never to be paid by the county. The attorney-general did not approve that portion of the schedule and called attention to the fact that in the opinion of February 27th the question of rent in registration cities had been covered.

On the question of rent of voting place in counties having no registration city or cities, in which class I take it your county is to be placed, the attorney-general, in opinion No. 504, supra, says at page 309:

"Section 4844, General Code, provides that the township trustees shall select the place of voting in the township precinct; that the council of the corporation shall select the place in municipalities; and that the board of elections shall designate the place in registration cities. Nothing is said in this section as to who shall pay for such rooms or places. The payment of the rent of voting places is specifically provided for in registration cities and has been covered in the opinion of February 27.

"There is no specific provision of statutes directing how the rent for voting places in a township or in a municipality other than a registration city, shall be paid. In the absence of such specific provision, any necessary expense incurred for renting rooms for elections in such places would constitute a proper and necessary expense of the election to be paid as provided in sections 4821 and 5052, General Code, by the county, and to be charged back in odd numbered years as provided in section 5053, General Code.

"You refer to the report of the attorney-general of 1906, at page 109. An opposite holding is apparently made by the attorney-general in the opinion of 1909-1910 at page 602. A question will arise as to the right of a township or municipal corporation to charge the county rental for the use of its public hall or building for holding election therein. I find no authority to make such charge. Said buildings are provided for public purposes and it adds no expense to the township or municipality to permit the use of such building for elections.."

I concur with the ruling of my predecessor, Mr. Hogan, and, answering your questions specifically, hold:

1. That the bill for rent of voting places in counties having no registration city or cities should be paid by the county and charged back to the city as other expenses in odd numbered years.

2. There being no provision of law providing that a city may charge the county rent for the use of their buildings for voting places, such city cannot charge said rent to the county for the use of same in the even numbered years.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—ENTITLED TO EXPENSES INCURRED IN ASSESSING PROPERTY UNDER SECTION 5548 G. C.—NOT ENTITLED TO BE PAID FOR USE OF HIS OWN CONVEYANCE.

Where the county auditor, as assessor of real property in his county under the provisions of section 5548 General Code, finds it necessary to assess particular property in any taxing district to be assessed on a view of such property, and to that end necessarily incurs expenses by way of car fare, automobile hire, etc., such expenses so incurred are "contingent expenses" within the meaning of section 5585 General Code as amended 107 O. L. 40 and may be paid on the allowance of the board of county commissioners as provided for in said section. The expenses of the county auditor as assessor of real property thus payable do not comprehend such as are personal to the officer, such as board, etc., nor would such officer be entitled to be paid for the use of his own conveyance in assessing real property under the provisions of said section 5548 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1918.

The Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you in which you say:

> "Will you please render the commission your opinion on the following:
> Section 5548, in part, says: '* * * The county auditor in addition to his other duties, shall be the assessor for all the real estate in his county for purposes of taxation. * * * The county auditor is empowered to appoint and employ such expert assistants and clerks, or other employes, as he may deem necessary to the performance of his duties as such assessor; * * *'
> Section 5554, in part, says: 'The county auditor in all cases, from the best sources of information within his reach, shall determine, as near as practicable, the true value of each separate tract and lot of real property in each and every district, according to the rules prescribed by this chapter for valuing real property. * * *'
> If in carrying out the provisions of these sections, the county auditor should find it necessary to visit different parts of his county to view property and supervise the work of assessing, would the law permit the county commissioners to allow the county auditor his actual or necessary expense in doing this work?
> The opinion rendered by your predecessor, Mr. Turner, on section 5585 G. C. on April 6, 1916, page 623, vol. 1, A. G. R. does not fully cover the above question, and we find it necessary to have your construction of same."

I do not deem it necessary to discuss at any length the sections of the General Code noted in your communication. It will be sufficient for the purpose of this opinion to note that section 5548 General Code, among other things, authorizes and requires the county auditor to make an assessment of the real property within any tax assessment district or subdivision in this county when required to do so by an order of the board of county commissioners made on a consideration of the findings of the county auditor, or when such assessment is petitioned for by not less than twenty-five freeholders in such tax assessment district or subdivision; while section 5554 General Code prescribes a rule or method governing the auditor as the assessor of real estate in arriving at the proper tax valuation of the real property in the assessment district or subdivision so assessed.

From the context of your letter I assume that the expenses of the county auditor concerning which you inquire are those incurred by him in assessing real property under the provisions of the sections of the General Code above noted. As a principle applicable to the consideration of the question made by you it may be observed that neither the right of a public official to compensation for services rendered nor to reimbursement out of the public funds for expenses incurred in the discharge of official duties can be extended beyond the clear and reasonable import of the statutory provisions authorizing the same.

Debolt v. Trustee, 7 O. S. 237;
Jones v. Commissioners, 57 O. S. 189;
Clark v. Commissioners, 58 O. S. 107;
Richardson v. State, 66 O. S. 108.

Authority for the payment of the expenses mentioned in your communication, or any of them, is to be found, if at all, in the provisions of section 5585 General Code as amended 107 O. L. 40. This section in so far as it applies to the question at hand reads as follows:

> "The contingent expenses of the county auditor and county board of revision, including postage and express charges, their actual and necessary traveling expenses and those of their deputies, experts, clerks or employes on official business outside of the county, when required by orders issued by the tax commission of Ohio, shall be allowed and paid as other claims against the county."

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in an opinion under date of April 24, 1914 (report of attorney-general 1914, volume 1, page 514), had occasion to consider the quite identical provisions of section 35 of the Warnes law (sec. 5614 G. C.) in their application to expenses incurred by district assessors and deputy assessors provided for in said law. Mr. Hogan held that the legislature, in specifically enacting that postage, express charges and traveling expenses incurred in traveling outside of the county in the discharge of official business on order of the tax commission should be included within the purview of the term "contingent expenses," had made it plain that such charges and expenses would not without the provision have been contemplated within the meaning of the term and that, therefore, traveling expenses incurred by the district assessors and their deputies in the discharge of their duties within the county were not to be considered as being included within the meaning of the term "contingent expenses."

I do not find myself able to follow Mr. Hogan in his application of the rule of construction involved in the conclusion reached by him that traveling expenses incurred by the assessing officers in the discharge of their duties within the county were not within the purview of the term "contingent expenses" as used in the statute there under consideration and which is found also in the provisions of section 5585 General Code, above quoted. This rule of construction stated in general terms is that where the legislature has expressly included certain things within the meaning of the general terms of an act a presumption of legislature intention arises that but for such express inclusion the particular things mentioned would be excluded from the meaning of the general terms. It is clear, however, that this rule of construction has no application where the particular things included within the meaning of the general provisions of the act are mentioned by way of abundant caution, and this, to my mind, is the case with respect to the matter of postage and express charges expressly included within the meaning of the term "contingent expenses" both in the section of the General Code under consideration in Mr. Hogan's opinion and in section 5585 General Code, for it seems obvious to me that without express inclusion the matter of postage and express charges would come within a reasonable interpretation of the term "contingent expenses" as used in the connection indicated by the statutory provision.

With respect to the matter of traveling expenses it may be observed as a limitation or modification of the rule of construction above noted that where there is some special reason for mentioning one thing and none for mentioning a second, which is otherwise within the statute, the absence of any mention of the latter will not exclude it. In the consideration of the provisions of section 35 of the Warnes law, as well as those of section 5585 General Code, I think there were obvious reasons for making special inclusion of traveling expenses incurred by the assessing officer outside of his county which would not apply to the matter of traveling expenses in the discharge of his duties within the county. The matter of traveling outside of his county in the discharge of his duties as an assessor of real estate is one so exceptional in nature that the legislature may well have concluded that on no reasonable interpretation could expenses so incurred be considered as within the terms of the statute, the primary and main purpose of which was to provide for the payment of expenses incurred by the assessor of real property in the discharge of his duties within the county, without such express inclusion within the provisions of the section.

I do not think, therefore, that either under the provisions of section 35 of the Warnes law or of section 5585 General Code the matter of traveling expenses of the district assessor, in the one case, and the county auditor, in the other, is to be necessarily excluded from the meaning of the term "contingent expenses" as used in either of these sections by force of the rule of construction above discussed and applied by Attorney-General Hogan in the opinion above referred to.

Irrespective of this question, however, I am inclined to the view that Mr. Hogan was correct in his conclusion under the statutory provisions under consideration in said opinion that traveling expenses incurred by the district assessor and his deputies in the assessment of real property within the county were not "contingent expenses" within the meaning of the term as used in section 35 of the Warnes law. Section 5554 General Code as it then read required real estate to be valued on actual view, and this circumstance necessarily required the assessor to travel in some way to and from the property to be assessed. Now "contingent expenses" are such as are possible or liable to be incurred, but which are not in any sense certain to be incurred; and measuring the question by this rule it might well be that expenses incurred by the assessor of real estate in traveling to and from the real property to be assessed could not be justly considered as "contingent expenses" where it appeared reasonably certain that in the nature of the case such expenses must be incurred; and upon this view, and it further appearing that the legislature had made no special provision for the payment of traveling expenses within the county incurred by district assessors and their deputies in the discharge of their duties in assessing real property, Mr. Hogan was correct in holding that such traveling expenses could not be paid. However, section 5554 General Code has been since amended so as to read as follows:

> "The county auditor, in all cases, from the best sources of information within his reach, shall determine, as near as practicable, the true value of each separate tract and lot of real property in each and every district, according to the rules prescribed by this chapter for valuing real property. * * *"

It will be observed that the county auditor as the assessor of real estate is not now required to assess real property on a view of the same, and although in special instances it may be both desirable and necessary for the county auditor as such assessing officer to assess particular properties on a view of the same, and thus incur expenses in traveling in some way for the purpose of viewing said properties, such view, as above noted, is not now required and it can no longer be said that the matter of expenses incurred in traveling within the county for the purpose of viewing property to be assessed is one of such certainty as to be excluded from the essential meaning of the term "contingent expenses."

On consideration of the whole question I am inclined to the view that the reasonable official expenses incurred by the county auditor as the assessor of real property in the discharge of his duties in the assessment of such property may be said to be fairly authorized by the provisions of section 5585 of the General Code. This would include the matter of street car fare, automobile hire and expenses of like kind necessarily incurred in the discharge of his duties. The expenses authorized by the statute would not include such as are personal to the officer, such as board, nor can this section be said to authorize the payment to the county auditor as such assessor of real estate charges made by him for the use of his own conveyance in traveling within the county in the discharge of his duties as such real estate assessor.

Within the limitations above mentioned the question made by you is one to be determined by the county commissioners in passing upon bills rendered for such expenses, and it is to be presumed that they will allow such expenses only as are necessary and reasonable in amount.

The answer made by me in this opinion to the question submitted by you is as specific as the nature of the question permits, and is not, as I view it, in conflict with the opinion of Hon. Edward C. Turner referred to in your communication, if said opinion be confined to the decision made therein on the questions there under consideration.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

VILLAGE COUNCIL—MAY MODIFY CONTRACT FOR LIGHTING STREETS—SALE OF LIGHT PLANT, ETC., BY ONE COMPANY TO ANOTHER—IN SUCH CASE CONTRACT OF SALE DETERMINES LIABILITY OF PURCHASER TO PERFORM CONTRACTS OF SELLER—CONTRACTS UNDER SEC. 3809 NOT REQUIRED TO BE LET UPON COMPETITIVE BID AFTER ADVERTISEMENT.

A village council has authority to modify a contract for lighting the streets of such village, or it may substitute a new contract for the original contract.

Where a corporation purchases the business and plant of another corporation, its liability to perform the contracts and obligations of the selling company, will depend upon the terms of the contract of sale.

Contracts entered into under authority of section 3809 General Code are not required to be let upon competitive bids after advertisement as provided in section 4221 General Code as to villages, and section 432 General Code, as to cities.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 21, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter in which you submit the following inquiries:

> "A contract has existed in the village of Hicksville, Ohio, by which The Hicksville Electric Light Company agreed to furnish current to the village for a period of ten years for street lighting at certain prices. While this contract had approximately four years before expiration the above mentioned company sold its plant and business to The Northwestern Ohio Electric Light Company. Shortly after this sale the council of the village made a new contract for a period of ten years with the new company for current for lighting the streets upon a different basis and at different prices.
> QUESTION 1. Has such village council authority of law to abrogate the first contract in this manner and enter into another,
> QUESTION 2. Is not the new company bound to fill the contracts of the company whose plant it purchased, and could such new company be held liable for any loss entailed by the abrogation of the original contract?
> We also desire to call your attention to section 4221 G. C., relative to letting contracts by the council of a village, and to an opinion of a former attorney-general under date of January 26, 1911, which may be found in the Annual Reports 1911-1912, page 1045.
> QUESTION: Do you concur in this opinion that bids must be received upon advertisement for a street lighting contract?"

Further information has been requested from you and you inform us that you are not able to secure a copy of the contract of sale between the two lighting companies. It will not therefore be possible to give a definite answer to either your first or second question.

It may be that the vendee company, by the terms of the contract of sale, assumed all the obligations of the vendor, in which event a right might accrue to the village to claim the benefits of this contract, and derivatively those of the original contract as against the vendee on the theory that the contract of sale was made for its benefit. If no such stipulation is entered into between the two companies, however, the contract between the vendor company and the village was abrogated not by the act of the village in entering into the subsequent contract, but by the act of the vendor itself. The subsequent contract entered into between the village and the vendee would in no way impair or prejudice the right of the village against the vendor company accruing by reason of the breach of its contract with the village. On the contrary, the new contract, if made at a higher rate, would afford a measure of damages which the city might still be able to recover from the vendor company for a breach of its contract with that company.

So far from there being any impropriety in entering into the second contract under the above circumstances, it is obvious that such a course is the only one open to the village and was extremely advisable to protect its interests.

These considerations make it apparent that your first question is itself a conclusion of law inasmuch as it does not fully appear that the village council has attempted to abrogate a contract beneficial to the village. I do not feel called upon, therefore, to consider the very interesting question of whether council has authority to do this, provided that a new contract is entered into in compliance with the law relative to such contracts.

Your second question has really been answered by the statement that it is legally possible for one person or corporation to purchase all the business assets of another person or corporation without being charged by operation of law with obligations pertinent to the business existing against the vendor. It is quite probable, of course, in the case you have in mind, that contracts between the two companies did provide that the vendee discharge the obligations of the vendor and save it harmless on its existing contract with the village. Inasmuch, however, as you are unable to state the facts with respect to this point or to supply a copy of the contract between the two companies, I cannot answer your second question with greater precision.

In your third inquiry you ask whether I concur in the opinion of Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, under date of January 26, 1911, and shown at page 1045 of Vol. II, of the Report of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912. The syllabus of this opinion reads as follows:

> "Contracts for the furnishing of electric light to a municipality amounting to over $500 must be advertised and let to the lowest and best bidder as provided by statute. Before such contract may be entered into by a public service director, however, it must be authorized by ordinance of council."

The above opinion is based upon the provisions of sections 4221, 4328, 3809 General Code.

Section 4221 General Code reads as follows:

> "All contracts made by the council of a village shall be executed in the name of the village and signed on behalf of the village by the mayor and clerk. When any expenditure other than the compensation of persons employed therein exceeds five hundred dollars, such contracts shall be in writing and made with the lowest and best bidder after advertising for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the village. The bids shall be opened at twelve o'clock noon on the last day for filing them, by the clerk of the village and publicly read by him."

Section 4328 General Code reads:

> "The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

In each of these sections it is provided that expenditures in excess of $500 shall be made with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement. Section 4221, General Code, applies to village contracts and section 4328 General Code applies to contracts entered into by the director of public service.

Section 3809 General Code reads as follows:

> "The council of a city may authorize, and the council of a village may make, a contract with any person, firm or company for lighting the streets, alleys, lands, lanes, squares and public places in the municipal corporation, or for furnishing water to such corporation, or for the collection and disposal of garbage in such corporation, or for the leasing of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm, company or municipality or for the purchase of electric current for furnishing light, heat or power to such municipality or the inhabitants thereof for a period not exceeding ten years, and the requirement of a certificate that the necessary money is in the treasury, shall not apply to such contract, and such requirement shall not apply to street improvement contracts extending for one year or more, nor to contracts made by the board of health, nor to contrats made by a village for the employment of legal counsel, nor to contracts by a municipality for the leasing or acquisition of the electric light plant and equipment, or the waterworks plant, or both, of any person, firm or corporation therein situated."

This section authorizes a city or village to enter into a contract for lighting streets, etc. It contains a specific provision that a certificate from the county auditor or village clerk as to funds being in the treasury is not required. There is no exemption, however, from the provisions of sections 4221 and 4328 General Code as to advertisement for bids where the expenditure exceeds five hundred dollars.

Section 3994 General Code also authorizes a municipal corporation to enter into contracts for supplying electric light, natural or artificial gas for the purpose of lighting and heating streets, etc. This section reads as follows:

"A municipal corporation may contract with any company for supplying, with electric light, natural or artificial gas, for the purpose of lighting or heating the streets, squares and other public places and buildings in the corporation limits."

The above section does not provide the manner in which contracts may be entered into, nor does it exempt such contracts from the provisions of sections 4221 and 4328, General Code.

The opinion of the attorney-general referred to by you and above quoted from was not adhered to in a later opinion by Honorable Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general. This latter opinion was given to Honorable W. C. Baldwin, city solicitor, under date of May 13, 1911, reported in Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912, page 1549. The syllabus in this opinion reads as follows:

"A contract by a municipality with a water and light company is expressly authorized by statute, and there is no requirement that said contract should be let upon advertisements and bids, and as municipalities seldom or never have more than one such company, there is no reason for such requirement.

As section 4328 General Code authorizes the director of public service to enter only into contracts for work 'under the supervision of the department,' the contract aforesaid is not included therein. Therefore, the contract may be entered into between the council and the company directly without advertising for bids."

After careful consideration of the above opinion I agree with the conclusion reached by my predecessor.

Therefore, contracts entered into under authority of section 3809 General Code are not required to be let upon competitive bids after advertisement as provided in section 4221 General Code, as to villages, and section 4328 General Code, as to cities.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—MAY ORDER PAYMENT OF EXPENSES INCURRED FOR MEDICAL ATTENTION REQUIRED FOR PERSON BITTEN BY ANIMAL AFFLICTED WITH RABIES—NOT COMPELLED TO PAY SUCH BILL.

A board of county commissioners are permitted to order the payment, in whole or in part, of a bill which they find correct and just, for an expenditure of money on account of medical or surgical treatment required for a person who was bitten or injured by an animal afflicted with rabies, but the statute being permissive in form the board cannot be compelled to pay such bill.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 22, 1918.

HON. ROGER D. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

"Mr. J. S. H. has filed a bill with the county commissioners for expenses in undergoing treatments in Chicago for the purpose of preventing hydrophobia; said J. S. H. having been bitten by a dog which by affidavits is shown to have suffered from rabies.

The commissioners are familiar with the statute under which this bill was filed but in spite of that fact are inclined against the payment of the same. The commissioners have paid one bill and since then two or three others have come in from the same village. I will enclose the bill as filed and you will then understand the facts thoroughly and can advise us as to the disposition of this matter."

Section 5851 G. C. reads:

"A person bitten or injured by a dog, cat or other animal afflicted with rabies, if such injury has caused him to employ medical or surgical treatment or required the expenditure of money, within four months after such injury, and at a regular meeting of the county commissioners of the county where such injury was received, may present an itemized account of the expenses incurred and amount paid by him for medical and surgical attendance, verified by his own affidavit or that of his attending physician; or the administrator or executor of a deceased person may present such claim and make such affidavit. If the person so bitten or injured is a minor such affidavit may be made by his parent or guardian."

Section 5852 G. C. reads:

"The county commissioners not later than the third regular meeting, after it is so presented, shall examine such account, and, if found in whole or part correct and just, may order the payment thereof in whole or in part, out of the general fund of the county; but a person shall not receive for one injury a sum exceeding five hundred dollars."

The language of the latter above quoted section, which provides that the county commissioners "may" order the payment of the account of a person who has been compelled to expend money for medical or surgical treatment on account of having been bitten by a dog or other animal afflicted with rabies, is permissive only and is not mandatory; that is, it is within the discretion of the board of commissioners as to whether or not they will order the payment of said bill in whole or in part, and if the board, exercising a sound discretion, decides that the bill or bills, as presented, shall not be paid, they cannot be forced to pay the same. This matter has been passed upon by several of my predecessors, who have arrived at a similar conclusion in relation thereto. To illustrate:

In opinion No. 144, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1913, page 1163, it is held:

> "Under section 5852 G. C. the allowance of damages to a person bitten by an animal afflicted with rabies rests with the discretion of the county commissioners and the commissioners may make such reasonable requirements for the purpose of investigation of the facts as they deem necessary."

Again, in opinion No. 964, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1915, page 2091, it is held:

> "The allowance of an account presented to a board of county commissioners under the provision of section 5852 G. C. is discretionary with said board."

In opinion No. 1315, Opinions of the Attorney General for 1916, page 381, it is held:

> "The statute is permissive in form and not mandatory."

I agree with the above quoted language in each of said opinions, and answering your question advise you that the board of county commissioners are permitted to order the payment, in whole or in part, of a bill which they find correct and just, for an expenditure of money on account of medical or surgical treatment required for a person who was bitten or injured by an animal afflicted with rabies, but the statute being permissive in form the board cannot be compelled to pay such bill.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—LEASE OF CANAL LANDS TO THE MASSILLON ELECTRIC & GAS COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 22, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 19, 1918, enclosing two leases, in triplicate, of canal lands to The Massillon Electric & Gas Company, of Massillon, Ohio, for my approval.

I desire to call your attention to the fact that said leases, entered into by and between your department and said The Massillon Electric & Gas Company, are signed by "The Massillon Electric & Gas Company, per W. O. Custer, vice-president and general manager", while the power of attorney adopted by the board of directors of

The Massillon Electric & Gas Company empowered W. O. Custer, vice-president, and F. W. McKenzie, secretary, of said company, to execute a lease on behalf of said company.

The signing of these contracts of lease varies so much from the authority granted by the board of directors of said company, that it is my opinion the same should not be approved in their present form and I am therfore returning them to you for correction.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—INCURRED IN FISH AND GAME CASE BEFORE JUSTICE OF THE PEACE—HOW CERTIFIED TO COUNTY AUDITOR, WHEN COMMON PLEAS COURT REVERSES JUSTICE AND DISCHARGES DEFENDANT.

Where the defendant, convicted in the justice of the peace court for a violation of the fish and game laws, has been discharged by the court of common pleas, in a proceeding in error, the court of common pleas should send down a special mandate to the justice of the peace, advising him of such discharge. The justice of the peace may then certify all the costs in the case to the county auditor for payment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

HON. DON C. PORTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Coshocton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letters of August 21st and December 12, 1917, with reference to the costs in the case of Lang v. State. In your first letter you advise me that one Lang, who had been convicted of a violation of the fish and game laws, had taken this case on error to the court of common pleas and that the court of common pleas had reversed the judgment of the justice. In reply to that inquiry I wrote you as follows:

> "Replying to your letter of the 21st inst. I am sending you, enclosed herewith, copy of opinion No. 2016, addressed by my predecessor Hon. E. C. Turner, to Hon. F. A. Saylor, prosecuting attorney, Eaton, Ohio, under date of November 10, 1916, which opinion, I think, will give you the information desired."

In the opinion of Mr. Turner, referred to, it was held that where a fish and game case was remanded by the court of common pleas to the justice of the peace, with instructions to discharge the defendant, the justice of the peace can certify the costs to the county auditor for payment.

However, you advise and inquire in your letter of December 12th, as follows:

> "In the Lang case Judge Glenn of Coshocton county court of common pleas, under authority of section 13755 of the General Code did not remand the case to the justice of the peace, but instead, he reversed the judgment of the justice and discharged the defendant, as the journal entry which I enclosed with my letter of August 21, 1917, shows. The judge has since directed the clerk of court to file the cost bill in the Lang case with the county commissioners.

Does the fact that the defendant in the instant case was discharged by the court of common pleas instead of being remanded and discharged by the justice, change your view of the proper manner to pay these costs or are you of the opinion that they should in all events be paid in accordance with Mr. Turner's opinion No. 2016?"

Section 1404 of the General Code reads:

"A person authorized by law to prosecute a case under the provisions of this chapter shall not be required to advance or secure costs therein. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody, or if he be convicted and committed in default of payment of fine and costs, such costs shall be certified, under oath by the justice to the county auditor who shall correct all errors therein and issue his warrant on the county treasurer payable to the person or persons entitled thereto."

In the opinion referred to (No. 2016, Opinions of the Attorney General for 1916, Vol. 2) Mr. Turner stated:

"After the justice of the peace had pronounced judgment of conviction in the instant case the matter was taken on error to the court of common pleas and I assume that a bond was given to stay the execution of the sentence. The court of common pleas having reversed the decision of the justice of the peace undoubtedly a mandate to that effect was sent to the justice of the peace, provided, of course, no further proceedings were taken in the court of common pleas. It therefore became the duty of the justice of the peace to discharge from custody the person charged with the offense and upon the justice discharging the defendant from custody he is authorized to certify the costs to the county auditor for payment."

Section 13755 of the General Code reads:

"Upon the hearing of a petition in error, the court may affirm the judgment or reverse it, in whole or in part, and order the accused to be discharged or grant a new trial. In capital cases, when the judgment is affirmed, and the day fixed for the execution of the sentence is passed, the court shall appoint a day therefor, and the clerk thereof shall issue a warrant, under the seal of such court, to the sheriff of the proper county, commanding him to carry the sentence into execution at the day so appointed. Such sheriff shall execute and return such warrant, and such clerk shall record such warrant and return as provided in this title."

By virtue of this section the common pleas court in the Lang case, instead of remanding the case to the justice of the peace, discharged the defendant. Under section 1404 of the General Code the justice of the peace is to certify the costs in a fish and game case "if the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody or if he be convicted and committed in default of payment of fine and costs." Since the common pleas court did not remand the Lang case back to the justice of the peace, but saw fit to terminate the case in that court, the justice of the peace is without any official knowledge of the discharge of the defendant, since the statute requires a justice of the peace to certify the costs when the defendant has been discharged. It is evident that the justice of the peace should receive some official knowledge of the discharge of the defendant before he can make the certificate. For this reason a special mandate should be sent down from the court of common pleas to the trial court advising the trial court of the discharge of the defendant. When this mandate is received by the justice of the peace, he may certify all the costs in the case to the county auditor for payment, as is provided by section 1404 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

TRIAL—UNDER JUVENILE COURT LAWS—MUST BE COMMENCED WITHIN FOUR DAYS, WHEN ACCUSED COMMITTED TO JAIL PENDING DISPOSITION OF CASE.

It is necessary that the trial of the accused, under the juvenile court laws, who has been committed pending the final disposition of the case, be commenced within four days of such commitment, unless otherwise requested by the defendant.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

HON. CHARLES G. WHITE, Prosecuting Attorney, Batavia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—My opinion is requested by you on the following statement of facts:

> "Section 1657 of the General Code provides that a person may be committed pending final disposition of a case.
> 1. Is it necessary in all cases that the trial of the accused be commenced within four days after his arrest in juvenile cases, provided, of course, that the defendant does not consent to a continuance?
> 2. Suppose the prosecuting witness, or a very important witness, should be taken violently ill, or was unable to attend trial for some other cause, and that the court should continue the case without the consent of the defendant, and before the trial could be set and tried, or because a material witness could not be secured, and that four days should elapse, would a motion to discharge the prisoner on the grounds that he was not brought to trial within four days limit, be well taken?"

Section 1657 of the General Code provides:

> "Pending final disposition of a case. the judge may commit any person arrested or cited to appear, except a minor under fourteen years of age, to the county jail until the case is disposed of, but such trial shall be commenced within four days of such commitment unless upon the request of the defendant. Pending final disposition, the judge may direct that the minor in question be left in the possession of the person having charge of him, or that he be kept in some suitable place provided by the county or city authorities."

The case referred to in the above quoted section is a criminal case or a proceeding wherein a person has been cited to appear before the juvenile judge and in either event as is provided by the juvenile court laws of this state. If a person is arrested, say for failing to furnish care, support, maintenance or education to a minor under the age of eighteen years, and is brought before the juvenile court and arraigned upon said charge, then under the provisions of section 1657, supra, pending the trial and final disposition of the case, the judge may commit such person to the county jail until the case is disposed of. If, on the other hand, instead of entering a plea of not guilty the defendant enters a plea of guilty, and an investigation might be necessary before the court could pass sentence intelligently, then and in that event, pending the final disposition of the case, the defendant might be committed to the county jail until the case is thus finally disposed of. But if in the first instance, above mentioned, a plea of not guilty is entered, and a trial is to be had, whether before the court or a jury, such trial shall be commenced within four days of the time such commitment takes place, unless the defendant requests otherwise.

It is said in Arrest and Prosecution, by Laning, that:

> "The trial must be commenced within four days of the commitment, but may be extended over some period in case time is needed to gather evidence."

That is, it would not be necessary to proceed continuously with the trial after it has once been commenced, but that it might be adjourned from time to time as the occasion requires, and if, as referred to in your letter a very important witness should become violently ill, and for that reason was unable to attend the trial, the court has a right to continue the case without the consent of the defendant, after such trial has so been commenced.

In 38 Cyc., 1299, it is held that it is within the discretion of the court whether it shall adjourn a case to wait for witnesses to arrive and allow the case to stand open and permit the evidence to be introduced after the witnesses so arrive, or, to wait for a witness who has not been subpoenaed but who has merely promised to attend the trial, or to adjourn after other testimony has been given to enable a party to procure the testimony of an expert or other witnesses, or to enable the defendant to obtain or produce a paper in evidence, or to permit a party to get a copy of a document where proof of the substance of the document was sufficient on the question involved, and many other instances therein related and referred to by said author. But the fact that the court can continue the cause from time to time does not in my opinion give the court a right to continue the time for the commencement of the trial beyond the four days.

Limitations of time for the holding of prisoners pending examination and trial are mentioned in other sections of the General Code and reference to those sections may assist in a measure to ascertain the intention of the legislature when section 1657 was enacted. In this instance no preliminary examination is provided for. An affidavit is filed, a warrant is issued, the defendant is arrested and arraigned, and if he pleads not guilty then the court must proceed to try the cause, taking it for granted of course, that it is a cause in which the court has jurisdiction. Pending the trial it is provided that the defendant may be committed to the county jail. In this effect the section is very similar to the section 13507 G. C. In the latter section it is provided that if it is necessary for just cause to adjourn the examination of an accused, the magistrate before whom the proceeding was begun may order such adjournment and commit the defendant to the jail of the county until such cause of delay is removed, but the entire time of such confinement in jail shall not exceed four days. While the language of the latter section is not exactly like the language of the first, yet there is a marked similarity; in the latter instance, the entire time of the confinement shall not be more than four days, in the former instance the trial shall be commenced within four days. In both instances the object is to bring the defendant to a speedy trial or hearing. In the case before the magistrate it is to be ascertained whether a crime has been committed, and if so, if the defendant is probably the guilty party, and to recognize him to the grand jury. In the case before the juvenile court the object to be ascertained is whether the charge made against the defendant is a proper one, and if so that the trial shall be had upon said charge.

In considering that part of section 13507, above referred to, it was held in Washer v. Iler, 19 Cir. Dec., 319, affirmed without report in 75 O. S., p. 638, that "it is unlawful for the magistrate to commit the accused for safe keeping for more than four days" pending an investigation.

In section 13685 of the General Code it is provided that a person shall not be detained in jail without a trial on an indictment for a continuous period of more than two terms after his arrest and commitment thereon, or if he was in jail at the time the indictment was found, more than two terms after the term at which the indictment was presented, and section 13686 provides that a person shall not be held by recognizance, without trial, for a period of more than three terms, not including a term at which a recognizance was first taken thereon if taken in term time. In either of the aforesaid cases it is provided that the defendant shall be discharged unless a continuance is had on his motion or the delay is caused by his act, but under section 13687 of the General Code it is provided that when application is made for the discharge of the defendant under either of the two preceding sections, "if the court is satisfied that there is material evidence for the state which cannot then be had, that reasonable effort has been made to procure it, and that there is just ground to believe that such evidence can be had at the next term, the cause can be continued or the prisoner remanded or committed to jail." If, however, he is not brought to trial at the next term thereafter, he shall then be discharged.

It was held in State v. Brown, 15 O. N. P., n. s., 401, that in the absence of material evidence to procure which the state has exercised reasonable efforts and a showing that there is just ground for believing that such evidence can be procured at the next term of court, a continuance would not be justified.

The scheme of legislation thus seems to be that a defendant be brought to trial as speedily as possible and so when it is provided in section 1657 that the trial shall commence within four days, it is my opinion that that is a limitation which is jurisdictional and that unless something is done toward the commencing of such trial within four days, the court has no jurisdiction to try the same thereafter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY OIL INSPECTORS—MAY NOT INSPECT OIL OUTSIDE OF STATE OF OHIO.

Deputy oil inspectors are not authorized to go into neighboring state to inspect oil sold to Ohio consumers.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

HON. CHARLES L. RESCH, State Oil Inspector, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter advising me of a communication that you have received from a certain oil refining company outside of Ohio, asking that your inspector at Marietta be permitted to come over into West Virginia and inspect the oil manufactured by such company in West Virginia so that the same can be shipped from the refining plant in West Virginia to various customers in Ohio without embarrassing such customers with any further inspections.

The communication from the refining company to you concludes as follows:

"We would expect, of course, to pay the Ohio rate for inspecting this oil and the inspector could easily come here and return in a half day at any time."

In reply to your request I beg to advise you that your jurisdiction as state oil inspector and the jurisdiction of your various deputies as deputy oil inspectors is coextensive with the state lines. Your deputy inspector would, therefore, be without any authority to inspect oil in the state of West Virginia. If this oil manufactured in West Virginia is to be sold in Ohio, it must be inspected by your department before being offered for sale. This by reason of section 854 of the General Code.

However, the inspection must be made within this state where your deputies may exercise the proper jurisdiction of their office.

I would therefore advise you, in connection with this situation, that the refining company in West Virginia, if it desires its oil inspected for the purpose of sale in Ohio, must submit that oil to your inspector somewhere in this state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—NO AUTHORITY TO ACCEPT A NEW BOND FROM CONTRACTOR IN SUBSTITUTION FOR ORIGINAL AFTER CONTRACT HAS BEEN ENTERED INTO FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT.

After a contract for a road improvement has been entered into by and between the state highway commissioner and the contractor, there is no authority in law warranting the state highway commissioner in accepting a bond as a substitution for that originally given by the contractor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 29, 1917, which reads as follows:

"The highway advisory board at its meeting yesterday, authorized me to request your opinion on the legality of complying with the following request of Mr. C. H. Bancroft. I am also authorized to request your advice, if you find that this department may legally comply with Mr. Bancroft's request, as to what steps, if any, would be necessary to protect the interests of this department. The letter is as follows:

'CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—

IN RE: Bond No. 16299—A. W. McDonald, Steubenville, Ohio, contract with the highway department for the improvement of Jefferson county, section N-2, Steubenville-Cambridge road, Cross Creek township.

This is to advise you that we are the representatives and attorney-in-fact for both the London and Lancashire Indemnity Company of America and The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company of Hartford, Connecticut.

In the execution of the above contractor's bond on the above described contract, our office erred in placing this bond in the London & Lancashire Indemnity Company of America. This should have been The Aetna Casualty and Surety Company.

We respectfully ask you to permit us to substitute the name of The Aetna Casualty & Surety Company for that of the London & Lancashire Indemnity Company.

Yours very truly,

(Signed) C. H. BANCROFT.' "

Possibly the matters about which you inquire are not so very vital in view of the provisions of the General Code in reference to the same, and yet as a general proposition it seems to me that the law, as well as public policy, would be against the idea of substituting one surety in the place of another, which became bound upon a bond by virtue of which a contract was entered into for a certain road improvement.

In the first place it must be said that the laws pertaining to the construction and improvement of highways make no provision whatever for an additional bond or for the substitution of one surety for another, and, of course, after the contractor had given bond in pursuance of law and had entered into a contract with the state of Ohio in virtue of said bond, he, the contractor, could not be compelled to give any further or additional bond. This was specifically held by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner in opinion No. 1834, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. II, page 1346. But the question still remains as to whether the state highway commissioner would be justified in law in receiving another bond providing the contractor himself would be willing to sign a bond with a surety other than the one with whom he signed in the matter of the original bond.

As stated above, there is no authority in law for the state highway commissioner accepting a different bond from that which was given in the beginning of the proceedings to improve the highway. Further, under the law I do not believe that he would be warranted or justified in doing so. It must be remembered that the bond is given not entirely for the uses and purposes of the state of Ohio, but for the benefit of the county and the township or townships interested in the matter of the improvement, as well as the property owners who are assessed for a part of the cost and expense of the improvement. Further, the bond which is given by the contractor inures to the benefit of all material men who furnish material for the improvement for which the bond is given, as well as to all laborers who perform labor thereon.

Under the Cass highway law this provision was found in section 1208 G. C., which provided that the bond should be conditioned "that the contractor will indemnify the state, county or township against any damages that may result by reason of the negligence of the contractor in making said improvement." This section further provided that such bond shall also be conditioned for the payment of all material and labor furnished for or used in the construction of the road for which the contract is made.

The provisions of this section are carried into the White-Mulcahy law in a special act, which is found in 107 O. L., page 642. Section 1 of this act provides that the usual bond as provided for in statute shall be given, "with an additional obligation for the payment by the contractor, and by all subcontractors, for all labor performed or materials furnished in the construction, erection, alteration or repair of such building, works or improvements."

From these provisions it must be considered that the labor performed upon a road improvement and the material furnished for the road improvement is performed and furnished with a view to the bond as it existed at the time that the labor is performed and the material is furnished. In law, at least, it can be assumed that the man performing labor and those furnishing material for road improvements take into consideration the fact that such and such a person or company is surety on the bond and that said person or company is satisfactory to said persons. Hence, in law it occurs to me that the state highway commissioner has no authority, after a contract for a road improvement has once been entered into to substitute a new bond for that which was given in the beginning, or, in other words, in substituting one surety for another.

Further, I am of the opinion that to do so would be against sound public policy. If this principle were followed it might lead to the substitution of a surety which is not financially responsible for one which is financially responsible, and this even though the state highway commissioner should exercise the greatest care and caution in making the change.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that it is against the law and against sound public policy for the state highway commissioner to accept a bond in lieu of the one which was given as a basis upon which the contract would be entered into.

Of course, this opinion has nothing whatever to do with the acceptance of an additional bond, but simply has to do with the proposition of substituting one bond for another.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COURTS OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS—ACT CREATING SAME IN HAMILTON, MAHONING AND SUMMIT COUNTIES—DOES NOT CREATE NEW COURTS—ORDERS OF SAID COURTS NOT INVALID UNDER DECISION IN CASE OF STATE EX REL. D'ALTON V. RITCHIE ET AL.

The different acts of the legislature providing courts of domestic relations in Hamilton, Mahoning and Summit counties do not create new courts in those counties, but provide for the assignment of certain classes of cases to a certain judge of the court of common pleas.

The orders of these courts in reference to the matters of which jurisdiction is given them are not rendered invalid by the decision of the court in the Lucas county case, D'Alton v. The Judges.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR:—On December 24th you forwarded to this department for consideration a communication from a member of the bar of Hamilton county in reference to the effect of the late decision of the supreme court in reference to Lucas county court of domestic relations. The letter to you is as follows:

> "The decision of the supreme court upholding the Lucas county court of domestic relations act has a distressing feature. Section 5 of the syllabus found in the Cincinnati court index of December 17, 1917, declares section 3 of the act is in part unconstitutional insofar as the act purports to confer jurisdiction upon the court to the exclusion of the jurisdiction conferred upon the common pleas court by the general laws of this state.
> In other words the Hamilton county act providing for a court of domestic relations as a part of the common pleas is unconstitutional insofar as it confers exclusive juvenile jurisdiction on the court of common pleas of Hamilton county, whereas in other counties it is in the common pleas, probate, insolvency, and superior courts.

The act also ousts the common pleas judges who are not of the division of domestic relations. In other words the court of common pleas of Hamilton county has different jurisdiction than that of the common pleas of other counties. The court also is not another court like the Lucas county court and may on this ground be subject to attack.

I have the following suggestions to make:

Let the legislature be called into special session and let a constitutional amendment be proposed to the electors in August providing that the legislature may create courts of domestic relations or division of domestic relations, court of common pleas, giving them exclusive jurisdiction over all cases relating to domestic relations. Let the amendment contain a curative clause validating all courts of domestic relations or divisions of domestic relations, courts of common pleas. Action must not be delayed as social reform will suffer greatly. I suggest that Attorney-General McGhee be consulted."

Your correspondent has arrived at the conclusion upon reading the syllabus of the case of State ex rel. D'Alton v. Ritchie et al., decided December 11, 1917, which causes apprehensions on his part that disappear upon a thorough investigation of the law.

By this decision the supreme court has not rendered any judicial act invalid that was done in any of the courts of domestic relations. The decision is that the statute is unconstitutional only in so far as it makes this jurisdiction exclusive. The legislature has complete power to create the new court and to confer upon it the jurisdiction it did give it, and the statute is only invalid to the extent that it makes the jurisdiction exclusive, so that this court having concurrently with other courts the jurisdiction to render the different judgments they have rendered those are perfectly valid, as of course their similar judgments will continue to be in the future so that the only difficulty left in the situation is one arising from the fact that two different courts will have jurisdiction of the same matter. This, however, is not at all unusual and ordinarily gives the suitor an option as to which court he will submit himself to.

The Lucas county statute is different from the others in that it is the first which sought to make a distinct and separate court of domestic relations. In Hamilton, Mahoning and Summit counties the statute only provided for a division of the labor among the different judges of the court of common pleas providing that certain classes of cases should go to the common pleas judge who is selected to serve in the division of domestic relations of that court.

The provision as to Hamilton county is found in section 1639 General Code, which section first provides that the court of common pleas, probate, insolvency, and superior courts, shall concurrently have jurisdiction as juvenile courts, which shall be exercised by their designating one of their number as a juvenile judge. It contains the following exception:

"The foregoing provisions shall not apply to Hamilton county, in which county the powers and jurisdiction conferred in this chapter shall be exercised by the court of common pleas, and in 1914 and every sixth year thereafter, one of the common pleas judges to be elected at said times shall be elected as a judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relation. To him shall be assigned all juvenile court work arising under this chapter, and all divorce and alimony cases, and whenever said judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations, shall be sick, absent or unable to perform his duties, the presiding judge of the common pleas court shall assign another common pleas judge to perform his duties during his illness, absence or indisposition."

All that is done by the act is to call this one judge by a different name, or rather as an addition to his title, and then provides by statute for the assignment of these duties to him instead of having the judges make the assignment as in other cases, so that instead of the Hamilton county case being more dangerous or more liable to be declared unconstitutional than the Lucas county case, it is exactly the other way. In all three of these counties, Hamilton, Lucas and Summit, the draftsman of the act was apparently afraid of the exact question made in the Lucas county case and had the act so drawn as effectually to safeguard it from any such dangerous consequence. That is, the Hamilton county act was drawn first and the other two have followed it as a model, or almost verbatim.

The Mahoning county statute differs in this respect in that it contains the following paragraph:

"To such judge shall be assigned all juvenile court work arising under title 4, chapter 8, of the General Code, and all divorce and alimony cases, and cases involving the care and custody of children in said county."

This might be thought to contain the same vice as the Lucas county statute. The difference, however, is this: in the Lucas county case they made a new court, one that had no former existence and was successor of no other court and sought to give it exclusive jurisdiction in the cases mentioned, while in the Mahoning county case the provision is that all divorce cases, etc., shall be assigned to this judge. Even if that statute were unconstitutional in that respect it would work no harm, but as above stated would simply give the judge concurrent jurisdiction with other common pleas judges.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—CHIEF HIGHWAY ENGINEER, AT COMPLETION OF IMPROVEMENT, CERTIFIES TOTAL COST AND EXPENSE THEREOF TO PARTIES INTERESTED—AMOUNT SO CERTIFIED IS USED AS A BASIS FOR APPORTIONING COST—THIS OPINION BASED UPON CASS HIGHWAY LAW.

1. Under chapter 8 of the Cass highway law, the chief highway engineer, at the completion of an improvement, certifies the total cost and expense thereof to the parties interested. Then the township trustees proceed to assess against the abutting property owners the proportion of the same to be borne by them, giving due notice thereof as provided by section 1214 G. C., and first adding to the said proportion of the cost and expense the proportion of the interest on bonds issued, if any, to be borne by the abutting property owners.

2. The amount certified by the chief highway engineer and used as a basis in arriving at the amount to be paid by the state, county, township or townships and abutting property owners, is not the estimated cost of the improvement, nor the contract price of the same, but the actual cost and expense thereof, which must ultimately be paid by the parties interested.

3. The above conclusions of law are based upon the Cass highway act, and not upon the White Mulcahy act which has been the law since June 28, 1917.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 8, 1917, which reads as follows:

> "In July, 1916, the state highway commissioner let a contract for the construction of section E of inter-county highway 399 of this county. The work was done in co-operation with the county commissioners of Gallia county, Ohio, and was not completed until May, 1917. In July, 1916, the state highway commissioner also let a contract for the construction of section D of inter-county highway No. 405 in this county. The work was done in co-operation with the county commissioners and was not completed until October, 1917. In October or November, 1917, the contractor was compelled to give up the contract for the construction of section D and the work was completed by the state highway commissioner at a cost of several thousand dollars more than the contract price.
> Ten per cent. of the cost of these sections of inter-county highway is to be assessed against the abutting property owners. I am somewhat doubtful as to the necessary steps required to be taken to make this assessment. The question has also arisen as to whether or not the assessment should be based upon the contract price, or upon the actual amount expended by the county and state in the construction of these roads.
> Please advise me what is necessary to be done in respect to levying and collecting these assessments under the statement of facts herewith submitted."

Your inquiry naturally divides itself into two different parts:

(1) The nature of the necessary steps which are required to be taken in making assessments against abutting property owners in the improvement of highways.

(2) As to what shall be made the basis for said assessment, the contract price or the real cost and expense of the improvement.

Inasmuch as you apparently have in mind contracts which were entered into prior to June 28, 1917, I will quote the statutes, relative to your inquiries, as they existed at that time. However, the principles of law applying to your questions vary to some extent under the new law.

The first step in the apportionment of the part of the cost and expense of an improvement which the abutting property owners are to bear is found in section 1211 G. C., which read as follows:

> "Section 1211. Upon completion of the improvement, the chief highway engineer shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property. He shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement, and his apportionment thereof to the county commissioners, and the trustees of the township or townships interested therein."

It will be readily seen that under this section the making of assessments is first up to the chief highway engineer, who, after the improvement is fully completed, apportions the total cost and expense to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property.

After it is known what the total amount to be assessed against the property owners is, it will then be necessary for the authorities to turn to section 1214 G. C. for further steps in the assessment made against each individul property owner. This section read in part as follows:

> "Section 1214. * * * The township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of the abutting property according to the benefits accruing to the owners of the land so located. At least ten days' notice of the time and place of making such apportionment shall be given to the persons affected thereby, and an opportunity given them to be heard. The township trustees shall cause a notice to be served upon abutting property owners, stating the time and place for hearing on the apportionment and the amount to be paid by each abutting property owner. In case any of the abutting property owners are non-residents, such notice shall be given by one publication in some newspaper of general circulation in the county. If the improvement lies in two or more townships, the amount to be paid by each shall be apportioned according to the number of lineal feet of the improvement lying in each township.
> The trustees shall determine the number of installments in which such assessments shall be paid, not exceeding ten semi-annual payments.
> When bonds are issued in anticipation of taxes and assessments the interest thereon shall be treated as a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and apportioned among the county, the township or townships, and the specially benefited property in the proportions to which they severally contribute to the payment of the total cost and expense thereof not paid by the state under the provisions of this or any other section."

Under this section the second step is up to the township trustees, namely, they apportion the total amount of money, which is to be paid by the property owners, among the different property owners whose property abuts upon the improvement, assessing, however, against no property owner an amount greater than that which would be equal to thirty-three per cent. of the value of his property for the purposes of taxation.

The third step is that the township trustees must fix a day upon which the abutting property owners may be heard in reference to the assessments made against them, and at least ten days' notice of the time and place of such hearing must be given the abutting property owners, under said section 1214.

After hearing the complaints, if any, of the abutting property owners, relative to the assessments, the township trustees will finally adopt the assessment as it was made by them in the first instance or as it may be modified by them in view of the hearing had.

The next step is provided for in section 1216 G. C., by virtue of which the township trustees shall certify the assessments so made or adopted by them to the county auditor, who shall place them upon the tax duplicate and collect them in the same manner as other taxes are collected.

It will also be noted that the township trustees shall fix the number of installments in which such assessments shall be paid. It must further be kept in mind that when bonds are issued in anticipation of the taxes and assessments, then interest must be computed on the bonds and the proper proportion of the interest be assessed against the abutting property owners; that is, it must be added to the part of the total cost and expense of the improvement which is to be borne by the property owners. In fixing the amount of interest to be added, it must be remembered that the state itself bears no part of the interest on the bonds, and that the county, township or townships and abutting property owners have all the interest to pay, which must be divided among them in the same proportion as is the total cost and expense of the improvement.

Under said section 1216 it seems to be up to the township trustees to make the assessment against the abutting property owners, whether they or the county commissioners have made application for state aid. I might suggest that section 1214 G. C. in the White-Mulcahy law (107 O. L. 129) is clearer and more specific relative to this matter of making assessments against abutting property owners, but, as I understand you, the above will answer same.

We come now to the question of what is the basis for this apportionment, whether it is the estimated cost and expense, the contract price or the actual cost and expense of the improvement. While this is not so readily answered, I am of the opinion that our statutes are sufficiently clear on this point to enable us to arrive at a fairly reliable opinion in reference to same.

We will again turn to section 1211 G. C., above quoted. It provides that upon the completion of the improvement the chief highway engineer shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof and shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement and his apportionment thereof to the county commissioners and the trustees of the township or townships interested therein. There is nothing in this section about the estimated cost or the contract price, but the language used is "the cost and expense thereof" and "the total cost and expense of the improvement."

Sections 1213 and 1214 G. C. make provision as to the proportion of the cost and expense which is to be borne by the state, county, township and abutting property owners.

Section 1213 read in part as follows:

> "Whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county, and the cost and expense thereof does not exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay fifty per cent. of such cost and expense. * * *."

Section 1214 G. C. provided in part as follows:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this chapter (G. C. sections 1178 to 1231-3), the county shall pay twenty-five per cent. of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, except the cost and expenses of bridges and culverts, shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement, provided the total amount assessed against any owner of abutting property shall not exceed thirty-three per cent. of the valuation of such abutting property for the purposes of taxation. * * *."

It will be seen that under this section the county shall pay twenty-five per cent, the township or townships fifteen per cent., and the abutting property owners ten per cent. of "All cost and expense of the improvement," and not of the estimated cost or contract price of the same.

We find language to the same effect in section 1212 G. C. which provided the manner in which the state, the county, township and abutting property owners are to pay their respective proportions of the cost and expense. Said section read in part as follows:

> "Section 1212. The state's proportion of the cost and expense of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of a highway under the provisions of this chapter, shall be paid by the treasurer of state upon the warrant of the auditor of state. * * *."

This same language is used through the section and is to the effect that it is the actual cost and expense of the improvement which is considered.

From all the above it is my opinion that the proportion of the cost and expense to be paid by the state, county, township or townships and abutting property owners, is to be based upon the actual cost and expense and not upon the estimated cost, nor upon the contract price. This seems to have been the idea of the legislature in requiring the chief highway engineer, under section 1211 G. C., to apportion the total cost and expense at the conclusion of the improvement.

If the contract price were to be used as a basis, there would be no necessity of putting this matter off until the improvement is fully completed. Of course it is well known that the estimated cost and expense made by the legislature is used merely as a basis upon which the contract may be let for the improvement. The contract price may be less than the estimated cost and expense.

To be sure, under section 1207 G. C. the contract price can not be more than the estimated cost and expense, for this section provides:

"Section 1207. No contract for any improvement shall be awarded for a greater sum than the estimated cost thereof. * * *."

From this it might be argued that the contract price would represent the actual cost and expense, but this is not true.

Section 1209 G. C. provided that the state highway commissioner may declare the contract forfeited and complete the same under force account or by contract, or in any manner that he may deem for the best interests of the public.

Under these conditions the total cost and expense of the improvement may be more than the contract price. To be sure, if the contractor or his bondsmen are financially responsible, they are compelled to pay the additional cost and expense, but if they are not responsible, this additional cost and expense will have to be borne by the parties interested in the improvement.

Further, section 1210 G. C. provided for extras in an improvement resulting from unforeseen contingencies and not included in the original contract. If there are extras required, the cost of the same becomes a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement and hence makes it greater than that which is provided for in the original contract.

Hence it is my opinion that when the chief highway engineer under section 1211 G. C. certifies the total cost and expense of the improvement to the county commissioners, he will not use the contract price as the basis of his certification, but he will use the total cost and expense which must ultimately be borne by the parties interested, viz., the state, county, townships and the abutting property owners.

In connection with this matter I desire to call attention to section 1218 G. C., which provided:

"* * * No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance tha part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state. * * *"

The agreement mentioned in the above quoted provision is usually termed the final resolution of the county commissioners or township trustees, in which they agree to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement. From the language used in this section it might be argued that the amount specified in the final resolution to be assumed by the state is a fixed and determinate amount and that the county commissioners, township trustees and abutting property owners would be compelled to pay everything above that amount, irrespective of what the actual cost and expense might be, for it must be remembered that this agreement upon the part of the county commissioners or township trustees is based not upon the actual cost nor upon the contract price, but merely upon the estimated cost and expense of the improvement. However, I do not think such a construction as that above suggested should be placed upon this language, for when we turn to sections 1213 and 1214, supra, we find that the state bears a certain proportion of the cost "and expense of the improvement," as does the county, the townships and the abutting property owners

Hence from all the above it is my opinion that the amount of money certified by the chief highway engineer is not the contract price, but the actual cost and expense of the improvement, which must ultimately be borne by the parties interested, whether the amount so certified be more or less than the contract price.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

2. The publication provided for in section 6950 G. C. (107 O. L. 107) migh' be sufficient notice to any persons having claims for compensation or damages, but said publication does not provide for notice to the public in general.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 23, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Hancock county, Ohio, in the sum of $19,500.00, for the purpose of paying the cost and expense of improving Lima avenue as a part of the Dixie highway improvement in the city of Findlay, Ohio.

The improvement for which the said bonds were issued by the county commissioners of Hancock county lies entirely within the limits of the city of Findlay, but it is an improvement over which the county commissioners have assumed jurisdiction under and by virtue of the provisions of sections 6949 to 6952 inc. G. C. (107 O. L. 107).

The sections of the General Code covering road improvements over which the county commissioners assume jurisdiction are 6906 to 6948-1 inc. (107 O. L. 95), and it is my opinion that even though the proposed improvement is one which goes into or is within or passes through a municipality, yet the county commissioners must follow the same steps as they would follow if the improvement lies entirely without the limits of a municipality, and that sections 6949 to 6952 inc. are merely additional steps which must be taken by the council of a municipality and the county commissioners, when the improvement passes into, within or through a municipality.

In an opinion rendered by me to Hon. J. H. Musser, prosecuting attorney, on December 7, 1917, I laid down the following proposition:

> "Sections 6949 to 6953 inclusive, form a part of the generel scheme of road building by county commissioners and apply particularly to those proceedings connected with the improvement of roads lying within a municipality, running into the same or passing through it.
> However, it must be borne in mind that sections 6906 et seq. apply just as well to mprovements lying within a municipality, performed under sections 6949 to 6953 inclusive, in so far as the powers and duties of the county commissioners are concerned."

In this opinion I held that sections 6906 et seq. G. C. apply as well to improvements lying within a municipality as they do to those lying outside the limits of a municipality, in so far as the powers and duties of the county commissioners are concerned, and I believe that said proposition is correct.

With these general observations in mind, I desire to call attention to two matters connected with the transcript having to do with the issuing of said bonds. The transcript shows that there was no publication had by the county commissioners as is provided for in section 6912. Without quoting from this section, will state that it provides for a publication which serves the purpose of giving notice to two different groups of persons:

(1) A notice to those persons who may claim compensation for lands and property taken or damages sustained on account thereof; and

(2) A notice to the public in general to give them an opportunity to offer objections to said improvement.

The first notice is to a limited group of persons only, while the second is to the taxpayers of the county at large; that is, to the public in general, which would include the taxpayers of the city of Findlay as well as those residing outside said municipality.

It is true that section 6950 G. C. (107 O. L. 107) provides that "all compensation and damages on account of said improvement shall be paid by the municipality." This section further provides that notice shall be published by the council of the municipality that consent has been given by it for the construction of a highway into, within or through the municipality by the county commissioners, and the notice must fix a time within which claims for compensation and damages on account of the proposed improvement shall be filed with the council. If the council is under obligation to give notice to those having claims for compensation or damages, and if the municipality is to pay all claims for compensation and damages to property owners, then of course in the case under consideration the first object to be accomplished by the notice set out in section 6912 G. C. would not be necessary in the present case

But how about the second object, viz., a notice to the public in general to give them an opportunity to offer objections to said improvement? Section 6950 G. C. makes no provision for this, but merely for a notice to those who may claim compensation or damages on account of the construction of said improvement.

Hence it is my opinion that the publication provided for in section 6912 G. C. must be made by the county commissioners, at least in so far as notice to the public is concerned, and that this is one of the jurisdictional steps to be taken by the county commissioners, without which they have no authority to proceed with the further steps, one of which is the issuing of bonds to take care of the share of the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the county.

I will direct your attention to another provision which leads one to the same conclusion above suggested. Section 6950 G. C. states:

> "* * * the county commissioners, after the approval by them of the surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications for said improvement, shall cause a copy of the surveys and profiles to be filed with the council of the municipality. * * *."

We will note at what time and under what conditions the county commissioners approve the surveys, etc.

Section 6917 G. C. (107 O. L. 98) provides as follows:

> "If, after hearing and determining all claims, for compensation and damages on account of land or property taken for said improvement, or after the determination of such claims in the probate court on appeal, said board of commissioners is still satisfied that the public convenience and welfare require that such improvement be made, and that the cost and expense thereof will not be excessive in view of the public utility thereof, said commissioners shall order by resolution that they proceed with such improvement, and shall adopt the surveys, plans, profiles, cross-sections, estimates and specifications therefor, as reported by the surveyor, or with such modifications thereof as the commissioners and surveyor may agree upon."

That is, after the county commissioners have heard from all the parties interested, if they arrive at the conclusion "that the cost and expense thereof will not be excessive in view of the public utility thereof," then said commissioners shall adopt the surveys, etc.

Hence the publication provided for in section 6912 G. C. must be made before the county commissioners can adopt the surveys, etc., and they must adopt the surveys, etc., before they submit the same to the council of the municipality. Therefore the publication provided for in said section 6912 is made a vital part of the proceeding for an improvement, even though that improvement lies within the corporate limits of a municipality.

My attention has been called, by the prosecuting attorney of Hancock county, to opinion No. 241, rendered by me to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices on May 4, 1917, in which I set out certain steps to be taken in those cases in which the county commissioners construct a road improvement through or within a municipality. However, it must be remembered that in that case the city solicitor was making inquiry as to how the city should proceed, and the only thing I had in mind was to give those steps which were required to be taken by the municipality itself, and those necessary to be taken by the county commissioners which fit into the proceedings which had to be taken by the municipality, such as giving the consent of the municipality and submitting the plans, specifications and estimates to the municipality for its approval. In that opinion I did not have in mind the steps necessary to be taken by the county commissioners, unless they fit into or were connected with the proceedings necessary to be taken by the municipality.

In passing I will make a suggestion relative to the manner in which the consent is given by the municipality.

Section 6949 G. C. provides:

> " * such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records, * * *."

The transcript is silent as to the manner in which the consent of the city of Findlay was given In view of the provisions of said section 6949, this matter should receive careful consideration.

In view of all the above, it is my opinion that you should not purchase said bonds, and that they are not a legal and binding obligation against the county of Hancock.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE—CANTON CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 25, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Canton city school district, in the sum of $191,000.00, for the purpose of completing certain school building in said school district and constructing new school buildings therein.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Canton city school district relating to the above bond issue and find that only one question of any consequence is presented on consideration of the same. This question arises on consideration of the following provision in the resolution of the board of education providing for the issue of said bonds:

> "That bonds of the said school district be issued in the sum of $191,000.00 for the purpose of completing the construction of the front section and right wing of the new high school building, the Clarendon avenue school building, the J. J. Burns school building, the Daniel Worley school building, and to construct a new school building in the southwestern part of the city. Provided, however, that should there remain in the fund any sum after the completion and construction of said buildings, such remainder may be used for the completion of other buildings in this school district."

It will be noted that the purpose of the proposed bond issue for the most part is to provide for the completion of school buildings in said school district which have been partially constructed. On further information furnished at my request I am advised that the high school building and two of the other school buildings mentioned in the resolution have been constructed to their present condition from the proceeds of bonds issued by the board of education of said school district on a vote of the electors under the provisions of sections 7625 et seq. of the General Code. Inasmuch as the above bond issue is one without a vote of the electors under section 7629 General Code, the question suggested by this fact is whether or not after the board of education of a school district issues bonds under the provisions of section 7625 et seq. of the General Code for the purpose of constructing a school building or buildings in an amount estimated by the board to be sufficient to completely construct said buildings, the board of education is authorized to issue additional bonds under section 7629 to complete such buildings in the event that it turns out that the proceeds of the bonds issued under section 7625 et seq. are not sufficient for the purpose of constructing said building to completion.

This question has been answered squarely in the negative by my predecessors, Hon. T. S. Hogan and Hon. E. C. Turner. Before discussing or otherwise further noting the opinions of Mr. Hogan and Mr. Turner on this question I desire to note briefly the statutory provisions involved in the consideration of the question presented.

Section 7629 General Code authorizes the board of education of a school district to issue bonds of the school district without a vote of the electors for the purpose of obtaining or improving school property in anticipation of income from taxes, for such purposes, levied or to be levied from time to time as occasion requires. Under this section, however, the board of education may not in any one fiscal year issue bonds in an amount greater than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills on the tax duplicate valuation of the school district for the year next preceding.

Section 7625 General Code and sections immediately following authorize the board of education of a school district on a vote of the electors thereof to issue bonds "to purchase a site or sites to erect a schoolhouse or houses, to complete a partially built schoolhouse, to enlarge, repair or furnish a schoolhouse, or to purchase real estate for playground for children, or to do any or all of such things," in such amount as is estimated by the board of education to be necessary to accomplish the particular purpose or purposes of the bond issue. Under this section, however, before the board of education can submit to the electors the proposition of a bond issue in any amount for the purpose or purposes named therein the board must find and determine that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of section 7629 are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose.

Mr. Turner in his opinion, which is found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1915, at page 536, held that where a board of education of a school district submits the question of a bond issue to a vote of the electors of the district under authority of and in compliance with the requirements of sections 7625 et seq. of the General Code for any of the purposes mentioned therein, said board by submitting said bond issue for an amount of money which said board estimates will be sufficient for the purpose exhausts its authority for this particular purpose when the issue is approved by the electors and the bonds are issued and sold, and that said board of education can not thereafter provide an additional sum of money for the same purpose by an issue of bonds under the authority of section 7629 General Code. Mr. Turner's opinion was addressed to the same question here presented, to-wit, that of the power and authority of a board of education to issue bonds without a vote of the electors under section 7629 General Code for the purpose of obtaining sufficient money to complete a school building, for the construction of which bonds had previously been issued by the board of education on a vote of the electors under section 7625 General Code and in an amount then estimated by the board to be sufficient to construct such school building.

Carrying the reason advanced by Mr. Turner for his conclusion on the question there, as here, presented to its logical end the same would deny to a board of education the authority to issue bonds on a vote of the electors of the school district for the purpose of obtaining money to complete a school building constructed to its present condition out of the proceeds of a previous issue of bonds by the board of education on a vote of the electors of the school district. I do not find myself able to subscribe to this conclusion in view of the fact that "to complete a partially built schoolhouse" is one of the specific purposes for which bonds may be issued on a vote of the electors under said section 7625.

Mr. Hogan, addressing himself to this question in an opinion found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1912, volume II, page 1200, says:

"Although the question is not free from doubt I am of the opinion that after action has once been taken under section 7625 action under section 7629 cannot thereafter be taken for the same purpose. Putting it in another way, when a board of education has sought and received the approval of the electors upon an issue of bonds for the purpose of improving or constructing school property it cannot thereafter issue other bonds without the approval of the electors for the same purpose."

In the particular case under consideration by Mr. Hogan it appeared that bonds had been issued and sold by the board of education of the school district on the approval of the electors and the amount thus realized having been found to be insufficient for the purpose, the question of an additional issue for this purpose was twice submitted to the electors and defeated. Thereupon the question was presented to the Attorney-General whether or not additional bonds could be issued by the board of education without a vote of the electors under section 7629 General Code, and the answer of Mr. Hogan, as above noted, was in the negative.

It will be noted that Mr. Hogan does not take the position that a board of education may not on a vote of the electors issue bonds for the purpose of obtaining money necessary to complete an improvement after a previous issue of bonds by the board of education on a vote of the electors in an amount estimated by the board to be sufficient to accomplish the purpose. Though not so stated in Mr. Hogan's opinion, the reason suggested on a consideration of said opinion in the light of the facts there under consideration seems to be that when the proposition of a bond issue is submitted to the electors of a school district under section 7625 General Code for any of the purposes therein mentioned the electors in voting on said proposition vote not only on the proposition whether such improvement should be made, but also upon the question of the amount of money that should be expended for the inprovement, and that when the electors vote in favor of such proposition and the amount submitted by the board of education to the electors as sufficient for the purpose to be accomplished the board of education is thereafter without authority to issue additional bonds for the same purpose without the approval of the electors of the school district.

From the standpoint of the taxpayers of the school district this reasoning suggested by the opinion of Mr. Hogan appears strongly to the mind of any person making an honest effort to get to the bottom of the question. However, on a consideration of the statutory provisions applicable to this question I am unable, notwithstanding the forceful reasoning suggested by Mr. Hogan's opinion, to arrive at the conclusion reached by him and Mr. Turner on the question here presented. On a consideration of the provisions of section 7629 and 7625 General Code it is apparent that the purposes for which bonds may be issued under section 7629 are stated in far more general terms than are the purposes for which bonds may be issued under section 7625 General Code. Inasmuch, however, as it appears that before the board of education of a school district can submit the question of a bond issue for any of the specific purposes mentioned in section 7625 to the electors of the school district such board of education must find that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under section 7629 are insufficient for the purpose, this to my mind is direct legislative recognition of the fact that the purposes for which bonds may be issued under section 7629 are at least as broad and inclusive as those stated in section 7625, and that within the limitations of section 7629 bonds may be issued under said section for any of the purposes for which bonds may be issued under section 7625. This legislative recognition is the more significant on the point when we consider that both section 7629 and section 7625 were enacted in their present form by the same act of the legislature (97 O. L. 357, 358). Indeed, inasmuch as bonds issued under section 7629 General Code for the purposes therein mentioned are issued in anticipation of income from taxes for such purposes levied or to be levied from time to time, it would appear that bonds might be issued for any purpose for which moneys in the building fund of the school district or the proceeds of tax levies might be used.

Starting with this proposition and the further proposition, of the correctness of which I feel assured, that a board of education may issue bonds under the provisions of section 7625 General Code under a vote of the electors for the purpose of completing a school building constructed to present condition from the proceeds of a prior issue of bonds under said section with a vote of the electors, let us test the conclusion reached by my predecessors, that such subsequent issue for the purpose of completing such building can not be issued under section 7629 General Code without a vote of the electors, by an application of the provisions of said sections of the General Code to a concrete case. We will suppose that a school district has a tax duplicate valuation for the year 1916 of $5,000,000.00; the board of education of such school district in the year 1917 desires to construct a school building, the estimated cost of which is, say $30,000.00; bonds in the estimated amount for this purpose can not be issued under section 7629 for the reason that by the limitations of said section bonds can not be issued for such purpose in any one year in an amount to exceed two mills of the tax duplicate, which in this case would amount to $10,000.00; and said bonds must be issued, if at all, by a vote of the electors of the school district under section 7625 General Code. If after the expenditure of the proceeds of this bond issue in the sum of $30,000.00 the board of education finds that it will still need the sum of $15,000.00 to complete the school building, it is clear that bonds to raise this amount must again be issued by a vote of the electors under section 7625 General Code, for the amount to be raised is in excess of the amount that can be raised by an issue of bonds under section 7629. Suppose, however, that after the expenditure of the proceeds of the first bond issue in the construction of said school building the board finds that it needs only the sum of, say, $5,000.00 to complete said school building: now, assuming that the board of education has not issued any bonds for any purpose under section 7629 during the year, it is obvious that the board of education can not submit to the electors of the school district the proposition of an additional bond issue in the sum of $5,000.00 for the purpose of completing said school building, and this for the reason that under the provisions of section 7625 before the board of education can submit the proposition of a bond issue to the electors it must find that the amount that can be raised by an issue of bonds under section 7629 will not be sufficient for the purpose.

Now in the case above supposed the sum of $5,000.00 needed to complete said school building is below the limitation for which bonds may be issued in the school district under section 7629, and therefore if, as contended by my predecessors, the additional bonds to complete the school building can not be issued under section 7629 the same can not be issued at all, however much the interests of the school district may demand said school building to be completed, and however much the board of education and the electors of said school district may desire this to be done. To my mind the contention of my predecessors, with all respect to them, leads to an absurd conclusion and one which I do not believe the legislature contemplated in the enactment of the statutory provisions here under consideration. The conclusion reached by me necessarily is that bonds may be issued under section 7629 General Code for the purpose of completing the school building constructed to its present condition from the proceeds of bonds issued by the board of education on a vote of the electors in an amount estimated by the board to be sufficient to construct such building to completion, and this conclusion results in an approval of the bonds of Canton city school district on the transcript before me. In reaching this conclusion I am not as free from doubt as I would like to be and usually am in opinions rendered by me with respect to the validity or invalidity of bond issues purchased by you subject to my approval. However, a question of this kind must be decided one way or the other and my conclusion approving this bond issue with respect to the authority of the board of education of Canton city school district to issue said bonds represents my best judgment in this matter.

I might add that the proceedings relating to this bond issue were conducted by Messrs. Peck, Shafer & Peck, of Cincinnati, Ohio, who are bond attorneys of high standing, but if on a consideration of the whole situation you should think, in view of all that has been said upon the question, that the validity of this bond issue is not as free from all doubt as may be desired with respect to bond issues purchased by you, this department could not, of course, take any exceptions to action upon your part rejecting these bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEE—WHEN REQUIRED TO GIVE BOND.

A township trustee is not required to give bond before the first day of January after his election, when his term of office begins, but must give bond before entering upon the discharge of his duties as such township trustee.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1918.

HON. DAVID A. WEBSTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Bryan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you ask my opinion upon the following state of facts regarding certain township trustees in your county:

> "The trustees that were elected in November last, two of them never filed their bond with the clerk, or took their oath of office until the 7th day of this month. One of the trustees was a candidate at the election and did not file his expense account as provided by statute."

You desire to know whether vacancies exist in these two offices of township trustee, by reason of the fact that they did not take their oath of office or file their bonds until after the date of the beginning of their term.

Section 3268 G. C. provides:

> "Three trustees shall be elected, biennially, in each township, who shall hold their office for a term of two years, commencing on the first day of January next after their election."

Section 3269 G. C. provides:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of his duty, each township trustee shall give bond to the state for the use of the township, with at least two sureties, who shall be residents of the same township with the trustee, in the sum of five hundred dollars, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duty as trustee. Such bond shall be approved by a justice of the peace of the township in which the bond is given."

Section 3263 G. C. provides that after the election of township officers, the township clerk shall make a list of all the officers, stating the offices, and add thereto:

> "* * * a requisition that they severally appear before him, or some other officer authorized to administer oaths, and take the oath of office, and give bond as provided by law. * * *."

Section 3265 G. C. provides:

> "If after receiving notice of his election or appointment, a person elected or appointed to a township office fails to take the oath of office and give bond within the time required by law, he shall be deemed to have declined to accept, and the vacancy shall be filled as in other cases."

Section 7 G. C. provides:

> "A person elected or appointed to an office who is required by law to give a bond or security previous to the performance of the duties imposed on him by his office, who refuses or neglects to give such bond or furnish such security, within the time and in the manner prescribed by law, and in all respects to qualify himself for the performance of such duties, shall be deemed to ha e refused to accept the office to which he was elected or appointed, and such office shall be considered vacant, and be filled as provided by law."

I have been unable to find any provision of law fixing the time for giving the bond, except that in section 3269 G. C., which is that it must be done "before entering upon the discharge of his duty."

While it is true that section 3268 G. C. provides that the term of the township trustees commences on the first day of January, there is no provision, as there is in the sheriff statute, that the official bond shall be given prior to a day fixed. It was by reason of the express provision of law that required the sheriff to give a bond "within ten days after receiving his commission and before the first Monday of January," that the supreme court in State ex rel. Poorman v. Commissioners, 61 O. S. 506, held that a vacancy was occasioned.

I think your situation is governed by the decision of the court in State ex rel. v. Nash, 65 O. S. 549. In this case mandamus was sought on the theory that a vacancy had arisen in the office of infirmary director because a bond had not been given prior to the first day of January, when the term of the infirmary director commenecd. The court at p. 553 says:

> "An infirmary director must give bond 'before entering on the discharge of his duties' * * *. The term of office of an infirmary director begins on the first Monday of January; but the actual discharge of the duties of such office does not necessarily begin with his term. The petition does not show that Hill performed any official duty prior to the giving of the bond on January 7, 1902, which was the day after the first Monday in January * * *."

The syllabus of this case reads:

> "An infirmary director is not required to give bond before the first day of January, when his term of office begins, but must give bond before entering on the discharge of his duties as such infirmary director."

The facts in your communication do not show that the township trustees in question attempted to discharge any of the duties of their office prior to the date on which they filed their bond and took their oath of office. Under the authority of the case of State ex rel. v. Nash, supra, it is my opinion that the fact that they had not filed their bond would not create a vacancy, since they had not entered upon the discharge of their duties. As I understand your communication, this was the question submitted.

You further state that one of the trustees did not file his expense account as provided by the corrupt practices statute. While that might be a cause for removal, although I am inclined to believe that the statute is directory and that he could still file such expense account, it would not occasion a vacancy in the office.

Trusting this fully answers your inquiry, I am,

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN FRANKLIN AND JEFFERSON COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of January 24, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions on the following improvements:

Franklin county—Section F, Columbus-Lancaster road, I. C. H. No. 49.

Jefferson county—Section A, Skelly-Empire road, I. C. H. No. 378.

I have carefully examined said final resolutions, find same correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—MAY PERFORM NO OTHER WORK EXCEPT OFFICIAL DUTIES—FEES—DEPUTY SURVEYOR—MAY PERFORM WORK FOR PRIVATE PARTIES OUTSIDE OF WORKING HOURS—FEES—COMPENSATION—EXPENSES.

1. The county surveyor must devote all his time to the performance of the duties of his office and therfore can not under any circumstances perform work for private parties, unless this work is made by statute a part of his official duties, in which event the fees collected therefor must be turned into the county treasury.

2. The deputy or assistant of the county surveyor can not perform any work for private parties during office hours, unless said work has been made by statute a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, in which event the fees received for said work must be turned into the county treasury.

3. The deputy or assistant of the county surveyor outside of office hours may perform work for private individuals which is not a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, and may receive pay for the same; but this work must be done so as not to interfere in any way with the performance of public duties, and in such a manner as not to impair in any measure the efficiency of the deputy or assistant.

4. In the performance of work for private parties by a deputy or assistant of the county surveyor, which work by statute has been made a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, the deputy or assistant is entitled to the expenses therein incurred, but in doing the work for private parties which is not a part of the official duties of the surveyor, said deputy or assistant is entitled to no money from the public for expenses incurred therein. The matter of such expense is between the deputy or assistant and party for whom the work is done.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1918.

HON. MILTON HAINES, Prosecuting Attorney, Marysville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 4, 1918, in which you request my opinion on the following state of facts:

> "I am in receipt of a copy of a notice directed to the county surveyor by the county auditor by order of the county commissioners, that he, Chas. E. Blain, county surveyor, report the amount of money collected for making surveys, etc., for private parties, or labor other than official county work from the 29th day of June, 1917, to date, and from now on a monthly report of same as directed by section 7181 (107 O. L. 110).
> Mr. Blain replies that he understands that he can not make surveys, etc., for private parties without paying in the amounts to the county treasury monthly, but that he turns this part of the work over to his deputy, Mr. W. P. Beightler, who is a regularly appointed deputy, drawing a set amount from the county treasury, and that he is entitled to the amounts collected as well as livery to and from said private surveys, etc., giving as his reason that the above named section or any other sections of Ohio laws do not specify that a deputy surveyor shall not be permitted to do private surveying and collect the money therefrom for his own use, and that section 7181 (105-6 O. L. 612) allows for livery, meals, etc."

While your question has particular reference to deputies and assistants of the county surveyor, it will assist us to briefly consider the provisions of law relating to the county surveyor himself.

The following provision is found in section 7181 G. C. (107 O. L. 110):

> "The county surveyor shall give his entire time and attention to the duties of his office and shall receive an annual salary to be computed as follows: * * *."

So it is seen that the county surveyor has no authority to do private work unless said work is made a part of the duties of his office.

A further examination of section 7181, supra, will disclose that there is certain work of a private nature which is made a part of the duties connected with the office of county surveyor, the section providing:

> "* * * When the county surveyor performs service in connection with ditches or drainage works under the provisions of sections 6442 to 6822 inclusive of the General Code of Ohio, he shall charge and collect the per diem allowances or other fees therein provided for, and shall pay all such allowances and fees monthly into the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund. * * *."

The duties of the county surveyor, however, as set forth in said sections 6442 to 6822 inclusive, are in the main, if not entirely, public in nature; that is, they are duties which the county surveyor performs in the main for the county commissioners.

Said section 7181 further provides:

"* * * The county surveyor shall do likewise when he performs services under the provisions of sections 2807 to 2814 inclusive of the General Code of Ohio."

The duties prescribed in these sections are purely personal or private, being performed for private individuals, and the services performed for private individuals become a part of the duties of the office of county surveyor, and therefore said surveyor is authorized to devote a part of his time and attention to the performance of these duties, although the fees he receives therefor must be turned into the county treasury.

It must be distinctly understood, however, that outside of the provisions set out in said section 7181, relative to work for private individuals, the county surveyor has no authority to do work for private individuals, even though he should turn the fees received therefor into the county treasury. His entire time must be given to the duties of his office. Therefore, unless the statutes make work for private parties a part of the duties connected with the office of county surveyor, said surveyor is not under any circumstances authorized to do said work.

We will turn now to deputies and assistants to the county surveyor. If the duties of the office are such that the county surveyor can not perform them alone, he is entitled to deputies and assistants.

Section 2787 G. C. (107 O. L. 70) provides:

"* * * the county surveyor shall file with the commissioners of such county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning on the first Monday of September next succeeding and their aggregate compensation. * * *."

Section 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70) provides:

"The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, * * *."

It is evident from the above quoted sections that the surveyor has authority to employ only such deputies and assistants as may be necessary to enable him to perform the duties of his office. He has no authority, neither is he warranted in law, to employ deputies and assistants, whose services are paid for by the county, to engage in private employment. If he has more deputies and assistants than he needs for the proper performance of the duties of his office, he should discharge some of them. If he has no greater number employed than will enable him to perform well the duties of the office, then their time should not be given to work entirely outside the duties of the office, which would be at the expense of the public. The public pays for their time and is entitled to it.

With this in mind, what rule should apply when the duties set forth in section 7181, supra, are performed by a deputy or assistant, for private parties? Exactly the same rule as applies to the surveyor. In fact it is the surveyor that performs the duties, through a deputy or assistant, and the fees collected for the performance of such work must be turned into the county treasury, whether the work is done by the county surveyor personally or through his deputies and assistants. The expenses of the deputies or assistants, incurred in the performance of the duties set out in said section 7181, would be taken care of in the same manner as are other expenses of the county surveyor or his deputies or assistants in the performance of other duties connected with the office of said surveyor.

But what about the deputy or assistant performing work for private parties which is not under the law made a part of the duties of the county surveyor? What rule should apply here? Exactly the same rule as applies to the county surveyor. The deputies or assistants have no authority to perform work for private parties unless said work is made by law a part of the duties of the office of county surveyor, even though the fee should be turned over to the county treasury. The county surveyor is elected and the deputies and assistants are appointed to perform the official duties of the office. For this they are paid. To this they must give their time and attention.

We come now to the consideration of another matter, viz., the work which deputies and assistants to the county surveyor might perform for private parties outside of office hours. We are all well aware that there are certain hours in every office known as office hours, and that ordinarily the officers elected, together with their deputies or assistants, are free at the close of said hours.

In so far as the surveyor is concerned, the law is clear to the effect that he must devote all his time to the performance of the duties of his office. Under this provision he can not under any circumstance, as said before, perform work for private parties unless by said statute said work is made a part of his official duties. But there is no such a provision as this relative to deputies and assistants of the county surveyor.

I desire to call attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on May 4, 1916, and found in Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General or 1916, p. 769. The second paragraph of the syllabus of said opinion reads as follows:

> "A deputy county surveyor or an employe in the county surveyor's office may lawfully perform services for a municipality or for a private individual and be compensated therefor, provided all the work for such municipality or private individual is performed outside of business hours, and with the further qualification that the amount of time devoted to such outside work must not be so large as to interfere in any way with the performance of public duties or impair in any measure the efficiency of the deputy or employe."

I concur with this opinion of my predecessor, but do not believe it should be extended in the least beyond the principle therein set forth, namely, that the deputy or assistant of a county surveyor should not under any circumstances perform work for private parties during office hours, unless said work is a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, in which event the fees received by the deputy or assistant would be turned over to the county treasury, under section 7181 G. C. It is my view that if the work performed for private individuals is not a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, the deputy or assistant of the county surveyor cannot under any circumstances perform the same during office hours, but may perform them under the conditions set forth by my predecessor, and receive pay therefor.

Mr. Turner in his above mentioned opinion states at p. 771:

> "I am fully aware that a situation under which the deputies and assistants may accept private employment, is subject to grave abuse, and would prefer to reach the conclusion that outside employment may not be accepted under any circumstances, if I were able so to do."

I might say that I am of the opinion the legislature had in mind this grave abuse and therefore greatly limited the right of the surveyor and his deputies and assistants to accept private employment. I further desire to say that in the event the deputies and assistants of the county surveyor do perform work for private parties outside of office hours, they are not entitled to any expense whatever incurred in the performance of said duties. This is purely a private matter between the deputy or assistant and the one for whom the work is done, and the public is not held responsible for the expenses so incurred.

Hence answering your question specifically, I desire to lay down the following propositions:

1. The county surveyor must devote all his time to the performance of the duties of his office and therefore can not under any circumstances perform work for private parties, unless this work is made by statute a part of his official duties, in which event the fees collected therefor must be turned into the county treasury.

2. The deputy or assistant of the county surveyor can not perform any work for private parties during office hours, unless said work has been made by statute a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, in which event the fees received for said work must be turned into the county treasury.

3. The deputy or assistant of the county surveyor outside of office hours may perform work for private individuals which is not a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, and may receive pay for the same; but this work must be done so as not to interfere in any way with the performance of public duties, and in such a manner as not to impair in any measure the efficiency of the deputy or assistant.

4. In the performance of work for private parties by a deputy or assistant of the county surveyor, which work by statute has been made a part of the official duties of the county surveyor, the deputy or assistant is entitled to the expenses therein incurred; but in doing work for private parties which is not a part of the official duties of the surveyor, said deputy or assistant is entitled to no money from the public for expenses incurred therein. The matter of such expense is between the deputy or assistant and the party for whom the work is done.

The above opinion is rendered and conclusions drawn on the theory that the deputy to whom you refer is a regularly employed deputy and not one who works simply a part of the time. To be sure, the deputy, if employed for part time only by the county surveyor, would be entitled to accept private employment under the conditions set out in the opinion during the time he is not employed by the surveyor.

In other words, the deputy would be entitled to accept private employment outside of business hours.

Further, inasmuch as the county surveyor is compelled to devote all his time and attention to the duties of his office, it would not be lawful for him to turn over to his deputy strictly private work, on the theory that the fees received for the same would be divided between the deputy and the surveyor.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—ELECTION—TERM—STATUTES—WHEN CONTEXT SHOWS WRONG WORD USED PROPER ONE WILL BE DEEMED TO BE SUBSTITUTED.

Where one word has been wrongly used for another and the context affords the means of construction, the proper word will be deemed substituted or supplied.

In section 4726 G. C., where provision is made that three members of a board of education shall be elected for THREE years, an error is apparent and the phrase therein should read "shall elect two members of the board of education for two years and three members to serve for FOUR years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of January 8, 1918, you request my opinion as follows:

> "In Bristol township, this county, the schools were centralized under section 4726-1, General Code, and in accordance therweith the probate judge appointed a school board of five members, and the first township election thereafter was held on November 6, 1917.
> Said section 4726-1 provides that the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board for two years and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections thereafter, their successors shall be elected for four years. The election for township officers in Ohio is to be held in the odd numbered years. That being true, how will it be possible to elect three members at the expiration of their terms of three years, as provided in said section 4726-1? If the election for three members be held at the expiration of the three year term, the election would be held in November of 1920 and every four years thereafter, which would not be the years for the election of township officers.
> Kindly advise if you think that this section is proper or whether a mistake has been made in the drafting thereof."

Section 4726-1 G. C. provides:

> "In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school district may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township districts, or of special school districts therein, without interfering with the existing school district organization until the result of the election shall have been determined. If at such election in any township a majority of all the votes cast shall be in favor of centralizing the schools in said township, the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township, without delay, by selecting from the several boards of education thus consolidated five suitable persons, giving each former district its fair representation in such selection, which such five persons so selected shall constitute the board of education for said township until the first township election thereafter; at such first township election thereafter the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board of education for two years, and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years. If a majority of the electors in such township vote against said centralization at the time above designated, then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

The object of the above legislation is to provide centralization for the schools of a township in which townships there are two or more school districts, and it is provided that the qualified electors of such township may vote on the question of the centralization of the schools of the districts within such township. If, however, such centralization election carries, then it is provided that the probate judge of the county shall create a school board for the entire township centralized district, by selecting from the several boards of education five suitable persons and that the successors of said five persons shall be elected at the first township election after they have been so selected by such probate judge, two for the term of two years and "three members to serve for three years," and that at the proper elections thereafter three successors shall be elected for four years. Members of boards of education are elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in odd numbered years (section 4828). So that the proper elections after said first election would be the elections which were held in odd numbered years. It is provided in various sections of the General Code that the first election for members of a board of education in a district may be for what is commonly called a short or long term, that is, for two or four years. To illustrate, section 4736-1 provides that the successors of the members of a board of education of a new district which is appointed by the board of county commissioners shall be elected at the first election for members of a board of education held in such district after they have been so appointed by the board of county commissioners, "two members to serve for two years and three members for four years"; and again, in section 4709, it is provided that in a village district "at the first election in such district a board of education shall be elected, two members to serve for two years and three members to serve for four years." It is also provided in section 4745 G. C. that the terms of office of members of each board of education shall be for four years. So that, the entire scheme of school legislation, as far as the election of members of boards of education are concerned, is that when the terms are so arranged that all members do not finish their term at once but there is a continuity of service, then the term of any and all members of boards of education shall be four years and that the members of such board shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November in odd numbered years. It seems to me that it is clearly apparent that an error was made when said section 4736-1 was enacted and that what the legislature intended to do was not to provide that three members should be elected for three years, but that three members should be elected for four years. It would be an error which the scrivener or printer could easily make, having used the word "three" before "members," to also use the word "three" before "years" in the same sentence and in such close proximity, but when it is considered that the term "proper election" is used immediately thereafter in the same sentence and for the term of four years, it is impossible to reconcile the same other than to conclude that the use of the word "three" preceding "years" is clearly a mistake.

Mistakes will not be permitted to defeat the object of legislation, and Lewis, in his edition of Sutherland on Statutory Construction, section 410, says:

> "Legislative enactments are not any more than any other writings to be defeated on account of mistakes * * * provided the intention of the legislature can be collected from the whole statute. * * * Where one word has been erroneously used for another * * * and the context affords the means of construction, the proper word will be deemed substituted or supplied."

In this instance the intention of the legislature is gathered from the act itself, that is, that a school board for a new district is being provided for and after making provision that the members should be appointed by the probate judge, then provision is made how the election of their successors shall be had; so that the terms of all the members will not terminate at the same time, and the fact, as noted by the author, supra, that the word "three" was used erroneously instead of the word "four" will not be permitted to defeat the clear intention of the legislature, but the word "four" will be substituted for the word "three" in said section. To the same effect is found the language in 36 Cyc., page 1126, where the following language is used:

> "Mere verbal inaccuracies or clerical errors in statutes in the use of words * * * will be corrected by the court whenever necessary to carry out the intention of the legislature as gathered from the entire act."

A few of the many cases in which a similar holding has been made should be briefly noted:

In Haney v. State, 34 Ark., 263, the second branch of the syllabus reads:

> "Where it is obvious that the legislature did not intend to use a particular word written in a statute, and it is further apparent what word they did intend, the courts will correct the mistake by substituting the word intended for the one used."

In that case a statute had been amended and the word "fifth" had been used as designating the Monday in January and July when court should open in a particular county. Eakin, J., on page 269, says:

> "The mistake is obvious on the face of the act. It is very true, as a general rule of construction, that where the language of an act is plain and unambiguous, the courts must give it effect, as it stands, or declare the law unconstitutional. But this rule is subject to much qualification and does not apply to cases of plain clerical errors, where it is obvious that the legislature did not intend to use the word as written, and it is further apparent what word they did intend. A mistake of this nature may be corrected by the courts, upon as sound principle as a mistake in a deed. It is not judicial legislation nor judicial interference with the legislative will. It is in support of the legislative will, and wholly distinct from the reprehensible practice of warping legislation, to suit the views of the courts as to correct policy. The only conditions to be observed in the exercise of this power of literal correction are, that the courts should be thoroughly and honestly satisfied of the legislative intent, irrespective of the policy of the act.
> It would be frightful if, in a case like the present, the business of all the courts of a circuit should be delayed by such a mistake, and the rights of litigants thrown into confusion until the next session of the legislature, for the want of this wholesome power, which is constantly applied to the contracts of individuals. Such is not the meaning nor spirit of our constitutional provision that the different departments should be independent of each other. They should respect the constitutional will and intention of each other, and that being clearly ascertained, should act in consonance therewith."

In Palms, et al. v. Shawano County, et al., 61 Wisc. 211, the court had under consideration a statute which contained a description of certain lands. On page 215, Taylor, J., says

"We think it is clearly apparent that the word 'south' was a mere clerical error and was intended to be 'north.' The word 'south' destroys all sense in the description; the word 'north' makes it sensible and makes the boundary complete. With the word 'north' inserted the line would read—the township line between townships 30 and 31, and the last course would read the place of beginning and make the boundary complete. * * * The court will inspect the whole act, and, if the true intention of the legislature can be reached, the false description will be rejected as surplusage, or words substituted, in the place of those wrongfully used, which will give effect to the law."

In the case of Loper v. State, 82 Minn. 71, a criminal statute was being considered. Lovely, J., says, at page 73:

"In copying section 7869 there was an evident oversight in leaving out the words 'that steals a horse or horses from any person' so that, standing alone, it seemingly provides for a bounty for the conviction of any or every crime of which any person may be convicted. It is easy to see how this mistake might have occurred. In the haste of copying from section 7869, where the word 'person' is repeated, the eye of the engrossing clerk evidently passed too rapidly over the omitted words to this word (person) where it next occurred, and thus omitted the words intended to be retained. * * * Legislative enactments are not to be defeated on account of mistakes, errors or omissions provided the intentions of the legislature can be collected from the whole statute and the title and its history may be referred to for that purpose."

In The People ex rel. v. Hoffman, 97 Ill. 234, it was held in the second branch of the syllabus:

"The words capias ad satisfaciendum, in section 5 of the chapter relating to judgments, decrees and executions, which provides that no execution shall issue against the body except in certain cases, or unless the defendant shall have been held to bail upon a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, as provided by law, etc., are construed to mean capias ad respondendum, that being the evident intention of the legislature."

"A capias ad satisfaciendum is defined to be a judicial writ of execution, which issues on the record of a judgment, and by the writ the sheriff is commanded to take the body of the defendant in execution, and him safely to keep, so that he have his body in court at the return of the writ to satisfy the plaintiff his debt and damages. * * * There is no such thing known to the law as a defendant being held to bail under a capias of this character; but, on the other hand, it may be regarded as the final process, which imprisons until the judgment is discharged. When the legislature, therefore, said that no execution shall issue against the body of the defendant * * * unless the defendant shall have been held to bail upon a writ of capias ad satisfaciendum, that body did not mean what it said, nor did it intend to say what it did. But the legislature evidently intended to say, unless the defendant shall have been held to bail upon a writ of capias ad respondendum. A capias of this character is a writ commanding the sheriff to take the body of the defendant, if he may be found in his bailiwick or county, and him safely keep, so that he may have him in court on the day of the return to answer to the plaintiff of a plea of debt, trespass, etc., as the case may be. * * * This construction of the statute renders it consistent, harmonious and intelligent, but should it be construed literally as it reads, then no intelligent meaning can be gathered from it * * * Statutes must be interpreted according to the intent and meaning, and not always according to the letter. A thing within the intention is within the statute, though not within the letter; and a thing within the letter is not within the statute unless within the intention. * * * We are of the opinion that in the construction of the section of the statute, supra, the words ad satisfaciendum should be rejected, and the words ad respondendum should be inserted in their stead."

In the case of Ex parte Hedley, 31 Calif. 108, the last branch of the syllabus reads:

"Where there is an evident mistake in the use of a word in a section of a statute, and it is apparent what was the word intended, it will be read as though the intended word was inserted."

The court on page 114 says:

"The word 'without' occurs twice in this provision, but it is apparent that in the instance in which it is used last, the word 'within' was the word really intended. The provision must therefore be so read."

A number of decisions in our own state also follows the above view. In Sawyer v. State ex rel., etc., 45 O. S. 343, the act of the legislature created a new judicial circuit district and provided for three additional circuit judges, one for the new eighth and two for the old sixth circuit, and contained a provision that such additional judges should be elected "on the first Tuesday of November next," but there was no machinery for holding such election nor was there any adequate machinery to be found in any of the general provisions of the statutes in relation thereto. It was held that the clause fixing the time for the election of the new judges was surplusage, should be disregarded and the general provisions of the statutes for the election of circuit judges on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November applied to such new judeships.

Owen, C. J., in delivering the opinion, quoted from Moore v. Given, 39 O. S. 663, as follows:

"That the law does not require vain, absurd or impossible things of men is one of its favorite maxims; and it is the plain duty of the courts, in the interpretation of a statute, unless restrained by the rigid and inflexible letter of it, to lean most strongly to that view which will avoid absurd consequences, injustice and even great inconvenience; for none of these can be presumed to have been within the legislative intent."

In the case of Tracy v. Card. 2 O. S. 431, Thurman, J., delivering the opinion of the court, said:

"While, on the one hand, the judiciary should be careful not to make its office of expounding statutes a cloak for the exercise of legislative power, on the other hand, it is equally bound not to stick in the mere letter of a law, but rather to seek for its reason and spirit, in the mischief that required a remedy and the general scope of the legislation designed to effect it."

In the last above mentioned case the word "administrator" was by construction incorporated into an act and inserted after the word "executor," as this seemed to the court to be within the clear legislative intent.

In State ex rel. v. Atchibald, Sheriff, 52 O. S., page 1, the act of the legislature provided that a successor "shall be elected on the first Tuesday after the second Monbay in November," but the court held that there was a mistake and that the statute meant that the election should be held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November, as is provided by law. On page 9 the court uses the following language:

> "If there is such error or mistake, and the intention of the legislature can be ascertained, the error or mistake should be corrected by the court."

An almost endless line of authorities is cited along the above line by text writers and in the digests, but the above is sufficient, we think, for this opinion.

Following the principles above set forth as to the construction of said section 4726-1, I advise you that the word "three" which precedes "years" in the phrase "three members to serve for three years," shall be read "four" so that the whole phrase in relation thereto will read "shall elect two members of the board of education for two years and three members to serve for four years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT—MAY NOT FURNISH ASSISTANCE TO COUNTY SURVEYORS TO PREPARE MAPS—HOW COUNTY SURVEYOR MAY OBTAIN ASSISTANCE TO PERFORM SAID WORK—ENGINEER FROM STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT MAY BE HIRED BY COUNTY SURVEYOR.

1. The state highway department has no authority to furnish assistance to the county surveyors in the preparation of the maps provided for under section 1187 G. C. and pay for such assistance out of the funds appropriated for the expenses of the state highway department.

2. Under sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70), the county surveyor is authorized to employ the necessary assistants and draughtsmen to enable him to prepare said maps, with the condition that the total amount expended by him for all office help does not exceed the amount allowed by the county commissioners of his county or the common pleas court thereof.

3. A county surveyor can employ an engineer connected with the state highway department, to assist him, and pay him for said services, provided the work done by said engineer is performed outside of business hours and at such times as in no way to interfere with the duties which he owes the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 8, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "I desire to have your opinion as to whether or not this department can legally expend money for the hire of extra help for making, or for correcting, county highway maps which are required to be made, or corrected, by the county surveyor under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., but which the surveyor is unable to furnish to the satisfaction of this department, (1) from funds which are appropriated by the legislature for the maintenance of the state highway department, and (2) from funds which are allowed by the emergency board for mapping work in connection with the preparation of maps under the provisions of sections 2284-1 and 2284-2.

In case this department is unable to secure timely, or reliable, or satisfactory mapping work under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., what legal recourse would you suggest in order to prevent busy, or delinquent, or incompetent county surveyors from holding up the publication of such maps as is contemplated under the provisions of sections 2284-1 and 2284-2?

Also I desire your opinion on the following point: Would it be legal and proper for a county surveyor to temporarily hire and pay an engineer who is regularly employed in the state highway department, for the purpose of having him make a county highway map, which said surveyor is required to make under the provisions of section 1187 G. C., with the understanding that the time put in by such engineer would be extra time outside of the required eight hours per day service rendered to this department?"

Briefly stated, your question is as to whether the state highway department would be permitted to furnish assistance to the county surveyors in connection with their duties as set out in section 1187 G. C., and pay those who render assistance out of funds appropriated either by the legislature for the maintenance of the state highway department, or by the emergency board for the making of maps; and if the state department can not do this, whether a county surveyor would be permitted to employ an engineer in the state highway department, and pay him for his services, provided said services were renderd outside of business hours.

"The state highway commissioner or chief highway engineer, may call upon the county highway superintendent, at any time, to furnish a map or maps of of the county showing distinctly the location of any rivers, railroads, streams, township lines, cities, villages, public highways and deposits of road material, together with any other information that may be required by said commissioner or engineer. Such information shall be furnished in such form as the state highway commissioner may require. A copy of such maps, plats or other information shall be kept on file in the office of the county highway superintendent."

This section provides that the maps must be furnished by the county surveyor, complete; that is, the maps must contain the information in such form as the state highway commissioner may require. This makes it obligatory upon the county surveyor to furnish the state highway commissioner with maps of the kind and character suggested by said commissioner. This work becomes a part of the duties of the office of the county surveyor, just the same as any other duties which the surveyor is required by law to perform. The maps so furnished should conform to the regulations of the highway commissioner.

Hence, inasmuch as these are duties which rest with the county surveyors, the state highway commissioner is not required to furnish or assist in furnishing said maps. Such is not a part of the duties of said commissioner. Therefore he would not be authorized to assist in doing said work. If he is not authorized to assist in doing the work, he could not pay for the assistance rendered, out of moneys appropriated for the maintenance of his department, or from any funds provided for him by the emergency board to enable him to perform the duties devolving upon him under sections 2284-1 and 2284-2 G. C.

The next question to be considered is whether the county surveyor could employ assistants to assist in the preparation of said maps. Sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70) control the matter of assistants to the county surveyor.

Said section 2787 provides that the county surveyor shall file with the county commissioners of each county a statement of the number of all necessary assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in his office for the year beginning on the first Monday of September next succeeding his report and their aggregate compensation.

Section 2788 provides that:

> "The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation * * *."

There is but one condition attached to the right of the county surveyor to appoint the necessary assistants, deputies, etc., viz., that the total compensation paid by him for office help must not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners or allowed by a judge of the court of common pleas of the county.

From the provisions of these two sections, it is my opinion that a county surveyor could employ assistants or draughtsmen to help him in the preparation of maps specified in section 1187 G. C., and pay for the services so rendered, under the condition that the total amount paid for all office help shall not exceed the amount allowed by the county commissioners or the common pleas court of the county.

If this be true, we can pass to the next question which naturally arises, as to whether a county surveyor can under the law employ an engineer who is regularly in the employment of the state highway commissioner, to assist him in the making of said maps, provided the work is done by the engineer outside of business hours; or possibly the question had better be stated in this form: Whether such an engineer would be authorized to accept such employment, if performed under the above mentioned conditions.

There is no statutory provision to the effect that the engineers in the employment of the state highway department shall devote their entire time to the duties of their office, and there is no provision of law which forbids said engineers from accepting the employment outside of business hours or outside of the time which they owe the state under the rules and regulations of the state highway department.

Under practically similar provisions of law I held in opinion No. 969 that a deputy county surveyor could, outside of business hours, accept employment from municipalities or private individuals, provided it be done under such circumstances and conditions as not to interfere with the performance of his duties in the surveyor's department. In rendering this opinion I concurred in an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner on May 4, 1916, to Hon. T. B. Jarvis, Prosecuting attorney, Mansfield, Ohio, and found in Vol. I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 769. The last branch of the syllabus of said opinion reads as follows:

> "A deputy county surveyor or an employe in the county surveyor's office may lawfully perform services for a municipality or for a private individual and be compensated therefor, provided all the work for such municipality or private individual is performed outside of business hours, and with the further qualification that the amount of time devoted to such outside work must not be so large as to interfere in any way with the performance of public duties or impair in any measure the efficiency of the deputy or employe."

On page 771 Mr. Turner used the following language:

"It should also be observed that it is within the power of the county surveyor to prevent abuses along this line, and it is the duty of that official to see that his deputies and assistants do not perform work for third persons during business hours or devote to such work an amount of time such as to interfere with the performance of public duties or impair the efficiency of the service due the county."

While I concurred in this opinion of Mr. Turner, yet I held that the limitations and restrictions therein set out by him should be strictly followed by the county surveyors and their deputies, when the deputies accept private employment or employment with municipalities.

I am of the opinion that the principle of law relating to county surveyors and their deputies would apply to the matter about which you inquire, and that an engineer of your department might be employed by a county surveyor to assist him in making such maps as might be required by your department, and that he can be paid by the county surveyor for the services so rendered, under the limitations above set out. But I believe that the services rendered should be kept strictly within the conditions and under the terms set out in the above quoted opinion of my predecessor, and that you, as the head of the state highway department, should exercise such care that the duties which the engineers owe the state will not be impaired to any extent because of the assistance they render the county surveyors in the preparation of said maps.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF KENT STATE NORMAL COLLEGE AND HERWIG & GRAU.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 28, 1918.

HON. JOHN E. MCGILVREY, President, Kent State Normal College, Kent, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully examined the contract entered into between the board of trustees of the Kent state normal college and Kerwig & Grau, of Kent, Ohio, for the installing of heating plant equipment in Merrill hall, said contract having been entered into on the 15th day of January, 1918, and calling for the sum of $11,164.00. I have also examined the bond securing said contract.

Finding the contract and bond to be in compliance with law and having received the certificate of the auditor of state that there are funds sufficient for the payment of the same, I have this day approved the contract and filed the same, together with the bond, in the office of the auditor of state.

I am herewith returning you the other bids which were submitted to me.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LAW RELATING TO DOG TAX DOES NOT CREATE ANY NEW OR DIFFERENT KIND OF A DEPUTY SHERIFF—COMMISSIONERS REQUIRED TO TAKE ADDITIONAL SERVICE INTO ACCOUNT WHEN FIXING DEPUTY HIRE.

The act of the legislature in reference to the dog tax and requiring the county commissioners to provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions thereof, does not create any new deputy or different kind of deputy from those already existing. The sheriff is required to perform the services necessary to enforce the act and this he does by himself or through regular deputies.

The provisions require the county commissioners to take the additional services into account when fixing the amount of deputy hire allowed the sheriff in the regular manner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1918.

HON. JOHN V. CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On December 22, 1917, you addressed the following request to this office for an opinion:

> "Will you kindly advise me what is meant by that provision of section 5652-8 General Code relating to the registration of dogs as amended in 107 O. L. at page 536, which reads as follows:
> 'The county commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act.'
> I am in doubt, first, as to whether these deputies are to be appointed by the sheriff as those provided under section 2830 or appointed in a different manner and when appointed are they special deputies for a particular purpose who can not be used interchangeably with the deputies regularly appointed under section 2830 for general purposes in the sheriff's office.
> Second. Are the deputies provided for in this act to be paid in the same manner as the deputies regularly appointed under section 2830—out of the sheriff's fee fund—or in some other manner and out of some other fund?
> Third. Does the language 'shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs' mean that the county commissioners shall make an allowance for the compensation of these extra or additional deputies made necessary by the additional burden cast upon the sheriff by reason of this law pertaining to dogs, when they fix the aggregate sum to be expended for deputies, etc., for the year commencing January 1st and thereafter under section 2980 of the General Code?"

On December 15, 1917, I addressed an opinion to Hon. Perry Smith, prosecuting attorney of Muskingum county, in which a greater part of what you ask is answered, and a copy of that opinion is herewith enclosed to you.

You ask three questions. The first relates to the manner of appointing the deputies to the sheriff to carry out the provisions of this act and is fully answered in the opinion referred to.

A discussion of your second question taken in connection with the same opinion will render any discussion unnecessary as to your third. Let us therefore address the discussion to your second question—whether the deputies are to be paid in the manner already provided for the pay of deputy sheriffs out of the sheriff's fee fund or in some other manner.

These deputies are not different from other deputies. To state it more correctly, there is no deputy provided by law specially to perform the duties required by this statute. Those duties are to be performed by the sheriff. Section 7 of the act (section 5652-7 G. C.) states:

"County sheriffs shall seize and impound all dogs * * *."

The same section contains the following:

"Upon affidavit made before a justice of the peace, that a dog more than three months of age and not kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel is not wearing a valid registration tag and is at large, or is kept harboured in his township, such justice of the peace shall forthwith order the sheriff of the county to seize and impound such animal. Thereupon such sheriff shall immediately seize and impound such dog so complained of. Such sheriff shall forthwith give notice to the owner of such dog, if such owner be known to the sheriff, that such dog has been impounded, and that the same will be sold or destroyed if not redeemed within four days. If the owner of such dog be not known to the sheriff, he shall post a notice in the county court house," etc.

All of the duties as to seizing dogs and disposing of them are contained in this section, and no mention is made of anybody but the sheriff, who is directly referred to five times. Immediately following this is section 8 (section 5652-8 G. C.) making provision for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of the act.

Now it is perfectly plain that the sheriff would not in all counties do this dog catching, etc., himself, but would do it by deputy, so that taking the two sections together, and the whole act for that matter, it is plain that there are to be no special deputies for this particular duty. If the sheriff gets another deputy on the strength of this law he would be simply a deputy like any other deputy. If the sheriff sees fit to assign this branch of work to one particular deputy no objection is apparent, but that would in no manner change the legal status of a sheriff or any of his deputies. These deputies, if they be appointed, being the same as other ordinary deputies it remains to determine whether the provisions requiring the commissioners to provide for their employment means that it is to be provided for in any other manner or at any other time than with reference to other deputies. The statute itself is silent as to any such difference. The whole act simply provides additional duties for the sheriff not theretofore done which might require additional deputy hire. These duties are to be performed by the sheriff and by ordinary deputies. No express statement is contained in the law that the provision for deputies is to be in any other manner than that already specifically provided.

Therefore, on the plain rules of interpretation the case is presented of the application of a law already in force to new cases provided by a new law but coming within the general terms of the old, and the statute would be construed to mean that the commissioners in making the annual provision for deputies of the sheriff would take this work into account. This might be thought to leave the present season unprovided for and the provision might be construed as meaning that special provision was to be made this year to carry the law into effect, and that this particular provision would have no permanent effect inasmuch as in the nature of the case it is necessary for the commissioners to consider all of the duties of the sheriff when annually making provision for deputies. However, an examination shows that there is nothing in the nature of this particular case requiring this unusual interpretation. Although this act became a law and went into force ninety days after the thirty-first of March, by its terms nothing is to be done under it until this January. The first registration is to occur on the first of January after the passage of the act, which is New Years, 1918. The last of July was the last opportunity to submit the act to a referendum, and in fact it is well known to every one that there can not be a referendum unless measures toward that end are taken some weeks in advance of the going into effect of the law.

The provision of section 2980 General Code is:

> "On the twentieth of each November such officer shall prepare and file with the county commissioners a detailed statement of the probable amount necessary to be expended for deputies * * * of their respective offices, showing in detail the requirements of their offices for the year beginning January 1st next thereafter with the sworn statement of the amount expended by them for such assistants for the preceding year. Not later than five days after the filing of such statement, the county commissioners shall fix an aggregate sum to be expended for such period for the compensation of such deputies. * * *."

So that the commissioners must take this duty into account in fixing the amount for the sheriff's deputy hire. A difficulty may be presented by section 2980-1 General Code, which begins as follows:

> "The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies * * * shall not exceed for any * * * sheriff's office * * * an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars * * *" (and a sliding scale for higher amounts).

If this language were effective it might in some instances leave an insufficient amount if the maximum was fixed by law without regard to these new duties. However, if the amount turns out insufficient the statute proceeds:

> "said officer shall make application to a judge of the court of common pleas of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and * * * he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, * * * and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries."

Here is the regular place in the provisions already made for the board of county commissioners to do the thing required in the new act, viz., provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act. The fact that the maximum which the commissioners may allow is not based upon any of the fees for duties under the new act would be a sufficient reason for the judge allowing an additional amount if such maximum amount was insufficient.

It might be further observed that the new statute as to the money collected thereunder does not place it in the fee fund. Section 13 of the act (section 5652-13 G. C.) provides that the registration fees shall constitute a special fund known as the dog and kennel fund which shall be disposed of by defraying the cost of registration and by the payment of animal claims. Section 12 (section 5652-12 G. C.) provides:

> "All costs collected under the provisions of sections 5652-10 and 5652-11 shall be deposited in the county treasury and placed to the credit of the county general fund."

So that none of these funds go into the fee fund. This, however, will not affect the maximum which the commissioners may allow for deputy hire, as under section 2980-1 G. C. the percentage is calculated on the "fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum;" so that next year there will have been nine months of all such fees to be taken into computation. This may require additional calculation and bookkeeping, as the fee fund proper will not show the amount upon which the maximum is to be computed. This is, however, relieved by the provisions of section 2982 G. C., which provides:

> "Each of such officers shall keep full and regular accounts of all official fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances or other perquisites charged or collected by him, and such accounts shall be records of the offices, shall belong to the county, and shall be transmitted by such officer to his successor in office. * * *"

It is further provided that such accounts shall be subject to scrutiny by the commissioners and by the judges of the court of common pleas or any person appointed for that purpose by the judges, etc.; so that in each instance there is a public record convenient for fixing the amount.

I have called attention to all these various intricate provisions not because they have such necessary influence upon the construction of the statute or the determination of the question involved, but because they show that every detail will work out satisfactorily with no change in the existing method of selecting and paying deputies.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF BIRMINGHAM RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, ERIE COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Birmingham rural school district, Erie county, Ohio, in the sum of $5,000.00, on a vote of the electors, for the purpose of completing and equipping school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Birmingham rural school district relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in accordance with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering this issue will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

The bond form submitted as a part of the transcript is not entirely satisfactory to this department and I am therefore holding the transcript until a satisfactory bond form is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

"FOR THE YEAR 1911"—FOUND IN SECTION 3001 MEANS OFFICIAL YEAR OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The phrase "for the year 1911" as found in section 3001 G. C. means official year of county commissioners beginning third Monday of September, 1910, following State v. Lewis, 15 O. N. P., n. s., 582.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 29, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of December 11th, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "We wish to call your attention to what we believe to be a legislative blunder in the language of the first part of section 3001, G. C., as amended 102 O. L., 514. Prior to the amendment of this section there was no ambiguity as to how the salary of a county commissioner should be based. This section as amended seems to fix a minimum of $900.00, and seems to direct the compensation to be paid upon the value of the duplicate as it was on December 20, 1911, but if you will read further down you will find a proviso that says that the compensation shall not be greater than 115 per cent. of the salary paid for the year 1911. Does this latter expression refer to the calendar year of 1911, or does it refer to the official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911? The bureau's attitude has been that the minimum of of $900.00, as provided in the amendment of the section, is inoperative because of the proviso just spoken of, presuming, of course, that the year 1911 means the official year ending on the third Monday of September, 1911.
> In order to understand our attitude we must go back to the enactment of May, 1904, when the county commissioners were placed upon a salary instead of a per diem. The law provided that the salary should be based upon the value of the duplicate as it was on the 20th day of December of the next preceding year. It was held that the law fixing the salary of the commissioners became immediately operative; hence, in order to base the salary it was necessary to use the value of the duplicate as it was on December 20th, 1903, which fixed the salary from May, 1904, until the third Monday of September, 1905. The value of the duplicate as it was on December 20, 1904, therefore, fixed the salary from the third Monday of September, 1905, to the third Monday of September, 1906. The duplicate for December 20, 1905, fixed the salary from the third Monday of September, 1906, to the third Monday of September, 1907. The duplicate for December 20, 1906, fixed the salary from the third Monday of September, 1907, to the third Monday of September, 1908. The duplicate for December 20, 1907, fixed the salary fro'the third Monday of September, 1908, to the third Monday of September, 1909. The duplicate for December 20, 1908, fixed the salary from the third Monday of September, 1909, to the third Monday of September, 1910. The duplicate for December 20, 1909, fixed the salary from the third Monday of September, 1910, to the third Monday of September, 1911.

The Smith one per cent. law resulted in the increase of the duplicate for the tax year 1911, but it was not intended by the legislature that the commissioners should have largely increased salaries by reason of the largely increased value of the duplicate. Therefore, under the law the duplicate for the 20th of December, 1909, was the basis for all future time, unless the legislature changed the method of payment, plus 15 per cent. Or in other words, the salary for the official year ending the third Monday of September, 1912, and for all future years, should not be more than 115 per cent. of the salary paid for the official year ending the third Monday of September, 1911 (at least that is our interpretation), which, as you will see, it was necessary to base upon the value of the duplicate as it was December 20, 1909.

In support of this view we call your attention to the case of State v. Lewis, 15 O. N. P. (N. S.) 582, and we would like your written opinion upon this matter in order that this department may formulate a definite ruling to be observed in all the counties of the state in making a proper basis for the salary of county commissioners, at least in such counties where this matter has been misunderstood, for all future time, or until there is other legislation upon this subject."

Of course the decision to which you refer me is squarely in point. The head note of the case is as follows:

"1. The phrase 'for the year 1911' in section 3001 General Code, as amended May 31, 1911 (volume 102, O. L. 514), means the official year of the county commissioners beginning on the third Monday of September, 1910, and ending on the third Monday of September, 1911; and the phrase 'for the year 1912' means the succeeding official year for said officers, or the first year of the term of those commissioners elected in 1910.

2. The clause 'that the compensation of each county commissioner for the year 1912, and each year thereafter, shall not in the aggregate exceed 115 per cent. of the compensation paid to each county commissioner for the year 1911' is a proviso, and controls and overrides the purview or general provisions of the act fixing the minimum compensation at nine hundred dollars, with an additional compensation of three dollars on each full one hundred thousand dollars of the tax duplicate above five million dollars on December 20, 1911.

3. The compensation paid each county commissioner of Adams county, Ohio, for the year 1911 being seven hundred and fifty dollars, it follows that the compensation of each county commissioner beginning the term on the third Monday of September, 1911, and thereafter is but eight hundred and sixty-two dollars and fifty cents, and any amount drawn from the county treasury above that sum must be refunded."

The opinion of Corn, J., is well reasoned and is adequately epitomized in the head note which has been quoted. To follow this decision is to decide your question. I would not feel justified in rejecting it as a conclusive determination of the question except upon rather clear and convincing grounds. The learned judge had the benefit of the arguments of counsel, which have been denied me. The question itself, to be sure, is not free from doubt and I am not satisfied as a matter of first impression that the decision is correct. Nevertheless it is the decision of the common pleas court, and I am disposed to follow it; the very doubtful nature of the question is one of the reasons which impels me to do so. Another is the fact that the question was decided in one of the counties where the situation was most acute. If it has not been followed in that county the failure to follow it is, in my judgment, morally reprehensible. After its rendition, county commissioners who accepted office therein must have known of it, and the county auditors must, likewise, have been cognizant of what took place. To go on receiving and paying their salaries at the rate which had been condemned by the common pleas court does not appeal to me as proper official conduct.

Of course the question is not res judicata, even in the county where the case was heard; neither does the rule of stare decisis have application, so a court, for example, would necessarily be bound by such a decision. But something like the rule of stare decisis ought, in my judgment, to govern the conduct of executive officers under such circumstances. In that class of officers I find myself.

Therefore, without greater consideration upon the merits of the question than enough to satisfy me that plausible ground existed for reaching the conclusion arrived at by Judge Corn, and supported argumentatively by the bureau, I advise that in your supervision of the accounts of the county officers of the state you should follow that rule.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY AND THE GRAVES & MARSHALL COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have examined the contract submitted by you, which contract was entered into on the 20th day of December, 1917, between the board of trustees of Ohio State Uuniversity and The Graves & Marshall Company, of Dayton, Ohio, for the construction and completion of breeching for boilers in the new power house on the Ohio State University campus, for the sum of $3,389.00, together with the bond securing the same, and finding the same to be in compliance with law, have this day approved the same, and having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there is money available for the purpose, have this day filed the said contract and bond with the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS OF LICKING COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Licking county, Ohio, in the sum of $75,000.00, for the purpose of funding certain indebtedness, bonded and otherwise, of said county which the said county is unable to pay by reason of its limits of taxation.

have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Licking county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue and find the same to be in accord with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds will, when the same are properly signed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county.

No bond form covering said issue was submitted with the transcript, and I am therefore retaining said transcript until said bond form is submitted and approved by this department.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF LICKING COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

RE: Bonds of Licking county, Ohio, in the sum of $4,000.00, for the purpose of paying part of the cost and expense of improving county road No. 25-26 from county road No. 92 to No. 159 in Lima and Jersey townships, said county.

I am herewith returning, without approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Licking county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

The county commissioners have provided for the issue of these bonds for the purpose of paying a part of the cost and expense of the improvement of a road petitioned for January 10, 1917, under the assumed authority of the Braun road law, so-called (sections 6956-1 to 6956-15 G. C.). The statutory provisions under the authority of which this road improvement was initiated were repealed by the legislature in the enactment of the Cass road law, which went into effect September 6, 1915, and inasmuch as the petition for this improvement and the proceedings of the board of county commissioners thereunder do not conform to any statutory provisions now authorizing a board of county commissioners to improve roads upon petition, no alternative is presented in the consideration of this transcript other than to disapprove the bonds and to advise you not to purchase the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE BOARD OF AGRICULTURE—MAY MAKE RULES FOR THE GOVERNMENT OF COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES NOT IN CONFLICT WITH STATUTORY PROVISIONS—INDEPENDENT AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES DEFINED—PUBLIC AID.

Under the provisions of section 1092 General Code, authorizing the state board of agriculture to make rules for the government of county agricultural societies it is not competent to adopt such rules in any manner in conflict with any statutory provision.

It is not competent to pass a rule to have universal application that such county society may not receive a larger sum from the county treasurer than the amount paid out by such society in premiums.

The independent agricultural society provided for in sect on 9880-1 General Code is not different from the regular county or district agricultural society, but draws its public aid upon a different basis.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1918.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 7, 1918, you sent the following request for an opinion to this d partm nt:

> "A number of independent agricultural societies organized under section 9880-1 have sent in their annual financial reports and others are making inquiry relative to action necessary to receive state aid under above section.
> Some of these organizations hold their fairs on the streets as agricultural street fairs, others as pumpkin shows and others hold mid-winter shows.
> The total expenditures of some of these societies are less than the state aid that they will receive if same be granted.
> Since the amount to be received by the various agricultural societies is fixed by law, would the following rule, if adopted, by the state board of agriculture be operative or legal?
> 'No certificate shall be issued to any agricultural society for a greater amount than the total amount paid in premiums by any such society.'
> Are all such societies, when regularly organized, eligible to the per capita tax, without regard to amount of premiums offered and paid?
> What constitutes an independent agricultural society in compliance with section 9880-1? "

Your proposed rule must be submitted to the test of the requirements of section 9880-1 which is as follows:

> "When thirty or more persons, residents of a county, or of a district embracing one or more counties, organize themselves into an agricultural society, which adopts a constitution and by-laws, selects the usual and proper officers and otherwise conducts its affairs in conformity to law, and the rules of the state board of agriculture, and when such county or district has held an annual exhibition in accordance with the three following sections, and made proper report to the state board, then, upon the presentation to the county auditor, of a certificate from the president of the state board attested by the secretary thereof, that the laws of the state and the rules of the board have been complied with, the county auditor of each county wherein such agricultural societies are organized, annually shall draw an order on the treasurer of the county in favor of the president of the county or district agricultural society for a sum equal to two cents to each inhabitant thereof, on the basis of the last previous national census. The total amount of such order shall not in any county exceed eight hundred dollars, and the treasurer of the county shall pay it."

This section, by its express terms, gives the right to the required number of persons to organize themselves into an agricultural society, and by proceeding in accordance with its terms, and holding a fair in accordance with the next two succeeding sections, to receive the contribution set out in the statute.

I say "two succeeding sections" although the statute says "three," but section 9883 of the General Code is a mere obsolete remnant that is in the chapter only because it is not dropped out.

Section 9880 General Code is to be read in connection with section 1092, the latter section being found in the chapter on the board of agriculture, and providing the authority for the board to make rules governing agricultural societies. The section reads as follows:

"On the first Tuesday after the second Monday of January of each year, there shall be a meeting in Columbus of the board of agriculture of Ohio, together with the presidents or other authorized delegates of agricultural societies organized under the laws of the state and conducted under the rules of the board of agriculture and holding fairs as provided by law, for the purpose of deliberation and consultation as to wants, prospects and conditions of agriculture throughout the state. The board of agriculture shall provide a uniform method for the election of the directors and officers of all agricultural societies receiving any support whatsoever out of the state or county treasuries and provide general rules and regulations under which such agricultural societies shall be conducted. At such meeting the reports from such agricultural societies shall be delivered to the board of agriculture."

General authority is given the board here to provide general rules and regulations under which such county agricultural societies shall be conducted. These rules may supplement and piece out the statutory provisions, but never set them aside. The rule of the board of agriculture that is contradictory to the statute is, of course, invalid. The statute in this case says that upon the performance of certain conditions they may receive funds. The conditions substantially are that the societies must comply with the law and with your rules. Now you purport by one of those rules to say that they shall not have the fund upon their compliance with the terms of the statute and the other rules but this one, and that they shall not receive the contribution unless they pay out an equal or greater amount in premiums. It is submitted that the statute itself provides the conditions upon which they shall receive the amount, and that this rule not being a rule "under which such county agricultural society shall be conducted" but instead, a rule that unless it secures certain financial results it shall not receive the fund, would be invalid.

It would seem to be traveling around in a circle to say that they should have the money upon compliance with your rules, but that one of those rules is that they cannot have the money.

This brings us to a further consideration of what are the essential requirements to enable them to receive it. The first and principal one is that they must "organize themselves into an agricultural society."

This matter is now in litigation in a proceeding in the supreme court in which this department is defending your department from a claim that you should award the fund in a particular case and is soon to be argued.

Our claim is that these persons must organize themselves into a real agricultural society,—not to go through the requirements of the statutes as a matter of form for the purpose of receiving the fund,—in short that the fund is given to aid the agricultural society instead of agricultural societies being formally organized to get the fund.

If we are right in this contention a question of fact arises in each case calling for your determination. The rule you propose, although it could not be enforced in all cases as such, is undoubtedly a good declaration of policy and seems to be as liberal a test as anyone ought to expect or ask. Of course in rare instances untoward circumstances might make a fair an entire failure and in such cases persons honestly conducting such fair ought not to be penalized for misfortune, but in ordinary cases it would seem like nothing less than brazen effrontery to come up and ask the state to pay all the premiums they promised to give at a fair and give them a bonus beside. The policy of this law is to give state aid to such fairs to encourage the local societies to put their own shoulders to the wheel and make every effort for success, and not simply to give out a gratuity in each instance without regard to what is done locally.

As to these street fairs and pumpkin shows you mention it is doubtful whether they are within the spirit and intent of the act. You will probably have no difficulty in dealing with them, however, as it will be almost impossible for these organizations to comply with the provisions of these statutes, or if they succeed in that it could be rendered absolutely impossible for them to comply with the proper rules your board might make.

A categorical answer to your question, however, as to your proposed rule would have to be in the negative, but it is trusted that the above considerations should be of some assistance to you in giving it a practical enforcement.

You ask another question:

> "What constitutes an independent agricultural society in compliance with section 9880-1?"

The word "independent" as used in this section seems to have no special signification or if any the wrong one for the object of the statute is to get some financial aid for the fair on which it may depend. The substantive part of this act is mostly a repetition of section 9880; the difference comes in in the amount of the bonus and this seems to have been the object of enacting the new section. It is here seen that the section recognizes the existence of a second fair in a county or of another fair in a district composed of counties each of which already has a fair and the word "independent" seems to have been used to express this idea. This is indicated in the provision that where the fund is to be distributed by different counties it "shall be equal to an average amount paid to several county fair boards"—that is to say, that the amount received by these fairs is to be ascertained by adding together the amount paid to other fairs in the district and dividing that sum by the number of fairs and this amount being ascertained it is then to be divided among the different counties in proportion to their populations, so that your question, "what constitutes such independent society" is answered by stating how they arrive at the amount that they are to receive. The independent society is constituted, so to speak, just like the other societies already receiving the subsidy before this enactment.

There seems to have been a notion in the legislative mind that but one society in a county could receive this aid, and if that notion were correct this authorizes a second or possibly an indefinite number to receive the contribution.

There is one other important feature of this section. It only takes in societies that have existed prior to 1915. The section begins:

> "9880 1. When thirty or more persons, residents of a county, or of contiguous counties not to exceed three are organized into an independent agricultural society that has held annual fairs for agricultural advancement previous to January first, 1915, and when such independent society has held an annual exhibition," etc. (returning to the language of theprincipal section).

The sub-section was passed May 5, 1915, and it will be observed not only made no provision for the future organization of such fairs, but if any had been formed in the preceding four months and four days, discriminated against them and left them out. These, then, whose existence began since that date, can receive no financial aid from the county. They are of the same family as the others, but they cannot have the same portion as their elder sisters, or a like dowry, but must live up to their name and be independent. Your department has no concern with them in respect to public aid, for they are dependent on the county or the public for nothing.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CORPORATIONS—MUTUAL CORPORATIONS NOT STRICTLY FOR BENEVOLENT OF CHARITABLE PURPOSES AND HAVING NO CAPITAL STOCK MAY ACQUIRE AUTHORITY TO HAVE CAPITAL STOCK BY AMENDMENT—FILING FEE—FEE FOR FILING ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF COMPANIES ORGANIZED NOT FOR PROFIT.

A corporation organized as a "mutual corporation not strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes and having no capital stock" may lawfully acquire authority to have a capital stock by amendment to its articles of incorporation under section 8719. The fee for filing the certificate of such amendment is the same as that for filing other certificates of amendment and is not based upon the amount of the capital stock thus acquired, being governed by paragraph 9 of section 176 G. C. The procedure for making such amendment is the same as that in other cases.

The fee for filing articles of incorporation of companies organized not for profit but having a capital stock is governed by paragraph 1 of section 176 and is the same as that exacted of corporations for profit.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 30, 1918.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 15, 1918, requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"The Akron I. O. O. F. Company was incorporated October 13, 1917, as a corporation not for profit, and paid a fee of $25.00 for filing its articles, which evidently was charged by virtue of paragraph 4 of section 176 G. C.

At the time of the incorporation, it was the intention of the incorporators to have a provision in their articles for $100,000 capital stock, but through oversight it was left out. It is the desire of the company now to make provision for $100,000 capital stock.

If this is done by virtue of section 8719 of the General Code, amending the articles, what fee should be charged and what course of procedure should be followed?

Kindly advise us in regard to the question, in view of the following provisions of section 176 of the General Code: Paragraph 1, paragraph 5 so far as it relates to 'corporations not organized for profit and not mutual in character,' and paragraph 9.

In giving your opinion, also advise us what is the proper fee to be charged for a corporation organized not for profit and not mutual in character, having a capital stock. Is the fee for filing articles of such a corporation to be governed by paragraph 1 or paragraph 5 of section 176 G. C.? "

You do not appear to raise any question as to the legality of inserting in the articles of incorporation the provision for a capital stock by amendment thereof. However, I may say that in my judgment this may lawfully be done. Though section 8719 has been recently amended in 107 O. L. 414, nothing in said amendment affects the questions thus raised as the new matter inserted in the section thereby does not touch the question. However, the section now provides and always has provided that there may be added to the articles of incorporation by amendment "anything omitted from, or which lawfully may have been provided for originally" with the qualification, however, that "the authorized capital stock of a corporation shall not be increased or diminished by such amendment."

It is clear, of course, that a corporation may be organized not for profit without a capital stock and that such a corporation may have a capital stock. Snyder, et al v. Chamber of Commerce, 53 O. S. 1. Therefore, it would seem to be perfectly lawful for a corporation not for profit, originally organized without a capital stock, to add to its articles of incorporation a provision for a capital stock, unless such an addition would amount to an increase of the authorized capital stock of the corporation within the meaning of the limiting clause in section 8719. The form which your questions take suggests the only reason which occurs to me for giving an affirmative answer to this question. It may be that one of the purposes of the legislature in thus limiting the functions of an amendment to the articles of incorporation was to make sure that the procedure of amendment might not be used to avoid the payment of fees which would accrue to the state if other procedure available for an increase of capital stock might be taken.

When reference is had to the provisions relating to the increase of capital stock, section 8698 G. C., it appears that this procedure is available only to corporations already having a capital stock.

Section 176 of the General Code hereinafter to be referred to, in referring to the fee for filing a certificate of increase of capital stock, must be taken, I think, to refer to such certificates as are authorized by section 8698.

From these considerations it follows, I think that the acquisition of a capital stock by a corporation not theretofore having any capital stock, through the medium of amendment to its articles of incorporation, could not be regarded as an increase of its authorized capital stock.

I therefore conclude that you are right in assuming that it is lawful to accomplish the purposes suggested in your letter by amendment to the articles of incorporation.

Your first question then is as to the fee that should be charged and the course of procedure that should be followed.

I take it that there is no serious question as to the course of procedure that should be followed, that being outlined in detail by the provisions of sections 8720 to 8723 inclusive of the General Code and being the same in short as would be followed in the case of any amendment to the articles of incorporation of a company not for profit. I am advised, however, by letter received from Messrs. Stuart & Stuart, attorneys at law of Akron, that under a misconception stock has already been issued by the company in question. This would raise the question as to whether or not the meeting at which the amendment to the articles is to be adopted should be a stockholders' meeting or a members' meeting. In my opinion the meeting should be a meeting of members and the membership should be determined in the same manner as the membership of similar corporations not having capital stock would be determined. The holders of the prematurely issued stock as such should be ignored in the procedure.

Coming now to the question respecting the fee I quote the following provisions of section 176 of the General Code:

> "The secretary of state shall charge and collect the following fees for official services:
> 1. For filing articles of incorporation whose capital stock is ten thousand dollars or under ten dollars; of a corporation whose capital stock is over ten thousand dollars one-tenth of one per cent. upon the authorized capital stock of such corporation.
> 4. For filing articles of incorporation of a mutual life insurance corporation having no capital stock; or of other mutual corporations not organized strictly for benevolent or charitable purposes and having no capital stock twenty-five dollars except as hereinafter provided.
> 5. For filing articles of incorporation formed for religious, benevolent or literary purposes; or of corporations not organized for profit and not mutual in their character or of religious or secret societies; or societies or associations composed exclusively of any class of mechanics, express, telegraph, railroad or other employes and formed exclusively for the mutual protection and relief of members thereof and their families two dollars.
> * * * * * * * * * *
> 9. For filing an amendment to articles of incorporation twenty cents for each hundred words, but in no case less than five dollars.

In my opinion neither paragraphs 1, 4 nor 5 as above quoted are applicable to the case at hand. Having decided that the proper procedure is a certificate of amendment it is plain that the official action required of the secretary of state could in no wise be regarded as the filing of articles of incorporation. Inasmuch as each of the first three paragraphs above mentioned prescribes a fee for filing articles of incorporation it is manifest that none of these can apply to the case. It follows necessarily that paragraph 9 states the fee which is to be charged.

Of course this holding makes it possible for a corporation not for profit but intending to have a large capital stock to evade the payment of fees which it might otherwise be obliged to pay (assuming a given answer to the second question which you ask) by incorporating without a capital stock and then amending its articles so as to acquire a capital stock. If this were true, however, it would constitute no objection to the result at which I have arrived in the legal sense. It would simply be a possibility which the general assembly in providing for the schedule of fees chargeable by the secretary of state had overlooked.

Your second question was considered by my predecessor Hon. Edward C. Turner in an opinion to the secretary of state under date of May 12, 1915, Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year at page 719, in which he came to the conclusion that paragraph 1 of section 176 governs the filing fee of corporations having a capital stock which if they had no capital stock would come under paragraph 5 of the section. Of course there is no question as to paragraph 4 thereof as the phrase "having no capital stock" occurs therein. The effect of its omission from the second clause of paragraph 5 was considered by Mr. Turner and accounted for upon grounds with which I agree.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE
Attorney-General.

HOW WORN OUT AND BROKEN TOOLS BELONGING TO STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT MAY BE DISPOSED OF.

The disposl of worn out and broken tools belonging to the state highway department is had under section 1231 G. C. and not under section 196-12 G. C., 107 O. L. 425.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 18th, 1918, in which you ask my opinion upon the following:

> "Under the provisions contained in section 1231 G. C. this department has prepared blanks and formulated a plan for the disposal of worn out and broken tools.
> We are somewhat uncertain, however, as to our authority to proceed under the above section because of a possible conflict with the authority now vested in the state purchasing department, particularly under section 196-12 G. C., 107 O. L., page 425.
> I therefore respectfully request an opinion from you as to the authority of this department with reference to the sale or exchange of machinery, tools or equipment which through wear have become unfit for use."

The question which bothers you arises from the fact that the legislature has established a state purchasing department giving it certain power and authority to purchase necessary supplies and equipment for the different officers and departments of the state and at the same time enacted a provision giving to the state highway commissioner authority to purchase and sell or exchange certain supplies and equipment used in his particular department. Your difficulty arises particularly with reference to section 196-12 G. C. (107 O. L. 425) which reads as follows:

> "The state purchasing agent shall establish a state exchange department. Whenever any supplies or equipment in any department of the state are not required for use in such department or whenever any property of the state is to be abandoned or whenever any department of the state is abolished or discontinued the officer in charge of such department or property shall notify > the state purchasing agent thereof. The state purchasing agent shall take possession of such supplies or equipment not required for use or property to be abandoned and all supplies, equipment, records books and papers of such abolished or discontinued department. He shall inventory and appraise such property, supplies and equipment and turn over to the auditor of state such records, papers and books and a copy of such inventory and appraisement. The state purchasing agent shall give the officer, board or commission from whom he receives any supplies or equipment not required for use in a department, credit upon his account for such appraised value. The state purchasing agent may have such supplies or equipment as may come into his hands repaired and placed in as good condition as good management would justify."

Section 196-7 G. C. of this same act gives the state purchasing department the authority to purchase all supplies and equipment for the officers and different departments of the state. There are, however, certain departments and officers specifically excepted from the provisions of this act. At the same time that the legislature has made the provisions as set out above in reference to the powers and duties of the state purchasing agent, it has provided in section 1231 G. C. that:

> "The state highway commissioner is hereby authorized to sell either at private sale, or at public sale, after such notice as he may deem proper, any machinery, tools or equipment that through wear have become unfit for use."

This section also gives him the power to exchange any machinery, tools or equipment for new equipment. Also under the provisions of section 1221 G. C. he is given authority to > "purchase or lease such oilers, trucks, machinery, tools, material and other equipment and supplies as may be necessary" for the repair and maintenance of inter-county highways and main market roads; and section 1231 G. C., from which a quotation was made above, also provides that the state highway commissioner

> "shall have power to purchase such equipment and material and employ such labor as may be deemed necessary to execute any work upon said main market roads."

The question now is as to whether the general provisions found in the act creating the state purchasing department will control in reference to the state highway department or whether the special provisions giving the state highway commissioner the power to purchase supplies and equipment and to sell or exchange the same will control as to said department.

In the outset it must be remembered that the act creating the state purchasing department is general, applying to all the officers and departments of the state with the exceptions therein noted, and of course would include, under ordinary circumstances, the state highway department; while the provisions of sections 1221 and 1231 G. C., above quoted, are specific, referring to one department of the state alone.

The proposition is well established and is universally held by the courts that the provisions of a special act will control in reference to a certain matter rather than the provisions of a general act which might include the same matter for which provision is made in the special act.

There is one thing connected with the two acts which we have under consideration which ought to be particularly noted, and that is that the White-Mulcahy law of which sections 1221 and 1231 G. C. are a part, and found in 107 O. L. 69, was passed on March 20, 1917, and was filed with the secretary of state on March 29, 1917; while the act creating the state purchasing department, found in 107 O. L. 422, was passed on March 21, 1917, and filed with the secretary of state on March 31, 1917. Thus it will be seen that the act creating the state purchasing department was passed, filed and became a law subsequent to the time the White-Mulcahy act was passed, filed and became a law. This being the case, the question might arise as to whether the provisions of the state purchasing act in reference to the purchase, sale and exchange of supplies and equipment, would not repeal by implication the provisions of the White-Mulcahy law, granting power to the state highway commissioner to purchase and sell or exchange supplies and equipment used in the state highway department.

This question will be easily answered, however, if we remember the proposition as set out above that the act creating the state purchasing department is a general act governing all the departments and officers of the state, while the part of the White-Mulcahy act which has to do with the powers of the state highway department in reference to the matters under consideration is special in its nature, referring to one department only.

With this in mind let us note the law that should prevail.

Black, in his work on "Statutory Construction," page 116, lays down this proposition:

> "As a corollary from the doctrine that implied repeals are not favored, it has come to be an established rule in the construction of statutes that a subsequent act, treating a subject in general terms, and not expressly contradicting the provisions of a prior special statute, is not to be considered as intended to affect the more particular and specific provisions of the earlier act, unless it is absolutely necessary so to construe it in order to give its words any meaning at all."

In Crane v. Reeder, 22 Mich. 322, the following proposition is set forth:

> "Where there are two acts or provisions, one of which is special and particular, and certainly includes the matter in question, and the other general, which, if standing alone, would include the same matter and thus conflict with the special act or provision, the special act must be taken as intended to constitute an exception to the general—especially when such conflicting provisions are contemporaneous in their passage."

The latter part of the above quoted matter is especially applicable to the matter in hand, for the two acts under consideration were passed almost contemporaneously, only a day or two intervening between the passage of the acts and the filing of the same with the secretary of state.

In State ex rel. v. Bishop, treasurer, 41 Mo. 16, the court say:

> "When the mind of the legislature has been turned to the details of a subject and it has acted upon it, a subsequent statute in general terms, or touching the subject in a general manner, and not expressly contradicting the original act, will not be construed as intended to affect the more particular or positive previous provisions unless it be absolutely necessary so to do in order to give any meaning to the words of the later statute. The law does not favor a repeal of statutes by implication."

Our own supreme court in State ex rel. v. The Mayor, et al., 14 O. S. 472, lays down this proposition in the fifth branch of the syllabus:

> "It is an established rule in the construction of statutes that a subsequent statute, treating a subject in general terms, and not expressly contradicting the provisions of a prior act, shall not be construed as intended to affect more particular and positive provisions of the prior act, unless it be absolutely necessary to do so in order to give its words any meaning."

From all the above it is quite evident what answer should be given to the question propounded by you. The provisions of the White-Mulcahy act giving your department the power and authority to purchase supplies and equipment and to sell or exchange the same, should be given force and effect, notwithstanding the provisions of the act creating the state purchasing department having to do with the same matter, viz.: purchasing, selling and exchanging supplies and equipment for the different officers and departments of the state.

Hence, you will govern your acts in reference to the above matters by the provisions of the sections of the General Code which apply directly to your department, and not by the provisions of the act creating the state purchasing department.

To be sure the principle herein enunciated applies only to such supplies and such equipment in reference to which you are given the specific power and authority to purchase, sell or exchange. In other respects your department would be controlled by the state purchasing act just the same as are all other departments of the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS—PETITION FOR SAME FILED WITH COUNTY COMMISSIONERS.

The provisions of sections 6887 to 6889 inc.. G. C. (107 O. L. 73) to a certain extent take the place of the provisions of section 6958 G. C. as it stood before the enactment of the Cass highway act. Said three sections provide for the filing of a petition with the board of county commissioners, while section 6958 G. C., prior to this enactment provided for filing a petition with the board of township trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1918.

HON. ROY R. CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Steubenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 19, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "Under section 6950 (6958) G. C., before the enactment of the Cass road law, there was a specific provision whereby a person desiring to have a township road laid out from his plantation, dwelling house, mill, quarry, mine, etc., could petition the township trustees. This statute was repealed by the Cass road law.
> What is there, if anything, in the present road law that gives an individual a right in corresponding cases to petition the township trustees? Concretely the question that has arisen is this:
> A:, who owns a farm, has opened a mine over the hill far distant from his outlet to the county road, and in a place where it is practically impossible for him to build a road up the hill and across his farm to the present outlet. Where the mine is located it is a short distance across a field to another public road. In the present law I am unable to find any provision that warrants the trustees to entertain a petition from said A."

In your communication you refer to section 6950 G. C. as it stood prior to the enactment of the Cass road law. You undoubtedly had in mind section 6958 G. C., which related to the matter you have in mind.

We will consider what has been the general scheme and plan of the legislature, in reference to altering, laying out, changing and vacating roads, prior to and since the enactment of the Cass highway law. Prior to said enactment the general scheme seemed to have been that the county commissioners should have jurisdiction over altering, laying out, changing and vacating county roads, as provided in section 6860 et seq. G. C., and especially in section 6861, which prior to the enactment read as follows:

"Section 6861. Applicants for laying out, altering changing the width of, or vacating a county road shall be by petition to the county commissioners, * * "; while section 6860 provided:

"Section 6860. County roads hereafter laid out and established shall not be less than thirty nor more than sixty feet wide. * * *."

The above quotations apply to county roads only, but when we come to section 6957 et seq. G. C., as they stood prior to the enactment of the Cass law, we find that the township trustees were given jurisdiction in altering, laying out, changing and vacating township roads. Section 6957 provided:

"Section 6957. Township roads hereinafter laid out and established shall not be less than sixteen nor more than sixty feet wide * * *."

The sections following provided the manner in which township roads might be altered, changed or laid out. For instance, section 6973 G. C. provided that:

"The trustees of a township, upon petition for that purpose, may alter or change the direction of a township road * * *."

The provision to which you refer formed a part of this general scheme, in which the township trustees were given jurisdiction over establishing, etc., township roads, and was found in section 6958 G. C. and read as follows:

"Section 6958. A person, desiring to have a township road laid out from a plantation, dwelling place, mill or house of public worship, or to the cemetery, burial-ground or public road, or from one public road to intersect another, or from a tract of wild land or timber land, stone quarry, coal mine or mineral land, other than petroleum or natural gas land, to a railroad or railroad station, or from a railroad station to a township, county or state road, or saw-mill, shall petition the trustees of the proper township, after giving thirty days' previous notice thereof, by advertisement posted up in three public places within the township, setting forth therein the time when the petition is to be presented, the place of beginning of such road, the intermediate points, if any, and the place of termination thereof."

As hereinbefore stated, this general plan and scheme was radically changed when the Cass law was enacted. The power and jurisdiction of the township trustees in altering, vacating, establishing and laying out roads seem to have been entirely taken away from them and is now in the county commissioners as to all roads excepting inter-county highway and main market roads.

Section 6860 of the Cass law now reads:

> "The county commissioners shall have power to locate, establish, alter, widen, straighten, vacate or change the direction of roads as hereinafter provided. This power extends to all roads within the county, except the inter-county and main market roads."

From the fact that the legislature has repealed all those sections which gave jurisdiction to the township trustees in locating, establishing, altering, vacating or changing the direction of township roads, and has enacted nothing to take the place of the sections so repealed, and from the further fact that the county commissioners are given jurisdiction over locating, etc., all roads within the county, except inter-county and main market roads, it is clear that the intent of the legislature was that the township trustees have no jurisdiction in the matter set out in section 6860. Said section was not modified by the White-Mulcahy act which is now the law of the state.

In making the above general observations, I am not unmindful of the provisions of section 3298-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 73), wherein provision is made as follows:

> "* * * The township trustees shall have power to widen, straighten or change the direction of any part of a road in connection with the proceedings for its improment."

But it is evident that this power does not extend further than simply to a change that may be necessary, due to a road improvement under said section and those following.

We come now directly to the question which you submit, as to whether there is any provision of the Cass highway act or of the White-Mulcahy law, which takes the place of the provisions set out in section 6958 G. C. prior to the Cass law.

After a careful study of these two acts, I feel safe in making the statement that there is no such provision as that found in section 6958 as it stood prior to the enactment of the Cass law, which covers the filing of a petition with the township trustees, in which the request is made that a township road be established.

However, there are provisions very similar to those found in section 6958 as it formerly read, which are contained in the chapter of which section 6860 G. C. is now a part. Those provisions are found in sections 6887 to 6889 inclusive, G. C. These sections were first enacted as a part of the Cass act, and in accordance with the general scheme of things provide for the petition's being filed with the county commissioners, rather than with the township trustees. The provisions in these three sections are the only ones with which I am familiar, that in any way take the place of those formerly found in section 6958 G. C.

I entered into a full discussion of these three sections in opinion No. 535, rendered by me to Hon. G. O. McGonagle on August 15, 1917, and I am enclosing copy of said opinion. I stated in said opinion that it is doubtful whether these sections could be held constitutional, for the reasons therein set out.

Since rendering said opinion to Mr. McGonagle, I have been informed that a certain common pleas court in the state—I think of Licking county—has held these sections to be unconstitutional.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, it is my view that there are no sections of the General Code, other than sections 6887 to 6889 inclusive, which take the place of section 6958 as it originally stood, and, as said before, under these sections the petition must be filed with the board of county commissioners, instead of with the board of township trustees. I might suggest that section 6889 G. C. was amended in the White-Mulcahy law, as found in 107 O. L. 73.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF KENMORE VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTICT, SUMMIT COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 31, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio
GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Kenmore village school district, in the sum of $140,000.00, for the purpose of constructing and equipping school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Kenmore village school district, Summit county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE—BY BOARD OF EDUCATION OF CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT —HOW CANVASS OF RETURNS OF VOTE ON SAID PROPOSITION MADE—DISAPPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF SPRINGFIELD CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

The canvass of the returns of the vote at an election in a registration city on the proposition of a bond issue submitted by the board of education of the city school district is governed by the provisions of section 5120 General Code, and the canvass of the returns of the vote at such election should be made by the board of education in the manner therein provided and the result entered on the records of such board. The provisions of section 5115 General Code do not apply to the canvass of the returns of the vote at such election.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 1, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Springfield city school district in the sum of $160,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing site for and erecting school houses therein and to enlarge, repair and furnish school houses in said district.

I am returning to you, without my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Springfield city school district relating to the above bond issue.

The issue of bonds in question is provided for by a resolution duly adopted by the board of education of said school district pursuant to an affirmative vote of more than a majority of the electors of said school district, at an election on the proposition of said bond issue held under the authority of section 7625 General Code on the sixth day of November, 1917, due notice of said election having been given in accordance with the provisions of section 4839 General Code, which provides that the clerk of each board of education shall publish a notice of all school elections in the manner therein provided. The only material question arising on the consideration of the transcript relating to this bond issue is one with respect to the manner in which the returns of the vote cast at said election was canvassed. The transcript shows that such returns were canvassed by a board of canvassers consisting of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of Clark county and the city auditor of the city of Springfield. It is manifest that this canvass was made in accordance with the provisions of section 5115 General Code, and assuming that Springfield is a registration city within the meaning of said section a question still remains whether the canvass of said election is governed by the provisions of said section or by the provisions of section 5120 General Code. These sections of the General Code read as follows:

> "Section 5115. In registration cities the returns of the election of municipal officers, members of boards of education or justice of the peace shall be made to the board of deputy state supervisors of the county in which such city is located, and canvassed by a board of canvassers, consisting of such board of deputy state supervisors and the city auditor."
> "Section 5120. In school elections, the returns shall be made by the judges and clerks of each precinct to the clerk of the board of education of the district not less than five days after the election. Such board shall canvass such returns at a meeting to be held on the second Monday after the election, and the result thereof shall be entered upon the records of the board."

Section 5115 General Code was enacted as a part of an act entitled "An act to revise the laws of Ohio relating to the conduct of elections," passed April 23, 1904, and approved by the governor on said date. The provisions of section 5115 General Code were enacted as a part of section 2966-8 Revised Statutes as the same was amended by said act. Said section of the Revised Statutes as amended in so far as applicable to a consideration of the question at hand read as follows: (97 O. L. 224.)

> "In November elections for township or municipal officers, or boards of education, or the election of a justice of the peace, the judges and clerks of election in each precinct shall make and certify the returns to the clerk of the township or the clerk or auditor of the municipality in or for which the election is held, or the clerk of the board of education of the school district, instead of to the deputy state supervisors, and the said township clerk, or the clerk or auditor of the municipality, or clerk of the board of education, shall canvass the vote and declare the result in the manner, and as provided in sections 1453, 1729 and 3910 of the Revised Statutes, and in case of an election of a justice of the peace, shall certify the result to the board of deputy state supervisors; but in municipalities where the voters are registered the returns of the election of municipal officers or boards of education or justices of the peace shall be made to the board of deputy state supervisors, and canvassed by a board of canvassers, consisting of the board of deputy state supervisors and the city auditor."

The provisions of section 5120 General Code were enacted by the general assembly in an act entitled "An act to provide for the organization of the common schools of the state of Ohio", passed April 25, 1904, and approved by the governor the same day. The provisions of section 5120 General Code were enacted as a part of section 3970-10 Revised Statutes as amended in said act. Said section 3970-10 Revised Statutes as thus enacted read as follows: (97 O. L. 354.)

> "The election of members of boards of education shall be governed and controlled by the general election laws of the state. There shall be separate poll books and tally sheets used for all elections for school purposes, and the ballots of the electors at said elections shall be deposited in a separate ballot box. In city school districts the ballots for each subdistrict shall contain the names of the candida es for member of the board of education from such subdistrict and also the names of the candidates to be elected at large. Returns of all school elections shall be made to the clerk of the board of education not less than five days after the election, and it shall be the duty of the board of education to canvass said returns at a meeting to be held on the second Monday after the election, and the result thereof shall be entered upon the records of the board; in case of a tie vote, the same shall be decided by said board of education, by lot."

In so far as there may be any conflict in the provisions of these enactments with respect to the question here made it is clear, I think, that effect must be given to the provisions of the act in which the present provisions of section 5120 General Code were enacted, as the later act. Both of these acts took effect on approval of the governor and so far as any conflict in their respective provisions is concerned the act last approved by the governor is the effective law.

State ex rel. v. Halliday, 63 O. S. 165;
Drum v. Cleveland, 13 N. P., n. s., 281, 290;
Lukens v. Nye, 156 Cal., 498;
Stuart v. Chapman, 104 Me., 17.

However, I am unable to see any necessary conflict in the provisions of sections 5115 and 5120 General Code with respect to this question, and, consistent with established rules of statutory construction, I am convinced that proper effect may be given to both sections.

It is a well recognized principle of statutory construction that if there are two statutory provisions, whether enacted as a part of the same or different acts, one of which is special in its application and clearly includes a particular matter, while the other is general in its application and would, if standing alone, include the particular matter also, and if reading the general provision side by side with the special provision the inclusion of the particular matter in the former would produce a conflict between it and the special provision it must be taken that the latter was designed as an exception to the general provision.

Gas Co. v. Tiffin, 59 O. S. 420, 441.

Applying this principle of construction to a consideration of the application of sections 5115 and 5120 General Code, the latter appears as a general provision which if standing alone would govern the matter of canvassing the returns in all school elections in all school districts in the state and in the election of members of the board of education, as well as all special questions or propositions submitted. On the other hand, the provisions of section 5115 General Code are special, applying only in registration cities and in the election of the particular officers therein named.

Consistent with the rule of construction before noted, the provisions of section 511 General Code govern in the matter of the canvass of the returns in the particular elections therein provided for, notwithstanding such matter might otherwise be within the provisions of section 5120 General Code, but inasmuch as the special provisions of section 5115 General Code do not reach the matter here under consideration, to wit, the manner of canvassing the returns of the votes cast on the proposition of a bond issue submitted by the board of education of the school district, the only conclusion consistent with the application of the established rule of statutory construction above noted is that said matter is governed by the provisions of section 5120 General Code, which, as will be noted, requires the canvass in such case to be made by the board of education and the result thereof entered upon the records of said board.

Having reached this conclusion with respect to the application of section 5120 General Code to the matter at hand, I may observe that although I am of the opinion that the provisions of this section, in so far as they prescribe the time within which the board of education shall make a canvass of the returns in school elections, are directory rather than mandatory, I am equally convinced that a mandatory duty rests upon the board of education to make such canvass and enter the result thereof on the records of the board before it is authorized to take any further steps carrying into effect the authority granted to it by the vote of the electors of the school district.

I am of the opinion therefore that by reason of the failure of the board of education of Springfield city school district to canvass the returns of the vote on this bond issue election, the board had no lawful authority to adopt the resolution providing for the issue of said bonds and that for this reason said bond issue is invalid and should not be purchased by you.

The conclusion reached by me that the provisions of section 5120 General Code rather than those of section 5115 General Code apply to the canvass here in question accords with that reached by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion addressed to the secretary of state under date of February 1, 1915 (Opinions of Attorney-General, 1915, volume I, page 72).

For the reasons above stated, my opinion to you is that the above issue of bonds should not be purchased on the present legislation of the board of education of said school district.

Since writing the above, I am advised that the board of education of Springfield city school district has corrected its procedure with respect to the matter of the canvass of the vote of the election at which the bond issue was authorized, and has adopted a new resolution providing for the issue of said bonds and has made a new offer of same to you.

Under the circumstances, the proper procedure will be for you to adopt proper resolutions, rescinding your purchase on the first offer, and, if you so desire, adopt a resolution providing for the purchase of the bonds on the new offer made to you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CEMETERIES—MONEY RECEIVED BY CITY FOR CEMETERY PURPOSES—MONEY DERIVED FROM SELLING LOTS IN CEMETERY—SURPLUS FUNDS RECEIVED BY CITY FOR PURPOSE OF KEEPING IN ORDER AND EMBELLISHING CEMETERY—HOW THESE FUNDS HELD AND DISPOSED OF.

Money received by a city for purpose of a cemetery, under the provisions of sections 4160 et seq. General Code, shall be held as a separate and distinct fund.

The part of the selling price of lots in a city cemetery which is received for the purpose of reimbursing the city for the purchase price of the land used in said cemetery may be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund for the purpose of providing for the payment of bonds issued to make such purchase.

Where surplus funds are received by a city for the purpose of keeping in order and embellishing a city cemetery, and for the purpose of caring for lots in said cemetery, the earnings upon the investment of such funds cannot be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund for the purpose of paying bonds issued to pay the purchase price of the land used in said cemetery.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 2, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your inquiry of January 10, 1918, is received, in which you submit for my opinion the following questions:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> We are enclosing you herewith a communication received today from the city solicitor of Lorain, Ohio.
> It has been the opinion of this bureau that owing to the laws governing cemeteries that it is much better to have the cemetery fund as a separate and distinct fund and not as a part of the public service fund.
> '1. It is legal, is it not, for a city to hold the accounting of the cemetery fund as a separate and distinct fund under the guidance of council, for which council can appropriate the same as for any other municipal fund?
> The city of Lorain owns a cemetery which is no longer available and has puchased new cemetery grounds from the proceeds of a bond issue of $20,000.00. We would call your attention to section 3704 G. C., relative to transfer to the sinking fund of moneys received through the sale of properties acquired by bond issue. Also to section 3804 G. C., relative to transfer to sinking fund of any unexpended balance in bond issue funds. We also call your attention to cemetery laws as set forth in sections 4160 et seq. G. C., together with the opinion of Attorney-General Hogan under date of May 27, 1912, recorded in the Annual Reports of 1912, page 1747, and would state that upon opening the sale of lots in the new cemetery, the city of Lorain will receive probably a great deal more money than will be necessary in the near future or at any time for cemetery requirements.
> 2. Can the city legally transfer a portion of such receipts to the sinking fund trustees to apply upon the bonds? You will bear in mind, of course, that the sale of cemetery lots is not an actual sale of property but is a sale of the rights of usage of such property.
> 3. Can the city, in case such surplus funds are invested, as governed by law, turn a portion of such earnings on investments over to the sinking fund trustees to apply upon the bonds?' "

You call attention to the opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, Attorney-General, under date of May 27, 1912, as shown at page 1747 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912. The syllabus of this opinion is as follows:

> "Under sections 4167, 4168 and 4169 General Code, the director of public service is authorized to sell cemetery lots and to receive donations for cemetery purposes. All money so received must be turned over to the clerk of council and by him given into the custody of the city treasurer subject to the control and power of the investment of the same by the council.
> The income of such money shall be paid to the director of public service to be by him devoted to cemetery purposes.
> A record of all expenditures, receipts and accounts of these moneys shall be kept by a clerk of the cemetery appointed under section 4170 General Code, by the director."

In another opinion by Mr. Hogan, under date of July 18, 1912, and reported at page 328 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, he holds:

> "In accordance with section 3795 of the General Code all moneys donated for cemetery purposes must be deposited in the municipal treasury to the credit of this specific fund and can only be paid out upon the warrant of the auditor upon the direction of the director of public service."

It is clear from the above holdings that the funds for cemetery purposes should be kept and accounted for as a separate and distinct fund.

Section 3795 General Code, reads as follows:

> "The taxes of the corporation shall be collected by the county treasurer and paid into the treasury of the corporation in the same manner and under the same laws, rules and regulations as are prescribed for the collection and paying over of state and county taxes. The corporation treasurer shall keep a separate account with each fund for which taxes are assessed, which account shall be at all times open to public inspection. Unless expressly otherwise provided by law, all money collected or received on behalf of the corporation shall be promptly deposited in the corporation treasury in the appropriate fund, and the treasurer shall thereupon give notice of such deposit to the auditor or clerk. Unless otherwise provided by law, no money shall be drawn from the treasury except upon the warrant of the auditor or clerk pursuant to the appropriation by council."

This is a general statute covering all moneys received or collected by a municipal corporation and such moneys are to be deposited in the appropriate fund.

Cemeteries under control of a city are governed by the provisions of sections 4160 et seq. of the General Code.

Section 4167 General Code reads as follows:

> "The director of public service shall have entire charge and control of receipts from the sale of lots, and of the laying off and embellishing the grounds. He may receive donations by bequest, devise, or deed of gift, or otherwise, or money, or other property, the principal or interest of which is to be used for the enlargement, improvement, embellishment, or care of the cemetery grounds, generally, or for any particular part or parts, lot or lots therein, as the donor directs, or as the director may from time to time determine if no direction is given. He shall sell lots, receive payment therefor, direct the improvements, and make the expenditures, under such rules and orders as he prescribes, and invest, manage, and control property received by donations and surplus funds in his hands from any source whatever."

Section 4169 General Code reads:

"The director shall turn over to the council property on hand or held by him as a permanent fund, for such purposes under his control, or such money as may thereafter come to him for such purpose, rendering a full statement thereof, by whom, when, and for what purpose paid. The council shall acknowledge receipt thereof in writing to the director signed by its clerk. By resolution duly passed and entered on the minutes of its proceedings, the council shall pledge the faith and credit of the corporation to forever hold such money as a permanent fund, and pay in semi-annual payments, to the director as interest on the funds, sufficient to provide perpetual care of the lot and lots as agreed by the director. The council and its successors shall invest and keep invested such funds in interest bearing debts of the city, if any, and if no such debts are owing by the city, in safe interest bearing bonds, or stocks for the benefit of such cemetery funds, that will bear as great an income as possible, and all such money and the income thereof shall be exempt from taxation, the same as other cemetery property."

This section clearly shows that funds raised for cemetery purposes are to be kept as a separate and distinct fund. This answers your first inquiry.

Your second question is as to the right of the city to set apart a part of the funds received from the sale of lots in a city cemetery for the purpose of providing a sinking fund to pay for bonds issued for the purpose of purchasing the land used for cemetery purposes.

Section 4165 General Code reads as follows:

"The director shall determine the size and price of lots, the terms of payment therefor, and shall give to each purchaser a receipt, showing the amount paid and a pertinent description of the lot or lots sold. Upon producing such receipt to the proper officer, the purchaser shall be entitled to a deed for the lot or lots described therein."

Section 4166 General Code reads as follows:

"No more shall be charged for lots than is necessary to reimburse the corporation for the expense of lands purchased or appropriated for cemetery purposes, and to keep in order and embellish the grounds, and provision shall be made for the interment in such cemetery of persons buried at the expense of the corporation."

In section 4166 supra it is provided that the charge for lots may include an amount necessary to reimburse the corporation for the purchase price of the cemetery lands. Where bonds are issued to make such purchase, the amount so received under section 4166 supra, to reimburse the corporation for the purchase price could not be used for such purpose unless the funds so received were paid into the sinking fund.

Section 4517 General Code reads as follows:

"The trustees of the sinking fund shall have charge of and provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation, the interest maturing thereon and the payment of all judgments final against the corporation, except in condemnation of property cases. They shall receive from the auditor of the city or clerk of the village all taxes, assessments and moneys collected for such purposes and invest and disburse them in the manner provided by law. For the satisfaction of any obligation under their supervision, the trustees of the sinking fund may sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession."

By virtue of this section the trustees of the sinking fund are required to provide for the payment of all bonds issued by the corporation. It would therefore be the duty of the trustees of the sinking fund to provide for the payment of bonds issued for the purchase of land to be used as a cemetery.

Section 4166 General Code determines the manner in which funds may be raised to meet the payment of such bonds. It is apparent therefore that the part of the selling price of a lot in a cemetery which is to reimburse the corporation for the purchase price of the land may be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund for the purpose of meeting the bonds when they shall become due.

Your third question is as to the right to transfer the income of surplus funds to the sinking fund, to be applied upon bonds issued to purchase the land used for the cemetery.

Under section 4166 General Code two things are to be taken into consideration by the director of public service when he fixes the selling price of lots in the cemetery. He may include, first, a sum sufficient to reimburse the corporation for the purchase price of the land, and second, he may include a sum sufficient to keep the grounds in order and to embellish the same.

In answer to your second question it is seen that the part received to reimburse the city for the purchase price of the land should be paid to the trustees of the sinking fund. The part received to keep the cemetery in order is in the nature of a perpetual fund to be used for the specific purpose for which such fund is provided.

There is provision in section 4169 General Code for the investment of moneys received for the purpose of maintaining the cemetery and the income of such investment is to be paid to the director of public service for that purpose.

Section 4168 General Code provides:

"In the by-laws and regulations, the director shall declare the amount of money he will accept by agreement, gift, devise, bequest or otherwise and hold as a permanent fund of the cemetery. He shall pledge the faith and credit of the city for the perpetual care of the lot or lots designated, using only the interest or income of the money. On receipt of the sum of money they designate, the director shall issue therefor a written receipt and acknowledgment thereof, signed by him, and bind the faith and credit of the corporation to forever hold such money as a permanent fund, and to provide perpetual care of the lot or lots therein named, for the use, income or interest of such money. He shall enter on the minutes of his proceedings full detail of the obligation, and shall enter the receipt and incomes of the money and the expenditures thereof in detail on his books of accounts ,keeping each case separately."

It appears from this section that the funds received are for the purpose of providing for the perpetual care of the lot or lots for which such funds are received.

You call my attention to the provisions of section 3804 General Code. This section reads as follows:

"When any unexpended balance remaining in a fund created by an issue of bonds, the whole or part of which bonds are still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, is no longer needed for the purpose for which such fund was created, it shall be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the bonds."

This section does not cover the funds received for lots in a cemetery, as such funds are specifically provided for in sections 4160 et seq. General Code. It would apply, however, to any part of the bond issue which was not used in the purchase of the land.

You also call attention to the provisions of section 3704 General Code. This section reads as follows:

"Money arising from the sale or lease of real estate, or a public building or from the sale of personal property, belonging to the corporation, shall be deposited in the treasury in the particular fund by which such property was acquired, or is maintained, and if there be no such fund it shall be deposited in the general fund. If the property was acquired by an issue of bonds the whole or a part of which issue is still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, such money, after deducting therefrom the cost of maintenance and administration of the property, shall on warrant of the city auditor be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the principal of the bond issue."

This is a general section covering money received from the sale of property by a municipal corporation, but it does not control the money received in the sale of lots in a cemetery for the reason that such money is specifically provided for in the sections above cited.

The funds received by the director of public service for the purpose of keeping in order and maintaining a cemetery and for the purpose of taking care of lots in a cemetery are received for a specific purpose. No part of these funds nor any part of the income received from the investment of such funds should be transferred to the sinking fund for the purpose of paying bonds issued for the purchase price of the lands.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—TEACHER EMPLOYED BY A BOARD OF EDUCATION AND CLERK OF SAME BOARD.

A teacher may not, while employed by the board of education of a school district, as a teacher in the schools of said district, be elected to the position of clerk of said board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1918.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of an inquiry asking my opinion upon a matter which appears to be of such general interest to your department that I am directing my answer to you, and shall send the inquirer a copy. The question is:

"Can a teacher be clerk of the board of education of the school district in which he is employed as such teacher?"

Section 4747 of the General Code provides that the board of education of each city, village and rural school district shall organize on the first Monday of January after the election of members of such board; one member shall be elected president, one member vice-president and a person who may or may not be a member of the board shall be elected clerk.

The duties of the clerk of a board of education are largely ministerial, but under the provisions of section 7786 G. C. he is made the custodian or person with whom is deposited certain reports and also the certificate, or a copy thereof, of each teacher employed by the board. Said section reads in part as follows:

> "No clerk of a board shall draw an order on the treasurer for the payment of a teacher for services until the teacher files with him such reports as are required by the superintendent of public instruction and the board of education, a legal certificate of qualification, or a true copy thereof, covering the entire time of the service, and a statement of the branches taught."

That is, under the provisions of the above part quoted section the clerk of the board of education is made the custodian or person with whom is filed such reports as the superintendent of public instruction or the board of education requires.

In a recent communication received at this office it is maintained that:

> "The provisions of section 7786 of the General Code have been superseded by certain provisions of the new school code which require all teachers to make monthly reports to the county and district superintendents, even the annual reports—not a single report is made by the teacher to the clerks of the respective boards."

While it may be true that in the particular school district in question no report are made by the teachers to the clerk of the board, nevertheless the provisions of section 7786 require that the clerk of the board draw no order on the treasurer for the payment of the teacher's salary until the teacher files with him "such reports as are required by the superintendent of public instruction and the board of education." It would appear, therefore, that the provisions of section 7786 G. C., in this respect have not been superseded. Be that as it may, the clerk of the board is also compelled to keep as one of the files in his office a legal certificate of qualification, or a true copy thereof, covering the entire time of the service of the teacher, and a statement of the branches taught by such teacher. This provision of said section is one which makes the two positions incompatible. If the teacher were clerk, then such teacher would file with himself his certificate, or a copy thereof, and he would have custody of those things which the law requires to be filed with a representative of the board prior to the time the clerk draws an order on the treasurer for any money in favor of the person so depositing same. He would be the sole judge of the performance of these duties and if it were within his power to draw an order for the payment of his own salary, he would pass upon his own reports in relation thereto.

I do not believe that this was within the contemplation of the legislature when said section was enacted, neither did my predecessors when matters similar to the above were under consideration.

It is held in opinion No. 68, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, Vol. II, page 1097, that:

> "Inasmuch as by the provisions of section 7786, a clerk of a township board of education is obliged to pass on reports of teachers before an order may be drawn by said clerk for the payment of their salaries, the office of said clerk constitutes a check upon the position of teacher, and, therefore, both positions may not be held at the same time by the same individual."

Again, in opinion No. 1025, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1915, Vol. III, page 2229, it was held:

"A teacher may not, while employed by the board of education of a school district, as a teacher in the schools of said district, be elected to the position of clerk of said board."

I concur in the conclusions reached in both of said opinions, both for the reasons that the reports which are required to be filed by teachers with the clerk are such as the legislature contemplated should be filed by one person with another, and also because of the language of section 7786, which requires that the certificate of the teacher must be filed with the clerk before an order is drawn on the treasurer to pay such teacher for services rendered as such.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FINES—SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE AND CHIEF WARDEN OF FISH AND GAME DEPARTMENT HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO REMIT.

Neither the secretary of agriculture nor the head of the fish and game department has any authority to refund fines assessed and paid into the state treasury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of January 25, 1917, wherein you ask for my opinion as follows:

"I desire to call your attention to the enclosed vouchers which were presented to me by Examiner Brennan, who doubts their legality. This is the first time that this matter has been officially called to my attention, and after Examiner Brennan had taken the matter up with the head of the fish and game division, it was the unanimous opinion of all parties concerned that the matter should be submitted to you in order that you may render an opinion as to whether or not the division of fish and game can refund from the public treasury fines assessed and paid into the state treasury without a specific appropriation made by law. Mr. Baxter will be glad to furnish you any information in connection with these refunds."

You also sunmit four vouchers drawn by the board of agriculture, division of fish and game, in favor of various persons, in different amounts, for fines remitted in whole or part, which fines I presume were assessed in cases brought by the fish and game division of the board of agriculture, for violations of the law relating to the protection of fish and game.

Section 1390 of the General Code provides:

> "The secretary of agriculture shall have authority and control in all matters pertaining to the protection, preservation and propagation of song and insectivorous birds, game birds, game animals and fish within the state and in and upon the waters thereof. He shall enforce by proper legal action or proceeding the laws of the state for the protection, preservation and propagation of such birds, animals and fish; shall establish fish hatcheries and propagate fish therein or in any other manner for the waters of the state, and, so far as funds are provided therefor, shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties."

Section 1391 G. C. provides for the appointment of the chief warden and deputy wardens to carry out the provisions of section 1390, above quoted.

Section 1393 G. C. provides as follows:

> "The chief warden, special wardens and deputy state wardens shall enforce the provisions of this act and the laws relating to the protection, preservation and propagation of birds, fish and game, and shall also enforce the laws against trespassing upon premises, for the purpose of hunting, without the permission of the owner thereof, and shall have authority to make arrests upon view and without the issuance of a warrant therefor. Under the direction of the secretary of agriculture, the chief warden shall visit all parts of the state and direct and assist special wardens and deputy state wardens in the discharge of their duties."

The above sections of the General Code prescribe the powers and duties of the secretary of agriculture and chief warden of the fish and game division. Neither of the above quoted sections authorize the secretary of agriculture or the chief warden to refund fines that have been paid into the state treasury for violations of the law for the protection of fish and game. Although section 1445 authorizes the secretary of agriculture to release from a jail or workhouse a person confined therein for nonpayment of fines assessed for violations of the fish and game law, this section cannot be construed as giving authority to the secretary of agriculture to refund such fines as have been paid into the state treasury. There is no law in this state conferring authority on the secretary of agriculture or the chief warden of the fish and game department to refund fines, or any part thereof, assessed for violations of the fish and game division, nor any specific appropriation for such purpose.

Section 22 of article II of the Ohio constitution provides as follows:

> "No money shall be drawn from the treasury except in pursuance of a specific appropriation, made by law; and no appropriation shall be made for a longer period than two years."

Therefore I advise you that neither the secretary of agriculture nor the head of the fish and game department has any authority to refund fines assessed and paid into the state treasury, and it therefore would not be proper for you to issue the warrants for such vouchers.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FRANCHISE TAX—WHERE CORPORATION FILES CERTIFICATE OF INCREASE OF CAPITAL STOCK, WITHIN SIX MONTHS PRIOR TO TIME OF FILING ANNUAL REPORT—THE PART OF THE INCREASED STOCK SUBSCRIBED OR ISSUED AND OUTSTANDING IS TO BE TAKEN INTO CONSIDERATION IN COMPUTING THE TAX.

When an existing corporation files a certificate of increase of its capital stock within six months prior to the time for filing an annual report under the franchise tax law, such part of the increased stock so authorized which is subscribed or issued and outstanding at the time the report is filed is to be taken into consideration in computing the franchise tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 16th, requesting my opinion upon the following abstract question raised by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, of Akron, Ohio, which has recently filed a certificate of increase of its capital stock.

> When an existing corporation files a certificate of increase of its capital stock within six months prior to the time for filing an annual report under the franchise tax law is any part of the increased stock so authorized which is subscribed or issued and outstanding at the time the report is filed to be taken into consideration in computing the franchise tax of three-twentieths of one per cent?

As you state in your letter, my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, rendered an opinion upon this question, which is found in the Opinions of the Attorney-General for the year 1916, volume II, page 1606. As you are familiar with that opinion I need not quote any part of it. In that opinion Mr. Turner carefully reviews certain opinions of former attorneys-general and comes to the conclusion that an affirmative answer is to be returned to the question which you state.

Counsel for The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company submit substantially the same arguments that were considered by Mr. Turner, adding one which, however, is entirely inadmissible. They argue that if Mr. Turner's interpretation is correct then a corporation organized in January or February of a given year and two months later increasing its capital stock would be taxable on the increase, but not on the original capital stock for the first year following the date of its incorporation. This statement is, of course, incorrect. The exemption statute provides that a corporation shall not be required "to file its first annual report * * * until the proper month, hereinbefore provided, for the filing of such report, next following the expiration of six months from the date of its incorporation or admission to do business in this state." If no report is due, of course, no taxes are payable, and the fact that an increase has taken place between the filing of the articles of incorporation and the proper month or the filing of the reports of corporations does not alter the case upon any interpreation of the statute.

In fact section 5519 of the General Code which I have quoted is itself a complete answer to the question as submitted. It goes no further than to provide that a corporation shall not be required to file its first annual report under the circumstances therein named. There is no statute which in any way qualifies the obligation to file other annual reports. The law requiring annual reports to be filed specifies what those reports shall set forth. Section 5497 General Code, as to domestic corporations, and section 5501 General Code, as to foreign corporations, require such reports to show the state of the capital stock of the company on the date as of which they are to be filed. It is true that a very convincing argument can be constructed to the effect that the policy of the state ought to be that which is contended for by The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company, but the tax in question is the creature of the statute, and I think I must presume that the courts would not assume the power to construct a statutory provision where none had been enacted by the legislature.

Counsel in their letter refer to other opinions of former attorneys-general than the ones considered by Mr. Turner. I have not examined such other opinions There is no question in my mind as to the correctness of Mr. Turner's conclusion. The statute is clear and unambiguous and for this reason, as well as those discussed in Mr. Turner's opinion, I conclude with him that an existing corporation increasing its capital stock within six months prior to the proper month for filing its annual report under the franchise tax law must, if it be a domestic corporation, report and pay franchise taxes upon its entire subscribed or issued and outstanding capital stock, including that authorized by the certificate of increase, at the next succeeding tax period; and if it be a foreign corporation which has filed a certificate of increase of proportion a similar rule must prevail.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—NOT ENTITLED TO EXPENSES INCURRED BY ATTENDING MEETINGS CALLED BY STATE DEPARTMENT UNLESS THERE IS STATUTORY AUTHORITY THEREFOR.

County commissioners are not authorized to have expenses paid by county upon attending meetings by order of state departments, unless there is statutory authority there for.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1918.

HON. CHARLES T. STAHL, Prosecuting Attorney, Wauseon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under recent date you advised us as follows:

> "The commissioners of this county have asked my opinion with regard to their expenses being paid by the county upon being summoned to attend different gatherings or meetings by the order of the different state departments at Columbus.
> I am unable to ascertain if they are allowed their necessary expenses at these meetings. I therefore request your opinion as to the same."

Your question is so general that the only answer thereto must of necessity be general.

It has been the holding of the courts of Ohio, as well as of the various attorneys-general of Ohio, that neither compensation or expenses are allowed county officials unless there is provision of statute therefor, and I must therefore advise you that unless the statute authorizes the different state departments to summon county commissioners to different gatherings or meetings, and provides for the expenses of said commissioners in so attending said gatherings or meetings, there would be no authority in law for the payment of such expenses by the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—MATERIAL MAN COULD NOT UNDER THE CASS LAW PERFECT LIEN AGAINST THE STATE OF OHIO OR ITS AGENT, BY ATTACHING MONEY DUE CONTRACTOR, IN THE HANDS OF HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER.

Under the provisions of law as they existed prior to the taking effect of the White-Mulcahy law, a material man could not enforce a lien against the state of Ohio or its agent, the state highway commissioner, by way of attaching money in the hands of said commissioner, due a contractor for whom material was furnished in the construction of a public highway. This being true, he could not perfect his lien against the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 4, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 15, 1918, in which you set out copy of a letter received by you from Messrs. Hine, Kennedy, Manchester & Conroy, dated January 8, 1918, said parties being the attorneys for The Standard Slag Company. Said letter is quite long and I will simply quote the vital part thereof, which is as follows:

> "Your letter of January 3, to The Standard Slag Company of this city, has been referred by the latter to us for attention.
> The Standard Slag Company perfected a lien in the amount of $524.42 against the unpaid balance, payable by the state highway department to Ayers & Kappes for slag furnished to them to be used in the improvement of section 'I' of the national road in Guernsey county. Said lien is perfected under sections 8324-8329 of the General Code of Ohio, said sections having been enacted many years ago and having remained unmodified, and in force at the present time."

In your communication you make the following request:

> "I would be pleased to have your opinion as to whether this department must honor liens presented under the provisions of sections 8324-8329 of the General Code on contracts which were in force prior to June 28, 1917, as well as on contracts in force after that date."

On July 16, 1917, I rendered an opinion (No. 449) to the state highway commissioner, to the effect that the provision contained in section 1208 (107 O. L. 126), relative to mechanics' liens, does not apply to those contracts entered into prior to the taking effect of the White-Mulcahy law on June 28, 1917. The particular part of this section in reference to which said opinion was rendered reads as follows:

> "* * * The provisions of section 8324 of the General Code and the succeeding sections in favor of sub-contractors, material men, laborers and mechanics shall apply to contracts let under the provisions of the preceding sections as fully and to the same extent as in the case of counties."

The contract under which The Standard Slag Company claims to have perfected a lien was entered into prior to June 28, 1917, and it is still my opinion that the above quoted provisions of section 1208 could not be used as a basis for perfecting a mechanics' lien against the state under said contract, for the reason that it was entered into prior to June 28, 1917. The attorneys for The Standard Slag Company hold that the mechanics' lien law as it stood prior to the enactment of the above quoted provision was broad enough to enable a material man to perfect a lien against the state and enforce the same. This will necessitate our placing a construction upon sections 8324 et seq., relating to mechanics' liens, which I did not do in my former opinion, above referred to. I merely held therein that the above quoted provision of section 1208 would not apply to contracts entered into prior to June 28, 1917.

The very fact that the legislature enacted the provision found in section 1208, supra, should be given some weight. It clearly shows that in so far as legislative interpretation is concerned, the law as it stood prior to the enactment of said provision was not broad enough to enable a material man or laborer to perfect a lien against the state, or an officer or department of the state. The legislature evidently considered it necessary to enact said provision in order to give to the material men and laborers the right to perfect liens against the state. While legislative interpretation is not necessarily conclusive of any matter, yet it is entitled to some weight and respect.

We will consider the sections under which said slag company claims to have perfected a lien.

Section 8324 G. C. provides, in so far as applicable to our case:

"Any sub-contractor, material man, * * * who has * * * furnished material * * * for the construction, improvement or repair of any turnpike, road improvement, sewer, street or other public improvement, or public building provided for in a contract between the owner, or any board, officer or public authority and a principal contractor, * * * may file with the owner, board or officer, or the authorized clerk or agent thereof, a sworn and itemized statement of the amount and value of such labor performed, * * *."

This section is broad enough in its terms to include the state. The language used is "public improvement, or public building" and "any board, officer or public authority."

Along with the right granted in this section we must consider the remedy given to enforce the right.

Section 8331 General Code provides:

"* * * On his failure so to do (payment of the money by the head contractor) within ten days thereafter, the subcontractor or material man, laborer, mechanic or person furnishing material, when due, may recover against the owner, in an action for money had or received the whole or a pro rata amount, as the case may be, of his claim or estimate, * * *."

Of course in the case under consideration the owner would be the state. So the only remedy provided to enforce the lien would be a suit against the state.

I will state two fundamental principles:

(1) The state is sovereign and is never included within the purview of a statute unless it is specifically mentioned in said statute in clear and unmistakable terms.

(2) The state can not be sued. The remedy given to enforce a mechanics' lien is by suit. As there is no provision in the mechanics' lien law for enforcing the lien against the state by suit, no lien against the state can be perfected. As there is no remedy provided, so there is no right afforded.

In support of the first proposition I will note holdings of our courts.

In State ex rel. v. Morrow et al., 10 N. P. (N. S.) 279, the court laid down the following proposition on p. 283:

> "That the words of the statute, 'or other public improvement, or public building' are broad enough to embrace the claim of the relator could not be disputed; but it is contended that the state is not embraced within the general words of the statute and could be held to be within the purview of the same only when so declared expressly, or by necessary implication. The doctrine of the common law as expressed in the maxim, 'The king is not bound by any statute if he be not expressly named to be so bound' is the law of the state of Ohio. The doctrine seems to be that a sovereign state, which can make and unmake laws, in prescribing general laws intends thereby to regulate the conduct of subjects only, and not its own conduct. It is a familiar doctrine that the state is not affected by the statute of limitations, however general its terms may be. Upon the same principle it has been held that the statute providing that 'costs shall follow the event of every action or petition' does not apply to a party prevailing against the state even in a civil case. If in such cases the statute has no binding force upon the state, no good reason could be given as to why any statute of a general nature should apply to the state unless it was expressly provided."

In State v. The Citizens, etc., Co., et al., 15 N. P. (N. S.) 149, the second branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "A mechanic's lien filed on property belonging to the state is void, and it follows that a proceeding does not lie to subject funds in the hands of the state to payment of claims for work and material which went into a state building under a contract which was abandoned before completion."

On p. 152 of the opinion the court gives as a reason for said holding:

> "The mechanic's lien sections of General Code, are general laws, and from such laws the state is exempt (56 O. S. 175), and in State ex rel. v. Morrow, 10 N. P. (N. S.), the statutes are quoted and said not to apply to the state."

In Hartman v. Hunter, Treas., 56 O. S. 175, the first branch of the syllabus is as follows:

> "Exemption from the operation of a statute limiting actions and in its terms containing no exception is a privilege of sovereignty, and it can be asserted only by or on behalf of the sovereign."

In the opinion on p. 180 the court say:

> "All attempts to extend the exemption to others than the general and state governments have failed. The terms of the statute except none from its operation and the exemption is a prerogative. Being a privilege of sovereignty, as in England it is the King's plea, so here it is the plea of the sovereign, to be made by it or in its behalf. This view of the subject does not admit of further question in this state."

From the above holdings of our courts and others which might be quoted, it is clear that the state is not included in the provisions of section 8324 G. C. and that a mechanics' lien therefore could not be perfected against the state.

I will now offer some suggestions relative to the second proposition above set out, viz., that even though the state could be held to be included within the terms of section 8324 G. C., there is no remedy given to enforce the lien against the state. The proposition is well established in our state that the state can not be sued, except to the extent that the legislature may make provision therefor, and there are no provisions in the mechanics' lien law enabling a material man to enforce his lien against the state. Hence if he has no remedy to enforce a lien, he has no right to perfect it.

In State ex rel. v. Morrow, supra, the second and third branches of the syllabus read as follows:

"There are no proceedings in law whereby a mechanic's lien may be enforced against the state of Ohio.

The mechanic lien law, although general in its nature, and the language in the code broad enough to include public improvements of the state, does not apply to any public improvement made by the state And any steps taken pursuant to the mechanic lien act to establish a lien or claim against funds in the hands of the state set apart for any public improvements have no effect in law and afford no ground for action either in law or equity against the state."

This case was affirmed by the circuit court on October 21, 1910, in the following language:

"We think that the judgment of the lower court should be affirmed for the reasons given by Judge Kyle in his opinion."

Inasmuch as the decision of the lower court was affirmed by the circuit court, this decision is entitled to considerable weight.

To the same effect we cite the following cases:

Tice et al. v. Atlantic Const. Co. et al., 65 N. Y. S. 79.
Mason v. Board of Trustees, 50 Misc. Rep. (N. Y.) 40.

The attorneys for The Standard Slag Co. hold that an action in mandamus would lie to compel the state highway commissioner to respect the lien whi h was attempted to be perfected by The Standard Slag Co. The c urt, in the case of State ex rel. v. Morrow, supra, held directly contrary to this idea. The first branch of the syllabus in said case reads as follows:

"A peremptory writ of mandamus will not be allowed directing a public officer to issue his voucher and warrant for the payment of money, unless the relator makes it appear that he has a clear legal right to the fund and that no other person has or can have any claims or interest in and to the same."

In the opinion on p. 282 the court reasoned as follows:

"It is a well settled rule that a peremptory writ of mandamus will not in any case be granted, unless the right of the relator thereto be clear, and the act, performance of which is desired, be one of absolute obligation on the part of the person or officer sought to be coerced, and before such right will be allowed the relator must show not only a clear legal right to have done the specific act desired, but to have it done by the particular person or officer sought to be coerced; and a plain dereliction of duty must be established against such person or officer before the right will be awarded."

In view of all the above I am of the opinion that The Standard Slag Co. has no lien against the state of Ohio, or its agent, the state highway commissioner, on the funds which it attempted to attach in the hands of the state highway commissioner as being due Ayers & Kappes, under and by virtue of the contract for the improvement of section "I" of the national road in Guernsey county, and that therefore you have no authority to consider said alleged lien in the adjustment of the rights of the parties interested.

One of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, passed upon this same question and I concur in the opinions so rendered by him, which are found respectively in Vol. I, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, p. 522, under date of December 4, 1912; and Vol. I, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, p. 515, under date of August 25, 1913; both opinions being addressed to Hon. Byron L. Bargar, Secretary of Ohio State Armory Board. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE MIAMI UNIVERSITY AND FRANK L. PACKARD.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Contract for architectural services between Frank L. Packard and the board of trustees of the Miami university for services on addition to Chemistry building, dated September 20, 1917, has been submitted to this department for approval.

While the contracts are not as full in detail as we would desire, nevertheless, since a uniform state's architect's contract has not yet been fully decided upon, I have endorsed my approval on the contract submitted and herewith hand the same to you. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF POLAND TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, MAHONING COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Poland township rural school district, Mahoning county, Ohio, in the sum of $5,800.00, for the purpose of constructing addition to school building.

I have carefully examined corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Poland township rural school district, Mahoning county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF EAST LIVERPOOL CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 5, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of East Liverpool city school district, in the sum of $75,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing sites for and constructing two school buildings in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of East Liverpool city school district, Columbiana county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—SEC. 1465-82 G. C. APPLIES TO ALL CLAIMS ON ACCOUNT OF DEATHS OCCURRING ON OR AFTER JANUARY 1, 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On January 23, 1918, through Mr. Hamm, your director of claims, you make the following request for my opinion:

"On January 1, 1918, the amendment to section 1465-82 of the General Code which fixes the maximum compensation in death claims at $5,000.00 and the minimum at $2,000.00 became effective. Prior to this date, the section provided for maximum compensation in the sum of $3,750.00 and minimum of $1,500.00.

On December 28, 1917, one Grover Cox, an employe of the Robert Grace Contracting Company, Marion, Ohio, received an injury while in the course of his employment. As a result of this injury he died on January 5, 1918.

Your opinion is desired as to whether the dependent wife of such an employe is entitled to compensation in accordance with the amended section 1465-82, effective January 1, 1918, because death occurred after said amendment became effective, or is the amount of compensation to which she is entitled limited to the sum of $3,750.00, as provided by section 1465-82 prior to January 1, 1918. In other words, does the date of injury determine whether the old section or amended section shall apply, or does the date of death?"

The amendment to section 1465-82, to which you refer, is found in 107 O. L page 450, and reads as follows:

"Section 1465-82. In case the injury causes death within the period of two years, the benefits shall be in the amount and to the persons following:

1. If there be no dependents, the disbursements from the state insurance fund shall be limited to the expenses provided for in section forty-two hereof.

2. If there are wholly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the average weekly wages, and to continue for the remainder of the period between the date of the death and eight years after the date of the injury and not to amount to more than a maximum of five thousand dollars nor less than a minimum of two thousand dollars.

3. If there are partly dependent persons at the time of the death, the payment shall be sixty-six and two-thirds per cent. of the average weekly wages, and to continue for all or such portion of the period of eight years after the date of the injury, as the board in each case may determine, and not to amount to more than a maximum of five thousand dollars.

4. The following persons shall be presumed to be wholly dependent for support upon a deceased employe:

(a) A wife upon a husband with whom she lives at the time of his death.

(b) A child or children under the age of sixteen years (or over said age if physically or mentally incapacitated from earning) upon the parent with whom he is living at the time of the death of such parent.

In all other cases, question of dependency, in whole or in part, shall be determined in accordance with the facts in each particular case existing at the time of the injury resulting in the death of such employe, but no person shall be considered as dependent unless a member of the family of the deceased employe, or bears to him the relation of husband, or widow, lineal descendant, ancestor or brother or sister. The word 'child' as used in this act, shall include a posthumous child, and a child legally adopted prior to the injury.

Section 2. That said original section 1465-82 be, and the same is hereby repealed.

Section 3. The provisions of this act shall take effect, and be in full force and effect on and after the first day of January, 1918."

By the express provisions of section 3, above quoted, this act went into full force and effect on the first day of January, 1918, and was the law of this state governing compensation on account of death, when the death of the employe to whom you refer occurred, namely, January 5, 1918.

No claim can be made under section 1465-82, unless an employe has suffered an injury which results in death within the period of two years from the date of the injury and of course, the claim can not be made until the death occurs. The right to claim the award does not come into existence until the date of the death; the only bearing that the date of the injury has upon this right, is that the death must occur within a period of two years from the date of the injury, it being the theory that if death occurs after a longer period, it is attributable to some other cause than the injury. In the case which you present, no right existed to claim an award under section 1465-82, on the date of the injury, namely, December 28th, nor did it exist at any time, until the time the death occurred, namely, January 5, 1918. When the death occurred, then this right immediately came into existence and the statute then in force, governing compensation for claims of this character, would be applicable and that statute was 1465-82, as amended.

In this state statutes do not have a retroactive effect, and repeals and amendments do not, as a general rule, affect existing rights of action.

This has no bearing, however, on your question, for the reason that the right to claim an award from the compensation fund, on account of death, can not arise until the death occurs; and hence must be governed by the law then in force. Therefore, claims for compensation on account of death occurring on and after January 1, 1918, must be governed by section 1465-82, as it now stands.

(See: State ex rel. Carlson v. Dist. Ct. of Hennepin Co., 131 Minn. 96.)

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GOVERNOR'S DEED—TO CORRECT DEEDS TO SCHOOL LANDS LOCATED IN SECTION 16, AID TOWNSHIP, LAWRENCE COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 29th, the auditor of state transmitted to us the enclosed papers and a letter addressed both to you and this department relative to the correction of deeds to school lands located in section 16, Aid township, Lawrence county, Ohio, which letter is to the following effect:

> "We herewith transmit to you the application of certain parties, residents of Aid township, Lawrence county, Ohio, for new deeds correcting description. We are also transmitting to you a letter of the prosecuting attorney of Lawrence county, respecting the matter, divers deeds having relation to the chain of title, and quit claim deed to the state of Ohio. This department discovered the error in cleaning up the titles in that county, and the statements made in the application are true.
> Thomas Walton originally purchased lot No. 1, as shown by the original records of this department and completed his payments thereon, but through some error the deed recited lot No. 3. Also, when we were abstracting section 16 we also satisfied ourselves personally, from the records of the county, that the parties named, towit, Orpha Boggs and Charles Yates, are the present owners of lot No. 1 and that Lydia Bowman and Charles Yates are the present lessees of lot No. 3.

We request that you give us direction to make deeds to Boggs and Yates for that part of lot No. 1 owned by each of them, respectively. We have surveyor's description of the parts of lot No. 1 owned by each, recently made under our direction."

Having satisfied myself that an error has been made, I have prepared the enclosed authority to the auditor of state, have signed the same and present it to you for your signature. If you agree that an error has been committed and should be corrected, kindly sign the authority and transmit it, together with the papers, to the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CIVIL SERVICE—HOW REMOVAL UNDER SECTION 486-17a G. C. CAN BE MADE—"REASONABLE TIME" DEFINED—REASONS FOR REMOVAL FURNISHED EMPLOYE MUST GIVE NOTICE OF THE CHARGES AGAINST HIM.

What is a "reasonable" time to be afforded to a subordinate removed by an appointing authority in which to make and file an explanation under the civil service law, section 486-17a General Code, depends upon the nature of the reasons given for removal and the probable length of time required in view of the conditions surrounding the particular employment for the subordinate to prepare an explanation which meets the charges.

A removal under said section can be made only by following the procedure therein outlined. Such procedure is not complete until the order of removal with the explanation if any, of the subordinate is filed with the civil service commission. The ten day period within which an appeal to the commission lies begins to run on the date of such filing.

The reasons to be furnished to the employe by the appointing authority as ground for removal, though not required to be as specific and particular as an indictment, must give the employe such notice of the character of the charges against him as to enable him to make his explanation. In case of general charges, such as incompetency, the nature of the incompetency must be set forth. In the case of particular acts, such as immoral conduct, neglect of duty, etc., such acts should be described and identified with sufficient particularity to enable the subordinate to recognize and explain them, if possible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1918.

The State Civil Service Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I hasten to answer your letter of January 29th submitting for my opinion the following questions:

"Section 486-17a of the civil service law, relating to removals, reads in part as follows:

'The tenure of every officer, employe or subordinate in the classified service of the state, the counties, cities and city school districts thereof, holding a position under the provisions of this act, shall be during good behavior and efficient service; but any such officer, employe, or subordinate may be removed for incompetency, inefficiency, dishonesty, drunkenness, immoral conduct, insubordination, discourteous treatment of the public, neglect of duty, violation of the provisions of this act or the rules of the commission, or any other failure of good behavior, or any other acts of misfeasance, malfeasance, or nonfeasance in office.

In all cases of removal the appointing authority shall furnish such employe or subordinate with a copy of the order of removal and his reasons for the same, and give such officer, employe or subordinate a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. Such order with the explanation, if any, of the employe, or subordinate shall be filed with the commission. Any such employe or subordinate so removed may appeal from the decision or order of such appointing authority to the state or municipal commission, as the case may be, within ten days from and after the date of such removal, in which event the commission shall forthwith notify the appointing authority and shall hear, or appoint a trial board to hear, such appeal within thirty days from and after its filing with the commission, and it may affirm, disaffirm or modify the judgment of the appointing authority, and the commission's decision shall be final,' etc.

Several questions as to the proper interpretation of this section have arisen, upon which your opinion and advice is respectfully requested:

1. The commission has frequently been requested for a statement as to what is considered a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation. In answering this question, the commission has considered, of course, the nature of the reasons given for removal, and the probable length of time required, in view of the conditions surrounding the particular employment, for the employe discharged to prepare a comprehensive explanation.

2. It is not plain from the reading of the statute whether the ten days within which the employe discharged is given the right to file an appeal, begins on the date when he is served with the order of discharge, on the date when discharge becomes effective, or on the date of expiration of the time granted by his appointing officer within which to make and file an explanation.

3. In some few cases with which we are familiar, the courts have held that orders of discharge in which the reasons given for such discharge are couched in the broad wording of the statute setting forth reasons for which removals may be made, as quoted above, are not sufficient. To be more specific, it has been held that an order of removal on the mere ground of incompetency, inefficiency, dishonesty, drunkenness, etc., which does not state in what respects, or in what ways, the employe has been incompetent, inefficient, etc., is not sufficient. This commission has held that orders of discharge should set out one or more of the grounds enumerated in section 17a of the civil service law, such as incompetency, inefficiency, dishonesty, drunkenness, etc., and that in addition as to each, particular acts and circumstances constituting the offense charge should be detailed in such a way as to place the discharged employe properly on his defense. However, we are in doubt as to whether a statement of reasons referring to a class of acts or delinquencies which, if established after a hearing, would be sufficient to support any one of the statutory grounds for removal, is sufficient to satisfy the intent of the law, or whether such statement must set forth specific acts or instances."

In my opinion, the commission's ruling on the first point is correct.

The second question which you submit calls for an interpretation of section 486-17a of the General Code which you have quoted in part. In my opinion, a "removal" is not complete until the order of removal with the explanation, if any, of the employe or subordinate is filed with the commission. To be sure, there are cases in which no notice and no opportunity to file an explanation is required. (Hornberger v. State ex rel, 95 O. S., 148). Still in such case the removal would not be complete until the order were filed with the commission. The second paragraph of section 486-17a states what shall be done "in all cases of removal." The appointing authority is to furnish the employe with a copy of the order of removal and his reasons for same. The employe is to be afforded a reasonable time in which to make and file an explanation, and the order with the explanation is to be filed with the commission. These are the steps to be taken in effecting a removal.

The employer under the statute has a right to expect that the explanation which he makes shall be considered, at least, by the appointing authority, though, of course, the adequacy of the explanation is to be decided in the first instance by the appointing authority and ultimately by the commission. (People ex rel v. Brady, 166 N. Y., 44). It is clear to me, however, that the appointing authority is given a locas penitentiae after the explanation of the employe is filed with him. Therefore he has not done his last act in the process of removal until he has taken the next step, which is to file the order with the explanation with the civil service commission.

Accordingly I am of the opinion that the ten days referred to in section486-17 a of the General Code begins on none of the dates referred to by you, but on the date when the order is filed with the commission. (See State ex rel v. Board of Agriculture, 95 O. S., 276).

Your third question is discussed to some extent in State ex rel v. Board of Agriculture, supra. Newman, J., uses the following language at page 284:

> "The law certainly contemplates that the employe is to be advised of the charge against him in terms sufficiently explicit to enable him, if he sees fit, to make and file an explanation. It is further provided that 'Such order with the explanation, if any, of the employe or subordinate, shall be filed with the commission.' This is mandatory upon the appointing authority." (This sentence supports the conclusion which I have just reached respecting your second question.

Your specific question is as to whether a statement of reasons referring to a class of acts of delinquency is sufficient provided the class referred to constitutes one of the statutory grounds of removal, or whether specific acts or instances of delinquency must be assigned among the reasons.

The statement of reasons which the statute requires to be furnished to the employe or subordinate is, as has been pointed out by the supreme court, for the purpose of enabling him to make and file an explanation—is to afford him notice of the charges against him so that he may prepare what amounts to his defense. The general principles determining what constitutes sufficient notice must be applied to the solution of your question. No hard and fast rule can be laid down. The particularity of an indictment is not required, and, on the other hand, you are correct in assuming that it is insufficient merely to use the phraseology of the statute in assigning reasons. Thus a general statement that the employe is incompetent is not sufficient because it does not state the nature of his incompetency. (People ex rel v. Starks, 33 Hun., 384). I do not know that I can be more specific in answering your question than to say that particular delinquencies should be specified in sufficient detail to enable the employe or the subordinate to identify the conduct complained of. Where this requires an enumeration of days and dates such enumeration should be made. Where the complaint is a general one, such as incompetency, I do not believe that anything more particular is required than a specification as to the respects in which the employe is incompetent to discharge the duties of his position.

In the case of such a charge as dishonesty, however, more particularity would seem to be required. So also with drunkenness, immoral conduct, insubordination, discourtesy, neglect of duty, etc.; in short, any specific acts of misfeasance, malfeasance or nonfeasance in office.

I could more easily answer a specific question of the kind now under consideration than to attempt to lay down general rules. The particularity required in each case is dependent upon the facts of that case. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

POOR LAWS—BY WHOM ADMINISTERED—IN COUNTIES HAVING NO INFIRMARY—IN CASES IN WHICH THE BOUNDARIES OF A CITY BECOME COTERMINOUS WITH BOUNDARIES OF A TOWNSHIP—IN CASES IN WHICH THE BOUNDARIES OF A VILLAGE BECOME COTERMINOUS WITH THOSE OF THE TOWNSHIP.

1. In those counties having no county infirmary, the township trustees of the various townships must afford relief to the indigent poor, whether said indigent poor be located outside or within the limits of a municipality in the township.

2. In those cases in which the boundaries of a city become coterminous with the boundaries of a township, the district or ward physicians if any have been appointed, and if not, the director of public safety, must afford medical relief to the indigent poor of said city who are sick, and the director of public safety in all cases must afford relief to the indigent poor of said city who are not sick.

3. In villages, the boundaries of which are coterminous with the boundaries of a township, the council administers the poor laws, and the marshal and police force might be called to the aid of council in the administration thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 6, 1918.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

Dear Sir:—I have your communication of January 10, 1918, in which you ask my opinion upon the following questions:

> 1. Can the township trustees administer poor relief in villages in their township in a county in which there is no infirmary?
> 2. What rule should be made to apply in those cases in which the boundaries of a city or village become coterminous with the boundaries of a township?

I will limit the answer to your first question to the authority of township trustees to administer poor relief in villages in their township, in a county in which there is no infirmary. I do this for the reason that the poor laws relating to counties having no infirmary differ, in reading at least, from those provisions of law applying to counties having county infirmaries.

Sections 3488 and 3489 G. C. particularly pertain to the question under consideration. They read as follows:

> "Section 3488. When the trustees of a township in a county having no county infirmary, are satisfied that a person in such township ought to have public relief they shall afford such relief at the expense of their township as in their opinion the necessities of the person require. When more than temporary relief is required, they shall post a notice in three public places in the township, specifying a time and place at which they will receive proposals for the maintenance of such person, which notice shall be posted at least seven days before the day therein named for receiving proposals."

"Section 3489. The township trustees may contract with such person as they think suitable to take charge of and maintain such person, which shall be on the most reasonable terms, but not for more than one year at any one time. If the legal settlement of such person is not within this state, or is unknown, they shall keep an accurate account of moneys so expended, and certify it, with the vouchers therefor, to the county commissioners, who shall cause the amounts so paid to be refunded to such township from the county treasury, on the warrant of the county auditor."

From the provisions of section 3488 G. C. it will be seen that these two sections apply to those counties having no county infirmary. Section 3488 begins:

"When the trustees of a township in a county having no county infirmary," etc.

These two sections differ from the other sections of the chapter, in that in practically all of the other sections we find the language, "or the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein." In the two sections above quoted this language is not found.

As a village located in a township is a part of the township, the township trustees under section 3488 G. C. would have the power and duty to take care of the indigent poor, whether they be located outside of a village in the township, or within the limits of the village. That this was the intention of the legislature, is manifested by a study of the history of the act relating to the poor.

In 73 O. L. 233 we find an act entitled: "An act for the relief of the poor, and to repeal certain acts therein named." Section 21 of this act provided for the poor in those counties having no infirmaries, and it is instructive to note that in the whole act as found in 73 O. L. 233 no reference was made to the "proper officers of each municipal corporation therein," but the trustees of the township were given the power and duty to afford relief to the indigent poor in the township.

In 93 O. L. 273 this act was amended and one of the main changes that were made was the insertion in every section which related to the care of the indigent poor of the phrase "the proper officers of each municipal corporation therein," or words to that effect. This insertion was made in every section excepting the one pertaining to those counties having no county infirmaries, which in the original act was section 21. It was not modified in that respect but was still made to read that the trustees of the township in any county having no county infirmary should afford relief to persons in such township, and it now so reads in sections 3488 and 3489 G. C.

From all the above it is clear that the legislative intent was to make a distinction between those counties having county infirmaries and those having none, and it is fairly clear that the legislature at least intended the township trustees of those counties having no county infirmary to afford relief to the indigent poor located not only in the township outside the boundaries of a village in the township, but also to those persons located in the village.

There is another bit of interesting history connected with the legislation pertaining to the indigent poor of those counties having no county infirmary, which throws some light upon the quesion about which you inquire.

Section 5646 G. C. provides for a levy to be made by the trustees of each township, "for township purposes, including the relief of the poor." It seems that the legislature felt that the provision contained in this section was not sufficient to enable the township trustees to take care of the indigent poor of the various townships in counties where there is no county infirmary. This is evident from the fact that section 5647 G. C. was enacted, which reads as follows:

> "In counties where there are no county infirmaries, a township tax in addition to the tax provided in the next preceding section, and not to exceed one mill and five-tenths of a mill on each dollar of the taxable property of the township, may be levied for the relief of the poor, to be applied solely to that purpose."

From these two sections it appears that in those counties where there is no county infirmary, the township trustees are given complete jurisdition over the entire township, including any villages that may be located therein, relative to the indigent poor, and are given power to levy an additional tax to take care of the expenses incident to the care of said poor.

This answers your first question in so far as it applies to those counties in which there is no county infirmary. As stated before, I am not passing on counties which have county infirmaries.

Your second question relates to those municipalities which have become coterminous with the boundaries of a township.

Section 3512 G. C. reads in part:

> "When the corporate limits of a city or village become identical with those of a township, all township officers shall be abolished, and the duties thereof shall thereafter be performed by the corresponding officers of the city or village, * * *."

Of course in such a case there is no longer township trustees to give relief to the indigent poor, and the only question is as to who are the corresponding officers of the city or village. Upon these officers, whoever they are, would devolve the duty of taking care of the indigent poor within such a municipality.

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, held as follows in an opinion rendered by him on February 27, 1911, to the state board of health, and which is found in Vol. I of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912, page 854 (syllabus):

> "The board of health is given exclusive jurisdiction to care for sick poor of the municipality, under the statutes, whether said 'sick poor' have infectious or contagious diseases or not."

I concur in said holding of Mr. Hogan.

Section 4408 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "* * * The board may appoint a clerk, and with the consent of council, as many ward or district physicians, or one ward physician for each ward in the city as it deems necessary."

It was these officials that Mr. Hogan held should take care of the sick poor of a municipality, whether they be sick from infectious or contagious diseases or not. The question of course remains as to what official takes care of the indigent poor who are not sick and what officer would take care of the sick poor of a municipality, provided no ward or district physician has been appointed by the board of health. Mr. Hogan held in said opinion that in such an event some other "proper authorities" might afford the relief.

It is my opinion, without quoting the sections, that under sections 4368 to 4370, inclusive, G. C., the director of public safety would be the proper official to care for the sick poor in cities in the event there has been no district or ward physician appointed by the board of health, and the indigent poor of the city who are not sick.

Hence, answering your question specifically, in those cases in which the boundaries of a city have become coterminous with the boundaries of a township, the ward or district physicians, if there are any appointed, would afford relief to the sick poor, and if there is no district or ward physician appointed the director of public safety would afford such relief. The director of public safety would in all cases afford relief to the indigent poor of the city who are not sick.

It is possible that you may have in mind a case in which the municipality, the boundaries of which are coterminous with those of a township, is a village. In that case the result would of course be different. The council of a village, unlike that of a city, is not a purely legislative body. It does have the power to levy taxes and appropriate funds, and the general power to contract on behalf of the village. In these respects it "corresponds" to the board of trustees of a township. There is no other municipal agency more closely corresponding to the trustees.

Hence, in my opinion, the council is in the first instance the proper municipal authority to administer general poor relief in a village whose corporate limits are coterminous with those of a township.

A village council has authority, under section 4385 G. C. to confer upon the village marshal and his force "other powers not inconsistent with the nature of their offices" than those directly conferred by law. Without passing upon the question, it might be suggested that the marshal and police force might be thus called to the aid of the council in the practical administration of the poor laws.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HUMANE SOCIETY ORGANIZED UNDER SECTION 10062 ET SEQ.—AGREEMENT BY SAID SOCIETY TO ENFORCE ORDINANCE PROHIBITING DOGS RUNNING AT LARGE IS ULTRA VIRES AND ILLEGAL.

A contract entered into between a city and a humane society, having jurisdiction in such city, such society being organized under sections 10062 et seq. General Code, wherein such society agrees to enforce the ordinance regulating and prohibiting the running at large of dogs is illegal as being ultra vires of the purposes for which such humane society is organized.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 7, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 21, 1918, you submit the following inquiry to this department:

"We are respectfully requesting your written opinion upon the following matter:

We enclose herewith copy of an agreement between the city of Youngstown and the Youngstown humane society.

QUESTION: Is such contract authorized by law and legal?"

A copy of the contract is submitted with your inquiry. It is not necessary to copy said contract in this opinion. The contract was entered into under authority of an ordinance of council which directed the director of public safety to enter into such contract "with any incorporated society for the prevention of cruelty to animals having jurisdiction in said city, for the capture and impounding of all unlicensed dogs, and for the maintenance of and shelter for lost, strayed or homeless dogs."

It is further provided that the city is to turn over to said society its dog pound and said society is thereafter to maintain the same at its own expense and to employ all necessary help. Said society further agrees to seize and impound all dogs found running at large and to furnish competent persons and apparatus and appliances needed for such purpose. Said society further agrees to enforce the provisions of the ordinances of the city and the laws of the state relating to dogs running at large and agrees to indemnify the city from all loss arising therefrom. The society is to furnish all necessary books, licenses, certificates and tags for the registration of dogs. All moneys received by the city clerk for licenses and redemption fees during the life of the contract are to be paid to said society. The contract is to continue in force from year to year or until terminated by resolution, on thirty day's notice.

Section 3633 G. C. gives the municipal corporation the power to regulate or prohibit the running at large of dogs and other animals. This section reads as follows:

"To regulate, restrain and prohibit the running at large, within the corporation, of cattle, horses, swine, sheep, goats, geese, chickens and other fowls and animals, and to impound and hold them, and on notice to the owners, to authorize the sale of them for the penalty imposed by any ordinance, and the cost and expenses of the proceedings, to regulate or prohibit the running at large of dogs, and provide against injury and annoyance therefrom, and to authorize the disposition of them when running at large contrary to the provisions of any ordinance."

The regulation of the running at large of dogs is a police regulation and it does not necessarily apply to the prevention of cruelty to animals.

I assume from your letter and the contract that the humane society in question is organized under authority of sections 10062 et seq., General Code.

The objects of such society are stated in section 10063 G. C. as follows:

"The objects of such society, and all societies organized under sections ten thousand and sixty-seven and ten thousand and sixty-eight, shall be the inculcation of humane principles, the enforcement of laws for the prevention of cruelty, especially to children and animals, to promote which objects such societies may respectively acquire property, real or personal, by purchase or gift. All property acquired by gift, devise, or bequest, for special purposes, shall be vested in a board of trustees consisting of three members elected by the society, which board must manage such property, and apply it in accordance with the terms of the gift, devise, or bequest, with power to sell it and reinvest the proceeds."

The object of such society is to inculcate humane principles and to enforce the laws for the prevention of cruelty, especially to children and animals. This would not include the power to enforce ordinances or laws to regulate the running at large of dogs or other animals.

Section 10067 G. C. provides as follows:

> "Societies for the prevention of acts of cruelty to animals may be organized in any county, by the association of not less than seven persons. The members thereof, at a meeting called for the purpose, shall elect not less than three of their members directors, who shall continue in office until their successors are duly chosen."

Section 10070 G. C. reads:

> "Such societies may appoint agents who are residents of the county or municipality for which the appointment is made,for the purpose of prosecuting any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals, who may arrest any person found violating any provision of this chapter, or any other law for protecting persons or animals or preventing acts of cruelty thereto. Upon making such arrest, such agent shall convey the person so arrested before some court or magistrate having jurisdiction of the offense, and there forthwith make complaint on oath or affirmation of the offense."

This section authorizes such society to appoint agents and such agents are authorized to prosecute any person guilty of an act of cruelty to persons or animals.

Section 10071 G. C. requires that such appointments shall be approved by the mayor or by the probate judge. Section 10072 G. C. provides the method of paying the compensation of such agents.

The powers of a society organized under the provisions of the above sections commonly known as "humane societies" are specifically provided by statute, and they have only such powers as are granted by statute or which may be necessarily implied in order to carry out the powers specifically granted.

The powers granted do not include the right to enforce ordinances or laws to regulate or prohibit the running at large of dogs or other animals. Therefore the contract entered into by the humane society of Youngstown is beyond the powers granted to such society and is therefore ultra vires.

The above is sufficient reason for declaring the contract in question void. There may be other reasons given which would make such contract illegal.

In the case of Fox v. The Mohawk and Hudson River Humane Society, 165 N. Y. 517, the law was declared unconstitutional which granted to a humane society the power and authority to grant licenses to persons owning or harboring dogs and to receive the fees therefor for the purpose of enforcing such law and "for its own purposes."

The act therein construed was afterwards amended, the objectionable features eliminated, and was held to be constitutional, in the case of People v. Delaney, 130 N. Y. Supp. 833.

The above cases are referred to and commented upon in volume III Corpus Juris, at page 75.

At section 243, Vol. III Corpus Juris, page 75, it is said:

> "But an act requiring the owners of dogs to pay a license to a humane society for its own use is unconstitutional as being an unauthorized appropriation of public moneys. Such legislation has been upheld, however, where the society is not organized by the voluntary act of individuals under a general statute, but is incorporated by special act, and all license fees are devoted to carrying out the provisions of the act, or retained as compensation tor enforcing it."

Section 244 reads as follows:

"A statute requiring the owners of dogs to pay a license fee, and permitting a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals to appropriate and dispose of unlicensed dogs, or, in its discretion, to keep them without the payment of any fee, is unconstitutional. Such a statute conflicts with the provision which forbids the grant of exclusive privileges and immunities."

It is not necessary, however, to pass upon the constitutionality of the ordinance now in question and the contract made in pursuance thereof.

I am of the opinion that said contract is illegal and void because it is ultra vires of the powers granted to a humane society organized under authority of sections 10062 et seq., General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS ISSUED BY MUNICIPALITY UNDER SECTIONS 7910 AND 15093 NOT SUBJECT TO LIMITATIONS OF LONGWORTH ACT.

Bonds issued by a municipal corporation under authority of sections 7910 et seq., and sections 15093 et seq., General Code, are not subject to the 1, $2\frac{1}{2}$ and 5 per cent. limitations of the Longworth act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Februray 8, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor of recent date is received in which you submit the following inquiry:

"We are referring you to the opinion of a former attorney-general recorded in the annual reports of the year 1909, page 237, and would respectfully state that in statutes other than the Longworth act authorizing the issuance of bonds, in most instances specific provision is made by such statutes excluding such bond issues from the limitations of the Longworth act when such was the intention of the legislature.

For illustration, bonds issued under the Bense act, section 1259 et seq. G. C., the Terrel bill, O. L. 107, page 575, etc.

However, there are other statutes authorizing the issuance of bonds other than the Longworth act which do not make specific provision for the excluding of such bonds from the limitations of the Longworth act.

Query. In cases where bonds are issued under authority other than that of the Longworth act when the sections of authority do not specifically provide that they are excluded from the Longworth act limitations, such as municipal university bonds, under section 7910 to 7914 G. C., Cincinnati Southern Railway bonds, under section 15093 et seq., are such bonds excluded from the limitations of the 1, $2\frac{1}{2}$ and 5 per cent. limitations set forth in the Longworth act?"

Your question is general in form and will apply to all bonds issued by a municipal corporation.

You call attention however, to bonds issued by a municipality owning a university under authority of sections 7910 et seq., General Code, and also bonds issued by the Cincinnati Southern Railway under authority of sections 15093 et seq., General Code. I deem it advisable to limit the answer to your question to those bonds to which you have particularly called attention. To consider all bonds which may be issued by a municipality by statutes, other than the Longworth act, would make the opinion of needless length.

It is not necessary to consider those acts which specifically provide that the limitations of the Longworth act shall not apply to bonds issued thereunder.

Bonds authorized by the Longworth act and the limitations thereto are provided for in sections 3939 et seq., General Code.

Section 3939 General Code as amended in 107 Ohio Laws 553 reads in part as follows:

> "When it deems it necessary, the council of a municipal corporation, by an affirmative vote of not less than two-thirds of the members elected or appointed thereto, by ordinance, may issue and sell bonds in such amounts and denominations, for such period of time, and at such rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent. per annum, as said council may determine and in the manner provided by law, for any of the following specific purposes: * * *"

Here follows twenty-seven purposes or subdivisions for which bonds may be issued under authority of this section. This section does not provide for the issuing of bonds for the purposes of a municipal university or of a municipal railroad. Therefore the issue of bonds as authorized by sections 7910 et seq., and 15093 et seq., General Code, are not included in the Longworth act.

Section 3940 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 578, reads as follows:

> "Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year, by the council of a municipal corporation under the authority conferred in the preceding section, shall not exceed one-half of one per cent. of the total value of the property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation."

Section 10 of said act in 107 O. L. 578, reads as follows:

> "This act, in so far as it amends section 3940 of the General Code, shall become effective upon the expiration of the present fiscal year of the municipal corporations to which it applies, and shall otherwise go into effect within the time prescribed by law."

Prior to this amendment, the limitations contained in section 3940 G. C., was one per cent. of the tax valuation of the property.

Section 3941 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The net indebtedness created or incurred by the council under the authority granted it in section one (1) (G. C. 3939) of this act, and in an act passed April 29th, 1902, to amend sections 2835, 2836 and 2837 and to repeal section 2837a of the Revised Statutes (O. L. v. 95, p. 318) together with its subsequent amendments, shall never exceed four (4) per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation."

Section 3948 G. C. reads as follows:

"The net indebtedness created or incurred by a municipal corporation under authority of sections one and four of this act and under the authority of an act passed April 29th, 1902, to amend sections 2835, 2836 and 2837 and to repeal section 2837a of the Revised Statutes (O. L. v. 95, p. 318) together with its subsequent amendments, shall never exceed in total eight (8) per cent. of the total value of all property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation."

Section 3952 G. C. reads:

"That from and after the passage of this act and until and including the 30th day of September, 1911, the limitations of four and eight per cent. prescribed in this act shall be applied to and based upon the total value of all property listed and assessed for taxation in such municipal corporation as determined by the duplicate for the year 1910. On and after the first day of October, 1911, the said four per cent. limitation shall be reduced to two and one-half per cent., and the said eight per cent. limitation shall be reduced to five per cent., and such reduced limitations shall be applied to and based upon the value of all the property listed and assessed for taxation in such municipal corporation as determined by the duplicate then or thereafter in force."

The foregoing sections are the limitations upon the amount of bonds which may be issued by a municipal corporation under the provisions of the Longworth act. Said sections specifically limit such limitations to the bonds issued under authority of said act and the amendments thereto and the act in 95 O. L., 318.

Section 7910 G. C. reads as follows:

"Any municipal corporation having a university supported in whole or part by municipal taxation, may issue bonds for the erection of additional buildings or the completion of buildings not completed, for such municipal university, and for the equipment thereof."

Section 7911 G. C. reads:

"Such bonds may be issued under ordinance of the council of such municipality with the approval of the mayor, but only upon the receipt of a certified resolution from the board of directors of such university of the necessity of such issue. The resolution and ordinance must specify the amount of the issue, the denomination of bonds, their rate of interest, their dates, and the times of their maturity."

Section 7912 G. C. provides:

"The bonds so issued shall be sold according to the provisions of law for the sale of municipal bonds, and the proceeds thereof, excepting the premiums and accrued interest, shall be placed in the treasury of such municipality and be used only for the purpose of erecting or completing and equipping such additional buildings as may have been specified in the resolution and ordinance calling for their issue."

The above sections authorize a municipal corporation having a university to issue bonds for the erection of buildings for such university and for the equipment thereof. It is specifically provided that such bonds shall be sold according to the provisions of law for the sale of municipal bonds. There is no provision, however, that such bonds shall be subject to the limitations of the Longworth act, nor that they shall be excepted from such limitations.

Section 15093 G. C. authorizes an issue of bonds by a city of the first class, having a population exceeding 150,000 for the purpose of constructing a railroad. Said section reads in part as follows:

> "That whenever, in any city of the first class, having a population exceeding one hundred and fifty thousand inhabitants, the city council thereof shall, by a resolution passed by a majority of the members elected thereto declare it to be essential to the interests of such city that a line of railway, to be named in said resolution, should be provided between termini designated therein, one of which shall be such city, it shall be lawful for a board of trustees, appointed as herein provided, and they are hereby authorized to borrow as a fund for that purpose, not to exceed the sum of ten millions of dollars, and to issue bonds therefor in the name of said city, under the corporate seal thereof, bearing interest at a rate not to exceed seven and three-tenths per centum per annum, payable at such times and places, and in such sums, as shall be deemed best by said board. * * *"

Section 15107 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "That it shall be lawful for the board of trustees appointed under the act to which this is supplementary, and they are hereby authorized to borrow as a fund for the completion of the line of railway for which they are trustees, a sum in addition to the amount authorized by said original act, not to exceed six millions of dollars, and to issue bonds therefor in the name and under the corporate seal of the city owning the line of railway."

Section 15119 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "That it shall be lawful for the board of trustees, appointed under the acts to which this is supplementary, and they are hereby authorized to borrow, as a fund for the completion of the line of railway for which they are trustees, a sum, in addition to the amounts authorized by said acts, not to exceed $2,000,000, and to issue bonds therefor in the name and under the corporate seal of the city owning the line of railway. * * *"

There are other supplementary acts which authorize the trustees of the railroad to issue bonds wherein the amount of bonds to be issued is specifically limited and there is no provision therein that such bonds shall be subject to the restrictions and limitations contained in the Longworth act, nor that they shall be excepted therefrom.

As stated above, the purposes for which bonds may be issued under sections 7910 et seq. and 15093 et seq., General Code, are not authorized by section 3939 G. C., being a part of the Longworth act.

You call attention to the opinion of the Attorney-General in the annual report of the Attorney-General for the year 1909, at page 237. The conclusion of Hon. U. G. Denman, Attorney-General, is stated in the last paragraph of said opinion as follows:

"No place in the Longworth act is there the provision that the purposes provided for therein are the only purposes for which the political units referred to therein may issue bonds. Under the acts referred to in your inquiry the issuance of bonds was legalized for purposes not enumerated in the Longworth act. I therefore conclude that the bonds referred to in your inquiry are not to be considered in the limitation fixed by said Longworth act. In support of this conclusion see the case of Columbus v. Lazarus, et al., 15 Ohio Dec. at page 187."

His conclusion is based upon the case of Columbus v. Lazarus, 15 Ohio Dec. 187. The first, second and fifth branches of the syllabus in this case read as follows:

"The act of April 29, 1902 (95 O. L. 318, Sec. 2835 Rev. Stat. et seq., commonly called the Longworth bond act), does not exclusively enumerate the purposes for which municipal bonds may be issued and sold, nor does it provide the exclusive tax levy to pay for municipal bonds which are authorized by and issued under other express statutory authority. Said act simply limits the amount of bonds which may be issued for the purposes therein enumerated, together with the minimum tax levy to pay the same.

A municipal corporation has express power under section 53 of the Municipal Code (96 O. L. 41, sections 1536-213 Rev. Stat.) to issue and sell street intersection bonds and may levy a tax thereunder upon the taxable property within the municipality to pay the same without reference to the one per cent tax levy limitation provided in section 2835 Rev. Stat. et seq. No authority for the issue of such bonds is conferred by said act, and the tax levy limitation therein provided does not, therefore, apply.

Section 100 of the new Municipal Code (96 O. L. 53, section 1536-292 Rev. Stat.) simply saves or retains the Longworth act in its entirety as a part thereof, and the tax levy limitation of one per cent therein provided has reference only to levies made for purposes enumerated in said act, and not to levies for municipal purposes which are otherwise provided for in the code."

Bigger, J., says at page 191:

"The Longworth act simply limits the amount of bonds which may be issued under the authority of that act in any one year for any or all of the purposes therein enumerated. If the bonds are not issued under the authority of that act and for a purpose therein enumerated, then the limitation therein provided does not apply to such bonds."

The above opinion is to the effect that the Longworth act limits the amount of bonds that may be issued for the purposes therein enumerated. This is clear from the specific provisions of sections 3940, 3941 and 3948 G. C., above quoted.

In the case of Cleveland v. Cleveland, 16 C. C. n.s. 471, it is held:

"Bonds of municipal corporations issued to abolish grade crossings under authority of 95 O. L. 356, and bonds to pay the municipality's portion of street and sewer improvements, are both subject to the provisions of the Longworth act."

The bonds in question in the above case are specifically provided for in subdivisions 14 and 26 of section 3939 G. C. This opinion therefore does not control the present question.

It is my opinion therefore that bonds issued by a municipal corporation, under authority of sections 7910 et seq., and sections 15093 et seq., General Code, are not subject to the 1, 2½ and 5 per cent limitations of the Longworth act.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEACHERS ENTITLED TO FULL PAY WHEN SCHOOLS CLOSED BY REASON OF HEAVY SNOWS AND COAL SHORTAGE.

Where schools are closed on account of heavy snows and coal shortage caused by severe cold weather and lack of transportation facilities, teachers are entitled to full pay for time lost, under the provisions of section 7690 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1918.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 28, 1918, you submit the following inquiry:

> "I desire very much to have your construction of section 7690 G. C. in relation to the following facts:
> Lanier township has a centralized high school, and the pupils of the township are all conveyed, or are to be conveyed to this central building. Owing to the fact that the roads for a part of the time were impassable by reason of heavy snows, and owing to the fact that for a part of the time they had not sufficient coal to heat the building, there was no school.
> The question turns on whether the teachers are entitled to full pay for all the time.
> Second: Are the hack drivers entitled to full pay for all the time?"

Section 7690 General Code to which you refer, reads as follows:

> "Each board of education shall have the management and control of all of the public schools of whatever name or character in the district. It may appoint a superintendent of the public schools, truant officers, and janitors and fix their salaries. If deemed essential for the best interests of the schools of the district, under proper rules and regulations, the board may appoint a superintendent of buildings and such other employes as it deems necessary and fix their salaries. Each board shall fix the salaries of all teachers, which may be increased, but not diminished during the term for which the appointment is made. Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

This section requires that teachers shall be paid for time lost on account of the closing of the schools "owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

The word "calamity" is defined at page 1116 of Vol. IX, corpus juris:

> "Any occurrence, especially when sudden and unexpected, that causes great or wide-spread distress, trouble, or affliction to individuals or to the community, as the failure of crops, an earthquake, the devastation of war or plague, or an extensive fire or flood. By context, mischance or misfortune."

The present situation is brought about because of the world war, the severe cold weather and heavy snows, causing a shortage of coal through lack of transportation facilities. This condition is such that it has had and now has the attention of local, state and federal authorities. It is a national situation, which has caused widespread "distress and trouble." It is my opinion a public calamity of large magnitude.

The teachers, therefore, would be entitled to pay for time lost under such circumstance, under the provisions of section 7690 General Code.

The answer to your second question will depend upon the terms of the contract with the hack-driver. I do not deem it advisable to answer your second question without a copy of the contract. If you will submit a copy of the contract I will answer the second question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MERCHANT COMMENCING BUSINESS IN COUNTY AFTER THE DAY PRECEDING THE SECOND MONDAY OF APRIL SHOULD REPORT TO THE COUNTY AUDITOR THE AVERAGE VALUE OF THE PERSONAL PROPERTY TO BE USED IN SAID BUSINESS—DUTY OF AUDITOR IN CASE OF REFUSAL OF SUCH MERCHANT.

A merchant commencing business in any county after the day preceding the second Monday of April in any year is amenable to the provisions of section 5387 General Code, requiring such merchant to report to the auditor of the county the probable average value of the personal property intended to be employed in such business until the day preceding the second Monday of April thereafter. In case of refusal on the part of such merchant to make the report required by section 5387 General Code the auditor of the county should proceed under the provisions of section 5390 General Code to ascertain the probable average value of the personal property intended to be employed in the business of such merchant and add thereto fifty per cent., the amount thus increased to be the basis of taxation for that year.

The fact that such merchant is a corporation does not affect the application of the statutory provisions just noted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 9, 1918.

HON. ADDISON P. MINSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I am in receipt of your letter of January 11, 1918, in which you ask my opinion on certain questions therein stated. Your letter in full reads as follows:

> "The auditor of Ross county has requested me to obtain from you an opinion as to his duties arising from the following state of facts:
> Since the army cantonment has been in operation in this county many merchants have started business in and near this city. The auditor has asked the following questions:
> 'First. Is it my duty as auditor of Ross county, and in case of the failure of a person to make a return as required in section 5387, to demand a tax return as provided for therein, and in case of the failure or refusal of the person so engaging in business to proceed according to the provisions of section 5390 of the General Code, if necessary, to secure such return?

Second. Would the fact that the business, commenced after last tax listing day, was owned by an incorporated company relieve the company from making a return?' "

Sections 5382 and 5385 General Code provide for the taxation of merchants and manufacturers' stock on the basis of the average stock on hand for the previous year instead of a tax on the aggregate of each and every item possessed on the day preceding the second Monday of April of a given year.

The provisions of section 5387 General Code noted in your communication are cognate to those of sections 5382 and 5385 General Code, and read as follows:

"Section 5387. When a person commences business as a merchant or manufacturer after the day preceding the second Monday of April in any year, the average value of whose personal property employed in such business has not been previously entered on the proper assessor's list for taxation, such person shall report to the auditor of the county the probable average value of the personal property by him intended to be employed in such business until the day preceding the second Monday of April thereafter."

Section 5390 General Code, likewise referred to in your letter, is general in its terms, providing a sanction by way of penalty with respect to returns for taxation required to be made by other appropriate statutory provision, and reads as follows:

"When a person, company, or corporation refuses or neglects to make return, or, on being requested to do so, refuses or neglects to swear to it, the assessor shall return the fact of such refusal or neglect by the words 'refused to list,' or 'refused to swear,' as the case may be. In such case, and in every case in which a company or corporation whose duty it is to make return of taxable property to the auditor refuses or neglects to make or verify such return, the auditor shall add to the amount returned, or ascertained, fifty per cent. of such amount, and the amount thus increased shall be the basis of taxation for that year."

It will be noted that the assessor has nothing to do with the return for taxation required to be made by the provisions of section 5387 General Code, and it is the duty of the county auditor to apply and enforce the provisions of section 5390 General Code in cases where returns required under section 5387 General Code are not made in the manner therein provided. Assuming therefore that the business of the merchants which you have in mind comes within the provisions of section 5387, I am of the opinion that your first inquiry should be answered in the affirmative.

With respect to your second question, it will be noted that section 5404 General Code makes special provision for the return for taxation of the property of corporations other than real estate not necessary to the daily operations of the company, while section 5405 General Code makes provision, in proper cases, for the apportionment by the county auditor to the proper taxing districts within the county of the tax valuation of the property of corporations after the deduction of the value of all real estate included in the return on the basis therein provided for.

As a matter of some significance in consideration of this question it will be noted that section 4 of Article XIII of the state constitution provides that the property of corporations now existing or hereafter created shall forever be subject to taxation the same as the property of individuals.

Section 5328 General Code provides that all real and personal property in this state belonging to individuals or corporations, and all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, or otherwise, of persons residing in this state, shall be subject to taxation, except only such property as may be expressly exempted therefrom.

More immediately to the point perhaps is section 5320 General Code, which provides that the word "person" as used in the particular title of the General Code relating to taxation, includes firms, companies, associations and corporations.

In an opinion to the tax commission of Ohio, under date of September 13, 1911 (report of Attorney-General for 1911, volume 1, page 676), my predecessor, Hon. T. S. Hogan, referring to the provisions of sections 5382, 5385 and cognate sections with respect to the taxation of merchants' and manufacturers' stock says:

> "The above statutes applicable to the return of merchants' and manufacturers' stock and property used in such business constitute not a separate rule of taxation, but merely a separate and peculiar method of valuation of certain kinds of personal property. The general assembly has recognized the inequality of applying to merchants and manufacturers the rule applicable to ordinary individuals, namely, that the value shall be affixed to specific property which it possesses on the day preceding the second Monday of April of a given year, and that only such personal property shall be returned for taxation as is owned by the taxpayer on the said day. As a substitute for this rule, the legislature has provided, in effect, that a merchant's or manufacturer's stock shall be regarded as an entity and shall be valued by determining, not the aggregate value of specific articles, which constitute it, on the day preceding the second Monday of April, but by determining the average value of such specific articles on hand during the year preceding that date.
> The corporation engaged in the manufacturing business and required to make returns as a corporation to the county auditor of all its personal property must value that portion thereof which is used or partly used in the process of manufacturing and which consists of completed manufactured articles on hand during the year as manufacturer's stock. There seems to be very little question as to this conclusion. Courts have practically adopted it wherever the application of the sections relating to the valuation of manufacturer's stock to corporations have been involved.
> Brewing Company v. Hagerty, 8 C. C., 330,
> Bridge Company v. Yost, 22 C. C., 376.
> I mention this point because both the sections relating to the return of merchants' stock and that relating to the return of manufacturers' stock expressly provide that when a person is required to make his return to the assessor he shall proceed as therein provided. Corporations, of course, do not make their returns to the assessor. However, the controlling principle is that already alluded to, namely, that the rules applicable to individuals are presumed to be applicable likewise to corporations, unless a contrary intent clearly appears."

The opinion of Mr. Hogan, though immediately directed to certain questions relating to the taxation of the property of a manufacturer, has direct application to the question presented by you, and inasmuch as upon independent investigation of the question presented by you I have found no reason to question the correctness of the conclusion reached by Mr. Hogan, I am of the opinion, in answer to your second question, that the fact that the business in question was owned by an incorporated company would not relieve such company from making the return provided for in section 5387 General Code, if such company is otherwise within the provisions of this section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES RECEIVED BY SHERIFF IN STATE CRIMINAL CASES MUST BE PAID INTO HIS FEE FUND.

The sheriff must pay into his fee fund fees received by him for serving warrants issued to him by a magistrate in state criminal cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1918.

HON. J. W. WATTS, Prosecuting Attorney, Hillsboro, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date as follows:

"The question upon which I would like to have your opinion is as fol lows:

Is there any law authorizing a sheriff to collect and keep, in addition to his regular salary, his costs accruing in a criminal case on a warrant issued to him by a magistrate wherein the state fails to convict or in misdemeanors upon conviction where the defendant proves insolvent?

Since the decision of the appellate court of the eighth district in the case of Edmond B. Haserodt, clerk of courts, etc., et al., plaintiffs in error v. The State of Ohio, ex rel., E. R. Wilcox, city solicitor, etc., defendants in error, holding that chiefs of police in state criminal cases can collect no fees for such services in police courts and since the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices finds that the same objection exists as to the fees of a marshal in state criminal cases, our mayor has been issuing some of his war rants in state criminal cases to the sheriff of the county upon the theory that he would be allowed his fees and would not have to perform such services for nothing, particularly if the state should fail or if there should be a conviction of a misdemeanor and the defendant proved insolvent.

Section 13500 G. C. provides that warrants may be directed by the magistrate, issuing the same, to the sheriff of the county.

Section 2846 G. C. provides as follows:

'Upon the certificate of the clerk and the allowance of the county commissioners, the sheriff shall receive from the county treasurer, in addition to his salary, his legal fees for services in criminal cases wherein the state fails to convict and in misdemeanors upon conviction where the defendant proves insolvent, but not more than three hundred dollars shall be allowed for the services rendered in any one year of his term.'

Section 2983 G. C. provides for the payment at the end of each quarter into the county treasury of all fees, costs, etc., collected during the said quarter by all county officers.

Section 1296-28 provides that the salary of county officials shall be in lieu of all fees, costs, etc.

I find no other sections of the law bearing upon the above question and there seems to be no specific method laid down in the Code for the collection of fees in such cases."

Section 13500 of the General Code, to which you refer, provides that warrants may be directed by the magistrate, issuing the same, to the sheriff of the county. When the sheriff, therefore, is serving these warrants, he is doing so as sheriff.

Section 2996 G. C. provides:

"Such salaries shall be instead of all fees, costs, penalties, percentages, allowances and all other perquisites of whatever kind which any of such officials may collect and receive, provided that in no case shall the annual salary paid to any such officer exceed six thousand dollars."

From a reading of section 2996, just quoted, it will be seen that any fees collected by the sheriff in serving the warrants referred to must be paid into the sheriff's fee fund unless some specific statutory authority can be found taking this case out of the general rule. Section 2846, to which you refer, is the only exception found in the statutes. This section is set forth above in your communication.

It will be noted that section 2846 G. C. provides that the sheriff in criminal cases where the state fails to convict, and in misdemeanors upon conviction, where the defendant proves insolvent, may be allowed his fees upon the certificate of the clerk and the allowance by the county commissioners. The fact that these fees must be allowed upon the certificate of the clerk would indicate that the section refers only to cases in the court of common pleas and not to cases in the mayor's court, police court and courts of justices of the peace. This being so, this section would offer no assistance in the situation you refer to.

It is therefore my opinion that any fees received by the sheriff in state cases for serving warrants, issued to him by a magistrate, must be paid into the sheriff's fee fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—OFFICE EXPENSES—HOW SAME SHOULD BE PAID.

Prosecuting attorney should have judge of common pleas court fix amount to be expended by such prosecuting attorney in ordinary conduct of office, under section 2914 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1918.

HON. J. H. FULTZ, Prosecuting Attorney, Lancaster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you say:

"Do you advise prosecuting attorneys to obtain funds under section 3004 G. C. for the payment of expenses in the ordinary conduct of their offices, or should they have a judge of the common pleas court fix an amount only under section 2914 to be by them expended?

You will note the U. S. Government has drafted prosecuting attorneys to perform many duties in connection with the selective draft law, for which they receive no compensation or expenses."

Section 3004 G. C. reads in part:

'There shall be allowed annually to the prosecuting attorney, in addition to his salary and to the allowance provided by section 2914, an amount equal to one-half the official salary, to provide for expenses which may be incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice, not otherwise provided for. * * *"

It will be seen that the allowance made to the prosecuting attorney under this section is for the payment of expenses incurred by him in the performance of his official duties and in the furtherance of justice "not otherwise provided for."

Section 2914 G. C. provides:

"On or before the first Monday in January of each year in each county, the judge of the court of common pleas, or if there be more than one judge, the judges of such court in joint session, may fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the incoming year, for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers of the prosecuting attorney's office."

It will be seen from a reading of this section that provision is made therein for the employment of assistants, clerks and stenographers by the prosecuting attorney. Therefore the allowance made to the prosecuting attorney under section 3004 cannot be used for the payment of such assistants, clerks and stenographers.

Section 2419 G. C. provides as follows:

"A court house, jail, offices for county officers, and an infirmary, shall be provided by the commissioners when, in their judgment, they, or any of them, are needed. Such buildings and offices shall be of such style, dimensions and expense, as the commissioners determine. They shall provide all rooms, fire and burglar proof vaults and safes, and other means of security in the office of the county treasurer, necessary for the protection of public moneys and property therein."

Quoting from opinion No. 185, rendered by this department on April 13, 1917:

"Under this section (2419) it is the duty of the county commissioners to furnish an office 'of such style, dimensions and expense as the commissioners determine' for the prosecuting attorney, and there being, therefore, express and ample provision for this expense, I am of the opinion that the same may not be paid under section 3004 G. C."

For the reasons set forth in the opinion and the different sections of the General Code, quoted, I must advise you that prosecuting attorneys may not use the allowance made to them under section 3004 G. C. for the payment of expenses incurred in the ordinary conduct of their office, but such matter should be taken care of as provided in sections 2914 and 2419 of the General Code, above quoted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney General.

COURTS OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS IN THE COUNTIES OF LUCAS, MAHONING, MONTGOMERY AND SUMMIT HAVE EXCLUSIVE JURISDICTION OF PROSECUTIONS UNDER SECTION 1655—PROSECUTIONS UNDER SECTION 12970 MAY BE BROUGHT BEFORE MAYOR OR JUSTICE OF THE PEACE.

Prosecutions for violations of section 1655 G. C., in the counties of Montgomery Mahoning, Summit and Lucas, should be brought in the court of domestic relations for the reason that such court in those counties has been given exclusive jurisdiction in juvenile matters; and prosecutions under section 12970 G. C. may be brought before the different mayors and justices of the peace in those counties having courts of domestic relations in the same manner as such prosecutions were had prior to the passage of these acts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1918.

The Board of State Charities, H. H. Shirer, Secretary, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of recent date as follows:

"In the development of the so called courts of domestic relations, there seem to have been inserted certain new requirements which have occasioned a few interesting inquiries at this office.

The act creating such a court for Montgomery county (O. L. 106 p. 424) provides that all cases involving the care and custody of children shall be assigned to this court. A similar provision appears in the act creating such a court for Mahoning county (O. L. 107 p. 721).

In section 3 of the act creating a similar court in Lucas county (O. L. 107 p. 732) there is an extensive list of violations of the law relating to children, with the special proviso that all minor courts shall refer such cases to the court of domestic relations.

One query has arisen especially in connection with the courts in Montgomery and Mahoning couties, viz., does this requirement prohibit any case involving the care, custody and treatment of children from being begun in any other court than the court of domestic relations? The act relating to Summit county seems to provide that this may be done, but the case must be referred to such court.

Another question is, do the specific provisions mentioned in the acts creating such courts have any effect upon the general law requiring a grand jury indictment before a person can be convicted for non support, under the provisions of sections 13008 and 13009 of the General Code."

The cases "involving the care, custody and treatment of children," to which you refer, are, you inform me, cases involving the violation of the following sections:

"Section 1655. Whoever is charged by law with the care, support maintenance or education of a minor under the age of eighteen years, and is able to support or contribute toward the support or education of such minor, fails, neglects or refuses so to do, or who abandons such minor, or who unlawfully beats, injures, or otherwise ill treats such minor, or causes or allows him or her to engage in common begging, upon complaint filed in the juvenile court, as provided in this chapter, shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than one year, or both. Such neglect, non support, or abandonment shall be deemed to have been committed in the county in which such minor may be at the time of such neglect, non support, or abandonment. Each day of such failure, neglect, or refusal shall constitute a separate offense, and the judge may order that such person stand committed until such fines and costs are paid."

"Section 12970. Whoever, having the control of or being the parent or guardian of a child under the age of sixteen years, wilfully abandons such child, or tortures, torments, or cruelly or unlawfully punishes it, or wilfully, unlawfully or negligently fails to furnish it necessary and proper food, clothing or shelter, shall be fined not less than ten dollars nor more than two hundred dollars or imprisoned not more than six months or both."

"Section 13008. Whoever, being the father, or when charged by law with the maintenance thereof, the mother, of a legitimate or illegitimate child under sixteen years of age, or the husband of a pregnant woman, living in this state, being able by reason of property, or by labor or earnings, to provide such child or such woman with necessary or proper home, care, food and clothing, neglects or refuses so to do, shall be imprisoned in a jail or workhouse at hard labor not less than six months nor more than one year, or in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years."

"Section 13009. Whoever, being the father of a legitimate child under sixteen years of age, or, being the husband of a pregnant woman, leaves, with intent to abandon, such child or pregnant woman, shall be imprisoned in a jail or workhouse at hard labor not less than six months nor more than one year, or in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than three years."

In the juvenile court law, as amended in 103 O. L., pp. 868 to 879, section 1659 G. C. was made to read as follows:

"Section 1659. When a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge, or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided. The officer having such child in charge shall take it before such judge, who shall proceed to hear and dispose of the case in the same manner as if the child had been brought before the judge in the first instance."

The juvenile court act conferred exclusive jurisdiction on the juvenile courts of the state with reference to all law violations by minors under eighteen years of age, except in certain felony cases, but the jurisdiction of the juvenile court to hear and determine prosecutions against adults for violations of laws relating to the custody, care and treatment of children was not made exclusive in all cases.

It will be seen from a reading of section 1659 that the prosecutions brought under that section must be had in the juvenile court, but so far as the juvenile court laws are concerned prosecutions for violations of section 12970 may be had in the juvenile court, common pleas court or magistrate's court. Prosecutions under sections 13008 and 13009 may only be had upon indictment in a court of common pleas, since the violation of these sections is a felony.

McKelvy v. State, 87 O. S., 1.

It is plain here that if prosecution of the violations of the sections to which you refer cannot be, in some counties, in any court other than the domestic relations court the authority for this exclusive jurisdiction of such court must be found in the acts creating such courts. An examination of these different statutes is therefore necessary to determine this question of jurisdiction.

The act creating the Montgomery county court of domestic relations is found in 106 O. L., page 424, and reads in part:

"In addition to the judges hereinbefore provided for * * * there shall be elected * * * a judge of the court of common pleas for the county of Montgomery * * *, with the powers, jurisdiction and duties as herein after provided and the same compensation as other judges of the court of common pleas of Montgomery county. He and his successors shall, however, be elected and designated as a judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations, and all the powers provided for in title 4, chapter 8, of the General Code, relating to juvenile courts, shall be exercised in Montgomery county by said judge of said court of common pleas, and on and after January 1, 1918, there shall be assigned to the judge elected in pursuance of this act all juvenile court work and all divorce and alimony cases and cases involving the care and custody of children in said county, with concurrent jurisdiction in all criminal matters, * * *."

It will be seen from a reading of this act that the so called domestic relations court of Montgomery county is not a separate and distinct court, but simply a division of the court of common pleas, to which division certain business of the common pleas court has been exclusively assigned by statute, including all the juvenile court work. There is nothing in the provisions of this act that in any way limits or affects the jurisdiction of the magistrates with reference to the hearing of prosecutions under section 12970, or the jurisdiction of such magistrates to hear, as examining magistrates, prosecutions under sections 13008 and 13009.

The act creating the domestic relations court in Mahoning county is found in 107 O. L., page 721, and reads in part:

"Section 1. From and after the passage and taking effect of this act, there shall be one additional judge of the court of common pleas in and for Mahoning county, * * *. He shall have the same qualifications and receive the same compensation as is provided by law for the judges of the court of common pleas in Mahoning county. He shall exercise the same powers and have the same jurisdiction as is provided by law for judges of the court of common pleas. He and his successors shall, however, be elected and designated as a judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations to such judge, shall be assigned all juvenile court work arising under title four, chapter eight of the General Code, and all divorce and alimony cases, and cases involving the care and custody of children in said county. * * *."

The wording of this act is practically identical with that found in the act creating the Montgomery county court and observations made in connection with that act apply with equal force to the Mahoning county domestic relations court act.

The act creating the Summit county domestic relations court is found in 107 O. L., p. 703, and reads in part:

"Section 1. From and after the passage and taking effect of this act, there shall be one additional judge of the court of common pleas in and for Summit county, who shall reside therein. * * *.

He shall have the same qualifications and shall receive the same compensation as is provided by law for the judges of the court of common pleas in Summit county. He shall exercise the same powers and have the same jurisdiction as is provided by law for judges of the court of common pleas. He and his successors shall, however, be elected and designated as a judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations, and all the powers provided for in title four, chapter eight, of the General Code, relating to juvenile courts, shall be exercised in Summit county by such judge of said court of common pleas, and on and after the appointment of such judge, there shall be assigned to said judge and his successors, elected or appointed, in pursuance of this act, all juvenile court work in said county. * * *."

This act is practically the same as the act creating the Montgomery and Mahoning counties courts and the same remarks are applicable.

The Lucas county court of domestic relations was created by the act found in 107 O. L., 732. This act reads in part:

"Section 1. There is hereby created a court of domestic relations for the county of Lucas in this state, which court shall be organized and opened for the exercise of its jurisdiction September first, nineteen hundred and seventeen, and shall be a court of record having a seal."

"Section 3. The clerk of the court of common pleas of said Lucas county shall be by virtue of his office, clerk of said court of domestic relations. Said clerk shall keep such records of the proceedings of the said court of domestic relations as are now required by law to be kept by said clerk of the proceedings of the court of common pleas. Of the proceedings relating to minors, and the support of women whose husbands are dead, such records shall be kept as may be prescribed by the rules of said court of domestic relations. The clerk of said court of domestic relations shall tax such costs in said proceedings as are now authorized by law to be taxed by the clerk in similar proceedings in courts exercising jurisdiction. On and after September first, nineteen hundred and seventeen, said court of domestic relations shall have exclusive jurisdiction within said Lucas county in and over all matters or proceedings, actions and causes that are now or may hereafter be within the jurisdiction conferred on a juvenile court or a juvenile judge or judges of the juvenile court, by chapter 8, title 4, part one, or under section 11181-1 of the General Code of this state including the granting of allowance for the partial support of women who are poor and have children to support as provided in said chapter 8, of said juvenile court act and shall have concurrent jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus; also shall have concurrent jurisdiction in all the following proceedings, causes and actions; divorce, alimony and divorce and alimony cases and in cases involving the care, custody and control of minors; excluding cases within the civil jurisdiction of the probate court pertaining to guardians and wards and adoptions, also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the prevention of cruelty to children or the neglect or failure to provide proper home, food, clothing, shelter or care of a minor child or children; also in all cases of violation of any law, relating to the abandonment, non-support or ill-treatment of a child by its parents; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the abandonment or ill-treatment of a child under sixteen years by its guardian; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations, injurious to health, life or morals or which cause or permit it to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the regulation, restriction or prohibition of the employment of minors. Also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the torturing, unlawfully punishing, ill-treating or depriving of any one of necessary food, clothing or shelter; also in bastardy cases wherein the accused is recognized for trial by the examining court or magistrate. Whenever any magistrate or court having jurisdiction in any cause, proceeding or prosecution shall find the controversy to be within the jurisdiction conferred upon the court of domestic relations, whether said cause or proceeding be civil or criminal, such magistrate or court shall immediately certify such cases to the court of domestic relations and proceed no further therein. But such court of domestic relations shall have jurisdiction to transfer and certify any such case or cause for trial to any judge of said common pleas court or magistrate or other judge in said county having jurisdiction of the subject matter, whether said case was originally commenced in said court or certified thereto. The board of county commissioners may require the clerk, in addition to the bond now required by law, to give a bond in not less than ten thousand nor more than thirty thousand dollars, conditioned that he will truly and faithfully pay over all moneys that may be received in his official capacity as clerk of said court of domestic relations; that he will enter a record of orders, decrees, judgments and proceedings of the court which he is by law required to enter and record, and faithfully and impartially perform all the duties of the said office."

"Section 6. Said court of domestic relations shall have the same power to issue process to compel the attendance of witnesses, to enforce obedience of its orders, judgements and decrees, as is possessed by the several courts of common pleas of this state. Said court shall be in session from day to day and without terms of court, provided, however, that the judge of said court shall have full power to order adjournments of the sitting of said court from time to time as he may deem advisable."

Quoting from an opinion of this department rendered January 23, 1918, addressed to Hon. James M. Cox:

"The Lucas county statute is different from the others in that it is the first which sought to make a distinct and separate court of domestic relations. In Hamilton, Mahoning and Summit counties the statute only pro vided for a division of the labor among the different judges of the court of common pleas providing that certain classes of cases should go to the common pleas judge who is selected to serve in the division of domestic relations of that court. * * *.

All that is done by the act is to call this one judge by a different name, or rather as an addition to his title, and then provides by statute for the assignment of these duties to him instead of having the judges make the assignment as in other cases."

It will be noted that the act creating the Lucas county court provides in section 3:

"* * * On and after September first, nineteen hundred and seventeen, said court of domestic relations shall have exclusive jurisdiction within said Lucas county in and over all matters or proceedings, actions and causes that are now or may hereafter be within the jurisdiction conferred on a juvenile court or a juvenile judge or judges of the juvenile court, by chapter 8, title 4, part 1, or under section 11181-1 of the General Code of this state, including the granting of allowance for the partial support of women who are poor and have children to support as provided in said chapter 8, of said juvenile court act, and shall have concurrent jurisdiction to issue writs of habeas corpus; also shall have concurrent jurisdiction in * * * cases involving the care, custody and control of minors; * * * also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the prevention of cruelty to children or the failure to provide proper home, food, clothing, shelter or care of a minor child or children; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the abandonment, non support or ill treatment of a child by its parents; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the abandonment or ill treatment of a child under sixteen years by its guardian; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations, injurious to health, life or morals or which cause or permit it to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain; also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the regulation, restriction or prohibition of the employment of minors. Also in all cases of violation of any law relating to the torturing, unlawfully punishing, ill treating or depriving of any one of necessary food, clothing or shelter; also in bastardy cases wherein the accused is recognized for trial by the examining court or magistrate. Whenever any magistrate or court having jurisdiction in any cause, proceeding or prosecution shall find the controversy to be within the jurisdiction conferred upon the court of domestic relations, whether said cause or proceeding be civil or criminal, such magistrate or court shall immediately certify such cases to the court of domestic relations and proceed no further therein. But such court of domestic relations shall have jurisdiction to transfer and certify any such case or cause for trial to any judge of said common pleas court or magistrate or other judge in said county having jurisdiction of the subject matter, whether said case was originally commenced in said court or certified thereto. * * *."

The supreme court, in the case of State ex rel. D'Alton v. Ritchie et al, decided December 11, 1917, passed upon this statute and held:

"5. Section 3 of the act of the general assembly of Ohio, passed March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 732), entitled 'An act to provide a court of domestic relations for Lucas county, Ohio, and prescribing the jurisdiction of said court,' is in conflict with section 26 of article II of the constitution of Ohio, in so far as it purports to confer jurisdiction upon that court to the exclusion of the jurisdiction conferred upon the common pleas court by the general laws of this state; but is valid as conferring jurisdiction concurrent with the jurisdiction of the common pleas court."

Donahue, J., says in the opinion:

"The entire act should not be held invalid merely because the attempt to make that jurisdiction exclusive of the jurisdiction of the common pleas court of Lucas county is unconstitutional.

This act is unconstitutional in so far as it purports to confer such exclusive jurisdiction, but it is valid as conferring jurisdiction concurrent with the common pleas court of that county.

This act contains a further provision requiring that, 'whenever any magistrate or court, having jurisdiction in any cause, proceeding, or prosecution, shall find the controversy to be within the jurisdiction conferred upon the court of domestic relations, whether said cause or proceeding be civil or criminal, such magistrate or court shall immediately certify such cases to the court of domestic relations, and proceed no further therein.'

If this provision is mandatory, then it is equally objectionable to section 26 of article II, for it would in effect deprive the common pleas court of Lucas county of jurisdiction conferred upon it by the general laws of this state. It is, however, a mere detail in furtherance of the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the court of domestic relations, and similar provisions, not purporting, however, to be mandatory, are found in the several acts creating local courts, which acts have been held constitutional by this court."

It will be noted that the supreme court viewed this provision as "a mere detail in furtherance of the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the court of domestic relations." The court does not decide whether or not this provision of section 3 applies to all cases of which the court of domestic relations has jurisdiction, or to only those cases in which such court has exclusive jurisdiction. If it were construed to apply to all cases of which the court of domestic relations had jurisdiction, then the effect of this provision would be to confer exclusive jurisdiction upon the court of domestic relations in all cases coming properly before it. Inasmuch, however, as section 3 of the act sets out in much detail the different classes of cases in which the court of domestic relations shall have only a concurrent jurisdiction, it would seem that the provision referred to by Judge Donahue as being merely directory and as being "a mere detail in furtherance of the exercise of the jurisdiction conferred upon the court of domestic relations" refers only to juvenile court matters, exclusive jurisdiction of which is attempted to be conferred upon the court of domestic relations. From the fact, then, that only a concurrent jurisdiction is conferred upon the court of domestic relations of Lucas county in cases involving the care, custody and treatment of children, and viewing the provision of section 3 as to the transfer of cases from other courts to the court of domestic relations, as affecting only cases in which the domestic relations court has exclusive jurisdiction, I can see nothing in the act which in any way affects the jurisdiction of magistrates to hear and determine prosecutions under section 12970.

From a consideration of these different acts and sections of the General Code and the decision of the supreme court referred to, it is my opinion that prosecutions for violations of section 1655 of the General Code, in the counties of Montgomery, Mahoning, Summit and Lucas, should be brought in the court of domestic relations for the reason that such court in those counties has been given exclusive jurisdiction in juvenile matters; and prosecutions under section 12970 of the General Code may be brought before the different mayors and justices of the peace in those counties having courts of domestic relations in the same manner as such prosecutions were had prior to the passage of these acts.

Answering your second question, beg to advise that the supreme court of Ohio as before noted in the McKelvy case, held:

"As the punishment provided by section 13008, General Code of Ohio, for failure by a father to support his illegitimate child, may be imprisonment in the penitentiary, this makes such offense a felony, and a justice of the peace therefore has no jurisdiction to try a person accused of violating said section, but is only authorized to conduct a preliminary examination and either discharge the accused or recognize him to appear before the proper court."

Violations of sections 13008 and 13009 G. C. being felonies, prosecution thereof must be had upon indictment by the grand jury in the court of common pleas and the provisions of the several acts creating courts of domestic relations herein considered do not affect in any way such prosecutions under such sections.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY DITCHES—CLEANING AND REPAIRING.

The only methods for cleaning out and keeping in repair county ditches and removing obstructions therefrom are found in chapter 8 of the title on drainage and in the sections supplementary thereto, 6726-1 to 6726-4, and as to township or other public ditches there is no other proceeding than that prescribed in such chapter as it stood before the enactment of these sub-sections.

The above provisions furnish the only method of enforcing a removal of obstructions from tile ditches of such public character as above described, and in the same manner.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1918.

HON. C. A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 27, 1917, you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "This is to inquire concerning the method of making repairs on county ditches. I am aware of the provisions of G. C. 6691 et seq., and G. C. 6726-1 et seq., but neither of these methods seem to take care of the difficulty which in brief is as follows:
> In a number of county ditches in Mercer county, the tile have broken down and the ditches are inefficient. The amount of repairs needed would make it impracticable to use either of the above methods as the cost of procedure would in many cases exceed the cost of repair.
> My inquiry is directed as to the manner in which these repairs should be made. Is it permissible for the county commissioners to make these repairs and pay for them out of the general county fund? If not, should the land owner on whose land the repair is needed be held to make the repair? In most of cases this would be inequitable.
> Will thank you for an early opinion as to exactly what should be done in these cases."

The sections of the statute mentioned by you above seem to be the only ones touching the subject of cleaning or repairing public ditches. It is true, as you suggest, that either of the proceedings provided for is cumbersome and costly for a trifling repair to a tile ditch. This criticism, however, is one that frequently applies to all these drainage proceedings, especially to those of small cost which could always be constructed, if the interested parties could agree, at great saving in cost.

An examination of chapter 8 of title 3, the drainage title, shows that it is intended to have application to the kind of a case you mention. This chapter provides the general scheme, which seems applicable to only open drains. The modus operandi is for the township ditch supervisor to divide the ditch into sections, apportioning such part of the length thereof to each land owner according to benefits, then requiring each to clean out the section apportioned to him, and in the event of failure, to sell out the work and have the cost certified to the county auditor to be collected as taxes. The chapter, however, is expressly made applicable to tile ditches by section 6709, which is as follows:

> "When a county, joint county or township ditch, or part thereof, has been tiled, it shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter. If in the judgment of the ditch supervisor, or supervisors of the township or townships through which such ditch runs, said tile is small and insufficient to provide the necessary drainage, the surface ditch shall be kept open by the provisions of this chapter."

It is worthy to note that the chapter generally provides not only for the cleaning out of ditches but also for the keeping of them in repair, which last provision has special application to tile ditches. The very beginning of the first section in the chapter is a reference to both cleaning and keeping in repair of township, county and joint county ditches, and a number of other sections contain the phrase "keeping in repair."

As to the liability of the owner of the land on which a given part of the ditch is located, it is attempted to be provided for in section 6718, which reads:

"Obstructions found in the ditch, except those arising from the deposit of earth, sand and gravel, the growth of grass, weeds and brush, and floodwood, naturally and without artificial obstructions to cause them, shall be deemed to have been placed there by the act of the owner of the land. A land owner shall be liable for all acts and omissions of his tenants, pertaining to the ditch."

Applying this section to tile ditches, the obstruction will always consist of the "deposit of earth, sand and gravel," for if the tile be broken or dislocated, the obstruction of the ditch by earth is certain to take place. Of course in the nature of the case it is impossible to make just and proper or even a sensible division of the labor of removing such obstruction, as usually it cannot be known where it exists and usually it only exists for a short distance, so that if each owner, to whom a section is assigned would simply investigate as to whether the obstruction was within his limit, the one who found it would then have all the work to do, which would be a sort of lottery though it would be possible, and really proper, for the township ditch supervisors to locate and investigate the difficulty before making the apportionment.

The apportionment so made, of course, exists for future "clean outs" and again the element of chance enters into it, as there is no general means of predicting where another obstruction will be located.

There is no provision of the statutes, so far as I know, permitting the commissioners to pay for these repairs out of the general fund. It might be done by having the ditch supervisor apportion to the county the section containing the obstruction This might be done if any county road were benefited by the ditch. Of course this apportionment being a permanent one, the same thing could not be done again when another obstruction occurred in another place. If the repair were made by the county the payment would naturally be from the general fund.

The other provision mentioned by you applies to county ditches only. It is the act of March 12, 1913, found in 103 O. L., page 185, and carried in Page and Adams Supplement as section 6726-1 to section 6726-4. It provides a method which can be used for any county ditch in keeping the same in repair, and aside from the objection you make to it, as to its being top heavy and complicated and expensive for a trifling improvement, it furnishes a satisfactory and thorough method for keeping county ditches in repair. Unless by some means these trifling repairs can be made by agreement, the two methods you mention furnish the only solution to your question.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

DELINQUENT LANDS—ADVERTISING FEE CANNOT BE COLLECTED WHEN TAXES PAID BEFORE CERTIFICATION.

The fee of sixty cents for advertising delinquent lands (G. C. Sec. 5713, 107 O. L 737) can not be exacted when the delinquent taxes have been paid before the date of certification.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 11, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 28th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In the event that a person pays the taxes and penalty on a piece of property advertised in the delinquent list prior to the second Tuesday in February, can the county auditor charge the 60 cents item for advertising against such person or does this fee not attach until after the property becomes duly certified, as provided in section 10 of the delinquent tax law, to be found in 107 O. L. 737?"

Your question is answered, in my opinion, by the following provisions of sections 9 and 10 of the act referred to, therein designated as sections 5712 and 5713 of the General Code.

Section 9 provides generally for making up the delinquent land tax certificate. It provides that the county treasurer and the county auditor shall, on the second Tuesday in February, make such certificate "for each tract of land * * * contained in such advertisement, on which the taxes, assessments and penalty have not been paid."

Section 10 provides that

> "The state shall have a first and best lien on the premises described in said certification, for the amount of taxes, assessments and penalty, together with interest * * *, and the additional charge of twenty-five cents for the making of said certification, and sixty cents for advertising."

Section 10 is the only section which authorizes the imposition of the charge of sixty cents for advertising. It is a charge only against the "premises described in said certification." No premises are to be certified unless "the taxes, assessments and penalty have not been paid." The last quoted clause occurring in section 9 is, in my opinion, definitive and not descriptive in import, and the county treasurer and the county auditor in making up the certificate are required to determine the fact in question as of the second Tuesday in February. In other words, the certificate does not include all lands contained in the advertisement, but only such lands on which the taxes, assessments and penalty have not been paid. Lands on which the taxes, assessments and penalty have been paid on the second Tuesday in February do not belong in the certificate and the sixty cent charge for advertising, being limited as it is to the lands which are described in the certificate can not be charged against the lands nor exacted from their owners, though the advertisement of the lands has actually been made.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE—SPRINGFIELD CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT —$160,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 12, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE—Bonds of the Springfield city school district in the sum of $160,000.00 for the purpose of purchasing sites for and erecting school houses thereon and for enlarging, repairing and furnishing school houses in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of the Springfield city school district, relating to the above issue of bonds, which, subject to the approval of this department, was purchased by the resolution adopted by you under date of February 6, 1918.

My examination of the corrected transcript of the proceedings relating to this issue shows that said proceedings are in substantial compliance with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio, relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds of said school district, covering the above issue, will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL MAY DIRECT MUNICIPAL WATER WORKS OFFICIALS TO FURNISH WATER WITHOUT CHARGE FOR STREET WATER TROUGHS AND DRINKING FOUNTAINS.

The council of a municipality has authority to direct the officials in control of a water works owned by the municipality to furnish water without char e for street water troughs and drinking fountains. This will apply to cities as well as to villages. There is no obligation upon the officials in charge of the water works to furnish such water free except upon authority and direction of the council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 13, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you submit the following inquiry:

"We are referring you to opinion of the attorney-general recorded in the annual reports of 1912, page 1977, and call your attention to the first paragraph of the synopsis.

We also refer you to an opinion of the attorney-general recorded in the annual reports of 1914, page 756.

We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following questions:

(1) Must a municipal water works furnish water without charge for street watering troughs and drinking fountains when such watering troughs and drinking fountains are in no way connected with a public building?

We will frankly state that in all of our city water works examinations we have constantly held that such water should not be furnished free.

(2) Does your ruling apply in both cities and villages?"

You call my attention to the opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, at page 1977, of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1912. The first branch of the syllabus in this opinion reads as follows:

"The purposes for which free water may be supplied by the board of trustees of public affairs having been specified in section 3963 General Code, and street improvements not being included as one of said purposes, said board has not only the right but is bound in duty, to charge a rental to council for water used for said purposes."

The other opinion to which you refer is by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, and reported at page 756, of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1914. The syllabus in this opinion is as follows:

"The board of trustees of public affairs can not require the village council to pay for water furnished for watering troughs or public drinking fountains installed on a village street, said water being furnished from a municipally owned plant. Such board of public affairs cannot charge for water furnished and used in village city hall, even though part of such hall is rented as a lodge room."

This is directly upon the question which you now submit. You do not state in your inquiry whether the water troughs or drinking fountains have been established by the municipality or by charitable institutions, or by private individuals. For the purpose of this opinion it will be assumed that they are established and maintained by the municipal corporation.

Section 3963 G. C. specifies certain provisions for which water may be furnished without charge by a water works owned by a city. This section is also made applicable to water works owned by a village.

Said section 3963 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"No charge shall be made by the director of public service in cities, or by the board of trustees of public affairs in villages, for supplying water for extinguishing fires, cleaning fire apparatus, or for furnishing or supplying connections with fire hydrants, and keeping them in repair for fire department purposes, the cleaning of market houses, the use of any public building belonging to the corporation, or any hospital, asylum, or other charitable institutions, devoted to the relief of the poor, aged, infirm, or destitute persons or orphan or delinquent children, or for the use of public school buildings; * * *."

Before considering the provisions of this section, I desire to review two recent opinions rendered by me.

Under date of March 20, 1917, opinion No. 128 was given to your department in which it was held that the council of a village which owns and operates a municipal light plant has authority to direct the trustees of public affairs to furnish current for street lighting without charge.

Under date of December 24, 1917, in opinion No. 888, given to your department, the conclusion therein reached is as follows:

> "It is within the discretion of council of a municipality to require a gas or electric plant owned and operated by such municipality, to furnish gas or electric current free of charge to such municipality for any and all municipal purposes."

In the case of gas or electric light plants owned and operated by a municipality there is no provision of statute which provides that gas or electricity may be furnished for municipal purposes without charge. In fact no specific grant of such power is necessary. The reasoning of the above opinion would apply with equal force to a water works system owned by a municipality unless these principles are changed by virtue of the provisions of section 3963 General Code.

In the case of Sewickley Water Works Commissioners v. Sewickley Borough, 159 Pa. St., 194, the act in question authorized a board of water commissioners to construct and operate a system of water works for the borough, the money therefor being furnished by the borough. It was held in the opinion:

> "(2) That the borough could without the consent or permission of the commissioners, use the water from the water works to sprinkle the streets and to lay sewers."

In the case of Board of Water Commissioners v. Detroit City Street Railway Company, 131 Mich., 1, it is held that where the city owns a water works, the city could not charge for sprinkling the streets. In this case the water works was in charge of a board of water commissioners.

In the case of Twitchell v. City of Spokane, 104 Pac., 150 (Wash.) the fourth branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "A city owning its own water works may furnish water for city and charitable purposes free."

In neither of these cases does it appear that there was a statute which specifically authorized the furnishing of water to the city free of charge.

In the opinion of the attorney-general, first above referred to, in construing the provisions of section 3963 G. C., it is said:

> "The legislature in enacting section 3963 General Code, supra, has seen fit to designate exactly the purposes for which free water shall be supplied by the board of trustees of public affairs and under the general rule of law "expressio unis est excluso alterius" the legislature not having seen fit to provide that free water can be furnished for street improvement, I am of the opinion that the board of trustees of public affairs has the right to charge for water used in the construction of street improvement; not only that they have the right but, for the reason above stated, it is the duty of such trustees so to do."

The above conclusion is reached by applying the maximum expressio unius est exclusio alterius.

In opinion No. 913, given to your department under date of January 5, 1918, in construing the above section 3963, this language is used:

"This section enumerates the purposes for which a city or village may furnish water free of charge. The enumeration of these purposes excludes all others."

There are exceptions to the rule of construction that the mention of certain specific things excludes others. It is my opinion that the above statements in construing the said section 3963 G. C. should receive some limitation.

The general rule of this maximum is stated at section 491 of Lewis' Sutherland on Statutory Construction. He states the rule as follows:

"What is expressed is exclusive only when it is creative, or in derogation of some existing law, or of some provisions in the particular act."

At section 495 he enumerates some of the exceptions to the general rule. He says:

"The maxim does not apply to a statute the language of which may fairly comprehend many different cases, in which some only are expressly mentioned by way of example merely, and not as excluding others of a similar nature. So where the words used by the legislature are general and the statute is only declaratory of the common law, it will extend to other persons and things besides those actually named. If there is some special reason for mentioning one, and none for mentioning a second which is otherwise within the statute, the absence of any mention of the latter will not exclude it."

It will be observed that in section 3963 G. C. there is provision for supplying water free of charge for certain municipal purposes and also for certain charitable purposes.

In opinion No. 913, above referred to, the question of furnishing water to departments, institutions or public buildings was under consideration. The departments supplied with free water were not designated. The question submitted was general and the general principle of law was applied thereto.

It appears from the cases above cited that a municipality owning a water works system may furnish water free for municipal purposes without any specific grant of statute. Therefore, when it was provided in section 3963 General Code that water could be furnished free for the purpose of extinguisting fires, of cleaning market houses and for the use of any public building belonging to the corporation, it did not grant any power which was not already possessed by council under its general authority to manage and control the affairs of the municipality. In such case the principle of construction, that the expression of one excludes others, does not apply.

The question as to whether the supplying of water to a public watering trough or to a public drinking fountain is a public use or purpose is one that needs no citation of authority. The public watering trough and town pump are institutions which have come down to us from time immemorial and it is now rather late to question their public character. The fact that this is now being furnished through a system of pipes and springs rather than by wells or springs does not change the public character of these troughs or fountains.

It is necessary, however, to consider the provisions of other sections before reaching a final conclusion.

Section 3958 reads as follows:

"For the purpose of paying the expenses of conducting and managing the water works, such director may assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. When more than one tenant or water taker is supplied with one hydrant or off the same pipe, and when the assessments therefor are not paid when due, the director shall look directly to the owner of the property for so much of the water rent thereof as remains unpaid, which shall be collected in the same manner as other city taxes."

Under authority of this section, the director of public service is directed to assess and collect water rents upon all tenants and premises supplied with water. There is no provision, however, which requires him to collect water rent from the municipal corporation.

Section 3959 G. C. reads as follows:

"After paying the expenses of conducting and managing the water works, any surplus therefrom may be applied to the repairs, enlargement or extension of the works or of the reservoirs, the payment of the interest of any loan made for their construction or for the creation of a sinking fund for the liquidation of the debt. The amount authorized to be levied and assessed for water works purposes shall be applied by the council to the creation of the sinking fund for the payment of the indebtedness incurred for the construction and extension of water works and for no other purpose whatever."

Section 3977 G. C. reads:

"For the purpose of paying the interest on the money borrowed for the erection and completion of water works, during the erection and completion thereof, and before they are put in operation, a tax of sufficient amount shall be assessed and collected each year in the usual manner of levying and collecting taxes in the corporations upon all the taxable property thereof."

Section 3978 G. C. reads:

"For the purpose of paying the interest on any loan which a municipality has made for the erection or extension of water works, and after they have been put in operation, and for building of machinery, a tax of sufficient amount may be assessed and collected, in addition to the amount authorized by law, by the council each year upon all the taxable property, both real and personal, in such municipality."

These sections authorize the levying of taxes for the purpose of paying interest upon money borrowed for the erection of the water works. It is apparent that the amounts received as water rent are not the only funds which are or may be received by the municipality for the use of the water works system.

In the case of Board of Water Commissioners v. Detroit Citizens Street Railway Co., 131 Mich., 1, cited above, it is held:

"The duty to erect fire hydrants, devolving upon the board of water commissioners of the city of Detroit, carries with it the duty to supply them with water, and hence, in the absence of statutory provisions, the board is not entitled to compensation for water taken from such hydrants for a general public purpose, e. g., the sprinkling of the city streets."

In this case the sprinkling of the streets was done by a private corporation, but was required by council. At page 3, Hooker, J., says:

> "It has been shown that the object of the act was to furnish water for the public and private uses of the inhabitants of the city; and there is no express provision for payment for water used for the general and ordinary public purposes, such as fire and street uses. On the other hand, there is an evident intention to keep the reasonable control of the use of water for these purposes in the board, so far as it is practicable, and not to give to the council or any other board, unlimited control and power to make requisitions upon the water board, although the use of the hydrant, etc., is confided to the proper departments."

In the case of Board of Water Commissioners v. Commissioners, 126 Mich. 459, it was held by a divided opinion, the court standing three to two, that the water commissioners were not bound to furnish water free for parks and public grounds under charge of the park commissioners. The majority opinion was upon the theory that the water works was to be maintained by the consumers and not by taxation.

Grant, J., rendering the majority opinion, says at page 461:

> "We are therefore of the opinion that the relator is empowered to charge reasonable rates for water furnished for public purposes, and that the legislature alone possesses the power to exempt the city from the payment of water rents."

This, however, was not the view in the later case of Board of Water Commissioners v. Detroit Citizens Street Railway Co., supra.

It appears from the dissenting opinion that the statutes provided as to the collection of rates as follows:

> "Said commissioners shall from time to time, cause to be assessed the water rate to be paid by the owner or occupant of each house or other building having or using water, upon such basis as they shall deem equitable."

This provision is very much like that contained in section 3958 G. C., above cited.

At section 1803, McQuillin on Municipal Corporations says:

> "Statutes often authorize a plant owned by a municipality to furnish supplies free to charitable institutions. And, independent of statute, the 'right of the city to furnish water for municipal and charitable purposes free can hardly be doubted.' "

It is clear that independent of statute council would have authority to require the director of public service to furnish water free of charge to the municipality for municipal purposes. The mere fact that the director of public service is given authority to assess and collect water rents does not give him authority to collect such rents from the municipality. In the absence of express provision to charge for water used by a municipality, it is my opinion that the council has authority to require the furnishing of free water for municipal purposes.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the council of a municipality has authority to direct the officials in control of a water works owned by the municipality to furnish water without charge for street watering troughs and drinking fountains. This will apply to cities as well as to villages. There is no obligation upon the officials in charge of the water works to furnish such water free except upon authority and direction of the council.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF THE COMBINED NORMAL AND INDUSTRIAL DEPARTMENT OF WILBERFORCE UNIVERSITY AND THE BABCOCK & WILCOX CO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1918.

MR. WILLIAM A. JOINER, Superintendent Combined Normal and Industrial Department, Wilberforce University, Wilberforce, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On behalf of the board of trustees of the combined normal and industrial department of Wilberforce University you have submitted the contract entered into between said board of trustees and The Babcock & Wilcox Co. under date of September 7, 1917, for the construction and supervision of the completion of one Babcock & Wilcox boiler without soot blower in the power house of your institution, said contract calling for the payment of $5,613.00. At the same time you submitted a bond securing said contract.

I have carefully examined the contract and finding the same to be in compliance with law and the auditor of state having certified that there are funds available for the purpose of said contract, I have this day approved the same and filed the same in the office of the auditor of state.

I am herewith enclosing you a duplicate copy of the bond which you submitted with the papers in question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN BONDS ARE ISSUED TO ERECT CHILDREN'S HOME COSTING IN EXCESS OF $25,000.00, A BUILDING COMMISSION MUST BE APPOINTED—METHOD OF PROCEDURE WHEN COUNTY BUILDINGS COST IN EXCESS OF $25,000.00—WHEN BUILDING COMMISSION REQUIRED, COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO EMPLOY ARCHITECT TO DRAW PLANS.

Where bonds are issued by a county under authority of sections 5638 et seq., General Code, to erect a county children's home costing in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars, a building commission must be appointed under authority of section 2333, General Code.

Where a county building costs in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars, sections 2333 to 2342 General Code do not provide a separate and distinct method of procedure from that provided by sections 2343 to 2366 General Code. All of these sections govern the building commission in the construction of such building.

Where the appointment of a building commission is required under section 2333 General Code, the county commissioners have no authority to employ an architect to draw plans for such building, and a contract entered into by the county commissioners for that purpose before the appointment of a building commission is invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 14, 1918.

HON. MELL G. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, New Lexington, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 5, 1918, you submit the following inquiries to this department:

> "At the general primary election held in this county on April 25, 1916, a vote was taken under sections 5638, 5639-1, 5640-1, 5641-1 and 5642-1 of the General Code of Ohio, on the proposition of erecting a children's home in this county and the issuing of bonds to derive funds out of which to pay for the same. The proposition carried for the issuing of $42,000.00 in bonds, for the erection, furnishing and equipping of a children's home for Perry county.
> The board of county commissioners propose to erect a children's home costing that amount, independent of the cost of any land or site upon which said home is to be erected, that is to say—the building furnished, heated, lighted and ready for occupancy will cost that amount.
> Do the provisions of section 2333 to section 2342 of the General Code of Ohio apply, and is it mandatory to have a building commission under said sections?
> The board of county commissioners, on May 25, 1916, acting under authority of section 2343 of the General Code of Ohio, contracted with an architect for the making of drawings and specifications for use in the construction of said children's home.
> Do the provisions of sections 2333 to 2342, inclusive, of the General Code of Ohio, and sections 2343 to 2366 of the General Code of Ohio provide separate and distinct methods of procedure in the construction of a children's home?
> In case your opinion should be that it is necessary for a building commission to be appointed in the construction of said children's home, costing the amount stated, would the act of the board of county commissioners in employing an architect previous to the appointment of such commission be valid and binding?"

Section 2333 General Code provides as follows:

> "When county commissioners have determined to erect a court house or other county building at a cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, they shall submit the question of issuing bonds of the county therefor to vote of the electors thereof. If determined in the affirmative, within thirty days thereafter, the county commissioners shall apply to the judge of a court of common pleas of the county who shall appoint four suitable and competent freehold electors of the county, who shall in connection with the county commissioners constitute a building commission and serve until its completion. Not more than two of such appointees shall be of the same political party."

Section 2343 General Code provides:

> "When it becomes necessary for the commissioners of a county to erect or cause to be erected a public building, or substructure for a bridge, or an addition to or alteration thereof, before entering into any contract therefor or repair thereof or for the supply of any materials therefor, they shall cause to be made by a competent architect or civil engineer the following: full and accurate plans showing all necessary details of the work and materials required with working plans suitable for the use of mechanics or other builders in the construction thereof, so drawn as to be easily understood; accurate bills, showing the exact amount of the different kinds of material, necessary to the construction, to accompany the plans; full and complete specifications of the work to be performed showing the manner and style required to be done, with such directions as will enable a competent builder to carry them out, and afford to bidders all needful information; a full and accurate estimate of each item of expense, and of the aggregate cost thereof.

Nothing in this section shall prevent the commissioners from receiving from bidders on iron or reinforced concrete substructures for bridges the necessary plans and specifications therefor."

Sections 5638 et seq. General Code, referred to by you, authorize the county commissioners to issue bonds for the erection of county buildings upon submitting the same to a vote when the cost exceeds fifteen thousand dollars. It is not necessary to quote from these sections.

The first question presented by you was decided by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan in an opinion to Hon. Charles F. Adams, prosecuting attorney, Elyria, Ohio, as shown at page 251 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914. In that opinion the fact was that bonds had been issued under authority of sections 5638 et seq. General Code for the erection of an infirmary building. The first branch of the syllabus reads:

"Section 2333 General Code governs and must be followed by the commissioners proceeding to construct county buildings at a cost exceeding twenty-five thousand dollars."

The same conclusion was reached by Hon. Edward C. Turner, attorney-general, in an opinion reported at page 2507 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, as to the building of a children's home. He held:

"When a county children's home is to be erected in any county at a cost to exceed twenty-five thousand dollars, a building commission is required to be appointed under the provisions of section 2333 General Code."

In the above opinion the fact was that bonds had been issued under authority of sections 3077 and 3078 General Code.

There are other opinions by my predecessors to the same effect. I concur in the above conclusions and hold that the appointment of a building commission is necessary where a county builds a county children's home costing in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars.

As applying to your second question, in an opinion of Hon. Edward C. Turner, attorney-general, as shown at page 216 of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, the second branch of the syllabus reads:

"Section 2338 General Code, as amended by the adoption of the Code in 1910, limits the powers of building commissions as granted in the original act creating them, and the provisions of sections 2343 to 2366 General Code, applying to the erection of public buildings must be observed by said commission. In case of the erection of an infirmary, the county commissioners must approve the plans as provided by sections 2349 General Code, and the prosecuting attorney must approve the contracts as provided by section 2356 General Code."

The appointment of a building commission only applies when the cost of the building exceeds twenty-five thousand dollars. Sections 2343 et seq. General Code apply to all county buildings and also to bridges.

Sections 2333 to 2342 General Code are not distinct from sections 2343 to 2366 General Code, where a building commission is appointed and the cost is in excess of twenty-five thousand dollars. Sections 2333 to 2342 General Code do not apply when the cost is less than twenty-five thousand dollars. Sections 2343 to 2366 General Code do apply to such cases. To that extent they provide distinct methods of procedure.

It appears that a building commission has not been appointed, and that the county commissioners employed an architect to draw plans and specifications.

Section 2339 General Code authorizes the building commission to employ an architect. Said section reads:

> "The commission may employ architects, superintendents and other necessary employes during such construction and fix their compensation and bond."

As the appointment of a building commission is required and they are empowered to employ an architect, it necessarily follows that the county commissioners cannot employ an architect for the erection of a building which is to be built under supervision of the building commission.

It is my opinion that the act of the county commissioners in employing the architect is invalid.

The above conclusions are supported by the case of State ex rel. v. Green, 22 C. C., n. s., 1, wherein it is held:

> "A building commission, constituted under the provisions of section 2333, is by virtue of the terms of G. C. section 2338 governed by the provisions of G. C. section 2343, requiring accurate and complete plans and specifications, and also by the provisions of G. C. section 2355, that such contract shall be awarded to the person who offers to perform the labor and furnish materials at the lowest price."

A motion was made in the supreme court to certify the record in the above case, but was overruled for the reason that no error had intervened, although the question was one of public interest.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WILLIAMS COUNTY—BONDS ISSUED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS UNDER SECTION 1223 G. C. ARE REQUIRED TO MATURE IN NOT MORE THAN TEN YEARS—RESOLUTION BY THE INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION TO PURCHASE THE WHOLE OF SAID ISSUE, WHEN ALL OF SAID BONDS DO NOT MATURE WITHIN TEN YEARS, INVALID.

All the bonds covering an issue provided for by the county commissioners under section 1223 G. C., are required to mature in not more than ten years after their issue, and where it appears by the resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for the issue of said bonds that some of the bonds covering said issue will mature after said period of time, and the resolution of the industrial commission providing for the purchase of said issue of bonds does not indicate any intention to purchase any amount or part of said bonds less than the whole of said issue is invalid with respect to the right of the industrial commission to complete the purchase of said bonds under said resolution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, Februray 16, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $36,000.00 to pay the shares of said county and benefited property and a part of the share of Madison township, said county, in the improvement of a certain section of inter-county highway No. 306 in said county and township.

I am herewith returning, without my approval, transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Williams county, Ohio, and other officers relating to the above bond issue.

The board of county commissioners of said county has provided for the issue of said bonds under the authority of section 1223 G. C. for the purpose of providing funds to pay the shares of said county and benefited property to be assessed for the improvement, as well as for the purpose of paying a part of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by Madison township in said county.

A resolution providing for the issue of these bonds states that said bonds in the denomination of $500.00 shall be dated February 1, 1918. By said resolution the first of these bonds is made payable March 10, 1919; the balance of the bonds are made payable at subsequent intervals of six months each, in such manner that two of said bonds become due and payable March 10, 1928, and the last two bonds covering said issue become due and payable September 10, 1928.

It is evident that the resolution of the board of county commissioners providing for this issue of bonds, insofar as the same provides for the maturities of the bonds covering this issue, is in conflict with the following provision of section 1223 G. C.:

> "Such bonds shall state for what purpose issued and bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent. per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts and to mature in not more than ten years after their issue as the county commissioners shall determine."

In an exact sense it may, perhaps, be said that bonds are not issued until executed and delivered, and if any intention on the part of the county commissioners to defer the execution and delivery of these bonds until September 10, 1918, were here indicated, another view with respect to the validity of this resolution might be presented. Nothing of this kind appears, however, and as a practical proposition I have no hesitation in saying that said resolution providing for the issue of these bonds offends against the express provisions of section 1223 G. C. in the respect above indicated.

A question of some interest is presented with respect to the validity of such of the bonds covering this issue as by the resolution mature within the ten year period prescribed by section 1223 G. C., but inasmuch as your resolution providing for the purchase of these bonds, subject to the approval of this department, does not indicate any intention on your part to purchase any part of this issue less than the whole,

I do not deem it necessary to discuss this question, and feel that I have no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove the issue for the reason above noted.

A number of other defects and uncertainties which forbid my approval of this issue on the present transcript is disclosed by an examination of the same. In the first place not enough facts are disclosed to indicate clearly whether the proceedings relating to this bond issue, other than the resolution immediately providing for same, are governed by the provisions of the Cass law or by the later provisions of the White-Mulcahy law. This question would probably be cleared up by the insertion in the transcript of copy and date of the order of the state highway commissioner approving for construction the particular section of this road for the improvement of which these bonds are issued.

Again, the consideration of this transcript is confused by the fact that some of the proceedings indicated therein contemplate the improvement of this road by the state highway commissioner under the statutes relating to inter-county highways, while other of said proceedings contemplate the improvement of said road by the board of county commissioners under the provisions of section 6906 et seq. of the General Code, while still other of said proceedings partake of the nature of both of said schemes of road improvement.

A serious question with respect to the validity of these bonds is presented by the fact that they are issued for the purpose, in part, of providing money to pay a portion of the cost and expense of the improvement to be ultimately paid by Madison township in said county.

By a resolution directing the state highway commissioner to proceed with the construction of this improvement, the county commissioners of Williams county attempted to apportion the cost and expense of said improvement between the state of Ohio, Williams county, Madison township, and the abutting land owners. In said resolution it is recited that the estimated cost of said improvement is $60,000.00, and inasmuch as the portion therein assessed to Madison township is 35 per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement this would amount to $21,000.00, as the part of the cost and expense of said improvement to be paid by Madison township. It appears, however, by the transcript that the board of county commissioners, acting under authority of section 1223 G. C., has heretofore issued and sold bonds of the county in the sum of $21,000.00 for the purpose of paying Madison township's share of the improvement. On this basis, therefore, it is evident that the county commissioners have in fund the full amount of Madison township's share of this improvement, and there would be, therefore, no authority to include such share, or any part thereof, in the proposed bond issue here under consideration.

However, the final resolution adopted by the board of county commissioners, under date of July 18, 1917, recites that the estimated cost and expense of the improvement is $72,700.00, all of which amount over and above the sum of $15,000.00 to be contributed by the state, is assumed in the first instance by the county, as required by section 1218 G. C.

I may here state parenthetically that the transcript does not clearly show why the state is not paying 50 per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement as provided by section 1213 G. C.; but with respect to this question I assume that there are one or more improvements to be made in the county and that the cost and expense thereof exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to the county, and that the $15,000.00 to be paid by the state in this instance is the amount agreed upon between the state and the board of county commissioners; or, in other words, that this sum is the full amount now credited to the county.

On the basis of an estimated cost of $72,700.00, it is evident that if the township is still to pay 35 per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement, the $21,000.00 received by the county as the proceeds of said former bond issue will not be sufficient to pay the township's share of the cost and expense of the improvement. However,

I fail to find in the transcript anything requiring said township to pay more towards the cost and expense of this improvement than is apportioned to it by the provisions of section 1214 G. C., to wit: 15 per cent. thereof exclusive of the cost and expense of bridges and culverts.

Under section 1217 G. C. it is competent for the township trustees of a township to waive a part or all of the apportionment of the cost and expense of such improvement to be paid by the county and assume any part or all of the cost and expense of such improvement in excess of the amount received from the state.

I fail to find any such agreement as this on the part of the trustees of Madison township. The transcript does show that in a resolution adopted by the trustees of said township July 29, 1916, the trustees agreed to pay and cause to be paid that part of the cost and expense of constructing and improving said road which may be apportioned to and assessed against Madison township.

It is quite clear to my mind that the resolution of the township trustees incorporating this agreement was adopted in contemplation of the improvement of this road by the county commissioners. In any event I am not convinced that this agreement is sufficient to make Madison township liable for any part of the cost and expense of this inter-county highway improvement in excess of the amount apportioned to it by the statute.

There are other defects in the transcript, all of which, perhaps, might be corrected by further information. For instance, the transcript does not contain any statement as to the amount of outstanding bonds issued by the county for the construction of inter-county highway improvements. This information, of course, is required in order that it may be determined whether or not the proposed issue, taken together. with outstanding bonds of the county issued for like purpose, exceed 1 per cent. of the tax duplicate of the county, and in this connection I may say that the transcript does not contain any statement of the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in said county.

Further to the point the transcript does not state the existing tax rates in said county, nor those in Madison township and the municipalities therein. Neither does it advise as to the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in Madison township; nor for that matter are we advised, except inferentially, as to the portion of the cost and expense of this improvement to be paid by Madison township, which is covered by this proposed bond issue.

As above indicated, these last named objections may, perhaps, be removed by further information, but inasmuch as I feel that I am required to disapprove said bond issue on the present legislation of the bo rd of county commissioners for the specific reason first above stated, I am returning said transcript to you with the advice that you do not purchase said bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF NOT ENTITLED TO FEES FOR WORK PERFORMED UNDER SECTIONS 5652-1 TO 5652-15 G. C.—EXPENSE OF POSTING NOTICES, HOUSING, FEEDING, ETC., OF DOGS PAID FROM GENERAL COUNTY FUND.

1. Sheriff not entitled to be paid anything for work performed under sections 5652-1 to 5652-15 inclusive, G. C. (107 O. L. 534).

2. Expenses of serving or posting notices, housing and feeding of dogs and selling and destroying of same, to be paid from general fund of county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 16, 1918.

HON. OTHO W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your inquiry which is to the following effect:

"I desire your construction of sections 5652-1 to 5652-15 of the General Code of Ohio. The part that I am especially concerned about is this:

1. Can the sheriff be paid anything for the work performed by him under these sections?

Section 5652-10, among other things, says: 'Seizing dog and delivering to pound by sheriff, $1.00', but it does not say that the sheriff is to be paid this sum of $1.00. This same section provides: 'Filing affidavit and issuing order to sheriff by justice of the peace, $0.50'. But in the latter part of the section there is a special provision that the justice of the peace shall be paid, from the general fund of the county, the sum of fifty cents. It seems that no like provision is made in respect to the sheriff.

2. Section 5652-8 provides that the county commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs, etc. I assume this means to say that they shall pass a resolution making such provision, but there is no provision in these statutes that expressly says how these deputies are to be paid, or if they are to be paid, out of what fund they are to be paid. My own notion would be that they should be paid so much for each dog seized, and that the same should be paid out of the general fund of the county. I desire your opinion on this point.

Section 5652-10 further provides for the serving or posting of notices, housing and feeding of dogs, and selling or destroying of same.

I desire your opinion fully on these matters, as to whether or not they can make arrangements for the sheriff to take care of all of these matters and pay him this money out of the general fund of the county."

In regard to your first inquiry, to wit, can the sheriff be paid anything for the work performed by him under sections 5652-1 to 5652-15 inclusive, G. C. (107 O. L. 534), you call specific attention to the provisions of section 5652-10, wherein it is provided that costs shall be assessed against every dog seized and impounded under the provisions of the act, as follows:

"Filing affidavit and issuing order to sheriff by justice of peace	$0 50
Seizing dog and delivering to pound by sheriff	1 00
Serving or posting of notice to owner by sheriff	25
Housing and feeding dog per day	25
Selling or destroying dog	50."

Under the provisions of section 5652-12 G. C. it is found that all costs collected under sections 5652-10 and 5652-11 G. C. shall be deposited in the county treasury and placed to the credit of the county general fund. I do not find any provision of the statute which states that the sheriff shall be paid anything out of such fund, while section 5652-10 does provide that the justice of the peace shall be paid from the general county fund the sum of fifty cents for filing each affidavit and issuing order thereon to the sheriff. The only reason that I can gather why said provision is made is because the justices of the peace are compensated on the fee basis and the sheriff is compensated by an annual salary.

It is therefore my opinion, in answer to your first question, that the sheriff can not be paid anything for the work performed by him under sections 5652-1 to 5652-15, supra.

Your second question relates to the manner in which the county commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs, etc. This matter was considered in opinion No. 861, rendered to Hon. Perry Smith, Zanesville, under date of December 15, 1917, and opinion No. 973, rendered to Hon. John V. Campbell, Cincinnati, on January 29, 1918, copies of which opinions I am herewith enclosing.

You further inquire, however, in your second question, as to whether or not the county commissioners shall provide, under section 5652-10 G. C., for the serving or posting of notices, housing and feeding of dogs, and selling or destroying them, from the ge eral fund of the county.

There is no other fund provided, out of which the same can be paid and it is therefore my opinion that the county commissioners should provide for the above named expenses out of the general county fund. All the costs collected under sections 5652-10 and 5652-11 G. C. are deposited in the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund, and all the registration fees under section 5652-13 G. C. constitute a special fund known as the dog and kennel fund, the disposition of which is otherwise provided for.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPOSITORY OF TOWNSHIP FUNDS MAY GIVE THE TREASURER OF THE TOWNSHIP UNITED STATES BONDS IN LIEU OF DEPOSITORY BOND.

Under the authority of the last sentence of section 4295 G. C. (103 O. L. 113), a depository of township funds is authorized to secure such deposit by the securities set out in said section 4295 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 16, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of January 16, 1918, in which you ask my opinion upon the following question:

> "The question has arisen as to whether it is possible for a depository of township funds to give to the treasurer of the township, as security, bonds of the United States, in lieu of a depository bond."

We will note the language of the statutes relating to depositories for township funds. These sections are 3320 to 3326 inclusive, G. C. The sections which particularly cover the security that is to be given by the bank or banks with which township money is deposited are 3322 and 3324 G. C.

Section 3322 G. C. provides:

> "* * * Such bank or banks shall give a good and sufficient bond to be approved by the township trustees, for the safe custody of such funds in a sum at least equal to the amount deposited. * * *."

Section 3324 G. C., in delaing with depositories in cases where there is only one bank located in the township, provides:

"Such bank or banks shall give good and sufficient bond to the approval of the township trustees in a sum at least equal to the amount deposited for the safe custody of such funds, * * *."

It will be seen that the language in these sections is specific and definite, to the effect that a lawful bond is to be furnished by the depositories of township funds, in a sum at least equal to the amount deposited. There is no alternative therein set forth.

Section 3326 G. C. provides:

"When such depository is provided and the funds are deposited therein as herein directed, the treasurer of the township and his bondsmen shall be relieved of any liabilities occasioned by the failure of the bank or banks of deposit * * *. On failure of the trustees of any township to provide a depository according to law the trustees and their bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned by their failure to provide such depository, * * *."

It is clear that the legislative intent was that the statutes relating to said depositories should be strictly followed by township officials. So that from a consideration of these sections alone, it is my opinion that the township trustees could not select an alternative proposition of accepting bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or of any political subdivision thereof, in lieu of the lawful bond provided for by the act itself.

We are strengthened in this opinion when we consider what seems to have been the general policy of the general assembly. In those cases in which it desired that public officials depositing money in banks as depositories should be authorized to accept bonds of the United States, of the state or of political subdivisions of the state, the legislature has always specifically granted this authority.

In the matter of depositories for school funds, section 7605 G. C. provides:

"* * * Such bank or banks shall give a good and sufficient bond, or shall deposit bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or county, municipal, township or school bonds issued by the authority of the state of Ohio, at the option of the board of education, * * *."

Section 2732 G. C. provides, relative to depositories of county funds, as follows:

"In place of the undertaking provided for herein, the commissioners may accept as security for money so deposited the following securities: (Then follows a list of securities, viz., United States bonds, bonds of the state of Ohio, and bonds of the particular subdivision of the state.)"

To the same effect is the provision relative to depositories for municipalities, found in section 4295 G. C., and also that covering state depositories, in section 330 G. C.

So in considering the general policy of the legislature in reference to securities furnished by depositories of public funds, it would not be logical to conclude that the legislature intended that township depositories might furnish United States bonds, etc., in lieu of the lawful bond provided for by statute.

The courts, generally, are also against such a construction being placed upon such statutes as provide for township depositories.

13 Cyc. 814 lays down the following proposition:

> "A depository of public funds is commonly required by statute to furnish security for the deposit. Where the statute expressly specifies the character of the security, the depositing officer has no power to accept any other in lieu of that prescribed.'

In Vlissingen v. Commissioners, 54 Minn. 555, we find the following principle in the syllabus:

> "The statute requires that banks designated by the board of auditors of a county as depositories of the funds collected by county treasurers shall secure deposits to a specified amount by bonds, with sureties approved by the county commissioners. No other or different security is contemplated as a condition of receiving such deposit."

On page 561 in the opinion the court say:

> "The kind of security which a bank is required to give as a condition of receiving a deposit of funds from the county treasury must be of the character above described (as provided by statute), and neither the board of auditors nor the board of commissioners have any discretion or authority under the statute to accept any other."

Hence from the authorities I am of the opinion that the township trustees would not be authorized to accept, in lieu of a lawful bond, a deposit of bonds of the United States, of the state of Ohio, or of any political subdivision of the state.

However, I am not unmindful of a decision of our circuit court which might be construed to hold opposite to what I have above held. In State ex rel. v. Rehfuss, Treasurer, 7 C. C. (N. S.) 179, the court was passing upon the constitutionality of the statutes which provided that a depository of school funds should "give a good and sufficient bond of some approved security company." The question was as to whether it would be legal to demand that a bond must be signed by a security company. In the opinion the court say:

> "It is the duty of the court to uphold the law establishing a depository for the benefit of the public, if it can be done. In order that it may be done and that the deposit may be secured by a lawful bond, the court is authorized we think, to regard the words designating the character of the security as directory merely, and not vital to the purpose of the statute."

If this language of the court were construed as broadly as it might be, the opinion rendered by me herein would be wrong, but it is my view that it was not the intention of the court that this language should be construed in its broadest sense. In the first place it must be remembered that the court was attempting to sustain the constitutionality of an act and hence went the limit in placing such a construction upon the section in question. Then too, the court had in mind merely the question of a lawful bond and was not thinking about the proposition as to whether collateral security could be deposited with a public official, in lieu of a lawful bond. This is fairly evident from the first branch of the syllabus, which reads as follows:

> "Inasmuch as the primary purpose of section 3968, providing for the designation of an official depository for school funds, is to obtain a revenue from the idle moneys of school boards, the provision of the act that the de> pository s' all give a good and sufficient bond 'of some approved surety company' is incidental merely, and indicates a purpose to require a good and sufficient lawful bond, and nothing more."

Therefore it is my opinion that the decision of the circuit court in the above case should not be extended to the point that a requirement of a statute for a lawful bond is merely directory, when the term "lawful bond" is used in contrast with "collateral security."

If our conclusion were to be based upon the sections of the General Code above quoted and no other the above undoubtedly would be correct, but there are two other sections which must be considered. One of these sections is section 4295 G. C., which was enacted, in almost its present form, on March 5, 1913, and is found in 103 O. L. 113. It states that council may provide for the deposit of all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer, in banks which will give "a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, or furnish good and sufficient surety." The section then provides that the bank or banks may secure the moneys deposited with them by the treasurer of the municipality by depositing interest bearing obligations of the United States, including bonds of the District of Columbia; bonds of the state of Ohio, or of any other state of the United States; legally issued bonds of any city, village, county, township or other political subdivision of this or any other state or territory of the United States, with certain conditions attached to the last security mentioned in the section.

The legislature then added a rider to the section, which reads as follows:

> "And whenever any of the funds of any of the political subdivisions of the state shall be deposited under any of the depository laws of the state, the securities herein mentioned, in addition to such other securities as are prescribed by law, may be accepted to secure such deposits."

It will aid us, in understanding this section, if we remember that as it was enacted in 97 O. L. 270 the provision relating to security to be furnished by the depository of a municipality was as follows:

> "And give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in Ohio, or furnish good and sufficient surety, in a sum not less than twenty per cent. in excess of the maximum amount at any time to be deposited."

In 102 O. L. 122, the legislature amended this section and made it read practically as it is found in 103 O. L. 113 and practically as it now reads.

So it will be seen that the legislature had in mind two different objects, in amending said section as found in 102 O. L. 122 and 103 O. L. 113. The one object was to provide that the depositories of municipal funds might, in lieu of furnishing a lawful bond to protect the municipality in reference to such deposits, secure said moneys by a deposit of bonds as above set out.

The second object which the legislature sought to accomplish in the rider attached to this section was that any other political subdivision of the state might accept the securities set out in said section, in addition to such other securities as are prescribed by law and which particularly apply to each political subdivision.

The question of course immediately arises as to whether this latter object which the legislature had in mind would cover the deposit of funds by township trustees. If so, the township trustees, in lieu of accepting a lawful bond as provided in the sections above quoted, might accept any of the securities mentioned in section 4295 as above set out.

We will consider the meaning of "securities," in order to decide whether this latter provision of section 4295 G. C. can be made to apply to township depositories. When we remember that this section originally provided for nothing but a lawful bond, and that in 102 O. L. 122 the legislature amended the section by adding a number of kinds of bonds which might be accepted in lieu of the lawful bond, and when we remember that at the same time it made these additions it also added the provision pertaining to all other political subdivisions, to the effect that they might accept, in addition to such other securities as are prescribed by law, the securities mentioned in this section, it is clear that the legislature intended that "securities" should not cover a lawful bond, but that it merely had in mind those evidences of indebtedness which were added to said section and which might be accepted as security in lieu of the lawful bond.

The court in Bank of Commerce v. Hart, 37 Neb. 197, 202, made the following statement in reference to the word "securities":

> "True, it (the bank's charter) says 'to purchase securities of every kind,' but certificates of stock are not securities within the meaning of this provision, nor such as the word imports in commercial or banking phraseology. 'Securities,' as here used, mean notes, bills of exchange and bonds; in other words, evidences of debt, promises to pay."

I believe the court placed the correct construction upon the word "securities," and that in the section under consideration the legislature had in mind not a lawful bond, but only those evidences of indebtedness which might be deposited with the municipality as security for funds deposited, in lieu of a lawful bond.

While there is no doubt that the legislature, in using the word "securities" in the rider to section 4295, hereinbefore set out, meant the security other than a lawful bond, nevertheless it is my opinion that the legislature intended to extend the right to take the securities set out in section 4295 G. C. to the other political subdivisions of the state, irrespective of whether or not said subdivisions were authorized theretofore to accept securities in the place of the lawful bond. The right to so take said securities was not made conditional on the fact that the said subdivision was elsewhere authorized to accept collateral securities in lieu of a bond, but was authority to take such collateral securities whether theretofore authorized or not, and if elsewhere authorized, the securities set out in said section 4295 were a further extension of the kind of securities which it could take.

In other words, as I view it, the legislature in the enactment of said rider to section 4295 G. C., intended that all political subdivisions of the state could accept the securities set out in said section, in lieu of the lawful bond and in addition to the securities, if any, which they had theretofore been authorized to take.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that by reason of the enactment of the rider in section 4295 G. C., a depository of township funds is authorized to give the treasurer of the township, as security, bonds of the United States in lieu of a depository bond.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE—MAHONING COUNTY, OHIO, IN THE SUM OF $4,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Mahoning county, Ohio, in the sum of $4,000.00, for the purpose of creating a fund for the payment of Austintown township's share of the cost and expense of improving section P of the Akron-Youngstown road, I. C. H. No. 18, in Austintown township.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Mahoning county, Ohio, and of other officers, relating to the above bond issue, such examination being supplemented by an examination of the files in the office of the state highway commissioner relating to said improvement. As a result of such examination, I am of the opinion that said proceedings are in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind and that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE COURT MAY REMIT PENALTY FOR FAILURE TO PAY THE COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX WITHIN ONE YEAR IN CERTAIN CASES—ERRONEOUS ORDER OF REMISSION BINDING UNLESS MODIFIED OR REVERSED ON APPEAL.

The probate court has jurisdiction to relieve, in proper cases, against the penalty for failure to pay the collateral inheritance tax within one year from the death of the decedent.

That the settlement of the state was delayed beyond the year in anticipation of contest proceedings that were never brought; that the problems of administration are not determined within the year, or that the executor and residuary legatee is poor, are severally insufficient as reasons for such remission.

An erroneous order of remission is binding on the county auditor unless modified or reversed on appeal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 10, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 21st requesting my opinion upon a question submitted by Hon. L. E. St. John, probate judge of Miami county, concerning the imposition of penalties on collateral inheritance taxes. The letter of the probate judge is as follows:

"I wish to know what your ruling is in the matter of the court's power, determining collateral inheritance tax, to order that the penalty for delinquency in making settlement within a year, be waived, when circumstances are such, in the opinion of the court to warrant it.

For example: Tax arising under a will would have to meet the statutory requirement of the lapse of one full year before the right of contesting of will could be determined.

Second: Administration upon the estate would require another full year before the problems of administration can be determined.

Where the executor of the estate is the residuary legatee, poor and unable to raise the tax until her rights are determined, the tax should not be determined until all other rights were barred or satisfied. Some delay incidenta to the problems carries the payment of the tax beyond the year. The court finds such delay was reasonable and it would be equity to waive the collection of the penalty arising under section 5335. Can the auditor obey the court's mandate?"

The probate court of the proper county is by section 5344 of the General Code given jurisdiction "to hear and determine all questions in relation to such tax that arise." The first problem involved on the above quoted inquiry is to determine whether jurisdiction thus conferred embraces the power to treat the statutory penalties as a court of chancery treats a penalty on a bond, for example.

The general doctrine is stated in Cyc. as follows (volume 30, page 1342):

"A court may relieve against unreasonable penalties in private contracts, but not against those created by law, unless empowered by statute so to do."

Again, under the heading of "Taxation" the rules are stated in 37 Cyc., page 1544, as follows:

"The courts will not enforce a penalty against the taxpayer where he makes a good defense against its imposition or shows a legally sufficient excuse for the delinquency charged. It is held a sufficient ground for refusing to enforce the penalty that the officers did not give the taxpayer the notice or demand to which he was entitled; that the tax was illegal or illegally levied; that he tendered or offered to pay so much of the tax as was legal * * *; that he made an honest mistake as to the amount, extent, or value of his taxable property; that he entertained a sincere and reasonable belief that the particular property was * * * not taxable, or was the subject of judicial consideration, or such as fairly to warrant a resort to the courts. In some cases also impossibility of performance has been accepted as a sufficient excuse." (Citing one case from Pennsylvania and another from Texas.)

"* * * a court, when the matter is properly before it, may remit, reduce, or refuse to enforce a penalty unlawfully or inequitably imposed, if the person complaining shows that he has done all that the law requires of him and is equitably entitled to such relief."

These general principles are sound, in my opinion, and it follows that the general assembly by conferring upon the probate court the jurisdiction to determine all questions in relation to the tax that arise has vested in that court authority to remit the penalty when it is inequitable to do otherwise.

In fact such a remitter was in effect made in the case of In Re Bates, 7. N. P., 625, on the universally recognized ground that the law imposing the inheritance tax was supposed, because of previous decisions of the court, to be unconstitutional and its constitutionality was not settled until the tax became technically delinquent.

But it does not follow that anything that may appeal to the sense of fairness of the probate court is a good "equitable" ground for remitting the penalty. The examples stated by the probate judge clearly do not fall within that category. The statute, section 5335, provides that interest at the rate of eight per cent.—which may fairly be regarded as a penalty inasmuch as it exceeds the legal rate—must be charged after the expiration of one year from the death of the decedent, and counterbalances this provision by offering an inducement to earlier payment in the form of a discount of one per cent. a month for each month that payment has been made prior to the expiration of the year. In point of fact these provisions might with some appropriateness be regarded as not in the nature of penalties, but the contrary was held in In Re Bates, supra, and I am content to follow the opinion of the court in that case.

However, the statute is very explicit in the respects now under consideration. The conditions to which the probate judge calls attention in his first two examples are such as obtain with respect to all estates of the classes referred to. The fact that a full year's time must elapse before the right of contesting a will would be barred, and that thereafter some further time must elapse before the problems of administration can be determined, would not constitute, in my judgement, a valid reason for remitting the penalty, because the legislature must be deemed to have had these everyday conditions in mind in fixing the limit at one year. In order to afford ground for the equitable remission of the penalty the delay in the settlement of the estate must be due, in my opinion, to some extraordinary occurrence or actual impossibility not within the probable contemplatation of the legislature. An example has been given in referring to In Re Bates, and the principle therein embodied may be enlarged by stating that the existence of any question of law as to the interpretation of the inheritance tax statutes themselves will afford good ground for remission. So also, in my opinion, would the pendency of actual litigation, such as a suit to contest the will. Clearly where interests of inheritance under a will are not vested as of the date of the testator's death and it is impossible therefore to assess the tax, the penalty should not commence to run at the expiration of the year unless the impossibility is removed before that time, and in such case there is reason for doubt as to whether or not the year would begin to run at the date of the testator's death or at the date of the vesting of the interst. But where the conditions are merely those ordinarily obtaining in the settlement of any e tate the legislature must be deemed to have taken such conditions into consideration in fixing the period at one year instead of two, and their existence therefore does not afford sufficient reason for remission.

I have pointed out in other opinions that in an ordinary case of this sort the penalty can be avoided by estimating the cost of administration the probate court being given authority sufficiently broad to enable it to settle the tax upon the basis of such an estimate before the actual costs are definitely ascertained.

I am therefore of the opinion that the mere fact that the full and complete determination of all problems of administration is reasonably delayed beyond one year would not justify the probate court in remitting the penalty on that account.

A closer question is presented by the suppositious fact last suggested by the probate court. Where the executor is also the residuary legatee and is poor and unable to raise the tax until final distribution, it would seem just to remit the penalty. However, I am unable to find any authority justifying a remitter in such cases, especially in view of the fact that by virtue of section 5339 "administrators, executors and trustees may sell so much of the estate of the deceased as will enable them to pay said tax in like manner as they are empowered to do for the payment of his debts." This section affords means to the executor or administrator to raise money to pay the tax if he has not sufficient assets of his own to advance the tax, and he may do so before final settlement of the estate. On this account I feel obliged to come to the conclusion that the last fact suggested by the probate judge would not be a sufficient ground for remitting the penalty.

The foregoing comments, however, do not fully cover all the matters set out in the inquiry of the probate judge, for he asks whether the county auditor should obey his mandate if he should enter an order of remitter upon facts which would, in accordance with the principles above stated, make that order erroneous.

In my opinion the answer to this question is in the affirmative. The probate judge has jurisdiction of the case and power to remit the penalty in proper cases. Therefore his order would not be wholly void though erroneous, and would be binding upon all parties concerned until set aside by proceedings in the nature of a direct attack. Such proceedings are provided for in section 5344, which provides that the jurisdiction of the probate court shall be exercised "subject to appeal as in other cases, and the prosecuting attorney shall represent the interests of the state in such proceedings." If, therefore, the probate judge should erroneously enter an order of remitter his order could only be attacked by appropriate proceedings in his own court to secure a modification of the order, or by appeal as provided for in the section quoted. Such appeal should be prosecuted by the prosecuting attorney.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that none of the grounds suggested by the probate judge in his inquiry would be sufficient upon which to predicate an order of remitter; but that the probate court has jurisdiction to order remitters in proper cases, and if it makes an erroneous order of this character it is binding upon the county auditor until set aside by himself or on appeal.

In connection with this general subject I may say that some inheritance tax laws expressly authorize the remission of the penalty in case of "unavoidable delay in settling the estate."

See In re Banks, 5 Pa. Co. Ct., 614;
In re Moore, 90 Hun., 162, 35 N. Y. Suppl. 782.

The Ohio law contains no such express provision and must, therefore, be interpreted with greater strictness than the laws of states which do contain such a provision.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAX COMMISSION NOT REQUIRED TO CERTIFY BY REGISTERED MAIL ITS ACTION DETERMINING THE BASIS OF FRANCHISE FEES OR EXCISE TAX.

The tax commission is not required to certify by registered mail its action determining the basis of franchise fees or excise taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 6, 1918, requesting my opinion as follows:

"The commission respectfully requests your official opinion as to whether section 5611-1 G. C. requires us to certify to a corporation or utility by registered mail, the action of the commission in determining the basis of franchise and excise fees as provided by sections 5465-5475, 5477, 5498 and 5502."

Section 5611-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 550), referred to by you, is as follows:

"Whenever the tax commission of Ohio determines the valuation, or liability, of property for taxation, whether in case of an original valuation or other original proceeding of such board, or in case of a determination of an appeal from the decision of a county board of revision, it shall, by registered mail, certify its action to the person in whose name the property is listed, or sought to be listed, at the same time and in the same form in which such action is certified to the county auditor, and such determination shall become final and conclusive for the current year, unless reversed, vacated, or modified as hereinafter provided."

This section provides a basis for the review of determinations by the tax commission, relating to the valuation or liability of property for taxation and to no other subject.

There is some doubt as to just what property valuations the above quoted section and those which follow it relate, but this question is not raised by your inquiry. The section itself answers your question. There is no inference to be drawn from the section, that the procedure therein and in the other related sections was intended to apply to such determinations as the commission must make in connection with the assessment and collection of franchise and excise taxes.

Your question is therefore answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR REQUIRED TO PERFORM THE DUTIES PRESCRIBED BY SECTIONS 2572 AND 6511 G. C.—CLERK OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS WITHOUT AUTHORITY TO PERFORM SUCH DUTIES.

The duties prescribed by sections 2572 and 6511 of the General Code must be performed by the county auditor. The clerk of the county commissioners appointed under the provisions of section 2409 G. C. is without authority to perform such duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of February 8, 1918, as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:

In some counties of the state where the county commissioners have employed a clerk under the provisions of section 2409 G. C., it is contended by the auditors of some of those counties that the clerk of the board of commissioners is required to keep the bill docket provided for by section 2572 G. C., and also to make complete records of ditches as provided by section 6511 G. C. This department is asked whether it is legal for the clerk of the board of county commissioners, employed by them under the provisions of section 2409 G. C., to keep these books, or whether it is a duty specifically enjoined upon the county auditor?"

Section 2566 of the General Code reads:

"By virtue of his office, the county auditor shall be the secretary of the county commissioners, except as otherwise provided by law. When so requested, he shall aid them in the performance of their duties. He shall keep an accurate book, records, maps and papers required to be deposited and kept in his office."

Section 2409 G. C. reads:

"If such board finds it necessary for the clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of such position, it may appoint a clerk in place of the county auditor and such necessary assistants to such clerk as the board deems necessary. Such clerk shall perform the duties required by law and by the board."

Section 2406 G. C. reads:

"The clerk shall keep a full record of the proceedings of the board, and a general index thereof, in a suitable book provided for that purpose, entering each motion with the name of the person making it on the record. He shall call and record the yeas and nays on each motion which involves the levying of taxes or the appropriation or payment of money. He shall state fully and clearly on the record any question relating to the power and duties of the board which is raised for its consideration by any person having an interest therein, together with the decision thereon, and shall call and record the yeas and nays by which the decision was made. When requested by a party interested in the proceedings or by his counsel, he shall record any legal proposition decided by the board, the decision thereon and the votes by which the decision was reached. If either party, in person or by counsel, except to such decision, the clerk shall record the exceptions with the record of the decision."

It is clear that from section 2566 the county auditor is by virtue of his office secretary of the county commissioners, except as otherwise provided by law; that under the provisions of section 2409 the county commissioners, if they find it necessary, may appoint a clerk to devote his entire time to the discharge of the duties of the clerk to the board. It is also clear that whether the county auditor acts as clerk, or whether a clerk to the board is appointed under section 2409, the duties of such clerk are those found in the provisions of section 2406, above quoted.

Jones, Auditor, v. Board of Commissioners, 5 O. C. D., 152.

On August 8, 1917, this department rendered an opinion, No. 504, in which it was held that the clerk of the board of county commissioners, appointed under the provisions of section 2409, is not authorized to perform the duties imposed upon the county auditor by virtue of section 2342 of the General Code, which section makes it the county auditor's duty to keep a record of the proceedings of the building commission on the journal of the county commissioners. That opinion was based largely upon the decision of the court in the case of State v. Edmondson, 12 N. P., n. s., 577. The first branch of the syllabus in that case reads:

"A distinct legislative intent appears in the provisions of section 2342, P. & A. Anno. G. C., that the county auditor shall act as the recording officer of a commission to build a new court house, and a writ of mandamus will issue requiring him to so act, notwithstanding the earlier, and in some measure conflicting, provision for the appointment of a clerk of the board of county commissioners in place of the auditor."

At page 586 the court said:

"The commissioners of Hamilton county have availed themselves of section 2409 and have appointed a clerk to take the place of the auditor as their secretary, and it is argued that by reason thereof said clerk should perform the duties specifically enjoined upon the auditor under sections 2341 and 2342. In addition to the fact that the building commission act is a later act and charges such duties upon the auditor specifically and not upon the secretary of the clerk of the board of county commissioners, and the further fact that section 2409 is by its terms and context applicable only to the duties of the auditor in connection with the proceedings of the county commissioners. Section 2409 also contemplates that such duties of the clerk shall be such as to require him 'to devote his entire time' to such duties, leaving no time for him to act for the building commission. The legislature therefore provided that the auditor should act as recording officer of the building commission. For these additional duties he can adequately provide appointment, if necessary, of a deputy under section 2563.

The recording officer of the building commission is therefore the county by the auditor, or a deputy appointed by him for such purpose."

Section 2572 of the General Code reads:

"A bill or voucher for the payment of money from any fund controlled by the commissioners or infirmary directors must be filed with the county auditor and entered in a book for that purpose at least five days before its approval for payment by the commissioners or infirmary directors. When approved, the date thereof shall be entered on such book opposite the claim, and payment thereof shall not be made until after the expiration of five days after the approval has been so entered."

Section 6511 of the General Code reads:

"The auditor, in a suitable book to be provided for that purpose at the expense of the county, shall make a complete record of each ditch improvement made in his county under the provisions of this chapter. Such record shall include the petition, bond, reports of the surveyor or engineer, and all journal entries made, with all plats and other papers necessary to show a complete history of all that is done in each case up to and including the final order made by the county commissioners."

From a reading of section 2572 it is clear that the duties imposed upon the county auditor by that section are such as are imposed upon him, not as clerk of the county commissioners, but as auditor of the county. The provisions of the section relate to the duties which are, in their very nature, attached to the position of auditor. They are not mere clerical duties to be performed in connection with the keeping of records for the county commissioners. This is also true to some extent of section 6511. While the indications as found in section 6511 are not as forcible as those found in section 2572, yet a reading of section 6524 dissolves all doubt with reference to the application of section 6511.

Section 6524 G. C. reads:

> "The county auditor shall receive for filing each paper belonging in the case, three cents; for recording each hundred words, three figures to count as one word, excluding calculations not necessarily included in the record, six cents; for each copy, including certificate, when necessarily a part of the copy, and for all notices, six cents for each hundred words, three figures to count as one word, but he shall receive no fees for printed notices; for each warrant drawn on the county treasurer, and for each certificate, three cents; for each tabular statement furnished the printer, six cents per hundred words, three figures to count as one word; and for each copy of specifications furnished, six cents per hundred words, three figures to count as one word, to be paid by the party demanding it.

From this section it will be seen that a fee is provided for the county auditor covering such work as he does under section 6511. In view of the fact that the county auditor receives no fees for his services as clerk to the county commissioners, and inasmuch as the clerk to the county commissioners is not an officer and can receive no statutory fees, it is clear that section 6511, which casts certain duties upon the county auditor, fees for which may be collected under section 6524, has application to the county auditor as such officer and not to the county auditor as clerk of the county commissioners.

For these reasons it is my opinion that the duties prescribed in sections 2572 and 6511 G. C. are not such as may be performed by the clerk of the county commissioners appointed under the provisions of section 2409 of the General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GERMAN CARP MAY BE TAKEN ANY TIME DURING THE YEAR IN THE WATERS MENTIONED IN SECTION 1453 G. C.

German carp may be taken at any time of the year, by reason of the provisions of section 1453 of the General Code, in the waters therein mentioned, and that the provisions of this section are in no way affected by the various sections of the General Code relating to the licensing of fishermen in the Lake Erie fishing district during certain seasons of the year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

The Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Fish and Game, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of February 8, 1918, as follows:

> "Inquiries received at this office relative to the taking of German carp in the Lake Erie district makes it imperative that a decision be rendered to determine as to the legality of carp being taken or caught at any time in the bays, rivers, marshes, estuaries or inlets bordering upon, flowing into or in any manner connected with Lake Erie, with any seine having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh, factory measure, as defined in section 1453.

Note section 1425, which designates the inland and lake districts, and section 1434, which provides for an open and closed season in the Lake Erie district.

Will you at your earliest convenience render an opinion as to the legality of taking carp at any time as provided in section 1453, regardless of the open and closed season as provided under section 1434? "

On May 9, 1908, an act was passed entitled "An act to revise and consolidate the l ws relating to the appointment, powers and duties of the commissioners of fish and game." Section 38 of that act, now section 1425 G. C., defined the Lake Erie and inland fishing districts. Section 46 of the act, now section 1434 G. C., provided:

"For the Lake Erie fishing district there shall be two seasons, the spring fishing season beginning on the fifteenth day of March and including and closing on the thirty-first day of August, and the fall fishing season beginning on the first day of September and including and closing on the thirtieth day of November. The fish and game commission for the purpose of obtaining spawn of fish for the fish hatcheries shall have the right to place men in any boat used in the taking of fish and pay for such spawn such amount as they may fix. And it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in fishing to refuse to take such men in any boat owned by him or under his control, or refuse to afford them opportunity to take spawn, or to do anything to hinder them in any way in the performance of their duty. No person shall draw, set, place, locate or maintain a pound net, gill net, trap net or any fish net whatever in the Lake Erie fishing district of this state between the thirtieth day of November and the fourteenth day of March, both inclusive."

Section 47 of the act, now section 1435 of the General Code, provided:

"No person, firm, or corporation shall use or operate for the purpose of catching fish, a boat, net or device, other than hook and line with bait or lure, in the Lake Erie fishing district of this state, without a license from the commissioners of fish and game. Applications for licenses and all licenses herein required shall be in such form as the commissioners of fish and game prescribe."

Section 48 of the act, now section 1436, provided for the charges to be made for licenses issued in the Lake Erie fishing district. Section 55 of the act, now section 1441 G. C., contains certain provisions as to the size of the meshes of nets to be used in the Lake Erie fishing district.

From these provisions it is clear that in order to fish with nets and other fishing devices in the Lake Erie fishing district, it was necessary, after the passage of this act, to secure a license and after such license was secured the licensee could fish with such device only during the seasons provided for the Lake Erie fishing district, viz., from the 15th day of March to the 31st day of August, and from the 1st day of September to the 30th day of November. It is also clear that the licensee was under obligations to observe certain other provisions of the law concerning the kind of nets to be used, the size of mesh, etc. Section 65 of that act, now section 1453 G. C., provided:

"Nothing in this act shall prohibit the taking or catching of German carp in the bays, marshes, estuaries or inlets bordering upon, flowing into or in any manner connected with Lake Erie, which may be caught at any time with any seine, constructed out of netting having meshes not l ss than four inches, stretched mesh. Other nets or devices may be used if authorized by the commissioners of fish and game. Written permission to catch carp in such waters shall be granted to any person who shall make application to the commissioners of fish and game for such privilege and satisfies the commissioners that he will not in any manner violate any law for the protection of fish. Such permission may be revoked by the commissioners upon conviction of the holder thereof for taking fish contrary to law."

It will be noted from a reading of this section that fishing for German carp in certain waters connected with Lake Erie was regulated in a manner different from and independent of the other provisions of the act which regulated fish generally in the Lake Erie fishing districts. It will be noted that section 65, above quoted, provided that "nothing in the act shall prohibit the taking and catching of German carp," etc., "which may be caught at any time with any seine constructed out of netting having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh. Other nets or devices may be used if authorized by the commissioners of fish and game."

In the case of Jackson v. State, 22 O. C. C., 181, the court said, in speaking of this section:

"The purpose of this legislation was, of course, to destroy carp; carp being deemed not especially of value, and in some respects pernicious because of their destructiveness to other fish, and perhaps otherwise; and for this reason they were not deemed entitled to the protection of the law like fish of value. The legislature, having this in mind, and knowing the extent to which carp were beginning to frequent the waters adjacent to Lake Erie, and connected therewith, passed this law excepting from the prohibitive operation of the law the fishing for this class of fish; and they made the law pretty broad. It looks a little as if the legislature used all the terms that occurred to them at the time of the enactment to describe waters which would be so contiguous to Lake Erie that carp would readily go into Lake Erie from such waters, or from Lake Erie into them."

From these sections which have been quoted I believe it is apparent that after the passage of the act of 1908 referred to, German carp could be caught in the waters connected with Lake Erie at any time of the year and by any one given written permission to do so regardless of any provisions of the law concerning licenses for the Lake Erie fishing district and the provisions relative to the fishing seasons in such district. The only thing necessary was a written permission from the commissioners of fish and game. After this was exacted the fisherman had but one provision of law governing him in his fishing for German carp and this was that the seine used should be constructed of netting having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh. Even this provision, however, could be set aside by the commissioners of fish and game.

The various sections set out above have, from time to time, been amended, but all of them apppear in the General Code in practically the same form today as they are found in the act of 1908, above quoted.

Some little confusion, however, may be met with in a consideration of section 1453 for the reason that that section was twice amended by the last legislature. On March 21, 1917, an act was passed, known as Amended House Bill No. 115, and entitled "An act to supplement section 1087" and which contains amendments to a number of sections dealing with the various departments of the board of agriculture of Ohio. In this act, at page 489, section 1453 was amended to read as follows:

"German carp may be taken or caught at any time in the bays, marshes, estuaries or inlets bordering upon, flowing into or in any manner connected with Lake Erie, with any seine, having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh. Other nets or devices may be used if authorized by the secretary of agriculture. Written permission to catch carp in such waters shall be granted to any person making application to the secretary for such privileges who satisfies the secretary that he will not violate a law for the protection of fish. Such permission may be revoked by the secretary upon conviction of the holder thereof for taking fish contrary to law."

This act was approved by the governor March 29, 1917, and filed with the secretary of state on the 31st day of March, 1917. On March 21, 1917, the day upon which the bill just referred to was passed, another bill, known as house bill 163, and entitled "An act to amend section 1453 of the General Code, as amended by the 82nd general assembly by an act passed on the 10th day of March, 1917, known as house bill 115." This act read as follows:

"Section 1. That section 1453 of the General Code be amended to read as follows:

'Section 1453: German carp and mullet may be taken or caught in the bays, rivers, marshes, estuaries or inlets bordering upon, flowing into or in any manner connected with Lake Erie, with any seine, having meshes not less than four inches, stretched mesh factory measure. Provided however that German carp and millet shall not be taken or caught under the provisions of this act in the following streams except as hereinafter designated: In the Ottawa river no farther than the Ann Arbor bridge; in the Maumee river no farther than the Toledo country club; in the Portage river no farther than one-half mile past poor house flats; in Sandusky river no farther than the south mouth of Bar creek; and no farther up the La Carp creek, Little Portage river, Tousaint river, Turtle creek, and Ward's canal than the water level of Lake Erie extends in these streams.'

Section 2. That said original section 1453 of the General Code as amended by the 82nd general assembly by an act passed on the 10th day of March, 1917, known as house bill No. 115, be, and the same is hereby repealed."

This act was passed March 21, 1917, the same day upon which the act first referred to was passed. It was approved March 29, 1917, the same day upon which the other act was approved, but it was filed in the office of the secretary of state on March 30, 1917, one day earlier than the act first referred to.

This duplicate amendment of section 1453 was considered in opinion No. 659, rendered by this department on September 27, 1917, and it was therein held that section 1453, as amended by house bill No. 163, is in force and effect and repeals section 1453 as amended by amended house bill No. 115. In section 1453, as it now stands, the provision necessitating written permission from the board of agriculture, department of fish and game, to those taking German carp in the Lake Erie fishing district, does not appear other than this. There is no important difference between this section, in its present form, and the form in which it was found as section 65 of the act of 1908. As was noted before, the other sections, concerning the Lake Erie fishing district, the licensing of fishermen therein and seasons of fishing, are found in practically the same form in the present General Code as they appeared in the act of 1908, and practically the same relation now exists between these sections and section 1453 G. C., as existed when all of these sections were parts of the act of 1908.

I am therefore of the opinion that German carp may be taken at any time of the year, by reason of the provisions of section 1453 of the General Code, in the waters therein mentioned, and that the provisions of this section are in no way affected by the various sections of the General Code relating to the licensing of fishermen in the Lake Erie fishing district during certain seasons of the year.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE—PERRY COUNTY, IN THE SUM OF $63,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Perry county, Ohio, in the sum of $63,000 in anticipation of assessments apportioned to Perry county for the cost and expense of improving Rush creek, the same being a joint county ditch improvement located in Fairfield and Perry counties, Ohio.

I have lately received from the officials of Perry county, Ohio, a transcript of the proceedings relating to the above bond issue. These bonds are issued by Perry county in anticipation of the collection of a portion of the assessments for the construction and improvement of Rush creek, the same being a joint county ditch improvement located in Fairfield and Perry counties, Ohio. The proceedings indicated in said transcript, with the exception of the resolution providing for the issue of said bonds, are identical with those set out in the transcript submitted to me with respect to the bonds of Fairfield county, issued by said county in anticipation of assessments apportioned to it for the construction of said improvement and which bonds were approved by me by opinion No. 847, under date of December 12, 1917. The same considerations which led to my approval of the Fairfield county bonds, on the questions suggested by the transcript, relating to said bonds and discussed by me in said opinion, likewise leads to an approval of the bonds of Perry county, issued for the purpose of paying its share of this joint county ditch improvement.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Perry county, Ohio.

In this connection I deem it my duty to say that I have been lately advised that a number of actions have been filed in the common pleas court of Perry county by persons assessed for the cost and expense of constructing this improvement in Perry county, for the purpose of enjoining the collection of assessments made against them. I am advised that there are 8 or 10 of these suits pending on the docket of said court undisposed of. The information given me with respect to these suits does not disclose whether or not the jurisdiction of the county commissioners of said county to construct said improvement is involved in any of these cases, or whether, on the other hand, the actions to enjoin these assessments have been brought on grounds and for reasons peculiar to the respective persons instituting such suits. Inasmuch as the treasurer of state requires a litigation certificate before turning over the money for the bonds purchased by you, the above information is given to the end that the same may be imparted to him. The treasurer of state in turn will then be in position, by the litigation certificate furnished to him, to ascertain the exact state of the litigation touching the validity of assessments, in anticipation of the collection of which the above bonds are issued.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW COSTS PAID IN PROSECUTION FOR VIOLATION OF BOILER LICENSE LAWS AND FOR CHARGING UNLAWFUL RATE OF INTEREST ON MONEY LOANED.

In prosecutions for the violation of boiler license laws the costs should be paid as provided in section 13439 of the General Code.

When such cases are carried to the common pleas court, the costs are to be certified, after the magistrate has been notified of the final action of the higher court, in the same manner as costs are paid under this section, when the case does not go beyond the justice court.

In prosecutions for charging unlawful rate of interest on money loaned, there being no special provision for the payment of costs, the only authority for payment of costs is section 3019 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have a letter from Hon. Oscar Redding, a justice of the peace, Toledo, Ohio, and since his request involves questions of costs, I am addressing the opinion to your bureau. The request reads as follows:

> "On January 20, 1915, Edward J. Hurley, as state inspector from your office, filed complaint against one Ed. Hecklinger, charging him with operating a boiler without a license. The case was tried before me and appealed on error to the court of common pleas and afterward dismissed in the common pleas court. I filed my costs bill with our county auditor for payment which he refused to pay.
> What I want to know is when a complaint is filed in justice court by an inspector from your office or department who is to pay costs providing the state fails.
> Also an inspector from your department, Hamilton DeWeese, filed complaint in my court charging Henry French with loaning money and charging unlawful rate of interest. This case was appealed on error. Providing the state fails, who is to pay the costs?
> We also have case from Arthur Sisco, an inspector of steam boilers, who filed case on January 31, 1917, charging Harry T. Bamforder and Francis Miller with operating steam boiler without license. Found guilty before me. Appealed to common pleas court. Who is to pay the costs in these cases?
> The county prosecutor refused to O. K. the cost bill in each of these cases."

I note from the above communication that two of the cases to which reference is made are violations of laws relating to the licensing of steam boiler operators.

Section 13423 of the General Code, as amended, 103 O. L., p. 539, reads in part:

> "Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction, within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to: * * *.
> 14. Offenses for violation of laws in relation to inspection of steam boilers, and of laws licensing steam engineers and boiler operators.
> * * * * * * * * * * * *."

Section 13439 G. C. reads:

> "In such prosecutions, no costs shall be required to be advanced or secured by a person authorized by law to prosecute. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise, or convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, all costs of such case shall be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor, who, after correcting errors therein, shall issue a warrant on the county treasury in favor of the person to whom such costs and fees are payable. All moneys which are to be paid by the county treasurer as provided in this chapter shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of such county."

It has frequently been held by this department that the words "in such prosecutions," used in section 13436 G. C., refer to the prosecutions enumerated in section 13423 G. C. See Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, Vol. I, page 258; also opinion 823 of this department, rendered December 3, 1917.

The same argument applies with equal force to the words "in such prosecutions" used in section 13439, above quoted, since sections 13439 and 13436 were originally parts of Revised Statutes, section 3718a. This being so, it is clear that in the two cases relating to violations of boiler license laws, the costs should be paid as provided in section 13439 of the General Code.

In the first of these cases to which reference is made, the defendant was convicted in the justice court. On the case having been carried up to the common pleas court on error, such court discharged the defendant. Since section 13439 provides that the trial magistrate shall certify the costs in the case to the county auditor if the defendant be acquitted or "discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise," it is the duty of the justice in this case, upon being advised of the dismissal of the defendant by the court of common pleas, to certify the costs to the county auditor. See Opinion of the Attorney-General for 1916, Vol. II, page 1750, and opinion No. 959, rendered by this department under date of January 23, 1918. It then becomes the duty of the county auditor, after correcting the errors found therein, to issue a warrant on the county treasurer in favor of the person to whom such costs and fees are payable.

In the second of this class of cases to which reference is made, defendant was found guilty in the justice court and the case taken to the common pleas court. If the higher court sustains the conviction, the costs should be paid by the defendant unless it is necessary to commit him to jail in default of paying fines and costs, in which case they shall be paid upon the justice's certificate by the county auditor out of the county treasury. If the higher court reverses the judgment of the justice and orders the defendant dismissed, upon proper notice from such court of such action it will be the duty of the justice to certify his costs to the county auditor to pay such costs out of the county treasury.

The third case to which attention is called in the inquiry is one in which the defendant was charging an unlawful rate of interest on money loaned. This is a misdemeanor for which no special provision as to payment of cost has been made and it is subject, therefore, to the general rule relating to misdemeanors.

Section 3019 of the General Code provides:

"In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

It has frequently been held by this department that in misdemeanor cases, before officers may be allowed fees under section 3019, there must be, first, a conviction and, second, the defendent must prove insolvent. This is the view recently taken by the common pleas court of Carroll county in an opinion rendered December 3, 1917, in the case of State ex rel. v. Marshall, Auditor.

Referring, then, to the case mentioned in the inquiry, concerning the violations of the loan shark law, beg to advise that, assuming for the purpose of this opinion that the justice court had jurisdiction to try this case, the costs may be paid as follows: If the higher court sustains the conviction and the defendant proves insolvent, fees may be allowed under section 3019 of the General Code, as above provided. If the higher court reverses the conviction, I know of no way to collect.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAX LEVY AUTHORIZED BY SECTION 2434 G. C. IS SUBJECT TO LIMITATIONS OF THE SMITH ONE PER CENT. LAW.

The tax levy authorized by section 2434 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 502, is subject to all the limitations of the Smith one per cent. law, section 5649-2 et seq. G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 19, 1918.

HON. EUGENE WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 7, 1918, you submit for my opinion the following question:

> "Under section 2434 General Code of Ohio, as amended 107 O. L., page 502, is the levy of two tenths of one mill for every dollar of taxable property on the tax duplicate of a county within the fifteen mill limit, or is this levy outside of the fifteen mill limit?"

The amendment to section 2434, found in 107 O. L. 502, does not in anywise change the effect of the section in the particulars about which you inquire. In other words the levy therein provided for is not a new one authorized since the passage of the Smith one per cent. law. Even if it were, the Smith one per cent. law would in my opinion apply fully to the exercise of the authority to make such a levy, in the absence of express provisions in the later act excluding the levy from some or all of the limitations of the Smith law. The principle in such case would be that all levies, though authorized to be made in a particular number of mills, must be deemed subject to the limitations of the Smith law, unless otherwise specifically provided in the law authorizing the new levy.

In this case, however, as I have stated, no new levy is authorized, and the mere fact that section 2434 G. C. has been recently amended in other particulars, does not make the provisions now under consideration a subsequent one with respect to the Smith law. So much of the statute as is not verbally changed in process of repeal and re-enactment for the purpose of amendment, is upon most familiar principles deemed to have been the law all the time and speaks from the date of its original enactment, and not from the date of its amendment.

For both these reasons, then, I agree with you in the conclusion that the levy of two-tenths of one mill, authorized by section 2434 G. C., as amended, is subject to the fifteen mill limitation of the Smith one per cent. law so called. Indeed, I go further and state that it is my opinion this levy is subject to all the limitations of the Smith law, including the ten mill limitation of section 5649-2 G. C., and the three mill limitation of section 5649-3a G. C., as well as the fifteen mill limitation of section 5649-3d G. C., about which you particularly inquire. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE ACT CREATING A MUNICIPAL COURT OF ALLIANCE ABOLISHED THE OFFICE OF JUSTICE OF THE PEACE IN THE TOWNSHIPS OF LEXINGTON AND WASHINGTON, STARK COUNTY.

The act found in 107 O. L., 660, creating the municipal court for the city of Alliance, Ohio, and the townships of Lexington and Washington, county of Stark, abolished the office of justice of the peace in those two townships and that officer must turn over his dockets and files to the municipal court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 20, 1918.

HON. FRANK M. SWEITZER, Prosecuting Attorney, Canton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication asking for an opinion upon the following facts:

> "In 1917 the Ohio legislature enacted a law creating the municipal court in the city of Alliance, which, in substance, provides that all work heretofore handled by the justice of the peace in Lexington and Washington townships of Stark county, Ohio, be filed in the municipal court, also directing the justice of the peace of the two heretofore named townships to turn over their books to the municipal court of Alliance on January 1, 1918, or at the beginning of the new court.
> A. was elected justice of the peace of Lexington township for a term of four years and took office in 1916, consequently you can see that he has two years yet to serve in this office if he fills out the term for which he has been elected by the electorate of Lexington township. I would respectfully request that you give me your opinion as to whether or not he is compelled by this act creating a municipal court, found in Vol 107, Ohio Laws, page 660, to turn over his dockets and files and cease doing business as justice of the peace of Lexington township, or whether he has a legal right to fill out his term of office for which he has been elected."

Section 1 of article IV of the constitution, as adopted in September, 1912, reads:

> "The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, court of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law."

Section 1711-1, General Code, as enacted in 103 O. L., page 214, reads:

> "That there be and is hereby established in each of the several townships in the several counties of the state of Ohio, except townships in which a court other than a mayor's court now exists or may hereafter be created having jurisdiction of all cases of which justices of the peace have or may have jurisdiction, the office of justice of the peace.
> The jurisdiction, powers and duties of said office, and the number of justices of the peace in each such township shall be the same as was provided by the laws in force on September 3, 1912. All laws and parts of laws in force on said date, in any manner regulating such powers and duties, fixing such jurisdiction or pertaining to such office or the incumbents thereof are hereby declared to be and remain in force until specifically amended or repealed, the same as if herein fully re-enacted."

In the case of in re Hesse, 93 O. S., p. 230 Newman, J., says:

"The office of justice of the peace on January 1, 1913, ceased to be a constitutional office. Acting under the authority conferred upon it by section 1, article IV of the constitution, as amended in 1912, the general assembly, by an act filed in the office of the secretary of state April 30, 1913 (103 O. L., 214), established the office of justice of the peace in each of the several townships in the different counties of the state, excepting townships in which a court other than a mayor's court then existed or might thereafter be created having jurisdiction of all cases of which justices of the peace had or might have jurisdiction."

The act of creating the municipal court for the city of Alliance, Stark county, Ohio, is found in 107 O. L., p. 660. Section 1 reads:

"That there be and hereby is created a court of record for the city of Alliance and the townships of Lexington and Washington, in the county of Stark, state of Ohio, to be styled 'The Municipal Court of Alliance, Ohio' (the jurisdiction thereof, to be as herein and hereinafter fixed and determined)."

Section 2 provides for the election and compensation of one judge of such court, and further provides that

"Said judge shall be elected at the next regular municipal election after the going into effect of this act, for a term of four years, commencing on the first day of January next, after said election and shall hold said office until his successor is elected and duly qualified."

Section 3 of the act provides that:

"Said municipal court herein established shall have the same jurisdiction in criminal matters and prosecutions for misdemeanors, for violations of ordinances as mayors of cities and any justice of the peace, and in addition thereto shall have ordinary civil jurisdiction within the limits of said city of Alliance and townships of Lexington and Washington, in the county of Stark and state of Ohio, in the following cases:

(1) In all actions and proceedings of which justices of the peace, or such courts as may succeed justice of the peace courts, have or may be given jurisdiction. (Then follows an enumeration of seven other classes of civil actions of which the Alliance municipal court can take jurisdiction)."

Section 5 of the act provides:

"In all cases the municipal court shall have jurisdiction in every ancillary and supplemental proceeding, before and after judgment, including attachment of person or property, arrest before judgment, interpleader, aid of execution and the appointment of a receiver, for which authority is now, or may hereafter be conferred upon the court of common pleas, or a judge thereof, or upon justices of the peace."

Section 6 of the act provides:

"The municipal court shall have jurisdiction of all misdemeanors and of all violations of city ordinances of which police courts or the mayor in municipalities now have or may hereafter be given jurisdiction. In felonies the municipal court shall have the powers which police courts or the mayor in municipalities now have or may hereafter be given."

From these sections it will be seen that in this act there was created by the general assembly a court for the city of Alliance in the townships of Lexington and Washington, in Stark county, "other than a mayor's court * * * having jurisdiction of all cases of which justices of the peace had or might have jurisdiction." Since the office of justice of the peace is no longer a constitutional office, and since section 1711-1 of the General Code makes provision for the office of justice of the peace, only in those townships in which a court, other than the mayor's court having jurisdiction in all cases of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction, has not been created, it is plain that when the legislature enacted the Alliance municipal court law, found in 107 O. L., p. 660, the effect of such act was to abolish the office of justice of the peace in the townships of Lexington and Washington, Stark county. That the legislature had the authority to do this is plain from a reading of the case of in re Hesse, supra. In that case the Cincinnati municipal court law was being assailed for the reason that the act limited the jurisdiction of justices of the peace outside of Cincinnati township over criminal matters and robbed the justice of the peace in Cincinnati township of all jurisdiction in criminal matters. The court said:

"There can be no objection to the constitutional validity of these provisions. Although section 26 of article II of the constitution imposes a limitation upon the legislative power in requiring all laws of a general nature to have uniform operation throughout the state, yet it seems to be settled that, section 1, article IV, authorizing the establishment of inferior courts, being a special grant of legislative power upon a particular subject, the general assembly is vested with full power to determine what other courts it will establish, local if deemed proper, either for separate counties or districts, and to define their jurisdiction and power. The State ex rel v. Bloch, 65 Ohio St., 370; State ex rel v. Featman, 89 Ohio St., 44. It is to be observed that the jurisdiction of no constitutional court is invaded by the sections of the municipal court act under consideration. They abridge and limit the jurisdiction of a statutory court only."

In Mechem's Public Offices and Officers, section 465, I find the following:

"Where, then, an office is created by statute, it may, in the absence of constitutional prohibitions, be entirely abolished, or its term may be increased or diminished, or the manner of filling it may be changed, or its compensation may be altered, or its duties may be diminished or increased, at the will of the legislature at any time, even though done during the term for which the then incumbent was elected or appointed.

So the legislature may declare the office vacant or may transfer its duties to another officer, although the effect may be to remove the officer in the middle of his term, or to abolish his office by leaving it devoid of duties."

Section 37 of the Alliance municipal court act reads:

"All proceedings, judgment, executions, dockets, papers, moneys, property and persons subject to the jurisdiction of the mayor's court of the city of Alliance and the courts of any justice of the peace for Lexington and Washington townships in Stark county on December 31, 1917, shall be turned over to the municipal court herein created; and thereafter such causes shall proceed in the municipal court as if originally instituted therein, the parties making such amendments to their pleadings as required to conform to the rules of said court."

It is clear from the above statutes and authorities cited that the offices of justice of the peace in Lexington and Washington townships, Stark county, have been abolished and that such justices must now comply with the provisions of section 37 of the act just quoted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW PENALTIES PROVIDED UNDER SECTIONS 5734 AND 5735 (BOTH SECTIONS REPEALED) RELATIVE TO THE REDEMPTION OF DELINQUENT LANDS COMPUTED.

The fifteen per cent penalty of section 5734 and the twenty-five per cent penalty of section 5735 of the General Code (both repealed in 1917) were not to be computed upon the amount of special assessments charged against the property redeemed from delinquent tax sale in addition to the general taxes charged.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 20, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of February 4, 1918, requesting my opinion as follows:

"Can the holder of a tax 'certificate of purchase' under former section 5715 of delinquent lands or lots, collect the fifteen per cent penalty of former section 5734, General Code, or twenty-five per cent penalty of former section 5735 General Code, on the amount of special assessments charged against such property, which were paid by purchaser in addition to the general taxes charged?"

The following sections of the General Code, which have since been repealed, but which govern proceedings and causes of proceedings pending and existing at the date of their repeal, bear upon the answer to your question:

"Section 5734. A person desiring to redeem land or town lots sold at a delinquent tax sale within one year after the sale thereof, or within one year after the expiration of any of the disabilities named in the next preceding section, may deposit with the county treasurer, * * * an amount of money equal to that for which such land or town lot was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon by the purchaser, or those claiming under him, together with interest, and fifteen per cent penalty on the whole amount paid * * * ."

"Section 5735. A person desiring to redeem any land or town lot sold at a delinquent tax sale, after the expiration of one year from the sale thereof, and within the time limited by law for such redemption, may deposit with the county treasurer, * * * an amount of money equal to that for which such land or town lot was sold, and the taxes subsequently paid thereon by such purchaser, or those claiming under him, together with with interest and twenty-five per cent penalty on the whole amount paid, * * * ."

"Section 5715. The county auditor shall make and deliver to the purchaser of land or lots, sold for delinquent taxes as aforesaid, a certificate of purchase, therein describing the land or lots so sold, as described in the tax duplicate, and stating therein the amount of taxes, and penalty for which they were sold * * *."

"Section 5724. Upon the sale of land or town lots for delinquent taxes, the lieu which the state has thereon for taxes then due shall be transferred to the purchaser at such sale. If such sale should be invalid on account of irregularity in the proceedings of an officer, having a duty to perform in relation thereto, the purchaser at such sale shall be entitled to receive, from the owner of such land or lot, the amount of taxes, interest and penalty legally due thereon at the time of sale, with interest thereon from time of payment thereof, and the amount of taxes paid thereon by the purchaser subsequent to such sale. Such land or lot shall be bound for the payment thereof."

"Section 5738. Upon the demand of the purchaser, or his legal representative, and the surrender of the tax certificate, and upon the payment of the auditor's fees, the county auditor shall draw his warrant upon the county treasurer in favor of such purchaser, or his legal representative, for the amount of money so deposited as hereinbefore provided, with the treasurer."

Without abstracting the administrative machinery which is provided for by these related sections, and which I think is sufficiently intelligible from the face of said sections, I point out that your question necessitates an interpretation of the word "taxes" as used in three of them. In my opinion this word was used in its narrower significance, which is that sense which excludes the idea of special assessments.

Under the statutory scheme existing prior to 1917, of which these sections were a part, special assessments formed no part of the delinquent taxes for which lands were advertised and sold. The word "taxes" is used throughout the chapter, in which the sections are found, and in every instance of its use it means general taxes as distinguished from special assessments.

When, therefore, sections 5734 and 5735 G. C. provided that the redemptioner should pay an amount which included "the taxes subsequently paid thereon by the purchaser," it was intended that this part of the amount to be paid was to be computed upon the basis of general property taxes laid on the land, and those only. Of course the penalty was based on the whole amount made up as the sections required and the certificate holder was entitled under section 5738 G. C. to receive the amount deposited under section 5734 or 5735, and no more.

This statement sufficiently answers your question in the negative.

I may say that it is not to be inferred, from what I have held, that the assessments actually paid by the certificate holder on property, together with interest thereon, may not be recovered by the certificate holder from the owner of the property in a proper case. The facts which would support such a recovery need not be considered, as your question relates merely to the calculation of the penalties prescribed in sections 5734 and 5735, supra. But what I have said has made it clear that the deposit to be made with the county treasurer by the redemptioner is not to include the amount of the assessments paid by the certificate holder, but only the amount of the taxes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE—DELAWARE COUNTY—$33,600.00

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 20, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In re bonds of Delaware county, Ohio, in the sum of $33,600.00, in anticipation of the collection of special assessments for the improvement of certain single county ditches in said county.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of said county, relating to the above bond issue which was purchased by you under date of February 12, 1918.

I find that the proceedings relating to this bond issue are in substantial conformity to the provisions of the General Code, so far as any question touching the liability of the county on said bonds is concerned, and I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW PUBLICATION OF THE RATES OF TAXATION SHOULD BE MADE—COUNTY TREASURER MAY SELECT NEWSPAPER—WHERE NEWSPAPER PUBLISHES WITHOUT DIRECTION FROM COUNTY TREASURER, SUCH PAPER NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION—DUTIES OF TREASURER RELATIVE TO SUCH PUBLICATION.

Publication of the rates of taxation shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspaper published thereat as provided in section 6252 General Code, and such publication shall be made for six successive weeks as provided in section 2648 General Code. There is no authority therefore for the publication of such notice in a newspaper which is not published at the county seat, except in cities other than a county seat having a population of eight thousand inhabitants or more, as provided in the last sentence of section 6252 General Code.

Where a newspaper publishes the rates of taxation without direction from the county treasurer, such paper is not entitled to compensation therefor, and the county cannot pay the same either as a moral or legal obligation.

The county treasurer has authority, under section 2648 General Code, to select a newspaper in which publication of the rates of taxation shall be made.

Where the county treasurer selects a newspaper not published at the county seat in which to publish the rates of taxation, such newspaper cannot be paid for such publication.

Where a county treasurer selects some paper at the county seat in which to make publication of the rates of taxation, and another paper voluntarily publishes such rates, the county treasurer need not proceed to make additional publication in a newspaper of opposite politics to the paper which he selected to make such publication.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 20, 1918.

HON C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your letter of January 10, 1918, is received, in which you make the following inquiries:

> "Please refer to sections 2648 and 6252 G. C.
> Our county treasurer authorized the rates of taxation to be published in The Waverly Watchman (printed at Waverly, the county seat) and in The Piketon Republican (printed at Piketon, five miles from the county seat). These being two newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in Pike county, and at the county seat.
> The Republican Herald (printed at the county seat), wthout any authority from the treasurer, also proceeded to publish said rates of taxation, taking the copy, we presume, from one of the other papers.
> As to the publication in The Waverly Watchman, there is no question, it being published at the county seat, and the publication authorized by the county treasurer.
> Both of the other papers named have presented bills to our county commissioners for the publication of said rates of taxation.
> Query:
> 1. The Republican Herald, not being authorized by the treasurer to publish said rates, can it collect for such publication; or is there any authority to pay for such publication?
> 2. Is not the county treasurer authorized to select the newspaper in which such notice is to be published? (See 9 Dec. Rep 644, 16 Bull. 69).
> 3. The Piketon Republican, not being printed at the county seat, can the treasurer authorize the publication of the 'rates of taxation,' in such paper? And can its bill be legally paid? Can the fact that it is generally circulated at the county seat be construed to be a publication at the county seat?
> 4. If neither of these bills can be legally paid, for reasons given, will the one publication in The Waverly Watchman be sufficient under section

2648, which provides for publication 'in a newspaper having a general circulation in the county?' Or will mandamus lie to compel the county treasurer to proceed to publish in a newspaper of opposite politics to the Watchman, and printed at the county seat?"

The first question to be determined is the number of newspapers in which the rates of taxation shall be published.

Section 2648 General Code reads as follows:

"Upon receiving from the county auditor a duplicate of taxes assessed upon the property of the county, the county treasurer, shall immediately cause notice thereof to be posted in three places in each township of the county, one of which shall be at the place of holding elections in such township, and also be inserted for six successive weeks in a newspaper having a general circulation in the county. Such notice shall specify particularly the amount of taxes levied on the duplicate for the support of the state government, the payment of interest and principal of the public debt, the support of state common schools, defraying county expenses, repairing of roads, keeping the poor, building of bridges, township expenses and for each other object for which taxes may be levied on each dollar valuation."

The above section was originally passed March 12, 1831, as section 13 of an Act contained in 29 Ohio Laws, 291. This section reads, in part, as follows:

"That the county treasurer shall, between the first and fifteenth days of August annually, receive from the county auditor of his county, a duplicate of the taxes assessed by such auditor; and immediately after receiving said duplicate, he shall cause notice to be posted up in three places in each township throughout the county, one of which shall be the place of holding elections in the township, and also to be inserted in some newspaper having general circulation in his county, for six successive weeks * * *."

This section was amended May 1, 1854, by an Act in 52 Ohio Laws, 124, but the provision in reference to publication in some newspaper was not changed. This provision read the same until the adoption of the General Code in 1910, when the language was changed to its present form but no change was made in the substance. This provision requires publication to be made in some newspaper having general circulation in the county and this publication is to be made for six successive weeks.

Section 6252 General Code provides as follows:

"A proclamation for an election, an order fixing the times of holding court, notice of rates of taxation, bridge and pike notices, notice to contractors and such other advertisements of general interest to the taxpayers as the auditor, treasurer, probate judge or commissioners may deem proper, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspapers published thereat. In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city. This chapter shall not apply to the publication of notices of delinquent tax and forfeited land sales."

The town of Piketon to which you refer is a village according to the census of 1910, and therefore the provision of section 6252, supra, as to publication in cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more does not apply to the case cited by you.

The provisions of said section 6252 General Code were first enacted by an act in 73 Ohio Laws, 75, passed March 25, 1876. Section 2 of said act reads in part as follows:

> "That hereafter all proclamations by sheriffs for elections; orders fixing times of holding courts; treasurer's notice of rates of taxation; * * * shall be published in two newspapers, one of each political party, if there be two papers of different political principals printed within said county in each of the several counties of this state."

It will be observed that this act provided for the publication in two papers printed within said county, but did not provide that such papers should be published at the county seat.

This section was amended in 86 Ohio Laws, 258, by an act passed April 12, 1889, so as to read, in part, as follows:

> "Every proclamation for an election, order fixing the times of holding court, notice of the rates of taxation, * * * shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, at the county seat, if there be such published in the county seat, * * * ."

The above amendment provides that the matters therein specified "shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics, at the county seat." This is the first restriction found in the statutes which require such publication to be made in newspapers at the county seat. This provision is now found in the present form of section 6252 General Code.

Section 2648 General Code was known as section 1087 of the Revised Statutes and section 6252 General Code was known as section 4367 Revised Statutes. These two sections, with others, were under consideration by Evans, J., in the case of Elliott v. Board of Commissioners of Franklin county, 16 Bull. 69. There is no syllabus to this case. Judge Evans in his opinion states that it is necessary to examine the provisions of the statute to determine the question then under consideration. He says in his opinion:

> "The provisions of the statutes touching the subject under consideration are contained in the Revised Statutes sections 1087, 2977, 4367 and 4368. These several provisions are in pari materia, and must be construed together and the legislative intent arrived at by giving to the language used in the several sections, its ordinary and natural import. The court is of the opinion that the county treasurer is the person who is authorized to cause to be published his notice of the rates of taxation, and under the limitations of the statute to select the newspapers in which the same may be published. Under section 1087, the county treasurer was authorized and required to publish his rates of taxation in some newspaper, which, when properly understood, means in one English paper. But section 4367 authorizes and requires him to publish his rates of taxation in two English newspapers of opposite politics. If there be more than two competent English newspapers, he shall, with regard to the limitations contained in the section, select the two in which publication may be made. The only authority which he has to make such publication is found in the sections above referred to; and as he is an officer having no authority to make any publication at the expense of his county, unless authorized by statute, it follows that the language of the statute conferring its authority will show its true limit. The treasurer was authorized to make publication of his rates of taxation, by section 1087, in but one English newspaper, and by section 4367, in two English newspapers of opposite politics. The authority conferred by section 4367 cannot be construed as authorizing publication in more than two English newspapers.

The sheriff is authorized and required by section 2077 to publish his election proclamation, and under this section to publish it in but one English newspaper; and his authority to make publication thereof under section 4367 is the same as that of county treasurers to publish rates of taxation.

Upon the facts as we find them to exist in the proofs, and the application thereto of the law as we understand it, the plaintiffs cannot recover for either of said publications. Said publications, respectively, had been given to the Journal and Times before application was made to have them published in the Sunday Capital, and this fact was known to plaintiff, or his agent, at the time of such application, as well as the further fact that the board of county commissioners had resolved that they would pay but two English newspapers for the publication of said proclamation and rates. The legal presumption is that every person knows the law, and the evidence shows that plaintiff, or his agent, had due notice of all the material facts."

The date of this opinion is not given, but it is published in the Weekly Law Bulletin, issue of August 2, 1886. The date of the opinion therefore was evidently some time between March 25, 1876, when the original provisions of what is known as section 6252 General Code were passed, and April 12, 1889, when said act was first amended. At the time, therefore, when this opinion was rendered there was no provision in the statute that such publication should be made in two newspapers of opposite politics located at the county seat.

The above section 6252 General Code covers also the publication of an order fixing the time of holding court. Publication of such notice is also provided for in sections 1519 and 1534 General Code. It is provided in section 1519, among other things,

"the clerk shall cause a copy of the order to be published in one or more newspapers of general circulation in such county, once a week on the same day of the week, for three consecutive weeks."

Section 1534 General Code contains a like provision.

For the purpose of this opinion and the questions under consideration, these provisions are like the provisions contained in section 2648 General Code, and the conclusions reached would apply equally to each section.

In sections 4825 and 4827 General Code there is provision for the proclamation of election issued by the sheriff.

Section 4825 General Code contains the following provision:

"A copy of such proclamation shall be posted at each of the places where elections are appointed to be held and inserted in a newspaper published in the county."

A like provision is contained in section 4827 General Code. These provisions are also subject to the same construction as that contained in section 2648 General Code, in so far as applicable to the present question.

In the case of The Vindicator Printing Co. v. State of Ohio, 68 O. S., 362, publications of a sheriff's proclamation of election and other publications were under consideration. Spear, J., says at page 366 as follows:

> "Publication of the sheriff's proclamation is authorized by section 2977, Revised Statutes. It is to 'be inserted in some newspaper published in the county, if any is published therein.' This is supplemented by section 4367, which requires publication in two newspapers of opposite politics, but taken together the meaning is one insertion in each newspaper."

It will be observed that Judge Spear holds that what is now section 6252 General Code is supplemental to section 4825 General Code.

In an opinion to Hon. R. H. Patchin, prosecuting attorney, under date of November 15, 1910, Hon. U. G. Denman, attorney-general, says:

> "You point out the fact that section 2648 provides simply that such notice 'shall be inserted for six consecutive weeks in a newspaper having general circulation in the county.' However, section 6252 of the General Code is to be read in connection with section 2648 of the General Code.
> The notice provided in section 2648 of the General Code is required to 'specify particularly the amount of taxes levied on the duplicate' for the various purposes for which taxes are to be levied, and, in my judgment, is such a notice as is contemplated by section 6252 of the General Code.
> From all the foregoing it follows that said notice should be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if such there are."

In an opinion to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, under date of October 6, 1915, reported in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1915, at page 1925, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

> "The provisions of section 6252 G. C. requiring the publication of the 'times for holding courts' to be made in two newspapers of 'opposite politics,' as therein specified, are supplementary to and control the provisions of the special statutes requiring such publications to be made in one or more newspapers of general circulation."

The above provisions of statute were again under consideration by Hon. Edward C. Turner, attorney-general, in an opinion to Hon. Henry W. Cherrington, prosecuting attorney, under date of November 13, 1916, and reported at page 1771 of Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916. The syllabus of the opinion reads as follows:

> "Publication of order required by section 1519 G. C. should be made in accordance with section 6252 G. C."

Mr. Turner says at page 1772:

> "Section 6252 G. C. provides that if there are two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat publication shall be made there. And if there are one or more newspapers of opposite politics in a city of eight thousand inhabitants or more not a county seat in the county, such publication should be made there. There is nothing in the statute as to the number of insertions to be made. It may be possible that in certain county seats there are not two newspapers of opposite politics published, and if such is the case, then the publication would be made in only one newspaper. It does not seem to me, therefore, that there is such a conflict between the two statutes that it can be said that section 1519 G. C. is exclusive of the provisions of section 6252 G. C., but rather that the two may be read together without in any way doing violence to the language of either. If there are two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat an order fixing the time of holding court should be printed in such newspapers. If in such county there is a city of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not a county seat, additional publication shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics if there be such in such city, and under the provisions of section 6253 G. C. publication shall be made in a newspaper printed in the German language. The time of publication is fixed by the provisions of section 1519 G. C., section 6252 G. C. not providing for the time of publication."

It appears from the decisions and opinions above cited, that the provisions of section 6252 General Code are to be held as supplementary to the provisions of section 2648 General Code. It is clear also that the two sections are in pari materia as to the question now under consideration and that they are to be read and construed together.

The provisions of section 2648 General Code, requiring the publication of the rates of taxation in some newspapers having general circulation in the county, was first enacted and has been a part of the statute since 1831. The provisions now contained in section 6252 General Code were first passed in 1876, and in the original form they provided that such publication should be made in two newspapers of different political principles printed within said county. It is clear that under this form only publication in two newspapers was provided for. This was the situation when the case of Elliott v. Commissioners of Franklin County, supra, was decided.

Thereafter, the provisions which are now contained in section 6252 General Code were changed so that such newspaper should be published at the county seat. There was a further limitation upon the right of selecting the newspaper in which such publication should be made. This amendment did not increase the number of newspapers in which such publication should be made. A newspaper meeting the requirements of section 6252 General Code, as being published at the county seat, would also meet the requirements contained in section 2648 General Code, that such publication shall be made in a newspaper having a general circulation in the county.

If, therefore, the provisions of section 6252 General Code are supplementary to section 2648 General Code, they limit the publication to newspapers which are published at the county seat. It will be observed that section 6252 General Code does not specify the number of times such publication is made. Section 2648 General Code does state that such publication shall be made for six successive weeks.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the publication of the rates of taxation shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspaper published thereat as provided in section 6252 General Code, and that such publication shall be made for six successive weeks as provided in section 2648 General Code. There is no authority therefore for the publication of such notice in a newspaper which is not published at the county seat, except in cities other than a county seat having a population of eight thousand inhabitants or more, as provided in the last sentence of section 6252 General Code.

Coming now to your specific questions, your first question is with reference to the right of The Republican Herald to be paid for the publication made by it.

It appears that this paper was not authorized to make such publication by the county treasurer. By virtue of section 2648 General Code the county treasurer has authority to select the newspaper in which such publication shall be made.

In the case of McCormick v. City of Niles, 81 O. S., 246, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

> "The liability of a municipal corporation to pay for the publication of ordinances, resolutions and legal notices required by law to be published, must rest on express contract, and not upon a mere account for the rendition of such services."

The same principle will apply to contracts for publication of legal notices by the county.

In the case of the Republican Herald there was no express contract to make the publication. This paper cannot, therefore, enforce collection against the county for payment for such services.

The second part of your first question, as to the authority of the county to pay for such publication, will be considered in connection with the answer to your fourth question.

Your second question is as to the authority of the county treasurer to select the newspaper in which such notice is to be published.

Under the provisions of section 2648 General Code it is the duty of the county treasurer to make such publication, and he has authority to select the newspaper or newspapers in which such publication shall be made.

Your third question is as to the right of the Piketon Republican to be paid for making publication under contract with the county treasurer. This paper does not meet the requirements of section 6252 General Code, for the reason that it is not published at the county seat. The county treasurer therefore was not authorized to have such publication made in this newspaper and it cannot be paid therefor.

Your fourth question is as to the sufficiency of the publication now made.

It appears that there are at the couty seat two newspapers of opposite politics which meet the requirements of section 6252 General Code. One of these papers has been officially selected by the county treasurer in which to make publication of the rates of taxation. The other paper has voluntarily made such publication without official selection by the county treasurer.

At page 360 of volume 28 of Cyc. it is said:

> "Failure to contract in writing for the publishing, as required by the charter, will not affect the validity of the publication."

This rule is stated in reference to the publication of ordinances of a municipal corporation.

The case of McKusick v. Stillwater, 44 Minn., 372, is cited in support of the above rule. In that case it was held:

> "Where the proposition of the proprietor of a newspaper to publish the ordinances, etc., of the city was accepted, and such paper declared to be the official paper of the city, and is thereafter treated as such, and notices and proceedings under the charter are duly and regularly published therein, the omission to comply with a provision of the charter requiring the contract between the city and the publisher to be reduced to writing, and a bond to be executed by the latter, will not invalidate such published notices and proceedings."

In this case an attempt was made to select the paper making the publication as the official organ for making publications, but the requirements of the statutes as to making a contract were not complied with.

In the case of Wright v. Forestal, 65 Wis. 341, it is held:

"Where the common council has undertaken, in pursuance of the charter, to designate a newspaper as the official paper for a year, and all notices, etc., of the city government are published in such paper during the year, that paper is de facto the official paper, even though the designation was irregularly made, and the publication of a notice therein will be held valid in collateral proceedings."

In this case, however, the court held that the newspaper in question had been legally selected to make the publication in question.

These cases are decided upon the principle that the paper was de facto the official paper.

There is no provision of the statute which would permit a taxpayer to refuse to pay his taxes upon the ground that publication of the rates of taxation had not been made in accordance with the provisions of section 6252 General Code. So far as the taxpayers are concerned, they have had due notice of the rates of taxation, even though the one publication was made voluntarily by one of the newspapers. The taxpayer therefore could not take advantage of this situation.

It is my opinion that no further publication need be made of the rates of taxation in your county.

The further question then arises as to the authority of the county to pay for such voluntary publication. There is no legal obligation to pay for the same. If the right to pay exists, it would be upon the theory that it is a moral obligation.

McQuillin on Municipal Corporations, at section 2168, states the rule:

"While payment of claims which are neither legal nor equitable is an expenditure for other than public purposes, yet the payment by municipal corporations of claims founded in justice and supported by a moral obligation only, does not conflict with constitutional provisions forbidding the making of gifts."

A moral or equitable obligation usually arises where an effort has been made to enter into a legal contract, but through some irregularity the provisions of the statute have not been complied with. In the present case no attempt was made to designate the Republican Herald as the paper in which to make such publication. Such publication was made voluntarily. There would not under such circumstances be any moral or equitable obligation upon the county to pay for such publication.

At section 793 of Dillon on Municipal Corporations he says:

"A municipal corporation does not become liable for work and labor performed or services rendered by a mere volunteer without any request, either express or implied."

It is my opinion, therefore, that the county is not legally obligated to pay the bill of The Republican Herald, nor can it pay the same as a moral or equitable claim against the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SURETIES ON BOND OF CITY OFFICIAL LIABLE EVEN THOUGH ORIGINAL BOND LOST—LIABILITY OF CUSTODIAN.

The sureties on a bond of an officer or an employe of a city, as shown by the official record of such bond, may be held liable thereunder even though the original bond cannot be found.

The liability of the official in whose keeping such bond is placed will depend upon whether the city has suffered any loss on account of the failure to preserve the original bond, and his negligence in misplacing the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTEMEN:—Your letter of January 31, 1918, is received in which you submit the following inquiries:

"We would refer you to the provisions of section 4669 General Code, relative to officers giving bond, the filing and recording of same.

STATEMENT OF FACTS.

An officer of a municipality required to give bond has been found short in his accounts and restitution should be made. The bond given cannot be found or located in any manner. However, the record of the auditor shows the date of the bond and the persons who became sureties for the officer, etc.

1. Can the bondsmen as shown by the record of the auditor be held liable when the bond itself cannot be located?

2. Can the officer required by law to file and carefully preserve such bond be held liable?

3. Will the same ruling apply to employes, who are not officers, but who are required to give bond by law or ordinance?"

Section 4669 General Code, to which you refer, reads as follows:

"Each officer required by law or ordinance to give bond shall do so before entering upon the duties of the office, except as otherwise provided in this title. In its discretion council at any time may require each officer to give a new or additional bond. Except that of the auditor or clerk, each bond upon its approval shall be delivered to the auditor or clerk, who shall immediately record it in a record provided for that purpose and file and carefully preserve it in his office. The bond of the auditor or clerk shall be delivered to the treasurer, who shall in like manner record and preserve it."

Section 4 General Code reads:

> "Every officer, on receiving an official bond which by law is required to be filed or deposited with him, shall, on receiving such bond, record it in a book to be kept by him for that purpose. A certified transcript of the record of such bond shall be conclusive evidence of such record, and prima facie evidence of the execution and existence of such bond."

Section 4669 General Code provides for the filing and record of the official bonds. Section 4 General Code also provides for a record, and further, makes a certified transcript of the record "prima facie evidence of the execution and existence of such bond."

The fact that a written instrument may be lost does not affect the liability thereunder. It does affect the proof of the existence of the instrument and the terms thereof. As to bonds of officers the record thereof is made prima facie evidence of the existence of such bond. The record, therefore, takes the place of the bond and may be shown in order to fix the liability thereunder.

At page 1608 of volume 25 of Cyc., the rule is stated:

> "The loss or destruction of a written instrument in no way affects the liabilities of the parties to it, or changes the nature of the demand."

Answering your questions specifically:

The sureties on a bond of an officer of a city, as shown by the official record of such bond, may be held liable thereunder, even though the original bond cannot be found.

The liability of the official in whose keeping such bond is placed will depend upon whether the city has suffered any loss on account of the failure to preserve the original bond, and his negligence in misplacing the same. As the bond can be proved by the record, it does not appear that the city will suffer any loss. I do not deem it advisable to give a general answer to your second question. The facts of each case should be considered.

The principles above given will apply to bonds given by employes.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SPECIAL FUND IN STATE TREASURY MAY NOT BE USED UNTIL APPROPRIATED.

Fines and penalties received under section 1248-7 G. C. become a special fund in the state treasury, but cannot be used until appropriated.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

HON. A. W. FREEMAN, Commissioner of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have requested my opinion as follows:

> "Following is a copy of a letter I have received from the auditor of state:

'The books of account in this office show the following sums to have been credited to your appropriations:

$50 shown on your revenue voucher No. 1031, Oct. 31, 1917.

$50 shown on auditor of state's revenue voucher No. 1531 December 31, 1917.

Both amounts were fines collected under H. B. 470, filed in the office of the secretary of state, May 27, 1915. (Sec. 1248-7 G. C.)

Undoubtedly the intendment of the section mentioned was, among other things, to appropriate for the use of your department the fines collected in prosecutions under this act.

However, it would seem that under the operations of Art. II, Sec. 22, Ohio constitution, the virtue of 1248-7 G. C., as an appropriation act ceased at the end of the two years running from August 25, 1917 (90 days after the filing of the act as aforesaid), to August 26, 1917.

Therefore, it will be necessary to deduct the sum of $100 from your appropriation balances.'

The above refers to the administration of H. B. 470 (106 O. L. 321). The auditor of state seems to have fallen into the error of believing that section 8 of this bill appropriated $5,000 to the state board of health for the administration of this act. This section did not appropriate money to this department. The appropriation was made in H. B. 701 (106 O. L. 693). You will note that the purpose of this legislation is continuing. That is, that it was not the intent of the legislature that this department should administer the work in the prevention of blindness from inflammation of the eyes of the new born merely for the period of two years covered by house bill 701.

While no specific appropriation was made for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1917, funds were appropriated for this purpose, but are not easily recognizable for the reason that in order to follow the budget classifications the items concerned in the prosecution of this work are divided. By referring to H. B. 584 (107 O. L. 214) you will find items which will identify the intent of the legislature that the work be continued. In making up our budget for the present fiscal year, the following items were included:

A-1.	1 public health nurse	$1,200 00
	1 stenographer, grade III	900 00
A-2.	Emergency nurses	500 00
A-3.	Reporting fees	500 00
	Physicians' fees	500 00
C-4.	Postage and office supplies	100 00
C-5.	Medical supplies	750 00
F-6a.	Transportation	750 00
F-9.	General plant service (for hospital treatment of cases)	200 00

This makes a total of $5,400.00 for the continuance of our work in the prevention of blindness.

Section 8 of H. B. 470 provides:

'The sum of $5,000.00 shall be annually appropriated for the use of the state board of health in enforcing and carrying out the provisions of this act. Any and all necessary and legitimate expenses that may be incurred in prosecuting a case under this act shall, on proper showing, be met by the state board of health out of this appropriation. In addition thereto, all fines and penalties recovered hereunder shall be paid into the state treasury and shall constitute a special fund for the uses and purposes of the state board of health as herein enacted.'

During the two years ending June 30, 1917, fines and penalties recovered under this act were paid to the credit of the item 'for the prevention of blindness among infants, H. B. 470, approved May 27, 1915.'

I should like your opinion as to whether or not this department is entitled to be credited with the fines and penalties recovered from prosecutions under the provisions of this act and if so, your opinion as to what item in our appropriation for the current fiscal year should be credited with such amounts as may be paid into the state treasury."

In your letter you set out the provisions of section 1248-7, which is section 8 of H. B. 470 (106 O. L. 223) in full and this is the only section necessary to be considered in considering your request.

In the letter of the auditor of state to your department he says that the intendment of said section was, among other things, to appropriate for the use of your department the fines collected in prosecutions under said act. I do not agree that such is the intendment of the section.

So much of said section as is pertinent to this matter provides as follows:

"In addition thereto, all fines and penalties recovered hereunder shall be paid into the state treasury and shall constitute a special fund for the uses and purposes of the state board of health (state department of health) as herein enacted."

The only effect that can be given to such provision is that the moneys received by way of fines and penalties are to be credited separately in the state treasury as a special fund, and does not in any sense constitute an appropriation thereof. There are many funds in the state treasury which are special funds, but which cannot be paid out except in pursuance of a specific appropriation made by law. (Article II, section 22.) It is necessary, therefore, that an appropriation be made before such funds will become available.

We note what you say relative to the general appropriation bill found in 106 O. L. 693, to the effect that the legislature appropriated to the state board of health in section 2 thereof the sum of $5,000.00, which appropriation was made to extend from July 1, 1915, to June 30, 1917, and would also call your attention that it likewise appropriated in section 3 thereof, for the same purpose, the sum of $5,000.00 for the use of your board from July 1, 1916, to June 30, 1917. At the beginning of said appropriation bill it is provided:

"Appropriations enumerated in such sections (sections 2 and 3) for * * * boards * * * for the uses and purposes of which * * * specific funds in the state treasury are provided by law, are hereby made from such specific funds, in so far as such funds are subject by law to appropriation and expenditure for the purposes therein mentioned, and to the extent that the monies to the credit of such specific funds on July 1, 1915, or which may be credited thereto prior to June 30, 1917, shall be sufficient to satisfy such appropriations."

The intention of the legislature, therefore, was, so far as the appropriation referred to is concerned, that all moneys which were collected by way of fines and penalties should be credited to a special fund and that such special fund would be available for the payment of the amount appropriated so far as it went to the payment of the amount so appropriated.

In the general appropriation bill found in 107 O. L., 187, the same language is used in section 1 thereof with different dates as was used in the prior general appropriation bill, and you inform me that of this appropriation as divided for your department $5,400.00 was the amount appropriated for the purpose of the prevention of blindness among infants.

Whatever fines and penalties were received by your board and paid into the state treasury should have been credited to the special fund provided for in said act and said special fund should have been used to pay the amount appropriated to the state board of health for the items enumerated in your letter, as those which are used "for the prevention of blindness among infants."

So that, answering your question specifically, I advise that your department is entitled to have credited to a special fund in the state treasury the fines and penalties recovered from prosecutions under the provisions of the act "for the prevention of blindness among infants, H. B. 470, approved May 27, 1915," and that such funds should be used so far as they will go to the payment of the items specified in your letter. They would not, however, be in addition to the appropriation of $5,400.00 which you have designated in your letter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSTABLES HAVE BEEN ENTITLED TO RECEIVE ONE DOLLAR FOR SERVING WARRANTS IN CASES ENUMERATED IN SECTION 13423 G. C. SINCE JUNE 7, 1911.

By virtue of the amendment of section 2845 G. C. in 102 O. L., 286, constables have been entitled to $1.00 for serving warrants in cases enumerated in section 13423 of the General Code since June 7, 1911.

A constable rendered a bill for services rendered by him for serving warrants in such cases, covering a period from June, 1910, to March, 1912. At the time the costs were paid in these cases only thirty cents for serving such warrants was allowed the constable. HELD, that such constable is entitled to the payment of the additional seventy cents from the county for serving such warrants in those instances in which the following facts are established:

1. Such services must have been rendered in a case falling within the provisions of section 13423 G. C.

2. The services rendered must have been rendered on or subsequent to June 7, 1911, and the cost bill must have been certified by the trial magistrate to the county auditor within the last six years.

3. The defendant must have been acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise or convicted and committed in default of paying the fine and costs.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

HON. JOHN D. D'ALTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Toledo, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 17, 1917, as follows:

"W. E. Stiles, a duly elected, qualified and acting constable of Washington township, has submitted to this office a bill aggregating some $186.00, for services rendered by him in criminal cases covering period from June 8, 1910, to and including March 10, 1912, in serving warrants in criminal neglect cases.

It is his claim that under section 2845 of the General Code, as amended in 102 Ohio Laws, at page 286, he was given the right by virtue of sections G. C. 13436 and 13439 to charge $1.00 for serving a warrant. He only charged 30 cents, which is, as he claims, the amount allowed under the old law. He now asks for the difference of 70 cents on each warrant served, which is noted above, total sum $186.00.

Query: Should the county auditor be instructed to draw his warrant upon the county treasurer for this amount? Will you kindly furnish us your opinion upon this subject?"

After the receipt of this communication I wrote you:

"Under date of December 17, 1917, you asked my opinion concerning the payment of a bill amounting to $186.00 to W. E. Styles, constable of Washington township, your county, for services rendered in criminal cases from June 8, 1910, to March 10, 1912, in serving warrants in 'criminal neglect cases.'

Kindly advise me just what sort of cases these were so that I may know whether or not they all came within the provisions of section 13423 of the General Code."

Under date of January 30, 1918, you enclose me the following from W. E. Styles, constable, in reply to my inquiry:

"In reply to the above will say that all of the cases as presented in my bill came within the provisions of section 13423 of the General Code.

(Signed) W. E. STYLES."

Section 13423 of the General Code, as amended in 103 O. L., 539, reads:

"Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction, within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to:

1. Adulteration or deception in the sale of dairy products and other food, drink, drugs and medicines.
2. The prevention of cruelty to animals and children.
3. The abandonment, nonsupport or ill treatment of a child by its parents.
4. The abandonment or ill treatment of a child under sixteen years of age by its guardian.
5. The employment of a child under fourteen years of age in public exhibitions or vocations injurious to health, life or morals, or which cause or permit it to suffer unnecessary physical or mental pain.
6. The regulation, restriction or prohibition of the employment of minors.
7. The torturing, unlawfully punishing, ill treating, or depriving anyone of necessary food, clothing or shelter.
8. The selling, giving away or furnishing of intoxicating liquors as a beverage, or keeping a place where such liquor is sold, given away or furnished, in violation of any law prohibiting such acts within the limits of a township and without the limits of a municipal corporation.

9. The shipping, selling, using, permitting the use of, branding or having unlawful quantities of illuminating oil for or in a mine.

10. The sale, shipment or adulteration of commercial food stuffs.

11. The use of dust creating machinery in workshops and factories.

12. The conducting of a pharmacy, or retail drug or chemical store, or the dispensing or selling of drugs, chemicals, poisons or pharmaceutical preparations therein.

13. The failure to place and keep in a sanitary condition a bakery, confectionery, creamery, dairy, dairy barn, milk depot, laboratory, hotel, restaurant, eating house, packing house, slaughter house, ice cream factory, or place where a food product is manufactured, packed, stored, deposited, collected, prepared, produced or sold for any purpose.

14. Offenses for violation of laws in relation to inspection of steam boilers, and of laws licensing steam engineers and boiler operators.

15. The prevention of short weighing and measuring and all violations of the weights and measures laws."

Section 13436 G. C. reads:

"In pursuing or arresting a defendant and in subpoenaing the witnesses in such prosecutions, the constable, chief of police, marshal or other court officer shall have like jurisdiction and power as the sheriff in criminal cases in the common pleas court, and he shall receive like fees therefor."

It has frequently been held by this department that the words "in such prosecutions," used in section 13426 of the General Code, refer to the prosecutions enumerated in section 13423 of the General Code.

In an opinion found in the annual report of the attorney general for 1912, Vol. 1, page 258, former Attorney-General Hogan held:

"From the arrangement of the statutes before their codification, the intent is clear that the words 'such prosecution,' as they appear in section 13436, General Code, making fees of constables, chiefs of police and marshals similar to those of sheriff's fees in criminal cases, * * * refer to all cases coming under the jurisdiction of justices of the peace, police judges and mayors, as enumerated in section 13423, General Code."

This opinion was cited and approved in an opinion, No. 823, rendered by this department December 3, 1917.

Section 2845 of the General Code provides in part:

"For the services hereinafter specified, when rendered, the sheriff shall charge and collect the following fees and no more: For the service and return of the following writs and orders: * * * warrant to arrest, each person named in the writ, $1.00; * * ."

This provision of this section was enacted in 102 O. L., page 277, 266, May 31, 1911, approved by the governor June 7, 1911. So that from this date, viz., June 7, 1911, there was authority for constables charging $1.00 for the serving of warrants in any of the cases enumerated in section 13423 of the General Code, above quoted.

In your communication you advise me that the services in question rendered by the constable referred to were rendered during a "period from June 8, 1910, to and inclusive of March 10, 1912." It is clear that some of the services rendered by the constable in these cases were rendered prior to June 7, 1911, and as to those services only a fee of thirty cents was properly chargeable. For such service as that rendered in these cases on and after June 7, 1911, the constable was entitled to a fee of $1.00 for each warrant served.

Section 13439 G. C., which provides for the payment of costs in those cases enumerated in section 13423, reads:

> "In such prosecutions, no costs shall be required to be advanced or secured by a person authorized by law to prosecute. If the defendant be acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise, or convicted and committed in default of paying fine and costs, all costs of such case shall be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor, who, after correcting errors therein, shall issue a warrant on the county treasury in favor of the person to whom such costs and fees are payable. All moneys which are to be paid by the county treasurer as provided in this chapter shall be paid out of the general revenue fund of such county."

It will be noted from this section that the county is to pay the costs in these cases only when the defendant is acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise or when the defendant is convicted and committed in default of paying the fine and costs. In such case the costs must be certified under oath by the trial magistrate to the county auditor. From this section, and a consideration of the other statutes referred to, it is clear that the county should have paid the constable one dollar for serving the warrants in the cases wherein he rendered services on and after June 7, 1911, and which so terminated as to come within the provisions of section 13429 of the General Code, instead of paying but thirty cents, as was done.

The question here presents itself as to whether acceptance by the constable of a less sum than that allowed by statute was in accord and satisfaction, which would defeat any claim by him now to the balance.

In the case of Wolfe v. Humboldt County (— Nev. —, 131 Pac. 964), 45 L. R. A., N. S., 762, it was held:

> "1. To constitute an accord and satisfaction there must have been in fact and in reality a meeting of the minds in accord and in satisfaction.
> 2. Acceptance of the portion of a claim against a county for statutory fees of a constable which is allowed by the commissioners does not, since the demand is a liquidated one, per se bar a recovery of the residue, on the principle of accord and satisfaction, under a statute requiring presentation of demands for allowance, and authorizing suit if the board refuses to allow the same or any part thereof.
> 3. An agreement between a public officer and a board of county commissioners to accept less than statutory fees for the performance of services is void as against public policy."

This view is generally expressed by text writers and supported by many authorities and I do not believe, therefore, that the acceptance of the thirty-cent fee by the constable would, in itself, preclude him from claiming the balance due. However, attention is called to section 11222 of the General Code with reference to the limitation of actions. This section reads:

"An action upon a contract not in writing, express or implied, or upon a liability created by statute other than a forfeiture or penalty, shall be brought within six years after the cause thereof accrued."

It will be noted from a reading of this section that an action upon a liability created by statute other than a forfeiture or penalty must be brought within six years after the cause thereof has accrued.

I think this statute is clearly applicable in the case presented by your communication. It is clear from your statement of facts that in all of these cases certification was made by the trial magistrate to the county auditor as provided in section 13439 G. C., since you state that the fee of thirty cents was allowed the constable. Inasmuch as section 11222, above quoted, has application, it is my view that payment of the additional seventy cents can be only in those cases certified during the last six years.

Answering your questions specifically it is my opinion that the constable referred to is entitled to the payment of the additional seventy cents from the county for serving the warrants only in those instances in which the following facts may be established:

1. Such services must have been rendered in a case falling within the provisions of section 13423 G. C.
2. The services rendered must have been rendered on or subsequent to June 7, 1911, and the cost bill must have been certified by the trial magistrate to the county auditor within the last six years.
3. The defendant must have been acquitted or discharged from custody by nolle or otherwise or convicted and committed in default of paying the fine and costs.

If proper certification is made by the trial magistrate, or his successor, in such instances to the county auditor, I think that such county auditor may then properly issue his warrant upon the county treasurer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COSTS—STATE NOT LIABLE FOR SAME WHEN BOY OVER SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE IS COMMITTED TO STATE REFORMATORY BY JUVENILE COURT UNDER SECTION 1652 G. C.—HOW SUCH COSTS PAID.

A boy over sixteen years of age is committed to the Ohio state reformatory by the juvenile court by virtue of section 1652 of the General Code. The state is not liable for the costs in the case. Such costs must be paid from the county treasury upon the certificate of the juvenile judge, as provided in section 1682 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 12, 1918, as follows:

"Under the provisions of section 1652 G. C. a boy over sixteen years of age, but under eighteen, was sentenced by the juvenile court of this county to the Ohio state reformatory. Sentence was made on a plea of guilty to a charge of burglary and grand larceny. Costs were certified by the juvenile court in the usual manner, but the state of Ohio refuses to pay the costs. Is the state responsible for the costs in this case? If not, how shall they be paid?"

You ask whether the state is responsible for the costs in the case referred to. I presume this question arises in your mind because of the fact that the boy was committed to the Ohio state reformatory.

It has always been held that costs and transportation, where prisoners are sentenced to the Ohio state reformatory for felonies, should be paid the same as when prisoners are sentenced to the Ohio penitentiary. This conclusion has been passed upon the fact that the original act, providing for payment of costs in criminal cases by the state, provided for such payment in all cases of conviction of any person for any crime, punishment whereof is imprisonment in the penitentiary.

In opinion No. 427 of this department, rendered under date of July 5, 1917, it was said:

"It will be noted here that the object of the statute was to pay the costs of conviction of any person convicted of any crime the punishment whereof is imprisonment in the penitentiary, and as to the provision for the payment of costs, the legislature had uppermost in mind the crime of which the person was convicted rather than the institution to which such person was being sent."

In other words, the aim of the statutes seems to be to have the state pay the costs in all felony cases, and when it was afterward provided that some persons convicted of felony could be sent to the Ohio state reformatory and some sent to the Ohio reformatory for women, it still held that the costs of conviction and transportation should be paid by the state, since the persons committed to such institution had been convicted of felonies. In the case you submit the youth was not convicted of any crime, but simply found to be a delinquent. You state that the boy was sentenced to the reformatory under the provisions of section 1652 of the General Code. That section provides in part:

"Where it appears at the hearing of a male delinquent child that he is 16 years of age, or over, and has committed a felony, the juvenile court may commit such child to the Ohio state reformatory."

In such cases there is no trial, no plea of guilty and the child is not charged with the commission of any specific crime. The court simply upon hearing found the child to be delinquent and committed him to the proper institution. In such a case as this the statutes, providing for the payment of costs to the state in felony cases, do not apply.

Section 1682 of the General Code provides:

"Fees and costs in all such cases with such sums as are necessary for the incidental expenses of the court and its officers, and the costs of transportation of children to places to which they have been committed, shall be paid from the county treasury upon itemized vouchers certified to by the judge of the court."

This section was originally part of the juvenile court act and it has been several times held by this department that the fees and costs in juvenile cases and cost of transportation of children to places to which they have been committed should be paid according to the provisions of this section.

In direct answer to your inquiry, therefore, I am of the opinion that the state is not responsible for the costs in the case submitted, but that the same should be paid from the county treasury upon the certificate of the juvenile judge.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE ACT CREATING THE MUNICIPAL COURT OF ZANESVILLE, LIMITING THE JURISDICTION OF JUSTICES OF THE PEACE OUTSIDE OF SAID CITY, IS CONSTITUTIONAL—JURISDICTION OF SAID JUSTICES TO ISSUE ORDERS OF ATTACHMENT UPON RESIDENTS OF THE CITY OF ZANESVILLE.

1. Under the authority of the case In re Hesse, 93 O. S., 230, section 37 of the Zanesville municipal court act (section 1579-366 G. C., 107 O. L., 731)—limiting the jurisdiction of justices in townships outside the city of Zanesville, so as to prevent the issuance of an order of attachment or garnishment upon a citizen or resident of Zanesville, unless such service be actually made by personal service within the township in which the proceeding may have been instituted—is constitutional.

2. Such justice of the peace is without jurisdiction to issue an order of attachment or garnishment upon a citizen or resident of Zanesville, unless service be actually made by personal service within the township in which the proceeding may have been instituted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of communication from H. N. Kendall, justice of the peace in and for Falls township, Muskingum county, Ohio. He calls attention to the act creating the Zanesville municipal court found in 107 O. L. 722, particularly to section 37 of said act. The justice desired an opinion as to whether or not the municipal court act in any manner abridged the jurisdiction of the justices in Falls townships under the attachment laws. I am addressing this opinion to you and a copy of same will be forwarded to Mr. Kendall.

Section 37 of the Zanesville municipal court act (section 1579-366 G. C., 107 O. L. 731) reads:

> "No justice of the peace in any township in Muskingum county outside the city of Zanesville, or mayor of any village, in any proceeding, whether civil or criminal, in which any warrant, order of arrest, summons, order of attachment or garnishment or other process, except subpoena for witnesses, shall have been served upon a citizen or resident of Zanesville or a corporation having its principal office in Zanesville, shall have jurisdiction, unless such service be actually made by personal service within the township or village in which said proceeding may have been instituted, or in a criminal matter, unless the offense charged in any warrant or order of arrest shall be alleged to have been committed within said township or village."

The communication in question states that Falls township is a township adjacent to the township in which the city of Zanesville is situated. The question arising in the mind of the justice is whether or not the provision of section 37 of the municipal court act would limit the jurisdiction theretofore possessed by a justice in an outside township in attachment suits against citizens and residents of the city of Zanesville. The section in question expressly provides that justices and mayors outside of the city of Zanesville are without jurisdiction in any proceeding in which an order of attachment, or garnishment, or other process, except subpoena for witnesses, shall have been served upon a citizen or resident of Zanesville or a corporation having its principal office in Zanesville, unless such service be actually made by personal service within the township or village in which said proceeding may have been instituted.

The legislative act creating the Columbus municipal court has a similar provision to section 37 of the Zanesville municipal court act, and the common pleas court in an unreported case some two years ago held that the provision was not unconstitutional and that it was effective in limiting the jurisdiction as therein provided.

About the same time that the Franklin decision was rendered, the supreme court of Ohio passed upon a similar question in a case found in 93 O. S. 230, under the title In re Hesse. Section 41 of the Cincinnati municipal court act (103 O. L. 279, section 1558-41 G. C.) in part provides that no justice of the peace in any township in Hamilton county, other than in Cincinnati township, or the mayor of any village or city, shall have any jurisdiction in any criminal proceeding in which a warrant, order of arrest or other process, except subpoena for witnesses, shall have been served upon a citizen or resident of Cincinnati, unless such service be actually made by personal service within the township, village or city in which said proceedings may have been instituted, or jurisdiction in a criminal matter unless the offense charged in the warrant or order of arrest shall have been committed within said township, village or city.

The provisions of the Zanesville and Cincinnati acts, as to both civil and criminal proceedings, are practically the same.

Newman, J., in the opinion of the case in the supreme court, above referred to, calls attention to the fact that the office of justice of the peace ceased to be a constitutional office on January 1, 1913, and that the offices of justices are now statutory offices under the act establishing the offices of justice of the peace, found in 103 O. L. 214. He holds that the provisions of the Cincinnati municipal court act, limiting the jurisdiction of justices outside the city of Cincinnati, as to persons residing therein, are constitutional, calling attention to the fact that under section 1, article IV of the Ohio constitution, authorizing the establishment of inferior courts, by reason of being a special grant of legislative power upon a particular subject, the general assembly is vested with full power to determine what other courts it will establish, local, if deemed proper, and to define their jurisdiction and power.

The abridgment and limitation of the jurisdiction is of a statutory court only. In that case it was held that a justice of the peace who was a justice in a township outside of Cincinnati had no jurisdiction to issue a warrant for the arrest of Hesse, who was a citizen and resident of Cincinnati township.

Under the authority of this case it is my opinion that section 37 of the Zanesville act—limiting the jurisdiction of justices in townships outside the city of Zanesville, so as to prevent the issuance of an order of attachment or garnishment upon a citizen or resident of Zanesville, unless such service be actually made by personal service within the township in which the proceeding may have been instituted—is constitutional.

It therefore follows that the justice of the peace in question is without jursidiction to issue an order of attachment or garnishment upon a citizen or resident of Zanesville, unless service be actually made by personal service within the township in which the proceeding may have been instituted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES MAY NOT APPOINT MORE THAN ONE TOWNSHIP HIGHWAY SUPERINTENDENT.

The provision of section 3370 of the General Code, to the effect that the township trustees may appoint some competent person, not a member of the board of trustees, to have charge of the maintenance and repair of the roads within the township, which person shall be known as the township highway superintendent, does not authorize the appointment of more than one such person in any township.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

HON. O. W. KENNEDY, Prosecuting Attorney, Bucyrus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of January 31, 1918, as follows:

> "I desire your construction of section 3370 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., 93. You will note in this section that there are three ways in which the township trustees may provide for the maintenance and repair of the roads:
> (1) They may designate one of their number to have charge of all the roads of the township.
> (2) They may divide the township into three districts and assign a district to each trustee.
> (3) They may appoint some competent person, other than a member of the board, to have charge of the maintenance and repair of the roads of the township.
>
> The first and second divisions are clear to me, but the third one is not in this, as to whether or not under this provision there can only be one person appointed or whether there may be more than one person appointed; that is, may the township be divided into one or more districts and a superintendent be appointed over each district? True, under a literal construction of this provision it would appear that it is limited to one person, but having in mind the evident intention of the legislature was to make provision for the proper maintenance and repair of the roads, it would seem that if it were necessary in the judgment of the trustees to divide their township into districts in order to have the roads properly maintained and repaired the trustees would have that right.
> We have in our county townships that could not be properly handled by one superintendent, and if this provision means that the township trustees are limited to the appointment of one person, then the roads cannot be properly maintained and repaired as contemplated by the statutes. I fail to see any harm to come of a division of the township into districts and the appointment of superintendents accordingly. To be sure the trustees should not be permitted to abuse this right by dividing the township into an unnecessary number of districts."

Sections 3370 and 3371 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 3370. The township trustees shall have control of the township roads of their township and shall keep the same in good repair. The township trustees may, with the approval of the county commissioners or state highway commissioner, as the case may be, maintain or repair a county road or intercounty highway or main market road within the limits of their township. In the maintenance and repair of roads the township trustees may proceed in any one of the following methods as they may deem for the best interest of the public, to wit:

1. They may designate one of their number to have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within the township, or

2. They may divide the township into three road districts, in which event each trustee shall have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within one of such districts, or

3. They may appoint some competent person, not a member of the board of trustees, to have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within the township which person shall be known as a township highway superintendent, and shall serve at the pleasure of the township trustees. The method to be followed in each township shall be determined by the township trustees by resolution duly entered on their records."

"Sec. 3371. When the trustees of any township determine to proceed in the third method hereinbefore provided and appoint a township highway superintendent such superintendent shall before entering upon the discharge of his duty give bond to the state of Ohio for the use of the township in the sum of two hundred dollars, conditioned upon the faithful performance of his duty. Such bond shall be approved by the trustees of the township and filed with the clerk thereof. The township trustees shall fix the compensation of the township highway superintendent for time actually employed in the discharge of his duties, which compensation shall be paid from the township road fund. The compensation and all proper and necessary expenses, when approved by the trustees, shall be paid by the township treasurer upon warrant of the township clerk."

It will be noted from these sections that the legislature saw fit, when the township trustees personally assumed charge of the maintenance and repair of the roads, to allow them to either designate one of their number to have charge of the maintenance and repair of all the roads of the township or to divide the township into three road districts and designate one trustee to be in charge of each of such districts. However, when they made provision for the township trustee to direct the maintenance and repair of roads in the township to persons other than themselves, the legislature did not see fit to carry out the district plan, but simply provided that the board of trustees might appoint some competent person, not a member of the board of trustees, to have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within the township, which person shall be known as the township highway superintendent.

Section 3371 G. C. provides that the township superintendent shall, before entering upon the discharge of his duties, give bond to the state for the use of the township in the sum of two hundred dollars, conditioned upon the faithful performance of his duty. Such section also provides that such trustee shall fix his compensation. Through a great many of the following sections concerning the improvement of township highways reference is made to the township highway superintendent, his powers and duties are defined in much detail and no where in the legislation can be found a single word or phrase upon which can be based any theory that the legislative mind was contemplating a possibility or probability of there being in any township more than one township highway superintendent.

I am not unmindful of the situation which confronts you in your county, nor of the fact that similar situations probably exist in many counties of the state. Nevertheless, from a consideration of the sections quoted I am compelled to conclude that provision is made for but one township highway superintendent in any one township and that the arrangement suggested by your communication, while undoubtedly such a one as might operate to better provide for the maintenance and repair of roads, is, nevertheless, not authorized by law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECTIONS 1150 AND 1154 G. C. DO NOT APPLY TO SALES OF FERTILIZER MADE BY THE UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

Sections 1150 and 1154 G. C. do not apply to sales of fertilizer made by the department of agriculture of the United States government for use for agricultural purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 25, 1918.

The Department of Agriculture, Bureau of Feeds and Fertilizers, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have made the following request for my opinion:

> "We are in receipt of a telegram from R. J. Brand, chief of the U. S. bureau of markets, which reads, in part, as follows:
> 'This department now receiving, Atlantic ports, nitrate of soda which it will sell at cost under food control act to farmers in addition to other actual expenses. Farmers must bear state fertilizer inspection fees if any required. Please wire government rate collect in detail what if any requirements your state will make as to tags, labels, reports, inspection fees, etc., in connection with sale and distribution nitrate by federal government and exact procedure to be followed.'
>
> We understand that the U. S. government purchased 100,000 tons of nitrate of soda to be distributed among farmers of the United States, through the various agricultural county agents. This fertilizer is sold at cost price of $7.50 per ton, plus freight, and farmers are required to deposit in bank funds covering their orders and to furnish affidavit that the nitrate of soda will be used for agricultural purposes.
> Ohio's fertilizer law (section 1154 O. L.) requires a person, firm or corporation selling fertilizer to pay a license fee of $30.00 per brand. Section 1150 provides for labeling, etc.

We respectfully request an opinion by your department as to whether the board of agriculture of Ohio should collect a license fee for this brand of fertilizer and if so from whom."

Section 1150 G. C. provides:

"Each person, firm or corporation who manufactures, sells or offers for sale in the state a commercial fertilizer which means any substance for fertilizing or manurial purposes, except barnyard manure, marl, lime and plaster, shall affix to each package in a conspicuous place on the outside thereof, a plainly printed certificate which shall state the number of net pounds contained therein, the name, brand or trade mark, under which it is sold, or offered for sale, the name of the manufacturer, with his or its postoffice address, such certificate shall contain also a chemical analysis which shall state the minimum percentages guaranteed of ammonia, of potash soluble in water, of phosphoric acid in available form, comprising the soluble and reverted, and of insoluble phosphoric acid, the sources of ammonia and the sources of insoluble phosphoric acid. In bone, tankage and basic slag unmixed with other material the phosphoric acid shall be claimed only as total phosphoric acid. In untreated phosphoric rock and other mineral phosphoric materials, the phosphoric acid shall be claimed only as insoluble phosphoric acid. When any commercial fertilizer, sold or offered for sale in this state, contains muck, peat, pulverized leather, hair, ground horn or wool waste or other materials in such form that the ammonia is largely unavailable, such certificate shall state explicitly such fact."

Section 1154 G. C. (107 O. L. 474) provides:

"Before selling or offering for sale within this state a commercial fertilizer, a person, firm or corporation shall pay each year a license fee to the secretary of agriculture for the sale of each brand thereof thirty dollars. Upon the application and payment of such fee, the secretary shall issue a license for the current year. All licenses shall expire on the 31st day of December of each year. The payment of such license fee by a person, firm or corporation, shall exempt an agent thereof from the requirements of this section."

I understand from your inquiry that the sale and distribution of this nitrate is by the federal government. This being true, in my opinion, section 1150 and other provisions of the Ohio law as to the inspection of fertilizers do not apply, for the federal government is not a person, firm or corporation; and it is so obvious as to require no argument whatever that the Ohio law was not intended to apply to a transaction of this character.

As a general proposition the proper exercise of any of the legitimate functions of the federal government cannot be hampered or impeded by legislation enacted by the states under the police power; nor would any officers or agents of the government be subject to the restrictions of such legislations in so far as their acts were necessary in carrying out their duties to the federal government. At the present time it seems to me entirely unnecessary to go into this question as to whether the distribution of this nitrate by the federal government, or an agency of the federal government, comes properly within the provisions of governmental activities which are not subject to restriction by the states. The imperative need of agricultural products in this entire country at this time is so well known, and the relation that fertilizer of this character bears to agricultural production is also so well known, that it does not seem to me either your department or mine in this particular case should be deeply concerned in constitutional limitations or restrictions, but should so far as we are able construe our laws as intended to expedite and not hamper the government in doing everything possible to win the war.

I feel quite certain that this also is your view of the matter. My opinion, in brief, therefore, is that the Ohio law does not and was not intended to apply to a transaction of this character. Of course, if any of the persons who purchase this fertilizer afterward attempted to dispose of the same in this state the law would apply to any such transactions.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COURT OF DOMESTIC RELATIONS, MAHONING COUNTY, HOW JUDICIAL BALLOT PRINTED.

In Mahoning county the judge who is to be elected under an act of March 20, 1917, (section 1532-4) should have the name printed on the ticket as a candidate for "judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations."

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1918.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 17, 1918, you addressed to this department the following request for opinion:

> "As you are aware, a year or two ago the legislature created what is known as a domestic relation judge in our county.
> The supreme court rendered a decision, which is found in the Law Reporter of December 24, 1917, in which they held, as I understand, that the law is unconstitutional so far as the provision in it giving the domestic relation judge the trial of certain cases; that they could not pass a law by which it would take away the right of the other judges to try that class of cases.
> Now, what we want to know is whether or not on next fall the judge who is a candidate for domestic relations must be designated on the ticket as a candidate for domestic relations, or does it simply go on the ticket as a common pleas judge. The statute itself provides that he shall be known as a domestic relations judge.
> Will you kindly let us know at the earliest opportunity and greatly oblige us."

Your question seems to be and is expressly, affirmatively and distinctly answered by the language of the statute itself. Your doubt, however, concerning the same arises from the decision of the supreme court in the recent case of D'Alton v. The Judges. An examination of the syllabus and opinion in this case will disclose that it has no effect whatever upon the manner of the election of the judge in question in Mahoning county. The statute creating the office of this judge is an amendment of section 1532-4, found in 107 O. L., 721. The portion of said section alluded to above as containing the necessary answer to your question is as follows, after the provision for the election of the additional judge and providing for filling a vacancy, etc.,

> "He and his successors shall, however, be elected and designated as a judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations."

Opinion No. 390 of this department addressed to you on June 18, 1917, contains a discussion of this statute and of the nature of the office created by it, holding in brief, as the statute enacts, that the judge provided for is merely an additional judge of the court of common pleas and assigning to him by legislation certain duties that had theretofore and in other jurisdictions been assigned by arrangement among the judges themselves, and substantially the same matter is discussed in reference to similar courts in other counties in opinion No. 963, addressed to Governor Cox under date of January 23, 1918, and opinion No. 1004, under date of February 11, 1918, addressed to the board of state charities, the latter two opinions having been rendered since the decision of the supreme court in the Toledo case. The statute in the Toledo case, unlike the previous ones for other counties, created a distinctly new court instead of providing for the election of an additional judge of the court of common pleas to whom should be assigned the duties and jurisdiction involved. The supreme court in this case held this statute constitutional but at the same time held that it is unconstitutional in so far as it attempts to give exclusive jurisdiction to this new court of certain subjects of which by general law jurisdiction is granted to other courts.

As has already been pointed out in the other opinions above mentioned, if the legislature had power to create an absolutely new and independent court and their action in doing so is not unconstitutional, a fortiori it is not unconstitutional to provide an additional judge of an existing court and assign to him the duties in question. Of course, in so far as these statutes violate the principle of that case and attempt to exclude the jurisdiction of other courts which they have in other counties under general laws, such acts are inoperative. It is to be apprehended, however, that no practical difficulty will arise from this condition and that, unless in some exceptional cases, the jurisdiction given these courts by statute will be by common sufferance assigned to them, they having undoubted concurrent jurisdiction therein.

Your inquiry is therefore answered that the candidate should go on the ticket as a candidate for "judge of the court of common pleas, division of domestic relations."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—DEED FROM CHARLOTTE AND JOHN BURNARD TO BOARD OF AGRICULTURE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1918.

HON. A. C. BAXTER, Acting Chief Warden, Bureau of Fish & Game, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have recently submitted to me a general warranty deed from Charlotte Burnard and John Burnard, her husband, to the state of Ohio, in consideration of $11,000.00, for the following described premises, situated in the village of Chagrin Falls, Cuyahoga county, Ohio:

In township seven north, range nine west, and known as being part of original Russell Township Lot No. 17, in Champion Tract No. 3, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a point in the northeasterly line of Cleveland street where the most southerly line of the land conveyed by this grantor, Charlotte Burnard, to the state of Ohio, by deed of warranty dated Oct. 23rd, 1889, and recorded in volume 460, page 253 of Cuyahoga County Records, intersects with the said northeasterly line of Cleveland street; thence south 86 deg. 21′ E. along the southerly line of land so conveyed to the state of Ohio, three hundred and seventy-two (372) feet to a stake; thence in a southwesterly direction, in a straight line, to a point in the northeast line of Cleveland street, distant one hundred and nineteen (119) feet southeasterly, measured along the northeasterly line of said Cleveland street, from the place of beginning; thence north 26 deg. W. along the northeasterly line of Cleveland street one hundred and nineteen (119) feet to the place of beginning.

PARCEL NO. TWO.

Situated in said village, county and state and known as being a part of original Russell Township Lot No. 17 in Champion Tract No. 3, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Beginning at a stone monument in the most southeasterly point of land conveyed by Charlotte Burnard and husband to the state of Ohio, by deed dated October 23rd, 1889, and recorded in Vol. 460, page 253, of Cuyahoga County Records of Deeds; thence north 9 deg. 33′ E. along the easterly line of said land so conveyed to the state of Ohio, two chains and ninety-six links to land conveyed by Charlotte Burnard and husband to John Forsythe by deed dated Nov. 2nd, 1893, and recorded in Volume 565, page 197 of Cuyahoga County Records of Deeds; thence southeasterly along the southwesterly line of said land so conveyed to John Forsythe to the westerly line of a parcel of land conveyed by William H. Barber and wife to John Forsythe by deed dated June 3rd, 1878, and recorded in Vol. 298, page 6 of Cuyahoga County Records of Deeds; thence S. 89 deg. 50′ E. along the southerly line of land so conveyed to John Forsythe by Wm. G. Barber and wife 1 chain 90 links to the westerly line of a parcel of land conveyed by Wm. G. Barber and wife to Henry Sencabaugh by deed dated Sept. 22nd, 1882, and recorded in Vol. 341, page 262 of Cuyahoga County Records of Deeds; thence southerly 3 deg. 25′ E. along said westerly line 1 chain and 88 links to a stake and stones; thence southerly 81 deg. 45′ E. along the southerly line of land so conveyed to Henry Sencabaugh 3 chains and 71 links to the westerly line of a parcel land conveyed by Oliver S. Granger and wife to Olney N. Overton by deed dated April 20th, 1885, and recorded in Vol. 382, page 68 of Cuyahoga County Records of Deeds; thence southerly along said westerly line, 3 deg. 16′ E. 4 chains and 17 links to that point in said westerly line where same is intersected by the northerly line of a parcel of land conveyed by Charlotte Burnard and husband to W. H. Leach and Addie Leach, by deed dated January 8th, 1894, and recorded in Vol. 566, page 286, of Cuyahoga County Records of Deeds; thence northwesterly along the said northerly line of land conveyed to W. H. Leach and Addie Leach, sixty-five feet, to the northwest corner of said parcel; thence northwesterly, in a straight line, to the point of beginning, be the same more or less but subject to all legal highways.

In lieu of an abstract of title you have submitted to me a certificate of title issued by The Land Title Abstract and Trust Co., which finds that the title to said premises is good in Charlotte Burnard and free from incumbrances, except taxes for the year 1917 and special taxes, if any. From the correspondence had with the attorney for Charlotte Burnard it appears that there are no special taxes.

You advise me that the premises so to be purchased are to be used for a game preserve. In view of the provisions of section 1423 (107 O. L., 488) which authorizes the expenditure of the appropriation made therein "for establishing and purchasing or otherwise acquiring title to lands for game preserves," I have this day approved the title to said lands and herewith return to you the deed and certificate of title transmitted.

Before the land is purchased a certificate should be obtained from the auditor of state to the effect that there is an appropriation available for such purpose, and after the deed is recorded in the proper county it should be deposited with the auditor of state under the provisions of section 367 General Code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR—OFFICE EXPENSES.

A claim of a county surveyor for expenses of his office, consisting of telephone tolls and other expenses of a similar character is payable on the allowance of the county commissioners under the provisions of sections 2786 and 2460 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1918.

HON. C. A. WILMOT, Prosecuting Attorney, Chardon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of recent date, requesting my opinion, you say your county surveyor has presented a bill for expenses of his office consisting of telephone tolls and other expenses of a similar character, and that your county auditor desires to know if these bills should be presented to the commissioners for approval before being paid. You suggest that section 7181 G. C., as found in 106 O. L. 612, provided in part as follows:

> "* * In addition thereto, the county highway superintendent and his assistants, when on official business, shall be paid out of the county treasury, their actual, necessary traveling expenses, including livery, board and lodging. * *."

You further state that this section was repealed in 107 O. L. 110 and re-enacted, but that in its re-enacted form the provision above quoted is missing, and that you have not been able to find any other section of the code providing for the payment of the expenses of the county surveyor.

As stated by you, there was a provision in section 7181 G. C. (106 O. L. 612), expressly giving to the county highway superintendent certain expenses, and this was evidently done so there would be no question as to such county highway superintendent receiving reimbursement for said expenses, even though the section made the county surveyor the county highway superintendent.

When the legislature in the last highway act (107 O. L. 69 et seq.) abolished the title of "county highway superintendent" and, as found at section 6956-4 (p. 142 of 107 O. L.), provided:

> "The words 'county highway superintendent' found in any section of the General Code of Ohio not herein amended or repealed shall after the taking effect of this act be read 'county surveyor' ", it was then unnecessary to make specific provision for any expenses for the county highway superintendent.

Section 2786 G. C., which provides among other things for the office furnishings and equipment of a county surveyor's office, contains this express provision:

> "* * * The county surveyor and each assistant and deputy shall be allowed his reasonable and necessary expenses incurred in the performance of his official duties."

It is my conclusion, therefore, that the statute expressly provides for the payment of such expenses of your county surveyor as are inquired about, and that such claims can only be paid upon the allowance of the county commissioners as provided in section 2460 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PEST HOUSE—TWO CITIES MAY NOT PURCHASE LAND AND MAINTAIN SAME JOINTLY.

Two cities cannot purchase lands jointly and jointly construct and maintain a pest house or quarantine hospital. Powers of charter cities not passed upon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of February 14, 1918, is received in which you inquire:

> "Sections 4452 et seq. G. C. authorize municipalities to purchase property and construct a quarantine hospital or pest house.
> Question: Can two neighboring non-charter cities purchase land jointly, lying between the said cities, and jointly construct a quarantine hospital or pest house to be used by persons afflicted with contagious disease and taken there from both cities?"

Section 4452 General Code provides:

> "The council of a municipality may purchase land within or without its boundaries and erect thereon suitable hospital buildings for the isolation, care or treatment of persons suffering from dangerous contagious disease, and provide for the maintenance thereof. The plans and specifications for such buildings shall be approved by the board of health."

Section 4456 General Code reads, in part:

> "A municipality may establish a quarantine hospital within or without its limits. * * *"

The authority herein granted is to a municipality, not to two municipalities acting jointly. I find no authority of statute which will permit two municipalities to join in the purchase of land and the erection thereon of a pest house or quarantine hospital and the joint maintenance thereof.

In an opinion by Hon. Edward C. Turner, at page 1293 of the opinions of the attorney-general for 1916, he had under consideration the authority of a city and a township to unite in the erection of a city hall and township house. His conclusion is:

> "A city as well as a township has only limited power and each must act within the limits of its powers as prescribed by statute. I find no provision of the statute authorizing a city and township to join in the erection of a city hall and township house, and I am of the opinion therefore that your question must be answered in the negative."

The rule is well established in Ohio that municipal corporations have only such powers as are expressly granted, and such as may be implied to carry out the powers expressly granted.

Ravenna v. Pennsylvania Co., 45 O. S. 118.

There is no express provision of statute granting authority to two cities to jointly erect and maintain a pest house or quarantine hospital, and such authority is not implied from the grant to one municipality to erect and maintain such pest house or hospital.

Two cities cannot, therefore, purchase lands jointly and jointly construct and maintain a pest house or quarantine hospital.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DEPOSITORY—MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION ALSO STOCKHOLDER IN ONE OF BANKS OFFERING HIGHEST BID FOR SCHOOL FUNDS—HOW FUND SHOULD BE APPORTIONED—AWARD TO SUCH BANK NOT INVALID—CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF EDUCATION AND BANK FOR LOAN DOES NOT BECOME VOID BY REASON OF DIRECTOR BECOMING MEMBER OF BOARD OF EDUCATION.

Where a member of the board of education is also a director and stockholder of a bank, which bank, with two other banks, has bid the same and highest rate of interest for the deposit of the funds of such board of education, such funds should be apportioned between the three banks offering such highest rate of interest. Such award would not be invalid because of the interest of the member of the board of education under section 4757 General Code.

Where a board of education enters into a contract for the loan of money from a bank and thereafter a director of such bank becomes a member of the board of education, such contract does not become void under the provisions of section 4757 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 27, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of January 16, 1918, you submit the following inquiries to this department:

> "I have before me the opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, rendered April 5, 1912, at page 1246, wherein he holds that it is mandatory upon a board of education to place its deposits in the bank offering the highest rate of interest, and that while a member of the board may also be a stockholder and officer of the bank, there is no violation of section 4757 General Code.
>
> I desire an opinion where a member of the board is also a director and stockholder of a bank which is one of the three highest bidders. In your opinion, would the ruling of your predecessor's opinion apply, and should the contract for deposits be made with all three banks?
> I wish another opinion as to this question: Where a board of education has contracted with a bank for certain loans at a certain rate of interest, and subsequent thereto, a director and stockholder becomes a member of the board of education, does the contract become void by virtue of section 4757?"

In your letter of February 4, 1918, you supplement the above inquiry by stating that you mean by the words "which is one of the three highest bids" that there are three banks all bidding the same amount of interest, and that in one of these banks a prospective member of the board of education is a stockholder and an officer.

Section 4757 General Code, reads:

> "* * * No member of the board shall have directly or indirectly any pecuniary interest in any contract of the board or be employed in any manner for compensation by the board of which he is a member except as clerk or treasurer. * * *"

The board above referred to is the board of education.
Section 12932 General Code, provides in part:

> "* * * Whoever, being a local director or member of a board of education, votes for or participates * * *, or acts in a matter in which he or she is pecuniarily interested, shall be fined," etc.

In the opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, referred to by you, the syllabus reads:

> "Inasmuch as it is mandatory upon the board of education to place the deposits in the bank offering the highest rate of interest for the same, members of the board who are stockholders in or officers of the bank making the best bid, are not criminally liable for making such bank the depository."

In the conclusion of the opinion it is held:

> "That the awarding of the deposits by the board to the bank, being the highest bidder is a valid contract."

This opinion is based upon the mandatory provisions of the statutes covering the deposit of funds by the board of education.

In section 7604 General Code it is provided:

> "* * * The board of education of any school district by resolution shall provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer. * * *"

In section 7605 General Code, it is provided:

> "In school districts containing two or more banks such deposit shall be made in the bank or banks, situated therein, that at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest which must be at least two per cent for the full time funds or any part thereof are on deposit. * * *"

Under the above provisions it is mandatory to provide for a depository and the funds must be awarded to the bank offering the highest rate of interest.

In the case presented in the opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, supra, there was but one bank which bid the highest rate of interest. In the case now presented there are three banks which bid the same rate of interest and this was the highest offer. The statutes pertaining to the deposit of funds by a board of education does not provide what shall be done with the funds where more than one bank offers the same rate of interest and this is the highest offer.

Section 2719 General Code provides for such a situation as to county funds. This section reads:

> "If two or more banks offer the same highest rate of interest with proper sureties, securities, or both, the use of the money shall be awarded to either of them, or the commissioners may award a portion of such money to each of such banks or trust companies."

This section does not apply to deposits made by a board of education.

In an opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, under date of January 26, 1912, page 1119 of the opinions of the attorney-general for 1912, it is held:

> "When township trustees in pursuance of sections 3320 and 3321 General Code, providing for the establishment of a depository receive bids from three banks, two of which were highest and each bidding equally, the trustees should apportion the funds."

Section 2719 supra is referred to in this opinion, but as there was no provision of statute covering such a situation as to deposits by township trustees, it was held that such funds should be apportioned between the two banks offering the same and highest rate of interest.

After consideration, I concur in the above rulings of my predecessor. It follows, therefore, that the bank which has one of its directors and stockholders a member of the board of education, was qualified to bid for the deposit of the school funds. If its bid had been the highest, and no other bank had bid the same, it would have been entitled to the funds. The fact that its bid was equal to that of two other banks, would not deprive such bank of its right to participate in the deposit of such funds.

Therefore, where a member of the board of education is also a director and stockholder of a bank, which bank, with two other banks, has bid the same and highest rate of interest for the deposit of the funds of such board of education, such funds should be apportioned between the three banks offering such highest rate of interest. Such award would not be invalid because of the interest of the member of the board of education.

In your second question you speak of making a loan. I assume from that that the board of education has borrowed money from the bank, but from your supplementary letter it appears that you have reference to the bank offering the highest rate of interest for the deposit of the funds. If the latter is the situation, your second question is answered by the answer to the first question.

Your question will also be answered on the theory that the board of education has borrowed money from the bank.

It appears from your statement that the contract had been entered into and that thereafter and during the continuance of such contract a director and stockholder of the bank became a member of the board of education making the loan.

The director of the bank was not a member of the board of education at the time the contract was entered into. It was legal, therefore, to enter into such a contract at that time. Such contract would not be invalidated because of the fact that thereafter a director of the bank became a member of the board of education. The contract had been executed and the money loaned. All that remained was the repayment of the money, with interest. The terms of the contract could not be changed by the new board.

Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, in an opinion at page 1550 of the annual report of the attorney-general for 1913, held:

> "Where a board of education contracts for the construction of a school building, and a member of this board of education is also a member of a corporation that is furnishing supplies to the contractor for the construction of this building, the action is legal provided at the time the contract was entered into it was not understood that this particular corporation was to get the contract for supplies."

That is not the situation now presented. But the same principle will apply. A contract entered into while the director of the bank was a member of the board of education would present an entirely different question.

Under the circumstances submitted, the contract would not become void.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF NOT ENTITLED TO FEES FOR CONVEYING GIRLS TO GIRLS' INDUSTRIAL SCHOOL—PROBATION OFFICER PROPER OFFICIAL TO RENDER SUCH SERVICE—HOW EXPENSE OF TRANSPORTATION PAID.

The sheriff is not the proper officer to convey girls to the Girls' Industrial School, and if he performs such service he may not collect any fee therefor. The proper officer to render such service is the probation officer, and there must be at least one probation officer in every county. The expenses of such transportation are payable out of the county treasury on the certificate of the juvenile judge, as provided in section 1682.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

HON. C. G. ROETZEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date as follows:

"The sheriff of Summit county has placed before this office a question respecting the fees to be charged by him, which question is placed before you for consideration.

The question arises in cases of girls sentenced to the Girls' Industrial Home, and arises because of the repeal of section 2109 of the General Code. Before its repeal section 2109 read:

'The fees of the probate judge, sheriff and other costs incurred in proceedings shall be the same as are paid in similar cases and be paid by the proper county in the same manner.'

Acting under this authorization the sheriff was accustomed to charge fees such as were charged in like cases of boys sentenced to the Boys' Industrial School.

By reason of the repeal of the above section the sheriff is uncertain as to what charge he may properly make and therefore requests a ruling upon:

a.—The amount which shall be charged by him in making service of warrant to convey to the correctional institution, and, b.—The amount which shall be charged by him as mileage.

The further question is as to whether the amount charged as mileage shall be charged on the return of warrant to convey, or whether it shall be included in the general transportation account of the sheriff."

Section 1653-1 provides in part:

"* * * * Nor shall any child under ten years or over eighteen years of age be committed to such schools (the Boys' Industrial School and the Girls' Industrial School) except as provided in section 2111 of the General Code."

Section 2111 G. C., referred to, provides for the transfer of girls from the county jail, penitentiary or other penal institution to the Girls' Industrial School by the Ohio board of administration.

Section 1659 G. C. reads:

"When a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided. The officers having such child in charge shall take it before such judge, who shall proceed to hear and dispose of the case in the same manner as if the child had been brought before the judge in the first instance."

Section 2115 G. C. reads:

"When a girl between nine and eighteen years of age is brought before a court of criminal jurisdiction, charged with an offense, punishable by a fine or imprisonment other than imprisonment for life and who, if found guilty,, would be a proper subject for commitment to the school, the court, by a warrant or order, shall cause her forthwith to be taken before the judge of the juvenile court of the proper county, and shall transmit to him the complaint, indictment, or warrant, by virtue of which she was arrested. Such judge of the juvenile court shall proceed in the same manner as if she had been brought before him upon original complaint."

Section 2148-5 G. C. provides in part:

"* * * * All female persons convicted of felony, except murder in the first degree, without the benefit of recommendation of mercy, shall be sentenced to the Ohio reformatory for women in the same manner as male persons now sentenced to the Ohio state reformatory."

From these sections it is clear that the only court committing girls to the Girls' Industrial School is the juvenile court.

Prior to the enactment of 103 O. L., sections 2108 and 2109, found in the chapter governing the Girls' Industrial Home, read:

"Sec. 2108: At the time named in the order, the probate judge shall hear the testimony presented before him in the case. If it appears to his satisfaction that the girl is a suitable subject for the industrial home, he shall commit her thereto, and issue his warrant to some suitable woman to be appointed by him, commanding her to take charge of the girl and deliver her without delay to the superintendent of the home. If the judge deems it advisable so to do, he may designate the sheriff or other male person to accompany such girl and her custodian. This section shall be construed to apply to all courts having authority to commit to the Girls' Industrial Home."

"Sec. 2109: The fees of the probate judge, sheriff and other costs incurred in the proceedings shall be the same as are paid in simliar cases, and be paid by the proper county in the same manner."

A great many sections of the juvenile court law were amended in 103 O. L., in an act found at page 864. In that act sections 2108 and 2109 were expressly repealed (page 913), and section 1662 of the General Code was amended to read:

"Sec. 1662: The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be women, to serve as probation officers, during the pleasure of the judge. One of such officers shall be known as chief probation officer, and there may be first, second and third assistants. Such chief probation officer and the first, second and third assistants, shall receive such compensation as the judge appointing them may designate at the time of the appointment, but the compensation of the chief probation officer shall not exceed twenty-five hundred dollars per annum, that of the first assistant shall not exceed twelve hundred dollars per annum, and of the second and third shall not exceed one thousand dollars per annum, each payable monthly. The judge may appoint other probation officers, with or without compensation, but the entire compensation of all probation officers in any county shall not exceed the sum of forty dollars for each full thousand inhabitants of the county at the last preceding federal census. The compensation of the probation officers shall be paid by the county treasurer from the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor, which shall be issued upon itemized vouchers sworn to by the probation officers and certified to by the judge of the juvenile court. The county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the treasury and the treasurer shall honor and pay the same, for all salaries, compensation and expenses provided for in this act, in the order in which proper vouchers therefor are presented to him."

Section 1663 G. C., originally enacted in 99 O. L., then read and now reads as follows:

"When a complaint is made or filed against a minor, the probation officer shall inquire into and make examination and investigation into the facts and circumstances surrounding the alleged delinquency, neglect, or dependency, the parentage and surroundings of such minor, his exact age, habits, school record, and every fact that will tend to throw light upon life and character. He shall be present in court to represent the interests of the child when the case is heard, furnish to the judge such information and assistance as he may require, and take charge of any child before and after the trial as the judge may direct. He shall serve the warrants and other process of the court within or without the county, and in that respect is hereby clothed with the powers and authority of sheriffs. He may make arrests without warrant upon reasonable information or upon view of the violation of any of the provisions of this chapter, detain the person so arrrested pending the issuance of a warrant, and perform such other duties, incident to their offices, as the judge directs. All sheriffs, deputy sheriffs, constables, marshals and police officers shall render assistance to probation officers, in the performance of their duties, when requested so to do."

Sections 2108 and 2109, above quoted, were enacted long before the juvenile court law was passed, and since they were repealed after the enactment of the juvenile court law it would seem that, if that law provides that girls should be conveyed to the Girls' Industrial School by some officer other than the sheriff, an express repeal of those sections would most strongly indicate a legislative intention that the sheriff should no longer convey girls to the Delaware institution. It will be noted that section 1662 provides in part:

"The judge designated to exercise jurisdiction may appoint one or more discreet persons of good moral character, one or more of whom may be women, to serve as probation officers during the pleasure of the judge."

It will be also noted that section 1663, defining the duties and powers of probation officers, provides, among other things, that he shall "take charge of any child before and after the trial, as the judge may direct. He shall serve the warrants and other process of the court within and without the county, and in that respect is hereby clothed with powers and authority of sheriffs.

Section 1663 would seem to indicate that the probation officer is the proper officer to convey girls to the Girls' Industrial Home after they have been committed to such institution by the juvenile judge. Such holding may be objected to, however, on the ground that section 1662, providing for the appointment of probation officers, is not mandatory in any respect and that inasmuch as, for that reason, there may be some counties in which no probation officer has been appointed, it surely could not have been the legislative intention to take from the sheriff the duty of conveying girls to the Delaware school. If section 1662 is held mandatory, at least as far as the appointment of one probation officer is concerned, then this objection is overcome. It will be noted from a reading of section 1663 that it is, from the standpoint of the child, the most vital section of the juvenile court law. The purpose of the juvenile law is well stated in the matter of State v. Januszewski, 10 O. L. Rep., page 151. At page 156, Sater, J., says:

> "The purpose of the statute is to save minors under the age of seventeen years from prosecution and conviction on charges of misdemeanors and crimes and to relieve them from the consequent stigma attaching thereto; to guard and protect them against themselves and evil minded persons surrounding them; to protect them and train them physically, mentally and morally."

The investigation by a probation officer, his assistance in the hearing, his being present at the hearing to represent the interests of the child—all provided for in section 1663 G. C.—are certainly provisions extremely important to the child's best interests. It may be argued that this section is to be given application only in counties where probation officers are appointed, but the nature of the duties cast upon the probation officer are such that it seems to me a juvenile court could not be successfully conducted in the spirit evidenced everywhere in the act without the services of such officer.

Section 1663 makes the probation officer the spokesman for and friendly adviser of the child, and I cannot for that reason believe that the legislature, in enacting this juvenile legislation, passed solely in the interest of children, ever intended to dispense in some of the counties of the state with the very provisions of the act that are most vital to the welfare of the delinquent children. It must be admitted that section 1662 provides that the court "may appoint" and not "shall appoint," but after a careful examination of the entire juvenile act I am of the view that "may" in this statute should be read "shall" at least to the extent of the appointment of one probation officer.

For the above reasons I am of the opinion that the sheriff is not the proper officer to convey girls to the Girls' Industrial School, and that he may not be allowed any fee for such service, but that the proper officer to convey girls to the industrial school is the probation officer, and that there must be at least one of such officers in every county. When such officer performs this service, the expense thereof may be met as provided in section 1682 of the General Code, which reads:

> "Fees and costs in all such cases with such sums as are necessary for the incidental expenses of the court and its officers, and the costs of transportation of children to places to which they have been committed, shall be paid from the county treasury upon itemized vouchers, certified to by the judge of the court."

In this connection I might call your attention to the opinion of former Attorney-General Hogan, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1914, Vol. 2, page 1275, in which he held:

"When the probate court commits a girl to the girls' industrial school at Delaware, Ohio, the court may appoint a woman as special probation officer to convey such girl to such institution, and the court may allow such woman so appointed such compensation as it sees fit within the limits provided by section 1662, General Code."

Reference is made to this opinion for the reason that it is advisable to have girls conveyed to the Girls' Industrial Home by women rather than men.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES UPON COMPLAINT MUST AFFORD RELIEF IN PROPER CASES TO PERSONS IN SAID TOWNSHIP REGARDLESS OF LEGAL SETTLEMENT—UPON REFUSAL OF TRUSTEES ANY ONE MAY FURNISH SAME, GIVING PROPER NOTICE AND TOWNSHIP WILL BE LIABLE—HOW TOWNSHIP REIMBURSED.

1. When complaint is made in a proper case to the township trustees, that a person in the township requires public relief, it is the duty of the township trustees to afford such relief, even if such person has a legal settlement under the poor laws in an adjoining county.

2. In such case, upon failure or refusal of the township trustees to afford such relief, any person can afford same, giving the notice required in section 3480 G. C., and such township shall be liable for the expense thereof and must look to the county of the person's legal settlement for reimbursement therefor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication addressed to this office, asking for an opinion, you state:

"Complaint was made to the township trustees of a township of this county that a person therein required public relief, but who had a legal settlement under the poor laws in an adjoining county.

In a suit against the township trustees of said township in this county could the person who furnished the necessary relief legally recover from the township trustees of said township in this county, the reasonable value of the relief given? Or would the county commissioners of the adjoining county be the only officials legally liable for such relief?

Upon such complaint being made to the township trustees in this county, are such trustees legally bound to furnish such pauper with relief or pay for the same if furnished by some one else, notice having been given them, but said trustees not having authorized or ordered such relief?"

The provisions of the General Code pertaining to the poor laws applicable to your question are found in sections 3476 et seq. G. C. Under section 3476 G. C. the trustees of the township in question have a duty imposed upon them under certain conditions to afford public support to persons therein who are in condition requiring it. I take it from the inquiry that complaint was duly made under section 3480 G. C. and that the real question in your case arises from the fact that the person requiring the relief had a legal settlement under the poor laws in the adjoining county.

The supreme court in Trustees v. White, 48 O. S. 577, was called upon to construe section 1491 R. S. and the succeeding sections of the poor laws, which are now found in the General Code as sections 3476 et seq. The sections read practically the same then as they do now.

Spear, J., at p. 583, speaking of section 1494 R. S., now section 3480 G. C., as amended in 1878, which, while changed in some respects, remains now practically the same as it was at that time, says:

"The conclusion upon the reason of the statute, therefore, would seem to follow that the discretion by the trustees applies to all services rendered and all relief afforded for which the township is made liable. There may be doubt as to the true construction of this feature of the statute, but we are of opinion that, under it, when notice is immediately given, the township is liable for all relief and for services rendered, but if notice is not given within three days, the township is liable for only such relief and services as may be afforded after notice is given, and that in either case the township is liable only for such amount of money as the trustees determine to be just and reasonable. In the performance of the duty enjoined, the trustees must pass upon all claims for relief afforded or services rendered, coming within the terms of the law. Claims for services or relief prior to notice, where notice is not given within three days, they have no jurisdiction to consider, the provision of the statute in that respect being mandatory upon them, as it would have been upon a court had a like claim been prosecuted under the former statute."

The court at p. 580 calls attention to the case of Trustees v. Ogden, 5 Ohio, 23, where it was held under a statute which provided that where the trustees should receive notice from the overseers of the poor that any person, not having a legal settlement in the township, was in condition requiring temporary assistance, such trustees should, if in their opinion such person was in suffering condition, and requiring assistance from the township, direct the overseers to provide such relief.

Continuing, Judge Spear said (p. 580):

"The opinion of the trustees was not final, and any individual who, after notice to the overseers, should furnish necessary relief to such person, could have an action to recover the value of the same against the township. There was no direct provision in the statute authorizing payment of such claim, but the court held that a promise might be implied. The decision turned upon the duty to carry into effect the object of the law, there being no language in the act clearly showing that the opinion of the trustees as to the necessity for public aid should be treated as conclusive."

The statute imposes a plain and express duty upon the township officers, and where complaint has been made in a proper case, it is mandatory upon them to afford relief.

In the event that the trustees fail or refuse to afford relief in a proper case, after complaint, any person may afford such relief, notifying the trustees within three days after such relief is afforded, and the township then shall be liable for such relief, although, as provided in section 3480 G. C., the trustees or one of them may at any time order the discontinuance of such relief and escape liability for relief rendered thereafter.

As the duty of affording relief is imposed upon the trustees of the township in which the pauper is found, it is my opinion that the right of action accruing to a person who in a proper case affords relief after the refusal or failure of the trustees so to do, is against the trustees of the township in which the pauper is found. If the pauper has a legal settlement in an adjoining county, the trustees of the township in which the person is found and where the relief was afforded would have a claim against and be entitled to reimbursement from the county in which the pauper had such legal settlement.

So answering your questions specifically, it is my opinion:

1. That in a proper case the township trustees of the township in which the relief was afforded to the pauper would be the proper persons against whom to bring the action for the expense of rendering such relief.

2. That upon complaint in a proper case it is the duty of the township trustees to furnish a pauper found within the township with relief.

3. That in a proper case, and after complaint, where the township trustees have failed or refused to furnish a pauper with relief and due notice under the statute has been given to said trustees, any person can furnish such relief without any order of the trustees, and such township trustees are liable for the expense of such relief so afforded.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE, BARBERTON CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT—$30,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Barberton city school district, in the sum of $30,000.00, for the construction and equipment of a school building in said school district.

I am just recently in receipt of a corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Barberton city school district relating to the above bond issue. I have carefully examined said transcript and as a result of such examination, I find that the proceedings relating to said bond issue are in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to the issue and sale of bonds of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds covering this issue will, when prepared according to bond form submitted and properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Barberton city school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—DITCH IMPROVEMENT—JURISDICTION.

The county commissioners acquire jurisdiction in a county ditch case or the improvement of a living stream, when they find in favor of said improvement, in accordance with section 6454 G. C., and such jurisdiction so acquired cannot thereafter be lost.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 19, 1918, you addressed to this department the following request for opinion:

> "In the month of January, 1916, a petition was filed with the county auditor of Seneca county, Ohio, by approximately fifty land owners of the city of Tiffin, and by one party who owned land up stream and outside of the municipality, and by the city of Tiffin, by Walter K. Keppel, mayor, authorized to sign by action of city council on January 15, 1916; also a bond signed by five residents of the city of Tiffin for the purpose of improving Rock Creek, by straightening, widening, altering, deepening, locating and constructing the channel of a creek or run known as Rock Creek, commencing at the Sandusky River in the city of Tiffin, and extending in a southeasterly direction to the corporation line of said city, and thence a short distance beyond said corporation line.
> This petition was filed under section 6447 of the General Code, and the signature of the city of Tiffin was affixed thereto by virtue of the authority given in section 6494 of the General Code.
> The county commissioners granted the petition and apportioned the assessments among the land owners living in the city of Tiffin, and also among a large number of land owners living beyond the corporation limits of said city, and upstream whose lands would be benefited by the proposed improvement. A large number of the land owners living beyond the corporation limits of the city and upstream filed an injunction suit in the court of common pleas on the ground that they would not be benefited in any way by the proposed improvement. The courts sustained the injunction. This will so reduce the assessments that it will be necessary for the county commissioners very materially to shorten the line of the improvement. In fact, they cannot go further upstream now than the Circular street bridge within the city of Tiffin. The question arises whether the county commissioners, after having acquired jurisdiction by reason of the improvement extending beyond the corporation of the city of Tiffin will lose that jurisdiction if the upstream terminus is so changed as to cause the entire improvement to be made within the corporation limits of the city of Tiffin, to be paid for only by residents of the city whose property will be benefited and by the city of Tiffin as a municipality.

After looking at the statute carefully I have come to the conclusion that the county commissioners will lose jurisdiction in this matter by making such change, but before giving my opinion to the board of commissioners, I would like to have your advice in the matter."

You assume in the above inquiry that by reason of the loss of a substantial part of the assessments, the collection of which had been enjoined, the commissioners are thereby authorized to change the beginning or terminus of the improvement to bring the cost within the amount remaining available, and that as to the assessments so enjoined, being those of the land owners benefited by the upper portion of the improvement, that portion may for that reason be abandoned.

A distinction has been made between ditch improvements and river improvements, as to the power of the commissioners to change the termini, in two cases hereinafter cited. Your improvement is stated to be that of the channel of a creek known as Rock Creek, from which I take it to be the improvement of a living stream, although you provide for locating and constructing it.

There is no provision in any statute in Ohio for locating and constructing a stream. Let it be assumed that the words "locating and constructing" are superfluous; that Rock Creek is a living stream and that your proceeding is one under the statute for improving its channel, which is no doubt the fact.

Two questions will arise; one as to whether the language of the statute permitting the change of the termini of a ditch applies at all to the improvement of the channel of a stream; the other—if it does so—can the change be made at the time and in the manner suggested in your inquiry?

The first of the cases above alluded to, holding that it cannot be done, is by the court of common pleas of Hardin county:

Abel v. Commissioners, 6 N. P., 349.

The syllabus is:

"The board of county commissioners in a proceeding under the ditch laws for the improvement of a river, have no authority to change the termini designated in the petition for such improvement."

Dow, J., holds that the commissioners have not the power because in section 4448 R. S. (now 6443 G. C.), in which both ditch improvements and river improvements are included, the express language of the statute only permits the change of termini in the case of a ditch.

The next case, which was subsequent to that, is from the Franklin county common pleas court, decided in 1904—

Gease v. Carlisle, 15 O. D., 435.

The syllabus reads:

"County commissioners are authorized by R. S. 4448 to change the termini of ditches, drains and artificial water courses, if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby; but as to the termini of rivers, creeks, runs and natural water courses, they have no such power."

Dillon, J., says on page 438:

"There was an evident purpose in providing that the commissioners could change the termini of any ditch, drain or water course, and expressly omitting that power with reference to a river, creek or run. That purpose evidently is based upon two considerations: First, that a river, creek or natural run has its termini already fixed by nature and it would be absurd to say that the commissioners might change the termini thereof. A second consideration is that as to a ditch or other artificial body to be established it may be apparent to the commissioners that the judgment of the petitioner is not at all conclusive as to the manner in which the land should be drained, and that upon a hearing the commissioners might find that the purpose would be more fully accomplished by a change of proposed termini. I am of opinion, therefore, that the commissioners have only power to change the termini of a ditch, a drain or artificial water course, that as to any river, creek, run or natural water course they have no such power."

This department has already expressed its opinion contrary to that announced in the above two decisions in Opinion No. 97 rendered March 10, 1917, to Hon. Thomas F. Hudson, prosecuting attorney of Clark county. The reason for such conclusion will be here re-stated.

It is a question of the construction of section 6443 G. C., which section is as follows:

"The board of county commissioners, at a regular or called session, when necessary to drain any lots, lands, public or corporate road or railroad, and it will be conducive to public health, convenience or welfare, in the manner provided in this chapter, may cause to be located and constructed, straightened, widened, altered, deepened, boxed or tiled, a ditch, drain or water course, or box or tile part thereof, or cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or part thereof, within such county, to be improved by straightening, widening, deepening, or changing it, or by removing from adjacent lands timber, brush, trees or other substance liable to obstruct it. The commissioners may change either terminus of a ditch before its final location, if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby."

If this section were the original enactment I should agree with the construction placed upon it above as necessarily following from the language used. It is, however, a part of a re-enactment and re-arrangement of former sections with no apparent intention of changing the effect of the language originally used in them. The whole of the matter contained in this section was originally enacted in 1871.

68 O. L., p. 60.

It is entitled, "An act relating to ditches," and consists of twenty-seven sections. Section 2 contains the following:

"That before the commissioners shall establish any ditch, there shall be filed with the auditor of such county, a petition signed by one or more of the land owners whose lands will be assessed for the expense of the same, setting forth the necessity thereof, with a general description of the proposed starting point, route, terminus, * * *"

Section 25 contains the following:

"This act shall be construed to extend to, and include the straightening of streams and water courses to which the same may be applicable."

Now from this it is perfectly apparent that if it be practicable to change the termini of the improvement of a stream the same as that of a ditch, the commissioners were authorized to make the change.

Reverting to the reasoning of Judge Dillon, quoted above, that it is not so practicable, he says: First, it is because the stream already has termini fixed by nature, and it would be absurd to say the commissioners might change the same. However, it is the termini of the improvement of a part of the channel that they propose to change and not at all the termini of the creek, so that this criticism falls. The termini means the two ends, where they start and where they stop, and these are not at all intended necessarily to be coincident with the source and the mouth of the stream. Of course, in the case of a ditch where they originally make it, it is different. There is nothing there except as they create it and the termini are where they start and where they stop.

His second reason is that it may be apparent to the commissioners that the judgment of the petitioner is not conclusive as to the manner in which the land should be drained and that upon a hearing the commissioners might find that the purpose would be more fully accomplished by a change of the proposed termini. Just why that would not be equally true as to a river improvement when we consider as above that it is the improvement that we are considering, not the stream, no body can make apparent.

This statute remained in that form without change for twelve years, during all of which time a river improvement in that respect was a ditch, or the same as a ditch. The river improvement had all the incidents of a ditch improvement, undoubtedly including the right of the commissioners to change the termini. It was next re-enacted April 11, 1883.

At this time it took substantially its present form so far as this question is concerned. Although the provisions above referred to of the act of 1871 were incorporated in section 4447 R. S., which provided, as 6443 G. C. now does, that the commissioners "in the manner provided in this chapter, etc., may cause to be located and constructed * * any ditch * * or cause the channel of a river, creek or run, or part thereof, to be improved by straightening, etc.", the words "in the manner provided in this chapter" are significant. They undoubtedly apply to both kinds of improvements. That is, you could construct a ditch in the manner provided in this chapter and you could improve the channel in the manner provided in this chapter and undoubtedly the legislature intended and the people of the state understood that these words, so far as the channel improvement was concerned, would take the place of the provision that the act should be construed to include the improvement of streams as in the original act. The word "ditch" has been kept in the statutes with reference to the change of termini because it was originally there, and the legislature has not seen fit to change it in any of the amendments or re-enactments. It originally applied to streams, and there is no evidence of any intention ever to take streams out of its application. Besides, in several sections in the chapter, in its present form, "ditch" must be held to include stream, for instance, the provisions in reference to appeal. It, therefore, still does apply to streams.

It being established that the commissioners have the power to change the terminus of a stream improvement, we come to the consideration of the other question, whether they may do it under the circumstances and at the time and for the purpose suggested in your inquiry.

The first significant thing that strikes the attention is the expression in the statute itself granting the authority to make the change. It is to be "before its final location." This is immediately followed by the reason for which the change may be made, which is "if the object of the improvement will be better accomplished thereby."

In your case you must have passed the time that the statute permits the change to be made. I do not assume to pass upon your actual case without the record before me, but as you state the assessments have been enjoined, it follows that they must have been made. The assessments cannot be made until after the final location of the improvement. This finding for the improvement is provided for by section 6454 G. C., which in the case of such finding requires the county commissioners to cause to be entered on their journal an order directing the county surveyor to go upon the line described in the petition and survey and level it, etc., and section 6455 G. C. provides that they shall further direct him to make and return a schedule of the lots and lands, and public or corporate roads that will be benefited, with an apportionment of the cost of location and labor of constructing the improvement, in money, according to the benefits which will result to each. Section 6457 G. C. provides for a review of this apportionment by the surveyor to be made by the commissioners.

All this is after the finding by the commissioners in favor of the improvement and must precede the bringing of injunction proceedings to restrain the assessment. Therefore, you must have passed the time when the commissioners can change the terminus. You do not propose to make the change because the object of the improvement will be better accomplished, but for other reasons, because by this injunction you are prevented from having the funds to make the improvement.

This practically answers your question. The commissioners have no power to change the termini of this improvement. The form of your question, however, is as to whether they have lost jurisdiction. The answer to the question in this form is the statement of a well established legal principle. Jurisdiction once lawfully and properly acquired is not lost by the occurrence of subsequent events, but continues until it has been exercised. So that the categorical answer to your question is in the negative.

As to the course the commissioners are required to take in this situation, I am not asked and do not volunteer a solution. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL MAY MAKE APPLICATION FOR TRANSFER OF SURPLUS FUND ARISING FROM OPERATION OF GAS PLANT TO ANY OTHER FUND—ALSO HAS AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE FOR THE INVESTMENT OF SUCH SURPLUS IN PROPER SECURITIES.

Under authority of section 2296 et seq. General Code, the council of a municipality may make application to the court of common pleas of the county to transfer the surplus arising from the operation of a gas plant by such municipality to any other fund, or to a new fund, of the municipality, and such funds can then be used for the purposes of the fund to which they are transferred.

The council of a municipal corporation has authority to provide for the investment of the surplus moneys arising from the operation of a municipal gas plant, in proper securities. What are proper securities is not determined.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your letter of January 18, 1918, is received, in which you submit the following statement of facts and inquiries:

> "The city of Lancaster maintains a gas department. While they are the owners of a couple of moderate sized wells, the great volume of their gas is purchased from another company and sold by the department to the consumers. The department has no bonded indebtedness for gas improvements or purposes and has been operating at a profit and the director of service in charge of the department has accumulated a surplus of approximately $90,000.00, which has been invested in interest bearing bonds, which bonds are in the custody of the city treasurer.
> Question 1. Is there any legal authority for the purchase of such investments?
> Question 2. Can the surplus of the gas department be used by the municipality for other purposes?"

Your second question will be considered first.

Section 3799, General Code, authorizes council by three-fourths vote, to transfer funds raised by taxation. The funds now in question are not raised from taxation and, therefore, this section does not apply. This section provides:

> "By the votes of three-fourths of all the members elected thereto, and the approval of the mayor, the council may at any time transfer all or a portion of one fund, or a balance remaining therein, except the proceeds of a special levy, bond issue or loan, to the credit of one or more funds, but there shall be no such transfer except among funds raised by taxation * * *."

Section 5654, General Code, provides:

> "When there is in the treasury of any city, village, county, township or school district, a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax, or of the proceeds of a loan for a special purpose, which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied, or the loan made, it may be transferred to the general fund by an order of the proper authorities entered on their minutes."

The fund now in question was not raised by a special tax or by a loan for a special purpose. This section does not, therefore, apply.

Section 2296, G. C., provides:

> "The county commissioners, township trustees, the board of education of a school district, or the council, or other board having the legislative power of a municipality, may transfer public funds, except the proceeds or balances of special levies, loans or bond issues, under their supervision, from one fund to another, or to a new fund created under their respective supervision, in the manner hereafter provided, which shall be in addition to all other procedure now provided by law."

Section 2297, General Code, provides:

"A resolution of such officers or board shall be duly passed by a majority of all the members thereof, declaring the necessity therefor, and such officers or board shall file a petition in the court of common pleas of the county in which the funds are held. * * *"

Here follows provision as to the petition and the following sections provide for notice, the hearing and the finding of the court.

A transfer of the funds in question may be made under the above sections and then used by the city for other purposes.

Section 3618-1, General Code, authorizes a municipal corporation to own and operate a gas plant and to furnish the product to the municipality and its inhabitants. This section reads in part:

"That any municipal corporation owning a municipal gas plant or system of gas distribution shall have the power to purchase gas, natural or artificial, and to furnish the same to said municipality and the inhabitants thereof for the purpose of light, power and heat. * * *"

The above section does not provide for the disposition of surplus funds. Section 3959, General Code, provides what shall be done with the surplus of the waterworks. There is no such provision as to gas plants.

Therefore, under authority of sections 2296 et seq., General Code, the council of a municipality may make application to the court of common pleas of the county to transfer the surplus arising from the operation of a gas plant by such municipality to any other fund, or to a new fund, of the municipality and such funds then can be used for the purposes of the fund to which they are transferred.

Your second question is as to the right of the municipality to invest the surplus in interest-paying bonds.

The only specific authority of statute for a municipality to make investment of its funds is granted to the trustees of the sinking fund by section 4514 General Code.

This section provides:

"The trustees of the sinking fund shall invest all moneys received by them in bonds of the United States, the state of Ohio, or of any municipal corporation, school, township or county bonds, in such state, and hold in reserve only such sums as may be needed for effecting the terms of this title. All interest received by them shall be reinvested in like manner."

It appears from your letter that the investment was made through the city treasurer and not by the sinking fund trustees.

Section 4294, General Code, provides:

> "Upon giving bond as required by council, the treasurer may, by and with the consent of his bondsmen, deposit all funds and public moneys of which he has charge in such bank or banks, situated within the county, which may seem best for the protection of such funds. * * *"

Section 4295, General Code, provides for the deposit of funds by the municipality, and section 4515, General Code, covers the deposit by the trustees of the sinking fund. These do not cover investments.

At section 2163 of McQuillin on "Municipal Corporations," it is stated:

> "Seldom have municipal corporations surplus moneys for loan or investment. But where such a condition of affairs presents itself, the municipality has power to loan or invest in proper securities, unless it should be forbidden by statute. However, where a statute provided that towns could appropriate certain public moneys to public objects of expenditure and to no other purpose, it was held to be a violation of the statute for a town to distribute such moneys among its inhabitants, receiving therefor their individual notes. So while a municipal corporation may loan its accumulated sinking fund, it is not empowered to loan funds raised for special purposes."

At page 1562 of volume 28 of Cyc., it is said:

> "Surplus money in a municipal treasury, not appropriated for immediate payment, may be loaned or invested by the municipality, until needed for municipal use, at any lawful rate of interest which may be agreed upon, and a borrower will not be heard to set up the want of corporate power to make his loan."

It appears from the above authorities that municipalities may loan their funds in proper securities, unless it should be forbidden by statute.

There is no specific provision in the statutes of Ohio which would prohibit the investment of funds. The only express provision for such power is that found in section 4514 General Code.

Section 4240, General Code, provides:

> "The council shall have the management and control of the finances and property of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and have such other powers and perform such other duties as may be conferred by law."

The above section gives council the control and management of the finances of the municipality. Under the above authority council could authorize the investment of funds in proper securities. What would be proper securities should be determined as to each particular security or investment. A proper security would be such as are enumerated in section 4514 General Code.

Investment in securities of a private corporation would raise a constitutional question. This need not now be considered.

It is my opinion that council would have authority to make an investment of the funds in proper securities.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO HIRE SHERIFF'S MACHINE FOR HIS OWN USE IN PERFORMANCE OF HIS DUTIES —MAY REIMBURSE HIM—SCHOOL BOARD—WHEN ONE OF TWO NEWLY ELECTED MEMBERS DOES NOT QUALIFY A VACANCY EXISTS—HOW SUCH VACANCY FILLED.

The county commissioners have no authority to hire the sheriff's machine for the use of the sheriff in the performance of his official business, but that the commissioners, under authority of section 2997, may make allowance to the sheriff to reimburse him for the expense of using his own machine for public business.

Two new members were to be elected, at a November election, to the township school board. One of the retiring members ran for re-election but was defeated. The other retiring member did not run for re-election. Two new members were elected. One of the two new members moved away and did not qualify.

HELD, that a vacancy exists and such vacancy should be filled by the board of education as provided by section 4748 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

HON. ROGER D. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 7, 1918, submitting two questions. The first question submitted reads:

> "The county commissioners, acting on an opinion received from the attorney-general's office December 9, 1911, passed a resolution to allow the sheriff fifteen cents per mile for every mile traveled in carrying out the duties imposed upon him by law, said sheriff to file bills and the same allowed and paid as provided by law. The sheriff is using his own automobile and in order not to violate the law asks for an opinion. The county commissioners purchased an automobile under an act passed by the last legislature but owing to the volume of business could not use the same in conjunction with the sheriff. Therefore, they thought it advisable and for the best interests of the county to allow the sheriff to use his own car and charge a rate within reason for the upkeep of said machine.
> Please advise us if his proceeding is regular and in conformity to the laws of the state of Ohio and opinions rendered by the attorney-general."

Your first question was fully discussed in an opinion of this department, No. 876, rendered December 19, 1917, to Hon. Chester Pendleton, prosecuting attorney, Findlay, Ohio, copy of which opinion is hereto attached. It will be noted that in this opinion it was held that:

> "The county commissioners have no authority to hire the sheriff's machine for the use of the sheriff in the performance of his official business, but that the commissioners, under authority of section 2997, may make allowance to the sheriff to reimburse him for the expense of using his own machine for public business."

Your second question reads:

> "At the November election last, the Delaware township school board elected two new members, three old members holding over. One old member did not run for re-election, another old member ran for re-election and was defeated and two new members were elected.

One of the two new members moved away and did not qualify. This leaves the three who are holding over and one of the newly elected members composing said force. Has the board the power to appoint the fifth member or which one of the old board retains his seat, the member who ran for re-election and was defeated or the old member whose time expired and did not make the race?"

In this case it is impossible to determine whether the newly elected member, who failed to qualify, was elected to succeed the old member who did not run for re-election, or the old member who ran for re-election and was defeated. It has been frequently held by this department that in such cases a vacancy exists.

Section 4748 of the General Code reads:

"A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by death, nonresidence, resignation, removal from office, failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the organization of the board or of his appointment, removal from the district or absence from meetings of the board for a period of ninety days, if such absence is caused by reasons declared insufficient by a two-thirds vote of the remaining members of the board, which vote must be taken and entered upon the records of the board not less than thirty days after such absence. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

It will be noted from the above section that where a vacancy is caused by the "failure of a person elected or appointed to qualify within ten days after the organization of the board," such vacancy shall be filled by the board by election for the unexpired term and a majority vote of all the remaining members of the board is necessary. A vacancy existing in the case you submit is one caused by failure to qualify and therefore the manner of filling such vacancy, as outlined in section 4748, has application here. This unexpired term would be the remainder of the full four-year term.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—BY WHAT JUSTICE OF THE PEACE VACANCY IN SAID OFFICE FILLED—"OLDEST COMMISSION" AS USED IN SECTION 3262 DEFINED.

1. The phrase "oldest commission," as used in section 3262 G. C., means the existing commission of earliest date.

2. When the commission of two or more justices of the peace bear the same date, the justice oldest in years is the proper official to appoint a suitable person to fill a vacancy in a board of township trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, February 28, 1918.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Prosecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of February 22 you wrote me as follows:

> "In Huntington township, Gallia county, Ohio, there is a vacancy in the board of township trustees. One justice of the peace of the township has been the holder of a commission as such for eighteen years continuously. Another justice of the peace has been the holder of a commission as such for a number of years less than eighteen. The dates of the commissions under which these two justices of the peace are now holding office are the same. The justice of the peace who has held the office for the lesser number of years is the older man of the two. A construction of section 3262 G. C. is involved. Which justice of the peace has the power to appoint a suitable person to fill the vacancy in the board?"

Section 3262 G. C. provides:

> "When for any cause a township is without a board of trustees or there is a vacancy in such board, the justice of the peace of such township holding the oldest commission, or in case the commission of two or more of such justices bear even date, the justice oldest in years, shall appoint a suitable person or persons, having the qualifications of electors in the township to fill such vacancy or vacancies for the unexpired term."

This department has a number of times construed what the term "oldest commission means in this section, and in an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, on April 8, 1915, to Hon. Harold W. Houston, and found in Vol. I of the opinions of the attorney-general for 1915, p. 411, the following language is used:

> "The word 'commission' as here used has reference to a live commission, that is to say, after the term of a commission has expired, it ceases to be a commission within the meaning of the terms of this statute. This view is strengthened by the provision of the above quoted section of the statute in case two commissions are of even date and is in accord with the former holding of my predecessor, Hon. U. G. Denman, under date of February 1, 1910, as follows:
> 'I beg to advise that under date of August 8, 1906, this department rendered an opinion to the secretary of state in which it was held that section 1452, which provides that the justice of the peace "holding the oldest commission," in case of vacancy in the office of township trustees, shall fill the same by appointment, does not refer to a commission earlier than the one under which the justice is now holding office, and it is entirely immaterial as to what terms were served or commissions held by either justice prior to the current year.'"

So in the case of vacancy in the board of trustees, on the question of which justice of the peace is the holder of the oldest commission, an examination is to be made of the date of the existing commissions of the justices of the peace, and the mere fact that a justice has held the office of justice of the peace for a great number of years has no bearing upon the case.

In your communication you state that the dates of the commissions, under which the two justices of the peace are now holding office, are the same. This situation is taken care of by the express language of section 3262, supra, wherein provision is made that:

> "* * * in case the commission of two or more of such justices bear even date, the justice oldest in years, shall appoint a suitable person or persons * * *."

So in the case of Huntington township the justice of the peace who is the older man, notwithstanding that he has held office a lesser number of years than the other justice, is the proper justice to make the appointment for the vacancy that exists in the board of township trustees.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF STATE CHARITIES IS NOT REQUIRED TO PROSECUTE INSTITUTIONS FOR VIOLATION OF SECTION 1352-1 RELATING TO SOLICITING MONEY, ETC., WITHOUT CERTIFICATE OF BOARD.

There is no statutory duty imposed upon the board of state charities to prosecute violation of section 1352-1 G. C. for receiving children or soliciting money on behalf of an institution not having the certificate of the board, enabling it to assume the care of children, but in the nature of the case it is appropriate for the department to enforce the observance of this law and inaugurate prosecution for its violation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 4, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On February 13, 1918, you addressed to this department the following communication and inquiry:

> "I call your attention to the attached copy of a report made by Miss Eaton, assistant director of the children's welfare department of this board, relative to the Kinder Freund Gesellshaft. This is another case where lack of certification, as prescribed by section 1352-1 G. C., fails to secure obedience to the law by the parties concerned. It appears that Rev. George Eyler is the principal offender.
>
> We are referring this matter to you for counsel as to whether we should, under the circumstances, undertake prosecution for failure to observe the restrictions imposed by said section of the General Code.
> A number of institutions and agencies in Cleveland, as well as elsewhere, have abided by our recommendations and now they feel that the state should possess power to suppress the activities of uncertified agencies in their midst, inasmuch as the state has vested authority in one of its departments to issue a form of license under the title of certification.

Our investigators are beginning to feel that much of their work is in vain, so long as there is an open violation of the action of the board relative to such institutions and agencies.

We understand that, as a state department, we cannot employ any legal counsel except that assigned by you, in case prosecution should be attempted by us. We therefore hope that you may see your way clear to afford such assistance as will protect the findings of our board.

Perhaps this communication had better be put in the form of a query, as follows:

Is it the duty of the board of state charities to prosecute the executive officers of non-certified agencies who continue to disregard the findings of the board of state charities? If not, who should?"

Upon a full reading of the above communication and the attached report, it would seem that you might desire rather more than a mere categorical answer to the question in which you epitomize your inquiry.

Only one section of the General Code seems necessary to be considered in view of the fact that other opinions addressed to you treat rather fully upon the subject of the jurisdiction of the juvenile court.

Section 1352-1. This section provides that your board shall pass upon the fitness of all institutions involved, and make an annual report showing the condition, management and competency, adequately to care for children, the system of visitation employed for children placed in private homes, and such other facts as the board requires, and then provides for your issuing a certificate upon being satisfied in reference to the fitness of the applicant. It then proceeds with a provision that no child shall be committed by the juvenile court to an association not having such certificate. The section closes with a penalty for its violation, which is as follows:

"Any person who receives children, or receives or solicits money on behalf of such an institution, corporation or association, not so certified, or whose certificate has been revoked, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and fined not less than $5.00 nor more than $500.00."

It has been heretofore noted that section 1683-1 G. C. provides for jurisdiction in the juvenile court for offenses against minors below a certain age, so that if the offense above defined be an offense in any given case against such minor, the juvenile court would have at least concurrent jurisdiction in its prosecution. This offense, however, seems not to be an offense against any particular infant committed to such institution, but rather an offense against the state. The commitment of a given child to a given institution might be the best possible thing for its welfare, and might open the door and point the way to fame and fortune for such infant, and yet the act would be none the less an offense against the state, because an infraction of its law. The object of the law is to afford every security for the welfare of unfortunate children in general, and like all laws, is intended to command universal obedience.

It is therefore submitted that the offense above defined, not being an infraction of any of the statutes enumerated in section 1683-1, and not being an offense against minors, should be prosecuted in the criminal courts than the juvenile court.

Referring to the specific inquiry made by you as to your duty, no statute is found requiring you to institute such prosecution, so far as the affirmative statutory requirements are concerned. This is simply a criminal offense to be punished as other such offenses. However, the law does not execute itself; it must be set in motion either by public officials, or private individuals. Any individual who took enough interest to do so could inaugurate a prosecution for violation of this statute by making a charge in the form of an affidavit against the offender, and causing his arrest, or it might be done by the prosecuting attorney of any county in which it occurs, by bringing witnesses before the grand jury and causing an indictment.

The trust reposed in your department, the authority given you by the statute, and the general nature of your functions and duties are such as make it proper for you to interest yourself in the enforcement of this law, which you could do either by making affidavit and instituting prosecution before a magistrate in the proper county, or by furnishing names of witnesses to the prosecuting attorney and requesting him to bring the matter before the grand jury.

This department stands ready to co-operate with you in the enforcement of the law, and to assist in the iniation and conduct of prosecutions whenever necessary.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW FINES AND COSTS ASSESSED BY MAYOR FOR VIOLATION OF MUNICIPAL ORDINANCES, AND IN STATE CASES, MAY BE COLLECTED WHEN MAYOR DOES NOT ACT.

A mayor is without authority to allow fines and costs in cases to go unpaid and if he does so, such fines and costs may be recovered as follows:

In cases of violations of municipal ordinances, recovery can be had in the name of the corporation, as provided in sections 4561 and 4562 of the General Code, but these suits must be commenced within one year after the violation of the ordinance.

In the case of a violation of an ordinance, where resort cannot be had to these sections, and in state cases, mandamus will lie against the mayor, at the instance of the interested party, to compel him to issue execution on the judgment for fines. At the instance of the officers to whom costs in these cases are due, mandamus will also lie against such mayor to compel the issuance of the execution to collect the costs in these cases.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter as follows:

"The mayor of a municipality of this state has in a number of cases imposed a sentence, consisting of fines and costs, and without any notation of suspending the sentence or other notation, allows the person thus sentenced to walk out without payment of such fines and costs, which still remain unpaid.

Question 1. Is there any authority of law which would grant a mayor power to allow such non-payment?

Question 2. If the persons thus sentenced can be reached, can collection still be legally made?"

Sections 13717, 13718 and 13719 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 13717. When a fine is the whole or a part of a sentence, the court or magistrate may order that the person sentenced remain imprisoned in jail until such fine and costs are paid, or secured to be paid, or he is otherwise legally discharged, provided that the person so imprisoned shall receive credit upon such fine and costs at the rate of sixty cents per day for each day's imprisonment."

"Sec. 13718. When a magistrate or court renders judgment for a fine, an execution may issue for such judgment and the costs of prosecution, to be levied on the property, or, in default thereof, upon the body of the defendant. The officer holding such writ may arrest such defendant in any county and commit him to the jail of the county in which such writ issued, until such fine and costs are paid, or secured to be paid, or he is otherwise legally discharged."

"Sec. 13719. An execution, as provided in the next preceding section, may issue to the sheriff of any county in which the defendant resides, is found or has property, and the sheriff shall execute the writ. If the defendant is taken, the sheriff shall commit him to the jail of the county in which the writ issued, and deliver a certified copy of the writ to the sheriff of such county, who shall detain the offender until he is discharged as provided in such section."

Section 4270 of the General Code reads:

"All fines and forfeitures collected by the mayor, or which in any manner comes into his hands, and all moneys received by him in his official capacity, other than his fees of office, shall be by him paid into the treasury of the corporation weekly. At the first regular meeting of the council in each and every month, he shall submit a full statement of all such moneys received, from whom and for what purpose received, and when paid over. All fines, penalties and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be by him paid over to the county treasury monthly."

Section 12378 of the General Code reads:

"Unless otherwise required by law, an officer who collects a fine, shall pay it into the treasury of the county in which such fine was assessed, to the credit of the county general fund within twenty days after the receipt thereof, take the treasurer's duplicate receipts therefor and forthwith deposit one of them with the county auditor."

From these sections it is clear that when the mayor has found a defendant guilty and assessed the fine, it is his duty to collect the same, and if such fine is for the violation of an ordinance, pay it into the city treasury; if for the violation of a state law, into the county treasury. The city, therefore, has an interest in collecting the fine for the violation of ordinances and the county is an interested party in the collection of fines for the violation of state laws before the mayor.

There is no authority in law for a mayor refusing to collect these fines and costs. If he does so refuse, collection can be made in one of two different ways. First, mandamus will lie at the instance of the county, city or officer claiming fees, depending upon whether an effort is being made to collect state fines, municipal fines or costs.

In Bailey on Habeas Corpus, in the discussion of the subject of mandamus, I find the following:

"Sec. 209. The general rule has been stated that mandamus will not lie where the party has another adequate remedy, but this rule has no application where the purpose of the writ is to set inferior courts in motion. In such cases mandamus will be allowed irrespective of the question whether the party has or has not another remedy. * * *"

"Sec. 212. * * * And where a court, whose duty it is to issue executions upon judgments (instead of clerk of a court), refuses after an ineffectual appeal from its judgment to issue an execution thereon, mandamus will lie to compel it to do so."

"Sec. 223. The same general rules apply to proceedings in justices' as in inferior courts. Such courts may be compelled to mandamus to proceed to the performance of their duties, and determine matters which are brought before them and which are within their jurisdiction. * * * Also to issue an execution upon a judgment; and generally to do and perform all acts that are ministerial in their nature."

In cases where the fines have been assessed for violations of ordinances, recovery may also be had as provided in section 4561 and section 4562 of the General Code, as follows:

"Sec. 4561. Fines, penalties and forfeitures may, in all cases, and in addition to any other mode provided, be recovered by suit or action before any justice of the peace, or other court of competent jurisdiction, in the name of the proper municipal corporation, and for its use. In any suit or action where pleading is necessary, it shall be sufficient if the petition sets forth generally the amount claimed to be due in respect of the violation of the by-law or ordinance, referring to its title, and the date of its adoption or passage, and showing, as near as may be practicable, the true time of the alleged violation."

"Sec. 4562. Suits or prosecutions for the recovery of fines, penalties, or forfeitures, or for the commission of any offense made punishable by any by-law or ordinance of any municipal corporation, shall be commenced within one year after the violation of the ordinance, or commission of the offense, and not afterward."

From a consideration of these sections and authorities it is my opinion that the mayor you refer to is without authority to allow the fines and costs in these cases to go unpaid. In the case of violations of municipal ordinances, recovery can be had in the name of the corporation, as provided in sections 4561 and 4562 of the General Code, but these suits must be commenced within one year after the violation of the ordinance. In the case of a violation of an ordinance, where resort cannot be had to these sections, and in state cases, mandamus will lie against the mayor, at the instance of the interested party, to compel him to issue execution on the judgment for fines. At the instance of the officers to whom costs in these cases are due, mandamus will also lie against such mayor to compel the issuance of the execution to collect the costs in these cases.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL MAY FIX COMPENSATION OF CITY ENGINEER UPON BASIS OF PERCENTAGE OF THE COST OF AN IMPROVEMENT—WHEN COMPENSATION FIXED UPON PER DIEM BASIS IT CANNOT BE CHANGED TO PERCENTAGE BASIS AFTER IMPROVEMENT STARTED—WHEN SALARY PAID BY MONTH OR YEAR MAY NOT BE CHARGED AGAINST FUND RAISED BY BOND ISSUE.

Council of a municipality is authorized to fix the compensation of the city engineer and his assistants upon the basis of a certain per cent of the cost of an improvement.

Where council has provided by ordinance that the engineer shall be paid upon a per diem basis, and thereafter this is changed to a per cent of the entire cost of an improvement, and provision is made that for all other services said engineer shall be paid on a per diem basis, such engineer should be paid upon a per diem basis where work has been started prior to the second ordinance becoming effective but not completed until after such time.

Where the compensation of an engineer is fixed upon a salary basis by the month or the year, no part of such compensation can be charged against the funds raised by an issue of bonds for a specific purpose, even though such improvement is not to be paid for by means of a special assessment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you submit the following statement of facts and inquiries to this department:

"STATEMENT OF FACTS"

On December 24, 1915, the council passed an ordinance providing that the compensation of the city engineer should be the sum of fifty cents per hour for all service performed by him, and that in all public improvements wherein a part of the costs was to be assessed against property holders the amount paid the engineer should be charged against the special improvement funds.

On July 24, 1916, the council passed an ordinance repealing the ordinance of December 24, 1915, and providing that the engineer, for all work in connection with the improvement of streets, including the preliminary surveys, plans, specifications, profiles and estimates and other surveys, and all supervision work done and performed by him and assistants and inspectors, should receive out of the street improvement fund 2¾ per cent of the total cost of the labor and materials; one-third when the ordinance determining to proceed is passed; one-third during construction of the work, and the remaining one-third when the work is completed.

The ordinance of July 24, 1916, did not become effective until August 24, 1916. During the spring of 1916, plans and specifications were prepared for five street improvements involving a cost of over $50,000.00. The contracts were awarded in June, 1916, and by the time the ordinance became effective, August 24, 1916, a greater portion of the improvement work was completed on several of the streets. At said time all the preliminary surveys, plans and estimates had been made and there was left only the supervision, and the preparing of the final estimates, on a portion of each of the street improvements. The engineer was paid under the ordinance of December 25, 1915, at the rate of fifty cents per hour up to August 24, 1916, and after said date he was paid under the ordinance of July 24, 1916, the amount paid him being estimated only.

Question 1. Can the compensation of an engineer which is fixed by the hour be changed when certain work is under way to compensation based on a percentage basis of such work?

Question 2. Can the compensation of an engineer which is fixed by the month or the year, be charged against improvements from bond funds when such improvements are not under special assessment?"

The first question to be considered is the right of council to fix the compensation of the engineer and his assistants upon the basis of a certain percentage upon the costs of the improvement.

Section 4214 General Code authorizes council to fix compensation for municipal officers and employes. This section reads as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

The method of paying such compensation is not limited by statute. In such case the rule is stated at page 460, Vol. 28 of Cyc., as follows:

"When the common council is authorized to fix the compensation of a municipal officer, the entire compensation may be fixed in the form of a salary, or fees, or salary and fees, or in a lump sum for salary, assistants, and office expenses."

It appears, therefore, that council may fix the compensation of a municipal officer or employe upon a salary basis, upon a per diem, or fees, or salary and fees.

In the first ordinance submitted by you, the compensation of the engineer was fixed upon a per diem. The amendment provided a percentage of the costs and this would be upon a fee basis.

Council therefore was authorized in fixing the compensation of the engineer and his assistants, upon the basis of a certain percentage of the cost of the improvement.

The first question which you submit is as to the right to change the basis of compensation of the engineer after an improvement has been started and before its completion.

Section 4213 General Code limits the right to change compensation of an officer or employe who has a fixed term. This section reads as follows:

"The salary of any officer, clerk or employe shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which he was elected or appointed, and, except as otherwise provided in this title, all fees pertaining to any office shall be paid into the city treasury."

The engineer of a city is the head of a subdepartment under the director of public service. He is appointed by virtue of section 4250 General Code, which section reads as follows:

"The mayor shall be the chief conservator of peace within the corporation. He shall appoint, and have the power to remove, the director of public service, the director of public safety, and the heads of the subdepartments of the departments of public service and public safety, and shall have such other powers and perform such other duties as are conferred and required by law. In cities having a population of less than twenty thousand, the council may by a majority vote merge the office of director of public safety with that of public service, one director to be appointed for the merged department."

This section does not prescribe a fixed term of office for the engineer.

In an opinion to Hon. Thomas C. Davis, city solicitor, under date of March 26, 1912, page 1643 of the annual report of the attorney-general for 1912, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, held as follows:

"Section 4250, General Code, providing for the powers of appointment and removal of a director of public service, by the mayor, and section 3252, presenting the idea of a term of office, and section 3259, requiring appointments to be made in a definite time, present a patent ambiguity.

Inasmuch as sections 4251 and 4252 are carried down from the statutes relating to the old 'board plan,' which was succeeded by the 'federal plan,' of which section 4250 is an essential provision, the latter statute should be allowed to control. Therefore the director of public service has no 'term of office' within the comprehension of section 4213 General Code, and the council is therefore not prohibited from increasing or diminishing his salary during his incumbency."

The conclusion above reached will also apply to the position of engineer. The engineer of a city therefore has no fixed term of office, and council can therefore change his compensation at any time it sees fit.

The question presented by you, however, is as to the right to pay the engineer upon a per diem basis for a part of the improvement and upon a percentage basis for the remainder of the same improvement.

On January 30, 1918, you submitted copies of the ordinances in question. The first ordinance fixes the compensation of the city engineer at fifty cents per hour for all services. The second ordinance fixes the compensation for the improvement of streets, at two and three-fourths per cent of the "total cost of the labor and material." Provision is made therein to pay the engineer fifty cents per hour where the ordinance to proceed fails to pass.

There is a further provision as follows:

"For all other services he shall receive the sum of fifty cents per hour, payable out of the proper fund, in accordance with the appropriations of the council."

Under this ordinance the percentage basis of payment is upon the total cost, which is to include all services performed thereon. There is no provision for payment upon percentage basis for a part of the services or upon a part of the cost of a particular street improvement.

The situation presented is met by the provision above quoted. Where work on a street improvement had been started prior to, but not completed until after the second ordinance became effective, the city engineer should be paid at the rate of fifty cents per hour for all services performed on such improvment.

This, I believe, answers your first question.

Your second question is as to the right of charging the compensation of an engineer against funds raised by the issue of bonds for specific improvements, where the compensation of the engineer is fixed upon a salary basis.

This question is covered and answered by the second branch of the syllabus in the case of Longworth v. City of Cincinnati, 34 Ohio State, 101. This branch of the syllabus reads:

"Where the surveying and engineering of such improvement were performed by the chief engineer of the city and his assistants, who were officers appointed for a definite period, at a fixed salary, which the law required to be paid out of the general fund of the city, the reasonable cost to the city, of such surveying and engineering, cannot be ascertained and assessed upon the abutting property, as a necessary expenditure for the improvement."

The above case was as to improvements the cost of which was to be assessed upon the abutting property. The same principle, however, will apply to the question now submitted by you.

Where bonds are issued for a specific purpose, expenditures cannot be made therefrom for any other purpose. Where an engineer is paid upon a salary basis, which includes his compensation for the general duties of his office, it cannot be determined with reasonable certainty what part of such compensation is paid on account of any particular improvement.

It is my opinion, therefore, that where the compensation of an engineer is fixed upon a salary basis by the month or the year, no part of such compensation can be charged against the funds raised by bond issues for a particular improvement, even though the cost of such improvement is not to be levied against property owners as a special assessment.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR MUST ACCEPT REGISTRATION OF UNREGISTERED DOG ANY TIME DURING YEAR—FEES.

It is the duty of the county auditor to accept registration during the year of unregistered dogs which were subject to registration prior to the first day of January for the following year and which have not been seized and impounded. In registering such dogs, the auditor is authorized to receive only the proper fees provided for in section 5652 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 5, 1918.

HON. G. B. FINDLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Elyria, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have at hand your letter of February 8, 1918, in which you ask my opinion on questions stated by you as follows:

> "With reference to the so-called dog law found in 107 Ohio Laws 534, this question has arisen:
> Should the county auditor accept the application fee and assign numbers after the county commissioners have performed their duties under section 5652-8 General Code? It is claimed on the one hand that after the county commissioners have acted as above then the county auditor no longer has the right to issue a license except to those who become the owners of dogs after January 1st, or with reference to dogs that have become three months of age after January 1. That section 5652 requires the license to be secured before the first day of January and that the county auditor has no authority after that date to issue one except in the two specific cases above mentioned. It is further suggested that if he does issue a license in either case he should collect the penalty provided in section 5652-10."

I am not certain that I fully appreciate the application of your reference to the duties to be performed by the county commissioners under section 5652-8 G. C. (107 O. L. 535), so far as the question made by you are concerned. The duties required of the county commissioners under this section are of a general nature and extend to the matter of providing for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of the act and providing suitable devices for taking up dogs.

Further, other than in counties where there is an incorporated humane society furnishing the same, the county commissioners are required to provide a suitable place for a dog pound and suitable devices for destroying dogs.

Your questions suggest a consideration of the matter of registering dogs more than three months of age which have been seized and impounded by the sheriff or deputy, and the matter of registering, during the year, dogs subject to registration prior to the first day of January for the following year, which have not been seized and impounded. Under the provisions of this act a dog so seized and impounded must be either sold, redeemed or destroyed. If a dog be destroyed, that is of course an end of the matter, so far as any question with respect to the registration of the dog is concerned, and there only remains a claim in favor of the county against the owner, keeper or harborer of the dog, for the cost of seizing, keeping and destroying the same, which has been assessed against the dog under section 5652-10 G. C. (107 O. L. 536).

If the dog so seized and impounded be sold, it must be sold for enough to pay the cost assessed against the dog for seizing, keeping and selling the same. Though the provisions of section 5652-9 G. C. (p. 536 of 107 O. L.) are not specific on this point, I am inclined to the view that the statute contemplates the payment of such costs by the purchaser to the keeper of the pound, who in turn is required to deposit same in the county treasury to the credit of the general county fund.

In addition to paying the costs assessed against such dog, the purchaser is required to have same registered under the provisions of section 5652-2 G. C. (p. 534 of 107 O. L.), which states that every person, immediately upon becoming the owner, keeper or harborer of any dog more than three months of age, during any year, shall file like application as required by section 5652 G. C. (107 O. L. 534) for registration for the year beginning January first prior to the date such person became the owner, keeper or harborer of such dog.

If the dog so seized and impounded is redeemed by the owner, keeper or harborer thereof, such person is required to pay to the keeper of the pound the cost assessed against the animal, and in addition is required to provide the dog so redeemed with a valid registration tag for the year beginning on the first day of January prior to the date of registration, by application therefor and payment of fee as required by sections 5652 and 5652-2, supra.

I do not understand from the provisions of this act that the county auditor is required in any case to collect costs assessed against any dog seized and impounded by the sheriff, whether such dog be sold, redeemed or destroyed.

With reference to unregistered dogs subject to registration prior to the first day of January for the following year, and which have not been seized and impounded, it is sufficient to observe, with respect to your question, that the duty of the owner, keeper or harborer of a dog subject to registration, to procure registration of the same, is continuing, and it is the duty of such person during the year to procure the registration of such dog by payment of the registration fee provided in section 5652 G. C., such registration to be for the year beginning January first prior to the date of such registration. In procuring such registration, such person is only required to pay the registration fee provided in section 5652 G. C. This conclusion requires the question made by you to be answered in the affirmative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BONDS OF MAINTENANCE ENGINEERS IN STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1918.

HON. CLINTON D. COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of March 6th you enclose bonds of Harry J. Kirk and Don O. Stone for approval as to form.

It appears that the above named parties have been appointed maintenance engineers in your department, have given bond in the sum of three thousand dollars with the Fidelity and Deposit Company of Maryland as surety, and that you have approved each of said bonds as to amount and sureties under the provisions of section 1183 G. C., 106 O. L., 624.

I have examined the said bonds and finding the same to be in accordance with law have this day approved the same as to form and herewith return the same to you to be filed in the office of the secretary of state as required by said section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHERE ASSESSOR ELECTED FOR TOWNSHIP AND SUBSEQUENTLY AN INCORPORATED VILLAGE FORMED THEREIN, SAID ASSESSOR MAY NOT ACT FOR VILLAGE, AS VILLAGE IS A NEW DISTRICT, MAY NOT ACT IN TOWNSHIP BECAUSE OF RESIDENCE IN VILLAGE—VACANCY—MAY NOT ELECT VILLAGE ASSESSOR AT SPECIAL ELECTION FOR VILLAGE OFFICERS.

Where an assessor was elected in November, 1917, for a township which at the time did not include a municipality, and subsequently a newly incorporated village was formed in said township, in which village the assessor, so as aforesaid elected, resided;

HELD:

1. That the creation of the newly incorporated village created a new taxing district composed of the territory comprised in the village.

2. That the assessor elected for the township taxing district in November, 1917, cannot act for the village taxing district, since he was not elected as assessor for the village taxing district and cannot act for the township district outside the village because he resides in the village district and possesses the qualifications of an elector of such village.

3. That since no assessors have been elected for the newly created village district and there is no qualified, elected assessor in the township outside the village, there are such vacancies as should be filled under the provisions of section 3353-1 G. C.

4. That it would not be proper to elect an assessor for the newly created village taxing district at the special election to be held for the election of village officers, as such assessor is not a village officer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You ask an opinion upon the following:

> "A newly incorporated village is created out of part of the territory of a township. In November, 1917, an assessor was elected for the township, which at that time did not include an incorporated village, the assessor, however, being a resident of the territory afterward included in the incorporated village.
> What is the status of this elected assessor? Is his office abolished or does he continue in office? If he continues in office, for what territory does he act—the village in which he resides, the township outside of the village or the whole township, including the village?
> If a special election is held for the election of village officers, should an assessor be elected at that time for the newly created village? If an assessor is not elected prior to the beginning of the assessment of the personal property for the year 1918, should the auditor appoint an assessor for the village?
> If the old assessor, being a resident of the newly incorporated village, cannot act as assessor for the territory outside of the incorporated village, should the county auditor appoint an assessor for that territory?"

The provisions of law for the election of assessors, the establishment of assessment districts and prescribing the qualifications, terms, powers and duties of assessors are found in section 3349 G. C.

While the supreme court in the case of State v. O'Brien, 95 O. S. 166, held that part of section 17 of the Parrett-Whittemore law, which became section 3349 G. C., was unconstitutional, the part so held did not affect the part of said section in relation to the election, qualification and term of the assessors, nor the provisions creating the asssessment districts.

Section 3349 G. C., as far as is necessary in the consideration of your question, provides:

> "At the regular election to be held in November, 1915, and biennially thereafter, assessors shall be elected in the manner provided by law for the election of * * * village and township officers as follows: * * *; in villages one assessor shall be elected; * * * One assessor shall, at the time specified in this section, be elected in each assessment district so created; * * *; in townships composed in part of a municipal corporation, one assessor shall be elected in the territory outside such municipal corporation. An assessor shall be a citizen possessing the qualifications of an elector of such * * * village or township. Such assessor shall take and hold his office for the term of two years from and after the first day of January following his election. * * *"

From a consideration of the above section of the General Code, it is apparent that each village constitutes an assessment district, as also does the territory in a township outside a municipal corporation, in the event that a township is composed in part of a municipal corporation.

It further appears that section 3349 G. C. provides the qualifications that must be possessed by the assessor, to wit, that such assessor shall be a citizen possessing the qualifications of an elector of the village or township constituting the assessment district.

In the case submitted by you, the assessor was elected for the entire township, at a time when the township did not have a municipal corporation within its confines. The entire township at that time constituted the assessment district.

Under section 5366-1 G. C. (107 O. L. 30), the time when the property shall be listed for taxation is fixed between the second Monday of April and the first Monday of June, annually.

Under the provisions of section 5367 G. C. (107 O. L. 30), the assessors are required to meet annually with the county auditor on the first Monday of May.

So it appears that the assessor elected in November, 1917, for the township which at that time did not include an incorporated village, had no opportunity to perform any of the duties of his office prior to the time when the newly created village was carved out of the township.

Section 5366 G. C. (107 O. L. 37) provides among other things that persons required to list property for taxation must make the returns to the county auditor on the second Monday in April or within fifteen days thereafter, and also that the lists of persons and property returned for taxation shall be delivered to the assessors of the respective subdivisions at the time of their meeting for instructions as provided in section 5367 G. C.

So it is evident that the assessor heretofore elected at the time mentioned in your inquiry has not been called upon to enter upon the discharge of his duties. It is my opinion that the qualification that the assessor must be an elector of his taxing district is a continuing qualification, and that the assessor for the newly created taxing district, viz., the village district, must be an elector of such taxing district. That is to say, the assessor of the village taxing district should be an elector of the village, and the mere fact that he was also an elector of the township as a whole, as well, would not permit him to be the assessor of that part of the township which was situated outside the municipality.

The assessor for the taxing district composed of the township outside the municipality would have to be an elector voting in that taxing district; that is, voting in that portion of the township which is outside the municipality.

In volume III of opinions of the attorney-general for 1915, p. 2203, is an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, addressed to Hon. D. F. Mills, under date of November 12, 1915, in which he held:

> "An elector of a municipal corporation located within a township is not an elector of said township as contemplated by the following provision of section 3349 G. C., 106 O. L. 250, viz.:
> 'An assessor shall be a citizen possessing the qualifications of an elector of such ward, district, city, village or township' and may not qualify as an assessor of said township."

So the assessor residing in the village not having been elected for the village taxing district, such taxing district is without an assessor and there is a vacancy in that office; and inasmuch as the assessor, so as aforesaid elected, resides in the village, he would not possess the necessary qualification to act as an assessor for that part of the township outside of the village. In consequence whereof, there are vacancies both in the village taxing district and in the taxing district composed of the township outside the village. These vacancies should be filled by appointment of the county auditor under the provisions of section 3353-1 G. C. (106 O. L. 252), which reads as follows:

> "Sec. 3353-1. If there shall be a failure to elect an assessor in any ward, district, city, village or township, or if a person elected assessor fails to give bond and take the oath of office within thirty days after his election, or if after his appointment or election an assessor shall remove from the ward, district, city, village or township for which he was appointed or elected, the office shall be deemed vacant. Should there be at any time a vacancy in such office for any of the causes aforesaid, or from any other cause, the county auditor shall fill such vacancy by appointing any competent and suitable elector of such ward, district, city, village or township, who will accept and perform the duties of such office."

Referring to your further inquiry, to wit, if a special election is held for the election of village officers should an assessor be elected at that time for the newly created village, it is my view that the officers to be elected under section 3536 G. C. are strictly municipal officers and do not include assessors.

In State ex rel. v. Capeller, County Auditor, 3 W. L. B. 853, Avery J. (Hamilton Co. Dist. Ct.), at p. 854 said:

> "Although assessors for wards are elected within the precincts of a city, it by no means follows that they are city officers. * * *
> The power of imposing taxes might be left to the officers of a city but not the power of returning the valuation upon which the levies for the county and state are to be laid. * * * It matters not that the election is by ward or town or part of township and that the voters within that subdivision cast their votes for an officer who, deriving his office only from them, exercises its duties only within the territory over which they are conveyed. (sic.) The duties are appropriate in the township as forming part of the state organization and the officer is in that sense an officer of the township."

Upon the questions submitted, then, it is my opinion:

1. That the creation of the newly incorporated village created a new taxing district composed of the territory comprised in the village.
2. That the assessor elected for the township taxing district in November, 1917, cannot act for the village taxing district, since he was not elected as assessor for the village district and cannot act for the township district outside of the village because he resides in the village district and possesses the qualifications of an elector of such village.
3. That since no assessors have been elected for the newly created village district and there is no qualified, elected assessor in the township outside the village, there are such vacancies as should be filled under the provisions of section 3353-1 G. C.
4. That it would not be proper to elect an assessor for the newly created village taxing district at the special election to be held for the election of village officers, as such assessor is not a village officer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MARRIAGE—JUDGE OF MUNICIPAL COURT OF ALLIANCE HAS NO AUTHORITY TO SOLEMNIZE.

The judge of the Municipal Court of Alliance has no authority to solemnize marriages.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1918.

HON. MILTON C. MOORE, Judge of Municipal Court, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On February 25, 1918, you addressed the following inquiry to this office:

> "Section 10224 of the General Code of Ohio in prescribing the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace grants therein to justices of the peace jurisdiction to solemnize marriages. Under an act of the last legislature found in 107 Ohio Laws, page 660, the Municipal Court of Alliance, Ohio, was established; and section 3 of said act defines the jurisdiction of this court. The legislative act above referred to abolished the offices of justices of the peace in Lexington and Washington townships, Stark county; and I believe your office in a recent ruling held that this feature of the law was valid and constitutional. The question now arises whether or not the judge of the municipal court has the authority under the legislative act as aforesaid, to solemnize marriages."

The above question presents no difficulty, as in Ohio the authority to perform a marriage ceremony is entirely statutory, and inasmuch as no statute is found extending this authority to you, it would necessarily follow that you do not have it. That such is the case is rendered more apparent by other considerations. The municipal court is a statutory court, and its powers, jurisdiction and duties are limited to the permissive language of the statute creating it.

Section 3 of the act you mention begins as follows:

> "Said municipal court herein established shall have the same jurisdiction in criminal matters and prosecutions for misdemeanors, for violations of ordinances as mayors of cities and any justice of the peace, and in addition thereto shall have ordinary civil jurisdiction within the limits of said city of Alliance and townships of Lexington and Washington, in the county of Stark and state of Ohio, in the following cases:"

It is very evident that this subject would have nothing to do with the criminal jurisdiction. The civil jurisdiction is expressly limited to the cases following set out in paragraphs numbered from 1 to 8. This civil jurisdiction in this section, however, applies to certain townships in Stark county, while section 4 extends it in three paragraphs to the whole of Stark county and certain parts of Columbiana and Mahoning counties. Section 5 extends the civil jurisdiction to certain ancillary matters. Succeeding sections carry out details as to jurisdiction, and also as to procedure.

The perusal of the statute shows not only that it is a court of limited and express statutory jurisdiction and power, but that it is peculiarly and exclusively a court. Every paragraph of it has to do with actions and judicial proceedings.

No authority in any way is given it in reference to purely administrative matters, such a variety of which are possessed by the probate court and probate judge.

Marriage is not a judicial proceeding. A justice of the peace is only partially a judicial officer. He is a conservator of the peace, and he does and performs many acts in reference to public and private matters. In performing a marriage ceremony he is in no respect acting judicially. It does not take a judge to solemnize a marriage; as a matter of fact, it is usually done by preachers.

All these considerations render it certain that the judge of the municipal court has no power in reference to this subject.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS NOT ENTITLED TO CHARGE THREE DOLLARS PER DAY AS PART OF THE COSTS OF A PROCEEDING FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF SEWAGE DISPOSAL PLANT.

In a proceeding for the construction of sewage disposal plant under the provisions of the act found in 107 O. L., page 440, the county commissioners are not entitled to charge $3.00 per day as part of the costs of said proceeding.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1918.

HON. THOMAS F. HUDSON, Prosecuting Attorney, Springfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 7, 1918, you made the following request for an opinion from this office:

> "A sewage disposal plant is being constructed outside of the city, as provided by the Laws of Ohio, Vol. 107, page 440.
> Are the county commissioners entitled to compensation of $3.00 per day, as provided in the general ditch laws, when holding meetings in regard to the sewage disposal plant?"

Referring to the statutes cited by you, I find section 7 (Sec. 6602-7 G. C.) to be as follows:

> "The cost of any improvement herein provided for and the cost of the maintenance and operation thereof, shall include, in addition to the cost of construction, the cost of engineering, necessary publications, inspection, interest on certificates of indebtedness or on bonds, and all other items of cost incident to such improvement. The county may pay any part of the cost of the improvement in this act provided for and of the maintenance and operation thereof if the board of county commissioners may deem such payment just."

This is the only section referring to the subject of costs, and the per diem of the county commissioners is not provided for unless it be included in the phrase "and all other items of cost incident to such improvement."

In determining whether this per diem is costs incident to the improvement, it is necessary to refer to the General Code to determine whether this statute fits into the drainage statutes in such manner as to make it part of the county ditch law, so that costs there provided for as incident to such improvement would have the same application to this improvement. The act referred to by you is given sectional numbers 6602-1 to 6602-18, and is really an amendment of or substitute for similar statutes existing prior to its passage, so that the sectional numbers by the terms of the enactment itself are correct. Looking to the General Code, therefore, to get the connection, we find that this act takes place of chapter headed "SEWER DISTRICTS," and is designated as chapter 4a of title 3, which title is headed "DRAINAGE" of part second of the General Code.

There is nothing in this particular chapter of the General Code allowing per diem to the county commissioners; neither is there in chapter 4 which is entitled "COUNTY SEWERS." Referring back to the single county ditch law, the provision is found, which is section 6523, and is as follows:

> "For services actually rendered under the provisions of this chapter, the county commissioners, each, shall receive three dollars per day. All other officers and persons shall receive compensation for such services as provided in this subdivision of this chapter."

This provision by its express terms is confined to services performed under chapter 1. It is, however, by general reference carried into the provision for joint county ditches and some other purely ditch proceedings. But there is nothing in either chapter 4 or chapter 4a upon the subject of county sewers or sewer districts carrying the provision for costs into those chapters. The legislature recognized this situation in passing said section 7 of the act in question. It was necessary to make provision for costs, as there was no general provision carrying the costs provided in the county ditch law into this proceeding. They saw fit to expressly provide for the engineer, and made other express provisions. It is not necessary to determine whether the phrase quoted above as to other incidental items of cost adds anything to the section, or includes any of the costs not specifically provided for or not. It is enough to say that it cannot be construed to include per diem for the commissioners, because the cost is not incident to the improvement unless some statute makes it so.

The county commissioners receive a salary, and if they did not, they could not draw this fee because they are only entitled to compensation expressly given by statute, and this is not given. It is not incident to the cost of the improvement any more than any other possible expense connected with it might be; such for instance, as some part of the salary of the prosecuting attorney for services in determining this question, or any other outlay that might possibly be directly or indirectly connected with the improvement. It cannot be incidental to the cost of the improvement unless it have some existence, as a charge in some cases. It cannot have such existence unless it gets it from the statute. It is not created by the statute, and it is therefore demonstrated that it cannot be charged and collected.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPOSITORY INTEREST ON MONEYS PAID INTO THE STATE TREASURY SINCE JULY 1, 1917, ON ACCOUNT OF SALES OF SCHOOL AND MINISTERIAL LANDS AND LEFT UNINVESTED, TO WHAT FUNDS SAME SHOULD BE CREDITED—RATE OF INTEREST—AUTHORITY OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF THE SINKING FUND OVER SUCH MONEYS.

Depository interest on moneys paid into the state treasury since July 1, 1917, on account of sales of school and ministerial lands, and left therein uninvested by the commissioners of the sinking fund but, together with other moneys, deposited in the state depositories, should be credited to the interest accounts in the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund, respectively.

Where no separate account has been kept of specific moneys placed in depositories the average rate obtained by the state on inactive deposits should be so credited.

It is erroneous to credit depository interest earned by the deposit of such funds to the general revenue fund.

The commissioners of the sinking fund have no authority respecting the control and deposit of moneys in the hands of the treasurer of state and belonging to the ministerial trust and common school funds. They may withdraw such funds for investment in specified securities but may not control the powers and duties of the treasurer of state with respect to the deposit of general balances.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 11, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of January 22d supplementing and explaining a previous inquiry from you under date of January 3d and requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Commencing on July 1, 1917, the auditor of state transmitted to this department various sums of money pursuant to the act of March 20, 1917, 107 O. L. 357. This money was placed in what is known as the common school fund and ministerial trust fund respectively. These funds were from time to time invested by us under the depository act along with moneys belonging to the general and other funds of the state, but no separate depository account was kept of these trust fund moneys so placed at depository interest.
> It appears that at its meeting on July 1, 1917, the commissioners of the sinking fund adopted a resolution as follows:
> 'that in view of the unsettled conditions now existing it would make no attempt at present to invest the trust funds now in the hands of the treasurer of state, but directed the treasurer of state to credit to the account of the school and ministerial trust the sum of the average rate of inactive depository interest received by the treasurer of state upon such funds until the further order of this board.'
> No notice was given to this department of the aforesaid action of the commissioners of the sinking fund, hence the depository interest earned upon these moneys was credited by this department as it credited depository interest upon the general and other funds of the state.

In December, 1917, the auditor of state formally notified us of the action of the commissioners of the sinking fund on July 1st. We desire to be advised:

1. Can the Treasurer of State credit to these trust funds the amount of depository interest earned by them under the depository law?

2. Inasmuch as the interest earned upon these funds has already been placed to the credit of the general fund of the state, will it be permissible, in distributing the depository interest payment made to this department on February the 1st, to credit to the aforesaid trust funds the whole sum of depository interest earned since July 1, 1917?

3. If such a distribution of the February 1st depository interest can be made, then what authority shall the treasurer of state require to make the same; i. e., will a certified copy of the journal of the commissioners of the sinking fund of July 1, 1917, be sufficient?"

The pertinent sections of the General Code as amended and enacted in the act referred to (107 O. L. 357) are as follows:

Section 42, designated as section 3203-19 General Code:

"* * * such proceeds (of sales) shall, if the lands are for the support of schools, be placed in the 'common school fund' as provided by law, and if the lands are for the purpose of religion, shall be placed in the 'ministerial fund' as provided by law."

"Sec. 3239. The money paid into the state treasury on account of sales of lands granted by congress for the purposes of religion, known as section twenty-nine, and on account of the sale of minerals thereon, shall constitute the 'ministerial trust fund' of the state, of which the auditor of state shall be the superintendent, and the income therefrom shall be used exclusively for religious purposes, in the manner designated by law."

"Sec. 7579. The money which has been and may be paid into the state treasury on account of sales of land granted by congress for the support of public schools in any original surveyed township or other district of country, and on account of the sales of minerals thereon, shall constitute the 'common school fund' of which the auditor of state shall be superintendent, and the income of which must be applied exclusively to the support of public schools in the manner designated by law."

"Sec. 7580. The auditor of state shall keep an account of the capital sum now belonging to the 'common school fund,' and the 'ministerial trust fund.' Interest thereon shall be computed by him annually for the calendar year. The auditor of state shall keep an account with and for each township or districts of country in the state, showing the capital sum in such common school fund and ministerial trust fund belonging to each such township or district of country, the interest accruing on the same and the disbursement of such interest."

"Sec. 7580-1. The auditor of state shall give notice in writing at least once in every two months to the commissioners of the sinking fund of the amount of the capital sum belonging to the common school fund and ministerial trust fund that may have been paid into the state treasury subsequent to his last preceding notice arising from the sale of lands or minerals thereon granted by congress for the use of schools or the purposes of religion, with the sum of such capital so paid belonging to each township or other district of country in the state."

"Sec. 7580-2. It shall be the duty of the commissioners of the sinking fund from time to time to draw an order for the balance of such capital sum in the common school fund and ministerial trust fund that may have been reported by the auditor of state, such order shall be presented to the auditor of state who shall issue his warrant upon the treasurer of state for the sum thereof."

"Sec. 7580-3. The auditor of state shall open proper accounts in which he shall charge the commissioners of the sinking fund with all such orders and warrants, and credit said commissioners, with all sums of interest earned and disbursed by them for and on account of said capital sums so withdrawn by said commissioners from the state treasury."

"Sec. 7580-4. It shall be the duty of the commissioners of the sinking fund from time to time to invest the moneys so withdrawn by them from the state treasury, either in bonds or other interest bearing obligations of the United States, or those for which the faith of the United States is pledged, including bonds of the District of Columbia, or in bonds or other interest bearing obligations of this or any other state of the United States, or the legally issued bonds or interest bearing obligations of any county, city, village, township, school district or other political subdivision or district of this state."

"Sec. 7580-5. The commissioners of the sinking fund shall keep an account of all such investments and interest accrued or received on account thereof, which account shall show the amount of each such investment belonging to each township or other district of country, and the interest earned or paid thereon."

"Sec. 7580-6. At least once in every two months the commissioners of the sinking fund shall report to the auditor of state the amount of such investments made subsequent to the last preceding report made pursuant to this section, showing the sum thereof belonging to each township or other district of country, together with the interest accrued and interest received by them on account of each such township or other district of country."

"Sec. 7580-7. The interest so accrued and received on account of the portion of the whole investment that belongs to each township or district of country together with interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum upon the sum of the debt owing by the state to the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund, shall, if the capital sum was derived from the sale of school lands or minerals thereon, be appropriated and used for the support of schools as provided by the act of congress of February 1, 1826, or, if the capital sum was derived from the sale of ministerial lands or minerals thereon, be appropriated and used for the purpose of religion, in each township and district of country entitled thereto, as provided by the act of congress of February 20, 1833."

"Sec. 7580-8. Before making the February settlement with county auditor the state auditor shall draw his order upon the commissioners of the sinking fund for the sum of the interest so accrued and received at the time of so drawing such order, and the commissioners of the sinking fund shall thereupon, upon the draft of the auditor of state, pay into the state treasury to the credit of the interest account of the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund the sum of such order, and the auditor of state shall thereupon credit the account of said commissioners with the sum so paid to the treasurer of state."

For purposes of a comparison which I shall hereinafter make I beg leave to include also in the catalogue of sections to be considered the corresponding provisions of the statutes as they existed prior to the legislation of 1917.

"Sec. 3239. The money paid into the state treasury on account of sales of lands granted by congress for religious purposes, known as section twenty-nine, shall constitute the 'ministerial fund,' of which the auditor of state shall be the superintendent, and the income therefrom shall be used excluively for religious purposes."

"Sec. 3240. The ministerial fund shall constitute an irreducible debt of the state, on which the state shall pay interest annually, to be computed for the calendar year, and the first computation on any payment of principal, hereafter made, shall be from the time of payment to and including the thirty-first day of December next succeeding. The auditor of state shall keep an account of the fund and of the interest which accrues thereon, in a book or books to be provided for that purpose, with each original surveyed township or other district to which any part of the fund belongs, crediting each with its share of the fund, and showing the amount of interest thereon which accrues and the amount which is disbursed annually to each."

(Section 3240 was repealed by the act of 1917.)

"Sec. 7579. The money which has been and may be paid into the state treasury on account of sales of lands granted by congress for the support of public schools in any original surveyed township, or other district of country, shall constitute the 'common school fund,' of which the auditor of state shall be superintendent, and the income of which must be applied exclusively to the support of common schools, in the manner designated in this chapter."

"Sec. 7580. The common school fund shall constitute an irreducible debt of the state, on which it shall pay interest annually, at the rate of six per cent. per annum, to be computed for the calendar year, the first computation on any payment of principal hereafter made to be from the time of payment to and including the thirty-first day of December next succeeding. The auditor of state shall keep an account of the fund, and of the interest which accrues thereon, in a book or books to be provided for the purpose, with each original surveyed township and other district of country to which any part of the fund belongs, crediting each with its share of the fund, and showing the amount of interest thereon which accrues and the amount which is disbursed annually to each."

I should also quote section 7575 of the General Code, which is still in force, as amended 105 O. L., 5:

"Sec. 7575. For the purpose of affording the advantages of a free education to all the youth of the state, there shall be levied * * * and for the payment of interest on the irreducible or trust fund debt for school purposes, twenty-five ten thousandths of one mill, such fund to be styled 'the sinking fund.'"

Looking first at what may be called the old sections, the situation of the two "trust funds" about which you inquire prior to the going into effect of the act of 1917 was as follows:

The proceeds of sales of ministerial and school lands were required to be paid into the state treasury and there were given the appellation of "funds;" but by the succeeding sections it is clear that they did not in any real sense constitute funds in the state treasury; for it was provided that the amounts of such payments should constitute irreducible debts of the state upon which the state should pay interest at the rate of six per cent., and a general tax levy was made for the purpose of paying this interest. In effect, therefore, the state borrowed, and it is presumed expended, the moneys paid in from the sales of lands and constituting the "trust funds" for the two specified purposes and paid interest on what it had borrowed at the rate of six per cent.

Though both of the sections constituting the moneys paid in the past an irreducible debt of the state and providing for the payment of interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. were repealed by the act of 1917, yet these borrowed sums still represent an irreducible debt of the state and are no part of any fund in the state treasury as such. This is made apparent by the provisions of section 7580-7, which now contains the provision for the payment of "interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum upon the sum of the debt owing by the state to the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund"—which, it may be observed, is a very felicitous expression in that it describes with perfect accuracy the exact situation with respect to what sections 3239 and 7579 in their former condition, and in point of fact in their present condition, in so far as they mention past payments—refer to as the "ministerial trust fund" and the "common school fund," respectively. In other words, payments made into these funds prior to the going into effect of the legislation of 1917 were immediately and automatically borrowed under existing legislation and applied to the current needs of the state government. There is nothing in the act of 1917, nor in other acts passed by the same legislature, which has the effect of repaying the sums so borrowed, and they still constitute debts of the state and, as the phrase above quoted has it, "moneys owing by the state to the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund;" or, with even more perfect accuracy, moneys owing by the state in its general governmental capacity to its own common school fund and ministerial fund or to itself as trustees.

The general effect of the legislation of 1917 upon future revenues arising from these two sources—sales of ministerial lands and of school lands, respectively—is the exact opposite of that just outlined. Sections 3239 and 7579, though re-enacted without substantial change in phraseology, now have something definite upon which to operate so far as subsequent payments are concerned; that is to say, there is now a real ministerial trust fund and a real common school fund in the state treasury. This results simply from the fact that the state no longer borrows for general revenue purposes the capital sums so paid into its treasury. Such capital is paid into the treasury to the credit of these two funds and is not at once transferred again by construction as it formerly was. Hence it remains in the treasury, subject to proper withdrawal of course, but does not belong in the general revenue fund. Sections 7580-1 to 7580-6, inclusive, above quoted, provide for the investment of these sums. These sections authorize and require the commissioners of the sinking fund periodically to invest the capital sums in the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund in certain specified securities. This is all that the commissioners of the sinking fund have to do. They are not authorized to make any other investments, nor are they authorized to direct the treasurer of state to treat moneys in his hands belonging to the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund, respectively, in any particular way save to pay them out on their warrant for the purpose of investment. I might therefore answer your third question, and in part all of your questions, by saying that the order of the commissioners of the sinking fund is entirely nugatory and in nowise binding upon you as treasurer of state, for the reason that leaving these funds on deposit for the purpose of securing depository interest on them is not such an "investment" of the funds as the commissioners of the sinking fund are authorized to make.

But this short statement does not answer your questions, nor if it did would it present an accurate view of the legal situation, for though the commissioners of the sinking fund had no authority to order you to do anything with respect to the crediting of depository interest, yet, in my opinion, the order which the commissioners attempted to make was in effect a perfectly accurate statement of your official duty in the premises. In other words, depository interest belongs, not to the general revenue fund, as you seem to suppose, but to the several funds in the state treasury pro rata. This proposition is true, I think, as a matter of general law. The state depository law, sections 321 to 330-11, inclusive, makes no disposition of depository interest. If such interest were to be considered as "moneys paid into the state treasury" for the purpose of section 270 of the General Code, then it might be argued that it should be credited by the auditor of state to the general revenue fund as moneys "the disposition of which is not otherwise provided for by law." I think, however, that the disposition of depository interest is otherwise provided for by law in the sense that the general principle of law is that all increments or earnings of trust funds belong to the funds themselves.

I do not wish, however, to express a comprehensive opinion upon this point as its effect would be very far-reaching. It is not necessary to do so in this particular case because of the explicit provisions of sections 3239 and 7579 of the General Code above quoted, both of which provide that the income from the funds to which they respectively relate shall be used exclusively for the purpose to which the capital of the fund is devoted; so that whatever may be the case wth respect to funds like the agricultural fund, for example, or the state common school fund, which are, or at least should be, separately set up and maintained as funds by the auditor and treasurer of state, and whether these funds are entitled to share pro rata in depository interest obtained from the deposit of the commingled funds of the state in banks, it is at least clear that this is true with respect to the ministerial trust fund and the common school fund and, to be accurate, especially with regard to the moneys that really are in those funds, viz: those which have accrued to them since July 1, 1917.

I am therefore of opinion that depository interest on account of the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund belongs to those funds, respectively. The same should be credited to them on the books of your office and those of the auditor of state.

I shall not consider in this opinion the question as to just how these funds should be deposited and as to whether the depository law authorizes any separation of moneys and depository accounts according to funds. It is apparent that heretofore no such separation has been made and all moneys in the treasury have been treated for the purpose of deposit as if they were in one fund. Under these circumstances it is my opinion that it is the duty of the treasurer of state and the auditor of state to credit to the account of the common school and ministerial trust funds a pro rata share of the interest on all inactive deposits. That is to say, these moneys have been on deposit and will not be disturbed at least until the February settlement. Therefore, they would be entitled to the rate of interest obtained by the state on its inactive deposits. I presume that to credit these with the average rate obtained by competitive bidding on such deposits as suggested by the attempted "order" of the commissioners of the sinking fund would produce results sufficiently accurate for all purposes.

In view of the foregoing discussion I answer your several specific questions as follows:

(1) The treasurer of state not only may but must credit to the ministerial trust fund and the common school fund, respectively, the amount of depository interest earned by each of them under the depository law so long as there are in the treasury and on deposit moneys belonging to these funds.

(2) It was erroneous to place the interest earned upon the funds referred to to the credit of the general revenue fund of the state. Such error should now be corrected and proper credits given.

(3) The treasurer of state needs no other authority than the statutes and the general principles of law to which I have referred to make such disposition of the interest earned by the funds referred to as I have described; he need pay no attention to the order of the commissioners of the sinking fund, as it is in and of itself of no effect whatsoever.

I should state that the interest inquired about should be credited to the interest account in each of the funds respectively. The effect of the sections which have been discussed, and especially section 7580-8 General Code as above quoted, is to set up within the common school fund and the ministerial trust fund perpetual or standing accounts which may be designated as the "capital account" and the "interest account." These accounts are really subdivisions of funds and are not to be confused with appropriation accounts. Therefore they belong on the books of the treasurer of state as well as on those of the auditor of state. As stated, the depository interest should be credited to the interest account.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MUST HIRE AND FIX SALARY OF POUNDKEEPER.

The employment of a poundkeeper for dogs seized and impounded under provisions of act found in 107 O. L., pages 534 et seq., is a duty devolving upon the county commissioners and not upon the sheriff.

The compensation of such poundkeeper is to be fixed by the county commissioners and paid out of the general county fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

HON. D. FINLEY MILLS, Prosecuting Attorney, Sidney, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your favor under date of February 16, 1918, in which you ask my opinion as follows:

> "I would be very much pleased to have your opinion as to the proper construction to be placed upon sections 5652-7 to 5652-12 inclusive of the General Code, as amended in Vol. 107, page 535-537 of Ohio Laws, relative to the providing for and compensation to be paid to the poundkeeper. Is it the duty of the sheriff or his deputies to act as poundkeeper and feed and care for the dogs that have been impounded? Or are the commissioners authorized to employ some other person as a poundkeeper and fix a certain compensation to be paid him for performing his duties as provided therein? If the commissioners are authorized to employ a poundkeeper and fix his compensation, from what fund shall his compensation or salary be paid?
> Also in the event that the county commissioners should provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs, as provided therein, who fixes their compensation, and from what fund is it to be paid?"

Section 5652-7 General Code, the same being a part of the act referred to in your communication, provides generally for the seizure and impounding by the sheriff of unregistered dogs subject to registration under the provisions of said act.

Section 5652-9 General Code provides generally for the disposition of dogs so seized and impounded.

Section 5652-8 General Code provides as follows:

> "County commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act, shall provide nets and other suitable devices for taking dogs in a humane manner, and, except as hereinafter provided, shall also provide a suitable place for impounding dogs, and make proper provision for feeding and caring for the same, and shall also provide humane devices and methods for destroying dogs. Provided, however, that in any county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, and having one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, and maintaining an animal shelter suitable for a dog pound and devices for humanely destroying dogs, county commissioners shall not be required to furnish a dog pound, but the sheriff shall deliver all dogs seized by him to such society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and children at its animal shelter, there to be dealt with in accordance with law, and the county commissioners shall provide for the payment of reasonable compensation to such society for its services so performed out of the county general fund."

Without any extended discussion of the provisions of this section it will be noted that, except in counties where there is an incorporated humane society having suitable facilities for a dog pound, it is the duty of the county commissioners to provide a suitable place for impounding dogs seized under the provisions of the act and to make proper provision for feeding and caring for the same.

It seems obvious that dogs seized and impounded cannot be fed or cared for unless some person is designated or employed to perform this duty, and that the county commissioners are authorized and required to appoint such person to act as poundkeeper and to feed and care for such dogs. Though it is the duty of the sheriff, by himself or deputy, to place dogs that have been seized in such pound, I do not see that it is any part of his duty to provide for feeding and caring for such dogs nor to provide a poundkeeper for such purpose. This conclusion reached by me answers your first question.

As to your second question I am of the opinion that the compensation of the person employed as poundkeeper for the purpose of feeding and caring for dogs seized and impounded is to be paid by the county commissioners out of the general county fund.

Your last question is answered by opinions Nos. 861 and 973 addressed, respectively, to Hon. Perry Smith, prosecuting attorney, Zanesville, Ohio, and Hon. John V. Campbell, prosecuting attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio, under dates of December 15, 1917, and January 29, 1918, copies of which are enclosed herewith.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HUMANE SOCIETY FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS MUST ALSO BE FORMED FOR PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO CHILDREN—CERTIFICATE OF BOARD OF STATE CHARITIES—RESULT OF TAKING TEMPORARY POSSESSION OF MISTREATED CHILD—CRIMINAL JURISDICTION OF JUVENILE COURT—SECTION 10083 MODIFIED BY JUVENILE COURT LAW.

There is no such thing as a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals which is not also a society for the prevention of cruelty to children, as all such societies are required to be formed for both of said objects. Such societies do not require the certificate of the board of state charities in order to render their incorporation lawful.

The act of taking temporary possession of a mistreated child under section 10081 G. C. does not make such society subject to annual certification by the board of state charities.

The criminal jurisdiction of the juvenile court is partly exclusive and partly concurrent with that of other criminal courts. In all cases in which the judgment acts directly upon the infant himself it is exclusive, and in all cases in which it is necessary to establish the delinquency of a child as a substantive part of the offense such jurisdiction is also exclusive. In cases of offenses against infants under statutes in existence prior to the creation of the juvenile court the jurisdiction is concurrent, and as to statutes creating offenses since the establishment of the juvenile court the jurisdiction is either exclusive or concurrent, depending upon the considerations in the first two paragraphs above set forth and also the terms of the act itself under consideration.

The provision of the juvenile court law so modifies section 10083 G. C. that it is no longer necessary to comply with that provision thereof requiring a child to be placed under the care of a humane society or its agent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On January 23, 1918, you addressed to this department the following request for an opinion:

"In attempting to apply the provisions of section 1352-1, we are confronted with a number of conditions, obtaining in so-called humane societies of the state, whose activities may be placed in three groups:

I. Societies which seem to maintain work only relating to protection of animals and prosecutions for abuses thereof.

II. Societies which, in addition to the animal protection, also prosecute parents for non-support and other cases of neglect of children, but do not attempt to assume any legal responsibility for the children after prosecutions, or to perform any other form of personal guardianship over them.

III. Societies which, in addition to the above activities, do, by court action, acquire guardianship of children and exercise full legal authority and care for and over them.

Section 10067 authorizes societies to be organized, some of which are styled as humane societies and some as societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals.

Section 10063 states that the objects of such societies, among other things, shall be for the prevention of cruelty especially to children and animals.

Section 10070 provides for the appointment of agents to prosecute persons guilty of acts of cruelty to persons and animals.

Section 10081 provides that an officer or agent of such a society may remove a child from parents or persons having charge thereof, by taking possession summarily.

Section 10082 provides for a method of notice to be served on parents and concludes with this sentence, 'When said period of two weeks from the time of publication shall have elapsed, said court shall have full jurisdiction, to deal with the child as provided by this chapter.'

Section 10083 states that the probate court shall, under certain conditions, make an order conferring on the general agent the powers of guardian over a child.

Section 5653 provides that, under certain conditions, balances in the sheep fund may be paid to the society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals.

Section 13440 provides a schedule of fees to be paid from county funds to an attorney of a humane society or its agent.

Section 1683-1 provides that juvenile court judges shall have jurisdiction of all misdemeanors against minors.

Having the above sections in mind, we submit to your consideration the following questions:

(1) Does the fact that such societies have a legal authority to do many things for the protection of children require those in group one to be certified by the board of state charities?

(2) Are societies coming under the scope of group two subject to annual certification?

(3) Does the refusal of certification of a humane society, or similar organization, have any effect upon the legal right of such society to continue as a prosecuting agency, either of animals or children, or both, with or without the public financial assistance provided in sections 10072, 10076, 5653 and 13440?

(4) Does the act of taking possession of a mistreated child, as provided in section 10081, make a society which the agent represents subject to annual certification?

(5) Does the general juvenile court law amend by implication the requirements in the humane society law about bringing cases before the probate judge; that is, should such cases be brought before the juvenile court instead?

(6) Does the juvenile court law remove the compulsory provision in section 10083 concerning the placing of the child under the care of a humane society or its agent?

(7) Does section 1683-1 warrant an interpretation to the effect that all cases of non-support, including abuses and other offenses against the welfare of children, as defined in sections 1645, 1646, 1654, 1655, 12970 and probably others, must be brought before the juvenile court?"

The questions asked by you were partially answered in a former opinion rendered to your board under date of December 15, 1917. The answer at that time was made against my own opinion as to its correctness because I deferred to the decision of the circuit court of Cuyahoga county, which had theretofore determined that societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals under the statute must secure the approval of your department before being entitled to file articles of incorporation.

I have delayed answering your present inquiry because shortly before receiving it I was informed that the same question was again raised in an action brought in the court of appeals of Cuyahoga county, being State ex rel. Cleveland Animal Protective League v. County Commissioners and County Auditor of Cuyahoga County. That cause has now been determined and I have a transcript of the record before me, as well as the briefs of counsel. It is held that these societies do not require your approval.

The requirement of section 1352-2 General Code is as follows:

"No association whose object may embrace the care of dependent, neglected or delinquent children or the placing of such children in private homes shall hereafter be incorporated unless the proposed articles of incorporation shall have been submitted first to the board of state charities. The secretary of state shall not issue a certificate of incorporation unless there shall first be filed in his office the certificate of the board of state charities that it has examined the articles of incorporation, and that in its judgment the incorporators are reputable and respectable persons," etc.

It is to be noted that this section applies to and includes societies the object of which is the care of dependent, neglected or delinquent children or the placing of such children in private homes.

Societies for the prevention of cruelty to animals organized under sections 10066 and 10067 General Code are required to have as their object the inculcation of humane principles and the enforcement of laws for the prevention of cruelty, especially to children and animals; so that no matter under whch section the society is organized its objects are the same. There is no such thing as a society for the prevention of cruelty to animals that is not also a society for the prevention of cruelty to children. What is held by the court, however, is that this casual care that is taken on behalf of children by prosecuting those guilty of acts of cruelty to them does not embrace the "care of dependent, neglected or delinquent children" in the sense in which the term is used in section 1352-2 G. C.; that this latter section is intended to apply to those who in some sense have the continued care or disposition and control of children. The briefs filed in this case show that the court had before them the subjects provided for in sections 10081 and 10082 G. C.

Section 10081 provides that in a certain contingency the officer of the society for the prevention of cruelty to animals may take possession of a child summarily.

Section 10082 provides what he shall then do, which in substance is to place the child at the disposition of the probate court, who shall fix a time and place of hearing, which must be at least two weeks after publication is made.

Section 10083 provides that the probate judge may at the hearing take possession and control of the child from the parent, and make an order conferring upon the general agent of the society the powers of a guardian as to the child. Here indeed at the last is permanent care of a neglected child. It is not, however, in the society but in the general agent of the society, who must receive his appointment from the probate court, which it is presumed in all cases is a sufficient certification and finding of his fitness. Upon this theory evidently the court of appeals has found that these societies do not require the certificate of character from your department, and this of necessity answers your first, second, third and fourth inquiries.

Answering your fifth inquiry as to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court: this jurisdiction is conferred by section 1642, and is therein defined to be > "over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors, under the age of eighteen years, not inmates of a state institution, or any institution incorporated under the laws of the state for the care and correction of delinquent, neglected and dependent children, and their parents, guardians, or any person, persons, corporation or agent of a corporation, responsible for, or guilty of causing, encouraging, aiding, abetting or contributing toward the delinquency, neglect or dependency of such minor, and such courts shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any charge or prosecution against any person, persons, corporations, or their agents, for the commission of any misdemeanor involving the care, protection, education or comfort of any such minor under the age of eighteen years."

It will be seen that the jurisdiction here given is not by its express terms made exclusive.

Section 1659, however, enacts as follows:

> "When a minor under the age of eighteen years is arrested, such child, instead of being taken before a justice of the peace or police judge, shall be taken directly before such juvenile judge; or, if the child is taken before a justice of the peace or a judge of the police court, it shall be the duty of such justice of the peace or such judge of the police court, to transfer the case to the judge exercising the jurisdiction herein provided."

Sections 1644 to 1648 G. C. make provision as to who are such delinquent, neglected and dependent children, and provide the proceedings in reference thereto, which in all cases are before the juvenile court. The combined effect of these different sections evidently does by implication amend the sections to which you refer and require these proceedings to be before the juvenile court rather than the probate judge, as it would necessarily follow that in any case such child in order to be taken under section 10081 by such officer would come under the description of "delinquent, neglected or dependent children."

As to your sixth question, if the child in question be delinquent, dependent or neglected, it is required by section 1670 that it be placed in the "detention home," and by the operation of the statutes above quoted generally the child becomes a ward of the juvenile court. It therefore does affect section 10083 at least to the extent that it is not mandatory that such child be placed under the guardianship of the agent of the society.

As to your seventh question, the jurisdiction given the juvenile court under section 1683-1 is "of all misdemeanors against minors, and of offenses prescribed in sections 928, 6344, 6345, 6373, 12664, 12666, 12787, 13031, 13035 and 13038."

The language of this section is in form permissive and upon examination it appears that it is not intended to give exclusive jurisdiction to the juvenile court, but only concurrent jurisdiction with other courts in which the offenses referred to were already cognizable. The said offenses may therefore be prosecuted by indictment and otherwise in other courts the same as before the enactment of this section, except where by the express terms of the different sections or by necessary implication the jurisdiction of the juvenile court is exclusive. This exclusive jurisdiction undoubtedly exists in all cases where the judgment of the court acts directly on the infant himself, as for instance in section 1564 it is provided as follows:

"If in his judgment it is for the best interest of a delinquent minor under the age of seventeen years, the judge may impose a fine upon such delinquent not exceeding ten dollars, and he may order such person to stand committed until fine and costs are paid."

The judge here referred to is undoubtedly none but the juvenile judge. The section is in the chapter headed "juvenile court" and the context undoubtedly indicates that it is the judge of that court who is meant.

The same may be said as to all offenses against a delinquent child. There is no court but the juvenile court that has power to declare such delinquency, and it follows that when in a prosecution, for an offense against an infant, it is necessary to establish such delinquency as a substantive part of the offense against a delinquent, only a juvenile court can have cognizance of the case.

Section 1655 G. C. provides as follows:

"Whoever is charged by law with the care, support, maintenance or education of a minor under the age of eighteen years, and is able to support or contribute toward the support or education of such minor, fails, neglects, or refuses so to do, or who abandons such minor, or who unlawfully beats, injures, or otherwise ill treats such minor, or causes or allows him or her to engage in common begging, upon complaint filed in the juvenile court, as provided in this chapter, shall be fined not less than ten dollars, nor more than five hundred dollars, or imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than one year, or both. Such neglect, non-support, or abandonment shall be deemed to have been committed in the county in which such minor may be at the time of such neglect, non-support, or abandonment. Each day of such failure, neglect, or refusal shall constitute a separate offense, and the judge may order that such person stand committed until such fines and costs are paid."

The reference to "the judge" in the latter part of the section seems to indicate or rather assume that the juvenile judge will always be the one before whom such offender is tried. However, section 12970 G. C. describes almost the identical offense, and there is no doubt but what it may be the subject of indictment and trial in the ordinary criminal courts, because its enactment precedes the delinquent child and juvenile court laws and there is nothing to take away the established jurisdiction of the courts existing at the time of their passage.

Offenses against this last section may also be prosecuted in the juvenile court under section 1683-1 G. C. as being a "misdemeanor against minors."

With these suggestions it can be determined in each case what courts may entertain such jurisdiction and the various statutes will not here be discussed or enumerated.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN PROCEEDS OF AN INSURANCE POLICY ON A CHURCH ARE INVESTED AND INTEREST USED FOR SUPPORT OF CHURCH, SAME ARE SUBJECT TO TAXATION.

The proceeds of an insurance policy on a church building destroyed by fire, when invested and the interest is used for the support of the church, are subject to taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

HON. FRANK CARPENTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Norwalk, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On date of February 19, 1918, you requested my opinion as follows:

"Some time ago a church building owned by the Congregational church Greenwich, Ohio, was burned. At the time that this building was destroyed by fire the trustees had caused the same to be insured for the sum of twenty-five hundred ($2500) dollars. After the fire this sum of twenty-five hundred ($2500) dollars was collected by the trustees of this church and they now hold the same as property of the church, which is loaned out in the regular way; the interest arising from the use of this money is applied by the church to the usual church purposes.

The officers in charge of this church make the claim that this fund it not under the laws of Ohio subject to taxation.

I would like to have your opinion in this matter at an early date as they are very anxious to know whether or not this fund is property subject to taxation under the laws of Ohio, or whether it is exempted by the statutes of this state."

The question which you submit is one of statutory construction, as the exemptions authorized in the constitution, article 12, section 2, are not self executing. The pertinent statutes are as follows:

"Sec. 5349. * * houses used exclusively for public worship, the books and furniture therein and the ground attached to such buildings necessary for the proper occupancy, use and enjoyment thereof and not leased or otherwise used with a view to profit, * * shall be exempt from taxation. * *"

"Sec. 5353. * * property belonging to institutions of public charity only, shall be exempt from taxation."

The following propositions have been established by the supreme court of this state under the above sections. A church is not an institution of "purely public charity." Watterson v. Halliday, 77 O. S., 150; Gerke v. Purcell, 25 O. S., 229. It is the use of the property itself which renders it exempt or non-exempt from taxation and not the use of the income which is derived from it. Rose Institute v. Myers, 92 O. S. 252. The case last cited related to real estate.

In Rose Institute v. Myers, 92 O. S. 238, it was held that prior to the constitutional amendments of 1913 at least, an endowment fund invested and used for the support of an institution of purely public charity was exempt from taxation, thus affirming and applying to amended section 5353 the rule laid down in Little v. Seminary, 72 O. S. 417.

The case last cited, however, has no bearing upon the question to be considered in this opinion because of the controlling fact that a church is not an institution of purely public charity; in short, the only extent to which a church, as such, is entitled to exemption under the decision of Watterson v. Halliday, 77 O. S. 150, is that of its buildings used exclusively for public worship and the land attached thereto. This does not prevent a church from being the owner of a separate institution such as a parochial school, which might be one of purely public charity. Gerke v. Purcell, supra; Little v. Seminary, 72 O. S. 417.

These considerations bring the question down to whether or not insurance moneys paid on account of the destruction of a church building are to be regarded for the purpose of exemption from taxation in the same light as the building itself.

Bearing in mind the leading principle that it is the use to which property is put and not its ownership that determines its exemption, together with the correlative proposition as phrased by Nichols, C. J., in Rose Institute v. Myers, supra, to the effect that "the exemption is not a release in personam but a release in rem, and the res to which the release applies must be found and identified by the officer or no exemption can be recognized," I arrive at the conclusion that insurance moneys cannot be regarded as a substitute for a house of public worship itself, and that the fund cannot be exempted on any such ground. If anything more were needed to complete a statement of my reasons, it would be that primarily the exemption statutes must be strictly construed and cannot be extended by implication or analogy. The fund stands in no different situation in my opinion than would an endowment fund vested in the trustees of the church for the purpose of paying the salary of its priest or minister. For the reason stated in Watterson v. Halliday, supra, such a fund would be subject to taxation.

For these reasons then I am of the opinion that the fund in question is not exempt from taxation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DORMITORIES FOR TEACHERS, ETC., IN PAROCHIAL SCHOOL, OR OTHER INSTITUTION OF PURELY PUBLIC CHARITY, ARE NOT SUBJECT TO TAXATION.

Buildings belonging to the proprietor of a parochial school or other institution of purely public charity, and used as dormitories for teachers or other workers in such institutions, are exempt from taxation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 27, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "I desire to submit to your department for answer this question, 'Is a convent or sisters' home, as such are commonly understood to be, subject to taxation?'
> While this specific class of property is not mentioned in the case of Watterson against Halliday, I am informed by Father Wagoner, that at some stage in the above case, this question was specifically passed upon by the common pleas, then circuit court or in the supreme court."

This question was passed upon by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general, in an opinion to Hon. Lewis E. Mallow, assistant prosecuting attorney of Lucas county under date of April 17, 1911, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for that year, volume 2, page 1154. The head note of the opinion states accurately the holding arrived at as follows:

> "Houses used exclusively as places of domicile for the sisters or lay teachers of parochial schools, are 'buildings connected with public colleges and academies' or 'lands connected with public institutions of learning,' within the meaning of section 5349 G. C., and are therefore exempted from taxation."

This opinion was based upon a careful examination of the exact issue involved in Watterson v. Halliday, 77 O. S. 150, referred to by you, and it is true that, as you have been informed, the question in which you are interested was raised in the lower courts in that case and was determined in favor of the exemption that is claimed. This exemption, however, was placed upon the grounds submitted in the syllabus of the opinion, which I have quoted.

I agree with Mr. Hogan's opinion, and advise you therefore that if the buildings to which you refer are used as dormitories for teachers in a parochial school, they are exempt from taxation.

Further, I would be of the opinion that if they are used as dormitories for persons engaged exclusively in public charitable work carried on by an institution of purely public charity of any kind, they are exempt from taxation under section 5353, as interpreted in Rose Institute v. Myers, 92 O. S. 252.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—SYNOPSIS OF PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT—PROHIBITION AMENDMENT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

HON. JAMES A. WHITE, Superintendent Anti-Saloon League, 175 South High Street, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of the form of constitutional amendment, together with schedule and suggested synopsis, which you submit to me under the provisions of section 5175-29e G. C. One part of the form submitted for certification is as follows:

"The full text of the proposed amendment to the constitution shall read as follows:

Be it resolved by the people of the State of Ohio:

ARTICLE XV.

Section 9. The sale and manufacture for sale of intoxicating liquors as a beverage are hereby prohibited. The general assembly shall enact laws to make this provision effective. Nothing herein contained shall prevent the manufacture or sale of such liquors for medicinal, industrial, scientific, sacramental or other non-beverage purposes.

SCHEDULE.

If the proposed amendment be adopted, it shall become section 9 of artivle XV of the constitution, and it shall take effect on the 27th day of May of the year following the date of the election at which it is adopted, at which time original sections 9 and 9a of article XV of the constitution and all statutes inconsistent with the foregoing amendment shall be repealed."

The other part of the form is the synopsis of the proposed amendment and reads:

"That a section to be known as section 9, article XV of the constitution shall be adopted so as to prohibit the sale and manufacture for sale of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, said amendment to take effect on the 27th day of May of the year following the date of the election at which it is adopted."

Pursuant to the provisions of section 5175-29e of the General Code of Ohio, I hereby certify that the synopsis above set out is a truthful statement of the contents and purpose of the proposed amendment to be known as section 9 of article XV of the constitution of Ohio.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MAHONING COUNTY—$7,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Mahoning county, Ohio, in the sum of $7,000.00, for the purpose of creating a fund for the payment of Austintown township's share of the compensation, damages, cost and expense of improving section 1 of the Canfield-Niles road, I. C. H. No. 328, in Austintown township.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Mahoning county, Ohio, and of other officers relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

NOTICE OF APPLICATION TO CONSTRUCT STREET RAILWAY WITHIN A MUNICIPALITY MUST BE PUBLISHED ONCE A WEEK FOR THREE CONSECUTIVE WEEKS BEFORE COUNCIL MAY ACT ON SAME.

Where application has been made under authority of section 3768 of the General Code, to construct a street railroad within a municipal corporation, council has no authority to proceed under such application for any purpose until published notice of such application has been made once a week for three consecutive weeks as provided in section 3769 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 12, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 7, 1918, the Hon. Asa E. Ward, city solicitor of Marietta, Ohio, submits a question which is of general interest and the opinion is therefore addressed to you. A copy of this opinion is also sent to Mr. Ward.

The inquiry is as follows:

"The city of Marietta is about to receive an application for leave to construct a street railway in the city.

I am in doubt as to the proper procedure under section 3769 G. C., as to whether or not it is necessary to give public notice of the application therefor, before the ordinance or resolution establishing route and authorizing advertisement for bids, or to pass the necessary resolution establishing route and authorizing advertising for bids, and then give the proper notice by publication of the said application, as seems to be the procedure laid down by Ellis' Ohio Municipal Code, at page 211."

Section 3768 General Code reads as follows:

"No corporation, individual or individuals shall perform any work in the construction of a street railroad, until application for leave is made to the council in writing, and the council by ordinance has granted permission, prescribed the terms and conditions upon, and the manner in which the road shall be constructed and operated, and the streets and alleys to be used and occupied therefor, but the council may renew any such grant at its expiration upon such conditions as may be considered conducive to the public interest."

Under the terms of this section the first thing required is the making of the written application to council.

Section 3769 of the General Code reads:

> "Nothing mentioned in the preceding section shall be done, no ordinance or resolution to establish or define a street railroad route shall be passed, no action inviting proposals to construct and operate such railroad shall be taken by the council, and no ordinance for the purpose specified in such section shall be passed, until public notice of the application therefor has been given by the clerk of the council once a week, for the period of at least three consecutive weeks in one or more of the daily papers, if there be such, and if not, then in one or more of the weekly papers published in the corporation."

This section specifically provides that none of the things mentioned in section 3768 of the General Code shall be done until public notice of the application shall be given once a week for three consecutive weeks. It further provides that no ordinance or resolution to establish the route shall be passed until notice of such application has been made.

Therefore upon the filing of the application, as provided for in section 3768, General Code, the next step is to give public notice of the filing of such application once a week for three consecutive weeks, as provided in section 3769, General Code. Council has no authority to pass an ordinance or resolution establishing the route and authorizing advertisement for bids until after such notice has been made.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF THE FOLLOWING LEASES OF CANAL LANDS: TO LEN C. KOPLIN, AKRON; THE COMMERCIAL PRINTING AND LITHOGRAPHING CO., AKRON; THE MASSILLON ELECTRIC & GAS CO., MASSILLON: WILLIAM A. CARLTON, THORNVILLE; THE BING CLUB OF DAYTON; FRED W. SIMPSON, NEWARK; CHARLES CARROLL, ST. MARYS; ROE SPURGEON, KIRKERSVILLE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 14, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 21, 1918, in which you enclose the following leases of canal property, in triplicate, and ask my approval of said leases:

	Amount.
To Len C. Koplin, of Akron, Ohio, for a portion of the state canal property between the north line of Exchange street and the south line of Buchtel avenue, the appraisement on which is $20,000 for the first three years, and $28,333⅓ for the last twelve years, the average valuation being	$26,666⅔

To the same party, a portion of the state canal land lying between the south line of Exchange street in the city of Akron, and a line drawn parallel thereto and 95 feet southerly therefrom. The appraisement for the first three years is $15,000 and for the last twelve years the appraisement is $20,000, the average appraisement being	19,000 00
To the Commercial Printing and Lithographing Co., of Akron, Ohio, a lease for the portion of the berme embankment between the northerly line of Exchange street and the alley between Exchange street and Buchtel avenue, and abutting the lands of said company. Valuation	3,100 00
To the Massillon Electric and Gas Co., of Massillon, Ohio, lease for the berme embankment and the outer slope of the towing path embankment of the Ohio canal in the city of Massillon, commencing at the north line of Walnut street in said city and extending thence northerly a distance of 645 feet. Valuation	6,666⅔
To the Massillon Electric and Gas Co., lease for railway crossing over the Ohio canal a short distance north of the village of Bolivar in Tuscarawas county, Ohio. Valuation	500 00
To William A. Charlton, Thornville, Ohio, lease for two small islands in Buckeye lake. Valuation	1,666⅔
To the Bing Club of Dayton, Ohio, renewal of a lease of two small islands in Lake St. Marys. Valuation	1,000 00
To Fred W. Simpson, Newark, Ohio, renewal of a lease for a portion of the abandoned Ohio canal in east Newark. Valuation	1,000 00
To Chas. Carroll, renewal of a lease of twenty acres of land adjacent to Lake St. Marys. Valuation	1,000 00
To Roe Spurgeon, Kirkersville, Ohio, small tract of the Kirkersville feeder near Kirkersville, Ohio. Valuation	100 00

I have carefully examined these leases and find them to be correct in form and legal in every respect. I am therefore endorsing my approval thereon and forwarding them to the governor of the state for his consideration.

I desire to make one or two suggestions in reference to these leases. In the lease made to the Massillon Electric & Gas Company of Massillon, Ohio (property valuation, $6,666⅔), the property is leased to a railroad company for switch track purposes. I am assuming that the switch track is not of a greater length than two miles.

Section 13965 G. C. provides that the canal lands of the state "may be leased for any purpose or purposes other than for railroads operated by steam." The section provides further, however, that the canal basin or any portion of canal lands may be leased to a railroad company for the necessary use of such railroads for a distance of not exceeding two miles. On account of the provisions of this section I make the above assumption and base same upon the description set out in the lease.

In the lease made to the same company, the property of which is valued at $500.00, there are a number of stipulations set out. These stipulations are not numbered correctly nor consecutively, but this is a mere matter of form and does not interfere with the validity of the lease.

In the lease to the Bing Club, of Dayton, Ohio (property valuation, $1,000.00) there is no authority given by said club to the one who signed the lease, to sign the same. Undoubtedly it would have been better if such a resolution had been adopted and copy of same attached to the lease. However, from the name of the lessee I assume that it is neither a corporation nor a partnership, but rather a voluntary association, and I have therefore decided to approve the lease.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION NOT LIABLE FOR INTEREST ON SCHOOL FUNDS DEPOSITED WITH COUNTY TREASURER WHEN UNABLE TO SECURE BIDS FOR DEPOSIT—"CONVENIENTLY LOCATED" AS USED IN SECTION 7607 DEFINED—BOARD MAY DETERMINE WHEN BANKS ARE CONVENIENTLY LOCATED.

Where a school district contains two or more banks and the board of education has used its best efforts to secure bids for the deposit of the school funds under section 7605 General Code, and such board finds that there are no other banks "conveniently located" as provided in section 7607 General Code, and such funds are deposited in the county treasury under authority of section 4763 General Code, the members of such board are not liable for interest on the school funds as provided in section 7609 General Code.

It is within the discretion of the board of education to determine when banks are "conveniently located" within the meaning of section 7607 General Code, and the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices cannot control such discretion, except in case of fraud, collusion, or clear abuse of such discretion.

The phrase "conveniently located" as used in section 7607 General Code cannot be defined so as to apply to all cases. It should be considered in connection with the particular circumstances of each case.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 25, 1918, you submit the following statement of facts and inquiries to this department:

> "The board of education of Medina, Ohio, used their best efforts to secure bids covering deposit of funds of the board of education under the provisions of section 7605 General Code. There are three banks in the school district. The board was unable to secure any bids, and was informed that their funds, which were not in great amount, were not cared for by the banks. Upon which the board placed the funds in the custody of the county treasurer under authority of section 4763 General Code.
> Question 1. In view of the above statement, can the members of the board be held liable for 2% interest on the funds as set forth in section 7609 General Code.
> Question 2. The board contends that other banks of the county are not conveniently located as set forth in section 7607 General Code. Has this department any power of discretion in deciding what a convenient location may be?

Question 3. Can your office advise us construction of the meaning of 'conveniently located?'"

Section 7604 General Code provides in part:

"* * * the board of education of any school district by resolution shall provide for the deposit of any or all moneys coming into the hands of its treasurer. * * *"

Section 7605 General Code provides:

"In school districts containing two or more banks such deposit shall be made in the bank or banks, situated therein, that at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest which must be at least two per cent for the full time funds or any part thereof are on deposit. * * *"

It appears from your statement of facts that the board of education used their best efforts to comply with the above provisions and to secure a depository. The banks refused to tender bids.

Section 7607 General Code provides:

"In all school districts containing less than two banks, after the adaption of a resolution providing for the deposit of its funds, the board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located and offer the highest rate of interest, which shall not be less than two per cent for the full time the funds or any part thereof are on deposit. * * *"

The district now in question does not come within the letter of the above provision, as it contains three banks. It is provided in said section that the "board of education may enter into a contract with one or more banks that are conveniently located."

The word "may" is used herein, and this makes it discretionary with the board to enter into such contract. The banks must be "conveniently located."

It is the province of the board of education in the first instance to determine whether the banks are conveniently located. Their discretion in this matter cannot be controlled except in case of fraud, collusion, or clear or arbitrary abuse of such discretion.

The rule is stated in the case of Pugh Printing Co. v. Yeatman, 22 Cir. Ct. 584, wherein the second branch of the syllabus reads:

"The courts cannot control public officers in the exercise of their discretion. It is only when the courts find present some of the equitable grounds of fraud or mistake, or find the decision or award to be wrongful, fraudulent, collusive or arbitrary, that they can set aside or restrain their conclusions or determinations."

Your department in its supervisory capacity can only control the discretion of the board of education in accordance with the above rule. It is your duty to call attention to any abuse of discretionary power. You cannot control the power of discretion granted to the board of education.

You ask as to the liability of the board of education under section 7609 General Code. This section provides:

> "* * * Upon the failure of the board of education of any school district to provide a depository according to law the members of the board of education shall be liable for any loss occasioned by their failure to provide such depository, and in addition shall pay to the treasurer of the school funds two per cent on the average daily balance on the school funds during the time said school district shall be without a depository. Said moneys may be recovered from the members of the board of education for the use and benefit of the school funds of the district upon the suit of any taxpayer of the school district."

It appears in your statement that the board of education did provide for a depository under section 7604 General Code, and asked for bids as required by section 7605 General Code, but no bids were received. The funds were then deposited with the county treasurer under authority of section 4763 General Code, which reads:

> "* * * In all village and rural school districts which do not provide legal depositories as provided in sections 7604 to 7608 inclusive, the county treasurer shall be the treasurer of the school funds of such districts."

Under the circumstances submitted, the members of the board of education cannot be held liable for interest under the provisions of section 7609 General Code.

You ask for a construction of the phrase "conveniently located" as used in section 7607 General Code, supra.

The word "conveniently" is defined at page 817 of volume 9 of Cyc:

> "In a convenient manner, commodiously, without difficulty; by the exercise of reasonable diligence—so used with respect to the performance of services enjoined upon an officer of law."

"Convenient" is also defined at page 815:

> "Adapted; well adapted, or adapted to an end; affording certain facilities or accommodation; appropriate; becoming; beneficial; commodious; conducive to ease or comfort in any kind of performance; easily used; fit; just; promotive of comfort or advantage; proper; rendering some act or movement easy of performance or freeing it from obstruction; serviceable; suitable; conducive to ease or comfort in any kind of performance; suitable for a required purpose; easily used; serviceable."

It would be difficult to define the phrase "conveniently located" so as to meet all cases. It is largely a question of fact, to be determined by the circumstances of each case.

However, in order to be conveniently located under section 7607 General Code, the banks must be adapted to the use of the board of education and must be reached without unnecessary difficulty. An element of comparison is to be considered. The banks, or some of them at least, coming under the terms of section 7607 supra, must of necessity be located outside the school district. Such banks need not be as convenient as banks located within the districts. This element must be taken into consideration in construing and applying said phrase. A more definite answer cannot be safely given.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—WHEN BEQUEST TO FOREIGN INCORPORATED OR UNINCOPORATED CHARITABLE INSTITUTION NOT SUBJECT TO SAME.

A general bequest to or for the use of a foreign charitable corporation is subject to collateral inheritance tax.

A general bequest to an unincorporated charitable institution is taxable unless the institution substantially confines its operation to Ohio.

A bequest to a foreign public charitable corporation for the use of its work in Ohio, or to an unincorporated public charitable institution, for work in Ohio, is exempt from such tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1918.

HON. JOHN W. DAVIS, Probate Judge, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledged receipt of your letter of March 11, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "May I have your opinion at once as to whether or not a bequest to the 'trustee of the board of publication and Sabbath school work of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America' is subject to collateral inheritance tax?"

On inquiry at the office of the secretary of state I find that no corporation of the name given by you is organized or in existence under the laws of this state. Therefore the legatee is either an unincorporated society or a foreign corporation.

The exemptions from the collateral inheritance tax are in part as follows:

> "Sec. 5332. The provisions of the next preceding section shall not apply to property, or interests in property * * embraced in a bequest * *, to or for the use of * * public institutions of learning, or to or for the use of an institution in this state for purpose only of public charity or other exclusively public purposes. * *."

The trust mentioned in the will must constitute "an institution in this state for purpose only of public charity or other exclusively public purposes" in order that the bequest may be exempt.

In Humphreys v. State, 70 O. S. 67, it was held in the language of the second branch of the syllabus that:

"Boards and societies and auxiliaries thereto, which are incorporated and organized under the laws of other states, for 'purposes of purely public charity or other exclusively public purposes,' are not 'institutions' of that class in this state * *; and where they are entitled to receive property within the jurisdiction of this state, by deed of gift, bequest or devise, such gift, bequest or devise is liable to a collateral inheritance tax * * although some of the charitable work, operations and enterprises of the institutions so incorporated and organized are carried on within this state."

The holding in the case from which quotation has been made was predicated upon the fact that certain missionary societies and auxiliary institutions of the Presbyterian church there involved were incorporated under the laws of other states. If they had not been incorporated, another question would have arisen, viz., as to whether, if organized in a voluntary way, they would be regarded as "institutions;" and if an affirmative answer had been given to this question, a still further question would have arisen, namely, as to whether, or upon what condition, such voluntary organization might be regarded as being "in this state."

It must not be forgotten that the exemption in the statute follows the use and not the legal title. Therefore, the mere fact that the bequest is made to individual trustees or even to a single individual is not controlling on the ground that the individual cannot be an institution, if he is to take in the capacity of trustee for an institution. So also the mere fact that the immediate taker of the legal estate or fund may be a foreign corporation is not controlling where the use is limited to the state.

In re Crawford, 148 Ia. 60.

As to the first question respecting what is meant by the word "institution," as I have above stated it, there is no direct authority in this state. It would seem, however, that the "institution" need not be incorporated, but it must be at the very least a specific organization of individuals. The word imports such an organization and is not merely descriptive of property.

Hooper v. Shaw, 176 Mass. 190.

But if the "institution" is an unincorporated organization or association of individuals, I do not think it can be deemed to be "in this state," unless it actually conducts activities in Ohio and substantially limits such activities to Ohio.

In Humphreys v. State, supra, some stress seems to be laid upon this point. The following appears in the opinion of Price, J., at p. 77:

"We are urged to conclude, that because the work of these societies and boards is in progress, * * and their influence felt in this state through the various subordinate agencies employed, the institutions themselves are in this state within the meaning of the statute. If this is true of Ohio, it is true of every other state, and we have these institutions, not only in the state where they are chartered, but omnipresent and in all the states. In other words, they would, as institutions, exist in any state where any of their charitable or religious enterprises are projected and carried on, no matter in what degree. Such a construction of the facts and the law we think is not permissible. * *

It is perhaps true, that these institutions now operating under charters, may have had another form of existence prior to the date of the charters, * *.

> The will * * gave no directions to her executor or her legatees as to the place where the money should be expended, nor does it undertake to control the time or place of the expenditure. Once in the possession of these institutions, it may be disbursed as they deem proper, and all of it may be disbursed in communities beyond our borders. So we do not find that we are adopting a narrow construction of our statute, if it appears that it undertakes to tax the right of the foreign, though charitable institutions, to receive and so absolutely control the disposition of property owned by the testatrix in this state. We think these legatees are not 'institutions in this state' within the meaning of the statue."

There is discernible in the above, though not clearly expressed, the idea that quite apart from the controlling weight given to the fact that the societies before the court in that case were incorporated in other states, consideration had been given to the fact that the will did not direct that the bequest should be devoted to the charitable work of the several societies in Ohio alone, nor—what is perhaps more to the purpose—prevent the societies from expending all the money arising from the bequest in other states.

Another point at least mentioned in Humphreys v. State, supra, was the fact that all the societies to which bequests had been made were auxiliaries of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in America, which was incorporated in another state.

It is stated as a fact at p. 76 of the report that:

> "Where the subordinate societies and boards became incorporated, it was done under the direction of the general assembly."

I mention this fact because it appears that the board of publication and Sabbath school work of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America is also probably subject to the control of the general assembly of said church, and if so, it is to be regarded, whether incorporated or not, as an auxiliary of the general assembly, which is a foreign corporation.

I cannot unequivocally answer your question without seeing the will itself, but to avoid delay and in response to your urgent request for immediate advice, I beg to state as my conclusion that the fact that the bequest is to the legatee or legatees whom you have named in your letter does not of itself show that the bequest is exempt; that if the named legatee, or the "board of publication and Sabbath school work of the Presbyterian church of the United States of America" is incorporated, Humphreys v. State, supra, is authority against any possible exemption, unless the bequest limits the expenditure of the fund to this state; and if the beneficial legatee is unincorporated, but exists, as is apparent in the case, and generally throughout the United States conducts its activities, without regard to state boundaries, then the bequest is not exempt unless accompanied by direction that at least some of the funds shall be expended in the state of Ohio. If, however, such direction is made in the will and the board of publication and Sabbath school work is unincorporated, I would be of the opinion that the bequest would be exempt.

I feel that I need not state authority for the general principle that the section of the General Code which I have quoted is the sole source of exemption from the collateral inheritance tax. The exemptions from property taxation have no relation to such tax.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONTRACT, WHEREBY COUNCIL AGREES TO PURCHASE WATER MAINS, ETC., CONSTRUCTED BY OWNERS OF AN ADDITION WITHIN LIMITS OF VILLAGE, WITHIN A SPECIFIED TIME, INVALID.

Where a village council has entered into a contract with the owners of an allotment within the limits of such village, whereby such owners agree to construct water mains and extensions, and such village agrees to purchase such mains within a period of five years at a price to be agreed upon and to pay water rentals up to $350.00 per year during such period, such contract is invalid.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your favor is received in which you submit the following statement of facts and inquiries:

"Statement of Facts.

The village of Maumee, Ohio, has entered into a contract with certain realty companies in accordance with ordinance passed by the council of the village, granting such companies the right to construct water mains with necessary appurtenances in their allotments, all of which allotments are within the boundaries of the municipal corporation, such construction to be done at the expense of the realty companies. The contract further agrees that the village shall acquire title or ownership of said mains, hydrants, etc., by purchase from the owners thereof on or before five years from date of contract. The village further agrees to turn over as interest on the investment to the realty companies, the revenues received from occupants or owners of premises for water furnished within said allotments up to a specified maximum amount each year.

Question 1. Is such a contract legal and binding upon the village?

Question 2. May the council of the village bind its successors to purchase said mains, etc?

Question 3. Is there any authority of law which would empower the village to use water revenues to pay interest on this private investment?"

Upon request, you submit under date of February 25, 1918, a copy of the contract involved in your above inquiries.

It appears from this contract that the owners of the land proposed to the village that they would construct the water mains through their addition, provided the village would furnish water to the consumers in such addition at the same price and on the same terms and conditions as water is furnished to other consumers. It appears that council accepted this proposition and a contract was entered into.

Under the terms of this contract the owners agreed to make the required extensions under plans and specifications furnished by a civil engineer therein named. It was agreed that the water mains so constructed should be and remain the property of the owners of the land. The village reserved certain control over making of taps, extensions and other details.

The contract contains a provision:

"It is further agreed by said parties that the village of Maumee shall, on or before five years from the date hereof, acquire the title to and ownership to said water mains, hydrants and connections and attachments, by purchase from the owners thereof at a reasonable price to be determined and agreed upon by and between said owners and the board of trustees of public affairs of said village, * * *"

There is a further provision for fixing the price in case of failure to agree.

Said contract contains this further provision:

"Provided, however, that all revenues received from occupants or owners of premises for water furnished within the said 'Manitou grounds' shall be paid by the said village to the K. T. company, the amount so paid, however, to the said company shall not exceed $350.00 per annum, which amount is deemed to be the reasonable interest upon the cost of installing said water mains, connections, hydrants, etc., by the said the K. T. company as aforesaid; such payments to be made semi-annually unless the village of Maumee shall acquire the title to the mains, connections, hydrants, etc."

It appears from the terms of this contract that it is contemplated that the village of Maumee shall within the period of five years purchase such water mains and extensions and pay the owners thereof a reasonable price for the same. The amount of the purchase price is not stipulated.

There is no statutory provision which authorizes a village council to enter into a contract of the above nature.

In sections 3967 and 3970 General Code, which cover a case where persons lay down water mains and pipes outside the limits of a municipal corporation, provision is made for the purchase of such mains by the municipal corporation. These sections apply to water mains located outside the limits of the municipality. In the question now submitted, the water mains have been laid within the limits of the municipal corporation and these sections do not therefore apply.

The council of a village has only such authority as is expressly granted by statute or which is necessarily implied in order to carry out the powers expressly given.

As there is no express authority of statute granting to council power to enter into a contract of the above nature, council has no such authority and the contract is invalid. This contract is not binding upon the village or upon the land owners.

It is not necessary therefore to answer your second and third questions as the contract is not legal. The successors to the village council are not bound thereby.

Your third question is as to the right of the village to use water revenues to pay interest on a private investment. Inasmuch as the present contract is invalid, I do not deem it advisable to go into this question at the present time.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPALITY MUST PAY COST OF COMBINED STORM AND SANITARY SEWER AT INTERSECTIONS, WHEN STREET IS IMPROVED ON THE ASSESSMENT PLAN—INTERSECTIONS DEFINED.

Where a street is improved by a municipality on the assessment plan it is required to pay the cost and expense of a combined storm and sanitary sewer constituting a part of said improvement at the intersections formed by the crossing of one street or public highway by another.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communications in which you request my opinion upon the following matter:

> "In the city of Lima, Ohio, legislation covering street improvement under the provisions of section 3815 G. C., designated the various matters that entered into the improvement and included in such designation a combined sanitary and storm water sewer, the sewer in question being part of the street improvement, which improvement was made under authority of sections 3814-3819 G. C., assessment being made on the benefit plan.
> We call your attention to section 3820 G. C., and to court decision in the case of Close v. Parker, 11 C. C. (n. s.) 85, affirmed by 79 O. S. 444, which is noted under section 3820 at page 279 of the fifth edition of Ellis municipal code.
> Question: In view of the above statement of facts and court decision referred to, shall the city bear the cost of the intersections of such sewers, or may the city assess such cost against the properties benefited by such improvement?"

In considering your request I am assuming that the combined sanitary and storm water sewer which you have in mind is one that was constructed of sufficient size and in such a manner that it would take care of sewage that consists of waste matter which is deposited from sanitary sewage laterals and waste matter from storm water laterals, and that said sewer is not built in such a way that it would be considered that one separate part thereof is for the carrying sanitary sewage and the other for storm water.

Section 3820 G. C. reads:

> "The corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council deems just, which part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections."

The above quoted section provides, in effect, that the corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council, in the exercise of its judgment and discretion, might deem just, except that it is made mandatory that the corporation's part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and in addition thereto the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections.

Section 3820 G. C. was originally a part of section 53 of the municipal code of 1902 (96 Ohio Laws, 40), which read as follows:

> "In all cases of assessments, the council shall limit the same to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and in no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes, within a period of five years, exceeding thirty-three per cent. of the tax value thereof; provided, that the assessments levied for the construction of main sewers shall not exceed the sum that would in the opinion of council be required to construct an ordinary street sewer or drain of sufficient capacity to drain or sewer the lots or lands to be assessed for such improvement, nor shall any lots or lands be assessed that do not need local drainage or which are provided therewith. In all municipalities the corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council may deem just, which part shall not be less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expenses; and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections; provided, that whenever special assessments have been levied and paid for the improvement of any street or other public place, the property so assessed shall not again be assessed for more than one-half the cost and expense of repaving or repairing such street or other public place unless the grade of the same is changed; provided, that any city or village is hereby authorized to issue and sell its bonds as other bonds are sold to pay the corporation's part of any improvement as aforesaid, and may levy taxes in addition to all other taxes authorized by law to pay such bonds and the interest thereon."

In the case of Close v. Parker, et al., 11 O. C. C. n. s., 85, which was affirmed by the supreme court without report in 79 O. S. 444, and which is referred to by you in your request, the third branch of the syllabus reads:

> "The provisions of the municipal code as to improvements for which special assessments are made, that 'the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections' has reference to the parts of street improvements at the intersection of streets one with another, and has no application to the crossing of a street by a sewer for purposes of local sanitary drainage."

In the opinion of the court in Close v. Parker et al., supra, it was said on pages 89 and 90:

> "It is claimed also in the petition that the assessment is invalid in that there is no deduction for intersections. In order that I may state the position of counsel for the plaintiff fairly, I read from his brief:
> * * * *
> 'From paragraph 8 of the agreed statement it appears that the city was not charged with the cost of any intersection.
> If the crossing of the streets by sewer 930 forms intersections under the terms of the statute, it is conceded in paragraph 7 of the agreed statement that the assessment is excessive by 9.93 per cent.'
> The provisions of the municipal code of 1902, relied upon by counsel as changing the character of an intersection the construction of which is to be paid for by the city, is section 53 (Rev. Stat., 2373; 1536-213), which reads in part:

'In all municipalities the corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council may deem just, which part shall not be less than one-fiftieth of all such costs and expenses; and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections.'

It will be noted that the word 'intersections' is here used without definition, but by the former statute were clearly contemplated, as counsel agree, improvements extending along or in streets, and the provision was that the city should pay the costs of such improvements in the squares made by the intersections of two streets. The examination that I have given to this matter leads my mind to the conclusion that the word had acquired at the time of the passage of the municipal code of 1902 a familiar meaning, and that it had reference to intersections of the character described in the statute in force up to and at the time of the passage of the municipal code; and although the definition of 'intersections' is dropped out, I think that the new section—53 of the code—still had reference to the same class of intersections that had been before known."

The statute in force up to and at the time of the passage of the municipal code of 1902, which is referred to as defining "intersections," is section 2274 of the Revised Statutes, which is set forth in Bates' Revised Statutes of 1902 as follows:

"That when the council of a city, except in cities of the first grade of the first class, and in cities of the first grade of the second class, determines to grade, pave, sewer, or otherwise improve a street, alley or other public highway, and the improvement crosses or intersects another street, alley or public highway, the council shall levy and assess a tax, in addition to that specified in the last section, upon the general tax list of all the taxable real and personal property in the corporation, for the estimated cost and expense of so much of the improvement as may be included in the crossing or intersection of such street, alley or highway, which amount the corporation clerk shall certify to the county auditor, and the same shall be enforced against such real and personal property as other taxes are enforced and collected; and such amount may be so certified, and such levy made, after the contract is let, or said improvement completed, and the provisions hereof shall apply to improvements already determined upon or ordered and for the payment of which special assessments have not been made."

On pages 90 and 91 the court further states in said opinion:

"This entire legislation and adjudication as to intersections is based upon the idea that the part of the improvement at such intersections is connected with a street improvement to be paid for by assessment. If the property owners are benefited by the general street improvement, assessment is to be made upon such property owners along the street where the other expenses are being assessed. Upon the same principle, if a sanitary sewer is, at the intersection, still for the benefit of the people whose land it drains, although it crosses the street, the owners of the property drained should equitably pay the expenses. The city derives no benefit from a sanitary sewer at the point of crossing a street. The city does not need it. It is not there to take off the surface water; it is not for the purpose of draining the street, but it is for the purpose of caring for the sanitary drainage of the lots which are assessed. Both upon authorities, so far as we are able to find them, and upon principle, as it seems to us, the cost of the improvement at the kind of intersection we have here should not be paid by the city. To the extent that the city is in any way benefited by this sanitary drainage, as I have already suggested, the city does pay one-fiftieth of the cost."

The direct question that was presented for the consideration of the court in the foregoing case was whether or not the crossing of a street by a sanitary sewer constituted an intersection within the meaning of the statutory provision that a municipality shall pay the cost of intersections. The court held that such a crossing was not an intersection within the meaning of the asssessment law, stating in effect that the term "intersection" referred only to the crossing of one street or public highway by another.

I might say that I have taken occasion to examine the records on file in the above cause in the supreme court and find the following statement in the brief of the city solicitor (page 2):

"Woodsdale avenue and the boulevard, in which sewer 898 was constructed, are intersected by several streets and it was at once conceded by the city that the city should pay the cost of that part of said sewer lying within the lines of such intersecting streets. The amount of the cost of such intersection was agreed upon and an abatement made accordingly. As to this sewer plaintiff seeks no further relief. Plaintiff's brief, page 2."

It is therefore seen that it was considered by the city that it should pay the cost of the sanitary sewer where it was located in the intersection of one street or public highway with another. In reference to this assessments, then, the city was only objecting to its paying the cost of that part of the sewer where it crossed a street, which said crossing being claimed by the property owners to constitute an intersection within the meaning of section 53 of the municipal code of 1902, now section 3820 G. C., and the city was sustained in this contention, as has been seen, by the court.

The first branch of the syllabus in the case of Ball v. City of Portsmouth, et al., 82 O. S., 151, reads:

"The provision of section 53, municipal code of 1902, which requires the corporation to 'pay the costs of intersections' when streets are improved includes all manholes, catch basins and tiling at intersections."

Nothing is said in the opinion of the court in the Ball case, supra, to indicate whether the catch basins, manholes and tiling referred to therein were parts of a storm sewer or a sanitary sewer, or a combination of both. However, the court lays down the general proposition that when streets are improved and manholes, catch basins and tiling make up a part of the improvement, the city must pay the cost of these in the intersections formed by the crossing of streets.

As I have stated heretofore, I have assumed that the combined storm and sanitary sewer which was constructed in the particular case could not be divided into separate parts so that it could be said that there was one part for sanitary sewage, which cost so much, and a part for a storm water drainage, which cost so much. It is therefore unnecessary for me to determine whether it would make any difference in the matter of making the assessment if the sewer in question only carried sanitary sewage.

I advise you therefore that I am of the opinion, on the authority of the Ball case, supra, that the city of Lima is required to pay the cost and expense of a combined storm and sanitary sewer constituting part of a street improvement at the intersections formed by the crossing of one street or public highway by another.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BEQUEST TO STATE OF OHIO SHOULD BE PAID INTO GENERAL REVENUE FUND.

A bequest "to the state of Ohio" should be paid into the state treasury to the credit of the general revenue fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of March 11 you request me to advise you as to the disposition of the bequest made by John Crater, late of Seneca county, to the state of Ohio. This bequest, amounting to $960.00, and with accrued interest, to $988.80, has been paid to you by executors. You say that you do not wish "to carry this as a cash item on our books, but wish to convert the same into Liberty bonds, if it can be legally done."

Section 18 G. C. authorizes the state to receive money by bequest for its benefit and also to receive it in trust and apply it according to the terms and conditions of the bequest.

You do not furnish me with a copy of the will, but a copy of the letter received by you from the attorneys for the executors indicates that the bequest is unlimited and that the full beneficial interest in the fund is thereby vested in the state.

In its proprietary capacity the state is represented by the general assembly, which might make any disposition it should see fit to make of moneys coming to it in such fashion. If the legislature had not acted at all, some embarrassment might arise. However, in my opinion section 270 G. C. is broad enough in its terms to cover all possible cases in which moneys are paid into the state treasury. That section provides in part that:

> "All moneys paid into the state treasury, the disposition of which is not otherwise provided for by law, shall be credited by the auditor of state to the general revenue fund. * * *"

It is true that section 18 G. C., which enables the state to receive moneys by bequest for its own benefit, does not expressly provide that such moneys shall be paid into the state treasury. Indeed, I am unable to find any statute which expressly states that moneys accruing to the state as such shall be placed in the state treasury, unless it be section 24 G. C. In my opinion, however, such is the disposition of all funds accruing to the state beneficially in its proprietary capacity, and the absence of an express statute on the subject is not of any significance.

Inasmuch, then, as the money belongs to the state, must be paid into the state treasury and must there be credited to the general revenue fund, your duty in the premises is clear. This money should be treated the same as any other miscellaneous revenue. There is no need for holding it as a separate and distinct fund, and no authority to do so. It not only need not, but may not lawfully be invested separately and apart from the other moneys coming into the state treasury, but must be commingled with them and placed in depositories as provided by law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—MEMBER OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY AND PROFESSOR IN THE STATE NORMAL COLLEGE.

A professor in the state normal college at Athens, Ohio, holds merely an employment and he is eligible, therefore, to hold at the same time the office of member of the general assembly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 15, 1918.

HON. JOHN J. RICHESON, Dean, State Normal College, Ohio University, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of February 21, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "One of our professors—T. N. H.—is considering the matter of becoming a candidate for representative from our county if the people so desire.
> The question of the legality of his serving the state as representative and being on leave of absence while the legislature was in session has come up and we should like to have your opinion on this matter. Of course as representative his salary would go for two full years, while his salary here would run for the same time except while he was on leave of absence, and except for that short period of time it seems to us that Mr. H. would be holding two state positions at the same time. We should be glad to have your opinion on this matter."

The principle which lies at the foundation of the answer to your question is found in section 4 of article II of the constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the general assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

From the provisions of this section of the constitution it is evident that no person holding a lucrative office under the authority of this state can at the same time hold the office of member of the general assembly.

With this section in mind it will be necessary for us to note the nature of the state normal college located at Athens, as to whether or not it is a state institution.

Section 7897 G. C. reads as follows:

> "There are hereby created and established two state normal schools to be located as follows: One in connection with the Ohio university, at Athens, and one in connection with the Miami university, at Oxford."

Section 7926 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "For the purpose of affording support to the state normal college, in connection with the Ohio university, there shall be levied annually a tax on the grand list of the taxable property of the state, which shall be collected in the same manner as other state taxes and the proceeds of which shall constitute 'the Ohio normal school fund.' * * *."

From these two sections it is seen that the state created and established the normal school under consideration, and that it is maintained at least in part by taxation, as provided in section 7926 G. C.

So it is evident that the state normal school is strictly a state institution. Hence a person holding a position in said institution would be holding a position under the authority of this state, and of course the person whom you mention draws a salary and therefore would be holding a lucrative position.

The next question to be considered is as to whether a professor in said normal college holds an office, or if he is merely in the employment of the trustees of said institution.

In Butler v. The Regents of the University, 32 Wis. 124, the court in the syllabus said:

> "A professor in the state university is not a 'public officer' in such a sense as prevents his employment as such creating a contract relation between himself and the board of regents * * *."

On p. 131 of the opinion the court say:

> "The learned counsel for the defendants has argued with great ingenuity that the plaintiff was a public officer, and not a mere servant or employe of the board of regents by whom he was appointed a professor in the university; * * * We are unable to agree with the counsel on his first proposition. We do not think that a professor in the university is a public officer in any sense that excludes the existence of a contract relation between himself and the board of regents that employed him, in respect to such employment. It seems to us that he stands in the same relation to the board that a teacher in a public school occupies with respect to the school district by which such teacher is employed; and that is purely a contract relation."

In Ward v. Board of Education, 21 O. C. C. 699, the court held in the first branch of the syllabus as follows:

> "A superintendent of public schools appointed by a board of education under Rev. Stat. sec. 3982, is an employe of the board, and not a public officer within the purview of the constitution forbidding a change in the salary of public officers during their term of office."

In State ex rel. v. Vickers, 58 O. S. 730, an unreported case, the court held as follows:

> "Judgment for defendant on the ground that a superintendent of schools is not an officer."

From all the above decisions and from what seems to be sound logic as well, it is my opinion that a professor in the state normal college at the Ohio university is not an officer, but is a mere employe under the control and authority of the board that employs him. If he is not an officer, but merely an employe, then the provisions of article II, section 4 of the constitution would not apply and therefore there is nothing in the constitution that would prevent said professor from holding his position in the state normal college and at the same time holding the office of member of the general assembly of the state of Ohio.

The only other question would be as to whether there is any statutory provision which would prevent the professor of said normal college from holding the office of member of the general assembly. So far as I am aware, there is no such provision. I am not unmindful of the provisions of section 15 G. C., but this section would not apply to the case suggested by you. It merely forbids a member of the general assembly from being appointed to certain positions therein named.

Hence it is my opinion that there is no provision in the constitution of Ohio nor in our statutes, which would prevent a professor in the state normal college at Athens from being elected to the office of member of the general assembly and still hold his position in said college. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FOREIGN CORPORATION PROPOSING TO PURCHASE MORTGAGES ON OHIO REAL ESTATE, THROUGH AN AGENT LOCATED WITHIN THE STATE, MUST COMPLY WITH SECTION 178 G. C., BUT NOT REQUIRED TO COMPLY WITH SECTION 183, NOR PAY FRANCHISE TAXES.

A foreign corporation organized for the purpose of buying, selling and investing in mortgages and other real estate securities and the issuing and sale of notes and bonds secured thereby and proposing to purchase mortgages on Ohio real estate as the basis of the securities to be sold by it, through the negotiations of an agent employed by it in Ohio, said agent not being authorized, however, to approve applications to the company, and making collections through agents in Ohio on mortgage notes purchased by it, must, before engaging in such business, comply with section 178 of the General Code, but is not required to comply with section 183 of the General Code, nor pay annual franchise taxes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1918.

HONORABLE WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On January 4, 1918, you enclosed a communication from Warren F. Selby, submitting for my opinion the following question:

> "A corporation organized under the laws of the state of Pennsylvania for the purpose of 'buying, selling and investing in mortgages and other real estate securities, and the issue and sale of bonds and notes secured thereby' is about to invest a part of its capital in mortgages on Ohio real estate, but does not contemplate disposing of any of its stock or securities in the state of Ohio nor conducting any office or maintaining any permanent agency in this state.

Is the corporation described required to comply with the laws of Ohio and to pay franchise taxes as a foreign corporation for profit doing business in Ohio?"

I found it necessary to obtain further facts from Mr. Selby in order to return a specific answer to your inquiry, and under date of February 14, he advised as follows:

"The company does not propose to maintain a general office in the state of Ohio, but will employ an agent in the state of Ohio to give receipts and collect moneys due under payment mortgages.

The agent or attorney above referred to would collect payments and report to the company. All books would be kept at the main office in Pennsylvania. The agent or attorney would submit applications for mortgages to the company and the proper executive officers would have to approve same before the mortgages would be taken up. The attorney would also examine the titles and prepare papers.

The company does not contemplate entering into a direct mortgage loan business, but desires to purchase mortgages that are already in existence, so that it will not be necessary for its agents or attorney to pay out money under the provisions of the mechanics' lien law."

The language of one of the compliance statutes and that of the taxation statute necessary to be considered in connection with this question is the same. The problem is to determine whether or not a corporation, on the above state of facts, is "owning or using a part or all of its capital in this state and doing business in this state," within the meaning of sections 183 and 5499 General Code, respectively.

I shall first consider the subordinate question as to whether or not the location of real estate security in Ohio constitutes the investment of capital and the use thereof in this state. It is to be observed that the capital of the company is invested by purchasing mortgage-secured notes. When the actual cash thus invested leaves the company's treasury, what remains is a chose in action, which is the property of the company. In effect, the property of the company is invested in a chose in action, and the invested capital is no longer represented by the money, which is the property of the seller. The residence of the original borrower with whom the company has not dealt at all, does not determine the situation of the capital. Nor does the fact that the real estate secured is located in Ohio affect the location or place of the use of the capital of the company. The natural situs of the "mortgage" as a subject of taxation—for example, meaning of course the loan secured by the mortgage, as a "mortgage" as such, is really not a subject of taxation at all—is at the domicile of the owner or at the business office where the investment is managed and controlled. Nor, does the fact that a legal estate in the mortgaged premises is created by the execution of a mortgage in my opinion alter the case. In Ohio the mortgagor is before condition broken the owner and entitled to possession against all the world. Rands v. Kendall, 16 O. 671. After condition broken he is the owner against all the world except the mortgagee. Martin v. Alter, 42 O. S. 94.

I do not feel it necessary to enter into an exhaustive discussion of the Ohio theory of mortgage in all of its peculiar incidents, but deem it sufficient to state that in my opinion the ownership of a legal title to Ohio lands by a mortgagee corporation, even after condition broken, would not constitute the ownership or use of a part or all of its capital or plant in this state within the meaning of the sections now under consideration.

For all these reasons, therefore, I am of the opinion that the fact that the real estate security on which the company invests its capital is located in Ohio does not constitute such a transaction, the employment or use of capital of the company in this state.

Does the fact that the notes may be placed in the hands of an agent in Ohio for collection localize the capital invested in them in this state within the contemplation of the statute under consideration? Some basis for an assertion to the effect that such facts would bring the notes, as property, within the potential taxing jurisdiction of the state is found in the decision of the supreme court of the United States in Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. New Orleans, 205 O. S. 298. There is room for doubt as to the application of this decision, however, arising from the fact that in that case the notes originated in the course of a loaning business transacted by the taxpayer in the state; while here the company is not the original lender. Aside from this fact, it appears that the Louisiana case is based upon the legislative policy of that state, as interpreted by the highest court thereof, which is, to quote Mr. Justice Holmes in Wheeler v. Sohmer, 233 U. S. 434, "to deal with negotiable paper on the footing of situs," i. e., as if it were tangible property, capable of a location of its own. Ohio's general policy is contrary to this, in that while rejecting a rigid application of the fiction mobilia sequuntur personam in such a way as to deprive its laws of application to notes owned by non-residents, it has consistently limited its doctrine to the establishment of a business situs for such paper, conditioning the latter upon the power of a resident agent to originate the credit or to reinvest the proceeds thereof. Bradley v. Bauder, 36 O. S. 28; Grant v. Jones, 39 O. S. 506; Myers v. Seaberger, 45 O. S. 232; Hubbard v. Brush, 61 O. S. 252; Lee v. Dawson, 8 C. C. 365. So even the permanent retention of the securities in this state for purposes of collection merely, is not enough to render them taxable. Myers v. Seaburger, supra.

These cases were all decided under the influence of what is now section 5328 G. C. which applies to property taxation only. I think, however, that the phrase "in this state" as used in section 183 G. C. must be construed in accordance with the policy of the property tax laws. The section itself is a tax law, though its subject is the franchise, not the property. (Sec. 184 G. C. See Southern Gum Co. v. Laylin, 66 O. S. 578.)

Indeed, I entertain some doubt as to whether or not section 183 was ever intended to apply to corporations having no tangible property in the state, though it is not necessary to decide that question. I call attention however to the word "use" in the section, as bearing upon this point. Mere location is not enough; active employment is required; and I am of the opinion that bringing a note into Ohio for collection purposes would not be "using capital" in this state. The word "or" must be read "and"; (see Sec. 185 G. C. Op. Atty. Gen. 1916, Vol. II, 1061.)

These things being true, the company would not be required to comply with the provisions of sections 183 and 5499 General Code.

This leaves open a further question as to the compliance with section 178 General Code, which provides:

> "Before a foreign corporation for profit transacts business in this state, it shall procure from the secretary of state a certificate that it has complied with the requirements of law to authorize it to do business in this state, * * *"

This section, however, is not to apply to "foreign banking, insurance, building and loan, or bond investment corporations."

A similar exemption from the scope of section 183, and, I think, by inference from that of the taxation section is made by section 188 General Code, but for reasons which have already been suggested I have not found it necessary to consider the effect of the exemption in discussing the application of those sections.

I am inclined to the view that the company in question would not be entitled to the benefits of this exemption section. The nature of the business which the company is authorized to transact clearly does not constitute it a banking, insurance or building and loan company. While it deals in investment bonds, yet I do not believe that it is a "bond investment company" in the sense in which the term is used in the statutes of this state. Such companies are those defined and described by section 697 General Code, as follows:

"Every corporation, partnership or association other than a building and loan association, which places or sells certificates, bonds, debentures, or other investment securities of any kind, on the partial payment or installment plan, and every investment guaranty company doing business on the service dividend plan shall be deemed a bond investment company."

It does not appear that the company proposes to sell securities on the partial payment or installment plan. In the absence of such a showing I do not think that the company constitutes a bond investment corporation within the meaning of the exemption clause of section 178 General Code.

This brings me to the question of whether or not the activities which the company proposes to carry on in this state would constitute the transaction of business within the meaning of section 178 of the General Code.

In my opinion the employment of an agent in this state with authority to receive payments on the part of the corporation would be enough to constitute the transaction of business, even though the agent was not authorized to represent the corporation to the extent of making the original contracts by which the obligations to make payments to the company would arise. A private corporation can of course transact business only through officers and agents. Wherever there is an agent authorized to represent the corporation in the transaction of any part of its business, there the corporation is; and the acts of the agent are the acts of the corporation. The making of collections on obligations due to the corporation is as essential a part of the business of the corporation as any other part of it which could be imagined. This proposition appears to me to be too clear to require citation of authority, though many are available.

This being true, I do not find it necessary to consider the more difficult question as to whether or not the solicitation of business by the agent in the state would of itself constitute doing business; nor the still more difficult question as to whether or not the mere fact that the company has loaned money to citizens of Ohio or purchased the obligations of citizens of Ohio would constitute the transaction of business in Ohio. Some of the cases from other states apparently go very far upon the last point which I have mooted, though the statutes of such states are not precisely similar to that of Ohio.

For the above reasons then I am of the opinion that a foreign corporation proposing to do as has been described, would be required to comply with section 178 of the General Code, but not with section 183 thereof, and not being subject to section 183 General Code, would not be subject to annual franchise taxation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BIDS FOR THE DEPOSIT OF STATE COUNTY, ETC.,, FUNDS, WHERE INTEREST IS PAYABLE UPON THE MINIMUM AMOUNT ON HAND AT A GIVEN TIME, ARE ILLEGAL—ORDINANCE WHICH INVITES BIDS UPON CITY FUNDS WITH INTEREST PAYABLE UPON THE MINIMUM MONTHLY BALANCES.

Bids for the deposit of state, county, township, school district, municipal funds, or the reserve of the sinking fund trustees, where interest is payable upon the minimum amount on hand at a given time, are illegal.

An ordinance of a city which invites bids upon the city funds with interest payable upon the minimum monthly balance is invalid.

Where bids have been received and accepted under such ordinance, and the banks have paid interest as called for by their contracts, it is advised that no action be brought against such banks to recover any difference that may exist.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 2, 1918, you submit the following facts and inquiries to this department:

> "In the case of the city of East Liverpool, Ohio, a contract was entered into with a bank which had bid for deposits at the rate of 2% on the minimum amount on hand within a period of three or six months.
> We hold this contract is illegal and hold the bank for 2% interest on actual deposits which can only be based on average daily balances. The county depository law stipulates interest on average daily balances but most depositary laws, especially municipal, generally cover the deposit of public moneys with banks that offer the highest rate of interest, but in all these laws we have held it contemplates interest on deposits.
>
> You will readily see that if interest was paid upon the maximum amount in the bank at any one time, the interest might run many times the interest on the actual deposits and vice versa on the minimum amount.
> We have searched and searched and can only say that depository interest can only be computed on average daily balances.
> QUERY: If a bank bids 2% on the minimum amount on deposit upon any one time within a fixed period, would they not be held for 2% on the actual deposits based on average daily balances?"

It appears from a letter received from the city solicitor of East Liverpool, that the above bids were received under authority of an ordinance which provided "interest shall be computed monthly on the minimum monthly balances."

The question which you submit is general in its nature and applies to all deposits made by any political subdivision. The facts which give rise to your question occur in a municipality. The statutes covering deposits in banks by municipalities do not provide a minimum rate of interest, nor do they provide the method of caculating the interest on deposits. The sections of the statutes covering deposits made in banks by the state, county, township or the board of education do provide a minimum rate of interest to be paid, and as to all of these political subdivisions, except that of school districts, the interest is to be computed on daily balances.

The deposits of moneys by a municipality are governed by sections 4295 et seq. General Code, which reads in part as follows:

> "The council may provide by ordinance for the deposit of all public moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer, in such bank or banks, situated within the municipality or county, as offer, at competitive bidding, the highest rate of interest and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in the state, etc."

Section 4296 General Code, reads as follows:

> "In such ordinance the council may determine the method by which such bids shall be received, the authority which shall receive them and which shall determine the sufficiency of the security offered, the time for the contracts for which deposits of public money may be made, and all details for carrying into effect the authority here given. Proceedings in connection with such competitive bidding and the deposit of money shall be conducted in such manner as to insure full publicity, and shall be open at all times to the inspection of any citizen. As to any deposits made under authority of an ordinance of the council, pursuant hereof, if the treasurer has exercised due care, neither he nor his bondsmen shall be liable for any loss occasioned thereby."

Sections 4515 and 4516, General Code, authorize the sinking fund trustees to deposit funds in banks.

Section 4515, General Code, reads as follows:

> "At least once every three years the trustees of the sinking fund shall advertise for proposals for the deposit of all sums held in reserve and shall deposit such reserve in the bank or banks, incorporated under the laws of this state or of the United States, situated within the county, which offer, at competitive bidding, the highest rate of interest and best security and accommodation and give a good and sufficient bond issued by a surety company authorized to do business in this state, or furnish good and sufficient surety in a sum not less than twenty per cent. in excess of the maximum amount at any time to be deposited. There shall not be deposited in any one bank an amount in excess of the paid-in-capital stock and surplus of such bank, or to exceed in amount four hundred thousand dollars except when such moneys are deposited for the purpose of meeting the payment of some obligation."

Section 4516 General Code reads:

> "The trustees of the sinking fund shall determine the method by which such bids shall be received, the authority which shall receive them, the sufficiency of the security offered, the time for the contracts for which deposits of public money may be made and all details for carrying into effect the authority here given, but proceedings in connection with such competitive bidding and the deposit of money shall be conducted in such manner as to insure full publicity and shall be open at all times to the inspection of any citizen. As to deposits made under this authority, neither the trustees of the sinking fund nor their bondsmen, if such trustees of the sinikng fund have exercised due care, shall be liable for any loss occasioned thereby."

It will be observed that in sections 4295, 4515, General Code, there is no provision as to a minimum rate of interest to be paid, nor is there any provision that interest shall be paid upon the average daily balances or any other method of computing interest. The deposits are to be let at competitive bidding to banks which offer the highest rate of interest.

Under the provisions of section 4296 General Code, the council is given authority to determine all details for carrying into effect the provisions of said section. Under section 4516 General Code, the same authority is given to the trustees of the sinking fund.

Section 330-3 General Code provides for the deposit of state funds. The last sentence of this section reads as follows:

"* * * And further, said bonds so given shall include a special obligation to settle with and pay to the treasurer of the state for the use of the state interest upon daily balances on said deposit or deposits, at the rate bid for, but not less than 3% per annum for inactive deposits and 2% per annum for active deposits (on a 365-day basis) payable quarterly on the first Monday of February, May, August and November of each year, or any time when withdrawals are made or the account is closed."

This section provides a minimum rate of interest and this interest shall be computed upon daily balances.

Section 2716 General Code covers deposits by a county. This section reads:

"When the commissioners of a county provide such depositary or depositaries, they shall publish for two consecutive weeks in two newspapers of opposite politics and of general circulation in the county a notice which shall invite sealed proposals from all banks or trust companies within the provisions of the next two preceding sections, which proposals shall stipulate the rate of interest, not less than two per cent. per annum on the average daily balance, on inactive deposits and not less than one per cent. per annum on the average daily balance on active deposits, that will be paid for the use of the money of the county, as herein provided. Each proposal shall contain the names of the sureties or securities, or both, that will be offered to the county in case the proposal is accepted."

This section also provides a minimum rate of interest, the same to be paid on the average daily balances.

Section 2737 General Code reads in part as follows:

"All money deposited with any depositary shall bear interest at the rate specified in the proposal on which the award thereof was made, computed on daily balances, and on the first day of each calendar month or at any time such account is closed, such interest shall be placed to the credit of the county, and the depositary shall notify the auditor and treasurer, each separately, in writing of the amount thereof before noon of the next business day."

Section 3322 General Code covers deposits made by a township. The first sentence of this section reads as follows:

"In townships containing two or more banks, such deposits shall be made in the bank or banks situated in the township that offer at competitive bidding the highest rate of interest on the average daily balance on such funds, which in no case shall be less than two per cent. for the full time the funds are on deposit."

This section also provides a minimum rate of interest which is to be paid on the average daily balance.

Section 7605 General Code pertains to deposits made by school districts. The first sentence of this section reads as follows:

"In school districts containing two or more banks such deposit shall be made in the bank or banks, situated therein, that at competitive bidding offer the highest rate of interest which must be at least two per cent. for the full time funds or any part thereof are on deposit."

In this section a minimum rate of two per cent. is provided for and this shall be paid, "for the full time funds or any part thereof are on deposit." For all practicable purposes this is substantially the same as providing that the interest shall be paid on the average daily balance.

It will be observed that all of the sections above quoted from provide for a minimum rate of interest to be paid upon the average daily balance, except those pertaining to deposits by a municipality and the trustees of the sinking fund. The funds of a municipality and of the sinking fund are to be awarded to those banks which offer the highest rate of interest after competitive bidding.

The matter of paying interest on public funds deposited in banks is one covered by statute or contract. The rule is stated at page 818 of Vol. 13 of Cyc.:

"A depositary is not liable for interest on deposits in the absence of statute or contract prôviding for the payment of interest."

Your question will be considered first as to deposits by a municipality and the sinking fund trustees. The contract for the payment of interest has been made upon competitive bids and awarded to the bank which has offered the highest rate of interest, payable on minimum monthly balances as provided by the ordinance.

Where a bank tenders a bid for the deposit of money by a municipality or the trustees of the sinking fund, upon the terms of interest at two per cent on the minimum amount within a given period, such offer would be in accordance with the letter of the sections covering the deposits of such money.

It is provided, however, in section 4295 General Code, that all public moneys shall be deposited, and in section 4515 General Code, that the sinking fund trustees shall receive proposals "for the deposit of all sums held in reserve." Bids are to be received under these provisions for the deposit of all moneys coming into the hands of the treasurer or all sums held in reserve by the trustees of the sinking fund, and such money is to be awarded to the bank offering at competitive bids the highest rate of interest. This provision clearly implies that interest is to be paid upon all deposits, which would in effect mean upon the average daily balances.

The ordinance which provided for payment of interest on a minimum basis is invalid, and any and all bids which are submitted for the payment of interest upon such basis would be illegal. A contract entered into upon such a bid would also be illegal.

Therefore where a bank bids to pay interest upon the minimum amount on deposit, within a given period, such bid is illegal and a contract entered into under such bid is also illegal.

It appears, however, that such a contract has been entered into, and the question arises as to the liability of the bank under such invalid contract.

The case of Franklin National Bank of Newark v. City of Newark was decided by the supreme court June 26, 1917, 96 O. S. ——, (Vol. 15, Ohio Law Reporter, No. 43, p. 664). The opinion is by the court, there being no syllabus. The city treasurer deposited funds of the city in a bank for safekeeping and without the knowledge or consent of the city or the consent of the bondsmen of the city treasurer. The funds were received by the bank with the knowledge that said funds were the public funds of the city of Newark. The city of Newark brought an action against the bank seeking an accounting of the profits made upon such deposits. It was found that the rate of profit earned by the bank on its deposit was one and forty-nine one hundredths per cent. of the amount of the deposits.

The court bases its opinion upon the provisions of section 4294 General Code. Said section 4294 General Code reads as follows:

> "Upon giving bond as required by council, the treasurer may, by and with the consent of his bondsmen, deposit all funds and public moneys of which he has charge in such bank or banks, situated within the county, which may seem best for the protection of such funds, and such deposit shall be subject at all times to the warrants and orders of the treasurer required by law to be drawn. All profits arising from such deposit or deposits shall inure to the benefit of the funds. Such deposit shall in nowise release the treasurer from liability for any loss which may occur thereby."

The conclusion of the court is stated on page 667 as follows:

> "We think it clear from the provisions of this and cognate sections of the General Code that any bank receiving funds of a municipality under the circumstances disclosed by this record, knowing the same to be the funds of the municipality, becomes a trustee and must account to the municipality for the funds so deposited and all profits arising from such deposit."

It is specifically provided in said section 4294 General Code that all profits arising from such deposits shall inure to the benefit of the funds deposited. This will apply to interest derived upon competitive bids under the provisions of section 4295 General Code, supra, and also to funds which have not been deposited in compliance with said section.

It is held in the case of State v. Citizens Bank and Trust Company, 178 S. W., 928, (supreme court of Ark.), that where an invalid bid has been made, accepted and money deposited thereunder, the bank will be estopped from claiming the invalidity of said bid and will be liable for interest the same as though the contract was valid.

It appears from your records that in an examination of the city of East Liverpool, covering a period from October 13, 1914, to June 28, 1917, on page 7 of said report the examiner has stated, referring to section 4295 G. C.:

"The law covers interest on deposits. This means actual amounts on deposit. A contract by which banks would have to pay on a greater amount than actual deposits or a maximum at any one time would be illegal. Likewise a contract by which the banks would pay on a lesser amount than actual deposits or a minimum at any time would be illegal.

Depository interest permits of but one method of computation, i. e., interest on average daily balances of actual moneys on deposit."

The examiner then proceeds, on page 8 of said report, to compute the amount of interest due on average daily balances and the amount of interest paid under the contract entered into in accordance with the ordinance and makes findings against the various banks for the difference. We assume that he has computed the amount of interest due at 2% on average daily balances. This in accordance with the decision of the supreme court in the case of Franklin National Bank of Newark v. Newark, supra, would be incorrect. The same is true relative to the finding made on page 64 in regard to the interest on the sinking fund.

In view of the fact that there is no allegation of fraud in the transaction in question, and that the banks proceeded to bid in accordance with the ordinance of council and fully carried out the terms of the alleged contract, I do not believe that an attempt should be made to enforce the findings as made in said report, but that the council and sinking fund trustees of said city should immediately proceed to pass valid legislation in regard to the depository and obtain bids for the moneys in accordance with law.

A copy of this opinion will be sent to Hon. R. G. Thompson, city solicitor of East Liverpool, Ohio.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPALITY MAY REGULATE SPEED OF MOTOR VEHICLES—FINES COLLECTED FOR VIOLATION OF SUCH ORDINANCE MUST BE TURNED INTO CITY TREASURY.

1. Under the decision of the supreme court in City of Fremont v. Keating, 96 O. S. ——, a municipality may provide, by ordinance, rule or regulation, the rate of speed of motor vehicles therein, subject to the condition that the rates so adopted must not be in conflict with section 12604 G. C. (107 O. L. 513).

2. The fines collected by the mayor, in prosecutions brought under ordinances adopted by the municipality, regulating the rate of speed of motor vehicles, must be turned into the city treasury by the mayor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of January 14, 1918, which reads as follows:

"We refer you to decision of the Ohio Supreme Court as reported in Ohio Law Bulletin, issued on January 14, 1918, in the case of Fremont v. Keating, page 20.

Question: May municipalities now under legislation of council governing speed of motor vehicles try the same as violations of ordinances, and cover the fines into the municipal treasury?"

In order to understand the scope of the decision of our supreme court, to which you make reference, and that we may answer the question you suggest, we will consider one provision of our constitution and a number of sections of our statutes.

Section 3 of article XVIII of the constitution provides as follows:

"Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws."

Section 12604 G. C., as it was considered by the supreme court of Ohio in the case referred to by you, read as follows:

"Whoever operates a motorcycle or motor vehicle at a greater speed than eight miles an hour in the business and closely built-up portions of a municipality or more than fifteen miles an hour in other portions thereof or more than twenty miles an hour outside of a municipality, shall be fined not more than twenty-five dollars, and, for a second offense shall be fined not less than twenty-five dollars nor more than fifty dollars."

This section was amended in 107 O. L. 513, but said amendment does not relate to the principles which the court had in mind when rendering the decision to which you refer.

Section 6307 G. C. reads as follows:

"Local authorities shall not regulate the speed of motor vehicles by ordinance, by-law or resolution, but, for a given time, they may set aside a specific public highway for speed tests or races. The term 'local authorities,' as used herein, means all officers, boards and committees of counties, cities, villages or townships."

I will give a brief analysis of the above quoted sections. The section of the constitution hereinbefore quoted provides that municipalities shall have authority to adopt and enforce, within their limits, such local police regulations "as are not in conflict with general laws."

Section 12604 G. C., of course, is a general law and provides the rate of speed at which motor vehicles may travel within the limits of the municipalities of the state, or, rather, it provides the maximum speed at which motor vehicles may travel within said limits.

Of course, under the provisions of section 3 of article XVIII of the constitution, municipalities would have no right to legislate upon the particular matters regulated in this statute and enact provisions which would be in conflict with the provisions set out in said section 12604.

Section 6307 G. C. provides that:

"Local authorities shall not regulate the speed of motor vehicles by ordinance, by-law or resolution," and "local authorities," as used in the section, is made to include the officers of cities and villages. Here we find a provision of the General Code which absolutely forbids municipalities to legislate upon the question of the rate of speed of motor vehicles therein. This our supreme court held to be unconstitutional, in the case to which reference is made in your letter, inasmuch as the provisions of said section contravene those of section 3 of article XVIII of the constitution. The court found as follows in the first branch of the syllabus of said case (City of Fremont v. Keating, 96 O. S. ——) :

> "Section 6307, General Code, is in direct conflict with the provisions of section 3 of article XVIII of the Constitution of Ohio, authorizing municipalities to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws, and is therefore unconstitutional and void."

In the opinion the court held:

> "This statute (section 12604 G. C.) is a police regulation, and, under the section of the constitution above referred to (section 3 of article XVIII) the municipality has the right to adopt and enforce within its limits police regulations in regard to the same subject matter, not in conflict with this statute."

Under the decision in the above quoted case, a municipality undoubtedly has the authority, under section 3 of article XVIII of the constitution, to legislate relative to the speed of motor vehicles, on condition that the regulations adopted by the council of a municipality must not be in conflict with the provisions of the general laws regulating the speed of motor vehicles. That is, the regulations adopted by the council, on the rate of speed of motor vehicles therein, must not be in conflict with the regulations set forth in section 12604 G. C. (107 O. L. 513).

If a municipality has the right to legislate upon the speed at which motor vehicles may travel under the conditions above set forth, then what is the answer to the question proposed by you, viz.:

> "May municipalities now under legislation of council governing speed of motor vehicles try the same as violations of ordinances, and cover the fines into the municipal treasury?"

Section 4270 G. C. provides that:

> "All fines and forfeitures collected by the mayor, or which in any manner comes into his hands, and all moneys received by him in his official capacity, other than his fees of office, shall be by him paid into the treasury of the corporation weekly. * * All fines, penalties and forfeitures collected by him in state cases shall be by him paid over to the county treasurer monthly."

Hence under this section if a prosecution is had under an ordinance of a municipality which regulates the rate of speed of motor vehicles, and said ordinance is not in conflict with section 12604 G. C., the fines collected as a result of such prosecution should be paid into the treasury of the corporation. To be sure, if the prosecution is had under the statute, the fine collected would be paid into the county treasury. This is the logical result following the decision of the supreme court in the case above quoted.

However, it seems necessary for me to go one step further relative to the power of a municipality to legislate upon the rate of speed of motor vehicles within the limits of the municipality. The mere fact that the court has declared section 6307 unconstitutional does not necessarily settle this question.

These is another section of the General Code which must be considered, viz., section 12608. This section reads as follows:

> "The rates of speed mentioned in section twelve thousand six hundred and four, shall not diminished or prohibited by an ordinance, rule or regulation of a municipality, board or other public authority, but municipalities, by ordinance, may define what are the business and closely built-up portions thereof."

The provisions of this section are not like those of section 6307 G. C., which the court declared to be unconstitutional, in that section 6307 forbids municipalities regulating the speed of motor vehicles by ordinance, by-law or resolution—that is, a municipality under this section is forbidden to legislate upon the rate of speed of motor vehicles therein; while section 12608 provides that:

> "The rates of speed mentioned in section twelve thousand six hundred and four, shall not be diminished or prohibited by an ordinance, rule or regulation of a municipality, * *."

The question naturally arises as to whether section 12608 G. C. is not unconstitutional for the same reasons given by the court for declaring section 6307 G. C. unconstitutional. I do not feel called upon to pass on this question. This is a matter for the courts to determine. But with section 12608 standing as it now reads, a municipality would have the right to enact an ordinance fixing the same maximum rates of speed as that provided in section 12604, or a municipality might fix a higher maximum rate of speed than that provided for in section 12604; but a municipality could not diminish the maximum rate of speed as set out in said section. Therefore, if legislation is had by a municipality within the limits just set out and prosecutions are brought under the ordinance so enacted, the fines collected would be paid into the treasury of the municipality as suggested before in this opinion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN TRUSTEES OF OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY AND THE UNDERFEED STOKER COMPANY OF AMERICA.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department for approval contract entered into on February 25, 1918, between The Underfeed Stoker Company of America, of Chicago, Ill., and the board of trustees of your university, for the construction and completion of one 6-retort stoker for 600 H. P. boiler in the new power house on the university campus, for the sum of $6,468.00, and the bond securing the same.

I have examined the contract and bond and finding the same to be in compliance with law and having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there is money available for said purpose, have this day approved the same and filed the same in the office of the auditor of state.

There was no certificate of the industrial commission accompanying the contract, but due to the fact that the contract was merely for the purchase of a boiler to be erected by you under the supervision of the company, I do not believe that the law contemplates in such an instance that a certificate be required.

I am herewith returning to you the proof of publication made by the Cleveland News, re-advertising for said bids.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MIAMI, SHELBY, ASHTABULA, GALLIA AND WOOD COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 16, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of March 13, 1918, and one of an earlier date, in which were enclosed, for my approval, resolutions for the following improvements:

Dayton-Covington Road—I. C. H. No. 63, Sec. "A," Miami county.
Sidney-Wapakoneta Road—I. C. H. No. 164, Sec. "E," M. M. No. VII, Shelby county (type A).
Sidney-Wapakoneta Road—I. C. H. No. 164, Sec. "E," M. M. No. VII, Shelby county (type B).
Youngstown-Conneaut Road—I. C. H. No. 13, Sec. "C," Ashtabula county (type A).
Gallipolis-McArthur Road—I. C. H. No. 398, Sec. "B-1," Gallia county.
Gallipolis-Jackson Road—I. C. H. No. 399, Sec. "F-1," Gallia county.
Gallipolis-Ironton Road—I. C. H. No. 405, Sec. "E-1," Gallia county.
Findlay-Bowling Green Road—I. C. H. No. 220, Sec. "E," Wood county.
Findlay-Bowling Green Road—I. C. H. No. 220, Sec. "E," Wood county (duplicate).

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find the same correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning them to you, with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF PRIVATE SALE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN CITY OF MASSILLON TO THE INDEPENDENT COMPANY OF MASSILLON.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 18, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you ask me to join with you in the sale of certain lands in the city of Massillon to the Independent Company, of, Massillon, and with which you enclose record of proceedings had by your department in reference to the sale.

I note that the sale is made for the sum of $500.00 and therefore can be made a private one, providing the governor of the state and the attorney-general join with you in the sale. I have carefully examined the different steps leading up to the sale and find all of them correct and legal, and believing $500.00 is a fair market value for said property, I herewith join with you in the sale of the same, as an evidence of which I have attached my signature to the resolutions attached to your communication and have forwarded them to the governor of the state for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

"OPEN" AS USED IN SECTION 6869 G. C., RELATIVE TO OPENING ROADS BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS, DEFINED—DUTY OF COUNTY COMMISSIONERS RELATIVE TO OPENING ROADS—COUNTY LINE IMPROVEMENTS—NO PART OF THE DUTY OF COUNTY SURVEYOR TO OPEN ROAD.

1. The word "open" as used in section 6869 contemplates the removal of obstructions above the surface of the earth from the boundaries of a road as established, but does not include any alteration of the surface of the earth itself, nor the building of bridges, culverts or ditches.

2. It is the duty of the county commissioners to cause the work necessary to "open the road" to be done, and in case of a county line improvement, this duty devolves upon the joint board of commissioners; such commissioners are not required to advertise for bids or otherwise proceed with any particular degree of formality in procuring such work to be done. In case of the opening of a county line road the expenses thereof are to be divided between the interested counties in the proportions agreed upon by the joint board.

3. It is no part of the duties of the county surveyor to open the road; the joint board of county commissioners may not call upon the surveyor of one of the interested counties to open a road established by such joint board.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 18, 1918.

HON. ROGER D. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Defiance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of January 19, 1918, enclosing a copy of a resolution adopted by a joint board of county commissioners of Defiance and Paulding counties, and an opinion sent to the county surveyor of Defiance county by the prosecuting attorney of Paulding county.

The proceeding in which the joint board was organized appears to be one for the establishment of a new road on the line between Paulding and Defiance counties. The resolution recites that inasmuch as the assessments for benefits on the improvement have been paid into the county treasury of Paulding county, the auditor of Paulding county is instructed to issue his order on the treasury of the county to the persons who have been awarded damages and compensation; and it directs the county surveyor of Defiance county to open the road to traffic.

The opinion referred to instructs the county surveyor of Defiance county that it is "within the right and power of the joint board to direct who shall open up the road, and in this road improvement said joint board has directed that the surveyor of Defiance county open up and establish said road which is within their statutory rights, and it therefore becomes your duty to open up this road by removing all fences, trees and such other obstructions as might be thereon, and in the event any land owner shall refuse or neglect to remove any fence thereon it shall become your duty to remove the same, and you will further grade said road or see that it is done sufficient for public travel thereon. In the event it should become necessary to construct any culvert or bridge on the line of said road, it will then become necessary to construct the same under the laws relating to culverts and bridges."

You submit for my opinion the following questions:

> "1. Under section 6869 how shall the surveyor construe the meaning in the word 'open'?
>
> 2. The amount of the work and cost of the same would be between $800 and $1,200. No plans estimate or specifications have been ordered.
> 3. If the commissioners as a joint board have the power or authority to authorize or compel the surveyor to act as the within resolution and opinion of Paulding county prosecutor to open said road, has the surveyor the power to remove the fences, clear the right of way, grub the stumps, construct the culverts and grade the roadway?"

I quote the following provisions of the Cass law of 1915 and the White-Mulcahy law of 1917, which was an amendment of the former measure, under the General Code numbers which have been assigned to the several sections and adopted by the general assembly.

> "Sec. 6860. The county commissioners shall have power to locate, establish * * * or change the direction of roads as hereinafter provided. This power extends to all roads within the county, except the inter-county and main market roads."
> "Sec. 6861. All public roads hereafter located and established * * * shall be of such width, not less than thirty feet, as may be determined by the county surveyor, subject to the approval of the county commissioners, * * * If such public road is established upon a county or state line, the county surveyor may, subject to the approval of the county commissioners, determine the width of the strip of land in such county to be used for such purposes, but such width shall not be less than fifteen feet."
> "Sec. 6862. (107 O. L. 71.) Applications to locate, establish * * * or change the directions of a public road shall be made by petition to the county commissioners * * *. The word 'improvement' used in sections 6862 to 6878 inclusive of the General Code signifies any location, establishment * * * or change in the direction of a public road, * * * as requested in the petition filed under the authority of such sections, or determined upon by a board of county commissioners or joint board by resolution adopted by unanimous vote."

"Sec. 6863. * * * The county commissioners shall require the petitioners * * * to enter into bond with sufficient sureties in favor of the state of Ohio, for the use and benefit of the county, and conditioned that the petitioners * * * will pay into the treasury of the county, the costs and expenses incurred in the proceedings for such improvement, in case the prayer of such petition be not granted."

"Sec. 6865. If the commissioners after the view of said proposed improvement, consider such improvement of sufficient public importance, they shall instruct the county surveyor to make a plat and survey of the same. The surveyor shall make a report * * *. Such report shall set forth the opinion of said surveyor either for or against the granting of such proposed improvement. In case the petition requests the location or establishment of a road, such report shall state the width to which said improvement shall be opened. * * *"

"Sec. 6866. The commissioners shall at the date of the final hearing on said improvement * * * hear any testimony bearing upon the public utility of the improvement and offered either by the petitioners or by any interested persons opposing the granting of the improvement. If the commissioners find said improvement will serve the public convenience and welfare, they shall grant said improvement, if not, they shall refuse the improvement and dismiss the petition."

"Sec. 6868. If in the opinion of the county commissioners the improvement is of sufficient importance to the public to cause the compensation and damages on account thereof to be paid to the person or persons entitled thereto out of the county treasury they may so order. If in the opinion of the commissioners the improvement is not of sufficient importance * * * they may order the compensation and damages or such part thereof as they may deem reasonable and just to be paid by the petitioners and the balance, if any, to be paid out of the county treasury. * * *"

"Sec. 6869. When on the final hearing thereon the finding of the county commissioners is in favor of an improvement, the county commissioners shall cause a record of the proceedings including the survey and plat of said proposed improvement to be entered in the proper road records of the county * * *. If the proceeding be one for the location or establishment of a road, the commissioners shall then cause said road to be opened up as established, and such road shall thenceforth be a public road, and shall be kept open, maintained and improved as provided by law. * * * No road shall be opened up, however, until all compensation and damages allowed are paid. A county road or part thereof which remains unopened for seven years after the order establishing it was made or authority granted for opening it, shall be vacated, and the right to build it pursuant to the establishment in the original proceedings therefor shall be barred."

"Sec. 6874. When the improvement petitioned for is along or upon a county line, a petition shall be filed with the commissioners of either county. The commissioners of such county shall * * * cause a certified copy of such petition to be filed with the commissioners of the other county * * * and the commissioners of the county where the original petition is filed shall fix a time and place for a joint meeting of the board of commissioners of the counties interested * * *."

"Sec. 6875. The joint board of commissioners at such meeting shall fix a date when the joint board will view the proposed improvement, and the date of the final hearing thereon, and such proceedings shall be thereafter had upon said petition by the joint board as though the proceedings were before a single board as provided in the preceding sections of this act. * * *"

"Sec. 6877. The compensation and damages awarded in case of a joint improvement, together with the expenses thereof, shall be divided between the counties interested, as the joint board may agree and determine, and in case of failure to agree * * * the joint board shall certify that fact to the state highway commissioner who shall thereupon make such apportionment."

"Sec. 6878. The commissioners of any county or any joint board of commissioners of two or more counties, at a meeting had for that purpose, may by resolution declare by unanimous vote their intention to locate, establish * * * or change the direction of any road, and such notice shall thereupon be given as is provided for upon the filing of a petition for such improvement and like proceedings shall be had by such commissioners or joint board thereof as in the case of the filing of a petition before them asking for such improvement."

I take it that the proceeding was to locate and establish a county line road. I am unable to understand the recital in the resolution to the effect "that the assessments for benefits on said improvement have been paid into the county treasury of Paulding county, Ohio," because in the location and establishment of a county line road or other public road under the statutes which have been quoted, there are no such things as assessments for benefits. I assume, however, that this recital is a mere misnomer, and that the reference here is to the payment by the petitioners of some part of the compensation and damages as provided by section 6868 above quoted.

The statutes neither define the phrase "open up" nor provide machinery or procedure by which this process, whatever it may be called, shall be carried out. However, there are certain inferences to be drawn from the statutes as we now find them. Thus section 6869, in which the phrase "open up" is found, in one place provides that the commissioners shall "cause" this to be done, and in another place refers to the action of the commissioners as "authority granted for opening it." These two forms of expression are on their face inconsistent with each other, one making it appear that the "opening up" of a road is in effect the act of the commissioners, though actually done by someone else at their instigation, the other making it appear that the action of the commissioners is limited to granting authority to someone to do the thing contemplated. None of your questions can be satisfactorily answered without resolving the ambiguity that appears upon the face of section 6869.

Fortunately the previous history of the statutes for the establishment of public roads in this state is comparatively simple, and may shed some light upon the meaning of the present statutes. Under such laws there were two kinds of roads, county roads and township roads. The pertinent provisions of the old law respecting county roads were as follows:

"Section 6881. Thenceforth such road shall be a public highway, and the county commissioners shall issue their order to the trustees of the proper township or townships directing it to be opened. * * *"

"Section 6885. The county commissioners shall not take possession of land appropriated for the purpose of a county road until the damages assessed for it are paid." (In this connection I may say that section 6886 of the old law provided for collecting damages from the petitioners by assessing them on abutting property, which apparently accounts for the form of words used in the resolution. This scheme of things is done away with, but evidently the commissioners are using phrases to which their predecessors were accustomed under the old law.)

The corresponding provisions of the township road law were as follows:

"The trustees shall * * * issue their order to the petitioners or any of them, or to the proper superintendent where it is made his duty to open such road, to open the road to the width named in the report of the viewers. Such road shall be a township road, subject to be kept open and in repair at the expense of the applicant for it, or otherwise as provided by law." Section 6965.

Section 7137 of the General Code as formerly in force, provided:

"A road superintendent shall open, or cause to be opened, and kept in repair, the public roads and highways which are laid out and established in his road district, and remove or cause to be removed, all encroachments, by fences or otherwise, and obstructions that are found thereon. He may enter upon uncultivated or improved lands, unincumbered by crops, near to or adjoining such roads, cut or carry away timber, excepting trees or groves on improved lands planted or left for ornament or shade, and dig, or cause to be dug and carried away, gravel, sand or stone which is necessary to make, improve or repair such road." (The last provision was held to be unconstitutional, Snyder v. McCollough, 6 N. P. 567, but the effect was probably cured by the later amendment of section 7138 General Code, providing for the payment of damages by an appeal to the courts.)

The section which I have just quoted, in my opinion is very important, showing as it does the character of the acts which then constituted opening a road.

In my opinion the first question is to be answered in the light of this section, which indicates clearly that among the things to be done in opening a road is the removal of encroachments, by fences or otherwise, and obstructions found thereon. In fact, in my opinion the removal of obstructions within the boundaries as established, constitutes its opening. Whether or not more is required, such as grading, is a question which will be postponed for the time being.

Original section 7137 of the General Code was of course repealed when the Cass law was passed. I am unable to find in that measure or in the White-Mulcahy act of 1917 any adequate substitute for it. True, the Cass law provided for a township highway superintendent, who may have been intended as a substitute for the road superintendent provided for in section 7137 et seq. of the original General Code. The duties of this highway superintendent, however, and of the township trustees themselves seem to be limited to "improving, dragging, repairing or maintaining" roads. (The above language is quoted from section 3298-1, Sec. 60 of the Cass Law; 106 O. L. 589.) All that was said upon the subject of the township highway superintendent is found in the following sections of the law:

"Under the direction of the township trustees he shall have control of the roads of his district and keep them in good repair." Sec. 3370; 106 O. L. 593.

"The township highway superintendent shall divide * * * the unimproved public roads of the township into road dragging districts * * *. He shall from time to time designate what districts shall be dragged." (There was more about dragging in the statutes which it is not necessary to quote. The above is quoted from section 3375 of the General Code as enacted in 106 O. L. 594.)

"* * * The township highway superintendent shall perform such other duties as may be prescribed by law or by the rules and regulations of the township trustees or the county highway superintendent. * * *" Section 3374.

But whatever might have been argued from the fact that the Cass law when repealing the provisions for township road superintendents substituted somewhat vaguer provisions for township highway superintendents which might be deemed to be analogous officers, becomes of little aid, when it is noticed that in the White-Mulcahy act, the sections of the former law providing for township highway superintendents, are greatly modified.

Section 3370 of the General Code as last amended by the measure referred to, now provides that,

"the township trustees shall have control of the township roads of their township and shall keep the same in good repair. * * * In the maintenance and repair of roads the township trustees may proceed in any one of the following methods as they may deem for the best interest of the public, to wit:

1. They may designate one of their number to have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within the township, or

2. They may divide the township into three road districts, in which event each trustee shall have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within one of such districts, or

3. They may appoint some competent person, not a member of the board of trustees, to have charge of the maintenance and repair of roads within the township which person shall be known as township highway superintendent, * * *."

Section 3373 now provides that,

"In the maintenance and repair of roads the township trustees may proceed either by contract or force account." (Then follows detailed provision for the making of contracts and for the purchase of material, machinery, etc.)

The provisions for dragging unimproved roads, sections 3375-3376, were amended so as to cast upon the township trustees or highway superintendent the duty formerly imposed upon the township highway superintendent.

Thus far, it appears that the duty of opening up roads which was under the original road laws definitely imposed upon the township road superintendent, or in the case of township roads, upon petitioners, is nowhere expressly provided for. We have only the vague provision that the county commissioners shall cause the roads to be opened up. However, for certain purposes, at least, one radical change in the classification of roads was made by the Cass law and perpetuated by the White-Mulcahy law, which must be considered in this connection. Formerly (and perhaps at the present time for some purposes) roads were classified as county or township roads accordingly as they had been laid out and established by the county commissioners or the township trustees. Since the enactment of the Cass law, however, the authority to lay out public roads is vested exclusively in the county commissioners. Nevertheless we still have county and township roads.

Section 7464 of the General Code, section 241 of the Cass law, as still in force, makes a classification of the public roads of the state into state roads, county roads and township roads. The following quotation from this section will suffice:

> "(a) State roads shall include such * * * roads as have been or may hereafter be constructed by the state * * * or taken over by the state * * * and such roads shall be maintained by the state highway department.
> (b) County roads shall include all roads which * * * may be improved by the county * * * or heretofore built by the state and not a part of the intercounty or main market system of roads, together with such roads as have been or may be constructed by the township trustees to conform to the standards for county roads as fixed by the county commissioners, and all such roads shall be maintained by the county commissioners.
> (c) Township roads shall include all public highways of the state other than state or county roads as hereinbefore defined, and the trustees of such township shall maintain all such roads within their respective townships; * * *"

This classification is on the basis of and for the purpose of improvement and maintenance. An improved road is either a county or a state road. An unimproved road is always a township road. Therefore, a road newly established would, at least after being opened up, constitute a township road, and it would be the duty of the township trustees to maintain it.

This point gives rise to the inquiry as to whether or not the work necessary to be done in opening up a new road is maintenance. If it is, then manifestly the township trustees are charged by law with the duty of performing the work. I say this because the joint board of commissioners of Paulding and Defiance counties have sought to cast this duty upon the county surveyor of one of the counties, and I am unable to find in the statutes relating to the duties of the county surveyor in respect of roads, and provision from which an inference charging him with this particular duty can be drawn, unless it be those provisions thereof which impose upon him certain duties respecting repair and maintenance.

Section 7184 General Code, as amended in the White-Mulcahy act provided in part as follows:

> "The county surveyor shall have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance and repair of all bridges and highways within his county under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners. The county surveyor shall also have general charge of the construction, reconstruction, resurfacing or improvement of roads by township trustees * * *. The county surveyor shall not be authorized, however, to perform any duties in connection with the repair, maintenance or dragging of roads by township trustees, except that upon the request of any board of township trustees he shall be required to inspect any road > or roads designated by them and advise them as to the best methods of repairing, maintaining or dragging the same."

For the purposes of the present question the section last above quoted is subject to the following analysis:

The phrase "the jurisdiction of the county commissioners" as used therein refers to jurisdiction as established by section 7464 of the General Code. Though the opening of a road is a matter within the jurisdiction of the county commissioners, the road in process of opening is not a "highway under the jurisdiction of the county commissioners" because it is not yet a highway at all. In short, this section with the others which have been quoted furnishes an answer to one of the questions so far left open, viz., as to whether or not the services contemplated in the opening of a road can be brought under the heading of maintenance and repair. In my opinion they cannot. A road is not a proper subject of maintenance and repair until it is open for travel and has acquired the status of a public highway for the purposes of section 7464 so that the duty of maintaining and repairing it can be assigned to the appropriate authorities defined therein. Therefore, though section 7184 clearly shows that the county surveyor is to have charge of the maintenance and repair of county roads and is not to have charge of such maintenance and repair of township roads, it is neither to be inferred on the one hand that by reason of this provision he is to perform the services of opening the road, nor on the other hand, by reason of this provision he is to have nothing to do with opening a road, and the township trustees are to have exclusive charge and supervision of such work.

These conditions bring us back to the starting point of our inquiry, for they establish that neither by express provision nor by inference from any of the express provisions of the present law is it the duty of any public officer other than the county commissioners, either on their own motion, or under the direction of the county commissioners, to perform the services incident to opening up a road established by the commissioners. The phrase "the commissioners shall then cause said road to be opened up and established" must be given its natural meaning, which is that the commissioners themselves must procure the performance of the necessary work without being entitled to call upon any other officer for the purpose. This result is strengthened by the provision of section 6877 to the effect that in case of a joint improvement,

> "the expenses thereof in addition to the compensation and damages shall be divided between the counties interested as the joint board may agree and determine."

If any part of the work of opening up a road was to be done by a salaried public official, such as the county surveyor, it would be impracticable if not impossible to ascertain the expenses of the establishment of a road.

It is my opinion, therefore, that a joint board of county commissioners proceeding in the establishment of a county line road, have no authority to call upon the county surveyor of either of the interested counties to perform any work in connection with the opening of the road, but that such work should be done by contract entered into by the joint board, and the expenses thereof should be divided between the interested counties, as agreed upon by the joint board. If the road were located only within one county a similar result would follow, and a county surveyor could not be compelled, nor would he be authorized to perform services in connection with the opening of a new road, but said services would have to be provided by the commissioners and paid for out of the general county fund.

In passing I may say that there is no authority for ordering the petitioners or the owners of lands through which the road passes to do this work at their own expense. An express provision formerly authorized the township trustees to require the petitioners or some of them to open the road, in the case of a township road. This provision has been repealed.

It is true that section 7204 General Code provides that,

> "It shall be the duty of the owners or occupants of lands situated along the highways to remove all obstructions within the bounds of the highways which have been placed there either by themselves or their agents."

This, however, in my opinion refers to the removal of obstructions placed upon an existing highway. In my opinion a public road does not become a highway until it has been opened up.

The foregoing comments dispose of your third question and partially dispose of your first question. There remains in connection with your first question the one point as to whether or not any grading work is to be done in opening up a road. The former statute which I have quoted (section 7137 General Code now repealed) speaks of the removal of encroachments and obstructions. It also authorizes a road superintendent to take gravel necessary to "make, improve or repair such road." In my opinion no inference would arise under this section to to the effect that grading is a part of the opening of a road, because of the authority vested in the former township road superintendent to take gravel under the provisions thereof. The one word necessary to be interpreted in this connection is the word "make." In my opinion this is not equivalent to "open up." Without quoting several sections in the chapter relating to superintendents and road work as it formerly existed, I deem it sufficient to say that there was certain further work which might be done upon unimproved roads, such as construction of ditches and grading (section 7142 now repealed) and the like, which come under the general heading of road work to be performed by the township road superintendent by the aid of the compulsory labor on public roads, which in my opinion, followed the opening of the road and were not a part of the process, but came under the heading of "make" or "construct" and would now be contemplated in the general term "maintenance," whether or not initial grading of the road so as to make it passable for travel is a part of the work mentioned, or belongs in the class of services last above mentioned.

Section 7137 furnishes no conclusive answer to this question. There is, however, a judicial interpretation of the term "open" in this connection in the case of Reed v. Toledo, 18 O. 165, from the opinion of which, per Caldwell, J., I quote the following:

> "By the term opening we do not understand the improvement of a street or highway by grading, culverting, etc.; the term is generally (we think always) clearly distinguishable from such kind of improvement. The term opening, refers to the throwing open to the public, what before was appropriated to individual use, and the removing of such obstructions as exist on the surface of the earth, rather than any artificial improvement of the surface."

This definition is in accord with the great weight of authority and with what appears to me to be the correct inferences to be drawn from section 7137, though I have said that the section itself is not conclusive on that point. There is a clear distinction between opening a road and making a road. In my opinion an unimproved township road must be opened by the county commissioners and made by the township trustees. Therefore, it becomes necessary to determine carefully the distinction between the two processes, inasmuch as the power to conduct them is committed to different authorities. No clearer test could be laid down than that enunciated in Reed v. Toledo, supra. An opening is the removal of all obstructions which exist on the surface of the earth, such as buildings, fences, trees and the like. All alterations of the surface of the earth as it exists come under the other heading.

I think these comments answer your first question to the extent that they define "opening."

You will observe that in the main I agree with the prosecuting attorney of Paulding county, as I understand the meaning of his opinion, but I am obliged to disagree with that part of his definition which implies that a sufficient amount of grading in order to make the road passable, is a part of its opening. The road should indeed be graded, but not as a part of the opening thereof. The duty of grading it belongs to the township trustees under the existing laws.

The county commissioners are not absolutely obliged to open the road, and cannot be held liable if they do not do so. Herein is the explanation of the apparent ambiguity encountered when the last sentence of section 6869 is considered. If the petitioners for the road are not satisfied with the promptness of the county commissioners in causing the road to be opened, they may do so themselves, and all the authorities agree that such an opening would be perfectly efficacious to dedicate the road to public travel and prevent the loss or barring of the right to build it. In the event that such petitioners should open it at their own expense or by their own labor, there would be no recourse against the county commissioners. Whether the commissioners might be compelled by mandamus to open the road is a question which I do not intend to pass upon in saying that the commissioners cannot be compelled in any other way to do so.

Your second question remains unanswered. I do not understand to what you refer in mentioning the cost of the opening and stating that no plans and specifications have been prepared. I take it, however, that when you submitted this question you had in mind the possibility that grading was a part of the procedure of opening the road. I have pointed out that such is not the case. Of course, it would be impossible and unnecessary to prepare plans and specifications for cutting down trees, removing fences, etc. There is no provision which requires the county commissioners in opening a road to advertise for bids or have plans and specifications drawn or proceed with any particular degree of formality.

I answer your questions then by the following statements:

1. The word "open" as used in section 6869 contemplates the removal of obstructions above the surface of the earth from the boundaries of a road as established, but does not include any alteration of the surface of the earth itself, nor the building of bridges, culverts or ditches.

2. It is the duty of the county commissioners to cause the work necessary to "open the road" to be done, and in case of a county line improvement, this duty devolves upon the joint board of commissioners; such commissioners are not required to advertise for bids nor otherwise to proceed with any particular degree of formality in procuring such work to be done. In case of the opening of a county line road the expenses thereof are to be divided between the interested counties in the proportions agreed upon by the joint board.

3. It is no part of the duties of the county surveyor to open the road; the joint board of county commissioners may not call upon the surveyor of one of the interested counties to open a road established by such joint board.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASES OF STATE LANDS TO THE B. & O. RAILROAD CO., BUCKEYE LAKE; FORNSHELL AND THOMPSON, BUCKEYE LAKE; W. E. SHAW AND A. R. KELCH, LOGAN; THE CITY OF TOLEDO; HERMAN NOHR, INDIAN LAKE; AND C. S. LAWSON, RUSSELL'S POINT; DISAPPROVAL OF LEASE TO THE INDEPENDENT COMPANY OF MASSILLON.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 18, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 13, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, the following leases, in triplicate:

	Valuation.
To The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Co., right of way over marginal strips of Buckeye Lake at the easterly end thereof between Thornport and Avondale	$2,500 00
To Fornshell and Thompson, lease for cottage site at west end of Buckeye Lake	400 00
To W. E. Shaw and A. R. Kelch, a portion of the abandoned Hocking Canal in rear of lots owned by these parties, in Logan, Ohio	400 00
To The Independent Co., of Massillon, Ohio, lease for 34 feet of the berme bank of the Ohio Canal at North street in Massillon, Ohio	400 00
To The city of Toledo, a portion of the Swan Creek Canal in Toledo, Lucas county, Ohio, which the city desires for street purposes. A new channel is to be excavated and a deed in fee simple executed by the state of Ohio for the new right of way. This lease is merely to put the city of Toledo in legal possession of the property while the improvements are being made, a statute having been enacted by the general assembly authorizing the exchange of deeds for the property in question	200 00
To Herman Nohr, 25 feet of the water front of Indian Lake for boat house and landing purposes	100 00
To C. S. Lawson, Russell's Point, Ohio, 25 feet of the water front at Indian Lake for boat house and landing purposes	100 00

I have carefully examined these leases and find them, with one exception, correct in form and legal, and am therefore endorsing my approval upon the same and forwarding them to the governor of the state for his consideration.

The lease made to The Independent Company of Massillon, Ohio, of thirty-four feet of the berme bank of the Ohio Canal in Massillon, is defective, in that the resolution adopted by said company authorized the president of the company and the secretary thereof to execute the lease for said company, and in the execution of the lease the manager of the company signed for and on behalf of said company, instead of the president and secretary thereof. For this reason I am of the opinion that this lease should not be approved and am therefore returning it to you for correction as above suggested.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

THE STATE MAY ASSUME THE PART OF THE COST WHICH IS ORDINARILY BORNE BY THE COUNTY, IN THE CONSTRUCTION OF IMPROVEMENT OF MAIN MARKET ROADS—MAY NOT ASSUME TOWNSHIP'S OR PROPERTY OWNER'S SHARE.

In the construction or improvement of main market roads, wherein the township trustees co-operate, the state may assume the twenty-five per cent. of the cost and expense thereof which is ordinarily borne by the county; but it cannot assume any part of the proportion which is ordinarily borne by the township, viz., fifteen per cent. nor any part of the ten per cent. which is assessed against the property owners.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 18, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 4, 1918, which reads, as follows:

> "I have been authorized by the highway advisory board to ask your opinion as to whether or not the highway department, in co-operating direct with township trustees of any county in the improvement of a main market road, may pay more than seventy-five per cent. of the cost of the improvement."

In order to obtain a fundamental principle upon which to base an answer to your communication, it will be necessary for us to turn to section 1231 G. C. (107 O. L. 137). This section reads in part as follows:

> "Sec. 1231. * * County commissioners, township trustees and village councils shall have the same power and authority to co-operate in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of main market roads as is granted to them by this act in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways; and in case the commissioners of any county, the trustees of any township and the council of any village, or any of such authorities, determine to co-operate in the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of any main market road, the procedure shall be the same as in the case of co-operation by such authorities, in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways, as provided in this act. * *"

So it will be seen that in those cases wherein the township trustees co-operate with the state highway commissioner in the construction or improvement of a main market road, the same procedure should be had and the same power and authority is granted as in the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of inter-county highways.

We will turn now to the provisions which have to do with the construction of inter-county highways when the township trustees co-operate with the state highway commissioner.

Section 1192 G. C. (107 O. L. 123) reads as follows:

"In case the county commissioners do not file any application for state aid before March first of any year in which the funds will be available for the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of some one or more of the inter-county highways or main market roads, then the board of township trustees of any township within the county may file such application, and the state highway commissioner may co-operate with such trustees in the construction or improvement of said highway in the manner hereinafter provided in cases where the county commissioners make such application."

From this section it is clear that when the township trustees make an application for state aid, the state highway commissioner may co-operate with such trustees in the construction or improvement of a highway in the same manner as is provided in cases where the county commissioners make such application.

Section 1214 G. C. (107 O. L. 129) relates to the apportionment of the cost and expense of an improvement among the county, township and abutting property owners. This section reads as follows:

"Sec. 1214. Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the county shall pay twenty-five per cent. of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, except the cost and expenses of bridges and culverts, shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. * * Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement, * *."

It will be noted that under this section, unless there is some other provision made, the county must bear twenty-five per cent. of the cost of an improvement, the township fifteen per cent. and the abutting property owners ten per cent.

However, section 1217 G. C. provides in part:

"* * Where the application for said improvement is made by the township trustees, the state may assume all or any part of the county's proportion of the cost of said improvement, * *."

This section further provides that:

> "In no case shall the property owners abutting upon said improvement be relieved by the state, county or township, from the payment of ten per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, * *."

From the provisions of this section it is evident that the state may assume the county's proportion of the improvement, which would be twenty-five per cent., but there is no provision made for the state assuming any part of the proportion to be borne by the township, which is fifteen per cent., and the statute specifically provides that in no case shall the property owners be relieved of the payment of ten per cent. of the cost and expense of an improvement.

In accordance with the provisions of section 1231, supra, if this principle is true in the construction and improvement of inter-county highways, it is equally true in the case of the construction or improvement of main market roads, wherein a township co-operates with the state highway department.

Hence it may be concluded that your department may assume the payment of fifty per cent. of the cost and expense of the construction and improvement of a main market road, and in addition may assume the part which otherwise would be borne by the county, viz., twenty-five per cent., thus making a total of seventy-five per cent. which may be borne by the state in such an improvement. But there is no provision made whereby the state may assume a part of the fifteen per cent. to be paid by the township, and the state is forbidden to assume any part of the ten per cent. which is to be borne by the property owners.

Therefore, the maximum amount which the state can assume in the improvement of a main market road, wherein the township trustees co-operate, is seventy-five per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LAYING OUT AND ESTABLISHING NEW ROADS GOVERNED BY SECTIONS 6860 ET SEQ. G. C.—COSTS WHEN PETITION NOT GRANTED —HOW COMPENSATION AND DAMAGES ALLOWED PROPERTY OWNERS ASSESSED WHEN ROAD ESTABLISHED—COSTS INCURRED IN OPENING UP ROAD BORNE BY COUNTY.

1. Sections 6860 et seq. G. C. control in the laying out and establishing of a new road, and not the provisions of sections 6906 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 95).

2. If the prayer of the petition for the establishing of a road be not granted, then the petitioners must bear the costs of the proceeding. If the road be established, the compensation and damages allowed to property owners may be assessed either against the county or the petitioners, in the discretion of the county commissioners, the part assessed against the county being paid out of the general county fund; and the ordinary costs of the proceeding would be paid by the county out of the general county fund.

The costs incurred in opening up the road to public travel by the county commissioners would also be borne by the county and be paid out of the general county fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 19, 1918.

HON. PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 2, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "The commissioners of our county are debating the question of establishing a new road in Blue Rock township, or Meigs. They have had a hearing on this matter and the question has been put to me, from what fund the damages and improvements of this road should be drawn. I cannot tell them from what fund it shall be paid.
> I would like to have your interpretation of the section of the law found in 107 O. L. at p. 98, whether it is to be paid out of the general county fund or the road fund.
> In case there is no money in the county fund or the road fund, how can the same be paid?"

From the fact that you ask me to place an interpretation upon section 6919 G. C. (107 O. L. 98), I take it that you have in mind that sections 6906 et seq. (p. 95 of 107 O. L.) control in the establishment or laying out of a new road.

In reference to establishing and laying out new roads, I desire to make the following general observations: Sections 6906 et seq. have particularly to do with the construction, reconstruction, improvement or repair of any public road or part thereof; while sections 6860 et seq. relate to the location, establishing, altering, widening, straightening, vacating or changing the direction of roads. On account of this fact it will not be necessary for us to interpret section 6919, which is a part of the act pertaining to the construction, reconstruction and repair of public roads, but we must look to the provisions of section 6860 et seq., which relate to the laying out, establishing, etc., of roads.

You desire to know, relative to the establishing of a new road, whether the costs and expenses thereof are to be paid out of the general county fund or out of the road fund.

Section 6863 G. C. provides that the petitioners petitioning for the establishing of a new road shall—

> "* * enter into bond with sufficient sureties * * conditioned that the petitioners asking for such improvement will pay into the treasury of the county, the costs and expenses incurred in the proceedings for such improvement, in case the prayer of such petition be not granted."

From this section it is evident that if the improvement is not made in accordance with the prayer of the petition, then the petitioners themselves must bear the costs and expenses of the proceeding.

Section 6868 G. C. provides as follows:

> "If in the opinion of the county commissioners the improvement is of sufficient importance to the public to cause the compensation and damages on account thereof to be paid to the person or persons entitled thereto out of the county treasury they may so order. If in the opinion of the commissioners the improvement is not of sufficient importance to cause the compensation and damages to be paid from the county treasury, they may order the compensation and damages or such part thereof as they may deem reasonable and just to be paid by the petitioners and the balance, if any, to be paid out of the county treasury, * *."

From this section, so far as the compensation and damages to abutting property owners are concerned, the county commissioners must decide whether this part of the costs and expenses of the improvement is to be borne by the petitioners themselves or be paid out of the county treasury. This section further provides that if a part of the compensation and damages is assessed against the petitioners and they do not pay the same, they become liable then for the costs of the proceeding which shall be adjudged against them.

These sections take care of the costs and expenses of the establishing of a new road, excepting in those cases in which the county commissioners grant the prayer of the petition and establish a new road. In such cases these sections do not provide for the costs and expenses of the improvement, other than that part which is due for compensation and damages granted to abutting property owners.

Who, then, will pay what might be called the court costs in the proceeding; that is, such costs as are made by way of advertising or in securing witnesses, if any should be needed? The act seems to be entirely silent in reference to this matter, but from the provisions of section 6863 G. C., above quoted, it appears that it was the intention of the legislature that if the prayer of the petition be granted and a new road be established, the county should pay the costs and expenses incurred in the proceedings for such improvement, other than the compensation and damages granted to injured property owners, which is taken care of as set out in section 6868, above quoted.

It will be noted that section 6863 provides that a bond must be given, conditioned that the petitioners will pay the costs and expenses incurred in case the prayer of the petition be not granted.

The only reasonable inference is that if the prayer of the petition be granted and the road be established, the county should pay the costs of the proceeding and that these costs must be paid out of the general county fund. In fact I incidentally so held in an opinion (No. 1084), rendered by me to Hon. Roger D. Hay, prosecuting attorney of Defiance county. In that case, however, it was more in the nature of obiter dicta, rather than an answer to the request made by Mr. Hay. In said opinion, I went into the question at some length as to what the county commissioners might do in the opening up of a road which they establish. Of course, the expenses incurred by them in the opening up of the road would also have to be borne by the county and paid out of the general county fund. If the county commissioners are authorized to employ the necessary means to open up the road, the county would be compelled to pay for the costs of the same.

You further ask how the costs should be paid in case there is no money in the county fund. Of course, if there is no money in the county fund, the costs could not be paid other than by a transfer of money from some other fund to the county fund, in accordance with the provisions of law.

I am rendering this opinion upon the theory that the county commissioners have in mind merely the establishing of a new road. Your communication is a little uncertain from the fact that you use the word "improvements." But I do not gather from this language that the county commissioners are contemplating improving the road under the provisions of sections 6906 et seq. I am not unmindful of the language used in section 6906 G. C. (107 O. L. 95), which reads in part as follows:

"The board of commissioners of any county shall have power, as hereinafter provided, to construct a public road by laying out and building a new public road, or by improving, reconstructing or repairing any existing public road or part thereof * *."

I am not passing upon the question as to whether the county commissioners might proceed under the provisions of sections 6906 et seq., provided they have in mind both the establishing and laying out of a new road and at the same time the improvement of the same. But it is my opinion that the county commissioners should proceed under sections 6860 to 6889 inc. G. C. when they are merely contemplating the establishing of a new road and opening up the same to public travel, and not under sections 6906 et seq. G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

The assignment to which you refer and which is attached to your letter is as follows:

"TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

Mr. Chas. Koerber of Grafton, Ohio, has a valid claim against the agricultural department of Ohio for $727.50, for tuberculosis cattle slaughtered by state order.

This claim should have been passed by the legislature at their 1916-1917 session. The claim had been certified to the appropriation committee as valid by this department, and will be certified again at the next session of the legislature.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) N. E. SHAW,
Secretary of Agriculture.

"THEO. A. BURNETT, STATE VETERINARIAN.

WELLINGTON, OHIO, February 9, 1918.

Department of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio:

GENTLEMEN:—Whenever the Ohio legislature shall have ordered the within claim paid, please pay over the funds to the First Wellington bank, Wellington, Ohio.

(Signed) CHAS. KOERBER, Grafton, Ohio."

Accepted:
Department of Agriculture,
By----------

It appears that the cattle were slaughtered by state order on December 13, 1916, therefore section 1115 G. C., 106 O. L., 150, is the statute under which the then board of agriculture was operating. The first paragraph of said section reads as follows:

> "If an animal is killed under the provisions herein relating to the board of agriculture, the compensation to be made for the slaughtered animal shall be computed by the board of agriculture on the basis of the actual value of such animals immediately prior to infection or contagion or at such time as the board may determine."

Section 1116 G. C., 106 O. L., 150, reads as follows:

> "When approved by the board of agriculture all claims of owners of animals killed under the provisions herein relating to the board shall be paid from funds appropriated by the general assembly for that purpose."

It appears, therefore, that by legislative enactment the state has determined upon the policy of paying for the cattle slaughtered by appropriations to be made by the legislature. However, no such appropriation has as yet been made for reimbursement of the owner for the cattle slaughtered in the instant case. Therefore, the legislature will be the sole judge of the manner in which the claim for such cattle shall be paid.

There is no doubt that this claim against the state of Ohio, for which no appropriation has yet been made, is an assignable claim, but I would be unable to say whether your department can legally pay the assignee of such claim the amount due the individual until the legislature has appropriated money for the payment of the same, since I do not know what conditions the legislature will impose for the payment of this money. If a general appropriation is made the auditor of state, under section 243, 107 O. L., 640, would be required to "examine each invoice presented to him * * * or sundry claim allowed and appropriated for by the general assembly, and if he finds it to be a valid claim against the state and legally due, and that there is money in the state treasury duly appropriated to pay it and that all requirements of law have been complied with, he shall issue thereon a warrant on the treasurer of state for the amount found due, and file and preserve the invoice in his office."

If the appropriation is made in the sundry bill and the legislature adopts the same language in such appropriation as did the 80th general assembly in passing

House Bill 721, 106 O. L., 834, the moneys will not be payable save on approval of a special auditing committee, consisting of the budget commissioner, the attorney-general, the auditor of state and the chairman of the finance committee of the house and senate.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY ROAD MAPS—HOW AND WHEN PUBLISHED—COPYRIGHT.

1. Under the provisions of sections 2284-1 and 2284-2 G. C., the different county road maps of the state are published as one set of maps.

2. This set of maps is published as soon as information regarding the character of the improved roads of the state has been compiled and when plates showing the same have been prepared.

3. This set of maps shall be copyrighted from time to time when published, according to the federal laws controlling the matter of copyright.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 4, 1918, in which you ask for additional information in reference to opinion No. 796 as of date November 20, 1917. You particularly refer to the answer given to question No. 5 of your former request.

I am not quite sure that I understand the question suggested by you, hence I am going to lay down a few fundamental propositions which will, I think, clearly cover the difficulty you may have in mind.

In your former communication and in the communication of March 4th you use the language "either singly or in separate sets." I am not quite sure as to what you have in mind in reference to the language used, but I assume that you inquire as to whether the maps of the different counties of the state could be copyrighted singly without combining them in one complete set of maps. In order that we may be sure about this proposition, let me say that it is my opinion that there is but one set of maps, that is, the maps of all the counties of the state are combined in one set of maps and are to be published as the "Highway Maps of Ohio." This seems to be fairly clear from section 2284-2 G. C., which reads in part:

> "An edition of five thousand copies of the highway maps of Ohio shall be published. * * *"

This language evidently means that there is to be an edition published covering all the county maps of the state.

Further along in the same section we find the following language:

> "Future editions of not to exceed five thousand copies each, may thereafter be published when ninety per cent of the last preceding edition has been sold. The commissioners of public printing shall have charge of the printing and binding of the editions of the highway maps of Ohio."

From this language it is clearly evident to me that the legislature did not intend that the different county maps should be singly copyrighted, but that they should be taken together in one set and published by your department, which publication should be copyrighted by you.

The second question which arises in your communication is as to when this set of maps shall be published. This is answered in section 2284-2 G. C. in the following language:

> "An edition of five thousand copies of the highway maps of Ohio shall be published as soon as information regarding the character of improved roads has been compiled and plates showing the same have been prepared."

From this language it is clearly evident that you must get information from the different counties of the state regarding the character of improved roads, so complete that you will be able to prepare plates showing the same, before you have authority to publish the highway maps of Ohio.

The next question about which you inquire is a matter of copyright. When shall you secure the copyright? This is answered in section 2284-1 G. C. as follows:

> "He shall secure a copyright of the said maps from time to time when so published."

That is, after the highway maps are published as set out in sections 2284-1 and 2284-2 G. C. You will then follow the federal law in reference to the matter of securing a copyright of the same.

I might say in passing that you will have to be very careful to follow the provisions of the federal law in reference to giving notice of copyright before any of the copies are distributed, and relative to the filing of copies with the government as provided by law, as well as other provisions of the copyright act.

I think the above answers the question you had in mind and covers the points which ought to be covered.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASE MADE BY WILLIAM B. LEE AND MARY W. LEE OF CERTAIN LANDS IN PIKE COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to me, for my approval, a lease (in duplicate) made by William B. Lee and Mary W. Lee, his wife, under date of March 15, 1918, of certain lands located in Pike county, Ohio.

I have carefully examined this lease and find it correct in form and legal. I am therefore returning same to you, with my approval endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

A JUSTICE OF THE PEACE MAY CONDUCT THE TRIAL OF A CRIMINAL CASE ANY PLACE IN THE COUNTY—IN CIVIL CASES HE MUST HEAR THE CASE IN THE TOWNSHIP FOR WHICH HE IS ELECTED.

In a criminal case a justice of the peace may conduct the trial any place in the county. In civil cases, however, he must hear the case in the township for which he is elected and where he resides. Consent by the parties to hold the trial outside of such township will not confer jurisdiction, and the proceedings so held and the judgment so rendered are null and void.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 20, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of January 22, 1918, as follows:

"We find in many instances that justices of the peace, who are elected in rural districts, after election and qualification move their offices into neighboring large cities, which in many cases are entirely separate and distinct from the township from which they have been elected, and conduct their office of justice of the peace in such cities.

1. Can a justice of the peace legally operate outside of the township from which he was elected?

2. If not, what procedure could this department adopt to break up the practice?"

Sections 10223 and 10224 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 10223. Unless otherwise directed by law, the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases, is limited to the township wherein they have been elected, and wherein they reside. No justice of the peace shall hold court outside of the limits of the township for which he was elected."

"Sec. 10224. Justices of the peace within and co-extensive with their respective counties shall have jurisdiction and authority: (Here follow twelve classes of cases.)"

Section 13422 G. C. reads:

"A justice of the peace shall be a conservator of the peace and have jurisdiction in criminal cases throughout the county in which he is elected and where he resides, on view or on sworn complaint, to cause a person, charged with the commission of a felony or misdemeanor, to be arrested and brought before himself or another justice of the peace, and, if such person is brought before him to inquire into the complaint and either discharge or recognize him to be and appear before the proper court at the time named in such recognizance, or otherwise dispose of the complaint as provided by law. He also may hear complaints of the peace and issue search warrants."

Section 13423 G. C. reads in part:

> "Justices of the peace, police judges and mayors of cities and villages shall have jurisdiction within their respective counties, in all cases of violation of any law relating to:" (Here follow fifteen classes of cases.)

It will be noted that section 10223 G. C. limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace to the township wherein such justice has been elected and wherein he resides, unless otherwise directd by law. It will be noted, too, that section 10224, above quoted, gives the justice of the peace jurisdiction throughout the county in the matters set out in that section. Justices of the peace in criminal cases, by reason of the sections quoted, have jurisdiction throughout the county.

In the case of Stark v. Treat, decided November 7, 1904, and found in 6 O. C. C. Reports, N. S., 286, it was held:

> "A justice of the peace, having jurisdiction of the subject matter, may by consent of all the parties hear the evidence and the arguments outside of the township in which he resides and for which he was elected."

The court in that case did not pass upon the question as to whether a justice of the peace could hear criminal cases outside of his township. The whole discussion was as to the provisions of section 582 of the Revised Statutes, now section 10223 G. C., and quoted above. In that case the court said:

> "When the parties have all consented that the hearing of a case shall be in a given place, there seems to be no good reason why such hearing should not be treated as a hearing within the limits of the territory in which the court has jurisdiction. There are a number of authorities that go to support the proposition that parties may consent to a hearing outside of the territorial jurisdiction of the court."

In the case of Ex parte George M. Boswell, 3 O. N. P., n. s., 555, it was held:

> "Neither the statute now in force nor the history of the law furnish authority for the holding of a criminal trial by a justice of the peace outside of the township in which he resides and was elected, and such authority is not conferred by consent of the accused."

Section 10223 of the General Code, above quoted, was formerly section 582 of the Revised Statutes. Section 12422, conferring criminal jurisdiction, was formerly Revised Statues 610. In this case Dillon, J., after quoting section 582, of the Revised Statutes (now General Code section 10223), and section 610 of the Revised Statutes (now section 13422), says:

> "So far as civil actions are concerned, section 582, above quoted, leaves no doubt. The argument is made, however, that this limitation upon the justice to the effect that he shall not hold court outside of the limits of the township in which he is elected, following as it does the matter referring to civil actions, was intended to apply to civil cases only. The very positive and sweeping terms of the clause, however, would raise great doubt that this is the true construction. The limitation is positive, and without exception provides that no justice shall hold court outside of the limits of the township, and I am of the opinion that the limiting of the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases to the township wherein he is limited would of itself be sufficient to limit the place of his holding court, for the reason that he would have no jurisdiction in such cases outside of the township and therefore under the well settled principles of law would have no jurisdiction to hold court outside. The addition therefore of the limiting clause would be unnecessary if it were to refer solely to the jurisdiction of the justice in civil cases."

* * * * * * * * *

"In the case at bar it was further argued by the state that the defendant himself when arrested was willing to be tried within the city, as a matter of convenience, rather than travel eight or ten miles to the residence of the justice in the country. I think it hardly needs the citation of any authorities to observe the well known principles of law in a criminal case; whatever consent may be given to the jurisdiction of the person, nevertheless jurisdiction of the subject-matter can only be conferred upon a court by consent."

This case was decided on September 25, 1905.

It will be seen from the above that after this latter decision a circuit court had held that, in so far as civil proceedings were concerned, the justice of the peace having jurisdiction of the subject-matter, might, with the consent of all parties, hear the evidence and the arguments outside of the township in which he resided and for which he was elected. Also the court of common pleas had later taken the view that the justice of the peace was without authority to hold a trial, either criminal or civil, outside of the township in which he resided and was elected, and that such authority was not conferred even by consent of the accused.

In June, 1908, the supreme court of the state, in the case of Steele v. Karb, 78 O. S., p. 376, held:

"Under the provisions of section 610, Revised Statutes, a justice of the peace has 'jurisdiction in criminal cases throughout the county in which he is elected and where he resides', and his authority to hear and dispose of a criminal case in the manner prescribed by the statute, is not limited to the township for which he is elected and where he resides."

In this case the plaintiff in error had been convicted of a violation of the hunting laws before a justice of the peace of Perry township, Franklin county. The petitioner, Steele, alleged that the justice has no jurisdiction to issue the warrant, render the judgment or make the order of commitment because the justice of the peace attempted to hold court and try the charges preferred against the petitioner outside the limits of Perry township, Franklin county, for which township the justice had been elected. The supreme court in that case said:

"Let us notice that section. It provides: 'The jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil actions, unless otherwise directed by law, is limited to the township wherein they have been elected, and wherein they reside; but no justice of the peace shall hold court outside the limits of the township for which he was elected.'

This is the law after the section was amended April 19, 1898. Sec. 93 O. L., 146. The last clause of the present section, to wit: 'But no justice of the peace shall hold court outside the limits of the township for which he was elected,' was added to the former language of the section, and so it has since remained.

That such restriction does not pertain to criminal cases is very apparent. The section itself confines the definition of jurisdiction to civil cases, and it may be reasonably surmised that prior to the foregoing amendment, the right to hold court in civil cases outside of the township for which the justice was elected, was claimed and to some extent practiced. To hedge against and settle all doubt upon the subject was the intent of the legislature in adding the clause just quoted. No such clause is found in section 610. The legislature in said section 582 provides that 'the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases, unless otherwise directed by law, is limited to the township wherein they have been elected, and wherein they reside.' While by virtue of section 610 they have jurisdiction in criminal cases throughout the county and there is no prohibition against holding criminal court outside of the township for which they were elected, and in which they reside. They have this jurisdiction throughout the county in which they are elected and where they reside. This is an old jurisdiction, as we have seen, and during the many years of its existence, the legislature has not seen fit to limit it as it has in civil cases, and we think this argues against the contention of the plaintiff in error."

It will be noted from this opinion that while the supreme court was only passing upon the jurisdiction in criminal cases, a reading of the opinion of the court plainly shows that the court was of the view that section 582 R. S., now section 10223 G. C., prevented the justice of the peace from holding court in civil cases outside of the township for which he was elected and in which he resides. Following this decision the matter was, in so far as civil cases were concerned, again passed upon by the common pleas court of Cuyahoga county. For convenience in considering this case it might be well to again, at this point, quote section 10223 of the General Code and part of section 10224:

"Sec. 10223. Unless otherwise directed by law, the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases is limited to the township wherein they have been elected, and wherein they reside. No justice of the peace shall hold court outside of the limits of the township for which he was elected."

"Sec. 10224. Justices of the peace within and co-extensive with their respective counties shall have jurisdiction and authority:

* * * * * * * *

7. To issue attachments and proceed against the goods and effects of debtors in certain cases, except that in Cuyahoga and Franklin counties the jurisdiction and authority in such cases is co-extensive only with the township for which the justice was elected or otherwise as provided in the next following section, his jurisdiction in attachment shall be co-extensive with the county."

It would be well here to bear in mind that section 10223 G. C. was formerly section 582 Revised Statutes, and section 10224 G. C. was section 583 of the Revised Statutes. It will be noted that section 10223 limits the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil cases to the township in which they have been elected and reside, except where the law directs otherwise. Section 10224 gives the justice of the peace jurisdiction co-extensive with the county in the classes of cases mentioned therein. Inasmuch as the supreme court has held that justices of the peace in criminal matters may hold court outside of their township, largely because their jurisdiction in such matters is co-extensive with the county, the question arises here whether or not the justice of the peace should not hold court for the same reason outside of his own township in regard to those matters mentioned in section 10224. This proposition is discussed by the court in the case of K. B. Company v. Brenner et al., 11 O. N. P. (n. s.), 657, as follows:

> "Section 582, of the Revised Statutes, now contains the provision that no justice of the peace shall hold court outside the limits of the township for which he was elected. The style of the original act, of which section 582 was a part, confined itself to providing for the jurisdiction of justices of the peace in civil courts (S. & C., 769). Sections 583 and 584 are part of the same original act. Sections 583 and 584 provide that in certain particular matters the jurisdiction of a justice shall be co-extensive with the county. Among these provisions are those in reference to attachment cases. Attachment cases are, therefore, wholly civil cases; and while, by the provisions of sections 583 and 584, a justice has jurisdiction to issue attachments and proceed against goods and effects of the debtor, co-extensive with the county, it is manifest that these sections do not specify where he shall hear such proceedings; * * * These sections purport to give jurisdiction over the persons of the defendants and particular subject-matters. They do not provide as to the place where the justice shall hold his court in respect to such proceedings. But section 582 plainly says where he shall hold his court, which is in the township which elected him.
> The whole policy indicated by the constitution and the various sections in respect to jurisdiction and duties is, that the justice court is a township court of limited powers. Within the limits set up by the statute, justice judgments are valid as those of any other court. And while a justice is given jurisdiction of certain subjects throughout the county, as attachments, and over persons outside his township in certain instances, yet the legislature has seen fit to place a limit as to where he shall hold his court. Section 582 determines the place where he shall hold his court in civil actions, as well as his jurisdiction of both causes of action and persons of defendants, save in certain matters, and as to certain persons set out in the subsequent sections. None of these sections provide any other place than his township for holding court. The later sections pertain wholly to subject-matter and persons, and give him jurisdiction to hear and determine matters in controversy arising outside of his township, and over persons residing outside of his township, but are silent as to the place he may hold his court; so we are remitted to section 582 as to the place where he must hold court. This part of section 582, as to where he shall hold his court, was not provided for until 93 Ohio Laws, page 146, enacted in 1898. By that enactment the place of holding court was expressly provided for. This provision cannot be taken as merely directory. There can be no question under the constitution but that the legislature may define and regulate the place where a justice shall hold his court as well as the matters that he shall hear therein and the persons who shall be answerable therein. This power to regulate includes the power to limit his operations and duties; and when the legislature has said he may exercise certain powers and duties in civil cases in a certain manner, the manner and mode become limitations just as much as the limitation as to causes, persons and amount."

At page 664 the court said:

"And it is the conclusion of this court, upon this part of the case, that if the justice of the peace attempts to hold court in a civil action outside of the jurisdiction for which he is elected, he thereby loses his official function and becomes merely a private citizen; and that a judgment rendered in a proceeding wherein his court is held at a place other than as prescribed by the statute is null and void."

Again at page 666 the court says:

"But whether the plaintiff consented or not, in view of the construction which I have placed upon the statute, which seems to me to be its only proper construction, the consent of the party cannot change the jurisdiction of a justice of the peace so as to permit him to hold his court in any other place than that prescribed by the statute."

From a consideration of these sections and the decisions quoted, we must conclude that a justice of the peace has authority to hear and dispose of a criminal case outside of the township in which he was elected and where he resides, but that in civil cases he has no such authority, and consent by parties to the action that such justice of the peace hold court outside of his township in such civil cases will not confer jurisdiction on such justice to pronounce a valid judgment. Where the trial of civil actions is held by the justice outside of his own township, the proceedings and the judgment rendered are null and void, but I know of no suggestion to make your department as to stopping such practice.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BIDS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF STATE PROPERTY MUST BE ACCOMPANIED BY BOND EQUAL TO SUM TOTAL OF BID, AND MUST BE WITHIN THE ESTIMATE—ESTIMATE MUST BE REDUCED WHEN PART OF WORK ELIMINATED, TO DETERMINE WHETHER BID IS WITHIN THE ESTIMATE.

Since the amendment of section 2319 G. C., 107 O. L., 455, a bid must be accompanied by a bond in a sum equal to the sum total of the bid. Under the provisions of section 2323 G. C., 107 O. L., 456, the bid must be within the estimate. If a certain part of the work to be done is eliminated, the estimate must be correspondingly reduced in order to determine whether or not the bid is within the estimate.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1918.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of March 9th your board, through Hon. Frank B. O'Bleness, executive clerk, submitted for my approval contract for the erection of dormitory, design B-3, at the Ohio hospital for epileptics.

Upon examination of the papers submitted it appears that there were three bidders who bid for the said job, the lowest thereof being Charles W. Schneider & Son at $74,179.62.

Upon an examination of the bid submitted by Charles W. Schneider & Son it appears that there are two bonds accompanying the same, one in the sum of $35,000.00 signed by the J. J. Snider Lumber Co., G. O. Schoedinger, the Columbus Wire & Iron Works Co., the Huffman-Conklin Co., Charles W. Schneider, R. O. Schneider and the D. A. Ebringer Sanitary Mfg. Co. This bond, as I view it, is totally unauthorized both as to amount and sureties, a manufacturing corporation not being authorized in law to sign as surety on contract bonds.

The other bond referred to is a bond entered into by Charles W. Schneider & Son, of Columbus, Ohio, as principal and the Royal Indemnity Company of New York, N. Y., as surety, in the sum of $37,090.00.

Section 2319 G. C., 107 O. L. 455, provides in part:

> "* * * A proposal shall be invalid and not considered unless a bond, in the form approved by the state building commission, with sufficient sureties, in a sum equal to the total sum of the proposal, is filed with such proposal, * * *."

I am informed by your architect that the first bond referred to above was simply considered as a proposal bond and not a contract bond and was supposed to become ineffective after the bid was accepted. Whether or not that be the case, I am clearly of the opinion that the bond is invalid for the reason that some of the sureties were not authorized to sign the same. The second bond is clearly insufficient for the reason that the amount specified therein is not equal to the sum total of the bid.

The summary of the estimate of the cost and bill of materials of the dormitory referred to, approved January 9, 1918, by the state building commission, is as follows:

Excavation	$1,110 00
Concrete work	16,945 00
Cement floor finish	3,397 00
Brick furnished by the state	5,500 00
Brick work	7,850 00
Cut stone	800 00
Terra cotta .	1,200 00
Plastering	3,500 00
Painting and glazing	1,711 00
Roofing	2,685 00
Iron work	4,820 00
Wood work, hardware, etc	7,649 00
Plumbing, sewer and gas	4,760 00
Heating and ventilating	4,683 00
Electrical work	1,950 00
Total	$68,560 00

It appears, therefore, that the bid submitted is in excess of the estimate made. Section 2323 G. C., 107 O. L., 456, provides:

> "No contract shall be entered into pursuant to section 2317 at a price in excess of the entire estimate thereof. Nor shall the entire cost of the construction, improvement, alteration, addition or installation including changes and estimates of expenses for architects or engineers, exceed in the aggregate the amount authorized by law for the same."

In view of the fact that the bid received was in excess of the estimate your board proposed, so I am informed, to eliminate from the bid excavation; concrete work, footings, ducts and foundations; concrete floors, etc., and do such work itself, which was agreed to by the contractor, bringing the bid to the sum of $65,100.72. However, it was not proposed to deduct the amount estimated by the architect for such work. The estimate of the excavation was $1,110.00. The estimate for the cement floor finish was $3,397.00, and I am informed that a fair estimate of the concrete work necessary to complete the concrete footings, ducts and foundations is $3,000.00, making a sum total of $7,507.00.

Deducting the sum of $7,507.00 from $68,560.00, the total estimate, leaves the corrected estimate amounting to $61,053.00, or an excess of $4,047.72.

In view of the above I find it impossible to approve the contract as submitted and herewith return to you all the papers which you submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN MIAMI AND LAWRENCE COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your two communications of March 20 and 21, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions on the following named improvements:

Dayton-Covington Road—I. C. H. No. 63, section (f), Miami county.

Dayton-Covington Road—I. C. H. No. 63, section (f), Miami county (carbon copy).

Ohio River Road—I. C. H. No. 7, section "K," Lawrence county, type D.

Ohio River Road—I. C. H. No. 7, section "K," Lawrence county, type C.

Ohio River Road—I. C. H. No. 7, section "K," Lawrence county, type B.

I have carefully examined said final resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY SURVEYOR MAY NOT CONSTRUCT BRIDGES BY FORCE ACCOUNT UNDER SECTION 7198 G. C.

The county surveyor is given no authority under section 7198 G. C. (107 O. L. 115) to construct bridges by force account, irrespective of what the cost of the construction might be.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion on the following:

> "Does section 7198, General Code, give authority to construct, by force account, a county bridge, the cost of which is in excess of one thousand dollars, or must the same be constructed after a contract has been awarded to the lowest bidder in compliance with sections 2333 et seq.?"

Section 7198 G. C. (107 O. L. 115) reads as follows:

> "The county surveyor may when authorized by the county commissioners employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as may be necessary in the construction, reconstruction, improvement, maintenance or repair of roads, bridges and culverts by force account."

Upon a mere cursory reading of said section it might be gathered that the county surveyor, when authorized by the county commissioners, can construct bridges by force account, but such is not the authority granted in the section. The authority therein contained is that the county surveyor may employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as may be necessary to do certain things therein set out. There is no authority granted in said section to do anything by force account. But if authority is given either to the county commissioners or to the county surveyor, anywhere in the law, to construct or reconstruct bridges by force account, in that event the county surveyor could be authorized by the county commissioners to do the things set out in said section, viz., employ such laborers and teams, lease such implements and tools and purchase such material as would be necessary to enable him to construct a bridge by force account. However, there is no authority anywhere in the statutes, given either to the county commissioners or county surveyor, to construct bridges by force account, irrespective of the cost of same.

In an opinion rendered by me on December 13, 1917, to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices (No. 857), I went into detail relative to the construction which should be placed upon section 7198, supra. In that opinion, however, I was answering this question:

> "Are the commissioners of a county legally empowered to construct bridges or repair the same by force account?"

I arrived at the following conclusion in said opinion:

> "This section (Sec. 7198) does not confer power upon either the county surveyor or the county commissioners to do anything by force account. However, it does confer authority upon the county surveyor, when authorized by the county commissioners, to employ laborers, lease implements and purchase material for the construction, etc., of roads, bridges and culverts by force account. This makes it necessary for us to look elsewhere for the power and authority to construct by force account, and when we do this we find no other provision permitting of the construction by force account, than section 6948-1 supra, and this goes no further than to permit the construction of roads by force account."

In said opinion I found that the term "roads" does not include bridges.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that the provisions of section 7198, supra, do not confer upon the county surveyor the authority to construct bridges by force account, irrespective of what the cost of the construction might be.

I am enclosing a copy of said opinion No. 857 for your consideration.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

SCHOOL DISTRICT NOT LIABLE ON CONTRACT AT SO MUCH PER DAY FOR TRANSPORTATION OF PUPILS WHEN SCHOOLS ARE CLOSED ON ACCOUNT OF ROADS BEING IMPASSABLE—WHEN CONTRACT IS SO MUCH PER DAY FOR FULL SCHOOL YEAR THE DISTRICT MUST PAY FOR EACH DAY UNLESS RELEASED FROM SAME IN SOME MANNER PROVIDED BY LAW—DRIVER NOT COMPELLED TO PERFORM SERVICES ON SATURDAY.

Where a school district enters into a contract with a person to drive a school wagon at so much per day, and there is no provision therein covering the time the school is closed, and the schools are closed because the roads are impassable on account of snow drifts, such school district is not liable to the driver for time he did not perform the service.

Upon a contract providing that the driver is to serve for the full school year at a price per day, payable monthly, for services well and truly rendered in accordance with specifications attached to the contract, the driver is entitled to compensation for each day of the full school year whether school be held or not, unless the school board is released from the obligation of the contract in some manner recognized by law, and if they are so prevented from having school by the action of public officials under lawful authority, they are excused from paying for the days upon which they are so prevented.

Driver is not required to perform services on Saturday.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1918.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under dates of February 15 and 20, 1918, you have submitted copies of two contracts entered into by school districts in your county for the employment of a person to drive a hack for the conveyance of pupils to the school. You state:

> "These hack drivers were unable to drive for a part of the time because of the fact that the schools were closed down on account of the lack of fuel with which to heat the buildings, and also because it was impossible for them to transport the pupils for a part of the time on account of the roads being impassable because of snow drifts," etc.

Two subjects are involved in the consideration of these questions. First, the proper interpretation or meaning of the contracts; second, the operation upon them of the causes beyond the control of the parties preventing complete performance.

We will take up first the Camden contract, which is simplest.

The provision necessary to notice is as follows:

> "That the party of the first part has this day employed the party of the second part at the sum of $3.20 per day, to drive the school wagon on the route known herein as No. 4, and which route is more particularly described as follows:"

There are many other provisions providing for all details arising out of the contract, but the above is sufficient to dispose of the question involved.

This contract has no term giving it any duration. It does little else than fix the price the driver is to receive for his services. It might be terminated by either party at any time. Under it plainly the driver is entitled to no compensation except for services actually performed; that is, for the days he actually hauled, as the statement is only that the first party has employed him at that price. It is unnecessary to consider whether he was not entitled to do all the hauling until such time as he were discharged. There is no doubt as to the fact that he is not entitled to recover anything for days when he did not haul by reason of the closing of school whether on account of impassable condition of the roads or lack of fuel.

The other contract is entirely different. The controlling clause after the commencement reciting the making of the agreement is as follows:

> "Witnesseth, That said party of the second part agrees to transport the pupils to the Central school building from the district or districts hereinafter specified for the full school year, in accordance with the specifications which form a part of this contract for the sum of $_____ per day, payable monthly, which sum said party of the first part agrees to pay for services well and truly rendered in accordance with the specifications of this contract."

Here we have a provision really requiring interpretation or construction, because in a way containing ambiguity. The last statement above quoted would seem to restrict the per diem pay to the days upon which he actually hauled, as the pay is to be for services well and truly rendered; that is to say, he is to receive so much per day for services actually rendered. However, looking to the full text of the provision, other language seems to require the opposite construction. He agrees to do this transportation for the "full school year." "School year" is emphasized in the kind of type used in the contract, being on a printed form.

Now the provisions on both sides showing the consideration each party gives the other, or the mutual agreement of the parties, is all in one sentence. He is to render the services for the full school year for the sum of $3.00 per day. Here you have for this purpose your whole contract; he is to do the hauling for the full school year for the sum of $3.00 per day, and this not being one of those poor rules which do not work both ways, you may transpose the sentence and say he is to have $3.00 per day for doing the hauling for the full school year. The word "full" must be given some application. The presumption is that every word in a document is used to add some meaning to it. This is not always true, as frequently there are instances where words are used as opposites or synonyms or repetition, but it is ordinarily not proper to so consider them if they are capable of such construction as gives any added meaning.

While in a sense the school year is the full school year, because anything is all of that thing, yet this is not universally true. A man may still be a man, even though he be a one-legged man, and a basket of potatoes might hold a few more. In such cases if language is used indicating that the thing must be complete, it is plain to be seen that such language does have additional effect.

Therefore, in construing this whole provision together, it may be said that the driver has well and truly rendered services on every day of the school year upon which he hauled pupils, or was ready and willing and able to do so.

This conclusion is strengthened by the connection in which the phrase "well and truly rendered" is found. It is,

> "which sum said party of the first part agrees to pay for services well and truly rendered in accordance with the specifications of this contract."

So that it seems to be rather a requirement of compliance with the specifications than a limitation upon the amount of compensation. This does not contemplate the question of impossibility by act of God, or prevention by act of law.

As to those days upon which he failed to haul because of the impassable condition of the roads, he is not entitled to recover, because he himself was not able to perform. Whether an unprecedented snow drift be classed as actus dei or vis maior in the legal sense, need not be determined for this purpose as the terms of the contract made by the parties fully settle the question of liability, in connection with well known and established principles.

As to the other question, however, the closing of schools for lack of fuel, another element enters. It is understood that a portion of the time they were so closed was simply on account of the impossibility of obtaining coal, and for part of the time they were prevented, or would have been prevented by the order of the fuel administrator even had it been possible really to secure fuel.

As to that portion of the time when it was simply a question of not having fuel, the answer is sufficiently indicated by what is stated above. The driver was ready and willing and able to perform the contract. Nothing interfered with him except that there was no school, and consequently the pupils could not or would not go.

As indicated above, the proper interpretation of his contract gives him pay for the full school year, he being ready, etc., as above stated. The contract, therefore, entitled him to pay for this time.

When it comes to a question of remedy, it cannot be said that he is necessarily entitled to the last cent; if it be a breach of the contract on the part of the school board, he would be entitled to be made whole under the form of damages, which might be a more or less different sum.

Coming lastly to the question of liability at such times as the schools were closed by act of officials under the law, the authorities seem to be all agreed that this relieves parties from the obligations of contracts. The subject is fully discussed by a recent text writer.

Elliott on Contracts, Section 1901.

This section is headed "Impossibility Caused by Subsequent Law." An examination of it, however, and of authorities cited, shows that impossibility created by law includes administrative acts of officers in pursuance of law.

Among the cases on the subject is one by the supreme court of New Hampshire.

Theobald v. Burleigh, 66 N. H. 574.

The syllabus is:

> "Where the plaintiff's failure completely to perform his contract is due to the fault of the defendaant, or to the act of the law without fault of > either party, he can recover what his services were reasonably worth, and the defendant is not entitled to damages for the plaintiff's non-performance."

It was a contract to move a building, and after part performance, completion was prevented by an injunction on behalf of a city restraining the location of the building on the lot to which it was moving until permission received as required by an ordinance.

Out of many similar cases, one more will be selected by the court of appeals of New York.

Heine v. Meyer, 61 N. Y. 171-176.

In this case the contract was for the alteration of a building. After it had begun, completion was prevented by an order of the superintendent of buildings, under authority given him by law. The chief justice in the opinion quotes from another opinion in a former case of the same court, as follows:

> "Judge Gardiner, giving the opinion of the court, after stating that the plaintiffs were prevented, by the authority of the state, from completing their contract, said they were entitled to recover for the work performed by them at the contract price; that the performance of the required condition, entitling them to payment under the contract, 'became impossible by the act of the law, and of course the plaintiffs were entitled to recover without showing a compliance with the agreement in this particular.' That decision was in accordance with a well recognized exception to the general rule or principle of law that a contracting party who absolutely engages to do an act must perform it notwithstanding any accident or other contingency not foreseen by him or within his control, yet if the performance is rendered impossible by the act of the law, then he is excused."

These cases both hold that the contractor in such circumstances may recover at the contract price, or at least recover the value of service done by him under the contract. This is equivalent to limiting his pay to that amount, and is in strict accordance with the principle that where the carrying out of a contract is prevented by authority of law, both parties are absolved from its obligations.

It follows therefore that this driver cannot recover for the days that school was not held because of the order of the fuel administrator closing the same.

You are therefore advised that under the Camden contract nothing can be recovered by the driver except for the days that he actually hauled pupils. Under the other contract, the driver can recover for the full school year, except for such days as school was prevented from opening by the order of the fuel administrator or roads were impassible.

You are, however, cautioned that this opinion is confined to the two contracts submitted, and is not intended to apply to any other case, except in so far as the principles above announced have proper application thereto.

As to your remaining question, these contracts are made in contemplation of the well known custom that school is not held on Saturdays, and the driver is therefore not required to perform services upon that day.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FALSE STATEMENT IN APPLICATION FOR LUMP SUM AWARD TO INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION NOT A CRIME UNLESS STATEMENT MATERIAL.

Where in a proceeding before the Industrial Commission of Ohio on the hearing of the application of one Mrs. K. for the allowance of a lump sum award off compensation for the death of a former husband, one P. M. K. falsely stated in an affidavit used at said hearing that he was the brother of said Mrs. K. when as a matter of fact he was her husband.

HELD: That said P. M. K. had not stated a falsehood as to a material matter in said proceeding before said commission and therefore had not committed an offense under section 12842 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 22, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication requesting my opinion on the following:

"Your opinion is desired as to whether the following case is a proper one for the institution of action for the prosecution for perjury of one P. M. K. The facts are as follows:

M. K. was injured while in the course of his employment, which injury resulted in his death, and the commission made an award in favor of his widow, Mrs. M. K. and four minor children. On October 22, 1917, the widow made an application to the commission for the payment to her in a lump sum of the balance due upon the award, approximately $1,500.00, for the expressed purpose of purchasing a home. The property she desired to purchase was priced at $4,250.00, and the commission requested the widow to furnish evidence that she would be able to maintain the children and make the payments on the balance, over and above the amount remaining unpaid on her award. In order to induce the commission to make a lump sum payment, P. M. K., on November 5, 1917, made an affidavit before R. F. B., a notary public of Mahoning county, Ohio, to the effect that he was employed by the Erie Railroad Company as brakeman, earning an average monthly wage of $120.00, and stating that he agreed to make the monthly payments on the property sought to be purchased by Mrs. K., his sister.

Investigation developed the fact that Mrs. K. and the affiant were married on or about October 16, 1917, and therefore were husband and wife instead of brother and sister at the time of the making of the affidavit aforesaid. The lump sum award was not granted.

Your opinion is desired in this case for the reason that the commission wishes, if it is proper, to take up with the prosecuting attorney the matter of prosecuting Mr. K."

You have also furnished me a copy of the above mentioned affidavit of P. M. K., which is as follows:

"YOUNGSTOWN, OHIO, Nov. 5, 1917.

Industrial Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am employed by the Erie Railroad Company as brakeman and my average monthly wages amount to $120.00, and I agree to make the monthly payments on the property which is being purchased by my sister, Mrs. M. K.

P. M. K.

Sworn to and subscribed in my presence this 5th day of November, 1917.

R. F. B.,

(SEAL) Notary Public."

Section 12842 G. C., as amended 104 O. L., 7, reads:

"Whoever, either orally or in writing, on oath lawfully administered, wilfully and corruptly states a falsehood as to a material matter in a proceeding before a court, tribunal or officer created by law, or in a matter in relation to which an oath is authorized by law, including an oath taken by any person making any affidavit required for verifying or filing a nominating, initiative, supplementary or referendum petition, or part thereof, is guilty of perjury and shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

It is noted from the foregoing section that to constitute perjury the matter falsely sworn to must be material. The following is said in 30 Cyc., 1418, in reference to the test of materiality:

"False testimony is deemed material not only when directly pertinent to the main issue, but also when it has a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove any material fact in the chain of evidence. It is enough if it be circumstantially material, although not in itself sufficient to establish the issue. The guilt of one who has falsely sworn does not depend upon the result of the proceedings in which it occurred, and if a person swears falsely in respect to any fact relevant to the issue, he is guilty of perjury, although the case failed from defect of proof of another fact, and although the other fact alleged had no existence."

As you have set forth in your request, the false statement by Mr. P. M. K. consisted in his stating that he was the brother of Mrs. K. when as a matter of fact he was her husband. I am unable to see how the fact of whether Mr. P. M. K. was the husband or brother of Mrs. K. was material in any way in so far as the consideration of the industrial commission as to her right to a lump sum award was concerned. It seems to me that this fact was absolutely immaterial since it was not directly pertinent to the main issue of whether she was entitled to a lump sum award, nor did it have a legitimate tendency to prove or disprove any material fact in the chain of evidence to show her right to such an award.

I advise you, therefore, it is my opinion from the facts given that said P. M. K. has not stated a falsehood as to material matter in the proceeding before you and therefore has not committed an offense under the perjury section of the criminal code.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LAND DEEDED BY DARIUS F. HIATT TO OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY.

Approval of abstract of title to land situated in Clinton township, Franklin county, deeded to Ohio State University by Darius F. Hiatt.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You recently submitted to this department abstract of title covering the following described premises:

"Situated in the county of Franklin, in the state of Ohio, and in the township of Clinton, and bounded and described as follows:

Being a part of the third quarter of the first township of the eighteenth range, United States military lands:

TRACT 1. Beginning at a point in the west boundary of said quarter township number three now known as North Starr avenue being the S. W. corner of a 10-acre tract of land owned by Frank Miller et al., and in the center line of North Starr avenue; thence south 109 poles, 4½ links to a point; thence east 73 poles, 4½ links to a point; thence north 109 poles, 4½ links to a point; thence west 73 poles, 7 links to the place of beginning containing fifty (50) acres more or less, excepting therefrom a strip fifty-two (52) feet in width by 1840.40 feet in length off of the east side thereof, conveyed by Jacob E. Slyh to Ephraim Sells on April 3, 1891, by deed recorded in Deed Book 223, page 545, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio, containing 2½ acres.

TRACT 2. Beginning at a stake in the northwest corner of the lands formerly known as the Daniel Lakin lands; thence with the west line of said Lakin land, S. 2° 30′ W., a distance of 32.61 poles to a stake in said line, the northeast corner to a 10-acre tract or lot formerly sold by Eli M. Lisle to John H. Reed; thence with the north line of said 10-acre tract, N. 88° W., 68.69 poles to a stake in the west line of said quarter section; thence with the west line of said quarter township, N. 32.61 poles to a stake or stone, northwest corner to the land formerly known as the Lisle land; thence with the north line of said Lisle land S. 88° E. 70 poles to the place of beginning containing 14 acres of land more or less, subject, however, to the rights of the county of Franklin to a strip of land 60 feet wide running east and west across said tract and joining on the east end a strip 60 feet in width deeded by Ephraim Sells to the county of Franklin for road purposes, said 60-foot strip having been conveyed by Jacob E. Slyh to the county of Franklin, April 3, 1891, and recorded in Deed Book 224, page 269, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

The aforesaid tracts join each other north and south and being the same premises conveyed to Charlotte C. Pheneger by Jacob E. Slyh, on September 19, 1905, by deed recorded in Deed Book 410, page 454, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio, and deeded by the said Charlotte C. Pheneger to Darius F. Hiatt by deed dated the sixteenth day of March, 1918."

With the abstract you also submitted a deed to said premises from Darius F. Hiatt and Ella E. Hiatt, his wife, who releases her dower in said premises, to the state of Ohio.

I have carefully examined the abstract, dated March 9, 1918, and the addition thereto, and find that the title to the premises described is in the name of Darius F. Hiatt; that the following special assessments are charged against said land for the improvement of Ridgeview road:

On 47.81 acres—$19.12, and 48c interest.
On 14 acres—$ 4.48, and 11c interest.
Payment due in July.

and that the deed submitted will convey a clear title to the state of Ohio for the premises described, save and except special assessments thereon not due, which under the deed are excepted.

The taxes for the last half of the year 1917, due June, 1918, amounting to $46.33, are a lien on the premises and the amount necessary to pay the same should be retained from the purchase price.

Finding the title to said premises to be in said Darius F. Hiatt and finding the deed to be in proper form, duly executed and proper documentary stamp affixed, I hereby approve said title and return to you the deed and abstract submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN THE BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF MIAMI UNIVERSITY AND A. W. SIMS AND ANDREW BENZING.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1918.

HON. R. M. HUGHES, President Miami University, Oxford, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The board of trustees of Miami University, through its architect, has submitted to this department two contracts:

1. Contract entered into on December 31, 1917, between A. W. Sims and Andrew Benzing, a partnership doing business as Sims & Benzing, of Hamilton, Ohio, and the board of trustees of Miami University by its special building committee, for the construction and completion of the addition to the chemistry building, Miami University, exclusive of plumbing, heating and ventilating or equipment, for the sum of $7,233.13, together with bond securing same.

In the contract it is provided that "at the option of the owner the contractors shall furnish any or all of the equipment at the price named in the proposal." I am informed that the equipment referred to is table and shelves that, if the option be exercised, the contractor is to build and put in the plumbing and is not what may be known as movable furniture, and would not therefore come within the provisions of section 1847 as amended 107 O. L., 427.

2. Contract entered into on December 31, 1917, between Joseph Wespiser of Oxford, Ohio, and the board of trustees of Miami University by its special building committee for the construction and completion of the plumbing, heating and ventilating for the addition to the chemistry building, Miami University, in the sum of $1,175.00, together with bond securing same.

I have obtained from the auditor of state a certificate in each case to the effect that there is money available from the appropriation for the payment of the sums called for by the two contracts in question, and finding said contracts to be in compliance with law I have this day approved the same and filed the same in the office of the auditor of state.

I have returned to your architect, Hon. F. L. Packard, the other papers submitted in the matter.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO STATE UNIVERSITY REQUIRED TO OBTAIN PERMIT FROM STATE PLUMBING INSPECTOR FOR WORK DONE AT THE UNIVERSITY—FEES.

Under section 1261-6 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L., page 608, the Ohio State University is required to secure a permit from the state plumbing inspector for any plumbing work to be done in such institutions, except in cases of leaks and repairs in existing plumbing, and the fee prescribed in this section must be paid to the plumbing inspector by the university.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 23, 1918.

HON. A. W. FREEMAN, Commissioner of Health, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have just advised me that you are now desirous of an opinion based on your letter of September 17, 1917, as follows:

> "Some weeks ago you telephoned me in regard to the inspection of plumbing being installed at the state university; the matter having been presented to you by Mr. Steeb. Mr. Steeb's visit to you was because of a requirement of this department that the university file an application and pay the legal fee for plumbing inspection before the work is done, as is required of all other public institutions. I was under the impression that Mr. Steeb had submitted to you for your opinion the question as to whether or not the Ohio State University was exempt from paying inspection fees.
> The law creating the office of state inspector of plumbing, section 1261-1 et seq., G. C. 101 O. L., p. 395, originally provided:
> 'Section 1261-6. For each inspection and certificate so issued, except on inspections of state buildings or structures, he shall charge a fee of five dollars, such fee to be turned into the state treasury. If upon first inspection such work is found in sanitary condition, no charge is made for such inspection or certificate.'
> This law was amended at the last session of the general assembly, 107 O. L., 608.
> You will note that the present statute does not exempt 'state buildings or structures' from the payment of fees. Plumbing is now being installed in certain buildings at the state university without application having been made or a fee paid, and I shall be glad to have your opinion as to whether or not this department shall demand payment of fees from the Ohio State University and other similar institutions, which under the provisions of the old law were exempt from such payments."

The act to which you refer is found in 107 O. L., page 608. Section 1261-6, as amended in said act, reads:

> "No plumbing work shall be done in this state in any building or place coming within the jurisdiction of the state inspector of plumbing except in cases of repairs or leaks in existing plumbing, until a permit has been issued by the state inspector of plumbing and the executive office of the state board of health. Before granting such permit, an application shall be made by the owner of the property or by the person, firm or corporation who is to do the work. Such application shall be made on blanks prepared for the purpose, and each application shall be accompanied by a fee of one dollar, and an additional fee of fifty cents for each trap or vented fixture up to and including ten fixtures, and for each trap or vented fixture over ten a fee of twenty-five cents. The fees so collected shall be paid into the state treasury and credited to the general revenue fund. Whenever a re-inspection is made necessary by the failure of the plumbing contractor to have the work ready for inspection when so reported, or by reason of faulty or improper installation, he shall pay a fee of ten dollars for each such inspection."

Section 1261-14 reads:

"Any person or persons, owner, agent or manager refusing, failing or neglecting to comply with any of the provisions of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be subject to a fine of not less than ten nor more than one hundred dollars, or imprisoned for not less than ten nor more than ninety days, or both; but no person shall be imprisoned under this section for the first offense, and the prosecution shall always be as and for a first offense, unless the affidavit upon which the prosecution is instituted contains the allegation that the offense is a second or repeated offense."

Your inquiry raises two questions: (1) Are the buildings at the Ohio State University within the jurisdiction of the state plumbing inspector, and (2) can he require such university to pay fees provided for in section 1261-6?

As to your first question, I observe that section 1261-3 provides:

"Such inspectors shall not exercise any authority in municipalities or other political subdivisions where in ordinances or resolutions have been adopted or being enforced by the proper authorities regulating plumbing or prescribing the character thereof."

However, in an opinion of this department, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, volume 2, page 1307, this section was quoted in a statement made that it "does not operate to deny to the state plumbing inspector authority to inspect" plumbing at the Ohio State University. It was also held in that opinion that the state building code applied to the Ohio State University. I am informed that since this opinion was rendered the state plumbing inspector has assumed jurisdiction of work done at the Ohio State University and the various institutions of the state, and I shall in this opinion look upon the question of the jurisdiction of the state plumbing inspector as no longer an open one.

Section 1261-6, before its amendment in 107 O. L., 609, provided that certain fees were to be paid for each inspection by the plumbing inspector. Section 1261-6 now provides that the fees be paid before the work is performed, viz., when the permit is issued. Section 1261-6, before amendment, provided that certain fees should be charged for each inspection and certificate so issued, except on inspections of state buildings or structures. In the amendment in 107 O. L., this clause "except on inspections of state buildings and structures" was dropped altogether by the legislature from this section. This to my mind clearly indicates the legislative intention to charge fees under this section to the various state departments affected. Even though it were not for this provision, the same result would be effected by section 280 of the General Code, which reads:

> "All services rendered and property transferred from one institution, department, improvement or public service industry, to another, shall be paid for at its full value. No institution, department, improvement, or public service industry, shall receive financial benefit from an appropriation made or fund created for the support of another. When an appropriation account is closed, an unexpended balance shall revert to the fund from which the appropriation was made."

I am of the opinion, therefore, in direct answer to your question, that section 1261-6 of the General Code, as amended in 107 O. L., p. 608, requires the Ohio State University to secure a permit from the state plumbing inspector for any plumbing work to be done in such institution, except in cases of leaks or repairs in existing plumbing, and that the fee prescribed in this section must be paid to the plumbing inspector by the university, as provided. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS MAY PROVIDE A LICENSE FEE FOR DOGS.

Municipal corporations may legally provide a license fee for a dog under authority of section 3633 General Code, and such power is not superseded or taken away by the enactment of the act of 107 Ohio Laws, 534, which provides for the registration of dogs by the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 25, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of January 28th you submit the following inquiries:

"STATEMENT OF FACTS.

> For some years most cities of the state of Ohio have maintained a dog pound, have had a dog catcher, and have assessed and collected dog license.

Question 1: In view of amended H. B. No. 4, 107 O. L. 534, can municipalities now legally tax a dog license in addition to the other dog taxes?

Question 2: If not, should not such cities discontinue the operation of the dog pounds and the service of the dog catcher?"

Section 5652 General Code, as amended in 107 Ohio Laws, 534, reads as follows:

"Every person who owns, keeps or harbors a dog more than three months of age, annually, before the first day of January of each year, shall file together with a registration fee of one dollar for each male or spayed female dog, and a registration fee of two dollars for each female dog unspayed, in the office of the county auditor of the county in which such dog is kept or harbored, an application for registration for the following year, beginning the first day of January of such year, stating the age, sex, color, character of hair, whether short or long, and breed, if known, of such dog, also the name and address of the owner of such dog."

There are other provisions in this act pertaining to the registration by every owner of a kennel of dogs and providing for the enforcement of the act.

Section 5652 General Code, prior to the above amendment, read as follows:

"In addition to the proper tax on any valuation that is fixed upon dogs by the owners, which shall be included with the personal property valuation and taxed therewith, the auditor shall levy against the owner thereof one dollar on each male and spayed female dog, and two dollars on each unspayed female dog. The receipts from such tax shall constitute a special fund to be disposed of in the payment of sheep claims, as provided by law."

Prior to the above amendment, municipal corporations have been exercising the power of enacting ordinances providing for the licensing of dogs. This authority is granted by section 3633 General Code. It will be observed that the fees provided for in the old section 5652 General Code and in the amendment thereof, are the same. The difference is that now all dogs must be registered and must wear a tag or be subject to impounding.

Section 3633 General Code, enumerates one of the powers of municipal corporations, and reads as follows:

"To regulate, restrain and prohibit the running at large, within the corporation, of cattle, horses, swine, sheep, goats, geese, chickens and other fowls and animals, and to impound and hold them, and on notice to the owners, to authorize the sale of them for the penalty imposed by any ordinance, and the cost and expenses of the proceedings; to regulate or prohibit the running at large of dogs, and provide against injury and annoyance therefrom, and to authorize the disposition of them when running at large contrary to the provisions of any ordinance."

The question now arises as to whether or not the authority of council to enact ordinances to license dogs under the above section has been superseded by the act of the legislature which now requires dogs to be registered under the state law.

This question as to the licensing of motor vehicles is mooted, but not decided in the case of Frisbie v. City of Columbus, 80 O. S., 686, wherein the syllabus reads:

> "The ordinance of the city of Columbus, passed March 20, 1905, to license and regulate the use of streets of the city by persons who use vehicles thereon, in so far as it applies to motor vehicles, was annulled by the act passed April 2, 1906 (98 O. L. 320), and was not revived by the repeal of that act by the act passed May 9, 1908 (99 O. L. 538)."

On page 690, Summers, J., says:

> "Having reached this conclusion it is not necessary to determine whether municipalities under the statutes as they exist since the passage of the law of 1908, 'to provide for the registration, identification and regulation of motor vehicles' (99 O. L. 538) may regulate and license automobiles."

In the case of Stern v. City of Columbus, 16 N. P. (n. s.) 353, Evans, J., at the conclusion of his opinion, on page 357, says:

> "I am of the opinion that said ordinances are not invalid upon any of the grounds claimed in the petition, and that such is not a tax. On the other hand, I am of the opinion that such are valid and constitutional ordinances. By this I do not intend to hold that No. 11 in ordinance No. 27776, passed December 22, 1913, providing for license fees for motorcycles or autocycles, is within the power of council to enact, for the reason as I understand that such are now licensed by the state by a recent enactment of the legislature, but this execption does not invalidate all other provisions of said ordinance. For above reasons, the motion for a temporary injunction is overruled."

This is obiter dictum as that question was not involved in that case.

Hon. U. G. Denman, in an opinion recorded at page 1013 of the annual reports of the attorney-general for 1910-1911, makes this statement:

> "It is elementary that if the general assembly has itself enacted laws of state wide application on either of the subjects concerning which you inquire, the city may not exercise its general regulative and licensing powers with respect thereto. That is to say, if there are laws relating to the licensing of chauffeurs and the qualification of persons operating motor vehicles within the state, such laws should supplant and qualify a general municipal power to regulate the use of public streets and to license persons using vehicles upon such streets."

He does not cite any authority in support of the above conclusion.

The rule is stated at section 714 of Dillon on Municipal Corporations:

> "Municipal legislation pursuant to statutory authority has, almost of necessity, followed the same general lines as the various statutory requirements, and it has been held that the mere fact that the use and operation of automobiles are regulated by statute, does not preclude a municipal corporation under properly delegated authority from adopting compatible local ordinances and regulations, unless the statute should be framed in such terms as necessarily or plainly to preclude municipal regulation of the subject."

McQuillan on Municipal Corporations at section 878 states the same rule:

"The general doctrine is supported by the weight of judicial authority that an act may be made a penal offense under the statutes of the state, and that further penalties may be imposed for its commission or omission by municipal ordinance. But to authorize such ordinance the local corporation must possess sufficient charter power and such power must be exercised in the manner conferred and consistent with the constitution and laws of the state."

In the case of Brazier v. Philadelphia, 215 Pa., 297, the syllabus reads:

"The ordinance of the city of Philadelphia of December 2, 1902, requiring the owner of an automobile to take out a license and to carry a city license tag is not repealed or superseded by the act of April 9, 1905, P. L. 217, which provides that the owner of an automobile shall procure a license from the state highway department of the commonwealth, and that state license tags shall be carried exhibiting the license number and the number of the year."

In the case of the city of Fairfield v. Shallenberger, 135 Ia., 615, it is held:

"The legislature in the exercise of its police power may require a state license for the practice of medicine and at the same time authorize municipalities to require a license of itinerant physicians."

On page 619, Sherwin, P., says:

"* * * That a license may be required from the same person for the same business by the state and by its municipalities is a rule of general application. 21 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2nd Ed.), 778-815; Leavenworth v. Booth, 15 Kan. 627; State v. Foster, 22 R. I. 163; Justice v. City of Atlanta, 122 Ga. 152."

In the case of Simpson v. Savage, 1 Mo., 359, the syllabus reads:

"An auctioneer, in the city of St. Louis, is compelled to take a license from the state, as well as from the corporation, or be liable to a penalty."

In the above case a statute had been enacted which required auctioneers to secure a license from the state and thereafter specific authority was given to the city to require a license from auctioneers. It was contended that the state law no longer applied to the city of St. Louis. This contention, however, was not upheld.

In the case of Ex Parte Siebenhauer, 14 Nev., 365, it is held that the city under its charter, and the county under the state law may require a license from the same trade, business or profession.

In the case of Ex Parte Snowden, 12 Cal. App. 521, it is held:

"The mere fact that the state, in the exercise of its police power, has made certain regulations does not prohibit a municipality from enacting additional requirements so long as there is no conflict between the two, and so long as the requirements of the municipal ordinance are not unreasonable or discriminating, both will stand. The power of the city to pass the ordinance in question was conferred by its freeholder charter, and the amendments thereto, adopted prior to its passage."

In the above case no additional license was required.

The weight of authority is to the effect that where power is granted to a municipal corporation to require a license to be taken out for a particular thing or business, and there is also a provision in the state law to license or register the same thing or business, that such thing or business is required to comply with both provisions unless the power of council is prohibited by statute when covered by the state law.

There is no provision in the act of 107 O. L. 534, which prohibits a city or village from requiring license fees for dogs under authority of section 3633 G. C.

It is my opinion, therefore, that municipal corporations may still exercise such power under the authority of said section 3633 General Code.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CENTRALIZATION OF SCHOOLS—WHO MAY VOTE ON THE QUESTION.

1. In a township in which there are seven rural school districts the qualified electors of all of such districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of such township district.

2. It is not permissible under the provisions of section 4726-1 G. C. for a part of the school districts of a township to vote on the centralizing of the schools of such districts and prevent the electors of other districts, located in whole or in part within the township, from participating in said election.

3. A part of the districts of a township may be united as one district and then provide for centralization under the provisions of section 4726 G. C.

4. The fact that certain territory is located in another civil township, but is attached to the territory of a township where all the districts desire to vote on the question of centralizing the schools of such township, will not prevent the electors residing therein from participating in the election upon the question of centralizing the schools of such township under section 4726-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 25, 1918.

HON. C. A. STUBBS, Prosecuting Attorney, Celina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

"Franklin township, of Mercer county, is considering the centralization of their schools under G. C. 4726-1.

There are seven special school districts in this township, three of which contain portions of adjoining townships.

1. Can centralization extend beyond the township lines?
2. If not, what action must be taken by the three districts partly in other townships before the township can proceed with centralization?
3. May the four districts wholly within the township centralize the schools in those four districts?
4. If so, will a majority vote of all votes cast in all four districts be sufficient for centralization, or must centralization carry in each district separately?"

Section 4726-1 G. C., cited therein, provides as follows:

"In townships in which there are one or more school districts, the qualified electors of such school districts may vote on the question of centralizing the schools of said township districts, or of special school districts therein, without interfering with the existing school district organization until the result of the election shall have been determined. If at such election in any township a majority of all the votes cast shall be in favor of centralizing the schools in said township, the probate judge of the county shall create a new board of education for the said township, without delay, by selecting from the several boards of education thus consolidated, five suitable persons, giving each former district its fair representation in such selection, which such five persons so selected shall constitute the board of education for said township until the first township election thereafter; at such first township election thereafter the electors of such township shall elect two members of the board of education for two years, and three members to serve for three years, and at the proper elections thereafter their successors shall be elected for four years. If a majority of the electors in said township vote against said centralization at the time above designated, then the several school districts in said township shall proceed as though no election had been held."

The section is not clear when considered with a view to answering your several questions, but I am convinced from a careful consideration of same that all the school districts of a township must participate, where action is desired, under the terms of said section. While it was formerly the policy of the school law of Ohio, and provision was made therefor, that each civil township in itself should consist of a township school district, that provision of law no longer exists and the policy seems now to be that township lines shall not be seriously considered in forming or arranging school districts. In fact, when the new school code was enacted in 1914, section 4736 thereof provided that:

"In changing boundary lines the board may proceed without regard to township lines, and shall provide that adjoining rural districts are as nearly equal as possible in property valuation."

This provision no longer remains in said section but the policy thereof seems to be constantly followed in practice. Said section 4726-1 says, "in townships in which there are one or more school districts." It does not say where there are one or more entire school districts, but simply that there is more than one school district; that then the qualified electors of such school districts, meaning of course all the school districts of the township, may vote on the question of the centralizing of the schools of said township districts. If the language would say "may vote upon the question of the centralizing of the school districts lying only within the township lines of the civil township," or would specifically provide that all territory outside of such township lines should be excluded and residents thereof not permitted to participate in such election, a different conclusion might be reached, but, as noted above, considering the language in its present form, I can come to but one conclusion and that is that all school districts with territory within the township must unite when the provisions of section 4726-1 are followed. You will understand, however, that each school district may centralize its schools separately, as is provided by section 4726 G. C., and in case such proceeding is impracticable, districts may be combined into one district and then centralize their schools.

Holding these views, then, I must answer your several questions as follows:

1. Centralization may extend beyond the township lines if territory is attached to territory of such township for school purposes.
2. Your second question is answered by the answer to the first.
3. The four districts wholly within the township cannot centralize unless the county board of education creates said territory as one school district in which such event centralization could be had under section 4726 G. C.
4. Your fourth question is answered by the answer to your third.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY NOT EMPLOY A PERSON TO SECURE OPTIONS ON A SITE FOR SCHOOL BUILDING.

A board of education, in securing a site for a school building, is not empowered by statute to employ a person to secure options at a rate per cent. commission on the purchase price.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your statement of facts upon which you ask my opinion reads as follows:

"The board of education of the city of Lima, Ohio, in securing a site for a school building, employed a man to secure options at 2% commission on the purchase price.

Is such action legal?"

Authority is given to boards of education to purchase sites for school purposes. Section 7620 G. C. provides in part:

"The board of education of a district may * * * purchase * * * sites * * * for the schools under its control * * *."

Section 4749 G. C. provides in part:

"The board of education of each school district shall be a body politic and corporate and, as such, capable of suing and being sued, contracting and being contracted with, acquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real * * * property * * *."

No method is provided by statute as to how such purchases shall be made, that is, whether propositions of sale shall be submitted as bids are submitted for the construction of buildings or by what other manner or means the selection of the property to be purchased is made. In your case the board of education employed a man to take options upon certain property or properties which the board desired to purchase as a site for a school building.

An option may be defined as the right of choice or election and the board, reserving to itself such right of choice or election, arranged for the options to be secured, as above mentioned. That in the ordinary case such procedure would be commendable is conceded, for it too frequently happens that property enhances in value very materially as soon as it is desired for the location of a school or other public building. But nowhere in the statutes do we find authority for a board of education to take options of purchase upon property which it desires to secure for school house sites or grounds and the commendability of their action in so doing would have to, therefore, be directed to the legislature instead of this department or the courts. That the purchase of real property by a board of education was carefully guarded is manifest from the language of section 4752 G. C., as found in 107 O. L., 46, and while it is noted above that no method of purchase is provided by statute, said section does place a limitation upon the procedure of boards of education in the purchase of same. It reads in part:

"A majority of the members of a board of education shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. Upon a motion to adopt a resolution authorizing the purchase * * * * * of real * * * property * * *, the clerk of the board shall publicly call the roll of the members composing the board and enter on the records the names of those voting 'aye' and the names of those voting 'no.' If a majority of all of the members of the board vote aye, the president shall declare the motion carried * * *."

It is thus provided that before a purchase of any real property can be made by a board of education, a motion or resolution therefor shall be presented to the board, and upon such motion or resolution the clerk shall publicly call the roll, and if a majority of the entire membership of the board fails to vote in favor of said motion, the purchase cannot be made, and if a majority of the entire membership of the board does vote in favor of said motion or resolution, then the president shall declare the motion carried and the purchase is thus made. The fact that the statute makes no provision for the taking of options is significant, and our courts have spoken firmly in relation to similar matters at various times. For instance, in speaking of the authority of a board of education to hire teachers, the court, in the case of Board of Education v. Best, 52 O. S., 138, says, on page 152:

"The authority of boards of education, like that of municipal councils, is strictly limited. They both have only such power as is expressly granted or clearly implied, and doubtful claims as to the mode of exercising the powers vested in them are resolved against them. Clearly, these organizations that derive their existence as bodies politic and corporate from the legislature, cannot be allowed the same latitude in the observance of their statutory duties, as is permitted to the general assembly. Such subordinate bodies corporate are not privileged to treat express and explicit provisions of the statutes as only directory, discretionary, because there are provisions in the constitution that are held directory in their character for the reason that their observance by the general assembly is secured by their sense of duty and official oaths, and not by any supervisory power of the courts. * * * * * *To avoid uncertainty, therefore, in determining the conduct of boards of education in transacting such important official business as concerns the purchase or sale of property, * * * * * the general assembly has carefully guarded against ambiguity by prescribing a method of voting which should not be departed from, and in that regard, the rule expressio unius, should, we think, be strictly applied."*

And again, in State ex rel. Dunn, et al., v. Freed, Treasurer, et al., 10 O. C. C., 294-296, it was held that:

"The powers of boards of education are limited. They have such authority, only, as is conferred by law, and when they take action outside of the law and against the plain provisions of law, such action is absolutely void."

So that the board of education cannot be considered as being authorized to take options unless that authority could be clearly implied as a matter of necessity in carrying out the provisions of the authority to purchase or acquire real estate. But it cannot be urged that such implied authority is necessary, for a board of education is not subjected to the sharp business practice experienced by individuals in the purchase of real estate, for if a board is unable to agree with the owner upon the price which should be paid for property desired by it for a school house site, it may appropriate same as is provided by section 7624 G. C., which reads as follows:

"When it is necessary to procure or enlarge a school site or to purchase real estate to be used for agricultural purposes, athletic field or play ground for children, and the board of education and the owner of the property needed for such purposes are unable to agree upon the sale and purchase thereof, the board shall make an accurate plat and description of the parcel of land which it desires for such purposes, and file them with the probate judge, or court of insolvency, of the proper county. Thereupon the same proceedings of appropriation shall be had which are provided for the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations."

Even if a board could take an option upon property as incident to the purchase of same, it cannot delegate its authority to any other person to take same for the board, and I know of no authority for the board to hire any person to purchase property for it or take options therefor if the same could be considered being incident to such purchase.

Holding, then, these views, I must advise you that the action of the board of education of the city of Lima, in employing a man to secure options at two per cent. commission on the purchase price of a site for a school building, is not a legal action.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INITIAL STEP ON PART OF MUNICIPALITY IN ROAD IMPROVEMENT BY COMMISSIONERS WITHIN MUNICIPALITY IS ORDINANCE GRANTING CONSENT TO PROCEED—PUBLICATION OF SAID ORDINANCE—REFERENDUM—RESOLUTION OF NECESSITY UNNECESSARY—HOW COST OF SUCH IMPROVEMENT FUNDED.

1. The initial step upon the part of a municipality, in the matter of the county commissioners' constructing a road improvement into, within or through a municipality is the adoption of an ordinance by the village council granting consent to the county commissioners to proceed.

2. Under the provisions of section 6949 G. C. (107 O. L. 107), this initial ordinance should be published in accordance with law.

3. Under the provisions of section 4227-3 G. C., the principle of the referendum would not apply to this initial ordinance, because it is the first ordinance in the matter of the improvement and is possibly the most vital one connected with the improvement.

4. The resolution of necessity provided for in section 3814 G. C. is not required in the matter of the county commissioners constructing such an improvement.

5. In the matter of providing funds to take care of the part of the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the municipality, there is no authority to issue notes under the provisions of section 3915 G. C., but section 6950 G. C. (107 O. L. 107) provides for the issuing of bonds and the conditions under which they may be issued.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 26, 1918.

HON. A. B. UNDERWOOD, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date which reads as follows:

"The commissioners of Medina county, Ohio, acting under sections 6949 et seq. G. C., plan to improve certain streets in the villages of Lodi and Medina, in Medina county. The county commissioners have funds on hand to pay their portion of the improvements. Bonds will have to be issued for the municipality's share and the property owners' share in each case.

Guided by your opinion rendered to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, May 4, 1917, I had the councils of said villages take the initial step therein provided for, of passing a resolution declaring the consent of the village council to the improvement. This initial resolution by the council was passed July 2, 1917, but never published.

Other steps so far taken are as follows:

1. Resolution by county commissioners, ordering the improvement made under section 6949 G. C., offering to pay $2,000.00 towards the costs thereof, ordering the engineer to provide surveys therefor, and authorizing the president and clerk of the board of commissioners to enter into a contract with the village, covering a division of the costs.

2. Preparation of plans, profiles, cross-sections, specifications and estimates.

3. Return of same by county surveyor to county commissioners.

4. Resolution by commissioners, approving same and ordering copy sent to village council.

5. Resolution as required by section 6950 G. C., determining the public convenience and welfare of the improvement, approving the plans, surveys, profiles, cross-sections, estimates, etc., agreeing to pay all cost over that to be paid by the commissioners, and authorizing mayor and clerk to enter into a contract with the board of commissioners. This resolution was published in accordance with law.

6. Execution of contract between village council and board of county commissioners, covering a division of the costs.

In view of your opinion to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, dated May 4, 1917, No. 241, your opinion to the Industrial Commission of Ohio, dated January 23, 1918, No. 965, and your approval of the transcript of village bonds of West Carrollton, Ohio, issued under authority of said section 6949 G. C., I wish to ask these questions:

(1) What is the initial step for a village council to take in such street improvement proceedings?

(2) If it is a resolution declaring the consent of the village council to the improvement, as indicated by said Opinion No. 241, then should that initial resolution be published?

(3) Does the referendum law, sections 4227-2 and 4227-3 G. C., apply to said initial resolution declaring the consent of the village council, or would it more properly apply to the next step in the village legislation, namely, a resolution determining the public convenience and welfare of the improvement as required by section 6950 G. C.?

(4) Is a resolution of necessity required? (West Carrollton transcript included such a resolution, but Opinion No. 241 from your office states same is unnecessary, but that a resolution should be adopted in conformity with requirements of sections 3814 and 3818 G. C. What is meant by this?)

(5) If such a semi-resolution of necessity be passed, is there any necessity for the so-called 'ordinance to proceed,' as in ordinary village street improvements?

(6) Could notes be issued under section 3915 G. C. in anticipation of the collection of special assessments?

(7) In view of the confusion surrounding procedure under section 6949 G. C., will you please attach an itemized schedule of the different steps to be taken by both the commissioners and council, giving these steps in their proper order and carrying same down to the letting of the contract by the county commissioners? (This was attempted in your Opinion No. 241, but inasmuch as the law has since been amended, I believe it would add much to the clear administration of the law to do this.)

I understand that proceedings under section 6949 G. C. are being conducted in a number of counties, with difficulties and confusion attendant everywhere.

I trust that the importance of the questions is such as to excuse my lengthy request for your opinion. I am acting as prosecuting attorney of Medina county and as solicitor for the villages, on these improvements, and consequently am interested in the legislation on both sides."

Before answering the questions set out in your communication I desire to make a few general observations, which will assist somewhat in understanding the general line which your questions take. They have more particularly to do with the provisions of sections 6949 to 6953 G. C. These sections have to do with the matter of the county commissioners constructing a road improvement into, within or through a municipality; but it must always be kept in mind that the scheme set out in sections 6949 to 6953 G. C., inclusive, is a part of the general scheme of road building provided by law for the county commissioners. This scheme begins with section 6906 G. C. The provisions set out in sections 6949 to 6953 G. C., inclusive, are a part of this general scheme, and when the county commissioners construct a road improvement into, within or through a municipality they follow the provisions set out in section 6906 G. C. et seq., as well as the provisions set out in sections 6949 to 6953 G. C., inclusive.

Furthermore, as a general observation I desire to suggest that the provisions of sections 6949 to 6953 G. C., inclusive, form a full and complete procedure to be followed by the authorities of a municipality, and that no part of the general course of procedure which is followed by a municipality in constructing or improving streets is to be applied. This would not apply, of course, when the provisions of sections 6949 to 6953 G. C., inclusive, refer to the provisions in reference to street improvements by municipalities.

With these general observations in mind let us turn to your questions and take them up in their order, answering each one in the order set out:

(1) Under the provisions of section 6949 G. C. there is no question in my mind that the initial step to be taken by a municipality is the granting of its consent by the council. While the county commissioners may construct a proposed road improvement into, within or through a municipality, yet this cannot be done until the consent of the council of said municipality has been obtained. From this it is clear to me that the very first step to be taken in reference to such an improvement is the step by virtue of which the council of the municipality gives its consent to the county commissioners to construct said improvement.

(2) Your second question has to do with the manner in which this consent should be given.

Section 6949 G. C. says:

> "and such consent shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of the council of said municipality entered upon its records."

While this language is not as clear as it might be in reference to the manner in which the council is to proceed, yet from the language used, it seems fairly evident that the intention of the legislature was to the effect that the council should act by ordinance. This is the method provided by law for the council in its action upon any matter of legislation. It seems that the legislature intended that the council should act as formally as it is possible for it to act, for it provides not only that it shall be evidenced by the proper legislation of council, but provides further that this legislation shall be entered upon its records. For this reason it is my opinion that the consent should be given by ordinance, and as section 4227 G. C. provides that

> "Ordinances of a general nature, or providing for improvements shall be published as hereinafter provided before going into operation," it seems to me that the ordinance granting the consent of the municipality to the county commissioners to proceed with any improvement would necessarily have to be published in accordance with law.

(3) Your next question has to do with the matter of the referendum, and is as to whether this initial ordinance is subject to the referendum, or whether it is the ordinance that is provided for in section 6950 G. C.

Section 4227-3 G. C. provides, in part, as follows:

> "Whenever the council of any municipal corporation is by law required > to pass more than one ordinance or other measure to complete the legislation necessary to make and pay for any public improvement, the provisions of this act shall apply only to the first ordinance or other measure required to be passed and not to any subsequent ordinances and other measures relating thereto. * * *"

From this provision it would seem that it is "the first ordinance or other measure required to be passed" that is subject to the referendum. What is the first ordinance that is required to be passed in the matter under consideration? It is the ordinance granting consent to the county commissioners to proceed. Until this ordinance is passed no step whatever can be taken. This is the vital ordinance; it is the one that affects the property owners of the village as no other ordinance would affect them; it is not only the first ordinance, but it is the most important ordinance that is to be passed. Ordinarily when this ordinance is passed the proposed improvement will proceed to completion. Indeed, if the municipality pays no part of the cost and expense of the improvement, it is the only ordinance that must be passed by a municipality according to the provisions of section 6949 G. C. I note that section 6950 G. C. provides that:

> "It shall thereupon be the duty of the council of such municipality to examine said surveys and profiles, and if after such examination council is satisfied that the public convenience and welfare require that said improvement be made, it shall by resolution so determine, and shall approve said surveys and profiles."

Of course, at this point the council undoubtedly could interfere with the further progress of the improvement. But this is more of a formal matter than is the first ordinance, and it further provides that this may be done by resolution rather than by ordinance.

From all of the above it is my opinion that the ordinance granting permission to the county commissioners to construct said improvement is the one that is subject to the referendum and not the one provided for in section 6950 G. C.

(4) Your fourth question is: Is a resolution of necessity required?

As said above, it is my opinion that the provisions of sections 6949 to 6953 G. C., inclusive, form a complete scheme in reference to the matter under consideration, and that other provisions of the statutes would not apply unless reference is particularly made to them in the provisions of said sections.

Section 6949 G. C. provides for consent to make the improvement, and section 6950 G. C. provides for the approval of the surveys and profiles adopted by the county commissioners provided the council is satisfied that the public convenience and welfare require that said improvement be made. There seems to be no place under this procedure for a resolution of necessity. Neither do I think that such a resolution is required. It must be borne in mind that this is a proceeding over which the county commissioners exercise jurisdiction, and it is rather up to them to adopt a resolution of necessity as set forth in section 6910 G. C.

In this question you refer to Opinion No. 241 rendered by me and state that in said opinion I held that a resolution should be adopted in conformity with the requirements of sections 3814 and 3818 G. C. I have examined said opinion carefully and do not find any such holding therein. Neither do I recall having so held in any other opinion rendered by me. In fact, on page 10 of Opinion No. 241, in speaking of section 3814 G. C., I used the following language:

"But such an ordinance would be useless in the present case, due to the fact that section 6949 G. C. takes care of the one part of the question, and section 6952 G. C. takes care of the matter of fixing a time when claims for compensation and damages should be presented."

This language had reference to the resolution of necessity. It must be remembered, however, that this resolution under the statute contains more than merely the declaration of necessity.

Section 3815 G. C. sets forth the provision that the mode of payment and whether or not bonds shall be issued, etc., shall also be contained in said resolution. So that while the resolution of necessity is not required, in my opinion, yet a resolution or ordinance setting forth the other provisions mentioned must be enacted. In doing this, council would be guided by sections 3814 to 3818 inc. G. C.

(5) The answer to your fourth question really answers the fifth. The only "ordinance to proceed" that is necessary is set forth in section 6950 G. C., as above quoted, which is to the effect that if the council is satisfied that the public convenience and welfare require that said improvement be made, they shall so determine by resolution and shall approve said surveys and profiles. Of course, after this is done the county commissioners would proceed with the improvement.

(6) Your sixth question is as to whether the municipality could sell its notes under section 3915 G. C. in anticipation of the collection of special assessments.

Section 6951 G. C. provides, in part, as follows:

"* * * in anticipation of the collection of assessments to be made against abutting property as hereinbefore provided * * * said municipality is authorized to sell its bonds under the same conditions and restrictions imposed by law in the sale of bonds for street improvements under the exclusive jurisdiction and control of the council of a municipality."

Here we find a specific provision made to take care of the cost and expense of the improvement on the part of the municipality. It is to the effect that it may sell bonds under the same conditions and restrictions as it could sell bonds for street improvements under its jurisdiction. From this it is fairly evident that the municipality could not issue and dispose of its notes under the provisions of section 3915 G. C., but would be compelled to issue bonds under the same conditions and restrictions as it is permitted to issue bonds in street improvements entirely under the jurisdiction of the municipality.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF RESOLUTIONS FOR SALE OF CANAL LANDS LOCATED IN THE CITY OF TOLEDO TO THE INVESTORS REALTY CO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 26, 1918, in which you enclose, in duplicate, certain resolutions leading up to the sale of canal lands located in the city of Toledo, Ohio, to the Investors Realty Company, and ask my approval of the sale thereof, at private sale, same having been appraised at $265.00.

I have examined the proceedings leading up to the sale of said canal lands and find them correct in form and legal, and I consider $265.00 a fair valuation of said lands and therefore join with you in the sale of the same, in evidence of which I have attached my signature to the resolutions providing for such sale.

I am forwarding said resolutions to Hon. James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS OF THE INSULAR GOVERNMENT OF PORTO RICO AND FARM LOAN BONDS ARE NOT UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT BONDS WITHIN THE MEANING OF SECTION 330-3 RELATIVE TO THE DEPOSIT OF STATE FUNDS BY TREASURER OF STATE.

Neither bonds of the insular government of Porto Rico issued under the authority of the act of congress under date of April 12, 1900, nor farm loan bonds issued by a farm loan bank under authority of the act of congress under date of July 17, 1916, are "United States government bonds" within the meaning of section 330-3 General Code, providing that the treasurer of state, before making deposits of state funds in depositories, shall require every bank or trust company approved as such depository to deposit with him United States government bonds, bonds of this state, county, township, school district, road district, or municipal bonds of this state at not less than their par value, in an amount equal to the amount of money to be deposited with such banks or trust companies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your favor under date of March 14, 1918, asking opinion of this department, in which you say:

> "Enclosed you will find two issues of bonds—one $1,000.00 Porto Rico and one $1,000.00 federal farm loan bond—which are offered the state treasury as security for active depository funds by the New First National Bank, Columbus, Ohio.
> We would kindly ask your opinion whether these bonds can be accepted as legal security for loan of funds under Sec. 14 S. B. No. 57, an act to provide a depository for state funds."

Section 330-3 General Code, which was enacted as section 14 of an act of the legislature passed March 7, 1911, entitled "An act to provide a depository for state funds," provides, in part, as follows:

> "The treasurer of state before making such deposits shall require that each and every approved bank or trust company to deposit with him United States government bonds, bonds of this state, county, township, school district, road district, or municipal bonds of this state at not less than their par value, in an amount equal to the amount of money to be deposited with such banks or trust companies, or surety company bonds, which when executed shall be for an amount equal to the amount deposited plus 5%, conditional for the receipt and safe keeping and payment over to the treasurer of state or his written order of all moneys which may come into the custody of such bank, or trust company under and by virtue of this act, and the interest thereon when paid shall be turned over to the bank or trust company so long as it is not in default. * * *"

I take it that the question which you have in mind is whether or not the bonds referred to in your communication are "United States government bonds" within the meaning of that term as employed in section 330-3 General Code.

I am of the opinion that your question should be answered in the negative with respect to both of the bonds referred to in your letter. To my mind the term "United States government bonds" as used in section 330-3 General Code means bonds which are the direct and primary obligation of the United States government in pursuance of its constitutional power to borrow money on the credit of the United States and for the payment of which the full faith of the United States is solemnly pledged by act of congress.

The first bond mentioned in your communication is one issued by the insular government of Porto Rico in pursuance to section 38 of an act of congress under date of April 12, 1900. This section of said act reads, in part, as follows:

> "Where necessary to anticipate taxes and revenues bonds and other obligations may be issued by Porto Rico or any municipal government therein as may be provided by law for expenditures authorized by law, and to protect the public credit, and to reimburse the United States for any moneys which have been or may be expended out of the emergency fund of the war department for the relief of the industrial conditions of Porto Rico caused by the hurricane of August 8, 1899."

Bonds issued by the government of Porto Rico in pursuance to the authority thus conferred are direct and primary obligations of Porto Rico, there being nothing in the way of statutory provisions making them obligations of the United States government, as such.

The other bond referred to by you is one issued by the Farm Loan Bank of Wichita, Kansas, pursuant to the provisions of sections 18 to 21, inclusive, of an act of congress under date of July 17, 1916, entitled "the federal farm loan act." By section 21 of said act the bond is the primary obligation of the farm loan bank issuing it, although ultimately said bond and the interest thereon, if not paid by the bank issuing the same or out of the proceeds thereof on liquidation, becomes an obligation payable by other farm loan banks.

There is nothing, however, in said act, nor in other legislation by congress making farm loan bonds obligations of the United States government; and though these bonds, as well as those issued by the insular government of Porto Rico, are in a sense intrumentalities of the United States and as such are exempt from state and local taxation, neither of said bonds are "United States government bonds" in any proper sense within the meaning of section 330-3 General Code.

I am therefore of the opinion that these bonds should not be accepted by you as legal security for state funds deposited by you under the provisions of the act referred to in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN LAWRENCE AND CARROLL COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 27, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of March 25, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions for the following improvements:

Ironton-Miller Road—I. C. H. No. 404, section "E," Lawrence county, type A.

Ironton-Miller Road—I. C. H. No. 404, section "E," Lawrence county, type B.

Ironton-Miller Road—I. C. H. No. 404, section "E," Lawrence county, type C.

Canton-Steubenville Road—I. C. H. No. 75, section "G," Carroll county.

I might suggest that the final resolution on the improvement of I. C. H. No. 75, section "G," Carroll county, sets forth the fact that the preliminary application of the board of county commissioners was made to the state highway department on the eleventh day of November, 1918. Of course the year 1918 was inserted by mistake, instead of 1917 or 1916. It would be well for your department to have this correction made to correspond with the facts.

However, I am approving this final resolution and the others above referred to, as I find the same correct in form and legal, with the above exception of mistake in year, which will be corrected by you, and I am therefore returning the resolutions to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

UPON WHAT CONDITIONS CHILDREN OF SOLDIERS AND SAILORS IN PRESENT WAR MAY BE ADMITTED TO THE OHIO SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Children of soldiers and sailors of the present war may be admitted into the home upon the same conditions as the children of soldiers and sailors of the civil war or the Spanish-American war.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 28, 1918.

HON. J. P. ELTON, Superintendent the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home, Xenia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of February 4, 1918, as follows:

"The question as to the proper construction of the statute, section 1932 G. C., relating to the admission of children to this home, has arisen. The precise point is whether children of men now serving in the military or naval forces of the United States are eligible for admission to the home. I may say that it has been the view of the board of trustees of the institution, from its inception, that only children of honorably discharged soldiers and sailors were entitled to admission. The statute does not so specify, but it does provide, and has always provided, that admission should be made 'under such rules and regulations as the trustees may adopt.' In year book No. 105-106, house bill 574, the above named section was amended to include children of members of the Ohio National Guard.

We are receiving many applications for the admission of children whose fathers are serving in the present war, and it is the desire of the board to have your opinion in respect to the proper construction of this statute at your earliest convenience."

Sections 1931, 1932 and 1932-1 of the General Code read:

"Sec. 1931. There shall be an institution under the name of 'the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home,' which shall be a place for the care and education of children of deceased and disabled soldiers and sailors."

"Sec. 1932. Under such rules and regulations as they adopt, the trustees shall receive into the home the children and orphans, destitute of means of support and education and residing in Ohio, of soldiers and sailors who died by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States, and the children of permanently disabled or indigent soldiers and sailors in like manner destitute."

"Sec. 1932-1. That the board of trustees of the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home, Xenia, Ohio, are hereby authorized and directed to receive into such home the children of all members of the Ohio national guard whose lives were lost, or who were permanently disabled at any time in the course of active duty in the service of the state, on the same basis and subject to the same laws as other children are admitted to such institution."

In addition to these statutes authorizing admission into the home, there was in 103 O. L., p. 665, an act passed April 17, 1913, reading as follows:

"Section 1. That the board of trustees of the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' orphans' home, Xenia, Ohio, are hereby authorized and directed to receive into such home the children of all members of the Ohio national guard whose lives were lost in the course of duty, or were permanently disabled, during the floods of March and April, 1913, on the same basis and subject to the same laws as other children are admitted to such institution."

This act, for the reason that it seemed to have been looked upon as temporary, was not numbered and carried into the General Code.

It will be noted from the above sections that to entitle a child to admission into the home it must not only be destitute of means of support and education, and reside in Ohio, but it must be:

(1) The child of a soldier or sailor who died by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while serving in the military or naval forces of the United States;

(2) The child of a permanently disabled or indigent soldier or sailor;

(3) The child of a member of the Ohio national guard, whose life was lost or who was permanently disabled at any time in the course of active duty in the service of the state.

You ask whether children, whose fathers are serving in the present war may be admitted into the home. You will note that the above three classes of children are eligible for admission into the home. The first two classes consist of children of soldiers and sailors of the United States. No limitation is found in the statute as to the war in which such soldiers or sailors must have served.

It is my opinion that children of soldiers and sailors of the present war may be admitted into the home upon the same conditions as the children of soldiers and sailors of the civil war or the Spanish-American war.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN A CHECK DEPOSITED IN A BANK MUST BE LISTED FOR TAXATION BY DEPOSITOR—WHEN OUTSTANDING CHECK MAY BE DEDUCTED FROM BANK BALANCE FOR TAX LISTING PURPOSES—MISTAKE.

1. Where a bank accepts by endorsement checks on other banks and places the amount thereof to the general credit of its depositor, said amount immediately becomes "moneys" of the depositor within the definition of the taxation statute, section 5326 General Code; and though the checks are not accepted by the banks on which they are drawn until after tax listing day the bank balance of the depositor, including the amount of such checks, should be listed for taxation as "moneys in bank" on such date.

2. Outstanding checks drawn by a depositor on his own account are not to be deducted from his bank balance for tax listing purposes unless and until they are accepted or certified by the bank. This rule is not altered by the fact that the checks are combined with vouchers and are accepted by the creditors of the depositor as payment.

3. When, through mistakes, checks which have actually been paid have not been debited against a depositor's account prior to tax listing day and such mistake is subsequently discovered, the amount of such checks should be deducted from the ostensible balance of the depositor as it existed on tax listing day for the purpose of determining the latter's taxable moneys.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 30, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 12, requesting my opinion upon the following facts:

"The Halmar Coal Mining Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, in making its corporate return for the year 1917 to the auditor of Hamilton county, Ohio, returned the sum of $1,821 under the item of money, which was the amount as shown by the company's books to its credit at the bank on that day.

The auditor increased this item of money to $58,180, his increase being based upon the bank balance to the credit of said company on listing day as shown by the bank's books. The Halmar Coal Mining Company filed a complaint with the board of revision of Hamilton county asking that the finding of the auditor be decreased $56,359, or an amount equal to their original return, the company claiming that it had issued checks against its bank balance and should only be taxed for $1,821. The board of revision refused any relief. The matter was thereupon brought to the attention of the tax commission upon the appeal of the Halmar Coal Mining Company from the decision of the board of revision of Hamilton county, and the company is asking the tax commission to decrease the finding of the auditor $56,359. April 8th was tax listing day for 1917. Would you please give us your legal interpretation of the following questions:

1. Upon consideration of this appeal the commission finds that something over $9,000 of the bank balance of the Halmar Coal Mining Company, as shown by the bank book of said company, was placed to the credit of said company just prior to listing day. The company has furnished an affidavit of its auditor showing that $9,807.55 of this amount was made up of checks drawn by foreign concerns on foreign banks in Boston, Detroit and other cities, and which were in the process of collection and in transit on listing day. A list of these checks is set forth in the affidavit, marked 'Exhibit A,' which we are attaching to this letter. Should the amount of these checks be taxed? The affidavit shows that the checks were not acknowledged by the foreign banks until after April 7, 1917.

2. The checks issued by the Halmar Coal Mining Company are a combination voucher and check. Several of these checks were issued to Ohio concerns prior to listing day and were accepted and receipted for by said Ohio concerns, and endorsed and banked to the credit of said Ohio concerns prior to listing day. However, they did not pass through clearing house channels and reach the bank of said company, and were not charged off the account of said company until after listing day. I am enclosing one of these checks, marked 'Exhibit B.' Should amount of money in bank on listing day to the credit of the Halmar Coal Mining Company as evidenced by these checks, so issued and receipted for by payee, be taxed against said the Halmar Coal Mining Company?

3. Several of the checks issued by said the Halmar Coal Mining Company prior to listing day were receipted by the payee prior to listing day, endorsed and cashed by the payee prior to listing day, and the 'paid' perforation of the bank shows that they were paid by the bank on which they were drawn but for some reason not charged off the account of the said the Halmar Coal Mining Company prior to listing day. I am enclosing one of said checks marked 'Exhibit C,' the perforations on which show that it was paid the second day of April, 1917. Should the amount of money to the credit of the Halmar Coal Mining Company on listing day, as evidenced by these checks, be subject to taxation against said company?

I might cite you to the case of the Union Central Life Insurance Company v. Hynicka, in the superior court of Cincinnati. However, the court does not seem to have considered like questions and especially the question with reference to the deposits which were evidenced by checks on foreign banks and in the process of collection."

The case to which you refer is reported in 4 N. P. (N. S.) 296 (Special Term) and 5 N. P. (N. S.) 255 (General Term). I quote the following from the opinion of Hoffheimer, J., in 4 N. P. (N. S.) at p. 308:

"It appears from the evidence that large sums of money were on deposit to defendant's credit, in three banks of the city of Cincinnati, on the tax days in question. Certain gross amounts were returned by defendant company for taxation. The balance apparently to defendant's credit was reduced or wiped out, as defendant claims, and was not returned for taxation, because of an enormous amount of outstanding checks. The defendant's return was based upon its check book, but the treasurer now seeks to tax the actual balances in bank, as shown by the books of the banks, on the day preceding the second Monday in April, in the years in question, without allowing deductions for the outstanding checks. * * * The question whether defendant was justified in reducing amounts in bank by deducting therefrom the outstanding checks, is dependent for its answer upon two other questions: First, were there outstanding checks as a matter of fact? Second, assuming that there were some oustanding checks as a matter of law, were such checks properly deductible from defendant's local balances? The 'checks' in question fall within four distinct classes, and the stipulation sets out these so-called checks by tables * * *.

Table 1. This table represents checks drawn directly on the local banks. These were presented and paid after tax day.

Table 2. Checks drawn on New York banks. These checks were presented and paid after tax day.

Table 3. Checks on local banks that were never presented or paid, but canceled. *

Table 4. Checks on New York banks that were never presented or paid, but canceled." * *

(Considering first tables 3 and 4 the court held on obvious grounds that these checks ought not to have been deducted from the actual balance. No such question is presented in the case concerning which you inquire.)

"Taking up next the checks in table 1. If we assume that these checks were actually issued by defendant company, the evidence shows that they had not been presented and paid on the tax days in question. The question then is, were defendant's funds in the local banks upon which such checks were drawn subject to the legal demand of defendant company on the tax days in question? 'Money' on deposit and subject to demand is taxable. Section 2731, Revised Statutes (this section has since become section 5326 General Code), reads as follows:

'The term money or monies shall be held to mean and include every deposit which the person owning or holding in trust or having a beneficial interest therein is entitled to withdraw in money on demand.'

* * * That the money was in the banks is conceded. It is not sufficient, in order to avoid taxation on a bank deposit, to merely issue checks thereon, because a check is nothing more than an order on the fund, 'payable instantly on demand.' It is simply an executory promise to pay the sum specified in the check according to the terms thereof. The mere giving of the check, is not an assignment pro tanto of the fund. It follows, therefore, that until the check is presented or paid or the bank in some way committed to the holder or payee the promise may be recalled. That is to say, the drawer may countermand up to the last moment. Up to that time the funds are subject to the drawer's legal demand."

(Citing:
Kahn v. Walton, 46 O. S. 195;
Covert v. Rhodes, 48 O. S. 66;
Metropolitan Bank v. C. H. & D. Ry.. Co., 54 O. S. 60;
Bank v. Yardly, 165 U. S. 648;
Bank v. Brewing Co., 50 O. S. 151.)

"* * * But because given to pay a debt, the rule is not altered, nor is the bona fides of the transaction involved. A check is subject to countermand before it is presented, or the bank committed to the payee, or before the check is cashed. Now, we know the local banks were in no sense committed to the payment of these particular checks. They were not certified, nor were they presented for payment on or before the tax days in question."

The court then considers the case of Ambach v. Sims, Treas., arising in Franklin county and resulting in an unreported decision by the supreme court, 71 O. S. 545, which the court finds to support the views which had been previously expressed. The general term affirmed the judgment pronounced at the special term, and though an opinion was published in that court I do not find it necessary to quote from the same.

It seems to me that the principles laid down in this case, which is generally accepted to be the law in Ohio, really suggest the answers to all your questions. Indeed they furnish an immediate solution of the second question. The mere fact that the check of the company has been accepted by its creditor as payment does not alter the case, if the bank has not been brought into privity with the transaction by either accepting and cashing the check or certifying it. It is my opinion, therefore, that your second question is to be answered in the affirmative.

The same principles lead to an opposite conclusion with respect to the third question. Here the checks had actually been paid but through some clerical error on the part of the bank the account of the company was not debited with the checks until after taxing day. Such a mistake is subject to correction and in law the company's real balance should be regarded as being in amount what it would have been had the mistake never occurred. Therefore, the amount of money appearing on the books of the bank to the credit of the company on listing day should be reduced by such amount as represents the checks which had actually been cashed prior to that day but which were not properly entered against the account of the company until thereafter.

The only serious question exists as to your first inquiry. Yet upon consideration the doubt which at first blush would seem to arise in respect of it will, I think, disappear. If the bank had taken these checks endorsed to it by the company for collection merely, not crediting its general account with their amount, then, of course, such amount would not be taxable as "money" to the company but merely as "credits;" but if, as your statement seems to show, the bank accepted the endorsement of these checks to it without reservation and immediately credited its depositor's general account with the amounts thereof what happened was in contemplation of law, as between the bank and the depositor, exactly the same thing as would have happened had an equivalent amount of actual currency been placed on deposit. Suppose the depositor had presented these checks and had asked to have them cashed; and after receiving currency for them had placed the currency in the bank, the legal situation would be precisely the same as that which appears under your statement of facts; for should the checks have proved unacceptable to the banks on which they were drawn the bank of deposit could have held its depositor as the prior endorser by proceeding in the proper way to charge him as such. This is all that can be done by the bank under the circumstances as stated by you. Suppose, again, the depositor had chosen to withdraw his entire balance during the period between depositing these checks and the date of their final acceptance by the banks on which they were drawn; in such event the amount of these checks would have been included in the general balance; and if it had subsequently developed that none of the checks had not been accepted the bank's recourse against the depositor would not have been on the theory of the recovery of money paid by mistake (as it would be in the last case you state under a similar assumption) but upon its endorsement.

In short, when a bank accepts from its depositors checks on other banks endorsed to it by the depositors and gives general credit the transaction, in contemplation of law amounts to a purchase of the checks by the bank in consideration of the general credit which stands as and for so much cash, in the same sense as any other deposit represents cash in bank.

I answer your first question, therefore, on the assumption which I have stated in the affirmative.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW JURORS PAID, WHO WERE DRAWN FOR COMMON PLEAS COURT, AND SERVED ON JURY IN THE PROBATE COURT.

A venire had been drawn for the common pleas court and a venire for the probate court. There were not enough jurymen in the probate venire to complete the jury and regular veniremen of the common pleas court filled up the probate jury and served as jurymen throughout the case.

The clerk of the court of common pleas should certify to whatever mileage is involved with reference to these jurymen and that the same should be paid by the county treasurer on the warrant of the county auditor, and that the clerk of the probate court should certify as to the jury service which was rendered by these jurors as talesmen in the probate court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, March 30, 1918.

HON. LEWIS D. SLUSSER, Probate Judge, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of March 2, 1918, as follows:

"Kindly inform us who pays the costs of the jurymen under the following circumstances:

"A venire had been drawn for the common pleas court and a venire for the probate court. There were not enough jurymen in the probate venire to complete the jury and regular veniremen of the common pleas court filled up the probate jury and served as jurymen throughout the case. Are these jurymen from the venire for the common pleas court that filled out the jury in the probate court paid through the probate court or through the clerk's office for their services while acting as jurors in the probate court?"

Section 3008 of the General Code reads as follows:

"Each grand or petit juror drawn from the jury box pursuant to law, each juror selected by the court as talesman as provided by law, and each talesman, shall receive two dollars for each day of service, and if not a talesman, five cents each mile from his place of residence to the county seat. Such compensation shall be certified by the clerk of the court and paid by the county treasurer on the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 11212 G. C. provides:

"The provisions of law governing civil proceedings in the court of common pleas, so far as applicable, shall govern like proceedings in the probate court, when there is no provision on the subject in this title."

Section 11204 G. C. provides:

"The fees of witnesses, jurors, sheriffs, coroners and constables, for all services rendered in the probate court, or by order of the probate judge, shall be the same as is provided by law, for like services in the court of common pleas."

It will be seen from these sections that a juror in the common pleas or probate courts is entitled to receive $2.00 per day for each jury service and if he is not a talesman he is also entitled to receive 5c for each mile traveled from his place of residence to the county seat. The jurors referred to in your communication were drawn from the common pleas court, but served in the probate court. These jurors came to the county seat as prospective common pleas jurors, but were called for service in the probate court as talesmen. Being talesmen, as far as the probate court is concerned, they, by virtue of section 3008 G. C., are only entitled to receive the fee for jury service, viz., $2.00 for each day. However, having been duly summoned for service in the common pleas court according to law, they are entitled to receive 5c for each mile traveled from the place of residence to the county seat, under section 3008 G. C.

It is therefore my opinion that the clerk of the court of common pleas should certify to whatever mileage is involved with reference to these jurymen and that the same should be paid by the county treasurer on the warrant of the county auditor, and that the clerk of the probate court should certify as to the jury service which was rendered by these jurors as talesmen in the probate court.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—BOND ISSUE OF THE BOARD OF EDUCATION OF LICKING TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, LICKING COUNTY—$3,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Licking township rural school district, Licking county, Ohio, in the sum of $3,000.00, for the purpose of completing a partially built school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Licking township rural school district, Licking county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

The only question of any consequence presented on a consideration of said transcript is that which was discussed by me at some length in opinion No. 966, under date of January 25, 1918, and which opinion related to the validity of certain bonds issued by Canton city school district under authority of section 7629 General Code. In other words, the above issue of bonds, as that considered in the opinion above referred to, is an issue by the board of education under section 7629 G. C. without the vote of the electors for the purpose of completing a school building which has been constructed to its present condition from the proceeds of bonds issued by the board of education on a vote of the electors in an amount estimated by the board to be sufficient to completely construct said building.

Inasmuch as in my previous opinion above referred to I reached the conclusion that a board of education might issue bonds under section 7629 General Code, within the limitations of said section, for the purpose above indicated, and finding the proceedings of the board of education of Licking township rural school district otherwise regular and in conformity with the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind, I am of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted will, when properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION NOT AUTHORIZED TO INVEST FUNDS AT ITS DISPOSAL—WHEN BOARD HAS FUNDS RAISED BY BOND ISSUE AND DECIDES NOT TO MAKE IMPROVEMENT FOR WHICH BONDS WERE ISSUED, SAID FUNDS SHOULD BE PLACED IN SINKING FUND OF THE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

A board of education is not authorized to invest funds at its disposal; and where such board has in the building fund money as the proceeds of a bond issue for the purpose of erecting a school building in the school district, the money should be used for such purpose. If the project of erecting such school building is abandoned for any reason, these moneys under the authority of section 5654 General Code, should be passed to the sinking fund of the school district for the purpose of retiring outstanding bonds as they mature, and the interest thereon. The moneys can then be subject to the management and control of the board of sinking fund commissioners of the school district, and may be invested by such board in the manner authorized by section 7615 General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1918.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, this department is in receipt of a communication from you in which opinion is asked on facts stated therein. Your letter reads as follows:

> "The village school district of Franklin, Warren county, Ohio, issued $100,000.00 worth of bonds under the provisions of section 7630-1 G. C. for the purpose of erecting a school building. Owing to the increase in the cost of materials and labor, they have been unable to secure bids within the estimates and it seems that it is probable that they will not be able to erect the building for sometime to come. The bulk of their money is deposited in banks and the rate of interest is, I think, 2%.
> I desire to inquire whether or not it would be lawful for them to invest this money in United States government bonds of the Liberty Loans until such time as they can use the money for the purpose for which it was originally voted. If this is lawful, they would be able to receive an interst on the money substantially the same in amount which they must pay on their bonds."

In answer to your communication, I beg to say that I know of no statutory authority permitting a board of education to invest moneys at its disposal. The money here in question, as the proceeds of bonds issued for the purpose of erecting a school building, is now properly in the school district's depositories to the credit of the building fund of said school district, and should be used for the purpose for which said bonds were issued. If for any reason the board should finally decide not to use this money for this purpose, it would be its duty under section 5654 General Code to transfer the same to the sinking fund of the school district, where under the management and control of the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district, said board would be required to keep said moneys invested in the manner provided in section 7615 General Code.

The question made by you is answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT COMPENSATE AGENT OR BROKER FOR SELLING COUNTY BONDS AT PRIVATE SALE.

Under section 2295 General Code authorizing a board of county commissioners to sell county bonds at private sale after failure to sell same after advertisement for bids thereon, such board is not authorized to employ an agent or broker to negotiate a sale of such bonds issued by it and procure purchasers therefor, and to compensate such agent or broker by way of commission or otherwise, either out of the proceeds of the bond sale or out of the general funds of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 2, 1918.

HON. A. V. BAUMANN, JR., Prosecuting Attorney, Fremont, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you under date of March 9, 1918, in which you advise that the board of county commissioners of your county have provided for the issue of inter-county road bonds in the sum of $45,000, and also for an issue of joint county ditch bonds in the sum of $39,800, which they have been unable to sell either as the result of advertising for bids therefor, or at private sale.

My opinion is asked on the question, whether the board of county commissioners is authorized to contract for the services of an agent or broker to effectuate a sale of these bond issues and pay him a reasonable commission therefor.

The county commissioners in the disposition of these bonds are governed by the provisions of sections 2294 and 2295 General Code, which read as follows:

> "Sec. 2294. All bonds issued by boards of county commissioners, boards of education, township trustees, or commissioners of free turnpikes shall be sold to the highest bidder after being advertised once a week for three consecutive weeks and on the same day of the week, in a newspaper having general circulation in the county where the bonds are issued, and, if the amount of bonds to be sold exceeds twenty thousand dollars, like publications shall be made in an additional newspaper having general circulation in the state. The advertisement shall state the total amount and denomination of bonds to be sold, how long they are to run, the rate of interest to be paid thereon, whether annually or semi-annually, the law or section of law authorizing the issue, the day, hour and place in the county where they are to be sold.
> "Sec. 2295. None of such bonds shall be sold for less than the face thereof with any interest that may be accrued thereon, and the privilege shall be reserved of rejection of any or all bids. When such bonds have been once advertised and offered at public sale, as provided by law, and they, or any part thereof, remain unsold, those unsold may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value and accrued interest. All moneys from the principal on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold, and all moneys from premiums and accrued interest on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the sinking fund from which said bonds are to be redeemed."

Essentially your inquiry is narrowed down to the question whether or not the county commissioners as an incident to their power to sell these bonds at private sale at not less than par and accrued interest, have the implied power to contract for the services of an agent to negotiate a sale of said bonds and procure a purchaser or purchasers therefor at not less than the amount prescribed by statute as to each issue.

The question thus presented is one of considerable difficulty, and of great importance. The weight of authority furnished by the decided cases supports the proposition that a general authority to dispose of bonds at not less than par carries with it the implied authority to employ such reasonable and proper assistance as may be necessary to effectuate a sale of bonds and to pay a reasonable commission therefor.

The case of the Mayor, etc., of the City of New York v. Sands, 105 N. Y. 210, was an action to recover from the defendant the value of a certain check turned over to the defendant by the comptroller of New York, in payment of defendant's commission for services in procuring a sale of certain consolidated funding bonds of the county of New York under contract entered into between the defendant and the comptroller.

The bonds were sold at a premium of 4½%, and the defendant was paid for his services out of the amount realized on the sale of said bonds. The court, in sustaining the validity of the contract under which the defendant rendered the particular services there in question, in its opinion, says:

> "No question is made as to the legality of this issue, or but that the whole proceeds of the bonds, including premiums, excepting the check in question, were applied to the purposes of the county, or paid over to its treasurer by the comptroller. It would be difficult to conceive of a grant of power conferred in broader or more comprehensive language, and which could be less restricted by conditions and limitations upon an agent's authority. No limit is imposed upon the amount of bonds to be issued, except that implied from the use to which they were to be devoted, and no restriction as to the terms upon which they were to be disposed of, or the amount of the expenses to be incurred in their preparation, negotiation and transfer is found in the act. The comptroller was broadly charged with the duty of creating a public fund or stock to be denominated 'consolidated stock of the county of New York' and whatever power was necessary to enable him to perform his duty was necessarily conferred upon him by the act. Whether this was a wise or prudent grant of power, or whether in the exercise of it, the comptroller was enabled to commit abuses or frauds upon the people of the county with impunity, is not a subject for our consideration. We find the law upon the statute book and it is subject to the same rules of construction, as other statutes thus appearing. Citizens of the state having occasion to deal with the comptroller in reference to the subject-matter of the act, had the right to rely upon its provisions, and the authority apparently conferred upon him, to bind the fund or principals represented by him.
>
> It is a matter of public history, of which courts will take judicial notice, that in the sale of bonds, and negotiations for loans in behalf of states, municipalities and governments, the services of their own fiscal agents are usually, if not invariably, supplemented by the employment of bankers, brokers and other financial agencies to aid in raising moneys for public purposes.
>
> * * * * * * * * * *
> It is a matter of common knowledge that such loans, in all countries of the world, are usually negotiated through agencies outside of the regular financial authorities of the government making the loans. Whether their employment in the case in hand was wise and prudent, or perhaps even necessary to the accomplishment of the object intended by the statute, cannot be determined as a question of law, for the statute gave the comptroller power to determine that question in his own discretion, subject only to the obligation to do so honestly and in good faith. Under these circumstances the question is presented, what were the duties of the comptroller and the extent of his power in carrying out the law. It is a well established principle that statutes containing grants of power shall be construed, so as to include the authority to do all things necessary to accomplish the object of the grant, and to enable the donee of the power to effect the purpose of the act."

In the case of Armstrong v. The Village of Fort Edward, 159 N. Y. 315, it was held that an express power in a village board of waterworks commissioners to sell water bonds, carried with it implied powers to employ such reasonable or proper assistance as might be requisite to bring about an advantageous sale of such bonds. The court in its opinion in this case, after noting the earlier cases of Mayor, etc., v. Sands, supra, and Brownell v. Town of Greenwich, 114 N. Y. 518, refers to the case of Village of Fort Edward v. Fish, 156 N. Y. 353, and then says:

"This last case calls attention to the rule by which the authority of officers, such as the members of this board of water commissioners, to make contracts may be determined. Where there is an express grant of power to them it carries with it, by necessary implication, every other power needful and proper to the execution of the power expressly granted. The authority to sell water bonds, therefore, carries with it the authority to secure such reasonable and proper assistance as may be requisite to bring about an advantageous sale of the bonds. It is suggested that the rule permits the employment of brokers only to sell the bonds, but it is not so confined. It was not a broker that was selected in Mayor, etc., v. Sands (supra), and it quite frequently happens that men who are not brokers, and never have been, have such relations that they can dispose of bonds fully as advantageously as brokers. Those having charge of the selling of bonds have the right to exercise their discretion in selecting the agencies by which they shall make disposition of them, but in the selection of such agencies it is their duty to exercise their best judgment in the interests of the public whom they serve. The selection, therefore, must be made in good faith and with a fixed purpose to further the interests of the constituency represented."

The court in its opinion in this case further says:

"The record contains evidence suggesting much of fruitless effort on the part of the local authorities to place the bonds, and while the matter of their disposition was in that situation, parties who were not brokers were at work on the matter, and the outcome was a sale of $97,000 of the bonds for the sum of $105,000. Such an agent the board of water commissioners had the right to employ at a reasonable compensation, whether his usual business was that of a broker, a lawyer or doctor."

In the case of Manitou v. First National Bank, 37 Cole, 344, it appears that statutory power was given to the municipality to sell the bonds there in question, but that such bonds should not be sold for less than their par value. The town, through its board of trustees, agreed in writing to pay one Leddy $1,200 for his services in placing or selling at par an issue of its waterworks refunding bonds, amounting to $40,000; an unsuccessful attempt to dispose of the bonds having been previously made. The action was a contest with respect to the legality of warrants issued in payment of this $1,200, representing the agent's compensation for services rendered in the sale of the bonds. The court, after referring to the New York cases above noted, says:

> "We believe that the above states the law to be applied to this case, and that under the facts disclosed by this record, the contract made by the board of trustees with Mr. Leddy to pay him a commission for his services was within the implied powers of the municipal corporation; that the same was not ultra vires or illegal, and that the warrants issued in payment of the services rendered under the contract were valid and binding obligations of the municipality."

In the case just noted, it appears that the bonds were sold at their face value.

In the case of State v. West Duluth Land Co. 75 Minn., 456, the court, referring to certain statutory provisions of that state providing for the issue and sale of the bonds there in question, says:

> "Under the provisions of section 4, chapter 289, supra, a sale of the bonds issued thereunder at less than par value was forbidden. The bonds now under consideration, $140,000 in amount, were turned over to a broker for sale under a written contract with the board of county commissioners. In this contract, it was stipulated that the broker should pay for lithographing and printing the blank bonds, for legal advice and services, and all other expenses incident to a sale, for which, and as compensation in full, he was to receive the sum of $14,000—10 per cent. of the face value of the bonds sold. On these facts we are asked to hold that there was a plain violation of section 4, and that the bonds are void. There might be cases where the facts would very conclusively show that an agreed compensation of 10 per cent. for the sale of the bonds was a palpable evasion of such a section, but we have no such case before us. We cannot say, as a matter of law, that, under the conditions of this contract, there was a violation of section 4, which forbids a sale of the bonds at less than par."

In the case of Church v. Hadley, et al., the board of fund commissioners of the state of Missouri, 240 Mo. 680, held that under a statute authorizing such fund commissioners to issue and sell bonds of the state in the sum of $3,500,000 for the purpose of erecting a state capitol building, were authorized to pay a commission to brokers to dispose of said bonds after they had failed to sell the same by their own efforts, and this though the statute authorizing the issuance of said bonds provided that the same should be sold for not less than par. The court in its opinion in this case which notes and discusses the cases above noted, on this question, among other things, says:

> "The question therefore is, can a contract to pay a commission for procuring purchasers for these bonds be made by the board? We think so. First, it is a conceded fact that the defendants have tried to find purchasers and have failed. This might have been expected owing to the exceedingly low rate of interest (3½ per cent.) which the bonds bear, and owing to the further fact that the members of such board are not in position to find purchasers, as would be some established brokerage company, with a clientele all over the country. Such boards are not usually in touch with the great mass of persons who invest in such securities. A large issue of bonds of this character might be sold to the clientele of any large brokerage firm, in small quantities to each client. Such companies have and can find persons among their customers who could be easily induced to take one or more of such bonds even at a low rate of interest, but this would require work. What a brokerage firm could do in this way, the usual board charged with the sale of low rate bonds could not do. Again we say that the question is, can this board, after having tried to perform the duties imposed upon it in the matter of selling these bonds, and after having failed to sell them, employ and pay a broker or brokerage firm a stipulated reasonable sum to find and procure purchasers who will take these bonds at their face value.

The power to make such a contract must be gathered from the laws of the state. There is no express provision of this law which authorizes the making of such contract, but we think the power, under the admitted facts herein, is clearly implied.

* * * * * * * * * *

The power granted in this law is to sell bonds. The limitation of the power is that the actual sale shall not be less than par. The power of sale is granted in general terms, in so far as the means of sale is concerned. The statute granting the power does not undertake to prescribe the means and manner of sale.

In State ex rel. Clark v. Gates, 67 M. 143, Sherwood, Ch. J., thus announces the fixed rule in such cases: 'If there is one principle in the law which finds abundant and oft-repeated recognition, it is this: That, where an agent is clothed with general powers, the means and measures necessary to effectuate the powers granted attend the grant of authority as inevitable incidents. Edwards v. Thomas, 66 Mo. 468. Thus, an agent employed to get a bill discounted may, unless expressly restricted, indorse it in the name of his employer; a broker employed to effect a policy of insurance may adjust the loss and do all that is requisite towards such adjustment; an agent employed to issue process may receive the debt and costs; and, in general, an agent has implied authority to use those means of which the principal could not but have forseen the necessity, and therefore could not but have intended to authorize (Smith Mercantile Law, 175, 176, and cases cited); and the same principle which applies to private agents is equally applicable in this regard to public ones.'"

The court in its opinion further says:

"We do not mean to say that this act would necessarily by implication authorize the board of fund commissioners to resort to extreme methods to sell in the first instance, but what we do mean is that the law imposes upon them a duty to perform to meet an emergency; that if such board exhausts the usual means of exercising the power (as has been done in this case), then there is a clearly implied power to make such reasonable contracts for the securing of purchasers as the judgment of such board dictates, and in such contracts to provide for the payment of a reasonable sum for the aid given in finding and procuring purchasers willing to buy such bonds from the board at a price not less than par."

In the case of Davis v. The City of San Antonio, decided by the court of civil appeals of the state of Texas, and reported in 160 S. W. Rep. 1161, it was held under a special act amending the charter of the city of San Antonio providing that all bonds shall net the city not less than their par value, with accrued interest to date of payment of the proceeds into the city treasury, no commissions, attorney's fees, or other expenses connected with the issuance and sale of bonds can be taken from the proceeds, unless the bonds are sold at a premium sufficient to pay such expenses; that in the issuance and sale of such bonds the city was not precluded from contracting to pay certain expenses incident thereto, including commission for the sale thereof, and fees of expert attorneys for an opinion as to their validity, out of the general fund.

The only authority that I have been able to find in this state on the question here presented, is the case of Barber v. The Commissioners of Lucas County, reported in 7 N. P. Reps. at page 330. In this case it appeared that the county commissioners having failed in several attempts to sell court house bonds, entered into a contract with a broker whereby they agreed to allow him a certain commission for the sale of the bonds.

The court held that although the statute did not expressly authorize the commissioners to enter into such a contract, yet it appearing that the sale was in the best interest of the county, and there being no collusion or fraud in the transaction, an application for an injunction restraining such contract should be refused.

The authorities above considered, however, have not persuaded me that under the accepted law of this state governing boards of county commissioners in the exercise of their powers generally, and in the issue of county bonds, a board of county commissioners is authorized to employ an agent to negotiate a sale of bonds issued by it and procure purchasers therefor, and to compensate such agent by way of commission or otherwise, either out of the proceeds of the bond sale or out of the general funds of the county. In this connection it will be noted that section 2295 General Code authorizing the sale of bonds of this kind at private sale when the same have not been sold on advertisement for bids therefor, provides that said bonds may be sold at private sale at not less than their par value and accrued interest, and that all moneys from the principal on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the fund on account of which the bonds are issued and sold, and all moneys from premiums and accrued interest on the sale of such bonds shall be credited to the sinking fund from which said bonds are to be redeemed.

Aside from the case of Miller v. Park City, 126 Tenn., 427, the decided cases are uniform to the effect that under a statute authorizing the sale of bonds at par, it is not permissible to pay the purchaser of said bonds out of the proceeds of said sale or otherwise, a commission covering the services and expenses of the purchaser in the transaction, and this for the reason that such payment in substance and effect amounts to a discount in violation of the law which requires said bonds to be sold at par.

Whelen's App. 108 Pa., 162;
State of Illinois v. Delefield, 8 Paige, N. Y., 527;
Bay City v. State Bank, 193 Mich., 533;
Hunt v. Fossett, 8 Wash., 396;
Uhler v. Olymphia, 87 Wash., 1.

As to this, it may be observed that so far as the net amount received by the political subdivision issuing the bonds is concerned, it is not easily seen wherein the payment of the commission to an agent is anywise different from the payment of such commission to the purchaser. However this may be, it will be noted that the provision of section 2295 General Code requires all of the moneys realized on the sale of the county bonds to be covered into the proper funds of the county, and this necessarily excludes the idea of any legislative intention that any part of the proceeds of said bonds should be paid to an agent for his services in negotiating the sale of such bonds.

Applicable to every aspect of the questions submitted by you, it will be noted as a legal principle well settled in this state,

> "that county commissioners in their financial transactions are invested only with limited powers, and that they represent the county only in such transactions as they may be expressly authorized so to do by statute. The authority to act in financial transactions must be clear and distinctly granted, and, if such authority is of doubtful import, the doubt is resolved against its exercise in all cases where a financial obligation is sought to be imposed upon the county."
>
> State ex rel. v. Menning, 95 O. S. 97, 99.
> Jones, Auditor, v. Commissioners of Lucas County, 57 O. S. 189.

Moreover, it will be remembered that with respect to some improvements for which the board of county commissioners are authorized to issue bonds, such board acts in a political capacity only, and as representatives of property owners benefited by the improvement without the county having any corporate interest in the improvement. See County Commissioners v. Gates, 83 O. S. 19, 30.

In such cases it would be obviously unjust that the taxpayers of the county at large should be charged with the payment of commissions on the sale of bonds, the proceeds of which is to be used for the sole immediate benefit of the property owners benefited by the improvement.

However, I prefer to base the conclusion reached by me that the board of county commissioners are not authorized to employ and compensate agents for negotiating county bonds, upon the settled principles of law governing the board of county commissioners in transactions of a financial nature, and finding nothing in the statutes which expressly or by fair import, authorize the county commissioners to incur this expense in the sale of county bonds, I am of the opinion that such power does not exist. There might be particular instances like that in the case of Barber v. The Commissioners of Lucas County, supra, where the circumstances might be such that a court of equity would not enjoin the employment of an agent in the sale of county bonds, but I do not feel that under the present state of statutory law, any court in this state would lay down the broad principle that as an incident to the county commissioners' right to sell bonds of the county at private sale, they in all cases have the right to employ and compensate an agent for this purpose, even though in the first instance they may not have been able to effect such sale themselves.

In the consideration of this question, I have not been unmindful of the opportunities for corruption and other manifest dangers that might result from a holding contrary from that here made. My conclusions in the matter, however, rest entirely upon what I conceive to be the limitations applicable to the exercise of the powers of the county commissioners in this state both with respect to financial transactions in general, and with respect to the specific power to sell the bonds of the county at private sale.

The question made by you is therefore answered in the negative with respect to both of the bond issues mentioned in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO EXTEND TIME FOR PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACT FOR CONSTRUCTION OF HIGHWAY TO A DAY CERTAIN—RIGHTS OF COMMISSIONERS AND SURETIES ON CONTRACTOR'S BOND WHEN CONTRACTOR IS PERMITTED TO CONTINUE ROAD WORK AFTER TIME FOR PERFORMANCE HAS EXPIRED—COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT RELEASE SURETY ON BOND.

1. In those cases wherein a contractor for the construction of a highway has failed to perform the work within the time specified in the contract, the county commissioners have no authority to extend the time to a day certain within which the work may be completed.

2. The county commissioners might suffer or permit the contractor to proceed with the work after the day specified in the contract for completion, but this would not prevent the county commissioners or the sureties on the bond from asserting their rights under the contract, and hence under such conditions the sureties on the bond would not be released.

3. There is no authority in law by which the county commissioners may release the sureties on a bond given under the contract for a road improvement and compel the contractor to give a new or additional bond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1918.

HON. GEORGE S. MAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Napoleon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 16, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "On October 30, 1916, one William Creager, as principal, with three sureties, entered into a contractor's bond conditioned for the completion of a certain road improvement on or before the first day of September, 1917.
> Owing to the impossibility of securing material, the terms of said contract could not be complied with, either by the contractor himself or by force account. No action was taken on said bond and nothing was done by the commissioners in reference to said road improvement until within the last few weeks, when for good cause shown said commissioners extended the time for the completion of said road.
>
> Under the above conditions, does such extension operate to relieve the bondsmen or can the county commissioners legally release them and require the contractor to give new sureties?
> This condition applies to a number of roads in this county where the contractors are personally not responsible, and as said contracts under present conditions are not profitable, every effort possible will be made to get from under."

Your supplemental communication under date of March 21, 1918, reads as follows:

> "Having reference to your letter of March 18, 1918, I enclose herewith copy of the contract and bond in the case referred to. Upon the extension of the time by the commissioners, notice was sent to the sureties of such extension and while I am of the opinion that the consent of the sureties be obtained in writing before any extension is made, still it has occurred to me that if the sureties simply acquiesce in the extension and say nothing, they might be estopped to deny their liability on said bond."

The facts upon which you desire my opinion are as follows: On October 30, 1916, your county commissioners let a contract for a certain road improvement to be completed on the first day of September, 1917. The construction of said improvement not having been completed, owing to certain circumstances, your county commissioners some few weeks since, upon good cause shown, extended the time for the completion of the improvement to some future date, not specifically set out in your communications.

The sureties upon the bond given in connection with said contract did not give their consent to said extension of time, but the county commissioners after so extending the time gave notice to the sureties on the bond. The sureties, however, did not make any reply or take any steps relative to said notice.

The contract entered into by and between your county commissioners and William Creager, for the construction of said improvement, did not contain any provision reserving the right to the county commissioners to extend the time for the completion of this improvement. Said contract contains this provision:

> "He further agrees to complete the same on or before the first day of September, A. D. 1917."

Under these facts you ask my opinion upon the following questions of law:

1. Does such extension of time operate to relieve the bondsmen?

2. Can the county commissioners legally release the original bondsmen and require the contractor to give new sureties?

In answer to your first question it can be said that the bond is given in reference to the terms and conditions of the contract under which the bond is given. The sureties are liable under the terms and conditions found in the contract upon which the bond is based. In other words, the contract virtually becomes a part of the conditions under which the sureties on the bond may become liable.

Hence any change in the terms and conditions of the contract, without the consent of the sureties, will release the sureties from their obligation under the bond. If the conditions are changed by the county commissioners, there is practically a new contract entered into, embodying the terms and conditions of the old contract, together with the new terms and conditions. To this new contract the surety would in no sense be a party and therefore is not bound under the bond which he gave in reference to the contract as it formerly existed. It is universally held by the courts that the extension of the time within which a contract or agreement is to be completed is such a modification of the contract that the surety upon the bond is thereby discharged.

In 32 Cyc. 1991, the principle of law is stated as follows:

> "The rule is well settled that if a creditor or obligee, by a valid and binding agreement, without the assent of a surety, give further time for payment or performance to the principal debtor, the surety will be discharged."

In Ide v. Churchill et al., 14 O. S. 372, we find the following in the fifth branch of the syllabus:

> "Any material alteration of the terms of the agreement to which the surety acceded, made by a valid agreement between the principal parties, without his consent, will work his entire discharge from all liability; * *."

In the opinion on p. 387 the court lays down the following:

> "Where the agreement to which the surety acceded has been changed, his obligation is annihilated and gone, and there is no power, either in courts of law or equity, to revive it against him, or to make him a party to the substituted agreement concluded between the principal parties; and in such cases, his entire discharge necessarily ensues."

In Fawcett et al. v. Freshwater, 31 O. S. 367, the syllabus reads:

> "An agreement between the payee and principal of a note, for the extension of the time of its payment for a fixed and definite period, in consideration of the same rate of interest as that named in the note, is valid, without the payment of the interest in advance, and, if made without the knowledge of the sureties, will discharge them."

While this decision was rendered relative to the extension of time of payment of a promissory note, yet the principle therein stated would apply to the kind of a contract under consideration. Before the above principle of law will obtain, however, the extension of time must not be general or indefinite, but must be for some definite period of time; that is, the time within which the contract was originally to be completed must be extended to some definite and fixed time set out in the supplemental agreement entered into between the principals. This I understand was done in the action taken by your county commissioners.

Further, there must be a consideration for the extension of time, in order to make the extension legal and binding upon both parties; otherwise the above principle of law would not obtain. You state in your communication that the commissioners, "for good cause shown," extended the time for the completion of said road. In my opinion it is very doubtful whether the courts would consider this to be a consideration for the extension of the time for the completion of the contract.

Such is the general statement of law which applies to the matter under consideration. There is left one most important question to be considered, and that is whether the agreement to extend the time within which the contract might be completed is a legal one. It will be noted that Cyc., in laying down the principle of law which controls, states that it must be a valid and binding agreement.

In Ide v. Churchill, et al., supra, the court was careful to state the proposition as follows:

> "Any material alteration of the terms of the agreement to which the surety acceded, made by a valid agreement between the principal parties, without his consent; will work his entire discharge from all liability."

The important question, therefore, which remains to be considered is this, had the county commissioners any authority, after the contractor had forfeited the contract by failure to complete the work within the time therein specified, to extend the time of completion of the work? If they had no authority so to do, then their extension of time amounts to nothing and works no injury whatever to the sureties on the bond of the contractor.

In 11 Cyc. 486 the following proposition relative to this matter is laid down:

> "Where a contract with a county has been forfeited because not completed within the time stipulated therein, the county board of supervisors cannot extend the time for performance and thus revive and validate a dead contract."

In Fanning v. Schammel et al., 68 Calif. 428, the court said:

> "The contract under which the work was done required its completion within sixty days. The work was not completed within the time, and subsequently the board of supervisors of the city and county extended the time for its completion. HELD: That upon the failure to complete the work within the time required, the contract expired and the board of supervisors had no jurisdiction to revive or validate it."

In the opinion the court added to this quoted principle the following:

> "The order of extension was therefore unauthorized and void."

In 10 Pac. Rep. 395, there is a case reported, in which the following principle is laid down:

> "The board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco cannot, after the expiration of the time for the completion of street work under a contract, extend the time; and any attempt to do so, or to validate an assessment for such work in pursuance of an extension of time is void."

To the same effect, is the case of Beveridge v. Livingstone, 54 Calif. 54. It must be stated, however, that the decisions of the California courts were based upon a statute which read as follows (p. 56):

> "But should the said contractor or the property owners fail to prosecute the same diligently or continuously, in the judgment of said superintendent of public streets, highways and squares, or to complete it within the time prescribed in the contract, or within such extended time, then it shall be the duty of said superintendent of public streets, highways and squares to report the same to the board of supervisors, who shall, without further petition on behalf of the property owners, order the clerk of the board of supervisors to advertise for bids, as in the first instance, and relet the contract in the manner hereinbefore provided."

But it is my opinion that the same principle would apply in the matter under consideration. The California courts held that when the contract was not completed within the time provided for, the provisions of the above quoted statute should then be followed. Under the same reasoning it is my view that when the contract is not completed within the time provided for therein, then the county commissioners cannot revive the same by extending the time to a date further than that provided for in the contract, but they would have authority to assert their rights in law at any time after the expiration of the time provided in the contract.

If this theory be correct, and I believe it is, the county commissioners had no authority in law to enter into the agreement to extend the time for the compeltion of the work, and hence their agreement is void. If their agreement to extend the time is void, the sureties on the bond were not injured, in that they could assert their rights at any time and would not be compelled to wait until the expiration of the time to which the completion of the work was extended.

The case of Ampt v. Cincinnati, 6 O. N. P. 208, is somewhat in point. In the syllabus the court held:

> "Modifications of a contract made as provided by law, and not substantially affecting the general purpose and operation of the old contract, can be made and will be lawful."

In the opinion on p. 214 the court said:

> "A modification is a change or an alteration which introduces new elements into the details or cancels some of them, but leaves the general purpose and effect of the subject-matter intact. It is such change in a contract as leaves the original thing in operation, so far as its general purpose and effect are concerned. It must not make any substantially new engagement from the old one. Therefore, so long as the modifications are made as provided by law, and the changes thus entered into do not substantially affect the general purpose and operation of the old contract, then such modification could be made and would be lawful. In this case the court is of the opinion that the modifications and alterations contemplated do not change the general purpose and effect of the original contract, and such modifications or alterations as the petition sets forth the commissioners are about to enter upon, it seems to the court can lawfully remain, whenever it becomes necessary in the opinion of the commissioners in the progress of their work to make such alterations or modifications in the contract."

Using the argument in the above case, it is my opinion that the modification and alteration attempted to be made by your county commissioners did change the general purpose and effect of the original contract, for the reason that by doing so they set aside a contract in reference to which a good and sufficient bond for the faithful performance of the same had been given, and entered into practically another contract for which no bond whatever was given. This case was affirmed by the supreme court and hence is entitled to weight and respect.

To be sure, in arriving at the conclusion herein reached, I am not holding that a contractor would be compelled to finish the work upon the exact day set forth in the contract. If neither the sureties on the bond nor the county commissioners made a move relative to the matter, the contractor could proceed in carrying on the work after the date so provided. This the contractor could do in the present case, but the sureties on the bond or the county commissioners would have authority at any time to assert their rights under the law. Hence the mere fact that the county commissioners suffered or permitted the contractor to proceed with the work after the time limit provided in the contract, would not release the sureties on the bond; while on the other hand, if the time within which the work was to be completed under the contract could be legally extended by the county commissioners, both the county commissioners and the sureties would be prevented from asserting their rights until the new time limit had expired, and thus an entirely new condition would be inserted in the contract. In such a case, unless the sureties on the bond gave their consent to said extension of time, they could set up as a defense, in reference to their obligation under the bond, that the contract had been modified and that they were prevented from asserting their rights under the bond to a date beyond that to which they had agreed to be responsible, and for that reason ask to be released from their obligations under the bond.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that your county commissioners have no authority in law, after the time had expired within which the contract was to be completed, to extend the time, within which the work should be completed, to some future date, and that such attempted extension of time is void and of no effect, and that the sureties on the bond given in reference to the original contract are still bound, for the reason that they at any time might assert their rights under the law as against the contractor for whom they became bound.

Notwithstanding the fact that your county commissioners had no authority to enter into a valid agreement for the extension of the time to a day certain, yet they might suffer or permit the contractor to proceed with the work, even though the day on which the work was to be completed has passed. This will not release the sureties on the bond, for the reason that it does not prevent them from asserting their rights under the law at any time they may see fit so to do.

Your second question is as to whether the county commissioners could release the present bondsmen and require the contractor to give new sureties.

There is no provision of law with which I am familiar, that would compel a contractor to give a new bond, with new sureties thereon. The law provides for the entering into of a bond before the contract is let, but when this is done the law seems to be fully complied with and there is no further provision made relative to an additional, supplemental or new bond.

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion rendered to Hon. Clinton Cowen, state highway commissioner, on August 9, 1916, and found in Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 1346, had this question under consideration. Mr. Turner laid down the following proposition (p. 1348):

> "There is no provision in either section, either requiring or authorizing the taking of an additional or supplementary bond in case the surety on the original bond should, subsequent to the execution of such bond, become insolvent or the affairs of a surety company signing such bond be thereafter placed in the hands of a receiver. Not only is this true but it is also true that no method exists by which a contractor could be forced to give an additional or supplementary bond."

While the above language was used in reference to the highway act as it applied to the state, yet the same could be made to apply to a county in the improvement of highways, and I am of the opinion that the principle stated by my predecessor is correct and that there is no provision of law which would compel a contractor to give a new, additional or supplementary bond. Of course, as stated by my predecessor, a contractor who had a good contract might be willing to give an additional bond, and might do so without raising any question, but a contractor who has an unprofitable contract and is looking for some means by which he could escape the obligations of the same, would simply refuse to give an additional bond, and as before stated, there is no principle of law which would compel him so to do.

Hence answering your second question specifically, it is my opinion that there is no provision of law authorizing the county commissioners to cancel a contract bond given in reference to the improvement of the highways of the county and requiring the contractor to give a new bond.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT—RIGHTS OF LOWEST AND BEST BIDDER.

A contractor who presents the lowest and best bid for the improvement of a highway has the right to assume that he will be awarded the contract within a reasonable time, but in order to take advantage of this principle, he must assert his rights within a reasonable time or he will be estopped from raising any question in reference thereto.

The question as to whether the final resolutions, under the facts set out in the opinion, are legal or not, is not passed upon, for the reason that a former attorney-general passed upon the legality of the same and held them to be legal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 3, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 6, 1918, in which you set out copy of letter received by you from C. H. Duncan, counsel for the Jones Construction Company, and ask my opinion in reference to the validity of a contract entered into by and between the Jones Construction Company and the state of Ohio, for the construction of section "R," Cleveland-East Liverpool road, Columbiana county. On account of the length of your communication I shall not quote the same in full, but from it I gather the following to be the important facts relative to which it must be determined whether the contract is valid or not:

1. On April 14, 1916, advertisement for bids was prepared by your department and forwarded to the Ohio Patriot and the Buckeye State for insertion.

2. On April 28, 1916, bids were opened by the state highway commissioner and it was found that there were three bids, viz.:

J. C. Devine Company	$32,985 00
The Jones Construction Co	32,900 00
The Public Contracting Co	32,750 00

3. On September 28, 1916, a contract was finally entered into by and between the state highway commissioner, on the part of the state of Ohio, and the Jones Construction Company, upon its bid, which contract was forwarded to the said Jones Construction Company.

4. On April 24, 1916, final resolutions were duly passed by the county commissioners of Columbiana county, in which they agreed to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of said improvement.

5. On July 17, 1916, the county auditor of Columbiana county filed his certificate with the county commissioners, certifying that the money was in the treasury, or in process of collection, necessary to enable the county commissioners to take care of the obligation assumed by them in said final resolutions.

6. Your communication shows that it was not until some months after the bids were opened that you determined the Jones Construction Company to be the lowest and best bidder.

Upon these facts the following questions of law are raised, on account of which it is contended by counsel for the Jones Construction Co. that the contract ought to be declared void and the said company released from the performance of the obligation of the same:

1. That an unreasonable length of time intervened between the opening of bids on April 28, 1916, and the awarding of the contract to the Jones Construction Co. on September 28, 1916.

2. That the filing of the county auditor's certificate with the county commissioners on July 17, 1916, while the final resolutions of the county commissioners were adopted on April 24, 1916, is not in accordance with the provisions of section 5660 G. C.

You will note these two questions of law in their order as applied to the facts herein set out.

The Jones Construction Co. bases its claim, that its contract ought to be declared void, mainly upon opinion No. 258 rendered by this department on May 11, 1917, to the state highway department. In that opinion I advised you that a contract entered into by you with Rinehart Brothers could not be enforced against them and based my opinion upon two grounds, viz., that an unreasonable length of time had elapsed between the opening of the bids and the letting of the contract and, further, that the final resolution of the county commissioners was entered into something like three months before the filing of a certificate by the county auditor to the effect that the money was in the treasury necessary to take care of the obligation assumed.

While the length of time elapsing between the adoption of the final resolution and the filing of the certificate by the county auditor is about the same in the Jones Construction Co. contract as it was in the Rinehart Brothers' contract, however, there is a vast difference between the facts in the Rinehart Brothers matter and that now under consideration. Rinehart Brothers repeatedly complained to the state highway department, before and after the letting of the contract. They wrote to the state highway commissioner, asking for permission to begin the construction of the improvement on account of the fact that labor and material were greatly enhancing in price. After they were awarded the contract, they again took the matter up with the state highway department, with a view to being granted relief owing to the length of time that had elapsed between the opening of the bids and the awarding of the contract; while in the matter now before us the Jones Construction Co. never complained to the state highway commissioner, either before or after the letting of the contract. From this fact alone I am of the opinion that the Jones Construction Co. would be estopped at this late date from raising any question as to the length of time which elapsed between the opening of the bids and the granting of the contract. If it desired to take advantage of that fact, it should have been done either before it was awarded the contract or very soon thereafter.

The Jones Construction Co. claims that it received no notice until recently from the state highway commissioner to proceed with the work. It needed no notice. It had signed a contract and this contract was signed by the state highway commissioner and forwarded to it. Said company held it during all the months after the receipt of the same and had authority to proceed at any time with the work; hence it needed no further notice from the state highway commissioner to proceed.

It is also claimed by the Jones Construction Co. that at one time it notified the county commissioners of Columbiana county that it would not proceed with the improvement. The county commissioners had nothing whatever to do with the contract. They had nothing to do with the forfeiting of the contract. Notice given to them would have no force or effect upon the state highway commissioner relative to his rights under the contract for and on behalf of the state. So I do not think the first point is well taken.

We come now to the second question that is raised, viz., that this contract is void because of the fact that the county commissioners entered into an agreement with the state highway commissioner to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement on April 24, 1916, while the county auditor did not file his certificate to the effect that sufficient money was in the treasury to take care of the obligation so entered into by the county commissioners until July 17, 1916.

The theory upon which the Jones Construction Co. claims that its contract with the state is void is this, viz., that before a contract is entered into by and between the state of Ohio with a contractor final resolutions must be adopted by the county commissioners in which they agree to assume a certain part of the cost and expense of the improvement. Thus, the contract is virtually based upon the final resolution of the county commissioners and if the final resolution of the county commissioners is void, then the contract based upon said final resolution would likewise be void. This theory is based upon the provisions of section 1218 G. C., which reads in part as follows:

> "No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state. Where the application for said improvement has been made by the township trustees, then such agreement shall be entered into between the state highway commissioner and the township trustees. * * *"

In this case the final resolution was entered into by the county commissioners of Columbiana county and was filed with the state highway commissioner before he entered into the contract with the Jones Construction Co.

It will further be noted that section 1218 provides that:

> "Such agreement shall be filed in the office of the state highway commissioner with the approval of the attorney-general endorsed thereon as to its form and legality."

With reference to the action of the attorney-general upon this final resolution I desire to call your attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, to the state highway commissioner on July 25, 1916 (opinions of the attorney-general for 1916, Vol. II, p. 1282). In reference to this opinion, one of the final resolutions, approved as being correct in form and legal, is as follows:

> "Columbiana county—Sec. 'R,' Cleveland-East Liverpool road, petition No. 2193, I. C. H. 12."

This is the same road in reference to which the Jones Construction Company, through its attorney, Mr. Charles H. Duncan, now asks its contract to be forfeited. It is to be noted that Mr. Duncan, who was formerly in the attorney-general's department, wrote the opinion holding that the final resolutions of the county commissioners of Columbiana county were legal, and that my predecessor agreed with the opinion as written and held said final resolutions to be correct in form and legal. Upon this finding of my predecessor you proceeded to enter into the contract with the Jones Construction Company for the completion of said highway.

Inasmuch as Mr. Duncan at one time held the final resolutions to be legal, and my predecessor agreed with him to the effect that the same were legal, and you proceeded to let the contract because of the fact that the said final resolutions were approved by my predecessor, I do not feel that I should open up the question of the legality of said resolutions at this late date and hold the contract based upon said resolutions to be illegal.

Hence, based upon the opinion written by Mr. Duncan and approved by my predecessor, it is my view that I should not pass upon the legality of the contract entered into by and between the Jones Construction Company and yourself, and that you should proceed to carry out its terms according to law.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE BUCKEYE MUTUAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have carefully examined the articles of incorporation of the Buckeye Mutual Health Association submitted to me under date of April 6, 1918, and not finding said articles with respect to the purposes of said association to be contrary to the constitution and laws of the United States or of the state of Ohio, but finding the same to be in conformity with the provisions of sections 9445 et seq. of the General Code, and said articles to be otherwise executed in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to the incorporation of associations of this kind, the same are hereby approved.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH McGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN LORAIN AND MEDINA COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication of April 2, 1918, in which you enclose for my approval final resolutions for the following improvements:

Medina-Elyria Road—I. C. H. No. 314, Sec. "O-1," Lorain county, types "A" and "B."

Ashland-Medina Road—I. C. H. No. 139, Sec. "R," Medina county, types "A" and "B."

I have carefully examined said final resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH McGHEE,

Attorney-General.

RIGHTS OF PREFERRED STOCKHOLDERS UNDER SECTION 8671 G. C. CANNOT BE LIMITED BY ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION.

A corporation is without authority to include in its articles of incorporation, by amendment or otherwise, any stipulation limiting the rights of preferred stockholders under section 8671 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have given careful consideration to the letter addressed to you by Mr. C. C. Middleswart, attorney at law, Marietta, Ohio, and by you submitted to me with a request for my official advise in the premises. The question submitted by Mr. Middleswart is as follows:

> "May a private corporation insert in its articles of incorporation, by proper procedure, a provision to the effect that the holders of the preferred stock which it is authorized to issue shall have the same right to participate in the assets of the corporation in case of its dissolution or insolvency as the common stockholders; and if this may not otherwise be done might it be authorized upon the stipulation that a recital to this effect should be placed upon each certificate of preferred stock?"

This inquiry involves consideration of the following provisions of the General Code:

> "Sec. 8671. On the insolvency or dissolution of a corporation, the holders of preferred stock shall be entitled to receive from the assets remaining after paying its liabilities, the full payment of its par value, before anything is paid to the common stock."

Section 8669 of the General Code as amended 107 O. L., 411:

> "A corporation issuing both common and preferred stock may create designations, preferences, and voting powers, or restructions or qualifications thereof, in the certificate of incorporation, and if desired, preferred stock may be made subject to redemption at not less than par, at a fixed time and price, to be expressed in the stock certificates thereof. * * *"

Although one of the sections which I have quoted has been recently amended, the quotations which I have made have been a part of the law of this state since 1902, when both present sections were enacted as parts of section 3235a Revised Statutes. The full subject-matter of the section as it was then passed need not be quoted, but certain of the other provisions thereof may appropriately be considered in connection with the question now asked:

> "Sec. 8668. When the capital stock is to be both common and preferred, it may be provided in the articles of incorporation that the holders of the preferred stock shall be entitled to * * * dividends of not more than eight per cent, * * * out of the surplus profits of the company each year in preference to all other stockholders. Such dividends also may be made cumulative."

"Sec. 8670. Upon the insolvency of the corporation no holder of preferred stock shall be liable for its debts until after the remedy against the common stockholders upon their liability, as provided by law, has been exhausted, and then only for such amount as remains unpaid. Such liability in no event shall exceed that fixed by law for the common stock of such corporation."

It will be observed that the designations, preferences and voting powers or restrictions and qualifications thereof which a corporation issuing both common and preferred stock may create with respect to the preferred stock are to be expressed in the certificate of incorporation, and are not required to be expressed on the face of the stock certificate.

So far as the mere question of power is concerned, and regarding it as a matter between the corporation and the state, it would seem at the outset therefore that no recital on the face of a certificate of stock would be efficacious to enable a corporation to create a restriction or preference which it could not provide for without such recital; in other words, that whatever the answer to the question might be it would not be affected in any way either by placing anything on the certificates of stock which was not required to be placed there, or by providing in the articles of incorporation that certain recitals not required to be placed on the face of the certificates of stock should be placed there. In this view of the question the legal problem is narrowed to the following statement:

May a corporation under the power to create "restrictions or qualifications of preferences" restrict or qualify the preference given to the holders of preferred stock in the event of insolvency or dissolution by sections 8670 and 8671 of the General Code, or are the latter preferences regarded as absolute and not subject to the restrictions and qualifications authorized to be made by section 8671?

Preliminary to this question there arises, of course, the question as to the modifying effect of the phrase "or restrictions or qualifications thereof" as found in section 8669 General Code. Does this phrase modify the immediately preceding phrase "voting powers" only, or does it also extend to the word "preferences"? This question is not free from doubt. There is no authority whatsoever in this state on the subject. I incline to the view that the phrase modifies all substantives and nouns which precede it and are capable of modification. This point, however, is not conclusive, because though it be admitted that the phrase "or restrictions or qualifications thereof" modifies the word "preferences," yet it appears upon careful examination of the provision that the power to create restrictions and qualifications is limited in this respect at least to restrictions and qualifications of such preferences as the corporation may by its own action in framing its certificate of incorporation create. In other words, a corporation may create preferences and it may restrict and qualify those which it creates, but so far as this section is concerned no power is given to restrict or qualify the preferences which the law gives to preferred stock.

If these conclusions are correct then it would follow that a corporation could not in its articles of incorporation modify or "restrict or qualify" the preferences which flow from the law itself as expressed in sections 8670 and 8671 of the General Code. This result is reached by taking the statutes as we find them, and it applies only to the question which is raised when the corporation seeks to file articles of incorporation or amendments thereof in the office of the secretary of state.

This conclusion having been reached I would be of the opinion further that the right of a corporation to put such a stipulation into its articles of incorporation could not be enlarged by adding to the stipulation a further provision to the effect that the restriction in question is to be put on the face of the certificates of stock.

For the reasons which I have expressed I advise you that a corporation is without authority to include in its articles of incorporation, by amendment or otherwise, any stipulation limiting the rights of preferred stockholders under section 8671 of the General Code.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF GALLIA COUNTY—$40,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 5, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re: Bonds of Gallia county, Ohio, in the sum of $40,000 for the purpose of refunding certain turnpike bonded indebtedness in like amount, which said county is unable to pay at maturity.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners relating to the above bond issue and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when executed by the proper officers of the county and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Gallia county, Ohio, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TITLE GUARANTEE AND TRUST COMPANY, HOW OPERATIONS OF SAID COMPANY LIMITED.

Section 9853 G. C. limits the operation of a title guarantee and trust company to one county in the state, which must be designated in its application for a charter, but such companies may issue policies of title insurance on real estate located in other counties of the state, provided an additional deposit of $50,000 is made, as provided by law, for each additional county in which such company desires to issue policies of title insurance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—O. E. Hawk & Company, of Youngstown, Ohio, has asked a question relative to section 9853 of the General Code, which pertains to title guarantee and trust companies, which seems to me to be of sufficient importance to merit an opinion thereon addressed to you, and I am accordingly addressing an opinion to you on the subject submitted, this department having held in Opinion No. 628, rendered December, 1913, by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, attorney-general (Attorney-General's Report for said year, page 164), that the auditor of state had jurisdiction over the examination of title guarantee and trust companies.

The question submitted by O. E. Hawk & Company is as follows:

> "In the laws governing title guarantee and trust companies, section No. 9853 it states that a deposit of $50,000 is required to be made with the treasurer of state, for each county in which the company proposes to operate—I assume that the section means every county in which titles are guaranteed, and not every county in which parties may live who hold said guarantees or insurance policies. That is to say, if a title guarantee and trust company should form in Youngstown and would guarantee the titles to a property and payment of the principal and interest of a mortgage on the same property, which is located in Mahoning county, and a person living in Trumbull county should own said mortgage and insurance policy, I assume that there would not have to be another $50,000 deposited with the treasurer of state on account of the holder living in Trumbull county.
> The law means I suppose, that there shall be $50,000 deposited for each county in which a company guarantees or insures the titles to property located in that county, and not for every county in which a holder of a guarantee of titles, or a holder of a guarantee of the principal or interest of a mortgage lives."

Section 9850 specifies the powers of title and guarantee and trust companies and is as follows:

> "Sec. 9850. A title guarantee and trust company may prepare and furnish abstracts and certificates of title to real estate, bonds, mortgages and other securities, and guarantee such titles, the validity and due execution of such securities, and the performance of contracts incident thereto, make loans for itself or as agent or trustee for others, and guarantee the collection of interest and principal of such loans; take charge of and sell, mortgage, rent or otherwise dispose of real estate for others, and perform all the duties of an agent relative to property needed or otherwise entrusted to it."

Section 9851 provides for the deposit by such company, with the treasurer of state, and is as follows:

> "Sec. 9851. No such company shall do business until its capital stock amounts to at least one hundred thousand dollars fully paid up, and until it has deposited with the treasurer of state fifty thousand dollars in securities permitted by sections ninety-five hundred and eighteen and ninety-five hundred and nineteen. Except such deposit, the capital shall be invested as the board of directors of such company prescribes."

Section 9852 provides how the deposit should be held by the treasurer of state and the next section itself fully answers the inquiry submitted, it reads:

> "Sec. 9853. Any company so organized shall be limited in its operation to only one county in this state, which shall be designated in its application for a charter, except that if it desires to issue its policies of title insurance in more than one county it may issue them in such other county or counties upon depositing with the treasurer of state an additional sum of fifty thousand dollars in securities as above provided, for each additional county in which it proposes to operate."

It seems to me that the language of this section requires no construction. Section 9850 quoted above, states the powers of these companies, that is what business they can transact, in short, the operations in which they may engage, and section 9853 plainly states that such operation must be limited to only one county in the state, with one exception, namely, it may issue policies of title insurance in more than one county provided an additional deposit of $50,000 is made for each other county in which such policies may be issued. The residence of the policy holder has no bearing whatever upon this section; the only question is, in what county does it operate, and where is the real estate located, the title of which is guaranteed or insured. If the company has not deposited $50,000 for the county in which the real estate on which the company issues a policy of insurance, is located, it is without power to issue such policy.

It might be argued that upon a deposit of an additional $50,000 with the treasurer of state, such company could operate as fully in the additional county for which the deposit was made, as it could in the county designated in its application for a charter. But, as under section 9850 there are definite things which such companies can do; definite operations in which it may engage; under a well known rule of statutory construction, an exception being made allowing it to issue policies of title insurance in other counties upon the compliance with certain conditions, it would follow that no other exception is permissible.

Answering the question directly, my opinion is that section 9853 does not require an additional deposit for a county not designated in the application for a charter by a title guarantee and trust company, unless the company issues or desires to issue policies of title insurance upon real estate located in such other county; and when such policies are issued or are desired to be issued, then such additional deposit is mandatory.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

FROM WHAT FUND MONEY NECESSARY FOR THE ERECTION OF DOG POUND TAKEN—COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT ERECT A DOG POUND WHEN HUMANE SOCIETY HAS SUITABLE PLACE AND IS WILLING TO RENDER REQUIRED SERVICES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 6, 1918.

HON. BERNARD M. FOCKE, Prosecuting Attorney, Dayton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—This department is in receipt of a letter from your office in which opinion is asked as follows:

> "1. In a county where there does not exist a dog pound and animal shelter, as contemplated by section 5652-8 of the General Code, can the county commissioners use the money that is collected from the license paid by owners of dogs and dog kennels for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a dog pound and animal shelter, as contemplated by the act of the legislature passed March 21, 1917, relating to the regulation of dogs and providing compensation for damages done thereby?
> 2. In a county where there is a humane society, and there is a dog pound and animal shelter, can the county commissioners provide a suitable place for the impounding of dogs and make proper provisions for feeding and caring for the same, and also provide devices and methods for destroying dogs; if so, can they use the funds that have been raised by the sale of licenses to owners of dogs and dog kennels for that purpose?"

Applicable to both of your questions, section 5652-8 General Code, as enacted in the act referred to in your communication, provides as follows:

> "County commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act, shall provide nets and other suitable devices for taking dogs in a humane manner, and, except as hereinafter provided, shall also provide a suitable place for impounding dogs, and make proper provision for feeding and caring for the same, and shall also provide humane devices and methods for destroying dogs. Provided, however, that in any county in which there is a society for the prevention of cruelty to children and animals, incorporated and organized as provided by law, and having one or more agents appointed in pursuance of law, and maintaining an animal shelter suitable for a dog pound and devices for humanely destroying dogs, county commissioners shall not be required to furnish a dog pound, but the sheriff shall deliver all dogs seized by him to such society for the prevention of cruelty to animals and children at its animal shelter, there to be dealt with in accordance with law, and the county commissioners shall provide for the payment of reasonable compensation to such society for its services so performed out of the county general fund."

Applicable to your first question, section 5652-13 General Code reads:

> "The registration fees provided for in sections 5652-1 and 5652-2 shall constitute a special fund known as the dog and kennel fund for which shall be deposited by the county auditor in the county treasury and be disposed of by defraying the cost of furnishing registration applications, certificates and tags, by the payment of animal claims as provided in sections 5840 to 5849, both inclusive, of the General Code as amended herein; and in accordance with the provisions of section 5653 of the General Code as amended herein."

From a consideration of these statutory provisions I am clearly of the opinion that any expenditure of money made by the county commissioners for the purpose of erecting and maintaining a suitable place for impounding dogs should be made out of the general county fund, and not out of the special "dog and kennel fund" created by the collection of registration fees provided for in said act. Moneys in this special fund can be expended only for the purposes mentioned in section 5652-13 and in section 5653 of the General Code.

In answer to your second question, I do not think that section 5652-8 General Code, above quoted, contemplates any authority in the county commissioners to expend funds for the purpose of providing and maintaining a suitable place for impounding dogs in a county where there is a humane society which maintains an animal shelter suitable for the purposes of the act, and which is willing to render the required services for a reasonable compensation to be paid by the county commissioners.

However, if in the judgment of the county commissioners the animal shelter afforded by such humane society is not suitable for the purpose of a dog pound; or if the services rendered by such humane society are otherwise not suitable for carrying into effect the purposes of the act, I have no doubt but that in such case the county commissioners would be authorized to erect a suitable dog pound and equip and maintain same; and the same would be true in case such humane society refuses to afford to the county the use of its dog pound and services in connection therewith for a reasonable compensation. Any moneys expended by the county commissioners for such purposes, however, are required to be paid out of the general county fund and not out of moneys obtained by the collection of registration fees on dogs or kennels registered under said act.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

HOW FUNDS RAISED TO CARRY OUT PROVISIONS OF CIVIL SERVICE ACT IN CITY AND CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT—BOARD OF EDUCATION MAY NOT CONTRIBUTE THERETO.

The money necessary to carry out the provisions of the civil service act in a city and city school district is to be appropriated by the council and paid from the city treasury. The board of education has no authority to contribute thereto out of the funds of the school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—On March 11th you addressed the following inquiry to this department:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:

We are calling your attention to the provisions of section 486-19 of the General Code in part as follows:

'The expense and salaries of any of such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city, and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of this act in such city.'

Question:

May the board of education legally make payment from its treasury for a portion of the salaries and expense of the civil service commission of a city?"

Section 19 of the civil service law from which you quote, contains all the statutory provision there is upon the subject of the above inquiry. That section creates the municipal civil service commission. It is primarily and principally what its name indicates. As incidental, however, to its municipal duties, it is given the additional authority as to civil service in the city school district. The legislature evidently had in view that these latter duties would be minor in character and of infrequent occurrence, and the city school district itself being always necessarily composed of the territory of the city, and sometimes including outside territory, in which latter case, and in all cases while the city school district is not exactly a municipal activity, yet it is so essentially composed of the city population and supported by its property, that it is looked upon as a branch of municipal activity.

This section seems to be enacted in this spirit, or with this idea. The pertinent portions of the section are as follows:

"The mayor or other chief appointing authority of each city in the state shall appoint three persons, one for a term of two years, one for four years and one for six years, who shall constitute the municipal civil service commission of such city and of the city school district in which such city is located; * * * * a vacancy shall be filled by the mayor or other chief appointing authority of a city for an unexpired term; * * * * such municipal commission shall prescribe rules, etc. * * * * For the classification of positions in the civil service of such city and city school district; * * * * said municipal commission shall have and exercise all powers and perform all other duties with respect to the civil service of such city and city school district as herein prescribed and conferred upon the state civil service commission with respect to the civil service of the state * * * *. The expense and salaries of any such municipal commission shall be determined by the council of such city and a sufficient sum of money shall be appropriated each year to carry out the provisions of the the act in such city. * * * * The chief executive authority of such city may at any time remove any such civil service commissioners for inefficiency, etc. * * *."

The section, a very long one, gives the whole scheme of municipal service. The portions above quoted is that part having possible application to the matter in hand.

The paragraph quoted by you really disposes of the whole subject, but the others quoted above are those which it is considered might have some bearing upon it. The provision is that the council shall determine the expense and salaries and appropriate money to carry out the provisions of the act. It is plain that the council can appropriate no money from the treasury of the school board or from any other source than the funds of the city. There is no legal authority found in any statute for the board of education to contribute to this expense. Therefore, the city pays it alone, and the board of education receives the service gratis.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONER MAY NOT SELL GRAVEL TO COUNTY FOR ROAD BUILDING UNDER SECTIONS 2420 and 12911 G. C.—INTEREST, AS USED IN SECTIONS 12910 AND 12911 G. C., REFERS TO PECUNIARY INTEREST AS SELLER.

1. A county commissioner selling gravel to a county highway superintendent under the Cass highway law, for use on the public highways of the county, and accepting pay therefor, would violate the provisions of sections 2420 and 12911 G. C.

2. The interest referred to in sections 12910 and 12911 G. C. has reference to a pecuniary interest as seller, and not to the interest of an officer as buyer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

HON. R. A. KERR, Prosecuting Attorney, Troy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 29, 1918, in which you state a matter has been brought to your attention concerning materials being furnished by a county commissioner to the county, and that the sections of the General Code involved are sections 2420, 12910, 12911 and 12920. You then state:

> "The question coming to my mind is whether or not the word 'contract' as used in the first three sections means a contract which is made by the commissioners, or whether it would apply in case of a road superintendent who purchased gravel from a pit owned by a commissioner, without any action having been taken by the board of commissioners to purchase gravel from that pit, payment being made to the commissioner by the road superintendent after the gravel was hauled from the pit. In other words, are the sections named broad enough to cover all cases in which a commissioner furnishes anything to the county in any method, or does it simply relate to contracts made by the board itself?
> In the report of the superintendent filed in the county auditor's office, it is shown that gravel was purchased in one instance, but does not give the name of the commissioner from whom it was purchased, and in another instance and in a different report the surname of the commissioner is used, but not the given name."

Section 2420 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "No commissioner shall be concerned, directly or indirectly, in any contract for work to be done, or material to be furnished for the county * *."

Section 12910 G. C. provides:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies, or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Section 12911 G. C. provides:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit, by election or appointment, or as agent, servant or employe of such officer or of a board of such officers, is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, supplies or fire insurance for the use of the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution with which he is not connected, and the amount of such contract exceeds the sum of fifty dollars, unless such contract is let on bids duly advertised as provided by law, shall be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one year nor more than ten years."

Section 12920 G. C. reads as follows:

"Whoever, being a county commissioner, is guilty of misconduct in office, shall be fined not more than four hundred dollars and forfeit his office."

The particular question which you ask is whether a county commissioner would be brought within the terms of the first three quoted sections of the General Code, providing he is merely interested in a contract as a seller and not as a buyer acting in his capacity as county commissioner and as agent for the county.

We will note particularly the provisions of sections 12910 and 12911 G. C., which would bring him within the terms of the statute, or would not so bring him within said terms.

Section 12910, leaving out all unimportant parts and making it apply merely to the question being considered, reads as follows:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit by election * * is interested in a contract for the purchase of property * * for the use of the county * * with which he is connected, shall be imprisoned * *."

With the same idea, section 12911 G. C. would read as follows:

"Whoever, holding an office of trust or profit, by election * * is interested in a contract for the purchase of property, * * for the use of the county * * with which he is not connected * * shall be imprisoned * *."

Inasmuch as a county commissioner is connected with the county which elected him to the office, we can eliminate from further consideration the provisions of section 12911 G. C., because this section has to do with those officers who are not connected with the subdivision in reference to which the contract was entered into and in which contract the officer had an interest.

The important parts of section 12910, supra, under which the county commissioners would be brought within the provisions of said section, are as follows:

(1) Whoever holding the office of county commissioner;
(2) Is interested in a contract;
(3) For the purchase of property;
(4) For the use of the county with which he is connected.

Of course, a number of these conditions are admitted as being fulfilled in the matter submitted by you. That he is a county commissioner connected with the county is admitted. That the property was purchased for the use of the county, there is no question. That the county commissioner was interested in the contract as seller, there could be no question.

Hence the only question that remains open is as to whether a county commissioner would have to be interested in the contract as a buyer as well as a seller, before he would come within the terms and conditions of said section 12910. The section makes the provision "is interested in a contract;" that is, in any contract for the purchase of property for the use of the county. There is nothing to indicate that the county commissioner must be interested as a buyer.

The fact is that the general object and purport of the statute has to do with the other part of the contract, viz., a pecuniary interest as seller. The interest spoken of in these two sections has reference to a pecuniary interest and not merely an interest as county commissioner in the capacity of a buyer. A county commissioner is interested in every contract for the purchase of material for the use of the county, from the standpoint of a buyer. This is so even though the material is purchased by the county highway superintendent, as we shall note later.

So in answering your question the important thing to consider is whether the county commissioner, to whom you refer, had a pecuniary interest as seller and not as to whether he was directly interested, in his capacity of county commissioner, as a buyer. Under the facts stated by you, as said before, he undoubtedly had a pecuniary interest as seller of material for the use of the county on its public highways, inasmuch as he was paid by the county highway superintendent for the gravel which was used upon the highways of the county and which was furnished by the county commissioners. This brings him clearly within the provisions of section 12910 G. C., irrespective of the fact as to whether he assisted in the purchase of the material from himself or not.

That this is the clear intendment of this section will be seen from the provisions of section 12911 above quoted, which reads the same as section 12910, with the exception of one phrase, viz., in section 12910 he must be connected with the county, while in section 12911 he is not connected with the county. Under section 12911 G. C. a county commissioner would never be interested in the contract as purchaser, because the material is purchased by a subdivision such as a township, city or village, with which he is not connected. Hence he could not be interested as a purchaser, but under section 12911 he would be merely interested as a seller. This same principle undoubtedly would apply to section 12910.

In passing I also desire to call your attention to a fact which makes the county commissioner at least indirectly interested as purchaser of said material. The acts set forth in your communication undoubtedly took place under the Cass highway law. I gather this from the fact that you refer to the county highway superintendent, which is a term no longer used under the White-Mulcahy law.

Section 7198 G. C., as it stood in the Cass law, read as follows:

> "The county highway superintendent may, with the approval of the county commissioners or township trustees, employ such laborers, teams, implements and tools, and purchase such material as may be necessary in the performance of his duties."

The county highway superintendent was evidently acting under the provisions of the above quoted section, in the purchase of the gravel from the county commissioner. There was no other provision of the Cass highway law, with which I am familiar, that gave the county highway superintendent authority to purchase material to be used upon the public highways. From the provisions of this section it is clear that the county highway superintendent could not act without the approval of the county commissioners.

In an opinion heretofore rendered by me to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices, under date of April 19, 1917, found in Vol. I of the Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 520, I held that this approval should be given before the county highway superintendent acted in the matter of a purchase; but I further held in said opinion that if such authority had not been granted before the county highway superintendent acted in reference to a purchase, the county commissioners might approve his act after the purchase was made.

From your communication I infer that the county commissioners neither gave their approval before the purchase nor afterwards. Notwithstanding this fact, it is my opinion that under the provisions of this section the county commissioners would at least be indirectly interested in the purchase of said gravel. This is immaterial, because as I view it the interest referred to in sections 12910 and 12911 G. C. is a pecuniary one as seller, and not an interest in the contract as buyer. This same reasoning, as I view it, would also apply to section 2420 G. C.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that a county commissioner would violate sections 2420 and 12910 G. C. in the event he sold gravel to the county highway superintendent, to be used upon the public highways of the county, for which gravel he received payment from said county highway superintendent, all of which being done under the Cass highway law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LIMITATION ON THE AMOUNT OF ACTIVE AND INACTIVE DEPOSITS TO BE MADE IN BANKS BY STATE TREASURER.

Section 330-1 imposes a double limitation on the amount of inactive deposits to be made in banks by the state treasurer. Such inactive deposits can be no more than the capital stock of a bank in question, and in no event more than $300,000.

The amount of the active deposits is limited to the amount of the capital stock of the bank in which it is made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On March 22, 1918, you preferred the following request for an opinion to this office:

"I would ask your opinion regarding the construction which should be placed by this department upon the following sections of 'An act to provide a depository for state funds.'

'Reference is hereby made to sections 321 to 330-11, inclusive, of the General Code, and, specifically, to 330-1, thereof, which reads as follows:

Section 330-1. No bank or trust company shall have on deposit at any one time more than its paid in capital stock and in no event more than three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000.00) as an inactive deposit. (102 v. 33 Sec. 12.)'

QUESTION:

1. Does this section above quoted apply to inactive deposits or depositories only, and

2. If so, what limitations as to amounts that may be deposited are placed on active depositories?"

The section you quote is capable of two constructions, by one of which a limitation is placed upon the amount of deposits as to all banks; that is, as to those receiving both active and inactive deposits to the amount of the capital stock of any such bank, and an additional limitation of the flat sum of $300,000 to all banks receiving inactive deposits.

The other construction, making the whole section apply to inactive deposits, creates a double limitation as to the amount of such inactive deposits as may be placed in any bank, and entirely relieves the active deposit of any limitation whatsoever.

You are advised that the first construction is correct.

It is the most natural meaning to attach to the language.

It is a most natural requirement for the legislature to have imposed.

It is supported by the legislative history.

The words " as an inactive deposit" are immediately connected with the $300,000 limitation. Had it been the idea to create two limitations upon the inactive deposits and none upon the other, a more natural place to have found the character of the deposit ascertained would have been the beginning of the sentence rather than the end, and if the $300,000 limitation had been intended to apply to all banks, it could have been made perfectly clear by repeating the words "No bank or trust company." If you take the first part of the sentence it is an absolute requirement as to all banks and all deposits.

"No bank or trust company shall have on deposit at any one time more than its paid in capital stock."

If this stood alone no doubt could arise as to its meaning. The question is whether it is modified in any manner by what follows it. Let us look at that alone.

"and in no event more than three hundred thousand dollars ($300,000) as an inactive deposit."

These two clauses are not connected or disconnected by any punctuation; neither should they be according to the well known rules. They are simply two separate requirements connected by the conjunction "and," and there is no necessity for holding that either one in any manner limits or affects the other. Of course, by the use of the "and" it became unnecessary to repeat "No bank or trust company shall have on deposit at any one time." This makes the limitation to the amount of the capital stock apply to all banks and all deposits, and the $300,000 limitation to all banks as to inactive deposits.

Let us look now to the law as it stood before this enactment. If this were a remedial statute, the rule of construction is that you look to the old law for the mischief and remedy, and without it being strictly a remedial law, a similar process is applicable. The section is an amendment of one of the sections of a former act governing the subject of deposits which was enacted April 25, 1904, and consisted of eight sections. Volume 97, page 536, section 4 of which is as follows:

> "The treasurer of state may deposit any portion of the public moneys in his possession, in any such national banks within the state, or any banks or trust companies incorporated under the laws of and doing business within this state, as shall have been approved under the provisions of this act by the board of deposit as herein provided; but no bank shall have on deposit more than its paid in capital stock at any one time, and in no event more than $500,000."

Here is a single limitation of $500,000 applying to all banks and both kinds of deposits. That it had application to both kinds of deposits appears from the fact that section 7 of the act first created the distinction between the active and inactive depositories; that is, it provided that two banks in Columbus should be selected as active depositories, and since that time the distinction has been preserved. So that the law as it formerly stood, immediately preceding the section now under contemplation did place a limitation on the amount of active deposits. No reason is apparent for supposing that it was the legislative intent to remove that safeguard. Active deposits were subject to a limitation. The language of the first part of the section changed the amount of the limitation, or rather fixes a method of arriving at an amount. As inactive deposits are more permanent in their nature there appeared to be some reason for a farther limitation as to the amount, which is carried out by the last of the two classes.

1. Your two questions are therefore answered. Both these limitations apply to inactive deposits.

2. The amount of the active deposits is limited to the amount of the capital stock of the bank.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WILLIAMS COUNTY—$22,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $22,500.00, for the purpose of meeting the cost and expense of constructing certain road improvements in Center township, said county, petitioned for by F. L. Doughton et al.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the original and supplemental proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of Williams county, Ohio, relating to said bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in accord with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue was submitted with the transcript, and I am for this reason holding said transcript until receipt of bond form, which I have directed the officials of said county to forward to me for approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

1128.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MONTGOMERY COUNTY—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Montgomery county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000.00, for the purpose of paying the shares of said county, Butler township, and the owners of abutting property specially assessed for the construction of the Dayton-Troy road, I. C. H. No. 61, Section "R."

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of Montgomery county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when executed by the proper officers of the county and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Montgomery county, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SUMMIT COUNTY—$45,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Summit county, Ohio, in the sum of $45,000.00, for the purpose of erecting additional buildings and making improvements in and about the children's home of said county.

I am herewith returning, with my approval, corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of Summit county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue.

An examination of said transcript discloses that the proceedings of said officers have been in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relative to bond issues of this kind, and I am therefore of the opinion that bonds of said county properly prepared and executed according to bond form submitted will, when the same are delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Summit county, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MONTGOMERY COUNTY—$18,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 8, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Montgomery county, Ohio, in the sum of $18,000.00, for the construction and repair of certain small but necessary bridges in said county.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Montgomery county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when executed by the proper officers of the county and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Montgomery county, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASE OF CERTAIN LANDS TO AARON McGRATH.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, State Supervisor of School and Ministerial Lands, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 18, 1918, in which you enclose a lease, in triplicate, dated November 1, 1917, in which certain lands are leased to Aaron McGrath for coal mining purposes.

I have carefully examined this lease, find the same correct in form and legal, and am therefore endorsing my approval thereon and forwarding it to Hon. James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, for his consideration.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SECRETARY OF STATE MUST DECIDE WHETHER THE NAME OF A PROPOSED COMPANY IS LIKELY TO MISLEAD THE PUBLIC AS TO THE PURPOSE OF ITS CHARTER—CORPORATION AUTHORIZED TO DEAL IN SECURITIES AND MAKE LOANS ON REAL ESTATE MAY BE ORGANIZED UNDER THE GENERAL LAWS OF THE STATE—BUYING AND SELLING MORTGAGES AND MAKING LOANS ON REAL ESTATE NOT SEPARATE AND DISTINCT OBJECTS, AND CORPORATION MAY BE AUTHORIZED TO PURSUE BOTH—CORPORATION MAY NOT BE ORGANIZED TO DEAL ON ITS OWN ACCOUNT IN THE STOCK OF OTHER COMPANIES.

The secretary of state has full administrative authority to decide the question as to whether or not the name chosen by the incorporators of a proposed company is likely to mislead the public as to the purpose or object of its charter. The attorney-general will not advise the secretary of state upon this question as a matter of law in a particular case.

A corporation authorized to deal in securities and make loans upon real estate may be organized under the general laws of the state, such a corporation not being a banking company within the meaning of the statutes relative to such corporations, nor a real estate company within the meaning of the statutes relating to such corporations.

Buying and selling mortgages and making loans on real estate security are not such distinct objects and purposes as that a corporation may not be authorized to pursue both of them; they are rather different means to a single end, which may be defined as investing in evidences of indebtedness and other securities.

The purpose last described, however, is entirely separate and distinct from the conducting of similar activities on behalf of others and both may not be joined in one purpose clause.

A corporation may not be organized under the laws of Ohio for the purpose of dealing on its own account in the stocks of other corporations.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1918.

HON. W. D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of March 28th, enclosing proposed articles of incorporation of The Banker's Exchange & Discount Company, of Cleveland, Ohio, and requesting my opinion upon the following points:

> "1st. The name, whether it is liable to mislead the public in any respect.
> 2nd. The objects set forth in the purpose clause, whether they are such as to exceed the single purpose requirement of the code, and further whether they are such powers as can be granted to a corporation formed under the general corporation laws of the state and whether they infringe upon certain special provisions of the code governing real estate corporations, banking corporations, etc."

I must decline to express any opinion upon the first question. Full administrative discretion in this matter is reposed by statute, section 8628 General Code, in the secretary of state to decide the question, which is a mixed one of fact and law.

The law of the question is fully expressed in the formula that the corporate name shall not be "likely to mislead the public as to the nature or purpose of the business its charter authorizes." The facts of the case consist of the nature of the business actually authorized by the charter and the misleading character of the name as descriptive of such business. The name must not describe a business which the company is not authorized to undertake; on the other hand, it is not required to point out that business. So a name like "The John Church Company" is beyond criticism regardless of what business the company proposes to engage in; but the name "The John Church Contracting Company" would be misleading if the corporation were not authorized to engage in the business of contracting.

It is for you to say whether the name "The Banker's Exchange and Discount Company" is misleading in connection with the business which the company proposes to do or may lawfully be authorized to transact. That business is described in the purpose clause of the coporation as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of buying, selling and dealing in mortgages upon real estate, stocks, bonds, promissory notes, choses in action, personal and collateral securities, and other evidences of debt; and discounting the same.
> To make and obtain loans upon real estate, and to supervise, manage and protect such property and loans, and all interests and claims affecting the same, to have the same insured against loss by fire and other casualties.
> To purchase, lease, hold and convey such real estate as may be necessary or convenient for the transaction of its business, or for the carrying out of its corporate purposes; and such as is mortgaged or conveyed to it in good faith by way of security for loans made or money due, or such as may be purchased by it at sales upon foreclosure of mortgages owned by it, or on judgments and decrees obtained or rendered for debts due it, or in settlements effected to secure such debts.
> To do all things incidental to the carrying out of the purposes herein expressly stated."

Without further considering the first question I pass to a consideration of your second question, which involves an examination of the above quoted purpose clause.

One of your questions is as to whether the general powers attempted to be assumed by this corporation are such as may be granted to a corporation formed under the general corporation laws of the state, or as to whether they infringe upon the special provisions of the code governing real estate corporations, banking corporations, etc.

The corporation clearly is not formed to deal in real estate, though the first paragraph of the purpose clause is a little ambiguous in this respect. I take it that the incorporators intended to form a company authorized to deal in "mortgages upon real estate" and not "in real estate." The later recital of the power to purchase, lease, hold and convey real estate is limited to such as is necessary and convenient for the transaction of its business and such as is mortgaged or conveyed to it in good faith by way of security for loans. While this clause is open to criticism in that it is the mere statement of an incidental power that the company would possess without the recital, giving rise to a question which I shall hereafter consider in connection with the other branch of your second general inquiry, it shows at least that the interpretation which I have placed upon the first paragraph of the purpose clause is correct, and that the incorporators did not intend to assume the power to deal generally in real estate.

Nor, in my opinion, are the powers of this proposed corporation those of a banking company. Without discussing this question exhaustively suffice it to say that the essential characteristic of a banking company organized under the laws of Ohio is the power to receive money on deposit. This power is not sought to be appropriated by the incorporators of this company. They propose that the corporation shall lend money upon the securities upon which banks are accustomed to lend money, but the money lending business is not the banking business as it is known in Ohio. The vital distinction between the two may be understood by drawing a line between lending one's own capital and inviting deposits for the purpose of lending money thus obtained.

For these reasons I am of the opinion that the general character of the objects of this company is not such as to disenable its promoters from organizing under the general corporation laws of the state.

The other part of your second question raises the issue as to whether or not a plurality of purposes is stated in the articles of incorporation, so as to make them subject to the principle laid down in State ex rel. v. Taylor, 55 O. S. 67.

In this connection I repeat the remark which I have made respecting the third paragraph of the purpose clause. This paragraph is, in my judgment, perfectly innocuous, in that it does not purport to authorize the pursuit of an independent object, but merely to define a group of powers which would flow by implication or by direct authority of law from the recital of the purpose or purposes previously mentioned in the clause. As a matter of strict Ohio law a recital of the powers of a corporation has no place in its articles. They should be confined to mentioning the object or purpose for which the corporation is formed. When this is done the powers result by operation of law. It follows therefore that language like that of the third paragraph of the purpose clause has no appropriate place in the articles of incorporation; nevertheless, its inclusion therein does not violate the rule of singleness of purpose, because it does not define a purpose at all.

For these reasons I advise that the third paragraph of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation under examination does not work a violation of the principle which has been referred to.

These remarks are also, of course, applicable to the fourth paragraph of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation.

These conclusions bring me to the consideration of the first and second paragraphs of the purpose clause, which are the only ones that need be considered in connection with the particular inquiry now under investigation.

Briefly abstracted, the first of these paragraphs authorizes the company to deal in evidences of indebtedness, choses in action, certificates of interest and securities for indebtedness; the second of them authorizes the company to lend money upon real estate security and to "obtain loans" thereon. The last phrase is vague and at the very least should be amplified. If it is intended to authorize the company to act as agent for others in securing loans on real estate, I would be of the opinion that it would state a distinct purpose and would render the purpose clause objectionable upon the ground now under consideration. Lending money on one's own account and lending money as agent for others are two very distinct businesses. While neither of them constitutes the banking business, yet they are separate from each other and constitute objects which cannot be pursued by a single company. At this moment I am unable to think of any other meaning which can be given to this somewhat ambiguous phrase than that which I have condemned. On the whole, it is my opinion that the articles of incorporation cannot be accepted with this phrase therein.

Are the objects of dealing in mortgages and other evidences of indebtedness and lending money on real estate mortgage so distinct and separate as to constitute two purposes? In this connection I call attention to the decision in Picard v.

Hughey, 58 O. S., 577. It was there held that the lighting of public streets by means of gas and and the lighting of public streets by means of electricity were not separate and distinct objects. In fact the court found but one object, viz., the lighting of public streets. The generation and distribution of gas and the generation and distribution of electricity were regarded by the court as being, respectively, means to this single end.

Can these principles be applied to the present articles of incorporation? It seems to me that the answer to this question is in the affirmative. The incorporators have really mentioned in their articles but one main object or purpose, viz., the investment of capital in "securities" of various kinds. Whether this investment shall be made by buying securities which are already in existence and selling them or by originating the security itself by lending money is, it seems to me, merely a question of means to an end. It is true that different equipment and business organization might be necessary to make original loans upon real estate security than would be necessary to purchase mortgages; yet after all, a careful investor will make the same kind of an investigation in the one case as in the other.

On the whole, therefore, I do not find that the inclusion of the phrase "to make loans upon real estate" in articles previously authorizing a general dealing in such and similar securities is violative of the principle of singleness of purpose enunciated in State ex rel. v. Taylor, supra.

In point of fact the promoters of this company have stopped short of what they might have assumed. In my opinion, it would not have been a violation of the principle of State ex rel. v. Taylor, supra, to have authorized the lending of money generally in connection with the business of buying and selling securities.

In passing I should say that what I have said about the third and fourth paragraphs of the purpose clause of the articles is applicable to the last part of the second paragraph. It is obvious that the power of supervision, management and protection therein referred to is limited to the property which is the security for the loans which the company may have made or obtained.

On the whole, then, I do not find that the articles of incorporation which have been submitted to me are objectionable on either of the grounds suggested in your second question except as to the words "to obtain."

What I have said answers your second question, but it would not be right for me to pass over in silence a very objectionable phrase which I find in the purpose clause, though that phrase does not constitute an additional purpose or object, and though it does not affect the question as to whether a corporation of this character can be formed under the general incorporation laws. I refer to the phrase "buying, selling and dealing in * * stocks."

Assuming, as I have assumed, that this corporation is formed for the purpose of using its own funds and not that of acting as agent for others in making such investments, this phrase has no proper place in the articles of incorporation. The holding of stocks in other corporations generally as an investor is not a lawful purpose for which a corporation can be formed in Ohio. All corporations have incidental power to acquire the stock of kindred but not competing corporations; but a corporation of this sort could scarcely avail itself of this power while the position of the word "stocks" in the articles of incorporation shows that the purchase and sale of said securities is regarded as a principal business and not as an incidental power. I advise you not to file and record these articles of incorporation unless the word "stocks" is expunged therefrom.

Of course, if the idea of the promoters is to form a company which shall conduct the activities described in the articles of incorporation for others as brokers or agents, then the word "stocks" would not be objectionable, nor would the word "obtain" be open to question, but the whole purpose clause would have to be reframed so as to make it clear that the dealings which the company proposes to engage in are not on its own account, but for others.

I note a general request from you to the effect that I make use of these particular articles to prepare an opinion that may be a guide for your department in consideration of similar questions arising upon other articles of incorporation of the same general character. I do not feel able to do this. I hope that what I have said about these articles may be of service to you in determining your action in other like cases, but I have purposely refrained from attempting to lay down principles that will necessarily apply to any other particular articles of incorporation.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

A JUDGMENT DEBTOR MAY PAY JUDGMENT DIRECT; IN SUCH CASE SHERIFF AND CLERK OF COURTS NOT ENTITLED TO FEES UNDER SECTIONS 2845 AND 2901 G. C.

A judgment debtor may pay a judgment creditor direct and when he does so neither the sheriff nor the clerk of courts is entitled to any fees under sections 2845 or 2901 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of March 13, 1918, as follows:

> "We respectfully request your opinion upon the following matter:
> Question: Can a judgment debtor pay a judgment creditor direct or must this be paid to the sheriff or clerk of courts for disbursement?
> We will call your attention to the fact that section 2845 G. C. provides a poundage fee to the sheriff on all moneys actually made and paid to him on execution, decree, or sale of real estate, and section 2901 G. C., the fee section of the clerk, provides that he may tax a commission of one per centum on the first one thousand dollars, and one-fourth of one per centum on all in excess of one thousand dollars for receiving and disbursing moneys other than costs and fees paid to such clerks in pursuance of an order of court or on judgments, etc., and section 2978 G. C. provides that each clerk of courts and sheriff shall charge and collect the fees, costs, percentages, allowances and compensation allowed by law and section 2977 G. C. provides that they shall be for the sole use of the treasury of the county."

Section 2845 G. C. provides in part:

> "* * *; poundage on all moneys actually made and paid to the sheriff on execution, decree or sale of real estate, on the first ten thousand dollars, one per centum; on all sums over ten thousand dollars, one-half of one per centum, * * *."

Section 2901 G. C. provides that the clerk of courts shall be entitled to fees as follows:

"* * *; for receiving and disbursing money, other than costs and fees, paid to such clerks in pursuance of an order of court or on judgments, and which has not been collected by the sheriff or other proper officer on order of execution to be taxed against the party charged with the payment of such money, a commission of one per centum on the first one thousand dollars and one-fourth of one per centum on all exceeding one thousand dollars; * * *."

Section 2977 provides that all fees received by the sheriff and clerk of courts shall be received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county. The judgment of the court is an order requiring the judgment debtor to pay the judgment creditor the sum awarded and to pay the costs in the case to the officers entitled to them. The purpose of levying execution on judgments is to enforce their payment. Nothing is said in our statutes concerning when the execution must issue. As is stated in Kinkead's Practice, section 907, page 568, the statutes are silent as to when an execution may issue upon a judgment. The statutes in some states regulate this matter. In Ohio the execution may issue at any time after the rendition of the judgment and before appeal has been perfected by the giving of a bond or a bond has been given for the stay of execution in error proceedings. The purpose of the execution being to enforce the judgment, the issuing of an execution is clearly unnecessary when the judgment is paid. If the judgment debtor pays the amount awarded to the judgment creditor and pays the costs in the case to the clerk of the courts, there is no money to be paid on execution to the sheriff or any money to be paid to the clerk of the courts other than costs and fees. Therefore neither of these officers have any reason to charge or collect any fees. There is no necessity of their rendering any service nor do they render any.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE JUDGE—FEES FOR APPOINTMENT OR REMOVAL OF A TRUSTEE.

The provisions of section 1601 G. C., to the effect that the probate judge is to receive a fee of $5.50 for appointment of a trustee and a fee of $5.00 for petition for removal of the trustee, repeals the provisions of section 11145, allowing the probate judge a fee of $2.00 for hearing and deciding each application for appointment of a trustee and the fee of $1.00 for appointing or removing a trustee.

The other provisions of section 11145 remain in force, so that the fees of the probate judge in the administration of the insolvent debtors' law, under authority of sections 1601 and 11145 together, are as follows:

For appointment of assignee or trustee	$5.50
For petition for removal of assignee or trustee	5.00
For filing assignment, inventory and schedule, each	.10
For filing other papers, each	.05
For other services, the same compensation as for like services, in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter as follows:

> "Do the flat rate fees mentioned in section 1601 G. C. take the place of the fees mentioned in section 11145 G. C.? In other words, did the enactment of section 1601 G. C. impliedly repeal the provisions of section 11145, General Code?"

Section 11145 of the General Code, found in the chapter on Insolvent Debtors, reads:

> "The probate judge shall be entitled to the following fees for services performed under the preceding sections of this chapter: for hearing and deciding each application, two dollars; for appointing or removing an assignee or trustee, one dollar; for filing assignment, inventory and schedule, each, ten cents; for filing other papers, each five cents; and for other services, the same compensation as for like services, in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons."

Section 1601 of the General Code provides in part:

> "The fees enumerated in this section shall be charged and collected by the probate judge and shall be in full for all services rendered in the respective proceedings: For appointment of administrator, executor, guardian for minor, except guardian ad litem, assignee or trustee, five dollars and fifty cents; * * * for petition for removal of administrator, executor, guardian, assignee or trustee, five dollars; * * *"

Section 1601 was enacted in 102 O. L., and is a later enactment than section 11145 G. C.

In the case of Goff et al., v. Gates, 87 O. S. 142, it was held:

> "An act of the legislature that fails to repeal in terms an existing statute on the same subject matter, must be held to repeal the former statute by implication if the later act is in direct conflict with the former, or if the subsequent act revises the whole subject-matter of the former act and is evidently intended as a substitute for it."

It will be seen from a reading of the sections quoted that only part of the subject matter of section 11145 is covered in section 1601. Section 11145 provides a fee of $2.00 for hearing and deciding each application and a fee of $1.00 for appointing or removing an assignee or trustee. Section 1601 provides a fee of $5.50 for the appointment of an assignee or trustee and $5.00 for petition for removal of assignee or trustee. Inasmuch as section 1601 provides that the fees enumerated in that section shall be "in full for all services rendered in the respective proceedings," it is clear that the fee of $5.50 allowed for appointing an assignee or trustee, and the fee of $5.00 for petition for removal of an assignee or trustee, are all that can be allowed in connection with the appointment or removal of assignees or trustees. These fees so provided are now allowed probate judges in place of the fee of $2.00 for hearing and deciding an application and the fee of $1.00 for appointing or removing an assignee or trustee under section 11145.

Section 1601 G. C., to this extent, covers the subject matter of section 11145, and repeals that section in so far as these provisions are concerned.

However, the balance of section 11145 is not covered by section 1601 G. C. and is, therefore, not affected by that section. The remainder of section 11145, to which reference is made, reads as follows:

> "* * * For filing assignment, inventory and schedule, each, ten cents; for filing other papers, each five cents; and for other services, the same compensation as for like services, in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons."

It is therefore my opinion that the probate judge may charge and receive, in the administration of the insolvent debtors' law, the following fees:

For appointment of assignee or trustee	$.5.50
For petition for removal of assignee or trustee	5.00
For filing assignment, inventory and schedule, each	.10
For filing other papers, each	.05
For other services, the same compensation as for like services, in the settlement of the estates of deceased persons.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILD WHO RESIDES PERMANENTLY IN HOME OF AN UNCLE MAY ATTEND SCHOOLS OF SAID DISTRICT FREE OF TUITION—THE WORD "WARD" AS USED IN SECTION 7681 G. C. SHOULD BE LIBERALLY CONSTRUED.

Where a child resides permanently in the home of her uncle, who has an actual residence in a school district, such child may attend the public schools of such district free of tuition, even though the parents of such child live in another state.

The term "ward" should be liberally construed when used in relation to the education of the youth of school age of this state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 13, 1918.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A request is before me for my opinion, which is of sufficient general interest, I think, that my reply thereto should be directed to you, and I will send the inquirer a copy. The request is in substance as follows:

> V. S., late a pupil of the Ludlow, Ky., public schools, having passed the seventh grade therein, was by her parents turned over to J. G., who from that time on was to be the legal guardian of V. S. This occurred in March, 1917. At the beginning of the fall term of school (September, 1917) V. S. was sent to the Columbian school in Cincinnati, where she continued her studies until October 26, 1917, when she was discharged on account of non-residence. She is now and will continue a resident permanently at the home of J. G., 3202 Reding Road, Avondale, Cincinnati.

The question, in short, which concerns the writer is, can a pupil reside separate and apart from its parents, that is, can it establish a permanent residence in the home of others than its parents, and be permitted to attend the public schools where it so resides, free of tuition?

Section 7681 G. C. provides in part:

> "The schools of each district shall be free to all youth between six and twenty-one years of age, who are * * * wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district * * *, but all youth of school age living apart from their parents or guardians, and who work to support themselves by their own labor, shall be entitled to attend school free in the district in which they are employed."

The child, V. S., who is a girl fifteen years of age, would have to be considered as a ward, for it must be admitted that she is residing separate and apart from her parents; and she could not be considered as an apprentice working to support herself by her own labor. It must be conceded that her guardianship is one not provided by statute, that is, under the child adoption statutes or by an order of court. All that can be gathered from the statement is, that the parents of the child, V. S., have turned over the care, custody and control of such child to her uncle, J. G., and that said J. G.'s home has been since said time, and will be, the permanent home of said child. If the term "ward" would be as strictly construed in relation to school matters as it is in most other matters, I should say at the outset that the child would not be entitled to attend the public schools in Cincinnati free of tuition, but I find the courts are inclined to construe this word with much liberality in school matters.

It is held in Yale vs. Middle West School District, 59 Conn. 489, and where the statutes provided, that "the public schools of the districts shall be open to all children over four years of age in the respective districts"; that under the construction given to such language it is not necessary that a child be domiciled in the district, but it is enough if it is residing in the district in the ordinary sense of that term; and that a child of school age whose parents resided in another state, but who had lived for several years, and expected to continue to live, in the family of a domiciled resident of the district, was entitled to the privileges of the district schools. On page 492 of said report, Andrews, C. J., uses the following language:

> "A construction so narrow and technical as is claimed by the defendant would seriously impair the usefulness of the school laws and would defeat various provisions of the statutes. The state is interested to have all the children educated in order that they may become good citizens. Experience has demonstrated that it costs the public much more to support one ignorant or vicious person than to educate many children. On the simple ground of economy the state cannot afford to permit any child to grow up without being sent to school. The school laws recognize this fact and their provisions are framed accordingly. *If any child is actually dwelling in any school district, so that some person there has the care of it, and is within the school age, * * * then that child must go to the public school.*"

The facts in the above case are very similar to the facts in the one under consideration. In each instance the parents lived in another state. In each instance the care, custody and control of the child was given to a relative, but not following any legal form therefor. In each instance tuition was demanded of the actual resident of the district in whose home the child lived.

It was held in Board of Education v. Powell, 130 S. W. 67, (Ky.) that where a child was given over to her aunt with whom she was to make a permanent home, she was entitled to all the school privileges of other children of the district. Hobson, C. J., in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

> "The arrangement was made in good faith to give the child a home. It is her home and she is as fully entitled to the privileges of the school as other children whose homes are within the boundary of the district."

In opinion No. 1434, Opinions of the Attorney-General, 1916, Vol. 1, page 576, the question of residence of a child for school purposes was under consideration. In that case a child was under the jurisdiction of the juvenile court and the court ordered the custody of such child to a person whose place of residence was in a district other than the district of the residence of the parents of such child, and the question was as to whether or not such child must pay tuition for attending the schools of the district in which the person lived with whom the child was living under the order of the court. I quote from said opinion as follows:

> "Where a minor child of the age of thirteen years is taken from the care and custody of its parents, who are non-residents of a school district within the county, by order of the judge of the juvenile court of such county, and by the further order of said court is placed under the care and control of a person who is an actual resident of such school district, unless otherwise ordered by the court, said child becomes the ward of said person, resident of such school district, under provision of section 1672 G. C. 103 O. L. 876, and as such is entitled to attend the public schools of said district without charge for tuition under provision of section 7681 G. C."

If, then, a court, who by law is made the guardian of children coming under its jurisdiction, can award the care and control of such child to a person and thus establish a wardship of such child for school purposes, can it not also be said that a parent, who has the undisputed, natural care, custody and control of a child, may grant the care, custody and control of such child so as to establish a guardianship and make a ward of such child for school purposes?

From a consideration of all the above matters, I am inclined to the view that a liberal construction should be given to the term "ward" as the same is used in relation to the education of the youth of school age in this state, and, in answer to your question, I am of the opinion that V. S. should be permitted to attend school in the district in which she resides with J. G., without being compelled to pay tuition therefor.

It will be understood, however, that the above conclusion is reached only upon the facts as stated in the request, showing the permanency of the residence of said child and should not be construed to include any child who lives in a district temporarily or simply to establish a school residence, or who resides in the district only during the time the school is in session.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

REFUNDING BONDS—AUTHORITY OF MUNICIPALITY TO ISSUE—INTEREST—SINKING FUND TRUSTEES NOT AUTHORIZED TO MAKE TEMPORARY LOANS—MUNICIPAL CORPORATION MAY NOT BORROW MONEY IN ANTICIPATION OF SINKING FUND LEVIES OR TO MEET DEFICIENCIES THEREIN.

1. Refunding bonds may be issued by a municipality under authority of section 3916 General Code to extend the time of payment of bonds issued twenty years previously which are about to mature, when it can be ascertained with reasonable certainty that the municipality from its limits of taxation will be unable to pay the same at maturity.

2. Such refunding bonds so issued may bear a higher rate of interest, not exceeding six per cent, than the original bonds.

3. The trustees of the sinking fund are without authority to make temporary loans for sinking fund requirements.

4. A municipal corporation may not borrow money under section 3913 G. C. in anticipation of sinking fund levies, nor for the purpose of meeting a deficiency in the sinking fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion upon certain inquiries received by you from the sinking fund trustees of the city of St. Marys, Ohio, which inquiries are as follows:

> "(1) Can refunding bonds be issued by a municiality under authority of section 3916 G. C., to extend the time of payment of bonds issued twenty years ago which are about to mature?
> (2) If so, can such refunding bonds bear a higher rate of interest than the original bonds?
>
> (3) Can the trustees of the sinking fund in any manner whatsoever make a temporary loan for sinking fund requirements?
> (4) Can a municipality under authority of section 3913 G. C., make a temporary loan for sinking fund requirements?
> (5) If so, and a certificate of indebtedness issued under section 3913 G. C. is paid as it must be from the next semi-annual tax settlement, could such payment be made from the sinking fund's portion?"

A conditional answer to the first question which is submitted is clear; that is to say, if at maturity the city will be unable to pay the outstanding bonds because of its limits of taxation, then under the plain provisions of sections 3916 and 3917 of the General Code they may be refunded. I assume the statement that the bonds are about to mature which is made in the letter is to be interpreted as meaning that the date of maturity is now so imminent that muniicpal funds available for the payment of the bonds at that date can be estimated to a certainty. If that is the case, I see no objection to the action which is contemplated being taken at any time and predicated upon the finding which the council must make that the city is unable to pay the bonds as its valid and subsisting obligation at their maturity because of its limits of taxation.

If the question were as to whether during the life of the bonds, but substantially prior to their maturity, other bonds could be issued for the purpose of extending the time of payment of the indebtedness it would be a more difficult one. Section 3916 G. C. provides that refunding bonds may be issued not only when it is apparent that the corporation is unable to pay the previous indebtedness "at maturity," but also "when it appears to the council for the best interest of the corporation." On the other hand, however, section 39255 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "When it appears to the council of a municipal corporation, to be for the best interest thereof to renew or refund any bonded indebtedness of such corporation which has not matured, and thereby reduce the rate of interest thereon, such council may issue for that purpose new bonds, with semi-annual interest coupons attached, and exchange them with the holder or holders of such outstanding bonds, if they consent to make such exchange and to such reduction of interest. When new bonds are issued they shall not in any case exceed in amount the outstanding bonded indebtedness to be renewed or refunded."

And section 4520 G. C. provides, in part, that

> "For the purpose of refunding, renewing or extending the bonded debt at a lower rate of interest, * * * the trustees of the sinking fund may issue the coupon or registered bonds of the corporation * * *. The aggregate amount of such refunding, renewing or extending bonds so issued shall not exceed that of the bonds so refunded, renewed or extended."

These sections, however, are not mutually inconsistent. Section 3925 provides for an exchange with the holders of the bonds, and with their consent. Section 4520 authorizes the sinking fund trustees to issue bonds without the participation of council in the procedure. Both of them require that the rate of interest shall be lower than that of the original indebtedness. Section 3916, however, apparently authorizes council to sell bonds and with the proceeds thereof to take up outstanding bonds, instead of exchanging them for such outstanding bonds. It is by no means certain that the council may not under this section issue bonds for this purpose. I make no holding on this point, however, because the questions as submitted do not seem to call for any such holding.

Answering the second question I advise that bonds issued under section 3916 G. C. may bear any rate of interest which does not exceed six per cent per annum, regardless of the rate of interest carried by the bonds which are refunded. In this respect the section is different from the other two which have been quoted.

Answering your third question I beg to state that the sole power of the trustees of the sinking fund to make loans of any kind is that provided for in section 4520 G. C., which has been quoted in part. This section does not authorize a "temporary loan for sinking fund requirements," but only a refunding or renewal of the bonded debt. For the temporary exigencies arising in the administration of the sinking fund the trustees are authorized to "sell or use any of the securities or money in their possession" (section 4517 G. C.), but they are not authorized to borrow money.

The third question must therefore be answered in the negative.

Section 3913 G. C., referred to in the fourth and fifth questions, provides as follows:

> "In anticipation of the general revenue fund in any fiscal year, such corporations may borrow money and issue certificates of indebtedness therefor, signed as municipal bonds are signed, but no loans shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for such fund, after deducting all advances. The sums so anticipated shall be deemed appropriated for the payment of such certificates at maturity. The certificates shall not run for a longer period than six months, nor bear a greater rate of interest than six per cent, and shall not be sold for less than par with accrued interest."

In my opinion, this section is not available to make a temporary loan for sinking fund requirements. The authorization is to borrow in anticipation of the "general revenue fund," and the loans to be made must not exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections "for such fund." Without passing upon what the phrase "the general revenue fund" means, I am clearly of the opinion that it does not mean the sinking fund. That the sinking fund levies are entirely separate and distinct is apparent from section 4513 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"On or before the first Monday in May of each year, the trustees of the sinking fund shall certify to council the rate of tax necessary to provide a sinking fund for the future payment of bonds issued by the corporation, for the payment of final judgments, except in condemnation of property cases, for the payment of interest on bonded indebtedness, and the rents due on perpetual leaseholds of the corporation not payable from a special fund, and the expenses incident to the management of the sinking fund. The council shall place the several amounts so certified in the tax ordinance before and in preference to any other item and for the full amount certified. Such taxes shall be in addition to all other taxes authorized by law."

This distinction is observed throughout the Smith one per cent law, so-called (sections 5649-1 et seq General Code), to which I refer you generally.

I note that my predecessor, Honorable E. C. Turner, in an opinion under date of June 24, 1915, to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices (Vol. 2, Opinions of Attorney-General, page 1082), held as follows:

"The general revenue fund of a municipality (within the meaning of section 3913) is not defined in statutory terms but as here used is deemed to include the aggregate revenues of such municipality from whatever source derived other than those funds specifically set apart by law as for instance interest and sinking fund * * *."

Without being prepared to agree with this statement in its entirety, I do agree, as I have already inferred, with the exclusion of interest and sinking fund levies from the meaning of the phrase "the general revenue fund" as used in section 3913.

The question remains as to whether the general revenue fund may be anticipated for the purpose of obtaining money for the use of the sinking fund. Section 3913 G. C. does not prescribe expressly the purposes for which money may be borrowed thereunder. The phrase "in anticipation of the general revenue fund" implies, however, in my opinion that the only purposes for which money may be borrowed are those properly chargeable against the general revenue fund. I think it may be safely laid down as a general principle that when taxes or tax collections are authorized to be "anticipated" by the issuance of negotiable paper, the purpose for which the loan may be made must be one within the purview of the revenues anticipated. The general revenues of the municipality would not be directly available to pay the bonded debt. This is made clear when it is considered that if the certificates were issued under this section (conceding the legality of such issuance) the proceeds of the loan would automatically constitute a part of the general revenue fund, and it would then be necessary to transfer them to the sinking fund before they would be subject to be used for the purpose in question.

The above statements make necessary a negative answer to the fourth question, and render unnecessary any answer to the fifth question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND OF SANITARY POLICE AND PLUMBING INSPECTOR SHOULD BE FIXED BY COUNCIL.

If a municipality is desirous of placing the sanitary police and plumbing inspector under the bond, the amount of such bond should be fixed by the council thereof.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your inquiry as follows:

> "If a municipality is desirous of having the positions of sanitary police and plumbing inspector, which are under the board of health or the health officer, placed under bond, who shall fix the amount of such bond, the council, the board of health or the health officer?"

Section 4411 G. C. reads:

> "The board may also appoint as many persons for sanitary duty as in its opinion the public health and sanitary condition of the corporation require, and such persons shall have general police powers, and be known as the sanitary police, but the council may determine the maximum number of the employes so to be appointed."

Section 4411-1 G. C. reads:

> "The board shall determine the duties and fix the salaries of its employes; but no member of the board of health shall be appointed as health officer or ward physician."

Section 4420 G. C. gives the board of health power to regulate plumbing. The duties and salary of any plumbing inspectors appointed by the board of health under this authority are fixed by the board under section 4411-1, above quoted. The sanitary police are appointed by the board under section 4411 G. C., and while council may determine the maximum number of such sanitary policemen by virtue of section 4411, the board of health determines the duties and fixes the salaries of such sanitary policemen by virtue of section 4411-1 G. C.

Section 4214 G. C. provides:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

It will be noted from this section that council shall determine the amount of bond to be given by each officer, clerk and employe in each department of the government, if any be required, while the power to fix the compensation of the sanitary policemen and plumbing inspectors has been conferred upon the board of health by statute. Nothing is said in these sections, above quoted, concerning any bond for such positions or any power to fix the amount of same. This being true, it would seem that the provisions of section 4214 G. C., above quoted, would still control in so far as the question of bonds for these positions is concerned, and I am therefore of the opinion that if a municipality is desirous of placing the sanitary police and plumbing inspector under bond, the amount of such bond should be fixed by the council thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS MAY NOT EMPLOY EXPERT REAL ESTATE MEN FOR TAKING OPTIONS AND FIXING VALUE OF PROPERTY FOR COUNTY BRIDGES AND COUNTY BUILDINGS.

Boards of county commissioners cannot legally employ and pay out of the county treasury so-called "expert real estate men" for their services in taking options and fixing the value of property to be purchased by the county to be used for sites for county bridges, county buildings, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Your request for my opinion reads as follows:

> "May the county commissioners legally employ and pay out of the county treasury so-called 'expert real estate men' for their services in taking options and fixing the value of property to be purchased by the county to be used as sites for county bridges, county buildings, etc."

There are a number of sections which confer authority upon county commissioners to purchase real estate. To illustrate:

Section 2433 of the General Code reads:

> "When in their opinion it is necessary, the county commissioners may purchase a site for a court house or jail, or public comfort station, or land for an infirmary, or a detention home, or additional land for an infirmary or county children's home at such price and upon such terms of payment, as are agreed upon between them and the owner or owners of the property, the title to such real estate shall be conveyed in fee simple to the county."

Section 2448 G. C. provides:

> "The board of commissioners of a county owning, or wholly or partly maintaining a hospital for the care of the insane, may purchase or acquire additional real estate which in the judgment of the directors or trustees in charge of such hospital is necessary for its use."

In section 2434 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L. 502, it is provided that the county commissioners may purchase land for the erection of a place to be known as a detention home, and in section 3063-3 G. C. it is provided that the county commissioners may purchase a memorial building which has been abandoned as an armory. In section 7566 it is provided that the commissioners may purchase a toll-bridge. In fact, wherever provision is made for the acquiring of any property by the board of county commissioners, the word "purchase" is used in the statute, and I find no provision of law which permits or makes provision that the county commissioners may take options upon any property that the board is about or desires to purchase for any particular purpose whatever. If, then, the board of county commissioners has any authority to employ any one to take options, it must first have such authority to take options itself and if there is no specific authority given the board by statute to take options, then the only authority it might have would be that authority which is incidental to the purchase of property for the several purposes mentioned in the statute. A board of county commissioners is a creature of statute and the act establishing boards of county commissioners and prescribing their duties, conferred upon them power to perform only "such duties as now are or hereafter may be required of them by law." S. and C. 243.

In Treadwell v. Commissioners, 11 O. S. 183-190, the court had under consideration the authority of a board of county commissioners to subscribe to the capital stock of a railroad company which might be located in such county. Gholson J., delivering the opinion of the court, says:

> "The board of commissioners of a county is a quasi corporation, 'a local organization which, for purposes of civil administration, is vested with a few of the functions characteristic of a corporate existence.' Commissioners of Hamilton County v. Mighels, 7 Ohio St. 109, 115. A grant of power to such a corporation must be strictly construed. When acting under a special power it must act strictly on the conditions under which it is given."

In Commissioners of Delaware County v. Andrews, 18 O. S. 50, the court had under consideration the question as to whether or not a board of county commissioners could purchase $15,000 worth of railroad securities, which railroad was being built through the county, and after calling attention to the case of Treadwell v. Commissioners, supra, Day, C. J., delivering the opinion of the court says, on page 64:

"We do not find among the powers conferred or duties imposed upon the commissioners, anything that would authorize them to purchase railroad bonds with the county funds, or to loan the credit or money of the county to aid railroad corporations to build their roads, however desirable it may be to do so."

In Law et al., v. Leighty et al., 1 C. C. (n. s.) 431, the court says:

"County commissioners are restricted to the exercise of powers expressly conferred upon them by statute, and they have no authority to bring an action to restrain persons from obstructing township roads under sections 845 and 863, R. S., the former authorizing them to bring actions to prevent injury to 'public, state and county roads' and the latter to bring suits in certain cases for injuries to 'bridges, roads and buildings.'"

Winch, J., delivering the opinion of the court, which was concurred in by Hale, J., and Marvin, J., quotes from Commissioners of Mahoning County v. Railway Co., 45 O. S., 401, as follows:

"That boards of county commissioners in Ohio have such powers and such only as are by statute, and may maintain such actions, and such only as are by statute authorized, is too well established to admit of controversy."

In State ex rel., v. Menning, 95 O. S., page 97, the supreme court had under consideration the question as to whether or not a board of county commissioners had a right to purchase a passenger automobile for officials to use in supervising the construction, improvement, maintenance and repair of the county highways, and on page 99, in a per curiam opinion, the following language is used:

"The legal principle is settled in this state that county commissioners, in their financial transactions, are invested only with limited powers, and that they represent the county only in such transactions as they may be expressly authorized so to do by statute. The authority to act in financial transactions must be clear and distinctly granted, and, if such authority is of doubtful import, the doubt is resolved against its exercise in all cases where a financial obligation is sought to be imposed upon the county."

Numerious other authorities might be cited along the above line, but the above should be sufficient from which the conclusion may be drawn that, as far as the law in Ohio is concerned, it is settled that where no authority is conferred upon a board of county commissioners to act by law, such commissioners may not act when there is an expenditure of public funds in relation thereto. That the county commissioners have a right to build bridges and the approaches thereto is conceded, and it was held in State ex rel., v. Commissioners, 14 O. C. C. (n. s.) 577, affirmed without report in 84 O. S. 503, that the board of commissioners may appropriate whatever property is necessary for the site of a bridge. The appropriation would be made under section 2449 G. C., which reads:

"If the board of commissioners are unable to agree with the owner or owners of the land for the purchase thereof, it may appropriate such land. For that purpose, the board shall cause an accurate survey and description thereof to be made and filed together with a petition for such appropriation with the probate judge of the county. Thereupon like proceedings shall be had in the name of the board as in case of the appropriation of private property by municipal corporations."

Having the powers granted under the above quoted section, the board of county commissioners is relieved of the sharp business practices which frequently occur in real estate transactions among individuals, and the reasons ordinarily given why the taking of an option is considered incidental to and advantageous in real estate purchases do not attach.

In an opinion to your bureau, in which a similar question was asked in relation to boards of education, the same conclusion that I have reached here was therein reached. Said opinion is No. 1103 and was rendered March 26, 1918. In that opinion I held that a board of education has no right to employ a man to secure options at a per cent thereof commission on the purchase price of a site for a school house, and that if such action were taken the same would be illegal.

Holding these views, then, and following the above citations, I advise you that the board of county commissioners cannot legally employ so-called expert real estate men and pay for their services out of the county treasury and money for the purpose of taking options and fixing the value of property to be purchased by the county to be used as sites for county buildings, etc.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDUSTRIAL DIRECTORY, PUBLICATION BY INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION NOT IN CONFLICT WITH SECTION 1465-46.

Publication of an industrial directory by the industrial commission would not be in conflict with section 1465-46 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under date of April 10 you addressed a communication to me as follows:

"I submit for your information a letter from Mr. Malcolm Jennings of the Ohio Manufacturers' Association, together with the recommendation of our chief statistician in connection with the compilation of an industrial directory.

The industrial commission desires your opinion as to whether or not the publication of such directory would be in conflict with section 1465-46 of the General Code."

The letter of Mr. Jennings, referred to in your letter, is as follows:

"We beg to call your attention to the great need in this state for the publication of a classified list of the industries here operating, together with such data as to product, employment, etc., as would be of interest and value in mobilizing the industrial resources of the state, providing for the allocation and dilution of labor, facilitating the placing and allotment of orders by the government, and assisting in the securing of new enterprises, etc., etc. There has been a demand for a publication of this sort from many sources and notably from the United States government in connection with war needs. Many states already have such publications and they have been found of great value and interest. The law authorizes your department to make such publication and you have at hand, I assume, through the reports made to you, all the data necessary and which merely needs compilation.

I believe a ready sale would be found at a margin above cost for any excess number of this publication which could be secured by you and there is no place else from which this information can be obtained, except upon the expenditure of a great deal of time and money and with great difficulty in securing responses to requests from unofficial sources."

The recommendation of your chief statistician is as follows:

"This letter from the Ohio Manufacturers' Association to the Industrial commission of Ohio, and referred to this department, is one of several hundred similar requests, as well as personal visits, from boards of trade, commercial organizations and the general public, both within and without the state, for a list in convenient form of the manufacturers of Ohio.

This list being based upon the names of manufacturers filing annual reports to this department in accordance with the law, could be compiled from the records available in our files without increased cost.

In order, therefore, to lay the foundation for a report which shall present the most complete statistical information of the progress of the manufacturing industry of the state, I recommend that this commission grant permission for the printing of an industrial directory."

Section 1465-45 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"Every employer shall furnish the board (industrial commission), upon request, all information required by it to carry out the purposes of this act. * * * In the month of January of each year, every employer of the state, employing five or more employes regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, shall prepare and mail to the board, at its main office in the city of Columbus, Ohio, a statement containing the following information, viz.: the number of employes employed during the preceding year from January 1 to December 31 inclusive; the number of such employes employed at each kind of employment; and, the aggregate amount of wages paid to such employes, which information shall be furnished on a blank or blanks to be prepared by the board; and it shall be the duty of the board to furnish such blanks to employers free of charge, upon request therefor. Every employer receiving from the board any blank, with directions to fill out the same, shall cause the same to be properly filled out so as to answer fully and correctly all questions therein propounded, and to give all the information therein sought, or if unable to do so, he shall give to the board in writing good and sufficient reasons for such failure. * * *"

Section 1465-46 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"The information contained in the annual report provided for in the preceding section, and such other information as may be furnished to the board of employers in pursuance of the provisions of said section, shall be for the exclusive use and information of said board in the discharge of its official duties, and shall not be open to the public nor be used in any court in any action or proceeding pending therein unless the board is a party to such action or proceeding; but the information contained in said report may be tabulated and published by the department, in statistical form, for the use and information of other state departments and public. * * *"

From the letters which you submit with your inquiry, it appears that the only thing which is sought to be published is a classified list of the industries "together with such data as to product, employment, etc., as would be of interest and value in mobilizing the industrial resources of the state." Such a list, as I view it, would be the publication of information contained in the annual reports filed by employers "in statistical form" and could therefore readily be brought within the provisions of that part of section 1465-46 G. C., which authorizes the board to publish such information "in statistical form" for the information of state departments and the public.

However, section 173-2 G. C. (106 O. L. 514) provides as follows:

"No officer, board or commission, shall print or cause to be printed at the public expense, any report, bulletin or pamphlet, unless such report, bulletin or pamphlet be first submitted to and the publication thereof approved by the commissioners of public printing. If such commission shall approve the publication thereof, it shall determine the form of such publication and the number of copies thereof, provided that in all cases the commissioners of public printing shall cause their action thereon to be entered upon the minutes of their proceedings.

If such approval is given, the commissioners shall cause the same to be printed, and may authorize such printing to be done at any penal, correctional or benevolent institution of the state having a printing department of sufficient equipment therefor; and when printed, such publications, other than the Ohio General Statistics, shall be delivered to such officer, board or commission for distribution by him or it."

This section restricts the power of an officer, board or commission to print or cause to be printed, at public expense, any report, etc., unless the same has first been submitted to the commissioners of public printing and received their approval. Therefore, before such a report could be printed under the provisions of section 1465-46 G. C., the approval of the commissioners of public printing under section 173-2 G. C. would be required.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY TREASURER'S SURPLUS FUND MUST BE CARED FOR BY REGULARLY APPOINTED ASSISTANTS.

The county treasurer's surplus fund must be cared for by himself or his regularly appointed assistants and such county treasurer may not legally employ a clerk and pay such clerk from the interest on the surplus fund for his services in caring for the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of March 1, 1918, as follows:

> "May a county treasurer legally employ and pay a clerk, whose duty it is to do the clerical work incidental to the handling of the 'surplus fund,' out of the interest of such 'surplus fund' for such services?
> The surplus fund in question is made up of over-payments, duplicate payments, etc., which were made by the taxpayers of a county in this state during the semi-annual tax collection period and were drafted into the county treasury in compliance with a ruling of the attorney-general's department, found in Vol. 1, page 517, report of 1916, the amount of said fund having been set apart in a separate fund and is now known as '———— County Treasurer's Surplus Fund.'"

In an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, referred to in your letter, I find the following:

> "It is apparent from your statement and from information gained from personal interviews with your examiners that the duplicate payment of taxes in many counties is becoming a matter of serious concern to county officials as well as to your department. It appears that said payments have reached such proportions in many counties as to imperatively require the adoption of some plan for the proper disposition of the same in the absence of any statutory regulations providing for their disposal.
> It is well to observe that no statutory provisions have been made for the disposition of these funds because under the plan or scheme of the statutory law it was not anticipated that such payments could occur. I refer in this connection to section 2594 G. C., which provides that when payment of either half of taxes is made the treasurer shall write in the blank space required to be left on each duplicate opposite such taxes the word 'paid.' This provision of said section does not mean that the entry of this word shall be made in this column the next day after such taxes are paid or at some future time. This provision means and requires that such entry shall be made when the taxes are paid. If this is done, as it was intended, it should be done, duplicate payment of taxes could not possibly occur because it would be discovered instantly. It seems, therefore, incredible that such payments, even if the provisions of this law were observed in a reasonable manner, could amount to many thousands of dollars each year in certain counties, as the examinations of your department show is the case.

Referring now to your inquiry in reference to section 286 G. C., as amended 103 O. L. 507, we find its provisions which are pertinent to said inquiry are as follows:

'The term "public money" as used herein shall include all money received or collected under color of office whether in accordance with or under authority of any law, ordinance or order, or otherwise, and all public officials, their deputies and employes, shall be liable therefor.'

Unquestionably money collected in any manner by a county treasurer for taxes, whether received and paid under a mistake of fact or law, is collected by said treasurer under color of office. I have no hesitancy, therefore, in saying that duplicate payment of taxes, paid and received under a mistake of fact, constitute public money within the meaning of this section. Such payments, therefore, are proper subjects for the attention of your examiners when making the annual examination required by law in the office of each county treasurer. But it must be understood that this statute does not thereby make such payments public money in the sense that the money received therefrom may be used by the county for public purposes or may be credited to any fund of the county to be used for public purposes. The money so received from duplicate payments of taxes becomes, is and must continue to be until exhausted a trust fund for the benefit of those who created it by mistake and who are entitled to be repaid from it upon proof of such mistake and their consequent right to such repayment. For this reason I am of the opinion, in answer to your second inquiry, that it would not be proper to report this money under the provisions of section 2642 G. C., nor should it be credited in any event to the undivided general tax fund. As before observed, there are no statutory provisions applicable to this situation, and I, therefore, advise that this money be held by the county treasurer until his semi-annual settlement with the county auditor. In the meantime each treasurer should make every possible effort to return all duplicate payments to those who are entitled to the same. At the time of making the semi-annual settlement whatever amount of such payments remains in the hands of the treasurer should be reported by him to the auditor and turned into the county treasury, to be credited to a special trust fund and thereafter all claims against such fund should be paid upon the allowance of the county commissioners; said allowance to be made upon the written request of the treasurer and upon proof that the party making the claim is rightfully entitled thereto."

Without passing upon the correctness of the view expressed in the above opinion, I desire to call your attention to the application of section 286 G. C., quoted and referred to in the opinion of Mr. Turner. That section provides in part:

"The term 'public money' as used herein, shall include all money received or collected under color of office whether in accordance with or under authority of any law, ordinance or order, or otherwise, and all public officials, their deputies and employes, shall be liable therefor."

Undoubtedly, the monies constituting the surplus fund are received by the county treasurer under color of his office and are public monies within the definition of the statute above quoted and the county treasurer is made liable therefor. Inasmuch as he is liable therefor as county treasurer, the monies must be cared for by him as county treasurer in the same manner as all the other public monies. This is to be done, if not by himself, by deputies and assistants provided for by statute to assist him in discharging his duties as county treasurer.

I am therefore of the opinion that the monies in the surplus fund must be cared for by the county treasurer himself or by deputies or clerks connected with the county treasurer's office, and that the interest on the surplus fund may not be used to employ a clerk to perform the clerical work incidental to the handling of such fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DELINQUENCY PROCEEDINGS—JURISDICTION—FEES.

An affidavit is filed charging the child with delinquency and because of lack of evidence the case is continued. In the meantime another affidavit is filed against the child, setting forth another offense and a hearing is had. Held, the court had jurisdiction of the child after the filing of the first affidavit and the filing of the second affidavit is not a new "case" against the child within the meaning of section 1602 and the probate judge is therefore not entitled to receive a fee under the section for the filing of the second affidavit.

The child is found to be delinquent and is placed on probation and later a second affidavit is filed setting forth some other evidence and a hearing had thereon. Held, that since after the child was declared delinquent the juvenile court had jurisdiction over it and the filing of the second affidavit was not the filing of a new "case" under section 1602 G. C., the probate judge is not entitled to receive a fee under this section for the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 15, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of March 18, 1918, enclosing a communication from Hon. Charles E. Capple, probate judge of Ross county, Ohio, and asking my opinion upon the questions he presents therein. Judge Capple's letter is as follows:

> "In looking over the various opinions of Attorney-General McGhee which you were kind enough to send me some few days ago I noticed one opinion which, if I place the correct interpretation upon the same, was to the effect that only one charge by way of probate court costs could be made in a juvenile case or cases, no matter how many different complaints were filed against the same child at different times. Of course, I keep in mind that portion of the opinion which provided that a new complaint should be styled a new case and charged for, providing the delinquent child was committed to the boys' industrial school and thereafter discharged, and thereafter a new complaint filed.
> Now if I am correct in the foregoing, does your department go so far as to say that if on March 11, 1918, an affidavit is filed charging John Jones with being guilty of immoral conduct and therefore a delinquent child, and thereafter on hearing of said case for reasons which seem sufficient to the court, lack of evidence at the time of hearing or other cause, said hearing is continued; and then, thereafter, say on June 29, 1918, another affidavit is filed against John Jones charging him with petit larceny and therefore a delinquent child, and notices, etc., and hearing are had on said second affidavit, that this court cannot make a charge for each separate proceeding; or, say John Jones at one time is found to be a delinquent child and placed on probation and thereafter a second affidavit is filed charging some other offense, and hearing is had thereon, that this court cannot charge for said second case or proceeding?

Certainly I have in mind that the charge in juvenile matters is delinquency, and not some specific criminal offense; but, it seems to me on a second affidavit being filed that notices, hearing, etc., should be had. In other words, to come to the point, the statute says the probate court shall tax the sum of $2.50 for each case filed against a delinquent child; I am afraid I have in mind a different construction of when said fee should be taxed, or what the procedure of the court should be than the attorney-general has, if I read and interpret his opinion correctly."

In opinion No. 791, rendered November 20, 1917, to which reference is made by Judge Capple, the following statement is found:

"A 'case' is filed within the meaning of section 1602 G. C., supra, when the original affidavit charging delinquency, dependency or neglect is filed with the court and that as long as the jurisdiction acquired upon that charge continues, the filing of any additional affidavits or charges, or the making of any new orders by the court, does not constitute a new 'case' within the meaning of section 1602 G. C."

In the first situation, to which Judge Capple calls attention, the affidavit was filed charging a child with being delinquent. Because of lack of evidence the hearing was postponed. In the meantime another affidavit was filed charging the child with being a delinquent, based upon another violation of law, and a hearing was had.

Section 1647 G. C. provides as follows:

"Until the time for the hearing arrives, the court shall make such temporary disposition of such child as it may deem best."

The affidavit, as will be noted from a reading of section 1647, above quoted, need only charge delinquency. It is not necessary to set out all the facts upon which the charge of delinquency is based nor is it necessary at the time of the hearing to confine the evidence to the allegations laid in the affidavit. The affidavit is simply filed for the purpose of charging delinquency and then the court may hear whatever evidence it may see fit to entertain in connection with the charge. In the first case referred to by you the child was charged with being a delinquent upon the filing of the first affidavit and it was at that time that a "case" was filed against the child within the meaning of section 1602 G. C. The court had jurisdiction of the child prior to the filing of a second affidavit and although the court may have allowed the second affidavit to be filed, it received it not as a new "case" against the child, but simply as additional evidence in support of the charge of delinquency made in the first affidavit. No fees, therefore, could be charged by the probate judge for the filing of this second affidavit.

The second situation presented by Judge Capple shows the child to be a delinquent child and placed on probation. Thereafter a second affidavit was filed "charging some other offense" and a hearing was had thereon. The only charge that can be placed against a minor for a violation of law is that the child is a delinquent minor and that charge is based upon any offense that may have been committed. After the court has once found the child to be a delinquent child upon an affidavit setting forth some violation of law, the child remains in the custody of the court for the necessary purposes of discipline and protection until he or she attains the age of twenty-one years and the power over such child continues until the child attains such age. If a child has been declared to be a delinquent and is placed upon probation, and further evidence of improper conduct or violation of law is discovered, the court's attention may be called to such fact by affidavit, or otherwise, but no hearing can be held by the court to determine whether or not the child was delinquent for the reason that that matter has already been passed upon. The only thing the court has before it is whether or not the probation should remain in effect, or whether the child should be committed to an institution or disposed of in some other proper manner according to law. The court is simply exercising a continuing jurisdiction founded upon the finding on the original affidavit and the filing of the evidence of further delinquency, whether it be by affidavit or otherwise, is certainly not the filing of a new case against the child, and it is my opinion that the court may not charge or receive a fee under section 1602 G. C. for the second hearing as a new "case."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN ERRORS ON TAX DUPLICATE MAY BE CORRECTED.

Where a county auditor fails to place upon the duplicate additions directed to be made to mineral land valuations by the tax commission of Ohio under sections 5612 and 5613 General Code, and no corrective action is taken until the final August settlement for the taxes assessed on such valuation, there is no way in which the error can be subsequently corrected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 17, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion upon the following:

> "Under the provisions of section 5612 the auditor of Hocking county in the year 1916 furnished to the commission an abstract of the real and personal property of each taxing district in his county and under the provisions of section 5613 the commission, after careful consideration of said abstract, added certain percentages to the value of oil royalties and mineral rights in said county and certified its action to the county auditor. The auditor had instructions from the commission that the value of all oil royalties must be included with the value of the land if the owner of the land and the royalty was one and the same person. The auditor did not comply with the commission's instructions in this regard but placed the value of said oil royalties upon the tax duplicate in a separate entry, designating the same 'Special Oil Tax.' One of the parties against whom this tax was assessed brought injunction proceedings in the common pleas court and the court, as the commission understands it, enjoined the collection of the tax. The commission now desires to know whether the present auditor by instructions from this commission or otherwise, may correct the error of the former auditor in placing this value upon the tax duplicate as a special oil tax and increase the value of the land of the person securing this injunction to its true value in money for the year 1916."

It will not be necessary to quote sections 5612 and 5613 General Code as they were amended in 1915. Suffice it to say they imposed upon the county auditor the imperative duty of acting in the way in which your letter implies that he should have acted; that is to say, he should have added to the value of the land in each case the percentage specified in the order of the tax commission where the mineral rights and the land were owned by the same person. I understand from your letter that he did not do this, and that nothing in the decision of the court bears upon the legality of the assessment as it would have been had the auditor proceeded properly; that is to say, I do not understand that if present action is otherwise possible the auditor would place himself in contempt of court by taking such action. I have not the papers in the case referred to before me, and really should have in order to dispose of this point satisfactorily. I eliminate the point from consideration, however, with the caution that in so doing I have assumed that the auditor was merely enjoined from collecting any tax upon his duplicate entry of "Special Oil Tax."

With this point out of the way, the question which you put may be phrased thus:

Where an order of the tax commission under former section 5613 of the General Code was not complied with by the county auditor prior to the August settlement in the year for which the assessment was made, is there any authority to comply with it thereafter; or have the auditor by his default and the tax commission and all other administrative authorities who might be interested in the case by failing to proceed to remedy the default while the duplicate was still alive, as it were, cut off the right to comply with the commission's order? And if the auditor has no right without the initiation of further proceedings by the commission to take the step which he should have taken in 1916, may the commission by initiating other proceedings confer upon him such right or impose upon him such a duty?

Of course, at the time the commission had ample authority under section 74 of the Parrett-Whittemore law (106 O. L. 266), therein designated as section 5624-2 General Code, to institute appropriate proceedings to compel the auditor's compliance with its lawful order. This authority continued at least until the time of the August settlement in 1917, even though in the meantime the Parrett-Whittemore law was extensively amended, section 5624-2 G. C. not having been touched in the amendments of 1917. Section 5612 G. C. was, to be sure, repealed; but public rights had vested under it and indeed a proceeding had been initiated within the meaning of section 26 of the General Code; so that, in my opinion, the power of the commission to invoke section 5624-2 to compel compliance with its order under section 5613 (still in force), though predicated upon a report made by the county auditor under section 5612 G. C. (since repealed), continued to exist after the amendment of 1917. But the duty of the auditor which could have been thus enforced is that specified in section 5615 of the General Code as enacted in in 106 O. L. 267, and may be described as being the making of certain additions upon the then existing duplicate. The commission could not do more under section 5624-2 G. C. than to compel the performance of a legal duty, and if after the August settlement, 1917, the duty no longer existed and the power of the auditor was gone section 5624-2 cannot, of course, help the situation.

We are thus brought back to the main question as I have above phrased it. The following group of statutes may be considered:

Section 2588 General Code:

> "From time to time the county auditor shall correct all errors which he discovers in the tax list and duplicate, either in the name of the person charged with taxes or assessments, the description of lands or other property or when property exempt from taxation has been charged with tax, or in the amount of such taxes or assessment. If the correction is made after the duplicate is delivered to the treasurer, it shall be made on the margin of such list and duplicate without changing any name, description or figure in the duplicate as delivered, or in the original tax list, which shall always correspond exactly with each other."

Section 2588-1 General Code (106 O. L. 263):

> "The county auditor from time to time shall correct any clerical errors which he discovers in the tax list, in the name of the person charged with taxes, the valuation, description or quantity of any tract, lot or parcel of land or improvements thereon, or minerals or mineral rights therein, or in the valuation of any personal property, or when property exempt from taxation has been listed therein, and enter such corrections upon the tax list and duplicate."

Section 2589 General Code:

> "After having delivered the duplicate to the county treasurer for collection, if the auditor is satisfied that any tax or assessment thereon or any part thereof has been erroneously charged, he may give the person so charged a certificate to that effect to be presented to the treasurer, who shall deduct the amount from such tax or assessment. If at any time the auditor discovers that erroneous taxes or assessments have been charged and collected in previous years, he shall call the attention of the county commissioners thereto at a regular or special session of the board. If the commissioners find that taxes or assessments have been so erroneously charged and collected, they shall order the auditor to draw his warrant on the county treasurer in favor of the person paying them for the full amount of the taxes or assessments so erroneously charged and collected. The county treasurer shall pay such warrant from any surplus or unexpended funds in the county treasury."

On the face of these sections it appears that a correction of the duplicate which constitutes an addition thereto cannot be made after the collection is closed at the August settlement. The explanation for the repetition involved in sections 2588 and 2588-1 as they are above quoted lies in the fact that what is now section 2588-1 is an amendment of a provision found in the Warnes law of 1913, being section 64 thereof, therein designated as section 5624-17 G. C. (103 O. L. 802), conferring upon the district assessor power, in addition to that possessed by the county auditor under section 2588, to correct clerical errors in the tax list and duplicate. While this section was in force both officers had this power. When the Warnes Law was repealed and the position of district assessor was abolished by the legislation of 1916, the general assembly in the effort to cast upon the county auditor all the duties of the district assessor enacted a section word for word like section 64 of the Warnes law, except that the phrase "district assessor" was changed to "county auditor." Such amendment was absolutely unnecessary because the county auditor already had the same power under section 2588 G. C. (except perhaps as to the correction of valuation of mineral rights and improvements.)

As I have stated, it is clear from section 2589 G. C. that this machinery can be applied to corrections of errors occurring in "previous years" only when the error has injured the taxpayer. There is no authority to collect taxes on a duplicate that is closed; a new or special duplicate must be made up or the charge must be made upon the then current duplicate for the past omitted taxes (see section 5399 General Code).

Of course, the current or 1917 duplicate is correct; there are no errors in it; and the 1916 duplicate being closed I am of the opinion that the authority conferred by sections 2588 and 2589 General Code is no longer available to permit the county auditor to take appropriate action nor to authorize the commission to order him to do so. (See also section 2592 G. C., further governing the procedure of making "additions and deductions," in which it is made very clear that the whole procedure consists of the correction of the living duplicate.)

Section 2593 of the General Code as at present in force provides as follows: (107 O. L. 30.)

> "When the county auditor is satisfied that lots or lands on the tax list or duplicate have not been charged with either the county, township, village, city, or school district tax, he shall charge against it all such omitted tax for the preceding years, not exceeding five years unless in the meantime such lands or lots have changed ownership, in which case only the taxes chargeable since the last change of ownership shall be so charged."

I think it is obvious that this section can afford no relief to the public. The action of the commission consisted of an addition to the valuation. Section 2593 authorizes the collection of omitted levies for particular purposes in subsequent years.

Section 5604 General Code provides as follows: (107 O. L. 42.)

> "When the county board of revision discovers or has its attention called to the fact that, in a current year or in any year during the five years next preceding, any taxable land, building, structure, improvement, minerals, mineral rights, personal property or other taxable property in the county, has escaped taxation or been listed for taxation at less than its true value in money, the board may investigate the same and report to the county auditor all facts and information in its possession relating to the same. The county auditor shall make such inquiries and corrections as he is authorized and required by law to make in other cases in which real and personal property has escaped taxation, or has been improperly listed or valued for taxation.

In connection with this section I refer you to the previous opinion of this department given to the commission under date of May 1, 1917, (Opinions of Attorney-General, Vol. 1, page 574), and to an opinion addressed to Hon. John V. Campbell, prosecuting attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio, under date of June 16, 1917, (Opinions of Attorney General, Vol. 2, page 1009). The latter of these opinions is peculiarly in point. The head-note of the opinion sums up the holding thereof as follows:

> "When the board of revision acting under section 5604 G. C., as amended in 1917, calls to the attention of the county auditor the fact that a parcel of real estate, as such, has for a number of years been assessed upon the tax duplicate at very much less than its true value in money, the county auditor is without power to act in any respect directly upon such information; the provisions of section 5604, which assumes that he has power to take such action, not being effective in themselves to give him such power, and there being no such power under other sections of the General Code.
> The county auditor has power to act upon information transmitted to him under section 5604 in the revaluation of improvements and betterments on lands, in which event his action affects only the current duplicate; and in case taxable land has been entirely omitted from the duplicate, in which event his action may affect not only the current duplicate but also any of the five preceding years unless during that time the property has changed ownership."

In brief, this conclusion was predicted upon the fact that although section 5604 G. C., as I have quoted it, seems to assume that the county auditor has authority to make inquiries and corrections so as to affect previous years, there is no such other statute as the section seems to refer to authorizing him to do this thing. This holding disposes of section 5604 G. C. as an available remedy in the matter.

I know of no other statutes which could have application to the matter at hand. The gist of the situation is that it is now too late to correct the duplicate for the year in question. Of course, this result is to be regretted inasmuch as you inform me verbally that other taxpayers have paid taxes on what was intended to be the increased valuation without protest. This fact, however, cannot change the result. I advise you therefore that the present county auditor has no legal right to correct the duplicate for the previous year so as to place the proper valuation against the property in question and to collect taxes on the increased amount accordingly; that the board of revision and county auditor acting together under section 5604 and related sections have no such power; and that inasmuch as the tax commission's power is limited to directing the auditor to perform his duties, and does not extend to the creation of any independent duties, the commission is not authorized to take any action which will afford a remedy.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF TRUMBULL COUNTY—$21,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 17, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Trumbull county, Ohio, in the sum of $21,000.00, in anticipation of taxes and assessments to pay the respective shares of said county, Weathersfield township and of the owners of abutting property of the cost and expense of constructing the Salt Springs-Youngstown road improvement in said county and township.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners and other officers of Trumbull county, Ohio, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted will, when executed by the proper officers of the county and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Trumbull county, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CLAIMS FOR SHEEP KILLED OR INJURED BY DOGS PRIOR TO DECEMBER 1, 1917, MAY BE ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS AT THEIR JUNE, 1918, SESSION FROM SHEEP FUND—SURPLUS IN SHEEP FUND MAY BE TRANSFERRED TO DOG AND KENNEL FUND.

The board of county commissioners, at its June session in the year 1918, may allow claims for sheep killed or injured by dogs prior to December 1, 1917, and order the payment of such claims out of the "sheep fund" created by the levy of the per capita tax on dogs provided for in section 5652 General Code before its amendment in the act of March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 534).

Any surplus in said "sheep fund" after the payment of all claims for sheep killed or injured before December 1, 1917, may then be transferred to the "dog and kennel fund" created by said act; and moneys thereafter collected as the proceeds of the special tax on dogs under said section 5652 General Code before amendment may then be covered into the "dog and kennel fund" for the purposes of said act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 17, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—This department is in receipt of a communication from you under date of March 8, 1918, in which opinion is asked upon certain questions therein stated. Your communication is as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:

Section 5652 G. C., before being amended and supplemented in 107 O. L. 534, provided for additional tax on dogs, the section concluding as follows:

'* * * The receipts from such tax shall constitute a special fund to be disposed of in the payment of sheep claims, as provided by law.'

The net collections of said dog taxes were credited upon the ledgers of county auditors and county treasurers to funds variously designated as 'Dog Fund,' 'Sheep Fund' or 'Wool Grower's Fund.' These taxes, or levies, were charged on the general tax duplicate and were collected by the county treasurer, and were handled as other funds during the regular process of settlement. Many such charges became delinquent and were and are collected afterward, along with other delinquent personal property tax and we presume such delinquencies will be collected for several years in the future, and it is a question how long the old fund must be kept up to receive such collections.

The amendment of section 5652 G. C., 107 O. L. 534, does away with the levy or tax, and substitutes a registration fee to be paid to the county auditor along with the application for registration, which fees, as required by section 5652-13 G. C. (107 O. L. 537), must be deposited by the auditor in the county treasury and which shall constitute a special fund known as the dog and kennel fund.

Section 5653 G. C., before amendment, provided:

'After paying all such sheep claims, at the June session of the county commissioners, if there remain more than one thousand dollars of such fund, the excess, at such June session, shall be transferred and disposed of as follows: * * *'

Said section 5653 G. C., as amended 107 O. L. 537, and effective December 1, 1917, provides:

'After paying all horses, sheep, cattle, swine, mule and goat claims at the December session of the county commissioners, if there remain more than one thousand dollars of the dog and kennel fund arising from the registration of dogs and dog kennels for such year the excess at such December session shall be transferred and disposed of as follows: * * *'

The disposition of the surplus in both instances is the same, hence would it not be practicable, after paying sheep claims for sheep killed or injured before December 1, 1917, next June only out of the old fund in accordance with the provisions of section 5846 G. C., before amendment, to merge these funds under the new designation of 'Dog and Kennel' fund, by transferring any balance in the old to the new fund? Would such merger require authority so to do from the court of common pleas under section 2296? If such merger be made or ordered by court can future collection of delinquent dog taxes on the delinquent personal tax duplicate be credited to the new dog and kennel fund?"

The per capita tax on dogs provided for by section 5652 General Code prior to its amendment in the act referred to by you was levied primarily for the purpose of paying claims for sheep killed or injured by dogs, after such claims had been allowed by the board of county commissioners under section 5846 General Code.

Applicable to the consideration of the questions submitted by you, section 5 of article XII of the State Constitution provides that—

"No tax shall be levied, except in pursuance of law; and every law imposing a tax shall state, distinctly, the object of the same, to which only it shall be applied."

In view of these provisions of the Constitution and the fact that section 5846 General Code, as amended in said act, still provides, among other things, that the board of county commissioners at its June and December sessions may allow and order the payment of claims arising from the killing or injuring of sheep by dogs, I am of the opinion in answer to your first question that the board of county commissioners, at its June session in the year 1918, may allow claims for sheep killed or injured by dogs prior to December 1, 1917, and order the payment of such claims out of the "sheep fund" created by the levy of the per capita tax on dogs provided for in section 5652 General Code as it read before its recent amendment.

State ex rel. v. Benham, 17 C. C., n. s. 179.

I am further of the opinion that any surplus in said "sheep fund" after the payment of all claims for sheep killed or injured before December 1, 1917, may then be transferred to the "dog and kennel fund" created by the act of March 21, 1917, referred to in your communication.

State ex rel. v. Benham, supra.

Some doubt as to the correctness of the conclusion just noted with respect to the transfer of such surplus is created by the provisions of section 5654 General Code, which, among other things, provides that when there is in the treasury of any county a surplus of the proceeds of a special tax which is not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied such surplus shall be transferred immediately by the board having charge of such surplus to the sinking fund of the county, and shall thereafter be subject to the uses of such sinking fund. Inasmuch, however, as moneys in the "dog and kennel fund" created by said act are, generally speaking, to be used for a purpose correlative to that for which moneys in the "sheep fund" are to be used, and inasmuch as claims for killed and injured sheep are hereafter required to be paid out of said "dog and kennel fund," I do not think that any surplus which may be in the sheep fund after the payment of claims for sheep killed and injured before December 1, 1917, can be said to be a surplus not needed for the purpose for which the tax was levied within the meaning of section 5654 General Code, and for this reason I do not think this section has any application to the matter at hand.

In view of the fact that the "dog and kennel fund" created by the recent act is correlative and to some extent related in purpose to the "sheep fund" created by the collection of taxes levied under section 5652 General Code before amendment, I doubt very much whether the county commissioners in making such transfer are required to secure an order of court therefor by proceedings under sections 2296 et seq. General Code, but as a matter of precaution I suggest that this be done.

Moneys thereafter collected as the proceeds of the special tax on dogs under section 5652 General Code, before amendment, may, I think, be properly covered into the "dog and kennel fund" without offending either the letter or spirit of the constitutional provisions above noted; and this for the reason, as above pointed out, that the purposes for which the moneys in the "dog and kennel fund" are to be used are correlative and related to, and in some respects identical with, the purpose for which moneys in the "sheep fund" may be expended.

See Township of Northfield v. Village of Macedonia, 22 C. C., n. s. 50.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,

DIRECTORS OF MUNICIPAL UNIVERSITY MUST SUBMIT AN ESTIMATE OF NEEDS OF SAID INSTITUTION TO MAYOR—WHEN AND BY WHOM SAID ESTIMATE MAY BE REDUCED.

The directors of a municipal university must submit an estimate of the needs of their institution just as the heads of other departments in the city government must submit them, to the mayor, as a part of the process of making up the municipal budget. The mayor may reduce any item therein; the council when it makes the levy may, if necessary, reduce such item; and the budget commission in adjusting the levies may likewise reduce any item in the budget of such university, if necessary to enforce the fifteen mill limitation which alone applies to such levy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 18, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 5 requesting my opinion upon the following:

> "We are referring you to the provisions of section 7908 G. C., as amended 103 O. L. 472, and section 3791 G. C., also to the budgetary provisions of the Smith one per cent tax law.
> Question: Is the budgetary request of the board of trustees of the university of the city of Cincinnati if within the limitations of section 7908 G. C., mandatory to be made in full or has council or the budget commission, or both, the power to cut down and reduce same as they have on all other municipal levies with the exception of the sinking fund?"

The sections referred to by you are as follows:

Section 7908:

> "The council annually may assess and levy taxes on all the taxable property of such municipal corporation to the amount of five-tenths of one mill on the dollar valuation thereof, less the amount necessary to be levied to pay the interest and sinking fund on all bonds issued for the university subsequent to June 1, 1910, to be applied by such board to the support of such university, * * * and also levy * * * five-one-hundredths of one mill * * * for the establishment and maintenance of an astronomical observatory, or for other scientific purposes, * * *
> The above tax levies shall not be subject to any limitations of rates of taxation or maximum rates provided by law, except the limitations herein provided, and the further exception that the combined maximum rate for all taxes levied in any year in any city or other tax district shall not exceed fifteen mills."

Section 3791:

"On the first day of April of each year the mayor shall submit to council the annual budget of current expenses of the municipality, any item of which may be reduced or omitted by council, but the council shall not increase the total of such budget. In the making of the annual budget, the mayor may revise and change any and all items in the annual estimates furnished to him by the directors and officers as herein prescribed, but he shall not increase the total of any such estimate * * *."

This section must be read in connection with section 3790 G. C., which provides as follows:

"To enable the mayor to make up his annual budget, each director or board and each officer, provided for in this title, on or before the last Monday in March of each year, shall make and file with the mayor, and also with the auditor, a carefully prepared and itemized estimate of the amount of money needed in such department or office for all purposes for the ensuing fiscal year, such estimate to be given for each month."

Section 4001:

"In any municipal corporation having a university supported in whole or in part by municipal taxation all the authority, powers and control vested in or belonging to such corporation with respect to the management of the estate, property and funds, given, * * * for such university, as well as the government, conduct and control of such university shall be vested in and exercised by a board of directors consisting of nine electors of the municipal corporation."

This section is a part of "this title" as referred to in section 3790 G. C.
Section 7902:

"As to all matters not herein or otherwise provided by law, the board of directors of a municipal university, * * * shall have all the authority, power and control vested in or belonging to such municipal corporation as to the sale, lease, management and control of the estate, property, and funds, given, * * * to such corporation for the trusts and purposes relating thereto and the government, conduct and control of such university, * * *."

Section 7909: (Immediately following section 7908, referring back to it and left unrepealed by the amendment of section 7908, 103 O. L. 472.)

*"Such levies shall be made by the council at the time, and in like manner as other levies for other municipal purposes, and must be certified by it and placed upon the tax duplicate as other municipal levies. * * "

Section 5649-3a: (See Smith one per cent law, so-called.)

"On or before the first Monday in June, each year, the county commissioners of each county, the council of each municipal corporation, the trustees of each township, each board of education and all other boards or officers authorized by law to levy taxes within the county, * * * shall submit or cause to be submitted to the county auditor an annual budget, setting forth in itemized form an estimate stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year, and for each month thereof. Such annual budgets shall specifically set forth:"

(Here follow specific directions as to the form of the annual budget; and certain "interior limitations" upon the aggregate of taxes that may be levied by the county, municipal corporation, the township and the school district, respectively, for their several purposes.)

"Such budget shall be made up annually at the time or times now fixed by law when such boards or officers are required to determine the amount in money to be raised or the rate or taxes to be levied in their respective taxing districts. * * *"

Section 5649-3b:

"There is hereby created in each county a board for the annual adjustment of the rates of taxation and fixing the amount of taxes to be levied therein, to be known as the budget commissioners. * * *"

Section 5649-3c:

"The auditor shall lay before the budget commissioners the annual budgets submitted to him * * *. The budget commissioners shall examine such budgets and estimates prepared by the county auditor, and ascertain the total amount proposed to be raised in each taxing district * * *. If the budget commissioners find that the total amount of taxes to be raised therein does not exceed the amount authorized to be raised in any * * * taxing district in the county, the fact shall be certified to the county auditor. If such total is found to exceed such authorized amount in any * * * taxing district in the county, the budget commissioners shall adjust the various amounts to be raised so that the total amount thereof shall not exceed in any taxing district the sum authorized to be levied therein. In making such adjustment the budget commissioners may revise and change the annual estimates contained in such budgets, and may reduce any or all the items in any such budget, but shall not increase the total of any such budget, or any item therein. The budget commissioners shall reduce the estimates contained in any or all such budgets by such amount or amounts as will bring the total for each * * * taxing district within the limits provided by law. * * *"

Section 5649-5b:

"* * * in no case shall the combined maximum rate for all taxes levied in any year in any county, city, village, school district, or other taxing district, under the provisions of this and the two preceding sections and sections 5649-1, 5649-2 and 5649-3 of the General Code * * * exceed fifteen mills."

Section 5649-1:

"In any taxing district, the taxing authority shall, within the limitations now prescribed by law, levy a tax sufficient to provide for sinking fund and interest purposes for all bonds issued by any political subdivision, which tax shall be placed before and in preference to all other items, and for the full amount thereof."

Section 5649-4:

"For the emergencies mentioned in sections forty-four hundred and fifty * * * (and other sections which are not involved in your inquiry) the taxing authorities of any district may levy a tax * * * irrespective of any of the limitations of this act."

It seems to me that the mere quotation of the above sections answers your question. The directors of the University of Cincinnati are not immune from the requirements of section 3790, but must file their estimates with the mayor of the city; he may reduce any item of such estimate; the council may reduce any such item; the budget commissioners may reduce any such item if necessary to enforce the limitation of the Smith one per cent law that applies to the levy which the council may make for this purpose, viz.: the fifteen mill limitation provided for by section 5649-5b. Section 7908 G. C. in nowise operates to exempt the levy which it authorizes from budgetary revision. In fact, section 7908 gives the directors of the municipal university no power whatever. It merely vests power in the council to make a tax levy for a given purpose. The very next section has the effect of making the machinery of levying taxes generally applicable to the levying of this tax. I can think of no reason why it should be asserted that the council or the budget commissioners are without power to reduce the request of the directors of the university, and in fact, as I have indicated, I believe the mayor also has the power to do this.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LEGALITY OF ADJOURNED MEETING OF BOARD OF EDUCATION WHEN REGULAR MEETING ADJOURNED BY LESS THAN QUORUM —APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF NORWICH TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT.

A rule of a board of education, adopted pursuant to the authority of section 4747 G. C., provided that the regular meetings of the board should be on the first Monday of each month at 7:30 p. m. The first Monday in the month of April, 1917, fell on the second day of the month. At this meeting but two members of the board of education were in attendance and the meeting was adjourned by them to April 3, 1917, a quorum of the board being present at this meeting. The board, after the transaction of current business, adjourned the meeting to April 9, 1917. At this meeting all of the members of the board were present. Thereafter, as shown by the minutes, by adjournments from time to time meetings were held by the board "in adjourned session" on the 16th and 28th of April and the 1st and 3rd of May, 1917. At each of these meetings a quorum of the board were present, but at none of them were all of the members present. HELD, that the meeting of the board under date of May 3, 1917, was a legal meeting at which the board could lawfully adopt a resolution providing for the submission to the electors of the school district the proposition of a bond issue under section 7625 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 18, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In re bonds of Norwich township rural school district, Franklin county, Ohio, issued by the board of education of said school district on a vote of the electors thereof for the purpose of completing and furnishing an elementary school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Norwich township rural school district relating to the above bond issue and in the consideration of said transcript I have encountered but one question which in any vital way touches on the validity of the bond issue in question. This question is one with respect to the legality of the meeting of the board of education under date of May 3, 1917, at which the board adopted the resolution submitting to the electors of the school district the proposition of said bond issue. Only four of the five members of the board of education attended this meeting, and unless the legality of the meeting can be sustained according to rules of law applicable to the consideration of this particular question the bonds must be deemed invalid. Kattman v. Board of Education, 15 C. C., n. s., 232.

Section 4750 of the General Code provides that no meeting of a board of education shall be legal unless it is a meeting provided for by law or is a regular meeting provided for by rules of the board or is a special meeting called in the manner provided for in section 4751 G. C.

It is not contended that said meeting was one fixed by law or that the same was a special meeting called in the manner provided by section 4751 G. C., and the first underlying question to be considered is whether or not the meeting here in question was a regular meeting of the board consistent with the rules of law applicable to the consideration of questions of this kind. The transcript shows that the regular meetings of the board of education of this school district during the year 1917 as fixed by its rules were to be held on the first Monday of each month at 7:30 o'clock p. m. The first Monday in the month of April, 1917, fell on the second day of the month. At this meeting but two members of the board of education were in attendance and the minutes of said meeting, duly signed by the president and clerk, as set out in the transcript, read as follows:

"Hillards, Ohio, April 2, 1917.

"Regular meeting time of board but no meeting for lack of a quorum. Members adjourned to meet in regular session Tuesday evening, April 3."

The minutes of the meeting of April 3, 1917, show that the board of education met "in regular session" in Dr. Reason's office with four members present. After the transaction of current business of the board at this meeting the same was adjourned to Monday evening, April 9, 1917.

The minutes of the meeting of April 9, 1917, recite that the board of education met in special session with all five of the members of the board present. Thereafter by adjournments from time to time meetings were held by the board "in adjourned session" on the 16th and the 28th of April, and the 1st and 3rd days of May, 1917. At each of these meetings a quorum of the board was present, but at none of them were all of the members present.

On the 7th day of May, 1917, the board met in regular session pursuant to its rules with four of the five members of the board present and at this meeting the minutes of all of the meetings above noted were read and approved. It is obvious that the legal character of the meeting of the board of education under date of May 3, 1917, as a regular meeting depends upon the question whether or not the meeting of the board under date of April 3, 1917, was a regular meeting, for if the meeting of April 3, 1917, was a regular meeting of the board all subsequent meetings of the board up to and including the meeting under date of May 3, 1917, being adjourned sessions from said meeting of April 3, 1917, would partake of the character of regular meetings of the board, at which the board could competently transact any business that it might have transacted at the meeting from which the adjournment was taken.

> "If not prohibited by law adjournment can be taken from time to time and the power of the legislative body at the adjourned meetings will be full and ample to accomplish the work or transact the business which could legally have been done at the meeting from which the adjournment was taken." Abbott Pub. Securities, Sec. 436.
> "An adjourned meeting of a regular meeting is nothing more than a continuance of the regular meeting, and is not a new and independent meeting." Dockett v. Old Forage Borough, 240 Pa. 98.

The court in its opinion in this case says:

> "A regular meeting, unless special provision is made to the contrary, may be adjourned to a future fixed day, and at such meeting it will be lawful to transact any business which might have been transacted at the stated time, of which it is, indeed, but the continuation."

See also to this point:

> State v. Smith, 22 Minn. 218;
> State v. Rogers, 107 Ala. 444;
> Magneu v. Fremont, 30 Nebr. 843;
> Carter v. McFarland, 75 Iowa 196.

And this I might add would be true of the meeting of the board under date of April 9, 1917, notwithstanding the fact that the same is denominated a special meeting in the minutes of the board for this meeting, it not appearing that this meeting was called in the manner provided by law for special meetings of the board.

The further and more fundamental question is therefore presented with respect to the power of the two members of the board present at the regular meeting under date of April 2, 1917, to adjourn said meeting to a date certain as was done in this case. This question with respect to the authority of members less than a quorum of a deliberative body controlling the affairs of a public corporation to adjourn meetings to a day certain is one upon which the authorities are in conflict. There is nothing in the provisions of our statutes governing boards of education which touches this question, section 4752 G. C., merely providing in this connection that a majority of the members of a board of education shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business. I think it may be safely said as a general proposition that although a quorum of a deliberative body, consisting in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary of a majority of all the members of such body, is necessary for the transaction of the business of such body, members of such body less than a quorum may adjourn the meeting from time to time.

Abbott, Municipal Corporations, Sec. 507;
McQuillan, Municipal Corporations, Sec. 594.

Under statutory provision authorizing a less number than a quorum of a deliberative body to adjourn from time to time, it has been held that such number less than a quorum may adjourn meetings to a day certain.

Rackliffe & Gibson v. Duncan, 130 Mo. App., 695.
Duniway v. Portland, 47 Oregon 103.

And in the absence of statutory provision touching the question it has likewise been held that a number less than a quorum may adjourn to a day certain.

O'Neill v. Tyler, 3 N. D. 47;
Kimball v. Marshall, 44 N. H. 465;
People v. Nelson, 252 Ill. 514.

In the case of O'Neil v. Tyler, supra, the question at issue was with respect to the legality of certain meetings of the county board of equalization of Cass county, in said state, held on the 12th and 13th of July in the year 1886. The statute governing the meetings of said board provided that the same should meet on the first Monday of July, but that year it happened that the first Monday in July fell on the fourth day of the month and this being a legal holiday by a general statutory provision applying to the situation, the board of equalization met for the first time on the Tuesday next following the first Monday of July. There was a quorum present at the first meeting of the board on July 5th at which the board adjourned to meet the next day, July 6th. The minutes of this meeting showed that two members less than a quorum being present the board adjourned to meet July 7th. This meeting of July 7th and meetings of the board under date of July 8th, 9th and 11th were each and all adjourned by members of the board less than a quorum thereof. At the meetings under date of July 12th and 13th a quorum was present and transacted the business which gave rise to the litigation in the case cited. The court in the opinion in this case says:

"Taking up the questions in their order, it is manifestly true that the board of equalization did meet on the day designated by law for their meeting. The statute names the first Monday of July, but that year it happened that Monday was July 4th. This day being a legal holiday, the statute expressly authorizes the postponement of secular business to be done on such day until the next business day. Comp. Laws, Sec. 4752. The board met for the first time on the Tuesday next following the first Monday of July, and this, as we have seen, was strictly regular, under the statute. There was a quorum present at the first meeting, and hence the adjournment until 10 a. m. the next day was also strictly regular. But the successive adjournments from day to day, which were made by only two members,—less than a quorum—are challenged as illegal and void. If such adjournments had no validity, it follows, logically and legally, that the board was not lawfully assembled when it did actually meet and discharge its functions on Tuesday and Wednesday, July 13th and 14th, and hence, on this supposition, there was no session of 'not less than two days' that year, as the statute required. Comp. Laws, Sec. 1584.

We have been unable to find a decided case in point upon the question presented, i. e., as to the validity of no quorum adjournments when such adjournments are made from day to day as a means of preserving the life of meetings required by law to be held by the governing officials of public corporations. But this court will take notice judicially that the practice of making such adjournments extensively pervades in the United States, and that it is not limited to such bodies as congress and state legislatures, where it has the express sanction of organic law but obtains in city councils and in town, county, and school district boards, where there is no express provision of law authorizing it. Cush. Leg. Law & Pr. Assem. (2d Ed.) Sec. 254, 255. We think so valuable a rule, as applied to public corporations, at least should be preserved, particularly as its denial would operate disastrously to the public interests in many cases, as would be true with respect to meetings of the only board before which the taxpayer can be heard upon the matter of the valuation of his property for taxation. Our conclusion is that the board met at the proper time, and held a session of not less than two days in the year 1886."

The case of Kimball v. Marshall, supra, was a contest for the office of city clerk of the city of Nashua, N. H., and the point was made that the meeting of the city councilmen and aldermen at which Kimball was elected to the office as the successor of Marshall was illegal for the reason that said meeting was held as an adjournment from a meeting at which less than a quorum were present. The court in its opinion in this case upholding the legality of the meeting at which Kimball was elected says:

"The rule, as we understand, applicable to all deliberative bodies, is that any number have power to adjourn, though they may not be a quorum for the transaction of business.

In general the chair is not to be taken till a quorum for business is present; unless, after due waiting, such a quorum is despaired of, when the chair may be taken and the house adjourned. And whenever, during business, it is observed that a quorum is not present, any member may call for the house to be counted; and, being found deficient, business is suspended. Jefferson's Manual, Sec. 6, citing 2 Hats., 125, 126. And Cushing (Manual 19) says: 'If at any time in the course of the proceedings notice is taken that a quorum is not present, and such appears to be the fact, the assembly must be immediately adjourned.'

If this were not so it must often happen that a small minority might have it in their power to defeat not only the business in hand, but to dissolve and terminate the meeting.

If this were not so generally, yet we think this must be held to be the rule in a case like this, where the law prescribes that a certain duty shall be performed on a particular day. It must either be held that the body once assembled cannot adjourn till the business is done, or that so many as are ready to perform their legal duty shall be held competent to continue the meeting until the object is accomplished. Of these consequences both may be held to follow under circumstances;—the majority could make no legal adjournment to such a time as would defeat the performance of the prescribed duty, and a minority might keep the meeting in existence until the duty was done, by adjournments."

In the case of The People ex rel. v. Nelson, supra, the contention was made that certain action of the school trustees of a certain surveyed township in DeWitt county, Ill., transferring territory from certain school districts under their control in the formation of a new school district was invalid for the reason that the meeting at which such action was taken was not legal. The statutes governing said school trustees fixed the first Mondays of April and October in each year as the times of the regular meetings of the board and authorized the transaction of the particular business in question only at the April meeting of the board. The first Monday of April, 1910, fell on April 4th, but at this meeting of the board but one trustee and the clerk were present. The meeting was adjourned until April 11th when two trustees and the clerk were present, it appearing that one trustee had some time previously removed from the township and his successor had not been chosen. At this meeting of April 11th the trustees transacted the business which gave rise to the action. The court in its opinion says:

"There is no dispute that the law had been complied with in filing the petitions and giving notice that the adjournment to April 11th was on account of there not being a quorum present. The appellant insists that this was fatal to the validity of the district.

* * * * * * *

If appellant's position is correct, then, notwithstanding the petitioners had complied with the law so as to authorize the trustees of township 21, north, range 1, east, to act on the petition, by the failure of a quorum of the board to attend at the date of the regular meeting jurisdiction to act upon the petition thereafter was lost. We do not believe this is a reasonable construction of the provisions of the statute above set out in substance. It was essential that the petition be presented at the regular meeting of the board in April, and this was done. There being no quorum present at that meeting the petition could not be acted upon but the meeting could be kept alive by adjournment to a later date. If there had been a quorum present April 4 and the board had not completed the hearing 'of legal voters of the district or districts affected by the proposed change who might appear to oppose the petition,' we see no valid reason why the board could not adjourn to a later date to complete the hearing before final action. It certainly is not the purpose of the statute that a petition should be acted upon on the day of the regular meeting if a reasonable opportunity to the opponents of the petition of being heard required an adjournment. Like all other similar bodies, the board of trustees had power to adjourn a regular meeting when not restricted by the statute, and unless such adjournment is an abuse of the power it is not the subject of review. (I Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 248; Magenau & Brunner v. City of Fremont, (Neb.) 9 L. R. A. 786). The adjournment under consideration, we think, was not in violation of the statute and it was clearly no abuse of power. There being no quorum present, according to parliamentary law the only business that could be transacted was to adjourn. If the adjournment had been without day it might have ended the power of the board to act upon the petition upon its own initiative, but by adjourning to a day fixed one week later the regular meeting was kept alive for the purpose of transacting the business, including action upon the petition."

A decision directly to the contrary on this point is presented in the case of Pennsylvania Co. v. Cole et al., 132 Fed. Rep. 668. This was an action to enjoin the collection of certain assessments for sewer improvements in the city of Ft. Wayne on the ground, among others, that the meeting of the city council, at which the contract with Cole for the construction of the sewers was made, was illegal for the reason that the same was an adjournment from a previous regular meeting of the council by less than a quorum. In this case it appears that the regular meeting of council was held November 8, 1892. The council consisted of twenty members and only eight were present. The minutes of the meeting recited that there being no quorum present a recess was taken until the following evening when the contract with Cole was made, fourteen of the twenty councilmen being then present. The court in finding said contract invalid on the grounds stated held that where it is provided by statute that a majority of the members composing a common council of a city shall constitute a quorum, less than a quorum have no power to adjourn a regular meeting of the council to a later date and a contract entered into at such an adjourned meeting was void and cannot be validated by way of ratification by an approval of the minutes of such meeting at the next regular meeting of the council. None of the authorities cited by the court support the conclusion reached by the court on this question. With a single exception all of the authorities cited in the opinion are to the point only that the business of a deliberative body cannot be transacted by less than a quorum of the members. The single exception among the authorities cited in the opinion in this case is the case of State ex rel. v. Smith, 22 Minn. 218, where the point was made but not decided. This action was a contest between the relator and the defendant for the office of assessor of the city of Duluth. The relator was elected April 15, 1873, and the defendant April 29, 1874, but on behalf of the relator it was claimed that the latter election was invalid by reason of the illegality of the meeting of the common council of said city at which the election was held. The charter then governing the city of Duluth provided that "the common council shall meet at such time and place as they by resolution may direct. A majority of the aldermen shall constitute a quorum." By resolution of the council their regular and stated meetings were directed and fixed to be held on the first and third Tuesdays of each and every month. The annual charter election for 1874 was held on the first Tuesday of April, which was the same day fixed for the holding of one of the regular meetings of council as prescribed by resolution, but no meeting was held on this date. On the 14th, the second Tuesday of the month, a meeting was held at which the new aldermen took their seats and a reorganization was had and business pertaining to the city was transacted. Whereupon, without taking any action on the question of electing a successor to succeed the relator, whose term of office expired on the next day, the council adjourned without naming any day. The next meeting was on the 21st, the third Tuesday of April, the regular time of meeting as fixed by said resolution. At this meeting the council balloted for an assessor, but being unable to elect one adjourned until April 25th, when it again convened but no quorum being present adjourned again until April 29th at which latter meeting the council elected the defendant as city assessor. There was no showing as to the number of members attending this latter meeting and the court disposed of the contention of the relator with respect to the illegality of the meeting at which the defendant was elected as follows:

> "Assuming, as is claimed by appellants, that the adjournment from the 25th to the 29th of April was irregular because of the want of a quorum, it does not appear, either from the findings of the court below or otherwise, but that the adjourned meeting was fully attended by all the members of the council, and that they all participated in its proceedings and in the election which was then had. In the absence of such finding the presumption is that they all did so attend, and acquiesced in the irregular adjournment. 'Illegality will not be presumed, but the contrary. The maxim of law in such cases is, omnia rite acta presumuntur.' Citizens' M. F. Ins. Co. v. Sortwell, 8 Allen, 219, 223; Sargent v. Webster, 13 Met. 497, 504."

The question here under consideration was presented but not decided in the case of Moore v. City Council of Perry, 119 Iowa 423. In this case the validity of a resolution adopted by the city council submitting to the electors the question of an extension of the city limits was challenged on the ground, among others, that the meeting of the council at which the resolution was adopted was illegal. In this case it appeared that at a regular meeting of the council held on September 3, 1900, the council adjourned until September 5th. On that day the following record was made:

"Council met pursuant to adjournment of September 3, 1900. Present: Mayor Breed, Councilmen Ginn and Heaton. No quorum being present, on motion of Heaton, and seconded by Ginn, council adjourned to meet September 8, 1900, at 8 o'clock p. m. Carried . H. A. Nash, clerk."

On the 8th the council met and adjourned until September 10th, and on the 10th it again met and at this meeting the resolution in question was adopted. The court in its opinion says:

"The regularity of the meeting held on September 10th is challenged for the reason that less than a quorum of the members at the meeting of September 5th had no power or authority to direct an adjournment until September 8th. The contention is that, while less than a quorum of the members of a deliberative body may adjourn from day to day, they have no power to adjourn to a future day certain. A sufficient answer to this contention, conceding it to be sound, is that it affirmatively appears that the council held a meeting on the 8th, at which we must presume all the members were present, participating in the proceedings. This meeting could no doubt be adjourned, and the adjourned session should be treated as a continuation of the original meeting.

There is no provision in our law in any manner limiting the business which may be considered at a special meeting. Such a meeting may, under our code, section 688, be called by the mayor or any three members of the council, and at such called meeting any legitimate business may be considered. If all the members attend such meeting, failure to give notice thereof is entirely immaterial. Hanna v. Wright, 116 Iowa 275. Treating the adjournment on September 5th as irregular, the pleadings nevertheless show a meeting of the council on September 8th, which we must presume, in the absence of allegations to the contrary, was attended by all the members of the council. This meeting although special, could be adjourned to a fixed date by a quorum, and, when so adjourned, the adjourned meeting will be treated as a continuation of the one which was adjourned. Any business which might properly have been brought before the meeting on September 8th could properly be considered at the adjourned session on the 10th. This conclusion is supported by authority, and, in view of our statute, is clearly correct on principle. See

State v. Smith, 22 Minn. 218; Carter v. McFarland, 75 Iowa 196; Supervisors v. Horton, 75 Iowa 271; Magneau v. City of Fremont, 30 Neb. 843; Lawrence v. Trainer, 136 Ill. 474, (27 N. E. Rep. 197); Beaver Creek v. Hastings, 52 Mich. 528 (18 N. W. Rep. 250).

Of course, if these parties had a right to be heard—as, for instance, on a question of taxation—a different rule might obtain under the doctrine announced in Gentle v. Board, 73 Mich. 40 (40 N. W. Rep. 928). The resolution in this case was simply one of the preparatory steps to an election, at which all who were interested were entitled to express themselves, and the citizens generally had no more right to be heard on the question of the adoption of this resolution than any other. The law does not contemplate either petitions or remonstrances before the city council, and no burdens are imposed on the taxpayer without an opportunity to be heard by casting his vote at the election called for the purpose of ultimately determining the question of extension of boundaries. There was no such irregularity in the proceedings of the meeting on September 10 as to invalidate the proceedings."

Likewise in the case of C. B. Nash Co. v. City of Council Bluffs et al., 174 Fed. Rep. 182, the question here under consideration was presented, but by reason of the fact that the adjourned meeting was attended by all of the members of council the court did not consider itself required to pass upon the question of the power of members of the city council less than a quorum to adjourn the previous meeting. The court in its opinion noting the conflict in the authorities with respect to this question, held that the legality of an adjournment of the meeting of a city council by less than a quorum to a certain time could not be questioned by the courts where at the adjourned meeting all members were present and participated in the transaction of business.

As recognized by the court in the case of People ex rel. v. Nelson, supra, I think that clearly the policy of the law is to permit members of a board of education less than a quorum thereof to adjourn the meeting to a day certain rather than to require such members to adjourn the meeting without day. As is well known, there are some proceedings of a board of education in this state which can only be taken at a regular meeting of the board and it is apparent that if members of a board of education in attendance at a regular meeting of the board, at which there is no quorum, were required to adjourn the meeting without day, such action might be attended with disastrous consequences with respect to some required action of the board which could only be taken at a regular meeting and which in such case would have to be deferred until the next regular meeting of the board. On the whole I am inclined to the view that the better considered authorities support the view that members of a deliberative body such as the board of education in attendance at a regular meeting of the board may adjourn the same to a day certain. This conclusion, on considerations before noted herein, disposes of the question here made with respect to the legality of the action of the board of education of Norwich township rural school district at its meeting under date of May 13, 1917, in favor of the validity of such action and of this bond issue, it appearing that no other questions with respect to the legality or regularity of the proceedings of said board of education is presented by the transcript.

Wholly aside from the question just considered and as to which my opinion has been indicated, it is obvious that the legal principle upon which the cases of State ex rel. v. Smith, Moore v. City Council of Perry and Nash Co. v. City of Council Bluffs, supra, were decided is likewise conclusive with respect to the legality of the meeting of the board of education of Norwich township rural school district under date of May 3, 1917, at which time the resolution providing for the submission of this bond issue to the electors of said school district was adopted.

As before noted herein, the meeting of said board of education under date of April 9, 1917, held apparently by way of adjournment from the meeting of the board under date of April 3, 1917, was attended by all of the members. If this meeting of the board had been called on written notice by the president or clerk of the board, or by two members thereof, in the manner provided by section 4751 G. C., there could have been no question as to the legality of this meeting irrespective of the legality of the first adjournment of the board under date of April 2, 1917. All the members of the board having been present at this meeting under date of April 9, 1917, failure to give notice thereof became entirely immaterial with respect to the character of said meeting as a legal meeting for the transaction of the business of the school district. As said by the court in the case of Moore v. City Council of Perry, this meeting could no doubt be adjourned and the adjourned session should in legal contemplation be treated as a continuation of the original meeting.

In addition to the authorities above cited I note the cases of Butler v. Joint School District, 155 Wis. 626, Clay County School District No. 68 v. Allen, 83 Ark. 491.

The meeting of the board under date of May 3, 1917, being a continuation of the meeting of April 9, 1917, by adjournment from time to time, was a continuation of said meeting and therefore legal without respect to the question whether, on considerations before noted herein, said meeting was a regular meeting or not.

In this connection it may be noted that the adoption of the resolution providing for the submission of the question of this bond issue to the electors of the school district was not such business as was required to be done at a regular meeting.

I am therefore of opinion that the proceedings of the board of education of Norwich township rural school district relating to this bond issue have been in conformity to law and that bonds, properly prepared, covering said issue will, when the same are signed by the proper officers and delivered, constitute valid, binding and subsisting obligations of said school district, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

The bond form submitted by the board of education does not meet the requirements of this department and I am, for this reason, holding the transcript until a proper bond form is submitted for my approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROAD IMPROVEMENT—PRELIMINARY ENGINEERING WORK—SUPERVISION—PREPARATION OF PRELIMINARY PLANS—HOW COST AND EXPENSE PAID—COMPENSATION OF PERSONS EMPLOYED BY STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER IN COUNTY SURVEYOR'S OFFICE AS ASSISTANTS.

1. The cost and expense of engineering work done preliminary to the con- struction, improvement, maintenance or repair of highways by the state highway commissioner are paid half by the county or township making application for state aid and half by the state. If the improvement is made under the preliminary plans, the expenses of the same may be added to the total cost and expense of the improvement.

2. The cost and expense of supervision and inspection done during the progress of the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of said highways, form a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement and are to be apportioned and paid as are other costs incident to the improvement.

3. The work performed by the county surveyor in the matter of preparing preliminary plans is covered by his regular salary under the provision of section 7181 G. C. If any engineering work is required during the course of the improvement, the county surveyor would perform the same under section 7192 G. C. However, the state highway commissioner employs all superintendents and inspectors for the improvement and they are paid as set out in syllabus No. 2.

4. If the state highway commissioner employs persons in the county surveyor's office as assistants, the matter of their compensation will be taken care of as set forth in opinion No. 1648, Vol. 1, page 965 of the 1916 reports.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 20, 1918.

HON. PERRY SMITH, Prosecuting Attorney, Zanesville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of March 27, 1918, which is as follows:

> "I desire an answer to the following question which has been submitted to me by our engineer;
> Is the county's share of the engineering expense on state aid road chargeable against the surveyor's annual allowance, or is it a direct charge against the bond issue by the county covering their share of the total cost and expense of the construction of the road, (a) preliminary engineering work, (b) engineering work while the job is under contract?
> This question is asked in reference to the force account on the east pike, I presume."

Your communication embodies two propositions: (1) as to how the preliminary engineering work is paid as it applies to those roads in which the counties make application for state aid and receive the same; and (2) as to how payment should be made for engineering work done while the improvement is being made.

Section 1193 G. C. (107 O. L. 123) reads in part as follows:

> "* * * Each application for state aid shall also contain an agreement on the part of the county commissioners or township trustees to pay one-half of the cost and expense of surveys and other expenses preliminary to the construction, improvement, maintenance or repair of said highway."

Section 1196 G. C. reads as follows:

> "If the state highway commissioner approves the application or part thereof, he shall, if necessary, cause a map of the highway in outline and profile to be made and indicate thereon any change of existing lines if he deems it of advantage to make such change. He shall cause to be made plans, specifications, profiles and estimates for said improvement."

Section 1219 G. C. (107 O. L. 131) reads as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner may direct the county surveyor to make the necessary surveys and plans for the proposed highway improvement. The expense of such surveys and plans shall be equally divided between the state and county except in cases where the improvement is being made on application of the township trustees, in which case the expense of such plans and surveys shall be equally divided between the state and township. The state highway commisioner may employ such assistants as are necessary to prepare such plans and surveys and also such superintendents and inspectors as may be necessary in the construction of said improvement. Each of said assistants, superintendents and inspectors shall receive such pay as the state highway commissioner may determine, and their compensation shall be regarded as a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and paid accordingly. All work in connection with such improvement shall be done under the direction of the state highway commissioner."

From the provisions of these three sections it is clear as to how the costs for making the preliminary surveys are paid. Whenever a county or township makes application for state aid, it must agree to pay half the cost and expense of all preliminary surveys.

Section 1196, supra, provides that the state highway commissioner shall cause to be made plans specifications, profiles and estimates for said improvement, and section 1219, supra, provides that the state highway commissioner may designate the county surveyor to make the necessary surveys and plans for the proposed highway improvement, and that the state highway commissioner may employ such assistants as are necessary to prepare such plans and surveys. In this same section we find a provision carrying out the agreement entered into by the county commissioners under the provisions of section 1193, supra, to this effect (section 1219 G. C.):

> "The expense of such surveys and plans shall be equally divided between the state and county except in cases where the improvement is being made on application of the township trustees, in which case the expense of such plans and surveys shall be equally divided between the state and township."

Hence in all preliminary engineering work the cost and expense of the same are to be borne half by the county or township and half by the state. So that none of the costs thereof would be borne by the county surveyor, out of his annual allowance.

Half of the cost and expense is an obligation of the county, assumed under the provisions of section 1193, supra, and it is my opinion that this half would be paid from the general county fund, as it is a general obligation entered into by the county. Of course, if the proposed improvement is undertaken and proceeds to a completion, then under section 1219 G. C. the cost and expense of the preliminary survey would be regarded as a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and paid accordingly. But if the improvement should not be made, the question of the preliminary cost would be a general obligation against the county and paid out of the general county fund.

We now come to a consideration of your second question. In your communication you speak of engineering work done during the course of the improvement as distinguished from that done preliminary to the letting of the contract and entering upon the work. I assume by engineering work that you have reference more particularly to the matter of supervision and inspection. In reference to this matter, let us turn to the provisions of section 1219 G. C. which reads in part as follows:

> "* * * The state highway commissioner may employ such assistants as are necessary to prepare such plans and surveys (the preliminary plans and surveys) and also such superintendents and inspectors as may be necessary in the construction of said improvement. * * *"

From the provisions of this section the legislature seems to have inferred that all engineering work ends with the letting of the contract, and that after the work begins the particular thing required is not engineering work ,but supervision and inspection. Strictly speaking, this is practically correct; after the plans, specifications, profiles and estimates are made and the bids are submitted, based upon these plans, and the contract let under the plans and the bids, the engineering work, in the main at least, is at an end, and the matter more particularly to be looked after is that of supervision and inspection.

Section 1219 G. C. is quite clear as to the cost and expense of supervision and inspection. This is to be regarded as a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and paid accordingly. As said in answer to your first question, if the state highway commissioner employs assistants in the matter of preparing the plans, specifications, etc., the cost and expense of the same becomes a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and paid accordingly. But as said before, this section makes no provision authorizing the state highway commissioner to select assistants after the contract is let, but merely provides for the selection of supervisors and inspectors.

It might be well to suggest in this connection that the work done by the county surveyor himself in preparing the preliminary plans is a part of his duties under the law, and this same statement can be made in reference to the work which he performs during the time that the work is carried on under the contract. This proposition is borne out by the provisions of section 7192 G. C. (107 O. L. 115), which reads in part as follows:

> "* * * When the county surveyor has charge of the highways, bridges and culverts within his county, and under the control of the state, he shall also supervise the construction, reconstruction, improvement and repair of the same."

Under section 7182 G. C. (107 O. L. 110), when the county surveyor has such charge of the highways, bridges and culverts within his county and under the control of the state, the state assumes one-fifth of his salary and under the provisions of section 7181 G. C. (107 O. L. 110) the county surveyor is entitled to no fees of any kind other than his regular salary. Hence he is entitled to no pay whatever for his personal services rendered in the improvement of intercounty highways and main market roads under the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner.

And, in this connection, I will say that in my opinion, if there is any engineering work other than supervision and inspection to be done during the course of the work under the contract, this engineering work would have to be done by the county surveyor under section 7192, supra, or by the regular supervising engineers of the state highway department. In other words, there seems to be no authority given the state highway commissioner to employ persons to perform strictly engineering work during the performance of the work under the contract, but his authority is limited to employing supervisors and inspectors; hence, strictly engineering work to be performed during the progress of the work under the contract would have to be performed as above set out.

Let me further suggest that in the matter of selecting assistants, inspectors or superintendents by the state highway commissioner under the provisions of section 1219 G. C., if the state highway commissioner should select persons already employed by the county surveyor in his office, then the matter of the compensation of said assistants, superintendents and inspectors so selected by the state highway commissioner would be taken care of as set forth in opinion No. 1648, Annual Reports of Attorney-General, 1916, Vol. 1, page 965.

Let us now recapitulate the findings made herein:

1. The total cost and expense of all engineering work preliminary to entering into the contract for the construction of a highway under the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner is borne half by the county, providing the county makes application for state aid, and half by the state. If no contract is entered into and the work therefore is not done, then the county's share of the cost and expense would be paid out of the general county fund. However, if the contract is entered into and the work is done thereunder, then these costs of the preliminary plans and surveys become a part of the total cost of the improvement, and is paid in the same manner as the other costs and expenses of the improvement.

2. The work done by the county surveyor in preparing said preliminary plans is a part of the duties of his office, and he therefore receives no compensation for the services so rendered. This same rule would obtain in reference to any duties that he might perform during the progress of the work under the contract. If the state highway commissioner employs assistants to help in the preparation of said preliminary plans, the cost and expense becomes a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement, and is paid accordingly.

3. The state highway commissioner employs the necessary superintendents and inspectors to take charge of the work during the course of the improvement, and their compensation shall be regarded as a part of the cost and expense of the improvement and paid accordingly.

4. The county surveyor exercises a general supervision over the construction of the highway for which he receives no additional compensation over and above his salary, for the reason that this is a part of the duties of his office as provided in section 7192.

5. There seems to be no provision authorizing the state highway commissioner to employ engineers, using the term in its strict sense, during the course of the improvement of the work under the contract, hence it is my opinion that any engineering work necessary to be performed during the course of the construction of the road must be done either by the county surveyor under the provisions of section 7192, or must be done by the proper employes of the state highway department, for which, of course, they would receive no compensation. This does not apply, however, to superintendents and inspectors.

In passing, I desire to say that this opinion is rendered entirely in reference to improvements over which the state highway commissioner assumes jurisdiction, and has no reference to improvements over which the county commissioners or the township trustees assume jurisdiction.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICIAL TIME FOR STATE OF OHIO.

The act "to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States," recently enacted by congress, does not affect the official time for this state fixed by section 5979 of the General Code.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 20, 1918.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted for my opinion the following request:

> "I am in receipt of a letter from the county recorder of this county, asking me whether or not his office should be governed as to time by the Ohio Code or by the recent act of congress.
> Inasmuch as there ought to be a uniformity in matters of time throughout the state, I am submitting this question to you for your opinion."

The recent legislation of congress entitled "An act to save daylight and to provide standard time for the United States" (Public—No. 106—65th Congress. S. 1854) provides as follows:

> "Be it enacted by the senate and house of representatives of the United States of America in congress assembled, That, for the purpose of establishing the standard time of the United States, the territory of continental United States shall be divided into five zones in the manner hereinafter provided. The standard time of the first zone shall be based on the mean astronomical time of the seventy-fifth degree of longtitude west from Greenwich; that of the second zone on the ninetieth degree; that of the third zone on the one hundred and fifth degree; that of the fourth zone on the one hundred and twentieth degree; and that of the fifth zone, which shall include only Alaska, on the one hundred and fiftieth degree. That the limits of each zone shall be defined by an order of the interstate commerce commission, having regard for the convenience of commerce and the existing junction points and division points of common carriers engaged in commerce between the several states and with foreign nations, and such order may be modified from time to time.
> Sec. 2. That within the respective zones created under the authority hereof the standard time of the zone shall govern the movement of all common carriers engaged in commerce between the several states or between a state and any of the territories of the United States, or between a state or the territory of Alaska and any of the insular possessions of the United States or any foreign country. In all statutes, orders, rules, and regulations relating to the time of performance of any act by any officer or department of the United States, whether in the legislative, executive, or judicial branches of the government, or relating to the time within which any rights shall accrue or determine, or within which any act shall or shall not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, it shall be understood and intended that the time shall be the United States standard time of the zone within which the act is to be performed.
> Sec. 3. That at two o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in March of each year the standard time of each zone shall be advanced one hour, and at two o'clock antemeridian of the last Sunday in October in each year the standard time of each zone shall, by the retarding of one hour, be returned to the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing said zone, so that between the last Sunday in March at two o'clock antemeridian and the last Sunday in October at two o'clock antemeridian in each year the standard time in each zone shall be one hour in advance of the mean astronomical time of the degree of longitude governing each zone, respectively.

Sec. 4. That the standard time of the first zone shall be known and designated as United States standard eastern time; that of the second zone shall be known and designated as United States standard central time; that of the third zone shall be known and designated as United States standard mountain time; that of the fourth zone shall be known and designated as United States standard Pacific time; and that of the fifth zone shall be known and designated as United States standard Alaska time.

Sec. 5. That all acts and parts of acts in conflict herewith are hereby repealed.

Approved March 19, 1918."

An examination of said act discloses that for the purpose of establishing standard time the United States is divided into five zones, the limits of such zones to be defined by order of the interstate commerce commission; that in section 2 of said act it is provided that such standard time shall govern the movement of all common carriers engaged in interstate commerce, and further provides that in all statutes, orders, rules and regulations relating to the time of performance of any act by any officer or department of the United States, or relating to the time within which any rights shall accrue or determine, or act be or not be performed by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States, the standard time of the particular zone shall govern.

In section 3 of the act it is provided that on the last Sunday in March of each year the standard time shall be advanced one hour and on the last Sunday in October the standard time shall be returned to the mean astronomical time.

Section 5979 of the General Code of Ohio provides:

"The standard of time throughout this state shall be that of the ninetieth meridian of longtitude west from Greenwich and shall be known as 'central standard time.' Courts, banks, public offices and legal or official proceedings shall be regulated thereby; and when, by a law, rule, order or process of any authority, created by or pursuant to law, an act must be performed at or within a prescribed time, it shall be so performed according to such standard of time."

Section 5980 provides:

"When a clock or other timepiece is in or upon a public building maintained at public expense, the board of county commissioners, board of education, or other persons having control and charge of such building, shall have such clock or other timepiece set and run according to the standard of time as provided in the next preceding section."

It is to be noted that the legislature of Ohio has provided that the standard time for this state shall be that of the ninetieth meridian of longitude west from Greenwich, meaning thereby the mean astronomical time of the ninetieth degree of longitude west from Greenwich. It has fixed such time certain and there is no provision of the laws of Ohio which in any way provides for any other or different standard. Such being the fact, I am of the opinion that the time governing in Ohio is that fixed by section 5979 and cannot be in any way changed by the act of congress hereinbefore referred to.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CONSTRUCTION OF SCHOOL BUILDINGS—HOW CONTRACT LET—WHEN CONTRACT MAY EXCEED AMOUNT RAISED BY BOND ISSUE—FORCE ACCOUNT—URGENT NECESSITY DEFINED.

1. A board of education may not enter into a contract for a new school building and ignore the provisions of law relating to the letting of contracts therefor.

2. "Urgent necessity" means "more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity. It is something which requires immediate action. Something which cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for a failure to comply with any statutory requirement it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises," and where a case of "urgent necessity" exists, the provisions of section 7623 G. C. do not apply.

3. A board of education may enter into a contract for a new school building at an amount in excess of the amount of money raised by the sale of bonds, provided there is sufficient money in the building fund of such district to make up the difference between the amount of the bond issue and the amount of the contract price.

4. A board of education is without authority to go into the open market and secure laborers, purchase materials and build a school house by force account and without advertising and letting the contract as is provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 20, 1918.

HON. FRED W. MCCOY, Prosecuting Attorney, Carrollton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

> "The board of education of Orange township, this county, sold bonds to the amount of $8,000.00 for the purpose of building a new school house at Sherodsville, Ohio, and after a number of efforts on the part of said board they have received a bid of $13,000,00 to furnish material and erect said school house. In your opinion would it be proper for the board to contract for the building of the school house at a cost in excess of the amount of money raised by the sale of said bonds, or attempt to build said school house by securing laborers and materials in the open market without advertising in a statutory manner?"

Several questions are contained in your inquiry, which, for convenience, may be phrased as follows:

1. May a board of education ignore the provisions of law in relation to the letting of contracts for the building of public school buildings?

2. What is a case of urgent necessity as the term is used in section 7623 G. C.?

3. May a board of education enter into a contract for a new school building at an amount in excess of the amount of money raised by the sale of bonds?

4. May a board of education secure laborers and materials in the open market and build a school house without advertising and letting the contract in a statutory manner?

The plan of procedure to be followed by a board of education in the letting of a contract for a new school building is set forth in section 7623 G. C., which reads as follows:

"When a board of education determines to build * * * a school house or school houses * * *, the cost of which will exceed * * * in other (than city) districts five hundred dollars, except in cases of urgent necessity, or for the security and protection of school property, it must proceed as follows:

1. For the period of four weeks, the board shall advertise for bids in some newspaper of general circulation in the district, and two such papers, if there are so many. If no newspaper has a general circulation therein, then by posting such advertisement in three public places therein. Such advertisement shall be entered in full by the clerk, on the record of the proceedings of the board.

2. The bids, duly sealed up, must be filed with the clerk by twelve o'clock noon, of the last day stated in the advertisement.

3. The bids shall be opened at the next meeting of the board, be publicly read by the clerk, and entered in full on the records of the board.

4. Each bid must contain the name of every person interested therein, and shall be accompanied by a sufficient guarantee of some disinterested person, that if the bid be accepted, a contract will be entered into, and the performance of it properly secured.

5. When both labor and materials are embraced in the work bid for, each must be separately stated in the bid, with the price thereof.

6. None but the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted. The board in its discretion may reject all the bids, or accept any bid for both labor and material, for such improvement or repair, which is the lowest in the aggregate.

7. Any part of a bid which is lower than the same part of any other bid, shall be accepted, whether residue of the bid is higher or not; and if it is higher, such residue must be rejected.

8. The contract must be between the board of education and the bidders. The board shall pay the contract price for the work, when it is completed, in cash, and may pay monthly estimates as the work progresses.

9. When two or more bids are equal, in the whole, or in any part thereof, and are lower than any others, either may be accepted, but in no case shall the work be divided between such bidders.

10. When there is reason to believe that there is collusion or combination among bidders, or any number of them, the bids of those concerned therein shall be rejected."

That the provisions of said section are mandatory and not merely directory has been held by our courts. To illustrate, in State ex rel. Ross v. Board of Education, 42 O. S. 374, the relator brought suit to compel the respondents to award him a contract for the construction and completion of a high school building. McIlvaine, J., in delivering the opinion of the court, says on page 378:

> "In the first place, it is objected to the granting of relief to relator that the court would thereby control the discretion vested in the board by subdivision 6 of section 3988 of Revised Statutes (7623 G. C.) which reads as follows:
> 'None but the lowest responsible bid shall be accepted; but the board may, in its discretion, reject all the bids, or accept any bid for both labor and material, which is the lowest in the aggregate for such improvement or repairs.'
> "This objection is not well taken. The discretion given by this clause is to reject all the bids. This is the only discretion given. If it is determined to accept a bid, there is no discretion as to which bid must be accepted. If the lowest responsible bid be rejected, and any other be accepted, the action of the board MAY BE CONTROLLED BY MANDAMUS, without violating the rule that a matter of discretion is not subject to control by proceedings in mandamus."

In Mueller v. Board of Education, 11 N. P. (n. s.) 113 the court uses the following language on page 117:

> "The section of the code referred to (7623) is mandatory and unless the case comes within the exception or saving clause therein named, viz., that of 'urgent necessity,' the contract is void."

So that, answering your first question, you are advised that a board of education may not enter into a contract for a new school building and ignore the provisions of law in relation to the letting of contracts therefor.

Your next question is, what is meant by the term "urgent necessity" as that term is used in section 7623 of the General Code?

The term "urgent necessity" is given consideration and definition in the last above mentioned case (Mueller v. Board of Education). On page 120 of said report is found the following language:

> "Urgent necessity is a very strong expression. It means more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity. It is something that requires immediate action. Something that cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for failure to comply with any statutory requirement it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises. An illustration of a case which might arise under the statute referred to would be where there is but a single school building of which a number of pupils would be prevented from occupancy for a considerable time, and left without any chance for instruction pending the construction or repair of such building."

In opinion No. 594, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 2 page 1672, I held that:

> "Urgent necessity means more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity. It is something which requires immediate action. Something which cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for a failure to comply with any statutory requirement, it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises."

In that opinion I had under consideration a question as to whether or not there was a case of urgent necessity where a high school had been in operation for several years in a building wholly unfit for such purpose, and said request was presented to me for my opinion on August 28, 1917. Taking the view that provision would have to be made for the schools which would begin in September, 1917, anyway, that is, that no building could be completed for use during that school year, it was my opinion that there was sufficient time to advertise and complete the building before the next school year began and therefore no case of urgent necessity. So that, in your case if it is determined that a case of urgent necessity exists, then the provisions of said section 7623, in relation to the advertisement and the letting of the contract, need not be followed, but if a case of urgent necessity does not exist, then said provisions must be followed.

In opinion No. 1087, Annual Reports of the Attorney-General, 1914, Vol. 1, page 1077, it was held:

> "The interests of the schools themselves, that is, the use of the building by the pupils with safety and convenience, must be consulted in order to determine whether a case for dispensing with the statutory requirements exists, so that if it is anticipated that although the work cannot be completed before the building must be used for school purposes, the part remaining undone can be prosecuted without impairing the safety and usefulness of the schools, the statutory requirements may not be dispensed with; otherwise they may be disregarded."

Answering your second question you are advised that "urgent necessity" means "more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity." It is something which requires immediate action. Something which cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for a failure to comply with any statutory requirement, it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises.

When a case of urgent necessity exists, then the provisions of section 7623 G. C. do not apply and a contract may be let without complying with the provisions of said section.

You ask if it would be proper for the board to contract for a building at a cost in excess of the amount of money raised by the sale of bonds. Considering this question in a general way, I must advise you that it frequently happens that boards of education must contract for buildings in excess of the amounts raised from bond issue. That is, the board may have certain moneys in the building fund and only the balance of the estimate is necessary to be raised by a bond issue. Take for illustration your case, for which you say you have a bid of $13,000. $8,000 has been raised from the sale of bonds. If, now, there is $5,000 in the building fund of said district, then a contract may be let which not only covers the amount raised from the sale of bonds, but may also cover the amount in the building fund.

It was held in McAlexander v. Haviland Village School, 7 O. N. P. (n. s.) 590-594, that:

> "The statute does not require that the board must know, in advance, the exact amount of money that will be required. This would in many cases be impossible to ascertain. I have no doubt that the members of this board of education honestly believed that $8,000 would build and finish this building, and equip it with a modern heating plant. In the light of subsequent events, it is now apparent they were mistaken. It was an error of judgment in estimating the probable costs of the proposed improvements."

There were many other questions considered in the last above mentioned case, but it seems clear to me that the court intended to make it plain that a board of education, which estimates the probable amount of money required for such purpose or purposes, is not required to ascertain the cost of such building to that exactness which will preclude them from spending other money in such contract available for that purpose, and outside of the amount raised by the bond issue.

It should be remembered that no board of education is permitted to enter into a contract unless the money is in the treasury to pay for the amount thereof. The certificate of the clerk, as provided by section 5660, must be obtained in all cases unless, perhaps, in a case where the entire amount has been raised by a bond issue for that particular purpose.

This department held in opinion No. 333, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. 1, page 885, that:

> "In cases in which bonds have been sold and the proceeds placed in a special fund to be used for a specific work, and a contract is entered into for the construction of said work, the provisions of section 5660 G. C., that a certificate must first be made by the proper officer to the effect that the money is in the treasury to the credit of said fund, do not apply."

If, on the other hand, the entire amount was not raised by the bond issue, then the certificate required by section 5660 must be obtained and, as is provided by section 5661, the contract shall be void except for said certificate.

Answering your third question you are advised that a board of education may enter into a contract for a new school building for an amount in excess of the amount of money raised by the sale of bonds, provided there is sufficient money in the building fund of such district to make up the difference between the amount of the bond issue and the amount of the contract price.

Your fourth question is, may a board of education secure laborers and material in the open market and build a school house without advertising and letting the contract in a statutory manner? This question is really answered by my answer to your first question, wherein I advise you that the statute must be followed in the letting of contracts for the building of school buildings. There is no authority given by our school laws to boards of education to construct school buildings on what is commonly called "force account," that is, by going into the open market and securing laborers and materials without advertising and letting the contract as is provided by law. Boards of education can only act in pursuance of the authorized provisions of law and when there is no law provided for the doing or performing of the act by them, then the board is without power to act. So that you are advised that, the board of education being without authority to go into the open market and secure laborers and materials, and thus construct a school building, the same would be unlawful and cannot be done by such board.

To recapitulate, then, your questions would be answered as follows:

1. A board of education may not enter into a contract for a new school building and ignore the provisions of law relating to the letting of a contract therefor.

2. "Urgent necessity" means "more than convenience and more than ordinary necessity. It is something which requires immediate action. Something which cannot wait. When pleaded as an excuse for a failure to comply with any statutory requirement it must be decided by the circumstances of the particular case in which it arises," and where a case of "urgent necessity" exists, the provisions of section 7623 G. C. do not apply.

3. A board of education may enter into a contract for a new school building at an amount in excess of the amount of money raised by the sale of bonds, provided there is sufficient money in the building fund of such district to make up the difference between the amount of the bond issue and the amount of the contract price.

4. A board of education is without authority to go into the open market and secure laborers, purchase materials and build a school house by force account and without advertising and letting the contract as is provided by law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES INCOMPATIBLE—VILLAGE CLERK AND CLERK OF SINKING FUND TRUSTEES.

The offices of clerk of a village and clerk of the sinking fund trustees, when such sinking fund trustees are authorized by council to have a clerk, are incompatible, and such clerk of a village cannot be employed by such sinking fund trustees or receive the compensation provided for by council in an ordinance authorizing a clerk for said trustees.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1918.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have referred to the ruling of the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices in its circular No. 374, page 4, holding that it is unlawful for a city auditor to receive compensation as clerk of the sinking fund trustees, and you desire to know, in view of that ruling, whether or not it is unlawful for the clerk of a village to be hired by the sinking fund trustees as their clerk and to receive the compensation provided for by council in an ordinance authorizing such clerk of said trustees.

In Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Vol. II, page 1744, will be found an opinion rendered by this department to the bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices under date of September 19, 1917, which no doubt was the predicate of the ruling issued by the bureau, to which you refer. In the syllabus of said opinion it is stated:

"When council has authorized the trustees of the sinking fund of a city to elect a secretary, the person who holds the position of deputy auditor in said city may not be elected secretary of the board of trustees of the sinking fund of said city, qualify as such and receive separate compensation therefor and at the same time continue to act as deputy auditor since it would be incompatible with the latter position to do so."

That opinion followed an opinion previously rendered by one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, under date of March 16, 1912, and found in Vol. II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, page 1651, and also an opinion of my immediate predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, as shown in Vol. I of Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, page 549, addressed to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices on March 23, 1916. These opinions discuss and show the incompatibility necessarily existing between the offices of city auditor and the clerk of the sinking fund trustees.

Inasmuch as section 4283 G. C., found in Tit. II, Div. 5, Subdiv. 2, Ch. 4, subheading "Cities and Villages," provides that in the following provisions of the chapter the word "city" shall include "village," and the word "auditor" shall include "clerk," and inasmuch as the sections immediately succeeding provide for the auditing duties of the auditor, it is evident that the clerk of a village has more duties than those set out in section 4281 G. C. which provides the duties of village clerk, and that under the statute said village clerk now has all the duties that are applicable which are given to the auditor in the succeeding sections of the chapter following section 4283 G. C.

These opinions, as well as your inquiry, assume that council has provided by an ordinance for such clerk. You of course will recall that provision of section 4509 G. C. which makes the auditor of the city or clerk of the village secretary of the board where no clerk or secretary is authorized.

In direct answer to your question it is my opinion, therefore, that the clerk of a village cannot be employed by the sinking fund trustees as their clerk and receive compensation therefor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES SHOULD LEVY TAX TO CREATE FUND UNDER CASS LAW, WHEN ROAD IMPROVEMENT WAS BEGUN UNDER SAID ACT—TOWNSHIP TREASURER ENTITLED TO COMMISSION.

1. When a road improvement was begun under the Case highway act, the township trustees should levy the tax to create a fund as provided in section 1222 of the Cass act, even though the county commissioners had made application for state aid.

2. In such a case the township treasurer would be entitled to a commission upon the amount of money paid out by the township in reference to an improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 1, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "In an opinion to me, being No. 827, of December 3, 1917, you hold that a township treasurer under the Cass highway act is entitled to two per cent. commission on money paid out by him on the order of the township trustees, on account of the improvement of an intercounty highway; that as the levy for the township's share of the intercounty highway was, under the old law, made by the township trustees, and the money derived from the levy is paid over to the township by the county treasurer, the treasurer is entitled to his commission on such money.

I am asking your opinion whether the township treasurer is entitled to a commission of two per cent on such moneys if the improvement of the intercounty highway was begun under the Cass highway act, but the levy for the township's share of the improvement, as provided in section 1222, is made after the amendment by the legislature as found in 107 O. L. 132. Is such levy for such improvement, which was begun under the Cass highway act, made by the county commissioners or the township trustees, the improvement under the Cass highway act having been made upon the application of the county commissioners?"

In answering your question, I desire to call attention to the provisions of section 26 G. C., which provides in part as follows:

"Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings, * * *"

The provisions of this section would apply to the matter you have in mind. However, I am aware that it might be held that this section would not apply, because of the fact that section 2 of the White-Mulcahy law embodies certain saving provisions which are more limited than those set out in section 26 G. C. Nevertheless, if this be true, section 3 of the White-Mulcahy law is broad enough to include the matter you have in mind. Section 3 of this law (107 O. L. 141) reads in part as follows:

"This act shall not affect or impair any contract entered into, any act done, any right acquired or any obligation incurred prior to the time when this act takes effect, under or by virtue of any statute hereby amended or repealed, but the same may be completed, asserted or enforced as fully and to the same extent as if such statute had not been amended or repealed. * * *"

In an opinion rendered to Hon. Clinton Cowen on July 16, 1917, and found in Vol. II, Opinions of Attorney-General for 1917, page 1231, I held that a matter having to do with a road improvement is such as would come under section 3 of the White-Mulcahy law.

If this be true, the next step for us to take is to ascertain whether the proceedings in reference to the road improvement about which you ask were begun under the Cass highway act and pending at the time of the taking effect of the White-Mulcahy law, viz., June 28, 1917.

The question is, at what stage may it be said that a road improvement has been commenced? In the opinion I rendered to Mr. Cowen, above referred to, I held as follows in reference to when the first step in a road improvement is taken, so that the proceeding may be held as a pending proceeding (p. 1236):

"The question now is as to when the first step in the matter of a road improvement is taken, because the law which is in force and effect at the time of the taking of said first step will control in the further steps involved in the proceeding. It is my opinion that the first step is taken when the state highway commissioner approves the application of the county commissioners for the improvement of the intercounty highways or main market roads of the county, or when he approves any part of said highways for which application has been made, and orders the county surveyor to prepare plans, profiles, specifications, etc., for said improvement."

From your letter I infer that the proceedings about which you inquire was begun under the Cass highway act, under the principles set out in that part of my former opinion above quoted. If this be the case, the provisions of the Cass highway act would control in all further steps taken in the improvement.

In said opinion I also held on page 1236:

"Hence, if this approval of the state highway commissioner was made and his ordering the county surveyor to make plans, specifications., etc, for an improvement occurred before June 28, 1917, then your department would proceed under the provisions of the old law. But if these steps have been taken since the 28th day of June, 1917, the provisions of the new law would control in the matter of your further proceedings."

Assuming that the improvement about which you inquire had progressed to the stage at which it may be said that the proceedings were begun, it is evident that the provisions of section 1222 of the Cass act, and not those of section 1222 of the White-Mulcahy law, would control. If section 1222 of the Cass act controls, then it would be the duty of the township trustees to make the levy upon all the property located in the township, to create a fund to take care of the road improvement in question.

This virtually answers your second question, as to whether the township treasurer would be entitled to a commission on the amount of money which is paid out by the township for said improvement. If the entire proceedings are to be controlled by the Cass act, my holding in opinion rendered to you on December 3, 1917 (Vol. III, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 2218), would apply and the township treasurer would be entitled to his commission on the amount of money paid out by the township for said improvement.

This makes it unnecessary for me to decide the question as to whether the township treasurer would be entitled to a commission on moneys so paid out, in a case where the county commissioners made the levy under section 1222 of the White-Mulcahy law. I am therefore not passing upon that question.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

TERRITORY CANNOT BE TRANSFERRED FROM A CITY OR AN EXEMPTED VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT.

There is no authority contained in our school laws to transfer territory from a city or an exempted village school district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 23, 1918.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request for my opinion which reads:

> "A part of the village of Cleveland Heights was taken over by the city of East Cleveland some years ago as a part of their school district. It is now the desire of the Cleveland Heights village school district to take back said territory.
> It is our opinion that since the repeal of section 4693 G. C., the school laws do not provide for the transfer of territory for school purposes from city or exempted village districts to other school districts.
> Will you kindly give us your opinion on this matter?"

Your request calls for a consideration of those sections of the General Code which deal with or provide for the transfer of territory from one school district to another and that we may fully understand the true import of said sections, it might be well at the outset to note the kinds or classes of school districts in Ohio and the definition of each.

The school districts of Ohio are divided into four classes, viz., city, village, rural and county. (General Code Sec. 4679.) A city school district is defined by section 4680 G. C. as:

> "Each city, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, shall constitute a city school district."

A village district is defined by General Code section 4681 as follows:

> "Each village, together with the territory attached to it for school purposes, and excluding the territory within its corporate limits detached for school purposes, and having in the district thus formed a total tax valuation of not less than five hundred thousand dollars, shall constitute a village school district."

A county school district is defined by section 4684 G. C. as follows:

> "Each county, exclusive of the territory embraced in any city school district and the territory in any village school district exempted from the supervision of the county board of education by the provisions of sections 4688 and 4688-1, and territory detached for school purposes, and including the territory attached to it for school purposes, shall constitute a county school district. In each case where any village or rural school district is situated in more than one county such district shall become a part of the county school district in which the greatest part of the territory of such village or rural district is situated."

All other districts, that is, what were formerly known as township or special school districts, are, by section 4735 G. C., made rural school districts and this latter class includes any rural school districts which have been created since the enactment of said last mentioned section.

Certain village school districts are denominated exempted village districts, that is, they are that class of village school districts which are exempted from supervision by the county board of education. These are provided for by sections 4688 and 4688-1 G. C., which read:

"Sec. 4688: The board of education of any village school district containing a village which according to the last federal census had a population of three thousand or more, may decide by a majority vote of the full membership thereof not to become a part of the county school district. Such village district by notifying the county board of education of such decision before the third Saturday of July, 1914, shall be exempt from the supervision of the board."

"Sec. 4688-1: The board of education of a village school district shall upon the petition of one hundred or more electors of such district, or upon its own motion may at any time order a census to be taken of the population of such district. One or more persons may be appointed by the board to take such census. Each person so appointed shall take an oath or affirmation to take such census accurately and to the best of his ability. He shall make his return under oath to the clerk of the board, and certified copies of such return shall be sent to the county auditor and superintendent of public instruction. If the census shows a population of three thousand or more in the village school district, and such census is approved by the superintendent of public instruction, such district shall, upon notification by the board of education of such village school district, be exempted from the supervision of the county board of education."

That is to say, city school districts and those village districts which are exempted from county supervision, are considered no part of the county school district, and the county board of education has no control over said districts except, as will be hereinafter noted, to transfer territory to such districts, the same as to another county school district. Transfer of territory from one school district of the county school district to another school district of the county school district is provided for by section 4692 G. C., which reads:

"The county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining district or districts of the county school district. Such transfer shall not take effect until a map is filed with the auditor of the county in which the transferred territory is situated, showing the boundaries of the territory transferred, and a notice of such proposed transfer has been posted in three conspicuous places in the district or districts proposed to be transferred, or printed in a paper of general circulation in said county, for ten days; nor shall such transfer take effect if a majority of the qualified electors residing in the territory to be transferred, shall, within thirty days after the filing of such map, file with the county board of education a written remonstrance against such proposed transfer. If an entire district be transferred the board of education of such district is thereby abolished, or if a member of the board of education lives in a part of a school district transferred the member becomes a non-resident of the school district from which he was transferred and ceases to be a member of such board of education. The legal title of the property of the board of education shall become vested in the board of education of the school district to which such territory is transferred. The county board of education is authorized to make an equitable division of the school funds of the transferred territory either in the treasury or in the course of collection. And also an equitable division of the indebtedness of the transferred territory."

Transfer of territory from a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district, or to another county school district is provided for in section 4696 G. C., which reads as follows:

"A county board of education may transfer a part or all of a school district of the county school district to an adjoining exempted village school district or city school district, or to another county school district, provided at least fifty per centum of the electors of the territory to be transferred petition for such transfer. Provided, however, that if at least seventy-five per cent of the electors of the territory petition for such transfer, the county board of education shall make such transfer. No such transfer shall be in effect until the county board of education and the board of education to which the territory is to be transferred each pass resolutions by a majority vote of the full membership of each board and until an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness be decided upon by the boards of education acting in the transfer; also a map shall be filed with the auditor or auditors of the county or counties affected by such transfer."

But there is nothing in any of said sections which in any manner authorizes a transfer of territory from a city school district or an exempted village school district to any adjoining school district. Prior to the enactment of the new school code in 1914, there existed an entirely different scheme of legislation in reference to the transfer of territory from that which is provided by said new code. The new code provides that transfers shall be made by the county board of education and gives no authority to local boards or any other persons to transfer territory from one school district to another. Prior to the enactment of the new school code it was provided in section 4692 G. C. that any school district, or a part thereof, might be transferred to an adjoining district by the mutual consent of the boards of education having control of such districts, and when the board failed or refused to transfer such territory by mutual consent, it was provided by section 4693 that the petitioner for such transfer should file a map in the probate court of the county in which the territory was situated, or if it was situated in two or more counties, in the probate court of the county containing the largest proportionate share of the territory to be transferred, and thereupon the probate judge, as was provided in section 4694, was compelled to fix a day for the hearing of a petition, and as provided by section 4695, was authorized to hear and determine the case and render his judgment for or against such transfer. As noted above, those sections have all been repealed and new sections enacted in the place of some of them, carrying an entirely new and different scheme of legislation in relation to the transfer of territory. In other words, there is no authority now contained in the General Code for a transfer of territory by the mutual consent of boards of education of city or village districts and a city district not being a part of a county district, the county board of education has no authority to transfer territory from such city district.

I must therefore advise you that there is no authority contained in our school laws for the transfer of territory from a city or an exempted village school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF LICKING COUNTY—$4,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Licking county in the sum of $4,500, in anticipation of taxes and assessments to pay in part the shares of said county, Mary Ann township, and abutting property owners, of the cost and expense of improving section "F," I. C. H. No. 479, in said county.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Licking county, Ohio, and of other officers, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in substantial conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds in proper form will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof. No bond form of the bonds covering this issue has been submitted to me and I am therefore holding the transcript of said proceedings until such bond form is submitted for approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE BEND FIRE INSURANCE ASSOCIATION.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am herewith returning without my approval thereon, articles of incorporation of the Bend Fire Insurance Association, submitted to me under date of April 20, 1918. The articles in question are governed by the provisions of sections 9593 et seq. The purpose clause of said articles reads in full as follows:

"Second. Said corporation is to be located at Cleveland, in Cuyahoga county, Ohio, and its principal business there transacted.

Third. Said corporation is formed for the purpose of enabling its members to insure each other against loss by fire and lightning, cyclones, tornadoes or wind storms, hail storms and explosions from gas, to enforce any contract by them entered into whereby the parties thereto agree to be assessed specifically for incidental purposes and for the payment of losses which occur to its members on property in this state, subject to the limitations of section 9593 of the General Code of Ohio."

It is evident that said articles are defective in not stating the kind of property proposed to be insured as required by section 9594 General Code, and the same are disapproved for this reason.

You are therefore advised not to file said articles until the same are corrected to meet the requirement above noted. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW—ELECTIVE FEATURE APPLYING TO EMPLOYERS OF LESS THAN FIVE WORKMEN DOES NOT APPLY TO EMPLOYERS OF DOMESTIC SERVANTS—PREMIUMS PAID INTO COMPENSATION FUND CANNOT BE REFUNDED.

1. The elective feature of the workmen's compensation law, applying to employers of less than five workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment, does not apply to employers of household or domestic servants in or about a private residence.

2. Such feature of the workmen's compensation law does not apply to employers of chauffeurs unless such chauffeur is directly employed in the usual course of the trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer.

3. There is no authority in law for the refunder of premiums paid into the workmen's compensation fund under a mistake of law or fact.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted the following request for my opinion:

"The inclosed letter is self-explanatory.

In Vol. I, Annual Report of the Attorney-General, 1914, p. 521, may be found an opinion which in effect holds that the compulsory features of the workmen's compensation act do not apply to domestic servants employed by private families. We should like to have your opinion on the following points:

1. May domestic employes be covered and receive compensation, if injured, if the employer has paid a premium covering them?

2. Is a chauffeur who drives his master to and from his place of business and in the course of his business a domestic employe?

3. Is Mr. ---------- entitled to a refund of premium paid on such domestic employes?"

The letter to which you refer is as follows:

"During the past four years I have paid into the industrial insurance fund, state of Ohio, various amounts as insurance on the employes at my home, namely, one chauffeur and one maid.

I have recently been informed that the benefits accruing from the industrial insurance fund are not applicable on the personal employes at my home upon which I have paid the insurance premiums as above mentioned. If such is the case I believe that I am entitled to a refunder of such premiums paid in error, and I would thank you to forward the forms for making a claim for such refunders."

Answering your first question, it has been held that the compulsory features of the workmen's compensation act did not apply to domestic employes. See Opinion of Attorney-General, 1914, Vol. I, p. 521, to which you refer, and also Opinion of the Industrial Commission of Ohio in the claim of Eisel vs. Rogers, No. 508, section 27, decided March 21, 1916, and reported in Vol. 4, No. 5, of the Bulletin of the Industrial Commission of Ohio at page 137.

These opinions are based upon the fact that domestic employes do not come within the classification of employes who are entitled to the benefits of the act as defined in sections 1465-60 and 1465-61 of the General Code, in that they are not employed in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of the employer.

Section 1465-71 provides for payment into the fund by an employer of less than five workmen or operatives regularly in the same business or in or about the same establishment; while this section does not include the words "usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation," still the terms employe, workman and operative as defined in section 1465-61 define said terms for all the purposes of the act; and therefore the holding which has been definitely made that domestic servants are not included in said definition under the compulsory features of the act would also necessarily apply to the elective feature provided by section 1465-71. To hold otherwise would be a discrimination in favor of employes of an employer of less than five workmen or operatives who elects to comply with the act, and against all such employes of employers of five or more workmen or operatives. There is nothing in the act that would justify such holdings for the same reasoning that is relied on to sustain the former opinion of the attorney-general; and the opinion of the industrial commission, to which I have referred, applies equally to sections 1465-71 and 1465-74.

Therefore, there is no authority for the insurance under the act of domestic employes; nor for the receipt from an employer of a premium paid to cover such insurance.

Though your second question is very generally phrased, I assume that you intend to refer to the attached letter. The letter shows that the chauffeur in question was considered by the writer to be one of the employes "at my home." This being the case, the mere fact that he drives his employer to and from his place of business would not, in my opinion, make him an employe in the usual course of the business of the employer, as the primary purpose of the employment would be to serve the personal convenience and pleasure of his employer and the members of his family, and not to promote the employer's business. Accordingly I answer your second question in the affirmative.

Answering your third question: It appears that a certain employer employing less than five persons has paid premiums into the fund, which have been received by the commission and the employer carried as one who had complied with the act and was entitled to the protection afforded thereby. It now appears that under the act the employes were not within the class entitled to compensation.

Section 1465-55 General Code provides for refunders from the state insurance fund in certain cases, as follows:

> "The state liability board of awards shall adopt rules and regulations with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of the state insurance fund; one of which rules shall provide that in the event the amount of premiums collected from any employer at the beginning of any period of six months is ascertained and calculated by using the estimated expenditure of wages for the period of time covered by such premium payments as a basis, that an adjustment of the amount of such premium shall be made at the end of such six months' period and the actual amount of such premium shall be determined in accordance with the amount of the actual expenditure of wages for said period; and, in the event such wage expenditure for said period is less than the amount on which such estimated premium was collected, then such employer shall be entitled to receive a refunder from the state insurance fund of the difference between the amount so paid by him and the amount so found to be actually due, or to have the amount of such difference credited on succeeding premium payments at his option, and should such actual premium, when ascertained as aforesaid exceed in amount the premium so paid by such employer at the beginning of such six months' period, such employer shall immediately upon being advised of the true amount of such premium due, forthwith pay to the treasurer of state an amount equal to the difference between the amount actually found to be due and the amount paid by him at the beginning of said six months' period."

This section does not in terms cover a case where an employer who was not subject to the law at all has paid premiums into the fund; it would certainly cover the case of an employer who, though subject to the law, had misinterpreted it so as to pay more than the required premium because of the inclusion in the payroll of the compensation of persons who are not "employes" within the meaning of the act; that is, it would cover such a case if the premium had been calculated on an estimated expenditure of wages and the mistake had been discovered and the adjustment made at the end of the six months' period. I suspect, however, that the case which you have in mind does not come within this category and that section 1465-55 does not cover it. The section does show that premium adjustments involving refunds are required under certain circumstances. The question now is as to whether the industrial commission by the adoption of a rule may disburse the state insurance fund in the adjustment of premium accounts or the refunder of entire premiums paid when there was no right to participate in the benefits of the fund. The question is not complicated by the application of the constitutional inhibition against the withdrawal of moneys from the state treasury; because the state insurance fund is not in the state treasury; the treasurer of state is merely the custodian of it and it is disbursed on vouchers (section 1465-56 General Code).

Section 1465-72 of the General Code directs the industrial commission to disburse the state insurance fund to employes on account of injuries and to their dependents in case death has ensued. Section 1465-89 authorizes the disbursement and payment from the state insurance fund of medical, nurse and hospital expenses, etc.

No other disbursements are expressly authorized to be made from the state insurance fund, except, of course, the investment of any surplus or reserve in bonds of the United States, etc. (section 1465-58). In this state of the law I am of the opinion that the authority to make a refunder does not exist save in the case expressly provided for in section 1465-55 G. C.

In this connection I have considered also the authority of the commission to take the over-payment into account in adjusting premium rates, on the assumption that the person about whom inquiry is made is an "employer" within the meaning of the act and, on account of other employes than the ones specified, is and will continue to be liable for some premiums. I do not find authority for any such procedure save and except in section 1465-55 G. C.; and unless the circumstances of the case which you have in mind bring it within the operation of this section I do not believe that this expedient is available.

I have also considered the question as to whether a refunder could not be made by the commission on the theory that the money was paid under a mistake of facts, and therefore would be recoverable from the state, or from the industrial commission or its members. In order to support such a result I should have to hold that the industrial commission has the implied power to make restitution in a proper case, in addition to the express powers which are given to it to act in such manner in similar though not identical cases. I cannot bring myself to consider this interesting question, however, because, as I see it, no mistake of fact has occurred in the case which you state. The mistake which took place is one purely of law, and the doctrine that money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back has become generally established in this state.

What I have said about adjusting the future premium rates so as to allow the employer credit for the over-payment constitutes the only suggestion which I feel able to make for the solution of the difficulty, providing the commission desires to take such action. As I have said, I do not believe the workmen's compensation act, strictly construed, authorizes such adjustment to be made; but as I am not thoroughly conversant with the practice of the commission in fixing premium rates I would not undertake to pass upon this matter as a question of law without a formal request from the commission directed to this point. Your letter asks about a refund and the positive holdings which I have made relate to that matter only.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN FAIRFIELD, WAYNE AND HANCOCK COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of April 20, 1918, enclosing, for my approval, final resolutions for the following named improvements:

Baltimore-Reynoldsburg road—I. C. H. No. 461, Sec. "A-1," Fairfield county.

Wooster-Millersburg road—I. C. H. No. 342, Sec. "A," Wayne county.

Lima-Sandusky road—I. C. H. No. 22, Sec. "C-2," types "A," "B" and "C," Hancock county.

Lima-Sandusky road—I. C. H. No. 22, Sec. "C-1," Hancock county, types "A," "B" and "C."

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find the same correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning them to you, with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF LICKING COUNTY—$16,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 24, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Licking county, Ohio, in the sum of $16,000 in anticipation of taxes and assessments to pay in part the shares of said county, Newark township, and the owners of abutting property of the costs and expense of the Cherry Valley road improvement extending for a distance of one mile westerly from the west corporation line of the city of Newark.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Licking county, Ohio, and other officers, relating to the above bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in substantial compliance with the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds in proper form covering this issue will, when same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds covering this issue was submitted with the transcript, and I am therefore holding said transcript until such bond form is submitted to me for approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION MAY NOT MANUFACTURE PRODUCTS WITH PRISON LABOR FOR USE OF CITIES AND VILLAGES.

The Ohio board of administration has no authority in law to manufacture lime with prison labor and sell the same to the city of Columbus.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1918.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You ask my opinion upon the following state of facts: The city of Columbus uses a large amount of lime in softening the water used by the inhabitants of the city. The Ohio board of administration is of the opinion that it could install a plant in connection with the penitentiary to manufacture lime with the labor of the prisoners and sell it to the city of Columbus for less than it is able to secure lime at the present time. However, said board does not care to erect a plant for manufacturing lime unless it can enter into a contract with the city of Columbus for a period of three years.

The legal questions arising are as follows:

1. Has the Ohio board of administration the right to use prison labor for the manufacture of lime to be sold to the City of Columbus?

2. Has the city of Columbus the authority to enter into a three-year contract for the purchase of lime from the Ohio board of administration?

In considering the first question, it will be noted that an act found in 98 O. L. 177 as sections 2228 to 2235 G. C., applies. Section 2228 G. C. reads as follows:

"Sec. 2228. The board of managers of the Ohio penitentiary, the board of managers of the Ohio state reformatory, or other authority, shall make no contract by which the labor or time of a prisoner in the penitentiary or reformatory, or the product or profit of his work, shall be let, farmed out, given or sold to any person, firm, association or corporation. Convicts in such institution may work for, and the products of their labor may be disposed of, to the state or a political division thereof, or for or to a public institution owned or managed and under the control of the state or a political division thereof, for the purposes and according to the provisions of this chapter."

Section 2230 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"Such labor shall be for the purpose of the manufacture and production of supplies for such institutions, the state or political divisions thereof; * * *"

There could hardly be a question raised but that the general term "supplies" would include lime, and that the Ohio board of administration might manufacture lime with prison labor and sell the same to the state or political divisions thereof, or to any public institution of the state or of a political division thereof.

This leaves one other question for consideration, viz., whether the term "political division" includes a municipality of the state and in this particular instance the city of Columbus.

There are a number of provisions in the act above referred to which seem to indicate that the legislature used the term "political division" as applying to counties and townships only and not to municipalities. For instance, in section 2231 G. C. we have the following provision:

"Sec. 2231. Such tile, brick and culvert pipe and road building material and such products of convict or prison labor as are used in the construction or repair of the public roads shall be furnished the political divisions of this state at cost. * * *"

In section 2232 G. C. we find the following:

"The trustees of a township or the board of commissioners of a county may make application to the board of managers of the penitentiary or to the board of managers of the reformatory for supplies manufactured under the provisions of this chapter. * * *"

If the legislature had intended that the term "political divisions" should include a municipality, it is altogether reasonable to assume that in section 2232 G. C. it would have referred not only to the trustees of a township and the board of county commissioners, but also to the proper officials of a municipality.

Section 2234 G. C. reads in part as follows:

"Such boards may lease and operate plants for the manufacture of brick or road building material or supplies, needed for the construction and maintenance of public roads, which shall be furnished at cost to a township or county proportionately as demanded. * * *"

If the legislature had intended that "political divisions" should include municipalities, it would not have provided that the supplies should be furnished only to a township or county proportionately as demanded, but would have included in this list municipalities as well.

In section 2235 G. C. we find the following provision:

"* * * and the products thereof shall not be disposed of except to a township or county in this state for the construction, repair or maintenance of public roads outside of the limits of incorporated cities or villages. * * *"

This provision seems not only to indicate that the supplies and products spoken of in this act are to be sold only to townships and counties, but that cities and villages are not to have the benefits to be secured under this act. Hence from a general suvey of the whole act I am of the opinion that it was not the intention of the legislature that the Ohio board of administration should manufacture lime with prison labor and sell the same to municipalities.

I am not unmindful of the provisions of sections 1846 and 1847 G. C. (107 O. L. 427).

Section 1846 reads as follows:

"The board, subject to the approval of the secretary of state and auditor of state, shall fix the prices at which all labor performed and all articles manufactured in such institutions shall be furnished to the state or the political divisions and public institutions thereof, as is or may be provided by law, which shall be uniform to all and not higher than the usual market prices for like labor and articles."

Here we again find the legislature using the term "political divisions."

From a provision we find in section 1847, it is evident that the legislature intended in this act that the term "political divisions" include the municipalities of the state, for we find in this section the following:

"Sec. 1847. * * * The provisions of this section shall not apply to any officer, board or agent of any municipality which maintains an institution that produces or manufactures articles of the kind desired. * *

If the legislature had intended that the term "political divisions" should not include municipalities, there would have been no necessity of exempting those municipalities which maintain institutions that produce or manufacture articles of the kind desired, because the act then would have applied to no municipality. So we must reach the conclusion that the legislature intended said term to include municipalities.

The question now to be considered is whether the provisions of this act are broad enough to include lime. It is my opinion they are not. Section 1847, supra, contains the following provision:

> "The board shall, with the advice and consent of the secretary of state and auditor of state, classify public buildings, offices and institutions and determine the kinds, patterns, designs and qualities of articles to be manufactured for use therein which shall be uniform for each class, so far as practicable. * * *"

The fact that the legislature provided for the classification of public buildings, offices and institutions, indicates it did not have in mind such a substance as lime. It is also provided that the board shall determine the kinds, patterns, designs and qualities of articles to be manufactured for use therein. This phrase negatives the idea that the legislature intended to include such a substance as lime. The term "kinds, patterns, designs and qualities" could hardly be said to apply to lime, and the term "for use therein" also apparently negatives the idea that the legislature intended to include a substance like lime within the provisions of this act.

Therefore, answering your question specifically, I am of the opinion that the Ohio board of administration would not be authorized in law to manufacture lime with prison labor and sell the same to the city of Columbus.

The conclusion above reached in answer to your first question, makes it unnecessary to consider the second question.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES NOT AUTHORIZED TO ISSUE BONDS OF A TOWNSHIP ROAD DISTRICT FOR A JOINT COUNTY IMPROVEMENT.

Sections 3298-25 to 3298-53 of the General Code as enacted in the White-Mulcahy act, providing for the improvement of roads by a township road district consisting of the territory of a township outside of municipalities therein do not authorize the trustees of said township to issue the bonds of said township road district for the purpose of paying that part of the cost and expense of the improvement of a road located in said road district and on adjoining township or township road district, or on the line between the same, apportioned to said township road district by and as a part of proceedings for the improvement of said road conducted by a joint board of township trustees consisting of the trustees of such adjoining townships.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1918.

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—As previously acknowledged, I have your favor of February 22, 1918, in which you state:

"The question has arisen whether Bloom township can issue bonds to be paid from the property within the taxing district created by said township excluding the corporation of Bloomville therein for the purpose of improving her half of a joint county road which said improvement is to be made by the joint boards of township trustees of Bloom township, Seneca county, Ohio, and Lykens township, Crawford county, Ohio.

After looking carefully at the provisions of section 3298-25, section 3298-26 and section 3298-45 I have reached the opinion that the trustees have the authority to issue bonds for the purpose indicated, but I would like your opinion in the matter before the trustees proceed further with the improvement."

Sections 3298-1 to 3298-15n, inclusive, of the General Code, as amended and enacted in the White-Mulcahy act (107 O. L. 73 et seq.), provide for the construction and improvement by township trustees of public roads in townships, whether such public roads be township roads, county roads, intercounty highways or main market roads. The proceedings outlined in the above sections of the General Code with respect to township road improvements follow very closely those provided for with respect to road improvements by county commissioners by sections 6906 et seq. General Code. More immediately pertinent to the facts upon which your inquiry is predicated, section 3298-15n, as enacted in the White-Mulcahy act, provides as follows:

"The boards of trustees of two or more townships shall have the power to construct, reconstruct, resurface or improve a township road, or part thereof, along the line between such townships, or extending into or through all such townships, or wholly within one township but within less than the legal assessment distance of the township line. In such case the several boards of township trustees, when acting as a joint board and when acting separately in the making of assessments and issuing bonds, shall be governed and controlled by the provisions of law relating to the construction of joint county road improvements by joint boards of county commissioners in so far as the same are applicable. They shall also have the same power with respect to county roads and intercounty highways and main market roads located as above provided, subject to the limitation expressed in section 3298-1 of the General Code."

The provision in the section of the General Code above quoted that in such case the several boards of township trustees, when acting as a joint board and when acting separately in the making of assessments and issuing bonds, shall be governed and controlled by the provisions of law relating to the construction of joint county road improvements by joint boards of county commissioners in so far as the same are applicable, refers to the provisions of sections 6930 to 6944 inclusive of the General Code, relating to the improvement by county commissioners of roads in two or more counties or along the county line between two or more counties in this state. With respect to such improvements it will be sufficient in this connection to note that the proceedings relating to the same down to the point where assessments are to be made and bonds issued are conducted by the joint board of county commissioners, consisting of the county commissioners of the counties interested in such improvement. In this connection section 6934 General Code provides that such joint board shall determine the proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement to be paid by each of the several counties interested therein, and that thereupon the county commissioners of each interested county shall with the assistance of the county surveyor thereof make the assessments against the real estate within said county to be charged therewith of the proportion of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of said improvement to be raised by special assessment against the benefited real estate within such county.

I might add that in case the joint board of county commissioners cannot agree on the apportionment of the compensation, damages, costs and expenses of the improvement between the several counties interested therein, the joint board of county commissioners is required to certify that fact to the state highway commissioner, who shall thereupon make such apportionment. (Sec. 6935 G. C.)

With respect to such joint county road improvement section 6944 General Code provides that in case bonds are issued in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments on account of such improvement, such bonds as may be required shall be issued separately by each county to cover its proportion of such costs and expenses.

So in the case of the improvement of roads located in two or more townships or along the line between such townships a joint board of township trustees will conduct the proceedings relating to the construction or improvement of such road up to the time when assessments are to be made and bonds issued. The matter of making assessments and the matter of issuing bonds covering the portion of the cost and expense of such road improvement apportioned to each township are to be provided for by the township trustees of such township. Such bonds are to be issued under the authority of and in pursuance to the provisions of section 3298-15e General Code, which provides, in part, as follows:

> "The township trustees, in anticipation of the collection of such taxes and assessments, or any part thereof, may, whenever in their judgment it is deemed necessary, sell the bonds of said township in any amount not greater than the aggregate sum necessary to pay the estimated compensation, damages, costs and expenses of such improvement. Such bonds shall state for what purpose they are issued and shall bear interest at a rate not to exceed five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually, and in such amounts and to mature at such times as the trustees shall determine, subject to the provision, however, that said bonds shall mature in not more than ten years. Prior to the issuance of such bonds the township trustees shall, in case all or any part of said bonds are to be redeemed by special assessments, provide for the levying of a tax upon all the taxable property of the township to cover any deficiencies in the payment or collection of any such special assessments. * * *"

Bonds issued by township trustees under authority of this section to pay the township's apportionment of the cost and expense of a joint township road improvement, or otherwise, are, so to speak, a charge upon all the taxable property in said township, including that in municipal corporations therein, and tax levies to provide for the payment of such bonds and interest thereon are required to be made upon all of such taxable property.

The question as to the application of the above statutory provisions relating to the construction of roads by townships to a road improvement in adjoining townships located in different counties or on the line between such townships and counties is not here determined.

Sections 3298-25 to 3298-53 of the General Code, inclusive, as enacted in said White-Mulcahy act, provide for the establishment by the township trustees of a road district out of that part of the territory of the township not included within the corporate limits of a municipal corporation or corporations located therein and for proceedings by such township trustees for the construction of public roads within such road district, whether such roads be township roads, county roads, intercounty highways or main market roads. The proceedings outlined by such statutes for the construction and improvement of roads by such township road district are, in their main features, quite identical with those provided by sections 3298-1 et seq. General Code for the improvement of roads by the township; and section 3298-45 General Code provides for the issue by the township trustees of bonds of such road district in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments for the improvement of roads on proceedings conducted by such road district. There is nothing, however, in the statutory provisions relating to the construction and improvement of roads by a township road district providing for the improvement by joint action of the township trustees of a road located in two or more townships or township road districts, or on the line between two townships or township road districts, and there is therefore no authority in the township trustees to issue the bonds of a township road district established in the manner provided by section 3298-25 General Code for the purpose of paying such township road district's portion of the cost and expense of a road improvement conducted by said township trustees and the trustees of the adjoining township.

Answering your question as specifically as the nature of the same permits, therefore, I am of the opinion that the trustees of Bloom township, Seneca county, can create a road district out of the territory of said township outside of the corporate limits of Bloomville, or other municipality therein; but that the trustees of said township are not authorized to issue the bonds of said township road district for the purpose of paying that part of the cost and expense of the improvement of a county road located in said road district and an adjoining township or township road district, or on the line between the same, apportioned to said township road district by and as a part of proceedings for the improvement of said road conducted by a joint board of township trustees, consisting of the trustees of Bloom township and the trustees of such adjoining township, and this whether such adjoining township be in the same or another county.

The above conclusion reached by me requires your question on the facts stated by you to be answered in the negative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 26, 1918.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 3, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "A licensee of this department whose place of business is in Xenia advertises in several adjoining counties that he lends money on chattel mortgages. When an application for a loan is received from say Warren county, he sends an appraiser from Xenia to view the property. On his return 'if the business looks good' the papers are prepared in Xenia and are sent to some person in Warren county who procures the signatures and pays out the money, returning the papers to the licensee at Xenia.
> We would like an opinion from you as to whether there has been a violation of the Lloyd act on any or all of the following points: 1st, the advertising or soliciting outside of Greene county; 2nd, the viewing or appraising of property outside of Xenia or Greene county; 3rd, the procuring signatures outside of the office in Xenia; 4th, the paying out money outside of said office."

The section which lies at the foundation of your inquiry, and at the foundation of the act having to do with the matters about which you inquire is 6346-1 General Code, 107 O. L. 509, which reads as follows:

> "It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, association or corporation, to engage, or continue, in the business of making loans, on plain, endorsed, or guaranteed notes, or due-bills, or otherwise, or upon the mortgage or pledge of chattels or personal property of any kind, or of purchasing or making loans on salaries or wage earnings, or of furnishing guarantee or security in connection with any loan or purchase, as aforesaid, at a charge or rate of interest in excess of eight percentum per annum, including all charges, without first having obtained a license so to do from the commissioner of securities and otherwise complying with the provisions of this chapter."

That is, before any person may lawfully engage in the business set out in said section at a charge or rate of interest in excess of eight per cent, he must first obtain a license from the state. The language in reference to the business for which a license must be secured is broad and general. It does not seem to place any restrictions or limitations upon the question as to how the business is to be secured, or how the business is to be closed or consummated. Of course, this section further provides that a person cannot lawfully transact such business without "otherwise complying with the provisions of this chapter."

This makes it necessary for us to examine into the whole act to ascertain whether there is any provision in it which would forbid the licensee (a) to solicit or advertise for business outside the county where his place of business is located; (b) viewing or appraising of property located outside of said county (c) the procuring of signatures outside the office, and (d) the paying out of money outside the office.

Under the provisions of section 6346-2, any person about to engage in the business set out in 6346-1 General Code, must apply for a license on prepared blanks, and must pay a fee of $100 a year for the license for permission to do business. Under section 6346-3 General Code, the applicant must state, among other things, the location of the office or place of business in which the business is to be conducted. From this provision it is quite clear that the applicant must have an office or place of business located somewhere within the state.

We find the further provision in this section that "such license shall be kept posted in a conspicuous place in the office where the business is transacted"; and further, "no person, firm, partnership, association or corporation so licensed shall transact or solicit business under any other name."

From this provision it is quite evident that authority, at least indirectly, is given to the licensee to solicit business as well as to transact business. There is no limitation here whatever as to the territorial limits within which the soliciting must be done, or within which the transaction must be had. The only provision is that the licensee shall not transact or solicit business under any other name. This further provision is found in the section:

> "Not more than one office or place of business shall be maintained under the same license."

The above possibly embodies all the conditions and limitations in reference to the matter about which you inquire.

There is nothing in any of these provisions that seems to indicate either directly or indirectly that the licensee is limited in the matter of soliciting business to the confines of his own county, any more than he would be limited to the confines of his own city, or the confines of his own ward. Under the broad terms of the act as set out herein, I am of the opinion that a licensee may, under authority of law, advertise for business or solicit the same outside the limits of the county in which his place of business is located. This answers your first question.

If he has authority to solicit business or advertise for the same outside of the territorial limits of the the county in which his office or place of business is located, then it certainly must follow that he may take care of this business when he gets it, this unless the act itself would specifically provide otherwise. It would be absurd to hold that a licensee has authority to solicit business and advertise for the same, and then to hold that he has no authority to take care of business secured through said advertisement.

As the appraisal of the property upon which the loan is based is necessary under sound business principles, it is my opinion that the licensee could have the property viewed and appraised even though the same is located outside the limits of the county in which his office is located. This might be absolutely necessary, due to the fact that the property would be of such a nature that it could not be appraised in any other place than that in which it is located generally; at any rate, it would be absurd to hold that property before it could be appraised would have to be moved to the county in which the licensee is located, and such a construction should not be given to the statute unless it is absolutely essential from the plain provisions of the same. Hence, I hold in answer to your two questions as above set out.

This leaves for consideration the two questions as to whether the procuring of signatures to the necessary papers in reference to the loan might be procured outside of the office, and whether the money could be paid to the borrower outside of said office. These two acts would conclude the whole matter in reference to any transaction, and the question is as to whether the parties borrowing the money, no difference where they might reside, would be compelled to go to the office or place of business of the licensee in order to sign certain papers and receive the money borrowed. The only language used in the act from which such a construction could be derived is the following:

> "Not more than one office or place of business shall be maintained under the same license."

I cannot arrive at the conclusion from said language that a person receiving money from a licensee would be compelled to go to the office or place of business in order to perform said act. If the licensee has the right to advertise for business and solicit business in other counties than that in which his place of business is located, and has the right to view and appraise the property, he certainly would have the right to have the papers signed and the right to pay over the money, unless the statute itself would specifically forbid these acts either directly or indirectly.

An office is the place where mail is ordinarily addressed when writing to the person maintaining the office, and from which mail is directed when the person maintaining the office writes; it is the place to which people would go to transact business provided they had business to transact with the person maintaining the office, and from which people are sent to transact business in connection with the office; it is the place where the persons chiefly interested in the matters pertaining to the office are usually found, and if the licensee does not maintain more than one of these places in the state, he does not violate the provisions of the act, and would have authority, in my opinion, both to secure the signatures of the persons interested in any transactions, and deliver the money to said persons outside of the limits of the county in which the office or place of business is located.

However, I desire to call attention to the fact that the language used in this section is, "not more than one office or place of business shall be maintained." The language refers both to "office" and to "place of business." While the terms "office" and "place of business" are to some extent synonymous, yet I do not believe the general assembly intended so to use them in this act. "Office" might, and generally would, in business under consideration, be the "place of business," also; but, on the other hand, the term "place of business" might not at all include the term "office." "Office" is the place where the officers would meet to transact their business provided it was a corporation or partnership, where the stockholders, for example, would meet, or where the partners would meet to elect their officers, providing it is a corporation or a partnership. Also, it is where the men chiefly interested in the business would be found, where the papers, vaults, records and everything that pertains to the business would be found; while a "place of business" might be maintained and none of these characteristics apply. "Place of business" might be maintained through an agent or employe; but this section forbids the maintaining of either more than one "office" or "place of business" under one license.

In reference to this matter I desire to call attention to a case found in 29 Colo. 129, Rocky Mountain Oil Co. v. Central National Bank. In the opinion, on page 131, the court say:

> "The expressions in the attachment act, 'chief office' or 'place of business,' while not strictly synonymous, must be regarded as equivalent. The essential characteristics of each might be very different. The former would ordinarily be the place where the officials charged with the general management of its affairs might meet and direct them; while the latter might be the same, or the place where its business operations were carried on under the direction and supervision of an authorized agent."

In the case of Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 26 U. S. 578, in the opinion the court say:

> "But the evidence does not show that the defendant had a place of business in the city of Washington, according to the usual commercial understanding of a place of business. There was no public notoriety of any description given to it as such. No open or public business of any kind carried on, but merely occasional employment there, two or three times a week, in a house occupied by another person."

From all the above it is clear that a licensee could not establish and maintain a place of business other than the one set out in his application, and have the same managed by an agent, to which place of business the people of those localities in which the same were located might go to transact business, and which places of business are given notoriety in the community. If this were done the licensee would be maintaining not only an office, but he would also be maintaining a place of business, and this would be contrary to the provisions of the statute. But in my opinion so long as the business is transacted from the office there is nothing in the act which would prevent the licensee from advertising for business or soliciting business in counties other than that in which he is located under his license, nor to prevent him from viewing and appraising property in another county, nor to prevent him from having the necessary papers signed in another county, and paying over the money to the proper party under any transaction, because in all this he would not be maintaining an office or a place of business other than the particular one for which he secured his license.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF ASHLEY VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, DELAWARE COUNTY—$4,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

> IN RE: Bonds of Ashley village school district, Delaware county, Ohio, in the sum of $4,000.00, for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Ashley village school district relating to the above bond issue.

The only question presented on consideration of this transcript is that considered by me at some length in opinion No. 966 with respect to the validity of the bonds of Canton city school district under date of January 25, 1918. In other words, as appears from this transcript, the above bonds in the sum of $4,000.00 are issued by the board of education of Ashley village school district under the authority of section 7629 General Code without a vote of the electors of said school district, for the purpose of completing the construction and equipment of a school building which has been constructed to its present condition from the proceeds of bonds issued by the board of education on a vote of the electors of the school district. The same considerations which in the case of the Canton city school district bonds led me to the conclusion that the board of education of a school district can legally issue bonds under section 7629 General Code, within the limitations of that section, for the purpose of completing a school building constructed to present condition from the proceeds of bonds issued on a vote of the electors of the school district, of course lead to an approval of the present issue of bonds so far as this question is concerned.

You will recall that in reaching this conclusion with respect to the authority of a board of education to issue bonds under section 7629 General Code on the facts presented in the case of the Canton city school district bonds I took a position adverse to that reached by my predecessors, Mr. Hogan and Mr. Turner.

Not knowing but that perhaps the fact of such prior adverse rulings might have had some influence in causing you to finally reject the Canton city school district issue, I have here deemed it but fair to you to point out that the same question is involved with respect to the issue of bonds now under consideration.

Inasmuch as the corrected transcript relating to this bond issue presents no questions other than that above mentioned, I am of the opinion that the proceedings relative to said issue are in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind, and that properly prepared bonds covering said issue on bond form submitted will, when properly signed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of Ashley village school district.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CLERK HIRE—COUNTY SURVEYOR AND AUDITOR LIABLE FOR AMOUNT PAID IN EXCESS OF THAT ALLOWED BY COMMISSIONERS—COMMISSIONERS AND TREASURER NOT LIABLE FOR SUCH EXCESS.

1. Under sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70), the county surveyor and the county auditor are liable for any amount paid out for clerk hire in excess of that allowed by the county commissioners.

2. Under these sections neither the county treasurer nor the county commissioners are liable for any excess so paid out for clerk hire for the county surveyor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication which reads as follows:

"We desire to call your attention to an opinion of Attorney General Timothy S. Hogan, Annual Report for 1913, Vol I, page 200, and to an opinion in the Annual Report for 1915, Vol. I, page 703, in which Attorney General Turner approves the former opinion of Mr. Hogan touching the matter of clerk hire in the offices of the salaried officials of the county and the findings that should be made by this department when the amount set aside is exceeded.

We desire to have your written opinion as to whether these opinions can be applied with equal force in instances where the amount is set aside by the county commissioners for the payment of necessary assistants, deputies, draftsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes in the office of the county surveyor as provided by sections 2787 and 2788 G. C.

We take it that no findings could be made against the commissioners, as they are not limited by any maximum in making the allowance, but where the amount is exceeded, should you hold that the previously mentioned opinions are applicable, to hold against the county surveyor for certifying the payment, against the county auditor for issuing the warrant, and against the county treasurer for paying same, or is the county treasurer not presumed to have any knowledge of the maximum allowed?"

We will consider what my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan and Hon. Edward C. Turner, found in the opinions to which you refer. They held:

1. That when a county auditor issues a voucher for the payment of clerk hire in excess of the county commissioner's allowance for clerk hire, he is liable for the amount so paid in excess of the allowance.

2. That a county officer, certifying to the county auditor compensation for his deputies, assistants, etc., in excess of the aggregate amount allowed his office by the county commissioners, is liable to the county for the amount so paid in excess of the allowance of the county commissioners.

3. Excepting in cases where the county commissioners make an allowance greater than that provided in section 2980-1 G. C. and the county treasurer pays out said excess, he is not liable for paying out moneys in excess of the allowance made by the county commissioners for clerk hire in any county office, for the reason that he has received no notice of the action of the county commissioners in fixing an aggregate allowance.

4. That if the county commissioners allowed an aggregate amount for clerk hire in any county office, in excess of the amount set forth in section 2980-1 G. C., they are liable for the excess allowed over and above that provided for in said section, provided the county officer to whom the allowance is made expends for clerk hire an amount in excess of that provided in said section.

Messrs. Hogan and Turner were placing a construction upon sections 2980, 2980-1 and 2981 G. C.

You desire to know whether the findings of Messrs. Hogan and Turner could be made to apply to the county surveyor in the same matters upon which they passed in said opinions. In considering this question it will be necessary for us to compare sections 2787 and 2788 G. C. (107 O. L. 70) with the sections pertaining to other county officials and upon which Messrs. Hogan and Turner placed a construction.

When we compare section 2787 with section 2980 and section 2788 with section 2981, we find there is no material difference between these sections. Section 2980-1 provides for a maximum percentage allowance by the county commissioners for clerk hire for the probate judge, auditor, treasurer, clerk of courts, sheriff and recorder. There is no such provision for clerk hire for county surveyors.

Section 2981 G. C. reads as follows:

"Such officers may appoint and employ necessary deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes for their respective offices, fix their compensation and discharge them, and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. Such compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate for each office the amount fixed by the commissioners for such office. When so fixed, the compensation of each duly appointed or employed deputy, assistant, bookkeeper, clerk and other employe shall be paid monthly from the county treasury, upon the warrant of the county auditor."

Section 2788 (107 O. L. 70) reads in part as follows:

"The county surveyor shall appoint such assistants, deputies, draughtsmen, inspectors, clerks or employes as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, but compensation shall not exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed therefor by the county commissioners or allowed by a judge of the court of common pleas of the county. After being so fixed such compensation shall be paid to such persons in monthly installments from the general fund of the county upon the warrant of the county auditor. * * *"

It will be noted that the only material difference between these two sections is that section 2981 makes this provision:

"* * * and shall file with the county auditor certificates of such action. * * *" that is, his action in the appointment of his deputies, assistants, clerks, bookkeepers or other employes and fixing their compensation; while section 2788, supra, makes no provision in reference to this particular matter. So that under section 2981 G. C. the county auditor would have notice of the appointments and salaries of deputies and assistants, while under section 2788 he would have no such notice. However, he would have notice of the action of the county commissioners in fixing the aggregate amount which should be spent in any one year by the county surveyor, as shown by the journal of the county commissioners which is kept in the office of the county auditor.

Without quoting from the opinions of Messrs. Hogan and Turner, above referred to, I approve and confirm said holdings and am of the opinion that the same principles laid down by them as applying to the probate judge, auditor, treasurer, clerk of courts, sheriff and recorder, would also apply to the county surveyor, with one exception which I shall note later on.

Hence it is my view that:

1. The county auditor would be liable for any amount for which he might issue his warrants in excess of the amount which was fixed by the county commissioners as clerk hire for the county surveyor in any one year.

2. The county surveyor himself would be liable for any amount which he might certify to the county auditor, in excess of the aggregate amount allowed him by the county commissioners as clerk hire for any year, provided, of course, that the county auditor drew his warrants for such excess and the same was paid out by the county treasurer.

3. The county treasurer would not be liable for such excess so paid out by him in honoring warrants issued by the county auditor, for the reason that he has no notice of the amount so fixed by the county commissioners, and for the further reason that his records as to the condition of any particular fund are not as definite and minute as those of the county auditor.

4. The county commissioners would in no case be liable for the allowance made for clerk hire to the county surveyor, for the reason that there is no maximum allowance fixed by law for his office. In other words, there are no such provisions as those found in section 2980-1 G. C., which apply to the county surveyor.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

AUTOMOBILE—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES HAVE NO AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE FOR THEIR OWN USE OR THE USE OF TOWNSHIP HIGHWAY SUPERINTENDENT.

Township trustees have no authority in law to purchase an automobile for their own use and for the use of the township highway superintendent.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1918.

HON. T. R. ROBISON, Prosecuting Attorney, Mansfield, Ohio. L

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 22, 1918, in which you request my opinion on the following matter:

> "A township board of trustees has asked my opinion whether or not it has the legal authority to purchase an automobile for the use of said trustees and the township highway superintendent."

The above question is decided mainly by section 3373 G. C. (107 O. L. 93). Said section, in so far as it relates to the matter under consideration, reads as follows:

> "Sec. 3373. * * * Township trustees are hereby authorized to purchase or lease such machinery and tools as may be deemed necessary for use in maintaining and repairing roads and culverts within the township. They shall have the power to purchase such material and to employ such labor and teams as may be necessary for said purpose, or they may authorize the purchase or employment of the same by one of their number or by the township highway superintendent at a price to be fixed by the township trustees. All payments on account of machinery, tools, material, labor and teams shall be made from the township road fund as provided by law. All purchases of materials, machinery and tools, shall, where the amount involved exceeds one hundred dollars, be made from the lowest responsible bidder after advertisement made in the manner hereinbefore provided. * * *"

The part of the above quoted matter which is particularly in point is as follows:

"Township trustees are hereby authorized to purchase or lease such machinery and tools as may be deemed necessary for use in maintaining and repairing roads and culverts within the township."

The question to be considered is whether the word "machinery" or the word "tools" is broad enough to include automobiles within its meaning. I am of the opinion that neither of said words is broad enough, in its ordinary, accepted meaning, to include automobiles. In considering the above quotation from said section 3373, it is evident that the legislature did not intend that "machinery" and "tools" should include automobiles.

The machinery and tools are purchased or leased "for use in maintaining and repairing roads and culverts." It could hardly be said that an automobile directly or indirectly could be used in maintaining or repairing roads and culverts.

This section further provides that the payments for machinery, tools, etc., shall be made from the township road fund, which would indicate that the idea the legislature had in mind, in using the language found in said section, was that the different articles purchased are to be used altogether upon the roads of the township; else the provision would not have been made that the same be paid for from the township road fund.

The township trustees desire to purchase an automobile to be used not only by the township highway superintendent, but by the trustees themselves in the transaction of their business. Much of the business of the trustees has nothing to do with the roads of the township, and therefore it could not be held that it was the intention of the legislature, in enacting this section, to include authority for the trustees to purchase an automobile for their own general use, as well as the use of the township highway superintendent.

This section further provides that all purchases of machinery and tools shall be made from the lowest responsible bidder, if the cost of the same exceeds one hundred dollars. I do not think this provision could be made to apply to the purchase of automobiles, and therefore the legislature did not intend that automobiles should be included in the terms used in section 3373, supra.

There is another act of the same legislative body passed one day after the act which includes section 3373 was passed, which throws some light upon the question under consideration. This act is found in 107 O. L. at p. 585, and gives authority to the county commissioners to purchase one or more automobiles for the use of the county commissioners and the county sheriff. This act is very specific and definite in its provisions and in it the power and authority of the county commissioners are very much restricted, in that they are first compelled to file an application in the court of common pleas and secure an order from the court, before they are authorized to purchase an automobile. While this is not conclusive, yet it cannot be held that the legislature intended to give power and authority to the township trustees to purchase an automobile for their own use and for the use of the township highway superintendent, under such uncertain authority as is found in section 3373, supra, when it gave the same power to the county commissioners in such specific and definite terms, and at the same time hedged it about in the manner set out in the act to which reference is herein made.

In view of all the above, it is my opinion that the township trustees have no authority in law to purchase an automobile for their own use and for the use of the township highway superintendent.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

WHEN ROAD IMPROVEMENT COMPLETED UNDER CASS LAW, ASSESSMENT MUST BE MADE IN ACCORDANCE WITH SAID ACT.

In those road improvements in which application for state aid was made under the Cass act and the improvement constructed and completed under said act, the assessment against abutting property owners would be made in accordance with the provisions of section 1214 as it stood in the Cass act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1918.

HON. FRANKLIN J. STALTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 17, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "In 1913-14-15 and 16 and prior to the taking effect of house bill No. 3 (300) which amended the 'Cass law,' the commissioners of Wyandot county, Ohio, made application to the state highway department, in regular form, for state aid in the construction and improvement of several intercounty highways within this county.
>
> The improvements were constructed and completed under the 'Cass law,' and before the amendments above referred to.
> When the application was made and the roads constructed and completed, section 1214 General Code of Ohio (106 Session Laws 637) read as follows:
> '* * * The township trustees shall apportion the amount to be paid by the owners of the abutting property according to the benefits accruing to the owners of the land so located. * * *'
> Before the state highway commissioner ascertained and reported the costs and expenses as provided by section 1211 of the General Code, and consequently before the trustees made any apportionment as provided by the above mentioned section 1214, said section 1214 was amended (107 O. L. 129) to read as follows:
>
> '* * * The county commissioners or township trustees upon whose application the improvement is made shall cause the county surveyor to make a tentative apportionment of the amount to be paid by the owners of the property specially assessed which apportionment shall be made according to the benefits accruing to the land so located. * * *'
> Said section also provides that the commissioners or township trustees may approve and confirm said assessments as reported by the surveyor or modified by them.
>
> Section 3 of the act amending the 'Cass law' (107 O. L. 141) provides that priority rights or contracts are not affected.
> I would be pleased to have an expression from your department as to whose duty it is, in the roads above referred to, to make the assessments, whether it is the duty of the trustees or the duty of the county commissioners, and if it be the duty of the trustees, is it the surveyor's duty to make a tentative apportionment according to benefits?"

Your question, briefly stated, is as to whether the assessment against abutting property owners for a road improvement would be made according to the provisions of section 1214 G. C. as it stood in the Cass highway act, or under the provisions of section 1214 as amended in the White-Mulcahy law, where application was made for state aid under the Cass act and the improvement was constructed and completed while the Cass act was in force and effect, and the assessment of the part of the cost and expense to be borne by abutting property owners is to be made after the White-Mulcahy law became effective.

The first question to be determined is as to whether an improvement of a public highway would be such a proceeding as would come within the provisions of section 3 of the White-Mulcahy law. It undoubtedly would come under section 26 G. C., but inasmuch as section 2 of the White-Mulcahy law embodies certain saving clauses which are more limited than those set out in section 26, it might be held that section 26 would not apply in a proceeding coming under the White-Mulcahy law.

In an opinion rendered by me on July 16, 1917, to Hon. Clinton Cowen, State Highway Commissioner, and found in Vol. II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 1231, I held that a matter having to do with a road improvement is such as would come under section 3 of the White-Mulcahy law.

If a road improvement is a proceeding within the purview of section 3 of the White-Mulcahy law, the next question to be considered is as to when the proceeding would be pending so as to bring it within the saving provisions of said section 3. In the opinion rendered to Mr. Cowen, above noted, I held as follows, in regard to the particular time at which a road improvement could be considered as a pending proceeding (p. 1236):

> "The question now is as to when the first step in the matter of a road improvement is taken, because the law which is in force and effect at the time of the taking of said first step will control in the further steps involved in the proceeding. It is my opinion that the first step is taken when the state highway commissioner approves the application of the county commissioners for the improvement of the intercounty highways or main market roads of the county, or when he approves any part of said highways for which application has been made, and orders the county surveyor to prepare plans, profiles, specifications, etc., for said improvement."

Under this holding of course the improvements about which you speak were pending at the time the White-Mulcahy law became effective on June 28, 1917.

In the same opinion on p. 1236 thereof, I reached the following conclusion:

> "Hence, if this approval of the state highway commissioner was made and his ordering the county surveyor to make plans, specifications, etc., for an improvement occurred before June 28, 1917, then your department would proceed under the provisions of the old law. But if these steps have been taken since the 28th day of June, 1917, the provisions of the new law would control in the matter of your further proceedings."

Hence from the above it is evident that the assessment against abutting property owners for their share of the cost and expense of the improvement would be made in accordance with the provisions of section 1214 G. C., as it existed in the Cass highway act and not as it was amended in the White-Mulcahy law, and therefore the county surveyor would make no tentative assessment as provided in section 1214 G. C., in the White-Mulcahy law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

AN EMPLOYE OWNING STOCK IN THE CORPORATION IS ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW.

The fact that an employe is a stockholder in the corporation by which he is employed, does not affect his right to claim compensation under the workmen's compensation act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 29, 1918.

HON. FRANKLIN J. STALTER, Prosecuting Attorney, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted the following request for my opinion:

> "Under the workmen's compensation law is a person who holds stock in a corporation and works for the corporation barred from receiving benefits for an injury done to him?"

Employers in this state, who are subject to the provisions of the workmen's compensation act, are designated by section 1465-60, of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Sec. 1465-60. The following shall constitute employers subject to the provisions of this act:
> 1. The state and each county, city, township, incorporated village and school district therein.
> 2. Every person, firm, and private corporation including any public service corporation that has in service five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written."

The terms "employe," "workman," and "operative," as used in the act, are defined in section 1465-61, paragraph 2, of which, reads as follows:

> "2. Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract or hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer."

Other provisions of the act, which it is not necessary to quote here, provide that the employes mentioned in the above quoted paragraph of 1465-61, are entitled to benefits of the workmen's compensation act.

There is no exception made in the act, as to employes who are also stockholders of the corporation by which they are employed, and therefore, provided a contract of employment exists, by which the employe is hired to work for the employer, he would be entitled to the benefits of the act and the fact that he was a stockholder in the corporation with which his contract of hire was made, would be immaterial. In other jurisdictions it has been held that officers of corporations were entitled to the benefits of the compensation act, if a contract of hire existed.

In Honnold on Workmen's Compensation, Vol 1, page 173, it is stated:

> "Nor, as a general rule, will it preclude one from being an employe * * * that he is an officer or director of the corporation employing him. It is essential, however, that some wages be in fact paid or payable."

In Kennedy v. Kennedy Mfg. Co., The Bulletin, N. Y., Vol. 1, No. 5, p. 12, it is held that an officer of a corporation, even though he be a principal stockholder, is not debarred from compensation by that reason alone.

Bowne v. S. W. Bowne Company, The Bulletin, N. Y., Vol. 1, No. 12, page 17, it is held that an officer or director of a company is nevertheless an employe of the company, where he receives regular wages and performs regular duties of an employe of the business.

In Cantor v. Rubin Musicant Company, 3 N. Y. State Dept. Reports 393, it is held that a mechanic operating a machine at a day wage of an employe, was an employe, even though he was president and stockholder of the employing company.

From these holdings, as to the right of officers of corporations to claim compensation, and from the fact that no exemption appears in the Ohio act, either directly or indirectly, as to such right on the part of stockholders, my opinion is that the fact that an employe happens to be a stockholder in a corporation, would have no bearing upon his right to claim compensation as its employe.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN BOARD OF TRUSTEES OF BOWLING GREEN STATE NORMAL SCHOOL AND THE FINCH ENGINEERING COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, April 30, 1918.

DR. H. B. WILLIAMS, President Bowling Green State Normal School, Bowling Green, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted to this department for approval contract entered into by the board of trustees of your college and The Finch Engineering Company, of Bowling Green, Ohio, on the 19th day of March, 1918, for the construction and completion of Court St. Mall, and intersection of Court and Wayne streets, which work includes excavation, drainage, partial irrigation, illumination, stone sidewalks and curbs, tarvia pavement on concrete base, rough grading surrounding areas and about certain buildings, surfacing lawns, and removing old curbs, walks and interfering trees, according to Plan No. 60-17 "Portion of Plan for Irrigation, Electric Light and Drainage;" Plan No. 60-19 "Detail of Catch Basins and Tile Inlets;" Plan No. 60-22 "Plan of Court St. Entrance and Circle, showing curbing;" and Plan No. 60-16 "Typical Cross Section of Court St. Mall," the said contract calling for not to exceed $21,784.37.

With your contract you submit a bond securing the same, the sureties thereon being personal sureties and not a surety company. You have submitted with such bond a certificate from the county auditor of Wood county to the effect that the principals and surety have on the tax duplicate of Wood county, Ohio, property in the aggregate of $40,000, free and unincumbered, and you have assured me that your board has passed upon said bond and is satisfied as to the security thus offered.

Finding the contract to be in compliance with law, and the auditor of state having certified that there is the sum of $21,784.37 available for the purpose of said contract, I have this day approved said contract and filed the same, together with the bond securing the same, in the office of the auditor of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

P. S. I am herewith returning to you balance of papers left with us.

APPROVAL OF LEASE FOR OIL RIGHTS BETWEEN THE STATE OF OHIO AND THE BALTIMORE AND OHIO RAILROAD COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of April 24th the auditor of state transmitted a joint letter, addressed to the governor of Ohio and the attorney-general, to this office relative to a lease for oil rights to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company. Said letter of transmission is as follows:

> "In examining the condition of the school lands in Moorefield township of Harrison county we discovered that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company had a right-of-way through the extreme southwest corner. We immediately entered into correspondence with the proper official of that company and finally they accepted our price for a deed, namely, $80.00. The $80.00 stipulated is really the full value not only of the land occupied by the right-of-way but of the corner of the section which is held under lease and which lies south of the railroad, our idea in fixing this price being that if we personally owned the entire eighty acres and the railroad cut off this corner of the remaining tract we would want a price for the right-of-way based upon the assumption that we would lose the use of the corner south of the railroad.
> Obviously, the railroad company did not want to acquire the fee simple title to its right-of-way encumbered with the possibility of some state officials in the future executing or threatening to execute a lease covering the right-of-way, as this would have meant the construction or threatened construction of derricks upon the right-of-way. We solved this problem by offering to execute an oil and gas lease in perpetuity to the company but so conditioned that if they should at any time wish to exploit the underlying oil or gas the state would obtain a royalty therefor. Hence, the deed is accompanied by the proposed lease to which we desire your joint approval."

The lease in question is in triplicate, entered into on April 30, 1918, between the state of Ohio and the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, and is in consideration of one dollar and runs for a term of ninety-nine years, renewable forever. The said lease covers a strip of land one hundred and fifty feet wide, situate in the southwest quarter of section 16, township 10, range 6, and township 10, range 7, Moorefield township, Harrison county, Ohio.

Upon request the auditor of state has furnished me, under date of May 1, with the following facts:

> "In the matter of the gas and oil leases to the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company in Moorefield township, Harrison county, the agreement was as follows:
> We would execute a deed conveying the title and at the same time and as a part of the same transaction execute a lease in perpetuity for the minerals, the purpose of the lease having been stated in our previous communication to you.
> In determining the price we fixed it at a sum several times greater than the actual value of the title conveyed by the deed itself. The strip is between thirteen and fourteen hundred feet long cutting through the southwest corner of the section, and we doubt very much whether the adjoining land would yield to the state in excess of fifteen to twenty dollars per acre. In other words, the consideration determined upon contemplated the execution of the lease which you have for your approval."

The lease is submitted for approval under the provisions of section 3209-1 of the General Code.

Having carefully considered the matter, I have attached my approval to the said lease and herewith transmit the same to you for such action as you may deem advisable.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASE FROM THE STATE OF OHIO TO THE MIAMI CONSERVANCY DISTRICT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On the 24th day of April the auditor of state submitted a letter addressed to the governor of Ohio and the attorney-general to the following effect:

> "We are herewith transmitting deeds conveying school lands in Bath township, Greene county, Ohio, to the Miami conservancy district. Also a lease covering a portion of the lands included in the aforesaid conveyances.
> The conservancy district is primarily acquiring these lands for the purpose of exchanging a new right-of-way to the railroad company for the old right-of-way of the company. The railroad company has demanded as good a title to the new right-of-way as they have to the old.

In order that we may, as nearly as possible, give them such absolute title, we have executed and submit for your approval a mineral lease which is confined to the bounds of the right-of-way only and does not include all of the lands conveyed in the deeds."

At the same time the auditor of state submitted a lease in triplicate from the state of Ohio to the Miami conservancy district whereby the state of Ohio, in consideration of one dollar and all royalties, covenants, stipulations and conditions contained in said lease, does demise, grant, lease and let unto the Miami conservancy district for the term of ninety-nine years all oil deposits and natural gas in or under certain real estate located in section 16, in the civil township of Bath and in the county of Greene, said lease having been submitted for approval under section 3209-1 of the General Code.

On request for further information we have received from the auditor of state, under date of May 1, 1918, the following:

"In the matter of the oil and gas leases to the Miami conservancy district the agreement was as follows:

The Miami conservancy district, being lessees of certain lands in Bath township, Greene county, made application to this department under section 43-1 of the Garver act, 107 O. L. 357, for the execution of deeds. Upon investigation for the purpose of determining the price it developed that a part of the lands for which they desired to secure a deed were to be conveyed by the district to the Big Four Railroad as a right-of-way instead of the present right-of-way of that railroad which runs over what will be a part of the flooded district.

We determined upon a price which would move from the conservancy district to the trust and in fixing the sum had in contemplation the execution of leases for oil and gas covering the right-of-way and also the fact that the right-of-way passed over a gravel hill and that it would be necessary to make a very deep cut through that hill; hence, the provision in the lease that the railroad company could remove and use that gravel throughout the length and width of the right-of-way of the railroad company. The price determined upon is considerably in excess of the true value of the lands considered from the point of view of the act under which the original leases to these lands were executed; that is to say, much in excess of the value of the lands in their uncultivated and unimproved condition, but having the same advantages as adjoining lands."

I am assured by the auditor of state that the lands described in the lease submitted for approval cover only the right-of-way to be conveyed to the railroad company by the Miami conservancy district.

In view of the fact that the Miami conservancy district is acquiring the lands described in the lease for the purpose of transferring the same to the railroad company as a right-of-way to replace the present right-of-way and said lease is granted for the sole purpose of protecting said railroad in its said right-of-way, I have this day approved the same and forwarded the same to you for such action as you may deem proper.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF DEED FROM OSCAR AND HARRIET P. BAKER TO THE STATE OF OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent Board of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of April 30, 1918, in which you enclose, for my consideration, a deed for certain lands situated in Walnut township, Fairfield county, made to the state of Ohio by Oscar and Harriet P. Baker.

I have carefully examined said deed, find it correct in form and legal, and that it in all respects protects the rights of the state in reference to the lands therein deeded.

I am therefore returning the same to you with my approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN BUTLER, CLERMONT AND SANDUSKY COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letters of April 29 and 30, respectively, enclosing, for my approval, final resolutions for the following named improvements:

Cincinnati-Hamilton road, I. C. H. No. 39, Sec. "F," Butler county, types "A" and "B."

Ohio river (Cincinnati-Pomeroy) road, I. C. H. No. 7, Sec. "I," Clermont county.

Fremont-Port Clinton road, I. C. H. No. 277, Sec. "P," Sandusky county, "types "A," "B," "C" and "D."

I have carefully examined said resolution, find the same correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning them to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE LIBERTY MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 3, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have examined the proposed articles of incorporation of The Liberty Mutual Insurance Company, and find said articles to be in accordance, both as to purpose and execution, with the provisions of section 9607-2 General Code, as amended 107 Ohio Laws 647; and finding the same not to be inconsistent in any degree with the constitution and laws of the state of Ohio or of the United States, the same are approved. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL MAY FIX A GRADUATED SCALE OF COMPENSATION FOR A PARTICULAR POSITION.

Under the provisions of section 4214 G. C. a city council may fix a graduated scale of compensation for a particular position based upon the number of years of service of the occupant thereof, providing thereby for the person holding said position to receive more for his second year of service than for his first, and more for his third year than for his second, etc.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication requesting my opinion on the following:

> "A municipality of the state of Ohio by ordinance adopted specializations and classifications of personal service covering all appointive positions, fixing the compensation for all in the manner which we shall illustrate by the following position of filter operator. 'Salary rates $1,080, $1,140, $1,200.' This means $1,080 for the first year's service of the incumbent; $1,140 for the second year's service of the same person; $1,200 for the third year's service. This is the general plan covering all the positions mentioned.
> Question 1: Is such procedure legal?
> Question 2: Does such procedure conform to the provisions of section 4214 of the General Code?"

Inasmuch as I do not have a copy of the ordinance fixing the salary or compensation of the filter operator, which you have referred to, before me, I am assuming that said ordinance provides for a graduated salary or compensation for the occupant of the position of filter operator, dependent upon the number of years of service in said position, the salary being as you state in your communication, $1,080 for the first year of service, $1,140 for the second year and $1,200 for the third year.

The questions that you ask in your communication request, as I take it, my opinion on the point as to whether a municipal council may fix the compensation or salary of a municipal employe upon a graduated basis dependent upon the period of service.

Section 4214 G. C. reads:

> "Except as otherwise provided in this title, council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation, and the amount of bond to be given for each officer, clerk or employe in each department of the government, if any be required. Such bond shall be made by such officer, clerk or employe, with surety subject to the approval of the mayor."

This section provides for the fixing of the salary and compensation of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government and grants to the city council the general power to determine and fix the salaries and compensation of such officers, clerks and employes.

In the instant case the city council has fixed the compensation of the filter operator at three different amounts, depending upon the number of years of service, and allowing more compensation for the second and third years of service than for the first. The city council fixed this basis of compensation upon the theory, no doubt, that a person who had rendered a year's service as a filter operator would be more efficient during his second year of service and would be worth more to a municipality during said second year than he would during the first year and would likewise be more valuable during the third year of service than during the second year. Such a basis of fixing compensation is a reasonable one, as I view it, and is the method used by the federal government and private employers for the ascertainment of the amount of compensation that is paid to employes who have been in their service for an extended period of time.

I therefore advise you that it is my opinion that a city council may provide legally for a graduated scale of compensation based upon the number of years of service and may provide for the occupant of a particular position to receive more for his second year of service than he does for his first and more for his third year than for his second year.

I am returning herewith copy of the report of the Bureau of Municipal Research of the city of Akron on the standardization of salaries, which you transmitted to me with your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WILLIAMS COUNTY—$36,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Williams county, Ohio, in the sum of $36,000.00, to pay the shares of said county and benefited property and a part of the share of Madison township, said county, of the improvement of a certain section of intercounty highway No. 306 in said county and township.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Williams county, Ohio, and of other officers relating to the above bond issue, and after an examination of the same and the files of the state highway commissioner relating to said improvement (a part of which files I have had copied and made a part of the transcript), I have arrived at the conclusion that the proceedings of the duly authorized officers of said county and the state relating to said improvement and to this issue of bonds are in substantial conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to improvements of this kind and bond issues therefor.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that bonds prepared in due and proper form covering the above issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be delivered covering said issue was submitted with and as a part of said transcript, and I am therefore holding said transcript until said bond form is submitted for my approval.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOND ISSUE FOR SCHOOL PURPOSES—HOW LEVY FOR INTEREST AND SINKING FUND PURPOSES SHOULD BE MADE—DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF RUSHVILLE UNION SCHOOL DISTRICT, FAIRFIELD COUNTY, OHIO—$46,000.00.

Where serial bonds are issued by a board of education for school purposes, section 11 of article XII of the state constitution requires provision to be made for a levy of taxes for both interest and sinking fund purposes during the entire number of years between the incurring of the indebtedness and the date of the maturity of the last of the series; and where the resolution of the board of education providing for the issue of serial bonds bearing the date of March 1, 1918, by its terms provides that the first annual levy for interest and sinking fund purposes shall be made in 1919, such resolution is illegal and the bonds therein provided for should be rejected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

IN RE: Bonds of Rushville union school district, Fairfield county, Ohio, in the sum of $46,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a site for and erecting and furnishing a school building in said school district.

I am herewith returning to you without approval transcript of the proceedings of the board of education and other officers of Rushville union school district relating to the above bond issue. The proceedings relating to this bond issue are for the most part regular and in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind. They are, however, defective in one particular, which in my opinion is fatal to the validity of said issue.

The resolution providing for this bond issue provides that said bonds shall be dated March 1, 1918, and be in the sum of one thousand dollars each, and be numbered from one to forty-six inclusive. It is provided that bond No. 1 shall mature March 1, 1920, and that one bond shall mature each six months thereafter until all of said bonds shall have matured and become due and payable; all of said bonds shall bear interest at the rate of five per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on March 1st and September 1st of each year after the date of said bonds. That part of the resolution of the board of education providing for this issue of bonds which relates to the matter of tax levies for the purpose of paying the interest on said bonds and creating a sinking fund to pay the principal thereof at maturity reads in part as follows:

> "Be it further resolved by the said board of education that for the purpose of providing funds to pay the interest on the aforesaid bonds as the same fall due and also to create and maintain a sinking fund sufficient to discharge the principal of said bonds at maturity, there shall be and is hereby levied on all the taxable property of said Rushville union school district, Fairfield county, Ohio, in addition to all other taxes, the following direct annual tax, to-wit: For the year 1919 a tax sufficient to produce a net sum of three thousand four hundred and fifty dollars ($3,450.00), for interest falling on September 1, 1918, March 1, 1919, and September 1, 1919, and six hundred dollars ($600.00) to supplement principal falling due in 1920 and 1921."

The resolution further specifies the amount that shall be levied annually for interest and for principal on said bonds for the years 1920 to 1942 inclusive.

It is obvious that the above provisions of said resolution providing for tax levies to meet the principal and interest on these bonds do not conform to the requirements of section 11 of article XII of the state constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

My predecessor, Hon. T. S. Hogan, in an opinion to Hon. Lee Warren James, city attorney, Dayton, Ohio, September 12, 1914 (Reports of the Attorney-General for 1914, Vol. II, page 1224), construing this section of the state constitution, held that where serial bonds are issued by a political subdivision provision should be made for an annual levy of taxes for the retirement of the indebtedness considered as a unit and that such levies should be substantially equal in amount and distributed over the entire number of years between the incurring of the indebtedness and the date of the maturity of the last of the series. This proposition to my mind is the correct interpretation of the letter and spirit of this provision of the state constitution and is a proposition which cannot be too often impressed upon the official conscience of members of boards of education of school districts and of officers of other political subdivisions who, under the law, are authorized to issue bonds. The provisions of the resolution providing for this bond issue exclude the making of a levy in the year 1918 for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to the bonds therein authorized and provided for. This to my mind is not only unwarranted but directly contrary to the letter and spirit of the constitutional provision above quoted. From the terms of said resolution it appears that the board of education is depending upon the tax levy to be made in the year 1919 for the purpose of paying interest falling due on September 1, 1918, March 1, 1919 and September 1, 1919. This being so, it is obvious that so far as the proceeds of any tax levies authorized by this resolution are concerned a default is bound to occur with respect to interest coupons becoming due and payable on the dates above mentioned.

Moreover, the amount of taxes directed to be levied in the year 1919 is wholly insufficient to meet the principal and interest on said bonds maturing in the year 1920 when the proceeds of said levy for the year 1919 will become available according to the terms of the resolution on the first of said bonds will mature on March 1, 1920. At this time the amount of interest that will be due upon the whole issue is the sum of $4,600.00. Adding to this amount the principal of said bond makes a total of $5,600.00, which will be due and payable March 1, 1920. On October 1, 1920, the second of said bonds will mature, at which time there will also be due additional interest in the amount of $1,125.00, making a total of $2,125.00 due and payable October 1, 1920, and making a total of $7,725.00 of principal and interest due and payable in said year.

I have made no computation to ascertain whether or not the specific amounts directed to be levied in each of the subsequent years will be sufficient to pay principal and interest on bonds maturing in the years when said respective tax levies become available, but the above is sufficient to show that this bond issue should be disapproved for the reasons stated. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNCIL—MEMBER MAY NOT HOLD OTHER OFFICE OR PUBLIC EMPLOYMENT—FINDINGS.

1. The inhibition found in section 4207 G. C. against holding another public office is not limited to office in or appointment by the municipality, but extends to all public offices and employments.

2. Whenever a member of council accepts and holds any other public office or employment, he ipso facto forfeits his office of councilman.

3. Where a member of a city council at the same time holds the position of superintendent of booth and assistant clerk of the election board, no finding can be made against him for the amount of compensation drawn by him as such superintendent and assistant clerk.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have asked me to advise you upon the following matter:

> "A duly elected and qualified member of council of the city of Akron, Ohio, while occupying his position as councilman and performing the duties thereof, was employed as superintendent of booths for the board of elections and at other times was employed as assistant clerk of the board of elections drawing compensation for such work in addition to his compensation as member of council. We are referring you to the provisions of section 4207 G. C.

QUESTION: Can this department hold the person named herein for the compensation drawn as superintendent of booths and assistant clerk of the board of elections?"

The question is to be determined from an interpretation of section 4207 G. C. which prescribes the qualifications of council in cities, and among other things this section provides:

"* * * Each member of council shall be an elector of the city, shall not hold any other public office or employment, except that of notary public or member of the state militia, * * *. A member who ceases to possess any of the qualifications herein required, * * * shall forthwith forfeit his office."

It has been held in this state that the inhibition against a person holding other public office or employment is not limited to an office in or employment by the municipality, but extends to all public offices and employments.

State ex rel. v. Gard, 8 C. C. (N. S.) 599; affirmed, 75 O. S. 606.

In volume II of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1911-1912 at p. 1180, one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, held as follows under date of May 3, 1911: (Syll.)

"A member of council who accepts the position of probation officer, ipso facto, forfeits his position as councilman, and is legally entitled to compensation received as probation officer."

In that opinion attention is called to the fact that the section fixing the qualifications of members of council under the Revised Statutes was section 1717 and read as follows:

"* * * no member of council shall be eligible to any other office, or to a position on any board provided for in this title, or created by law, or ordinance of council, except as provided in the seventh division of this title."

This section was considered in the case of State ex rel. v. Kearns, 47 O. S. 566, the fifth branch of the syllabus of which reads as follows:

"The appointment by a city council of a member thereof to an office which the statute makes a member of council ineligible to fill, and his acceptance thereof, does not work an abandonment of his office as councilman. The appointment to the second office is absolutely void."

It will be noted that there is a difference between the provisions of the Revised Statutes construed in the above opinion and those now found in the General Code. Then, a member of council was ineligible to hold any other office. Now, section 4207 G. C. provides that he shall not hold any other public office.

It is a well settled rule of the common law that he who, while occupying one office, accepts another incompatible to the first, ipso facto absolutely vacates the first office and his title is thereby terminated without any other act or proceeding. A seeming exception to this rule obtained when the statute declared that persons holding one office should be ineligible to election to another. The provision being held to incapacitate the incumbent of the first office to election to the second, it followed that any attempted election to the second would be void.

Thus in construing section 1717 R. S., in State ex rel. v. Kearns, supra, the court arrived at its conclusion in consonance with this rule. Spear, J., at p. 569, speaking of certain persons while members of council being ineligible to certain other offices to which they had been appointed, said:

> "Not being eligible, he could not become such officer, and his attempted appointment was a nullity. It could not, therefore, in law have any effect whatever upon the office which he did hold. The acceptance and entering upon the duties of a member of the decennial board, by Tibbitts, might be evidence tending to show intent to abandon the office of councilman, but standing alone does not establish it. There was no abandonment on the part of either of these men. Vogel v. The State, 107 Ind. 374; Crawford v. Dunbar, 52 Cal. 36; In re Corlis, 11 R. I. 638."

To the same effect is:

> State v. Newark, 6 N. P. 523.
> State ex rel. v. Taylor, 12 O. S. 130.
> State ex rel. v. Craig, 69 O. S. 236.

However, as stated by Mechem, in his work on Public Offices and Officers, section 429:

> "Where, however, it is the holding of two offices at the same time which is forbidden by the constitution or the statutes, a statutory incompatibility is created, similar in its effect to that of the common law, and, as in the case of the latter, it is well settled that the acceptance of a second office of the kind prohibited, operates ipso facto to absolutely vacate the first.
> No judicial determination is therefore necessary to declare the vacancy of the first, but the moment he accepts the new office the old one becomes vacant. As is said in one case, 'His acceptance of the one was an absolute determination of his right to the other, and left him "no shadow of title, so that neither quo warranto nor a motion was necessary"'".

Summers, J., in State ex rel. v. Egry, 79 O. S. 400, at p. 407, construing section 1536-613 R. S. (now section 4207 G. C.) said:

> "The qualifications here prescribed are: 1. Residence in the city and ward for one year next preceding the election. 2. That he shall be an elector of the city. 3. That he shall not hold any other public office or employment, excepting that of notary public, or member of the state militia. 4. That he shall not be interested in any contract with the city. These are 'qualifications' within that term in section 1536-612."

Inasmuch as the statute now prohibits any member from holding any other public office or employment, and further provides that a member ceasing to possess any of the qualifications required shall forthwith forfeit his office, it is my opinion that when a member of council accepted employment as superintendent of booths for the board of elections and as assistant clerk of the board of elections, he ipso facto forfeited the office of councilman.

Coming then to your specific question, I am of the opinion that your bureau cannot make a finding against such person for compensation drawn as superintendent of booths and assistant clerk of the board of elections, because at the time he performed such services he was no longer a member of council of the city of Akron.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC SERVICE—REDUCTIONS OF WATER RENTS BY SUCH OFFICIAL ON ACCOUNT OF LEAKS ON PREMISES ILLEGAL—RULES.

The director of public service is without authority to grant reductions of water rents on account of leaks which exist upon the premises of the consumer.

The rules of the waterworks cannot contain a provision permitting the director of public service to grant reductions in water rents on account of leaks occurring on the premises of the consumer.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under recent date you request my opinion upon the following:

> "Question 1: When rates have been adopted according to law for water furnished by municipal waterworks has the director of public service authority to grant reduction of 25 or 50 per cent of the charges owing to leaks which may exist upon the premises of the water consumer when the rules of the waterworks do not make any provision for such reduction?
> Question 2: Can the rules of the waterworks legally contain provision that such reductions may be made at the discretion of the director of public service?"

Section 3958 of the General Code provides that the director of public service may "assess and collect from time to time a water rent of sufficient amount in such manner as he deems most equitable upon all tenements and premises supplied with water. * * *"

Section 3957 G. C. authorizes the director of public service to make "such by-laws and regulations as he deems necessary for the safe, economical and efficient management and protection of the waterworks."

A municipal corporation in operating a water plant exercises business and administrative functions and not governmental functions and is governed largely by the same rules applicable to private corporations engaged in the same business.

> See Fretz v. Edmond, et al., 168 Pac. 800 (Okla.)
> Dillon on Municipal Corporations, Sec. 1317.

The discretion reposed in the director of public service is very wide.

Ladd v. Boston, 170 Mass. 332, 335.

While it is true that a municipal corporation in operating a waterworks does not exercise governmental functions, but solely proprietary business and administrative functions, and while it is true that a very wide discretion is placed in the director of public service in the operation thereof, nevertheless, your question as it seems to me strikes deeper than the mere operation of a waterworks. After water has been furnished to a consumer and has been through the meter, the water then is the sole property of the consumer and the same is true when the consumer pays a flat rate, either in advance or at the end of a certain period. In either case, as before stated, the water after reaching the premises of the consumer and is being distributed through pipes in the premises is the property of the consumer and if the consumer permits the same to escape by way of leakage on his premises it should be and is his loss exclusively. Therefore, I am of the opinion that no reduction can be made from the water bill for water that has been furnished. To hold otherwise would be to hold that the director of public service can remit a claim due the city for which there is no authority of statute.

Specifically answering your questions, therefore, I am of the opinion:

1. That when water rates have been adopted the director of public service is without authority to grant reductions owing to leaks which may exist upon the premises of the water consumer when the rules of the waterworks do not make any provision therefor.

2. That the rules of the waterworks cannot legally contain such a provision.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF GOVERNOR'S DEED TO A CERTAIN TRACT OF LAND IN WOOD COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 4, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Hon. George W. Ritter, of Toledo, Ohio, attorney for various persons who claim title as successors of one Gabriel Crane to certain real estate, situated in section 33, township 8 north, range 12 east, in Ross township, Wood county, has on behalf of his clients made application for a correction in the deed which was given by Hon. Mordecai Bartley, Governor of Ohio, to said Gabriel Crane on the fourth day of May, 1846. The description of the land conveyed by said deed was stated therein as follows:

> "The west part fractional section 33, township 8 N., range 12 E., containing sixty-six acres of land more or less."

It appears that section 33, referred to, is itself a fractional section. It also appears that the state of Ohio did not obtain title to the whole of said fractional section 33, but only to the eastern part thereof, which may be roughly described by drawing a direct line from a point on the north section line forty-seven (47) poles west of the northeast corner of said section to a point on the south section line six and twenty-seven hundredths (6.27) poles west from the southeast corner of said section, and which constituted a part of McCarthy's Village Reservation. This information was obtained from volume 5 of the Record of Surveys of United States Lands, page 96, and Record of Canal Lands and Selections, page 73, both records being on file in the office of the auditor of state.

It is apparent, therefore, that the description contained in the deed from the state to Gabriel Crane, hereinbefore referred to, is so indefinite as to virtually amount to a misdescription.

The tract book of the 18 range northwest, on file in the office of the auditor of state, on page 221 contains the record of the sales of section 33, town 8 north, range 12 east, whether the said lands were conveyed by the United States to the state of Ohio or not, and from the said records, which contain the names of the purchasers of the entire acreage contained in said section 33, it appears that one Perry Stevens bought eighty acres in the east part of the fractional quarter section; that William Chambers, Jr., purchased the fractional southeast quarter containing sixty-two and eighty-six hundredths (62.86) acres, and that William Oliver bought all of section 33 which was not owned by the state and which lay west of the line hereinbefore indicated, which leaves the tract of sixty-six (66) acres purchased by Gabriel Crane as the northwest sixty-six (66) acres of the lands owned by the state in said section 33 as the same is laid out on the plat books as found in the office of the auditor of state.

The said George W. Ritter, on behalf of his clients, has tendered to the state of Ohio a deed duly executed by various persons who are the successors in title of said Gabriel Crane for said "the west fractional section 33, township 8 north, range 12 east, containing sixty-six (66) acres more or less" with the request that a deed be executed by the state for the following described property:

> "The northwest sixty-six (66) acres of that part of fractional section thirty-three (33), which lies in the McCarthy's village reservation, as surveyed by Charles Roberts in 1820, and as re-surveyed by A. Rice in 1834, as appears in Plat Book Vol. 5, U. S. surveys, in the office of the auditor of state of Ohio, the same being part of the lands conveyed by the state of Indiana to the state of Ohio, in connection with the opening of the canal to connect the waters of the Wabash river with those of Lake Erie."

In said deed from the state it is recited that said deed is given

> "for the purpose of correcting the error in said deed from the state of Ohio to Gabriel Crane, above referred to, and without intending to convey to any of the aforesaid persons who do not have title properly acquired through Gabriel Crane, or any of his successors in title, any title to said premises as against any persons who have any actual right, title or interest therein."

Section 8528 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "When, by satisfactory evidence, it appears to the governor and attorney-general, that an error has occurred in a deed executed and delivered in the name of the state, under the laws thereof, or in the certificate of any public officer, upon which, if correct, a conveyance would be properly required from the state, the governor shall correct such error by the execution of a correct and proper title deed, according to the intent and object of the original purchase or conveyance, to the party entitled to it, his heirs, or legal assigns, as the case may require, and take from such party a release in due form, to the state, of the property erroneously conveyed."

Mr. Ritter claims that the description contained in the original deed from the state of Ohio to Gabriel Crane was erroneous for the reason that section 33 is itself a fractional section and the west part thereof did not and never has belonged to the state of Ohio.

I have examined into the records with considerable care and believe that the deed offered by Mr. Ritter on behalf of his clients should be accepted and the deed prepared by him for signature by the state should be executed.

I am herewith handing you two abstracts and the two deeds in question, and if you are satisfied that such error has occurred, will you not kindly execute the deed and send the same to the auditor for record and transmission to Mr. Ritter?

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DENTAL LICENSE VALID ON ITS FACE WILL BE PRESUMED TO HAVE BEEN PROPERLY ISSUED.

A dental license which purports validity upon its face will be presumed to be valid and all things necessary to be done in the issuing thereof will be presumed to have been properly done until the contrary is shown.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, May 6, 1918.

HON. HOLSTON BARTILSON, Ohio State Dental Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your request for my opinion you state:

"One H. H. holds a license to practice dentistry in the state of Ohio. The number of the said license is 4,575 and purports to have been issued July 10, 1911. The records of the state dental board do not show that the said H. H. has ever taken an examination before the board in compliance with section 1322 of the General Code, or to have paid the fee required under section 1328 of the General Code, moreover the records of the board do not show the board to have been in session on July 10, 1911.

The facts in the case are, that on or about July 26, 1911, one H. H., a citizen of Pennsylvania, was issued a license to practice dentistry in the state of Ohio by L. L. Yonkers, secretary of the Ohio State Dental Board, but without examination or the knowledge or approval of the board and the license number marked duplicate. In dating the license back evidently an attempt was made to make it agree with a former meeting of the board."

Upon my request for additional information you say:

"In compliance with your request for additional information than that contained in the records of the state dental board regarding the issuance of license No. 4575, I beg to amend the request filed in your office July, 1917, and add thereto as follows:

AMENDMENT TO REQUEST.

A meeting of the men who were members of the state dental board in 1911 was called in the office of the attorney-general February 16, 1918, to secure information regarding the issuance of license 4575, three members of the board being present. One member of the board had no knowledge that the said license had been issued. One member had no distinct recollection of the license and one member was positive the said license was issued under reciprocity with the state of Pennsylvania.

I beg to quote a letter from the secretary of the Pennsylvania State Dental Board of dental examiners:

'Philadelphia, Pa., February 26, 1918.

'Dr. H. Bartilson, Columbus, Ohio.

'My dear Doctor:—Yours of the twenty-first at hand. Reciprocity never existed between Ohio and Pennsylvania. There was a meeting in Cleveland of committees from each board, but no agreement was reached or signed.

(Signed) Alexander Reynolds, Secretary.'

I submit a letter from Dr. J. R. Owens, a member of the board in 1911, and in the same states no vote was taken on the issuance of the said license.

I beg to quote section 9 of the General Code of the state of Pennsylvania:

'Section 9, General Code of Pennsylvania: Each applicant shall also furnish to the board of dental examiners satisfactory evidence of his or her proficiency in manipulative procedure of dentistry, either by producing an example of his or her work, duly attested by the demonstrator in charge of the clinic of the college issuing his or her diploma, or by a practical demonstration of his or her skill in the presence of the examining members of the said board.'

It appears there is a conflict between the laws of Ohio and Pennsylvania and the requirements of the respective states are not equal. The law of Pennsylvania delegates the power of examination to a demonstrator of a college, while the law of Ohio requires the examination to be given by the board of examiners, or in other words, the state of Pennsylvania accepts an affidavit from a college demonstrator in lieu of an examination.

It further appears the state of Pennsylvania does not require an examination in orthodontia and oral hygiene, while the statutes of the state of Ohio requires an examination in the said subjects.

The statutes of Ohio require that an applicant for reciprocity shall hold a license under requirements equal to those of this state."

Following the meeting of certain persons who were members of the state dental board in 1911, which meeting was held in my office February 16, I received a photographed copy of the license issued to H. H., which is in words and figures as follows:

STATE DENTAL BOARD OF OHIO.

"This certifies that J. Herbert Hood, of Oil City, Pa., state, is hereby granted a license to practice dentistry in accordance with and subject to the provisions of the Revised Statutes of the state of Ohio, entitled 'An act to regulate the practice of dentistry as enacted April 7, 1908.'

Given under the hands and seal of the state dental board of Ohio at the city of Columbus, this tenth day of July, A. D. 1911.

W. D. TREMPER D. D. S.
J. R. OWENS, D. D. S.
(SEAL)
H. C. MATLACK, D. D. S., President.
L. L. YONKERS, D. D. S., Secretary."

Attached to said license is an affidavit, a duplicate copy of which is signed by three of the five persons who were members of the board at the time said license was issued. Said affidavit, except the formal parts, reads:

"That on the 10th day of July, 1911, he was a member of the state dental board of Ohio, and was secretary member of that board, and on that date there was issued to J. H. H. a license to practice dentistry in the state of Ohio, of which license the above is a correct photograph, the affiant having, at the time of signing this affidavit, seen the original, and that the signature of the affiant upon the original of said license is genuine, and was signed by the affiant as secretary of the state dental board of Ohio, after J. H. H. had been given an examination by the state dental board, which examination was satisfactory to the board, and the license was issued following the examination, and in accordance with the provisions of the law of the state of Ohio."

The facts from the above communications and as determined through said meeting of February 16th, are in substance as follows:

The state dental board held a regular meeting with all members present at the Chittenden hotel, in the city of Columbus, July 8, 1911. At said meeting certain licenses were granted and signed by the members of the board and certain other license blanks were signed by the four members of the board, viz.: W. D. Tremper, J. R. Owens, H. C. Matlack and L. L. Yonker, which latter blanks were delivered to the secretary, L. L. Yonker, that the licensees' names might be engrossed thereon as of July 10, 1911. On or about the 26th of July, 1911, in the city of Cleveland, there was held a meeting of dentists, probably the National Dental Association meeting, at which meeting J. H. H. was for a portion of the time in charge of the clinic. Following the demonstrations of the said J. H. H., a meeting of the members of the state dental board was called, and an examination was given to said J. H. H., which he passed to the satisfaction of the members of the board present and he was granted the license quoted above. The question now is, is said license a valid one.

The provisions of law governing will be found in Page and Adams Anno. Ohio General Code of 1912, part 1, title 3, division 2, chapter 22. Since that time the laws governing the state dental board have been changed, but the changes that have been made since could not affect the said license which was granted as of July 10, 1911. It was provided in section 1314 G. C. that the governor, with the advice and consent of the senate, shall appoint a state dental board, consisting of five persons, giving their qualifications and length of term. Section 1315 G. C., provided that the board shall organize by electing from its members a president and a secretary and treasurer, that the board shall hold a meeting on the third Tuesday of June and October of each year "and other meetings as it deems necessary at such times and places as the board designates." Said section also provided that "a majority of the members of the board shall constitute a quorum * * *. The board shall make such reasonable rules and regulations as it deems necessary." Acting under the aforesaid provisions, the state dental board that had theretofore been appointed, called a meeting of its members to be held at the time of said dental meeting in Cleveland, as aforesaid. It is not clear whether all the five members of the board attended said meeting, but it is sufficient that at the meeting, when the license in question was granted, the four members who signed the license were all the members of the board present thereat. The affidavits of the members, above mentioned, say that said license was granted upon examination and persons who desired to take an examination for a license were, as the law stood at that time (section 1321) each compelled to file with the secretary of the state dental board a written application for a license and furnish satisfactory proof that he is at least twenty-one years of age, with good moral character and must also furnish evidence satisfactory to the board that he is a graduate of a reputable dental college, as prescribed by the board; that said application must be on the form prescribed by the board and certified by oath.

The information given me is conflicting as to whether or not said application was properly filed. The secretary of the board, whose duty it was to receive and file the same, is of the opinion that the application was filed. A search, however, for the same at this time shows that no application can be found among the files of the board. The presumption, however, in a case of this kind, would be in favor of the validity of the act, so that when the license was executed it will be presumed that it was properly executed, unless the contrary expressly appears upon its face, and the burden of impeaching the validity would be upon the party asserting. (Throop on Public Officers, section 108.) In this instance the license appears regular upon its face and from the affidavits of a majority of the members of the board that an examination was properly held, it seems to me that we can fairly assume that the application was filed before said examination was held.

Section 1322 G. C. provided that an applicant to practice dentistry shall appear before the state dental board at its first meeting after the filing of its application and pass a satisfactory examination, consisting of practical demonstrations and written or oral tests, or both, in the following subjects: Anatomy, physiology, chemistry, materia medica, therapeutics, metallurgy, histology, pathology, bacteriology, prosthetics, operative dentistry, oral surgery, anesthetics, orthodontia and oral hygiene. Section 1323 G. C. provides that if such applicant passes the examination, he shall receive a license from the state dental board, attested by its seal and signed by the president and secretary, which shall be conclusive evidence of his right to practice dentistry in this state. The fact that other members than the president and secretary signed the license could add nothing to the validity thereof. The only signatures which were required were those of the president and secretary. But, it seems a custom prevailed among the members of the board at that time that all members present when any license was granted should sign the license and in this instance the license was signed not only by the president and secretary, but also by members Temper and Owens, who were there present. It is said, however, that a fee of only $5.00 was paid at the time said application was filed and that for that reason the license could not be properly granted.

Section 1328 G. C. provides in part:

> "An applicant for a license to practice dentistry in this state shall pay to the secretary of the state dental board the following fees:

An applicant for a license granted upon examination, twenty-five dollars. * * *

An applicant for a duplicate license granted upon proof of loss of the original, five dollars."

There is no contention that the licensee in this instance ever had a license that had been lost or destroyed and a duplicate license can only be issued if the loss of a license is satisfactorily shown. So that, all that can be urged is that the secretary should have collected the amount of $25.00 instead of the amount of $5.00, and the fact that he did not collect the entire fee would not be sufficient to invalidate a license otherwise properly granted.
