(a) May the municipal regulations thus to be enforced prescribe more rigid standards of conduct than those of the state law?

(b) May such regulations prescribe exactly the same standards of conduct as those prescribed by the state law?

(c) May such regulations impose less stringent standards of conduct than those prescribed by the state law?

(2) Under the same conditions as those set forth in the general part of the first question, may a municipal council, without setting up any local code of regulations, merely annex a municipal penalty to the violation of the state code within the territorial jurisdiction of a municipality, and thus bring prosecutions for the violation of the state code within the class of ordinance cases, and receive fines therefor into the municipal treasury? As an example of what I mean here, let your first question be interpreted so as to relate to a supposititious ordinance to the following effect:

> Be it ordained by the council of the city of _____:
> Section 1: No person shall operate a motor vehicle in the streets or alleys of the city of _____ without first securing a license therefor, as provided by the general laws of the State of Ohio.
> Section 2: Any person violating section 1 of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not to exceed ten dollars and costs, to be paid into the city treasury.

(3) Where the General Assembly has delegated police powers to municipalities, subject to general laws, i. e., non-charter cities, in general terms, relating to some subject matter, and the state laws contain specific police regulations operating within the municipal corporation, pertaining to the same subject matter, may the councils of such cities adopt specific regulations of any of the three characters mentioned in stating the first question as I have stated it, relating to the matters dealt with by the state law?

(4) Where the General Assembly of the state has not delegated any police power to non-charter municipal corporations, respecting a given subject matter, but has regulated such subject matter for the state at large, including municipal corporations, by enactments of its own, may the councils of such cities take such action as is described under the three headings in stating the first question?

(5) Your question does not require me to consider the power of a municipality, governed by the municipal code, to adopt and enforce within its limits local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, in the absence of any legislative delegation of authority to do so with respect to a given subject matter, and also in the absence of any state legislation with reference to the same subject matter. It is obvious, however, that the answer to the fourth general question, as I have phrased it, will suggest the answer to such a question.

The general part of the first of these questions, as I have phrased them, was dealt with in the opinion of 1916, which has been quoted in full. That opinion, however, did not go into detail by considering the three possible aspects of such municipal legislation as I have outlined them. I have previously stated that nothing in the decision or opinion in Fremont vs. Keating, supra, impaired the effect of so much of the opinion of 1916 as dealt with this question, and but for the appropriateness of going into detail, as I have suggested, I could rest a general affirmative answer to the first question upon the authority of the opinion of 1916. However, the detailed classification which I have suggested arises from the necessity of considering the validity of municipal regulations adopted under specific statutory authority as against the claim that they conflict with the general law on the same subject. At the present time Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution is in force and on its face purports to grant to municipal corporations " the power to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws." Without at this time considering whether this provision is self-executing and applies to all municipalities, whether they have adopted charters or not, and assuming for the moment that it might be held to apply to non-charter cities, at least to the extent that the General Assembly had delegated power to pass particular police, sanitary and other similar regulations to such cities, its effect as to such non-charter cities may be considered as in the nature of a limitation prohibiting such cities from acting under their legislative powers in such manner as to conflict with the general law.

However, as applied to such non-charter cities in this way, I do not believe that Article XVIII, section 3, adds anything to the law as it would be if the section were not in force. That is to say, in the absence of a grant of power emanating from the constitution, or any limitation in the constitution upon the local police powers of a municipality, it would, I think, necessarily be true that local police regulations, though adopted under favor of legislative delegation and authority, would have to yield to general laws when in actual conflict therewith. It must be admitted that cases on this point are not numerous in this state, for most of the cases which have held ordinances invalid as in conflict with state laws are those in which the ordinances were adopted under favor of statutory authority which either expressly or by implication was limited to the adoption of such regulations as might not be inconsistent with the state law.

City of Canton vs. Nist, 9 O. S., 439.

See the varying results in the following liquor cases:

Ackerman vs. Lima, 7 N. P. (n. s.) 93; Columbus vs. Schaere, 5 O. D. N. P., 100; Emory vs. Elyria, 8 N. P., 208; Edis vs. Butler, 8 N. P., 183.

The case which comes perhaps nearest to laying down the principle stated is that of State vs. Prendergast, 8 C. C., 401, in which a regulation of the department of health in Cincinnati, relative to qualifications for practicing medicine in Cincinnati was held to be inconsistent with the state law regulating the practice of medicine, which the court regarded as by inference authorizing all who might comply with its terms to practice medicine anywhere in the state. The following language is quoted from the opinion in the case:

> "The General Assembly itself having assumed to legislate upon the subject, and by general law, made provision as to the persons who are authorized to practice medicine in the state, unless specific and express power has been conferred upon the municipal corporation to impose additional restrictions upon, and deprive them of the right to do so, unless with the consent and approval of an officer of the city, to be enforced by fine and imprisonment, such regulations cannot be upheld, and we think no such power has been conferred."

Upon a moment's reflection it will appear that the operation of the principle now under consideration may be regarded as purely academic, for in all cases where the legislature has dealt with a given subject by passing police regulations, and has

at the same time delegated to municipal corporations the same power to enact similar police regulations respecting the same subject, the first question to be considered must necessarily be as to whether or not the General Assembly intended its general regulations to impose any limitation upon the power of the municipality to act under the authority which it had delegated to the municipality. If the answer to this question were in the affirmative, then the municipal regulations would be held invalid, because not within the grant of power which was subject to the implied limitation; if in the negative, then the municipal regulations would be upheld because the General Assembly would be deemed to have intended that its general law should be supplemented by local action under its delegation of powers to municipal corporations. In neither event would a "conflict" appear. Moreover, some of these cases come more appropriately within the third general class above set forth and must be discussed in that connection, and, as will appear from a discussion of the three subdivisions in which I have divided the first general question, cases in which a conflict might be claimed would necessarily be very rare. Therefore, with the intention of returning to this general question, after having discussed the three subdivisions thereof, I pass immediately to the subdivisions.

The second of these subdivisions may be immediately disposed of as a question of Ohio law. It has been laid down by the Supreme Court of this state in several cases, among them Koch vs. State, supra, and as late as Fremont vs. Keating, that where a municipal corporation is given power to deal specifically with a given subject matter by way of police regulation, and chooses to set up such regulations as prohibit the doing of an act already prohibited by the general law of the state, making such action a violation of its ordinances, there is no "conflict" with the general law and the ordinance is valid. Indeed, this reasoning runs through the entire gamut of the cases in Ohio, the Nisi Prius liquor cases, in which ordinances were held invalid, being predicated upon the ground that invalidity followed from the fact that the municipal ordinances did not conform to the state law.

In this connection, however, I note the existence of a line of authorities in California, and perhaps elsewhere, in which a contrary result was reached under constitutional grant of authority to local communities, couched in exactly the same terms as are now found in Article XVIII, section 3, of the Ohio constitution. California has had this provision in her constitution for a number of years and undoubtedly Ohio may be said to have borrowed the provision from the constitution of that state in 1912. It is, of course, familiar law that when the people or the legislature of one state adopt a constitutional provision, or enact a statute which has previously received a judicial interpretation in another state, it will be deemed to have done so with full knowledge of such judicial interpretation and to intend that the same meaning shall be given to the provision, constitutional or statutory, as has been given to it by adjudication in the state from which it was adopted. This rule being settled, I find myself obliged to take cognizance of the decision in Re Sic, 73 Calif., 142, to the effect that under constitutional grant of authority, to make and enforce within its limits all such police, sanitary and other regulations as are not in conflict with general laws, a city cannot pass an ordinance to punish the identical offense which is punishable by statute applicable to the state generally. However, I find the following in the opinion of the court in that case, at page 148:

> "It would seem that an ordinance must be conflicting with the general laws which may operate to prevent a prosecution of the offense under the general law. The constitution provides that no one shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense. If tried and convicted or acquitted under the ordinance, he could not be again tried for the same offense under the general law. The contrary doctrine has been held in some states, but this conclusion seems more in consonance with reason and justice."

It appears from this language that the California court worked out the idea of "conflict" upon the basis of the assumption that a person convicted of offending against an ordinance could not be convicted of the same act as an offense against the state law. The contrary, however, was held in Ohio in Koch vs. State, supra, overruling the dictum in Wightman vs. State, 10 O. 452. We are therefore obliged to work out a result by applying two principles which in this case operate in different directions. On the one hand, the principle that decisions under the constitutional provisions, adopted from another state, will be regarded as applicable to the adopted constitutional provision in the adopting state, must be taken into account; while on the other hand the fact that the decision in the state from which the adoption was made is based upon a principle which does not hold good in the adopting state must be given due weight. It is my opinion that in Re Sic does not state the law in Ohio, and whatever may be the effect of Article XVIII, section 3, upon the powers of any class of municipalities in Ohio, Koch vs. State controls on the point as to the existence of a supposed "conflict" between a municipal ordinance and the state law, both punishing the same act.

For all these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that where a non-charter municipal corporation is authorized by general law to pass police regulations upon a particular subject, and there is in force a state law embodying similar regulations respecting the same subject, the council of the municipal corporation may lawfully enact an ordinance identical in substance, though perhaps different in penalty, with the state law.

This conclusion calls for a consideration of the other two questions suggested in connection with the first of the five propositions which I have set up for discussion. Admitting that a municipality may, without conflicting with the state law, prohibit the same acts as are prohibited by the state law, or in general set up the same standard of conduct by way of police regulation as is required by the state law, does it follow that the municipality may, by its ordinance, enacted under favor of statutory authority to regulate the subject matter, set up standards of conduct which are either more drastic or more lenient than those of the state law?

This question has been likewise considered by the Suprme Court of California in Re Hoffman, 155 Calif., 114, wherein it was held that a municipal ordinance which prescribed a higher standard of purity for milk than that prescribed by state statute was not in conflict therewith and so not void under the constitution of that state. The court stated that if the city had provided that milk might be vended which contained a less percentum of butter fat than that exacted by the state law, there would be presented a plain case of conflict, as the municipality would be endeavoring to legalize that which the state had declared to be unlawful. But what the city had in fact done, the court said, was to impose not fewer but additional qualifications upon the milk which might be vended to its consumers.

On the other hand, it was held in St. Louis vs. Klausmeier, 213 Mo., 119, that an ordinance fixing a lower standard of milk than that prescribed by statutes is not in conflict with the latter, or the reasoning of the court that the legal effect of such an ordinance was not to authorize the sale of dairy products which did not equal the standard fixed by the state, but merely to impose a penalty for selling the products that did not come up to the standard fixed by the city, and thereby in no manner interfere with the state law.

There is some conflict of authority in the several states on these points and I have by no means exhausted the catalog of decisions. See 1 L. R. A., n. s., 382; 17 L. R. A., n. s., 49 (note); see also the Ohio cases above cited. However, without going exhaustively into this subject it seems to me that the recent cases which I have just cited, together with the principles which may be deduced therefrom, afford the basis for framing principles which may safely be followed in all cases. Those principles may be stated thus:

A prohibition in the state law against the doing of an act, without complying with certain conditions, may or may not be coupled with an express or implied grant of authority to do the act when the conditions are complied with. If no such grant of authority is expressed or may be implied, then a municipal ordinance passed under legislative or other power, to regulate the subject matter, does not conflict with the state law if it imposes additional restrictions upon the doing of the act—indeed in some cases if it prohibits the doing of the act altogether. The relation between the state and the municipality in this respect is something like that between the Federal government and the state with regard to the enforcement of the Federal revenue law. The Federal government may enact for the purpose of enforcing its revenue measures that it shall be an offense against that government to sell intoxicating liquors without paying a license tax. This being interpreted as not conferring any authority to do the business when the tax has been paid, either regulation or entire prohibition of the traffic by the state does not conflict with the Federal law. License tax cases, 5 Wallace, 462.

On the other hand, a municipal ordinance prohibiting the doing of the act, except upon certain conditions, and passed under favor of the legislative authority to regulate such acts, may be interpreted as not intending to authorize the doing of those acts within a municipality, when those conditions have been complied with; and if so interpreted, does not of course conflict with the state law.

Now in very few cases, if any, would a court come to the conclusion that a police regulation, negative in terms, was intended to authorize as against all other appropriate legislation, the doing of the thing regulated. Especially is this true when two given regulations are those of distinct legislative authorities and constitute distinct offenses which may be separately prosecuted. The milk cases referred to afford splendid illustrations of this. The state prohibits the sale of milk for human food containing less than six per cent butter fat. One city, having the power to regulate the sale of milk by general law, charter or self-executing constitutional provision, adopts an ordinance prohibiting the sale for human food of milk containing less than four per cent butter fat; another city passes a similar ordinance prohibiting the sale of milk within the city for human food containing less than eight per cent butter fat. There is no conflict in either of these cases between the state law and the municipal ordinance unless one can say, in the one case, that the municipal ordinance attempted to authorize milk to be sold in the city as against the requirement of the state law if it contained more than four per cent butter fat; and unless in the other case one can say that the state law intended to authorize as against any municipal enactment the sale of milk for human food containing more than six per cent butter fat. Neither of these inferences would be possible in most cases. It follows that under a state of the law like that laid down in Koch vs. State, a sale of milk containing three per cent butter fat only would violate both the state law and the municipal ordinance and could be prosecuted under both; whereas a sale of milk containing five per cent butter fat would be a violation of the state law and could be prosecuted under it but would not be a violation of the municipal ordinance; so, also, in the second city, a sale of milk containing seven per cent butter fat would be a violation of the ordinance but not of the state law, and the fact that it is not a violation of the state law would not prevent its prosecution under the ordinance, as the defendant could not claim any affirmative rights under the state law.

Not only may the municipality set up different standards of conduct from those enjoined by the state law, but in my opinion it may annex different penalties. Without going deeply into this subject I may say that no sufficient reason has suggested itself to me for denying to municipalities, having the power to regulate, the right through their councils to define the punishment that shall follow the violation of their regulations. Some restraint might be imposed by the general law in this particular, but at least in the absence of such restraint my opinion would be as stated.

For the foregoing reasons, then, I advise that municipal ordinances of the classes described in subdivision (a) and subdivision (c) of the first branch of the first question would not be invalid as conflicting with state laws on the same subjects on account of the differences which I have described, unless by express provision of the state law or the ordinance, or inferences necessarily to be drawn from either, the one or the other, as the case might be, should purport to authorize affirmatively the doing of something which the other prohibits, and moreover to extend that authority as against the prohibition of the other legislation.

But I have been unable to find any reported case dealing with an ordinance of the kind described in the second subdivision of your first question as I have framed it. Yet your first question seems to suppose the existence of some such case. I shall, therefore, deal with such case on principle.

The constitutional authority which cities, whether charter or non-charter, can claim under favor of Article XVIII, section 3, is limited to the passage of local police regulations and to the right to exercise powers of "local self-government." Neither of these grants of power would seem to authorize a municipality to annex penalties of its own to the infraction of substantive rules of conduct set up by the state legislature. Thus the police power is said to be the power to pass laws imposing restrictions and compulsions upon human conduct.

Freund, Police, section 3, et seq.

The standard of conduct is the substance of the regulation and the penalty is merely the sanction by which it is enforced. To enact that whoever violates the state law within the limits of the corporation shall be punished as for an offense against the corporation, does not set up any standard of conduct other than that set up by the state law itself, and hence is not a "local regulation." Putting it in another way, the power to punish, even though conferred upon municipalities by express provision of statute, is but an incident to the power to restrain conduct.

It would seem, therefore, that where the municipal legislation has no substantive provision of its own, but merely attempts to annex penalties to acts made illegal by state law and by that law only, such municipal legislation would not be within the purview of the power to "regulate." You will note that I do not say that it is not possible for the legislature of the state to confer upon municipal corporations power to do this very thing. The question with which I am dealing is as to whether or not that power is included in a grant of power to adopt local "regulations" upon a given subject matter. As I have said, there are few if any authorities on this point. Many cases are cited in texts to the effect that municipal corporations, when properly authorized, may annex penalties of their own to the commission of acts made illegal by state law. But most of these cases, when examined, appear to be those in which the substance of the state law was incorporated in the ordinance making it a complete piece of municipal legislation in and of itself.

I have found one dictum to the effect that such municipal legislation as I am considering would be within the purview of a delegated power to license or regulate. Robinson vs. Mayor, 1 Humph. (Tenn.), 156. I have also found one case in which legislation of this sort was inferentially condemned, Moran vs. Atlanta, 102 Ga., 840.

In that case the legislature had conferred upon municipal corporations the power to license and regulate places where intoxicating liquors were sold and in the same general law had provided that any person found guilty of selling liquor without such municipal license as might be provided by local legislation, should be punished in a certain way. The city of Atlanta exercised the power to license saloons and attempted to annex a penalty of its own to the act of conducting such a business without a municipal license. The court held that the offense was a state one and the local courts had no jurisdiction of it. The force of this decision as a precedent is weakened by the fact that the rule in Georgia with respect to the power of a municipal corporation to pass local legislation upon a subject covered by the state law, and with respect to what constitutes a "conflict" between the state law and a municipal ordinance on the same subject is much more restricted than the rule in Ohio appears to be. On reason then, and without the satisfaction of any precedents in point, I express the view that unless some state statute expressly confers upon an Ohio municipality the authority to punish state offenses by municipally defined penalties, the power to do so does not exist in an Ohio municipality. Such a conclusion necessarily decides that whatever may be the force of Article XVIII, section 3 of the Constitution respecting charter cities and non-charter cities, as distinct classes, the general grant of power therein is not specific enough to authorize any Ohio municipality to predicate thereon an ordinance of the kind now under discussion. Additional reasons for this conclusion will appear in the discussion of the next subdivision of your first question.

Thus far I have been assuming that the municipal ordinance of the kind under discussion has been adopted under favor of an express grant of specific authority to legislate upon particular subject matters emanating from the General Assembly. As examples of what I have in mind, I refer you generally to the enumeration of powers of municipal corporations found in Title 12, Division 2, Chapter 1, Part 1st, of the General Code, being sections 3615, et seq., thereof, and particularly sections 3628, 3632 to 3641 inclusive, 3650, 3651, 3657, 3659 to 3663 inclusive, 3664 et seq., and 3669 to 3676 inclusive. All these sections grant specific authority to deal with particular subjects save section 3628, which gives to municipalities general power to make the violation of ordinances a misdemeanor and to provide for the punishment thereof by fines or imprisonment, or both. Thus section 3632 G. C. grants authority to municipal corporations,

> "To regulate the use of carts, drays, wagons, hackney coaches, omnibuses, automobiles, and every description of carriages kept for hire or livery stable purposes; to license and regulate the use of the streets by persons who use vehicles, or solicit or transact business thereon; to prevent and punish fast driving or riding of animals, or fast driving or propelling of vehicles through the public highways; to regulate the transportation of articles through such highways and to prevent injury to such highways from overloaded vehicles, and to regulate the speed of interurban, traction and street railway cars within the corporation."

This section is still in force so far as express repeal is concerned. The effect upon it of the passage of the state automobile license law and the subsequent adoption of Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution, is a question with respect to the solution of which the case of Fremont vs. Keating, supra, is suggestive. When I come to deal with the specific examples given by you I shall have to decide this question. At the present, however, it is sufficient to note the specific character of the powers granted to municipal corporations by sections like section 3632. Over against sections of this character may be set such general grants of power as are found, for example, in Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution (without now deciding whether this section is self-executing and applies to non-charter cities); and also certain other sections found in the same chapter of the General Code and clearly applicable to non-chartered cities. I refer, for example, to section 3646, which grants authority to municipal corporations "to provide for the public health, to secure the inhabitants of the corporation from the evils of contagious, malignant and infectious diseases, * * *," and, section 3658 of the General Code, which grants authority to prevent riot, gambling, noise and disturbance, indecent and disorderly conduct or assemblages and to preserve the peace and good order, and to protect the property of the corporation and its inhabitants."

Section 3664 of the General Code, already mentioned, as belonging in the other class, may in part be classed with the provisions of the kind now being enumerated. In its present form it authorizes municipal corporations "to provide for the punishment of the persons disturbing the good order and quiet of the corporation, by clamor and noise in the night season, by intoxication, drunkenness, fighting, using obscene or profane language in the streets and other public places to the annoyance of the citizens, or otherwise violating the public peace by indecent and disorderly conduct, or by lewd or lascivious behavior. * * *" This section is further supplemented by sections 3665 et seq., conferring independent authority to impose and collect fines or to punish by imprisonment.

I have thus classified the grants of power which appear in the General Code (although I have not made exhaustive enumeration of them even by section) because of what is said in a very frequently cited passage in Dillon on Municipal Corporations, 5th edition, Volume 2, section 632, as follows:

> "In view of the somewhat strict construction of grants of corporate powers, elsewhere explained and illustrated, and of the subordinate nature and purposes of by-laws, the following rules, although seeming to rest on sound principles, are, in view of the decisions, stated with some distrust of their entire correctness: 1. A general grant of power, such as mere authority to make by-laws, or authority to make by-laws for the good government of the place, and the like, should not be held to confer authority upon the corporation to make an ordinance punishing an act—for example, an assault and battery—which is made punishable as a criminal offense by the laws of the State. The intention of the State that the general laws shall not extend to the inhabitants of municipal corporations, or that these corporations shall have the power, by ordinance, to supersede the State law, will not be inferred from grants of power general in their character; nor will such authority in the corporation be held to exist as an implied or incidental right. 2. Where the act is, in its nature, one which constitutes two offenses, one against the State and one against the municipal government, the latter may be constitutionally authorized to punish it, though it be also an offense under the State law; but the legislative intention that this may be done ought to be manifest and unmistakable, or the power in the corporation should be held not to exist. 3. Where the act or matter covered by the charter or ordinance, and by the State law, is not essentially criminal in its nature, and is one which is generally confided to the supervision and control of the local government of cities and towns, but is also of a nature to require general legislation, the intention that the municipal government should have power to make new, further, and more definite regulations, and enforce them by appropriate penalties, will be inferred from language which would not be sufficient were the matter one not specially relating to corporate duties, and fully provided for by the general laws. * * *."

In one of the series of elaborate notes to this section and preceding sections the learned author calls attention to a line of cases which places the offenses, which by the laws of the state are indictable, that is, felonies, in the class of those the authority of the municipal corporation to prescribe which must rest upon a more specific grant.

McQuillin on Municipal Ordinances, sections 498 and 499, after stating the problem, makes the following comment:

> "The decisions on this subject are numerous and conflicting. Perhaps on no single topic of municipal corporation law have there been so many discordant utterances even by the same courts and the same individual judges. But the best considered cases, especially the more recent ones, have properly extended the sphere of activity of the municipal corporation in dealing with police offenses. * * *
> Under the usual grant of municipal powers, which, in general terms, includes the authority to enact all necessary ordinances to preserve the peace and advance the local government of the community, the local corporation cannot provide by ordinance for the punishment of an act constituting a misdemeanor or crime by state statute. * * * It may only exercise such powers as legitimately belong to the local and internal affairs of the municipality. In the performance of such functions much latutude is often permitted. But it is entirely competent for the legislature to confer in express terms such powers as will enable the local corporation to declare by ordinance any given act an offense against its authority, notwithstanding such act has been made by statute a public offense and a crime against the state. And where a regulation of a specific matter has been thus expressly * * * given to the local corporation, whether it be intrinsically state or local, the corporation may exercise the power so conferred * * * until such time as it is legitimately withdrawn by the state. * * * The true doctrine appears to be that whether the city may exercise control of state offenses must be determined by the legislative intent. * * *."

These two comments may be pieced together into a rule to the effect that the whole problem is one of legislative intent, i. e., did the General Assembly of the State or the people, in adopting a constitutional provision, intend to give to municipalities the power to adopt local regulations upon a subject already covered by state law, or to enforce a previously adopted municipal regulation as against a subsequently enacted state law covering the same subject matter? If the grant to the municipal corporation is specific, then this question of intent is easily solved in favor of an affirmative answer; but if the language of the grant is in very general terms like, for example, "to adopt and enforce within its limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as do not conflict with general law," or, "to preserve public peace," or "to provide for the public health," it is presumed that such a grant was limited to the making of regulations upon subjects not covered by the state law, or at least peculiar to the congested territory of the municipality and not existing generally throughout the state.

Both the learned authors whom I have quoted put forward their statements rather as conclusions respecting the general trend of the cases, or their own ideas as to what the law should be, than as statements of principle supported by an unvarying line of decided cases. However, it must be conceded that in the Nisi Prius cases in Ohio these principles have been, to some extent, acted upon. Thus in Wellsville vs. O'Connor, cited in Mr. Turner's opinion, Burrows, J., quotes with approval the section which I have quoted from Dillon on Municipal Corporations.

He had before him for interpretation what are now General Code sections 3658 and 3664, which I have quoted, and the question as to whether or not, under favor of the former, a municipality might pass an ordinance defining and punishing the offense of assault and battery. He held that the latter of these two sections was a limitation upon the general power conferred by the former and that at any rate the power to punish what would otherwise be, technically, breaches of the peace, if granted generally by what was then section 1692 of the Revised Statutes (now 3658 General Code), would be limited to such breaches of the peace as might be peculiar to municipal corporations.

After citing Dillon on Municipal Corporations, he says:

> "In this state, it seems, the legislature may in its discretion allow municipalities to duplicate all misdemeanors that are not required to be prosecuted by indictment.
> Whatever disagreement may exist as to the propriety or legality of this duplication of punishment, it can not be denied that its necessity is doubtful and that in practice it may be made vexatious and oppressive.
> Certainly the fact that assault and battery is punished by the state precludes the city from claiming the right to enact this ordinance on the ground of necessity. We venture the opinion that whenever a claim is made in behalf of a corporation for the exercise of superfluous and unnecessary power it should be supported by a legislative grant so explicit in its terms as to leave no reasonable doubt or question.
> The argument that to preserve the peace is to prevent breaches of the peace, and that assault and battery is always in law, if not in fact, a breach of the peace, * * * would give a municipal corporation the power to copy and pass into ordinances the whole body of state misdemeanors. * *
> If the legislature had granted the power to prevent assaults and batteries in section 1692 and had not elsewhere in the statute limited the exercise of the power thus conferred, then a different question would be presented, * * *."

Judge Laubie, dissented in a vigorous opinion, which is equally notable for the extent of the research embodied in it. Indeed, comparison of the two opinions, both of which are distinguished for ability, but shows the difficulty of the question under discussion and the unsatisfactory state of the authorities thereon. Inasmuch, however, as Judge Burrows' decision has been cited with approval in other cases, some of which are cited in Mr. Turner's opinion, I do not feel that I would be justified in dealing with the general question which you submit, without mentioning the fact that Judge Dillon's rule has been followed, to some extent at least, in this state, and that as a result thereof it seems that the power of the municipal corporation, to pass an ordinance prohibiting and punishing an act also prohibited and punished by general law of the state, is much more doubtful where the ordinance is adopted under the assumed authority of a general grant of power like that to preserve public peace, or the public health, than it is where the ordinance is passed under an express grant of power such as that to regulate gambling, or the like.

Within the limits of this opinion this is as far as I feel called upon to go in discussing the third branch of your first general question. I may say, however, that I am unable to discern any distinction between an ordinance passed under a general grant of power upon a subject covered by state law, which defines a different substantive offense from that defined by the state law, though of one and the same essential character, and one which simply makes a municipal offense out of exactly the same act which is prohibited by the state law, with respect to the possibility of conflict between state law and local ordinance.

In dealing with the third subdivision of your first question, I conclude that if the municipality may act at all under a general grant of power upon such a subject, it may define its offense in different terms from those used in the state law, as well as in the same terms as may be used in the state law.

I wish to say also that though I have mentioned Article XVIII, section 3, in the course of the discussion in which I have just indulged, I do not mean to express a definite opinion to the effect that the rule of strict interpretation is to be applied to that constitutional provision. I simply state Judge Dillon's principle, showing that it has been followed to some extent in Ohio, and point out that section 3 of Article XVIII of the Constitution is most general in its phraseology.

It is the fourth subdivision of your first question which invokes a reconsideration of that part of Mr. Turner's opinion, which held that "the power of the councils of non-charter cities to pass ordinances prescribing a punishment, is limited to powers conferred upon municipalities by the legislature," in the light of what has emanated from the Supreme Court with respect to the effect of Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution. Difficult as are the questions which have previously been discussed in this opinion, their difficulty does not compare with the one now raised.

We must first ascertain whether Article XVIII, section 3, has any application at all to non-charter cities—a question not easy in itself; if it be decided that it has some application, we must determine whether a general grant of power of the kind embodied in Article XVIII, section 3, extends to the adoption of regulations upon subjects of a general nature with respect to which state laws might appropriately be passed, i. e., whether such subjects are "local" in character; then having ascertained the answer to this question, we must still decide under what circumstances "a local police, sanitary or other similar regulation" may be held to conflict with general law.

I may say at the outset that the question now to be discussed is, in my opinion, more or less academic. The police or regulatory powers granted to municipalities by the municipal code are so broad that any grant emanating from the constitution could scarcely enlarge them in any perceptible degree, except by giving municipal ordinances precedence over state laws in cases of conflict, which the constitution does not do. There may conceivably be a case, however, in which the power to deal with a given subject matter by way of police regulation is granted in neither specific nor general terms to municipal corporations, subject to the municipal code. Without examining the statutes and exercising the imagination to ascertain whether or not there is such a case, I pass to a discussion of what was decided in Fremont vs. Keating, as bearing upon the constitutional powers of municipal corporations which have not adopted charters. I may say, however, that Fremont vs. Keating certainly decides that an attempt on the part of the legislature to take away local regulatory power is ineffectual because of the constitution.

As a matter of first impression, it would seem that Article XVIII, section 3, applies to all municipalities; for it says in rather unambiguous language that:

> "Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws."

The grant is in terms not limited to municipalities which have exercised the powers conferred by section 7 of the same article "to frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government" and, subject to the provisions of section 3 of this article, "to exercise all powers of local self-government." If the people had intended to limit their grant of power to such municipalities as might adopt a charter, there would seem to have been no necessity for the adoption of section 3, the right of charter cities to "exercise all powers of local self-government" being expressly conferred in section 7. However, prior to the decision in Fremont vs. Keating, supra, the Supreme Court had apparently held in several cases that Article XVIII, section 3, was not self-executing but applied only to cities which had adopted charters, and then only to the extent that the charter so adopted might provide for the exercise of the powers thus granted. Inasmuch as none of these prior decisions were overruled or even so much as mentioned in Fremont vs. Keating, it would seem that some way of reconciling the last mentioned decision with those preceding ought to be found, for it is certain that the expressions in the syllabus and opinion of Fremont vs. Keating are inconsistent, to some extent at least, with the statement just made as to the holdings in the previous cases.

I find myself, therefore, under the necessity of examining critically all the cases decided by the Supreme Court in any way affecting the interpretation of Article XVIII, section 3, with the view to reconciling them, if possible, and, if not, with the view to stating my conclusion as to what the law may now be said to be on this subject.

The first decision in point of time, and the one which, by more or less frequent citation, may be said to have attained to the dignity of the leading case, is State ex rel. vs. Lynch, 88 O. S., 71. The syllabus in that case is as follows:

> "1. The provisions of the eighteenth article of the constitution as amended in September, 1912, continue in force the general laws for the government of cities and villages until the 15th day of November following, and thereafter until changed in one of the three modes following: (1) By the enactment of general laws for their amendment, (2) by additional laws to be ratified by the electors of the municipality to be affected thereby, (3) by the adoption of a charter by the electors of a municipality in the mode pointed out in the article.
> 2. Whether a municipality acquires authority 'to exercise all the powers of local self-government' by adopting a charter, or adopts a charter as an indispensable mode of exercising the authority, the powers to be exercised, being governmental, do not authorize taxation to establish and maintain moving-picture theaters."

Nothing in this syllabus expressly holds that Article XVIII, section 3, is, as a whole or as to any part of it, not self-executing. In referring to the continuance in force of the previously existing "general laws," the court must have had in mind laws passed by the legislature and it is only by extending the holding of the syllabus beyond its words that one could claim that it decides that the common law rule, to the effect that municipal corporations have only such powers as are granted to them in affirmative terms by the legislature, was perpetuated as to non-charter municipalities.

On the other hand, the inclusion in the syllabus of the point dealt with in the second branch thereof would seem to have been predicated upon the assumption that Article XVIII, section 3, might be regarded as in a sense self-executing; for it would have been unnecessary for the court to define the phrase "powers of local self-government," as it did in this second branch, if the court had meant to decide the case on the ground that non-charter municipalities did not possess such powers.

It must be admitted, however, that the opinions of Judges Shauck and Wilkin, speaking for the majority of the court in that case, go somewhat further than the syllabus upon the question now under consideration. Judge Shauck is very guarded in his statements and comes no closer to deciding anything with respect to Article XVIII, section 3, than to say that "it seems * * * to be entirely beyond doubt that since the city of Toledo had not by a vote of its electors approved any additional law passed by the general assembly, and that its electors had not adopted a charter, the municipality and all of its departments have only such powers as were conferred by the general law; that is, such power only as it had prior to the 15th of November." Judge Shauck follows up this cautious statement by considerable discussion of the meaning of the phrase "all powers of local self-government," which as I have pointed out could not be regarded as a question in the case, if one could say that the court had definitely decided that Article XVIII, section 3, did not afford to the city of Toledo the right to claim the privilege of exercising "all powers of local self-government." Judge Wilkin is somewhat more outspoken with respect to his view of Article XVIII, section 3, than is Judge Shauck, but his argument, a hint of which is found in the opinion of Judge Shauck, is to the effect that Article XVIII, section 3, if self-executing at all, grants power to the people of the municipality and does not distribute the granted powers among any existing agencies of the municipality, i. e., agencies existing under the general laws for the government of municipalities as they were prior to the adoption of the constitutional amendment. He therefore arrives at the conclusion that whatever be the effect of so much of Article XVIII, section 3, as he was considering, upon the theoretical powers of the city of Toledo, the section did not go so far as to add anything to the powers of the council of that city.

It hardly seems conceivable that Judges Shauck and Wilkin, who expressed the view just stated with varying degrees of positiveness, meant to say that municipal councils are, under the municipal code, in all respects bodies of limited powers analogous to agents for particular purposes. All municipal councils have, under the General Code, the full legislative power of the municipality, sections 4206 and 4215, G. C. Their particular legislative powers are not enumerated. The contrary is true on the side of what may be termed the proprietary or strictly municipal side of the corporate organization and powers, and in this connection it is, I believe, tremendously significant that State vs. Lynch, which involved the right of the council of the city of Toledo to provide by ordinance for the establishment and operation of a municipal moving-picture theater, called in question not the governmental powers which the city might claim, but its proprietary capacity. The second branch of the syllabus, concurred in by a majority of the court, makes this very plain; but even one of the dissenting judges expresses the same view. Thus Judge Wanamaker, at page 135, divides Article XVIII, section 3, into two parts: (1) that which confers upon municipalities the authority to "exercise all powers of local self-government," and (2) that which confers upon them the authority to "adopt such local police, etc., regulations," as shall not conflict with the general law. Of the former he says it is a grant of municipal power in the exact sense; of the latter he says it is a delegation of the police power of the state, originally a power in no sense municipal but committed to the local government as a matter of convenience by the legislature of the state, in which sovereignty it naturally resides.

I find nothing in the opinion of Judges Shauck and Wilkin which denies the validity of this distinction. If it is valid it tends to limit the actual decision and all reasonable inference therefrom to the interpretation and application of the first part of Article XVIII, section 3.

Further ground for this distinction appears in the fact, not overlooked by the writer of the majority opinion in State vs. Lynch, that section 7 of Article XVIII, says that municipalities which have adopted charters may thereunder "exercise all powers of local self-government," thus affording an inference in line with what has been previously said about Article XVIII, section 3, to the effect that complete and effectual exercise of the "powers of local self-government" by a municipality is conditioned upon the adoption of a charter. But, section 7 does not say that a municipality which has adopted a charter may, under it, "adopt and enforce such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with the general law." So that it could not, with as much assurance, be said of section 7, in connection with section 3, that the adoption and enforcement of local police, sanitary and other similar regulations is conditioned upon the adoption of a charter, as it could be said that the exercise of the powers of local self-government, i. e., peculiarly municipal functions, is dependent upon the adoption of a charter.

Again, consideration of the principal arguments of Judges Wilkin and Shauck, with respect to the interpretation of that part of Article XVIII, section 3, to which their attention was directed, brings out still another reason for distinguishing between the two parts of the section. They point out that the grant of power in the first part of the section is to municipalities and consists of the right to exercise all powers of local self-government. They say that the grant is not directly to the councils and does not reach the councils through the municipalities because the power granted is or may not be one within the natural scope of the power of a municipal council. Carrying this argument further, but in no wise going beyond the scope of Judge Wilkin's argument, for example, one might say that "all powers of local self-government" includes administrative, executive and judicial powers as well as legislative powers on the one hand, and, referring as it does to municipal functions in the peculiar sense, embraces by another classification various kinds of proprietary powers.

It is not so with respect to the latter part of Article XVIII, section 3. The power to "adopt regulations" of a police character is essentially and purely a legislative power and the power to enforce them is purely and simply an executive power. The language "to adopt and enforce" is more specific than the language "to exercise." It points out certain branches or departments of the municipal government as the necessary recipients of the powers granted, while the phrase "to exercise" does not. It is therefore seen that the argument of Judge Wilkin, however valid it may be, does not apply, with equal force at least, to the latter part of section 3 of Article XVIII; so that, knowing as we do that he was thinking about the first part of that section, we cannot say that his reasoning must necessarily be applied to the last part of it.

Judge Donahue concurred in the judgment of this case but dissented from the reasons given for it in the opinion of Judge Shauck, giving it as his view that Article XVIII, section 3, was self-executing in toto.

Judge Wanamaker was of the same opinion, but, as has been seen, he also argued for a distinction between the character of the grant in the first part of Article XVIII, section 3, and that of the grant in the latter part of the same section.

In this connection I refer, without quoting them, to expressions of Judges Shauck and Wilkin with respect to the expenditure of public monies for new, and therefore unknown, municipal purposes. This language could not apply to the adoption and enforcement of police regulations and tends further to emphasize the point already brought out that these judges were thinking about the assumption of new proprietary powers of municipalities and did not have their attention directed to the possibility of reliance on section 3 of Article XVIII as a source of enlarged governmental power emanating directly from the state.

On the whole I do not feel that State ex rel. vs. Lynch decides anything with respect to the interpretation of the latter part of Article XVIII, section 3.

The next case which must be examined is Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, 88 O. S., 388. This case must be distinguished from the present question by the statement that it involved the right of a charter city and pertained to the framework of the city government. In it, however, Judge Johnson, who had been silent save for a mere notation of his dissent from the second branch of the syllabus in State vs. Lynch, clearly states at page 334 that it was his understanding that section 3 of Article XVIII is not self-executing, but awaits the adoption of a charter. This language, taken by itself, would, of course, apply to all parts of Article XVIII, section 3, but in the context in which it is found and in the case in which it was uttered it was a mere dictum—an interpretation of what the court had decided in another case. It cannot be authority for anything with respect to the latter part of Article XVIII, section 3, when nothing with respect to that part of the constitution was before the court in either case. I might say that it was argued in the Cleveland case that local legislation therein involved was in the nature of a police regulation, which would yield, in case of conflict with the general law, but the "majority" of the court (the three judges who voted for affirmance), speaking through Judge Johnson, and others, had already denied the validity of this argument and thus eliminated the latter part of Article XVIII, section 3, from the case.

Wanamaker, J., was one of the "majority" judges in the Cleveland case. He repeats in the course of his argument the distinction which he had first laid down in his dissenting opinion in the Lynch case between the first and second parts of Article XVIII, section 3. His conclusion was that the power to prescribe regulations for nomination of candidates for municipal offices was one of the powers which came to the city of Cleveland (a charter city) through the first part of Article XVIII, section 3, so that the municipal regulation on this subject would not have to yield in case of conflict with the "general law." This argument was absolutely necessary to support the conclusion arrived at by the court, for there was a general law respecting the nomination of municipal officers which was in conflict with the charter of the city of Cleveland on the same subject. Therefore, in spite of what Judge Johnson said by way of dictum, in his opinion he must be regarded at least as committed to the view that there is a difference between the first and the second half of Article XVIII, section 3, respectively, in that the exercise of powers granted by the first half and made effectual by the adoption of the charter is not conditioned upon the conformity of the municipal legislation to the general laws of the state; whereas the power to adopt and enforce local police, etc., regulations, however made effectual, is so conditioned.

Judge Wilkin in the Fitzgerald case was with the "majority" and expressly gives allegiance at page 377 to the distinction drawn by Judge Wanamaker and above described. This is significant because it tends to explain Judge Wilkin's position in the Toledo case and to emphasize the view that what he said in that case cannot be regarded as directed to the latter part of Article XVIII, section 3.

Neither the syllabus in the Cleveland case nor the dissenting opinion of Donahue, J., bears in any way upon the issue now under consideration.

Carpenter vs. Cincinnati and Billings vs. Railway Company, 92 O. S., pp. 473 and 478, must next be considered. The first involved the right of a city, which had not adopted a charter, to provide by ordinance of its council for extending a street railway along a street without the consent of the abutting property owners, such as was required by the general law. This legislation was of a kind with respect to which the power of the municipal council was actually limited and restricted by specific provision of the general laws, as Judge Wilkin seems to have imagined to have been the case generally, from what he says in the Toledo case. It is familiar law that power to grant franchises emanates from the state and is only delegated to municipal corporations as agents of the state. In a law dealing with the granting of a franchise (not a part of the municipal code as such) the municipal council was authorized to make the grant upon a condition. This law was held to be controlling and in a very short statement Judge Jones, who delivered the opinion of the court, points out that its operation is not affected by Article XVIII, section 3, unless a charter had been adopted. This case does not, in my opinion, hold anything which can be used to advantage in considering the present question, for the ordinance of the council of the city of Cincinnati there involved would have to be classified, for the purpose of Article XVIII, section 3, either as an attempted exercise of "powers of local self-government" or as a "local police * * * regulation." If the former, then State ex rel. vs. Lynch would seem to afford ground for holding that it could not lawfully be passed, because the city of Cincinnati did not possess "all powers of local self-government," but only such powers as had been granted by the general law. If the latter it would have to yield to the general law which was in existence, because it conflicted with it. Of course I have argued in this opinion that State ex rel. vs. Lynch did not on its face go so far as to establish the first of these propositions, but it must be conceded that the trend of thought running through the majority opinions in the subsequent cases is to this effect, whatever may be said of State vs. Lynch itself.

In Billings vs. Railway Company, supra, a result exactly to the contrary of that reached in the case just discussed, was arrived at in the case of a charter city. Judge Johnson, who wrote the opinion of the court, began with a review of State vs. Lynch, first quoting the first branch of the syllabus and then making this statement:

> "The judges who did not concur in the opinion of Shauck, J., who spoke for the court in that case, did not withhold their assent because they felt that the majority were going too far, but, as shown by the opinions they filed in the case, they thought that a majority did not go far enough, in that the judgment was that section 3 of Article XVIII was not self-executing and that the powers granted were not as extensive as those judges believed the section conferred."

Then taking up the meaning of the phrase "all powers of local self-government," he concludes that although previous to the adoption of the charter the power to grant franchises emanated from the state, such power was within the "powers of local self-government" appropriated by municipal corporations through the adoption of the charter. The ordinance was therefore upheld. Let me point out that this conclusion could not have been reached if the consent of council to the use of streets by electric railways had been regarded as a "police regulation," because there was in force a general law sustained in the Carpenter case with which the ordinance was inconsistent; so that, if the city of Cleveland had acquired the power to legislate on the subject of the use of the streets by public utilities, under the last part of Article XVIII, section 3, its legislation would necessarily yield to the general law where inconsistent with the latter. That the local legislation was inconsistent with the general law is palpable; for the general law prohibits municipal councils from granting permission to use the streets for street railway purposes save upon the condition of securing the consent of the owners of abutting property, whereas the ordinance gave such permission without such consent.

I am forced to the conclusion, therefore, that Billings vs. Railway Company further emphasizes the distinction between the nature of the grant of "all powers of local self-government" and that of the grant of power to "adopt and enforce * * * such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." In following, and in a sense enlarging upon, State vs. Lynch, therefore, this case is not to be understood as an extension of the decision in that case beyond its natural scope. So far, then, we have it that none of the cases which have been examined do more than decide that a non-charter city does not acquire the right to exercise "all powers of local self-government" by virtue of Article XVIII, section 3, but that a charter must be adopted before any power can be exercised that is not granted by the "general laws" or "additional laws." But none of these cases touch upon the power of a non-charter city to adopt and enforce within its limits "such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with the general law."

This review of the cases prior to the case of Fremont vs. Keating is necessary because of the silence of that case with regard to such previous cases. Judge Donahue does not even cite these cases, much less does the decision in Fremont vs. Keating purport to overrule them. It is perfectly reconcilable with them if we accept the view that there are two distinct grants of power in Article XVIII, section 3, for in Fremont vs. Keating the city did not claim authority to pass an ordinance upon the subject of the speed of automobiles under the grant of power to exercise all powers of local self-government, but from the power to adopt and enforce within its limits local police, regulations not inconsistent with the general laws. The first branch of the syllabus says nothing whatever about local self-government, but does declare section 6307 to be in conflict with section 3, Article XVIII of the constitution, authorizing municipalities "to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws." The case might have been decided upon the second and third ground stated in the syllabus, inasmuch as the defendant in error had been deprived of the right to a jury trial, but the history of these home rule cases shows that the judges participating in the decisions have been careful to express dissent from any proposition advanced in the syllabus, whether such proposition was necessary in their view to a decision of the case or not. Thus Johnson, J., in State ex rel. vs. Lynch, concurred in the judgment but did not concur in the second branch of the syllabus. Donahue, J., in the same case, concurred in the judgment but dissented from the reasons assigned in the syllabus and the majority opinion. All three judges who voted for affirmance in Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland saw fit to state their reasons in full. I find it impossible to believe that Fremont vs. Keating, which was concurred in by a unanimous vote, is not to be taken as authority as to what is laid down in the first branch of the syllabus, because I cannot believe that Judge Johnson, for example, who had taken occasion twice to repeat with approval the substance of the first paragraph of the syllabus in State ex rel. vs. Lynch, would have concurred generally in Fremont vs. Keating without intending thereby to express approval of the first branch of the syllabus. As we have seen, it is perfectly possible to reconcile the case of Fremont vs. Keating with the cases that went before it on grounds springing from the division of Article XVIII, section 3, into two parts. In fact, every judge, save Judge Shauck, who has had occasion to write an opinion in any way dealing with Article XVIII, section 3, has, at one time or another, expressed allegiance to the view that there are two separate grants of power in that section. Judge Wanamaker did so in expressions quoted from his concurring opinion in Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, and has made the distinction more than once in clear and unambiguous language. Judge Johnson must necessarily have predicated his argument in Billings vs. Railway Company upon the same sort of distinction. Judge Donahue from the first has vigorously expressed the view that all of Article XVIII, section 3, is self-executing. We have, therefore, a pretty accurate line on the views of three of the seven judges who concurred in Fremont vs. Keating, and we find that none of them have ever expressed the view that Article XVIII, section 3, of the constitution is not self-executing and is not applicable to non-charter cities when it confers authority upon municipalities to adopt and enforce within their limits "such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with general laws" whatever may be its effect as conferring upon municipalities the right to exercise "all powers of local self-government." On the contrary I note that two of the judges who concurred in Fremont vs. Keating have always vigorously asserted that the whole section is self-executing and applies to non-charter cities.

In this way, then, I find it possible to account for the fact that Fremont vs. Keating lays down the proposition embodied in the first branch of the syllabus therein, without in any way referring to the previous cases. The distinction which, following the opinions of some of the judges in the previous cases, I have drawn, reconciles this part of the syllabus in the Fremont case with all of the cases that have gone before.

Now the Fremont case necessarily decides that all cities, non-charter as well as charter, may look to the last part of Article XVIII, section 3, for authority to pass local police regulations not in conflict with general law, because it says that an act of the General Assembly, which attempts in express words to deny such municipalities the right to exercise this power, is unconstitutional; a fortiori, the mere silence of the legislature, i. e., its failure to expressly confer by law power upon non-charter municipal corporations, to adopt particular police and similar regulations, could not have the effect of depriving such municipalities of such power.

The express holding to the effect that section 6307 is unconstitutional also disposes of the possibility of accounting for the result in the Fremont case by referring it to section 3632 G. C., which on its face contains ample power to pass the kind of ordinance involved in the case. The court does not mention this provision of the law, nor could it with propriety have done so in the face of section 6307 of the General Code if that section were constitutional. For although the legislature had left section 3632 unrepealed by express provision, it had by enacting section 6307 made so much of the former section as would otherwise authorize the regulation of the speed of motor vehicles inoperative so long as section 6307 might be in force. It is obvious, therefore, that the court could not have decided Fremont vs. Keating on the theory that section 3632 of the General Code conferred power to enact the ordinance in question, nor upon the broader ground that the "general laws" of the state conferred this power, because the net effect of the "general laws" was such as to deny the power. It is therefore impossible to reconcile the first branch of the syllabus in Fremont vs. Keating with any other view than that all municipalities may look to the latter part of Article XVIII, section 3, for authority to adopt local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, regardless of what the "general law," which the legislature may attempt to adopt on such subject, may or may not provide.

There has been suggested to me the idea that the court may have intended to hold section 6307 unconstitutional because in terms it applies to all cities, as well to those which have adopted charters as those which have not; and because it cannot apply to charter cities it is therefore unconstitutional and does not restrain non-charter cities. If this point is well taken, it would follow, of course, that a non-charter municipality might look to section 3632 of the General Code for authority to pass ordinances like the one involved in Fremont vs. Keating, and that of the general character of those mentioned as examples in your letter. But the point is not in my judgment well taken. In all the home rule cases, beginning with State ex rel. vs. Lynch, and running through the rest of them, is found the statement that the general laws of the state are, by virtue of the schedule of the amendments of 1912, to remain in full force and effect except in so far as they may be inconsistent with the amendments. That is to say, any statute which cannot constitutionally apply to a charter city remains in full force and effect in its application to non-charter cities. This principle was acted upon in the two street railway company consent cases. Billings vs. Railway Co. holds the consent statutes "unconstitutional" as to their application to charter cities (see paragraph of opinion of Jones, J., in Carpenter vs. Cincinnati), whereas Carpenter vs. Cincinnati holds the statute constitutional and in full force and effect as to non-charter cities. It is therefore impossible to reconcile Fremont vs. Keating with the other cases on this ground, or to say that section 6307 of the General Code was held unconstitutional because of its interference with the rights of charter cities; certainly nothing in the opinion of Donahue, J., nor in the syllabus itself, justifies such a statement.

I must therefore conclude, on the authority of Fremont vs. Keating, that all cities in Ohio, charter cities as well as non-charter cities, now get their authority to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations as are not in conflict with the general laws, directly from the constitution. So that, the whole body of statutes on the subject of the police power of municipal corporations with regard to local regulations, at least, may be regarded as of little effect. I do not say that these statutes are of no effect, because they still operate as I have described their operation in dealing with subdivisions one and three of your first general question. That is to say, the question of conflict with the general law, which must always be raised under Article XVIII, section 3, is one that can be answered easily by ascertaining the legislative intent as to the exclusiveness of the regulations made by the general law as against those made under color of local authority. Where the legislature, then, has expressly authorized a particular kind of regulation to be made by a municipality, such action on its part is indicative of its intent that local regulations may supplement what it has done without being regarded as "in conflict" therewith.

In determining whether or not there is a conflict between a local ordinance and general law, it is always, of course, necessary to determine what the general law is, and if a part of that general law is a declaration to the effect that municipal ordinances may be passed on a subject, then we are unable to say that the adoption of the local ordinance in and of itself produces a conflict with the general law on the same subject.

But what I have said earlier in this opinion about the solution of the question, as to the existence of a conflict between a general law and a municipal ordinance upon the same subject, cannot apply fully where the municipal ordinance embodies a local regulation, for I have heretofore intimated that the state of the law, prior to the adoption of Article XVIII of the Constitution, was in this respect substantially as follows: (1) If the state law expressly sanctions a thing which the municipal ordinance attempts to prohibit, or expressly prohibits a thing which the municipal ordinance attempts to sanction, there is a conflict; (2) If the state law embodies an intent, expressed or implied, that the state wide regulation which it promulgates shall be exclusive, i. e., shall be the only law upon the subject operating uniformly throughout the state, as well in municipalities as elsewhere, then any municipal regulation on the same subject is in conflict with this implication of the state law.

At first blush it might seem that these principles will apply as well to the solution of the question of conflict between a state law and a municipal regulation, where authority for the latter is claimed under favor of Article XVIII, section 3, as where authority for the latter is claimed under a statute of similarly general purport. But if the first branch of the syllabus in Fremont vs. Keating establishes anything at all, it proves the very contrary of the second proposition just mentioned, whether or not it impairs the full force of the first. For it will be remembered that in enacting the state automobile license law the legislature had seen fit to prescribe rates of speed which should be uniform for the operation of automobiles in all municipal corporations. The legislature intended that this uniformity should not be disturbed and was so solicitous to express that intent that it attempted to prohibit municipal councils from acting with respect to the regulation of rates of speed at all, providing bluntly that municipal councils should have no authority whatever in the premises. This provision, said the Supreme Court in Fremont vs. Keating, became unconstitutional when Article XVIII, section 3, was adopted and became effective. It necessarily follows, therefore, that the doctrine which I have quoted from Dillon on Municipal Corporations, and other authorities, no longer applies in Ohio, and that regulations which are "local" may be adopted by municipal corporations in this state under favor of Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution, though the general assembly may have covered the subject by general law, in which it expressed the intention that such general law shall be the only law on the subject, or stating it conversely, the general assembly no longer has power to pass an exclusive law which shall exclude the adoption of purely local regulations on the same subject.

As I have said, this seems to me to be the very point which was decided in Fremont vs. Keating, but with this point granted it seems to me also that there may be some question as to the power of the general assembly, under Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution, to sanction a course of conduct that may be the subject of proper local regulation, or to prohibit such course of conduct as against proper local regulation sanctioning it. Yet the constitution expressly sanctions the paramountcy of the general law, even as against regulations which are "local"; so that, upon full consideration, I am of the opinion that the first of the two propositions last above enumerated still holds good in Ohio.

The question as to what subjects of regulation may be local in character will no doubt prove to be a very troublesome one; but it is at least clear that where there is a question as to the local character of a given subject of regulation, i. e., as to the appropriateness of local regulations on that subject, the action of the state legislature, in authorizing particular regulations to be made by municipal corporations, may, as hereinbefore pointed out, remove all question. It is equally clear that if it appears beyond doubt that a particular subject is not local in character, no authority to regulate it can be claimed from Article XVIII, section 3, of the Constitution, and the statutes which I have mentioned in the earlier portions of this opinion must be looked to as the sole source of the police power of the municipality in that field; and when they are so regarded, the principles developed hereinbefore in the opinion, will apply in their entirety.

These considerations bring us to the ultimate question as to what police regulations are "local." We have only dicta to guide us on this point, as far as Ohio is concerned. Without repeating any of these decisions, suffice it to say that the Supreme court now appears committed to the doctrine that the second part of Article XVIII, section 3, is distinguished from the first part in that the first deals with municipal affairs while the second deals with matters state-wide in their nature but local in their application. Therefore it is impossible to draw the line between those police regulations which are "local" and those which are not "local" in their nature by a test which will exclude from the grant of power in the constitution all subjects which are proper ones for the exercise of the police power of the state. That is to say, the police power which municipalities may exercise under Article XVIII, section 3, is itself the police power of the state, and the effect of the latter part of the section is to make a comprehensive grant of all the police power of the state to municipalities, to be exercised locally by way of "regulation." There is some intimation in some of the cases, notably Fitzgerald vs. Cleveland, supra, to the effect that something less than this is granted by the provision under consideration. This notion, however, was definitely rejected by the Supreme Court in Cleveland vs. Cleveland Telephone Co., 98 O. S., ——. In that case the court expressly holds in the syllabus (not yet reported) that a regulation of the rates of public utilities is such a local police regulation as may be adopted by a city, subject to the control of the general laws which in that instance gave an appeal to the Utilities Commission. It would be interesting to quote extensively from this opinion, but as it has not yet been published in final form, I do not feel at liberty to do so.

I may say that I have not referred to State ex rel. vs. French, 96 O. S., 172, a case decided before Fremont vs. Keating, and which, like some of the other cases referred to, repeats approval of the decision in State ex rel. vs. Lynch, because the question that arose in that case was, like that in Billings vs. Cleveland Railway Company, one relating to a charter city and involving the right to exercise all powers of local self-government rather than the power to adopt and enforce local police regulations.

I do not feel able to attempt the framing of a definition of the phrase "local police, sanitary and other similar regulations," which can be put forward with assurance, as legally accurate and practically workable. As at present advised, I believe that the word "local", as used in this context, implies the idea that the condition giving rise to the regulation must be one peculiar to thickly settled communities for which municipal organization would be appropriate. Fremont vs. Keating is authority on the point that the speed of vehicles on the public streets and highways is a matter of greater concern in thickly settled communities than it is in rural districts. In other words, the rapid driving of motor vehicles and the like in city streets presents a public menace of a different character from that which would be present by similar rapid driving on a country road. Therefore, under Article XVIII, section 3, a municipality, exercising the power to protect against such peculiar menaces as result from congested population, may act even in the teeth of the attempt by the legislature to preclude action for the sake of preserving the uniformity of regulation throughout the state.

Further than this I cannot go. I may say, however, that in my opinion the word "local" does not impart the idea that the regulation is operative within the municipal limits. Obviously this would be the case with all municipal regulations, nor, on the other hand, for the reason as stated, does the word imply a different source of power than the police power of the state. Being neither of these, the idea embodied in the word must be, as I see it, that which takes its keynote from a public need which is peculiar to municipalities, as such, or as thickly settled districts.

Coming now to the specific kinds of ordinances mentioned in your request, which I understand are merely examples of possible ordinances, beg to advise as follows:

I do not believe that a non-charter governed city has power to pass an ordinance merely prescribing the punishment for violating the state law with respect to operating a motor vehicle without a license. Such an ordinance would not be a "local police regulation" because it would not be a regulation at all. For similar reasons it would not be a "regulation" within the meaning of section 3632 of the General Code.

Interpreting this part of your question in another way, it may be regarded as directed to the power of a municipality, not governed by a charter, to adopt an ordinance requiring the procuring of a municipal license as well as the state license, provided for in the state law, and to define and punish the offense of operating a motor vehicle on the streets of a city without a city license. Such an ordinance, if valid at all, would be limited to residents. Pegg vs. Columbus, 80 O. S., 367. Would such an ordinance conflict with the general law?

Frisbie vs. The City of Columbus, 8 O. S., 686, decides that such an ordinance did conflict with the automobile law of 1906, but the decision was predicated upon a section substantially like section 6307 of the General Code, expressly decided to be unconstitutional in Fremont vs. Keating by virtue of a constitutional provision adopted since Frisbie vs. Columbus was decided. Indeed, the section of the law of 1906 went further than section 6307 does in that it denied to municipal authorities the right to license motor vehicles, whereas section 6307 merely denies to them the right to regulate speed. The state motor vehicle license law is found in sections 6290 to 6310 inclusive of the General Code. Section 6294 G. C. requires every owner of a motor vehicle to be operated and driven upon the public highways of the state to file application for registration and pay a fee. Section 6298 requires the secretary of state, upon performance of these conditions, to assign a distinctive number to the motor vehicle and issue to the applicant a certificate of registration. Section 6299 requires the secretary of state to keep a list and index thereto, showing the registered automobiles. Sections 6301 and 6302 make similar provisions respecting manufacturers and dealers in motor vehicles, respectively. Section 6306 exempts foreign motor vehicles from the operation of the law, provided the foreign law has been complied with.

While I have omitted some of the sections, I do not find anywhere any section providing that registration by the state shall entitle the owner of the motor vehicle to operate it upon the roads and highways of the state without further license by local authorities. We see, then, that the act of 1908, as amended, contains no provision to this effect like that of 1906 on which the decision in Frisbie vs. State was based; and even if there were such a provision, Fremont vs. Keating goes so far as to say that it would be unconstitutional, if enacted. I cannot therefore escape the conclusion that not only under favor of Article XVIII, section 3, of the constitution, but also under favor of section 3632 of the General Code, which expressly says that municipalities "shall have power to license and regulate the use of the streets by persons who use vehicles * * * thereon; a non-charter governed city may, if it chooses, exact a local license from resident owners of automobiles or other vehicles and punish the offense of operating such vehicles in the city without such license, covering the fines recovered into the municipal treasury.

Section 12620 of the General Code, next referred to by you, is one of the penal sections of the automobile law. I may say that you do not inquire about speed regulations, as such. I do not, therefore, specifically consider the provisions of section 12680 of the General Code in the light of the decision in Fremont vs. Keating, the facts in which did not call for any determination in this respect.

You next refer to section 12614-3 of the General Code, 107 O. L., 58. This section makes it the duty of every person operating a vehicle on wheels during the night season to have attached thereto a light or lights, the rays of which shall be visible at least two hundred feet from the front and two hundred feet from the rear and imposes a fine for its violation. Clearly a non-chartered city has the authority to make a similar regulation both under the constitution and under section 3632 of the General Code.

You next refer to section 12858, which in part provides:

> "Whoever * * * obstructs or abuses a sheriff or other officer in the execution of his office, shall be fined * * * or imprisoned * * *."

Here we have a different kind of question. Clearly a municipal ordinance defining and punishing the offense of resisting a police officer, or some other officer of the city, would not necessarily "conflict" with this provision if authority were specifically granted to the municipality to pass such an ordinance. However, no such authority has been granted. On the contrary, we have merely the general language of sections 3658 and 3664 of the General Code, construed in Wellsville vs. O'Connor, supra. The general grant of power to adopt and enforce local police regulations is of the same character. Such a regulation as is supposed would unquestionably be a police regulation, but on the question as to whether or not it would be local, so that the power to pass it could be found in Article XVIII, section 3, of the constitution, I am in doubt.

In order to support it, one would have to say that the offense of resisting an officer in a municipal corporation is one which is subversive of public interests peculiarly local; in other words, that there is something about resisting an officer in a municipality that presents public dangers which do not exist when like offenses are committed outside of municipalities. On the whole, I cannot go further than to say that the validity of such an ordinance would be extremely doubtful in the present state of the law in Ohio.

As to charter cities, it may be said in the first place that no general statement can be ventured respecting the exact extent of their powers. Section 7 of Article XVIII of the Constitution authorizes the adoption of a charter under which all powers of local self-government may be exercised. Though no decisions are available on the point, it seems clear enough that a city charter adopted under favor of this provision may be in the nature of an organic law for the corporation, though perhaps primarily its purpose is merely to construct a framework of the government and thus to create organs for the exercise of the municipal powers, without necessarily defining what these powers shall be in greater detail than they are defined by the constitution itself, viz., all powers of local self-government. However, as indicated, the practice is to claim by specific provision of the charter, in addition to such powers as may be specifically created by the charter itself, all powers that may be granted to municipalities by the constitution or laws of the state. Thus the charter of the city of Ashland contains a recital, set forth in section 1 thereof, of detailed powers and concludes with the statement that the "city shall have all powers that now or hereafter shall be granted to the municipalities by the constitution or laws of Ohio." The same provision is found in the charter of the city of Cleveland and in that of the city of Columbus, which does not enumerate powers at all. In fact the charter of this city attempts at least to make very clear the intention embodied in it by a section which states that the enumerations of particular powers by this charter shall not be held or deemed to be exclusive, but in addition to the powers enumerated herein, implied thereby or appropriate to the exercise thereof, the city shall have, and may exercise all other powers which, under the constitution and laws of Ohio, it would be competent for this charter specifically to enumerate.

Without going into detail, I may say I have examined all the city charters set forth in Volume 1 of the Supplement to Page and Adams General Code of Ohio, and find that all of them contain general clauses like those already noted, excepting possibly that of the city of Middletown, which does not clearly claim all the powers of municipal corporations which might be claimed under the constitution, but merely the benefit of all general laws of the state of Ohio, applicable to municipalities therein existing but "not in conflict with the provisions of this charter," and provides that:

> "The enumeration of particular powers by this charter shall not be held or deemed exclusive, but in addition to the powers enumerated herein, or implied thereby, appropriate to the exercise thereof, the city shall have and may exercise all other powers granted to municipal corporations, unless such grant of general powers by the State of Ohio is in conflict with the provisions hereof."

This last provision which attempts to set the authority of the charter above that of the "State of Ohio" might be deemed indicative of an interpretation to the effect that what is meant is the general laws passed by the legislature; for of course the charter could not control as against the constitution of the state.

This examination of the charter provisions now extant, so far as they are available, leads me to make the general statement—as a fact, of course, and not as a conclusion of law—that with respect to police regulations charter cities are in no different situation from non-charter cities; that is to say, all cities, both charter and non-charter, seem to have all the specific powers set forth in the general laws to legislate by way of police regulations. The non-charter cities have such powers because, obviously, the general laws apply directly to them; also the charter cities have such powers because their charters that have been adopted claim the benefit of such powers and, of course, the statutes thus appropriated by the charter cities are in terms broad enough to apply to such cities, unless the charters of such cities stand in the way. That is to say, a charter might conceivably do no more than create a framework of government, being entirely silent as to the powers of the municipality for which the framework was thus created, and it would be perfectly clear, I think, that the city would "secure immunity" from the general laws, to use a phrase that seems to have been used in State vs. Lynch, supra, only to the extent of making new provision for the framework of government and the general laws would still apply as to the powers of the municipality as a whole.

So far as the general powers which could be claimed by a charter city with respect to police legislation, by virtue of Article XVIII, section 3 of the Constitution, are concerned, we have seen that this grant of power is made to all municipalities regardless of whether or not charters have been adopted. As to limitation thereon, respecting the local nature of the regulations and their conflict with the general law, I can see no distinction between the principles that would apply to a charter city and those which would apply to a non-charter city.

Without prolonging the discussion, then, I express the conclusion that every statement which I have made respecting the powers of a non-charter city applies to every charter city whose charter is set forth in the supplement to Page and Adams General Code, and which accordingly I have had an opportunity to examine.

Only in the event that some municipal charter which I have not seen expressly restricts the municipality or its council, or legislative body, to the exercise of fewer powers by way of police legislation than those which it might claim under favor of the general laws or constitution, could it be said that the police powers of such city would be in any wise different from those of a non-charter city.

As to the powers of the so-called "model" charter municipalities, i. e., those which have by vote of their electors, adopted one of the additional laws referred to in Article XVIII, section 2 of the constitution, and found in 103 O. L., it may be said that "model" charters in no wise deal with the subject of the powers of municipalities, but only with the framework of government. However, Article 6, section 1, of that act, 103 O. L., 778, the same being a part of section 3515-1, provides that the powers conferred upon municipalities by the municipal code, so far as applicable, shall govern, unless otherwise provided by law. Such provision may be proposed by the legislative authority of any municipality, or by the electors of such municipality by petition * * *. Such provisions shall take effect and be in force when approved by the majority of the electors voting thereon.

So that it appears that it is competent for such "model charter" communities to alter the powers which they possess under the general law in this way. As I have intimated, in dealing with the charter cities, however, such alteration would have to be by way of restriction rather than by way of enlargement before any perceptible difference between the real powers of a model charter municipality and non-chartered municipalities would be created.

This last remark brings out a point common to charter municipalities and "model charter" municipalities which have altered the powers they have under the general law. Conceivably there may be in a charter or in the alterations made in its power by a model charter municipality a provision granting specific and detailed authority to deal with some subject matter that the General Code does not mention or govern by some such general language as a grant of power to provide for the public peace, health or safety. Such a provision would remove all question as to the power of the municipality to adopt such regualtions under favor of it. But it would amount to nothing as reflecting upon the question of conflict between the local regulation and the general law, for as we have seen, that question is always one of the legislative intent, i. e., the intent of a single legislative body—the general assembly of the state—and where that body has passed two laws, one directly regulating a specific subject and the other granting specific authority to municipalities to regulate that subject, it is very clear that it cannot be claimed that an exercise of municipal power in accordance with the grant of the general assembly can create a conflict with the general law, because the grant itself is a part of the general law. But where the specific authority to make police regulations of a certain character emanates, not from the general assembly but either from the constitution, Article XVIII, section 3, or from the charter, this reasoning cannot be indulged in, for the constitution itself provides that the action of the general assembly shall control in case of conflict, and nothing is clearer than that a locally adopted organic law, whether it be called a charter or alterations in the powers of a "model" charter community, cannot be a "general law."

Therefore it seems clear that the application of the principle set forth in the above quoted passage in Dillon on Municipal Corporations might produce a different result on the point of conflict as between the exercise of specific authority emanating from the general assembly of the state and the exercise of like specific authority emanating from locally adopted organic law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE MEDICAL BOARD AUTHORIZED TO MAKE RULE TO ACCEPT EXAMINATION PAPERS SUBMITTED TO U. S. ARMY EXAMINERS IN LIEU OF EXAMINATION BY BOARD.

1. The state medical board is authorized to receive applicants who are medical officers in the United States army, navy and marine hospital service and make a rule having their examination papers, with printed questions attached, submitted under seal to the examiners of the state examining board for inspection, and if questions and answers are found satisfactory to the examiners of the state medical board, certificates may be granted to such medical officers through such examination to practice medicine or surgery in Ohio.

2. The chapter of our General Code in which is contained the medical laws of this state does not apply to a commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy, or marine hospital service in the discharge of his professional duties.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 7, 1918.

The State Medical Board, H. M. Platter, Secretary, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You request my opinion as follows:

"I am directed by the State Medical Board to submit to you for an opinion an inquiry as follows received from W. C. Braisted, M. D., chairman of the National Board of Medical Examiners:

' * * * When a medical officer holding a certificate from the National Board makes application for licensure in Ohio, his examination papers, with printed questions attached, be submitted under seal to the examiners of the Ohio State Medical Board for inspection, and if satisfactory a further oral test be required as seems necessary. * * *'

The board desires to know whether such arrangement can be construed as in conformity with the provisions of sections 1273 and 1274, or 1282 of the General Code of Ohio."

Sections 1273, 1274 and 1282 G. C., referred to by you, read as follows:

Section 1273.—"The examinations of applicants for certificates to practice medicine or surgery shall be conducted under rules prescribed by the state medical board. Each applicant shall be examined in anatomy, physiology, pathology, chemistry, materia medica, and therapeutics, the principles and practice of medicine, diagnosis, surgery, obstetrics and such other subjects as the board requires. The applicant shall be examined in materia medica and therapeutics and principles and practice of medicine of the school of medicine in which he desires to practice, by the number of members of the board representing such school."

Section 1274.—"If the applicant passes such examination and has paid the fee required by law, the state medical board shall issue its certificate to that effect, signed by its president and secretary, and attested by its seal. Such certificate when deposited with the probate judge as required by law, shall be conclusive evidence that the person to whom it is issued is entitled to practice medicine or surgery in this state. An affirmative vote of not less than five members of the board is required for the issuance of a certificate."

Section 1262.—"The state medical board may dispense with the examination of a physician or surgeon, duly authorized to practice medicine or surgery in another state, a territory or the District of Columbia, who wishes to remove from such state, territory or district and reside and practice his profession in this state, upon his complying with the following conditions:

Such physician or surgeon shall make an application on a form prescribed by the board, pay a fee of fifty dollars and present a certificate or license issued by the medical board thereof; provided the laws of such state, territory or district require of physicians and surgeons practicing therein qualifications of a grade equal to those required of physicians and surgeons practicing in Ohio, and equal rights are accorded by such state, territory or district to physicians and surgeons of Ohio holding a certificate from the state medical board who desire to remove to, reside and practice their profession in such state, territory or district."

In order to understand fully section 1273 G. C., it is necessary to examine the language contained in certain other sections of the General Code, which language refers to the filing of applications by persons who desire to take examinations for certificates to practice medicine and surgery in the State of Ohio.

Section 1269 G. C. provides that:

"Each person who desires to practice medicine or surgery shall file with the secretary of the state medical board a written application, under oath, on a form prescribed by the board, and furnish satisfactory proof that he is more than twenty-one years of age and of good moral character."

While said section says "each person," it will be hereinafter noted that the provisions of this act, that is, the act of which section 1269 is a part, do not apply to all persons, that there are certain exceptions among whom are commissioned medical officers of the United States army, navy or marine hospital service when in the discharge of their professional duties, and what I shall say herein will apply to such commissioned persons only in so far as they are practicing their profession other than in an official way, or, in other words, this opinion will only refer to such military officers who desire to receive licenses and to practice medicine and surgery in Ohio other than as such officers.

After the written application referred to in section 1269 is filed, as is provided by said section, then the same is examined that the preliminary educational qualifications of the applicant may be determined. The following preliminary educational qualifications shall be sufficient to admit the applicant to an examination, viz: (1) a diploma from a reputable college granting the degree of A. B., B. S., or equivalent degree; (2) a diploma from a legally constituted normal school, high school or seminary, issued after four years of study; (3) a teacher's permanent or life certificate; (4) a student's certificate of examination for admission to the freshman class of a reputable literary or scientific college; (5) a certificate issued by the entrance examiner who is appointed by the board to conduct such examination, which certificate shows that the applicant has passed an examination in such branches as are required for graduation from a first class high school of this state.

If the entrance examiner finds that the applicant possesses the preliminary educational qualifications which bring such applicant within one of the above classes, then such entrance examiner shall issue to such applicant a certificate to that effect.

The applicant must produce such certificate and also a diploma from a legally chartered medical institution in the United States in good standing, as defined by the board at the time the diploma was issued, and which institution subsequent to May 1, 1913, required for admission for the degree of M. D. to such institution a preliminary education equal to that required for graduation from a first grade high school in this state, or a diploma or license approved by the board which conferred the full right to practice all branches of medicine or surgery in a foreign country. After such applicant has such preliminary certificate and such diploma or license, then he must present same to the board, together with an affidavit that he is the person named therein and that he is the lawful possessor thereof, stating his age, residence, the college or colleges at which he obtained his medical education, the time spent in each, the time spent in the study of medicine and such other facts as the state medical board requires. If such applicant is engaged in the practice of medicine at the time such application is filed, he shall state the period during which and the place where he has been so engaged. It is next the duty of the state medical board to examine the credentials of such applicant and if it finds that they are proper, then the board shall admit such applicant "to an examination."

Such is the procedure which is necessary for each person to follow before he can take an examination, as is provided by section 1273, to which you refer. Just how the examinations shall be held by the board is not specifically pointed out in said section. The section simply provides that the examination shall be conducted under rules prescribed by the board. The applicant, however, must be examined in anatomy, physiology, pathology, chemistry, materia medica and therapeutics, the principles and practice of medicine, diagnosis, surgery, obstetrics and such other subjects as the board requires, provided, however, that the applicant shall be examined in materia medica and therapeutics and principles and practice of medicine of the school of medicine in which he desires to practice, by the number of members of the board representing such school. Just how much latitude is permitted to the board in the holding of such examinations is not determinable from the language of the various sections of the state medical laws, but it is plain that when they are given the right to make rules the legislative intent seems clear that they exercise whatever reasonable discretion is necessary in order to carry out the provisions of said section. The statutes formerly provided that the board should hold examinations in the cities of Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus and Toledo, but it did not say when such examinations should be held, and the board determined to hold an examination in Columbus rather than Cincinnati. Suit was brought in the case of State ex rel. vs. Medical Board, 12 O. C. C. (n. s.) 189, to compel the holding of such examination in Cincinnati, and the court held that while under such statute it is the duty of the board to hold examinations in such cities, yet inasmuch as the act is silent as to the time when such examination shall be held, and inasmuch as it is the duty of the board to determine the dates and places of examinations, a writ of mandamus will not be granted to compel the holding of such examination in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion on the part of the board with reference to the selection of times and places for the holding of such examinations. If, then, the discretion of the board could not be controlled unless that discretion was abused in the matter of the setting of the places and dates for the holding of examinations, I am of the opinion that the discretion of the board with reference to the manner of holding such examinations cannot be controlled unless that discretion is abused. That is to say, if your board determines, in the examining of those applicants for certificates to practice medicine or surgery in Ohio who are medical officers, that their examination papers, with printed questions attached, shall be submitted under seal to the examiners of the Ohio State Medical board for inspection, and if the examination papers so submitted cover the branches provided for under our laws, and if such applicant qualifies for such examination as is provided by our laws and as above set forth, and if such applicant passes such examination under the rules prescribed by the board, then I am of the opinion that such an examination is a valid examination as is referred to in section 1273 G. C.

Section 1274 merely provides that if the applicant passes such examination and has paid the fee required by law, the board shall issue its certificate to that effect, and that when such certificate is deposited with the probate judge as is required by law, it shall be conclusive evidence that the person to whom it is issued is entitled to practice medicine and surgery in this state. The provisions of the above section apply to every certificate issued by the board, whether by examination or by reciprocity, and no matter how the examination is held. If a certificate is granted following the examination, then the section applies to such certificate; therefore, if an examination is granted, as above indicated, and a certificate granted to the applicant, such certificate would be as valid as if the examination were given in any other manner.

You also refer to section 1282 G. C., above quoted. This is what is commonly called the reciprocity section of the medical law, that is, the State Medical board may dispense with an examination as far as a physician or surgeon is concerned who is duly authorized to practice medicine or surgery in another state, a territory or the District of Columbia, and which physician or surgeon wishes to move from such other state, territory or District of Columbia and reside in and practice his profession in this state, provided, however, that such physician or surgeon shall make application on a form prescribed by the board and shall pay a fee of $50.00 and shall present a certificate or license issued by the medical board of such other state, and provided further that the laws of such other state or territory, or the District of Columbia, require of physicians and surgeons who practice therein qualifications of a grade equal to those required of physicians and surgeons to practice in Ohio, and provided further that equal rights are accorded by said other state, territory or District of Columbia to physicians and surgeons of Ohio who hold a certificate from the State Medical board and who desire to remove to, reside and practice their professions in such other state, territory or district. This is merely a reciprocity provision with another state, a territory or the District of Columbia and was not made under our laws to include medical officers of the United States army, navy or marine hospital corps. So that, reciprocity certificates could not be issued to medical officers, as such, but, as noted above, the provisions of our medical laws do not apply to medical officers of the classes above named because section 1287 provides in part:

> "* * * This chapter shall not apply to a commissioned medical officer of the United States army, navy or marine hospital service in the discharge of his professional duties. * * *."

If, then, your inquiry refers only to the practice of such officers while they are performing service for the army, navy or marine service, you are advised that they are exempted from the provisions of the state medical laws, but if, on the other hand, such officers desire to receive certificates to practice medicine or surgery in Ohio outside of the United States service, then your board can make a proper rule by which a proper examination can be given as above indicated.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the State Medical board is authorized to make a rule that duly authorized applicants who are medical officers may have their examination papers, with printed questions attached, submitted under seal to the examiners of the Ohio State Medical board for inspection and, if satisfactory to the examiners of the State Medical board, certificates may be granted to such medical officers through such an examination.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE CITY OF URBANA, OHIO.—$15,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the city of Urbana, Ohio, in the sum of $15,000.00 for the purpose of purchasing equipment for the fire department of said city.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the city council and other officers of the city of Urbana, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find the said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of the city of Urbana, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering the above issue has been submitted to this department for approval, and I am therefore holding the transcript until such bond form is submitted and approved.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—CONTRACT TO IMPROVE NOT RELEASED BECAUSE NO CERTIFICATE UNDER 5660 G. C. MADE UNTIL AFTER FINAL RESOLUTION ADOPTED, NOR BECAUSE OF FAILURE TO OBTAIN BRICK OWING TO GOVERNMENT EMBARGO, NOR BECAUSE OF DANGER IN PURSUING WORK.

Under the facts and circumstances of the cases, the reasons advanced by Stringer & Springer as grounds upon which they should be released from their contract, namely (1) that the certificate of the county auditor to the effect that the money was in the treasury to take care of the obligation of the county was not made until after the final resolutions were adopted; and (2) that they were prevented from getting brick from a certain company owing to an embargo placed upon the shipment of brick by the federal government; and (3) that an over-hanging bank along the route of said improvement made it dangerous for working upon the same, are not sufficient in law to warrant said contractors being released from the obligations of their contract.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 8, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 26, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "For your information, I beg to quote the following from the Journal of the Highway Advisory board as of September 24th, 1918:
> 'Jefferson County—I. C. H. No. 7, section "J"—Contractors request release from contract.'
> A statement was presented signed by Stringer & Springer, original contractors for the improvement of section "J", inter-county highway No. 7, Jefferson county, this statement requesting the cancellation of said contract by the highway department.
> The secretary was authorized to submit to Mr. McGhee a copy of the request of Stringer & Springer together with a copy of the entry on the Journal of the Advisory board as of September 24th, 1918, relative to this contract."

To your communication is attached a copy of a letter addressed to you by Chief Engineer Bruning; also one addressed to you by Stringer & Springer, contractors. These communications are too lengthy to quote in full, but the facts upon which you desire my opinion are briefly as follows:

Your department entered into a contract with Stringer & Springer for the improvement of section "J" of inter-county highway No. 7, Jefferson county, Ohio, and known as the Ohio river road. The date of the letting of this improvement was April 28, 1916; the contract was mailed to the contractors on June 7, 1916; the final resolution of the county commissioners in which they agreed to assume, in the first instance, a certain proportion of the cost and expense of the improvement of this road, was adopted on April 7, 1916; the certificate of the county auditor to the effect that the money was in the treasury of the county to take care of the county's share of the cost and expense of the improvement was dated May 16, 1916; the contractors entered upon the construction of this work on or about June 20, 1916, and completed about 90 per cent of the grading of the road in 1916.

From the communication I take it that but little work, if any, was done upon this work after the fall of 1916 by Stringer & Springer.

Under the provisions of section 1209 G. C. the state highway commissioner took over this contract and is completing the same under contract with Morgan Brothers. The contractors, Stringer & Springer, now request that they be released from the contract with the State of Ohio, through the state highway department. Their request for a release from the obligations under the contract is based upon three separate and distinct propositions as set out in their communication to the highway department. First, they claim that they should be released for the reason that the final resolutions of the county commissioners were entered into on April 7, 1916, while the certificate of the county auditor to the effect that the money necessary to take care of the county's share of the cost and expense of the improvement was not made until May 1, 1916; that this is not in conformity to the provisions of section 5660 G. C. and that therefore the final resolutions of the county commissioners are void and the contract of the state highway commissioner based upon said final resolutions is also void, and therefore the contractors should be released from the obligations of the same.

Secondly, the contractors claim that they were not able to secure brick from the Mack Brick company of New Cumberland, West Virginia, with which they had contracted for the brick, and this for the reason that the federal government placed an embargo on the shipment of brick westward, so they were unable to get shipments.

Thirdly, the contractors suggest that there was an overhanging bank along a portion of this road which made work and travel along the road dangerous, and that the state highway commissioner did not take any steps to remove this bank until February, 1918.

I will note these different matters with a view to ascertain whether any of the claims made are of such a nature as that the contractors should be released from the obligations of their contract.

It occurs to me that the third matter submitted, that is, in reference to the over-hanging bank needs but little consideration. There is nothing to indicate that this condition made it at all impossible for the contractors to proceed with the improvement; in fact, they state that 90 per cent of the grading and much of the rolling had already been done in 1916. It is not likely that this over-hanging bank made it any more difficult or dangerous to lay the brick upon the road than to grade the same and roll it. Hence, I will pass this question by without further consideration.

The first matter suggested is entirely a legal one. I have already held in other opinions rendered to your department that the certificate of the county auditor to the effect that the money is in the treasury to take care of an obligation should be made prior to the time that the county commissioners make a final resolution or agreement to the effect that the county will assume a certain part of the cost and expense of an improvement. But this proposition must be taken in connection with the facts in reference to which the question is raised. In this case both the contractors and the state highway commissioner proceeded in accordance with the finding made by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, to the effect that the final resolution upon which the contract was based was correct in form and legal in all respects.

Upon the final resolution adopted by the commissioners of Jefferson county, Ohio, we find the following conclusion made by my predecessor:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

Pursuant to the requirements of section 1178 to 1231-4 inclusive of the General Code of Ohio, the foregoing agreement of the board of commissioners of Jefferson county, Ohio, is approved as to form and legality.

EDWARD C. TURNER,
Attorney-General of Ohio."

May 24, 1916.

Further, in Volume 1, page 918 of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1916, we find the opinion of my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, to the effect that this said final resolution was correct and that he had endorsed his approval thereon.

Inasmuch as the parties to this proceeding have gone forward on the theory that this final resolution was correct in form and legal, inasmuch as the Attorney-General, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C. had approved the same, I do not feel that I should overrule the opinion of my predecessor in reference to this final resolution.

It must be borne in mind that the contractors when dealing with public officials are held to have knowledge of all the acts of said public officials in reference to the contract which is made with said officials. Stringer & Springer in entering into the contract with the State of Ohio would be held to have knowledge of the acts of the county commissioners and of the county auditor as well as of the state highway commissioner and the Attorney-General of the state; and for this reason I do not feel that they should be allowed to complain of the fact at this late date that an error had been made in the proceedings, even though I should hold that such an error had been made.

I rendered an opinion to your department in which I held that contractors by the name of Rinehart Brothers should be released from their contract upon a condition of facts set out in the opinion. This opinion is found in Volume 1, page 658 of the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for 1917. In the case of Rinehart Brothers, the certificate was not made until after the final resolutions were entered into, but there was much more in that case than in the one now before me. In that case Rinehart Brothers requested time after time that they might be permitted to go ahead with their work stating that they were ready and had been ready for a considerable length of time to proceed with the work, but they were prevented from doing so owing to the fact that there was no money in the treasury, and that the state highway commissioner was not able to deliver the contract to them. Owing to the equities in that case I held that Rinehart Brothers should be released.

But the case under consideration is entirely different; the contractors entered upon the performance of their work immediately; they received their pay as the work proceeded; there was no fault whatever upon the part of the county of Jefferson nor upon the part of the officials of the state. Further, it must be remembered, that in this case Stringer & Springer have forfeited their contract in not complying with the provisions of section 1209 G. C. and have no further rights in and to the same. The state highway commissioner has taken over the contract under the provisions of said section 1209 which makes it obligatory upon him to complete the same by force account, by contract or by any method which may seem to him to be for the best interest of the public, paying for the same out of the balance that may be due under the original contract, and if there be not sufficient to complete the same, then he must look to the bond for the difference between the total cost and expense of the improvement and the original contract price.

We can readily see from this that the state already has certain rights as against both the contractors and the surety on their bond. To be sure, if the contractors could be released from the obligations of their contract, the surety on the bond would also be released, to the detriment and loss of the State of Ohio.

Hence, inasmuch as my predecessor, Hon. E. C. Turner, passed favorably upon this particular final resolution, and both the state highway commissioner and the contractors acted in view of this finding, and inasmuch as the contractors have forfeited their rights under the contract, and the state highway commissioner has taken the same over and is completing the improvement under the provisions of section 1209 G. C. it is my opinion that you have no authority in law to declare the contract null and void as to the contractors, Stringer & Springer.

We now come to consider the second matter set up by the contractors, namely, that they were not able to get brick from the firm with which they had contracted for the brick, and this owing to the fact that the federal government had placed an embargo upon the shipping of brick westward during the season of 1917.

Insofar as the contract between the state highway commissioner and Stringer & Springer is concerned, there was no agreement whatever as to the place from which Stringer & Springer should secure the brick. Whether they secured the brick from the particular firm mentioned, or whether they secured the brick from some other source, was not important to the state. The only condition required by the state was to the effect that the brick should come up to certain specifications set out in the contract. If Stringer & Springer were prevented from getting their brick from the particular firm with which they had contracted, they evidently could have gotten brick from other sources.

Further, this embargo that was placed upon the shipping of brick was not a lasting order. It was merely temporary. The law is well settled to the effect that the mere fact that a contractor is prevented for a time from getting the necessary material with which to carry out his contract because of a law or an order of the government, he is not therefore entitled to a release from the obligations of his contract.

I went into this matter pretty fully in an opinion rendered by me on August 10, 1918, to Hon. Benton G. Hay, prosecuting attorney, being opinion No. 1394. In this case the contractor was unable for the time to get tar products with which to place the top covering upon a highway which he was improving. In considering this I arrived at this conclusion:

> "There is one condition attached to the above principle which ought to be noted at this time, and that is, that a mere temporary disability to perform the obligations of the contract, due to the fact of some law, or due to the enforcement of a law already enacted, will not permit a party to a contract to refuse to perform his obligations."

Further along in the opinion I arrive at this conclusion:

> "In the first place, let me say it is my opinion that the contractor in your case could not demand as against the wishes of the county commissioners that he be released from the obligations which he has assumed, the order made by the federal government is from the very necessity of the case merely temporary in nature, and while the county commissioners could not compel the contractor to place upon the road a bituminous top dressing during the period of the war, yet after the war closes the county commissioners, if they so desire, undoubtedly could hold the contractor to the obligations entered into by him in his contract with the county."

Hence, in reference to the matter which I am now considering, let me suggest (1) that Stringer & Springer were not justified in simply relying upon the Mack Brick Company for the furnishing of the brick necessary for the construction of this highway. If they could not secure the brick from this firm, they should have secured the brick from some other source; and (2) even though they were prevented for the time in getting brick, due to the embargo placed upon the shipping of brick by the federal government, yet this embargo was merely temporary and not permanent, and hence would not be a sufficient ground upon which the contractors should be released from the obligations of their contract.

Hence, in view of all the above I advise you specifically that the reasons advanced by Stringer & Springer as a basis upon which they ought to be released from the obligations of their contract are not sufficient in law to warrant their release.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF HANCOCK COUNTY, OHIO.—$19,325.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 10, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Hancock county, Ohio, in the sum of $19,325.00 in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments to pay the respective shares of Hancock county, of Liberty township and of the owners of benefited property assessed of the cost and expense of constructing the Ottawa-Findlay I. C. H. No. 223 road improvement located in said county and township.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Hancock county, Ohio, and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds, and find the proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of Hancock county, Ohio, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE FIRST ROMAN CATHOLIC ST. ELIAS BENEVOLENT ASSOCIATION.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your favor under date of October 9, 1918, submitting for my approval the Articles of incorporation of The First Roman Catholic St. Elias Benevolent Association, together with check for $25.00 covering the filing fee of said articles.

I do not know anything in the statutory provisions relating to the incorporation of associations of this kind which require my official approval of these articles, but treating your submission of these articles as a request for my opinion with respect to the validity of the articles of incorporation, I beg to say that I find the same to be in all respects regular, save and except that conformable to the provisions of section 9427 General Code, as construed by this department from time to time, the word "stipulated" should be inserted in the purpose clause of the articles between the word "of" and the word "benefits."

I herewith return to you the said articles of incorporation for correction in the manner above indicated, together with the check for $25.00 before noted herein.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

FORFEITED LANDS—REDEMPTION AND RIGHTS OF PARTIES.

A is the owner of property in fee simple which becomes delinquent for non-payment of taxes in 1897.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

HON. ADDISON P. MINSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—By letter of September 16th, supplemented by your communication of October 4th, you have requested my opinion upon the following questions:

> "A is the owner of a piece of property in fee simple, the property is allowed to become delinquent by A, by reason of non-payment of taxes for the years of 1887 and 1888.
> The property is offered for sale by the county treasurer, under section 5711 G. C. and sold to B, a certificate is issued to B by the county auditor under section 5715 G. C. B pays the taxes for the year of 1899, and allows the land to become delinquent by reason of non-payment of taxes for the years of 1900 and 1901.
> Thereupon the land is again offered for sale by the treasurer at delinquent land sale in the year of 1902, not sold for want of bidders, and therefore forfeited to the state.
> How may A the original owner again come into possession of this land in the year of 1918?
> What equity if any has B in this property?
> C an outsider desires to purchase this property. What procedure must he take and what equity if any, or what settlement if any, must he make with A and B?"

As to your first question I may say that nothing in the statement of facts shows that A has ever lost possession of the land in question. Neither the sale thereof at delinquent tax sale nor the forfeiture thereof to the state would put him out of possession. The purchaser at the delinquent tax sale acquired no right of possession—indeed he never acquired perfect title at all,—merely a lien and an inchoate right to receive a deed, of which apparently he has never availed himself. If he (B) is in possession I am of the opinion that A can maintain ejectment against him; because as against the whole world excepting the state of Ohio A is the owner of the tract.

Thevenin vs. Lessee of Slocum, 16 Ohio, 519; State ex rel. vs. Godfrey, 62 O. S. 18.

Your statement of facts does not show that the land was ever sold at forfeited land sale. I assume therefore that the state has never disposed of it, so that no one claiming title from the state has dispossessed A. You do not say that the state has in any other manner dispossessed A.

In short, without further facts at least, I do not see that the first question submitted by the county auditor to you and by you to me exists at all.

By this purchase of the quantity of the land at delinquent tax sale B acquired the state's lien for the taxes which he paid and, as stated, an inchoate right to receive a deed at the end of two years (section 5719 G. C.). You do not state that B is asserting any right to receive a deed at this time. I am inclined to the opinion that B would have no right at this time to call for a deed. He has allowed the land to become again delinquent and it has been forfeited to the state. It now has, therefore, the status of "forfeited land" and is no longer "delinquent land." While I am unable to find any case directly in point, I repeat my opinion that B can not now call for a deed.

B's only other right was an interest in the land in the nature of a lien thereon representing the lien of the state for the taxes which he paid. If the delinquent tax sale was in all respects regular there would be some doubt as to whether or not this lien could be enforced otherwise than by calling for a deed under proper circumstances (See Cleveland Trust Co. vs. Brown, 17 C. C. n. s. 304). If B did have any right to enforce his lien in any of the usual ways such right, in my opinion, was of the same character as that given to a purchaser at an irregular tax sale by section 5724 of the General Code which created such lien, as follows:

> "Upon the sale of land or town lots for delinquent taxes, the lien which the state has thereon for taxes then due shall be transferred to the purchaser at such sale. If such sale should be invalid on account of irregularity in the proceedings of an officer, having a duty to perform in relation thereto, the purchaser at such sale shall be entitled to receive, from the owner of such land or lot, the amount of taxes, interest, and penalty legally due thereon at the time of sale, with interest thereon from the time of payment thereof, and the amount of taxes paid thereon by the purchaser subsequent to such sale. Such land or lot shall be bound for the payment thereof."

Under this section it is held that an action to enforce the lien expressly provided for in the latter part thereof is subject to the six year statute of limitations.

Wiltsie vs. McClymon, 11 C. C. n. s. 509; Wolcott vs. Holland, 5 C. C. n. s. 604.

This statute of limitations begins to run at the expiration of two years from the date of the sale. On the facts as the auditor states them, then, (though the dates seem to be in some confusion) B's right to enforce the lien of the state for the taxes which he paid, if such right ever existed, became barred in 1907.

I therefore arrive at the conclusion that B has lost all enforcible rights which he ever had under the tax sale to him.

C, the outsider, would in my opinion get a perfect title to the premises by dealing with A for A's legal title and redeeming the land from the forfeiture under section 5746 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"If the former owner of a tract of land or town lot, which has been so forfeited, at any time before the state has disposed of such land or lot, shall pay into the treasury of the county in which such land or lot is situated, or into the state treasury, all the taxes and penalties due thereon at the time of such forfeiture, with the taxes and penalties which have since accrued thereon, as ascertained and certified by the auditor, the state shall relinquish to such former owner or owners, all claim to such land or lot. The county auditor shall then re-enter such land or lot on his tax-list, with the name of the proper owner."

I have previously assumed that the state has not disposed of the land, so that the right of redemption still exists in the original owner. A is the original owner because B never acquired any title to the land. A may then certainly redeem it. The right to redeem seems to be limited to the "former owner," which has been held to apply to his heirs.

Reynolds vs. Lieper's Heirs, 7 Ohio, (pt. 1) 17; Tullis vs. Pierano, 9 C. C. 647.

To avoid all question it might be best for the parties to deal with each other so that the redemption is made in the name of A. That is, A (with money furnished by C, of course,) can redeem from the forfeiture by paying all the unpaid taxes charged against the property with the penalties which have accrued, and then execute a general warranty deed to C. C will then have a good and perfect title because B's right to call for a deed and his right, if any, to enforce the lien which was transferred to him have both been extinguished, the one by the subsequent forfeiture of the land to the state, and the other possibly by the same event and certainly by the lapse of time.

Of course, all the statutes considered in this opinion have been repealed by an act passed in 1917. Such repeal, however, does not affect the rights that vested and became divested under the statutes as they were when the transactions inquired about occurred.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOTS NOS. 15 AND 67 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lots of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Frankin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

Being lots Nos. fifteen (15) and sixty-seven (67) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on October 3, 1918, a good title in John M. Hess, to the premises hereinbefore described.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOT NO. 69 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lot of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

> Being lot No. sixty-nine (69) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on October 3, 1918, a good title in Hannah M. Kennedy, to the premises hereinbefore described.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOTS NOS. 70, 71, 72 AND 73 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lots of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

Being lots Nos. seventy (70), seventy-one (71), seventy-two (72) and seventy-three (73) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on October 3, 1918, a good title in Mary E. Hess, to the premises hereinbefore described.

While I am passing favorably upon the title to the above named lots standing in the name of Mary E. Hess, as of date October 3, 1918, I desire to call attention particularly to one matter connected with the chain of title to lots Nos. 72 and 73. In so far as the records in the office of the recorder of Franklin county, Ohio, are concerned, said lots Nos. 72 and 73 stand in the name of Eliza J. Hess. John K. Kennedy makes affidavit which is made a part of the abstract and states that Eliza J. Hess made a last will and testament which was offered for probate on the day upon which the affidavit was made and that Mary E. Hess is her only daughter and only heir at law, and that all the estate, both real and personal, of Eliza J. Hess passes under her will to Mary E. Hess; that Eliza J. Hess had property at the time of her decease valued at over $100,000, and that her debts do not exceed $6,500.00.

Thus whether the will is probated or not, Mary E. Hess will come into the legal possession of lots Nos. 72 and 73. If the will is probated she would get them by devise. If it should not be probated, she will get title to said lots by descent. However, she takes said lots subject to the debts of the decedent, Eliza J. Hess.

Taking the sworn statement of John K. Kennedy at its full weight, which I do, I notice that there is an abundance of property to take care of the debts of Eliza J. Hess, without resorting to these two lots. However, this question might arise: Suppose Mary E. Hess should sell all the real estate before the debts of Eliza J. Hess are paid and there is not sufficient personal property to pay the debts, what would be the position of the state in reference to these two lots, inasmuch as it would be compelled to take them subject to the debts of Eliza J. Hess? I do not think the state would suffer in this respect, due to the principle laid down in Nellons et al. vs. Truax, et al., 6 O. S. 98, to the effect that in a case where several purchasers buy real estate encumbered by legacies, the property transferred is liable to the payment of the liens, upon it, because of the legacies, in the inverse order in which the purchasers acquired ownership. The syllabus in this case reads as follows:

"Where T. devised to his son all of his real estate, by his paying the valuation of two thousand dollars (after the decease of testator's wife), equally to his six children, the legacies thus created are a charge upon the land devised, which may be enforced against it in the hands of purchasers from the devisees, although they purchased without actual notice of the incumbrance, and for good considerations paid.

The several purchasers of such incumbered property are liable to the payment of the liens upon it, according to the inverse order of time in which they acquired ownership.

The rule of pro rata contribution does not apply, in this state, to vendees of incumbered lands, who became seized at different dates."

In the opinion on p. 104 the court say, in commenting upon another case therein cited, as follows:

> "This case was ably considered, and while it reaffirms former decisions of the court against the application of the pro rata principle of contribution to purchasers of incumbered real estate, also holds the doctrine that there is no distinction, in this particular, between mortgage, judgment, and testamentary liens; and that as between purchasers, they are all to have the same effect. It was a case of a charge upon real estate arising out of a will, and presented the question of the order of liability of several purchasers of the incumbered property acquiring their interest at different times. It was quite similar, in its main features, to the one now under consideration, and sustains fully the view we express."

Under the above principle I feel that the State of Ohio is perfectly safe and fully protected in the purchase of these two lots. The state being the first purchaser of any of the real estate, all other purchasers would take the real estate subject to the payment of the debts of the decedent in the inverse order of time in which said real estate is purchased and hence the state would be the last one to be called upon to answer for any of the debts of the decedent; and inasmuch as the property of the decedent is worth over $100,000.00, while the debts amount to only $6,500.00, the state is fully protected.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOTS NOS. 6 AND 14, HUNTINGTON TOWNSHIP, LORAIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

Board of Agriculture of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 7, 1918, enclosing abstract of title covering the following described property, situated in the township of Huntington, county of Lorain and State of Ohio:

> Being all of lots Nos. six (6) and fourteen (14) in tract No. five (5) in the northwest quarter of said township, excepting therefrom ten (10) rods square on the southeast corner of lot No. six (6) conveyed to the board of education of Huntington township and three and ninety-three hundredths (3 93-100ths) acres of land across lot No. fourteen (14) from northeast to southwest, appropriated for railroad purposes by The Lorain, Ashland & Southern Railroad Company, and containing within said boundaries, ninety-nine and three-eighths (99⅜ths) acres of land in lot No. six (6) and one hundred and seven-hundredths (100 7-100ths) acres in lot No. fourteen (14), be the same more or less, but subject to all legal highways.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on September 30, 1918, a good title in Samuel Denton Bradner, Mary Louisa Roice, Margaret Anna Holcomb and Orrie Emma Bradner, to the premises hereinbefore described.

While I am passing favorably upon the title to said property as shown by the abstract submitted to me, there are two matters to which I desire to call attention:

(1) There was no administration had upon the estate of George H. Bradner, who was the father of the persons who now have title to said property and from whom they secured the same by descent. There are two affidavits attached to the abstract, one of which was made by one of the heirs at law of Margaret Anna Holcomb, to the effect that George H. Bradner died on November 17, 1906, and that at the time of his death there were no outstanding debts against him excepting those of his last sickness and funeral expenses and that these were paid from his estate by J. T. Haskell as agent and attorney for the heirs at law of said George H. Bradner.

The other affidavit was made by J. T. Haskell, stating that he paid all the funeral expenses and debts arising during the last sickness of George H. Bradner; that said George H. Bradner died on November 17, 1906, intestate, and that to his knowledge, after investigation, there were no other outstanding debts of any kind against said estate.

Of course these two affidavits do not entirely eliminate the question of claims against the estate of George H. Bradner, for which claims the real estate in question would be liable; but inasmuch as twelve years have elapsed since the death of George H. Bradner, I feel justified in passing favorably upon the title to this property and not put the heirs to the trouble and expense of having the estate of their deceased father administered upon.

The two affidavits above mentioned state that George H. Bradner died on November 17, 1906, and I am taking this to be the fact, although in an affidavit made by Margarent Anna Holcomb under the statute, for the purpose of transferring the title to this property upon the records, from George H. Bradner to the heirs at law, a statement is made that he died on November 17, 1916. I am considering this to be a typographical error. If George H. Bradner actually died at such a later date, I would not pass favorably upon the title to this property.

(2) The second matter to which I will direct attention is that the affidavit made and filed in pursuance of statute, for the purpose of transferring, upon the records of Lorain county, the title of this property from George H. Bradner to said heirs at law, is signed by but one heir, namely, Margaret Anna Holcomb.

The statute (section 2768 G. C.) provides as follows:

> "Section 2768. * * * Before any real estate, the title to which shall have passed under the laws of descent shall be transferred, as above provided, from the name of the ancestor to the heir at law or next of kin of such ancestor, or to any grantee of such heir at law or next of kin; * * such heir at law or next of kin * * * shall present to such auditor the affidavit of such heir or heirs at law or next of kin, or of two persons resident of the State of Ohio, * * *", setting out the fact of the death of the original owner, the date of his death, the heirs, their relationship to the deceased and the real estate of which the decedent died seized and the interest which each heir has in the property.

While to my knowledge the courts have never passed upon this section, it is my opinion that the affidavit should be signed by all the heirs at law or by two persons who are strangers to the estate; but this may be placing a technical construction upon the section, and inasmuch as the affidavit has already been filed with the recorder, I do not feel that I should require the heirs at law to prepare and file another affidavit, although I think this is the construction which should be placed upon the language of said statute.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL COURT OF ALLIANCE—GOVERNOR FILLS VACANCY CAUSED BY RESIGNATION OF CLERK.

Under the act creating a municipal court for the city of Alliance and certain townships in the county of Stark (107 O. L. 660), the governor of the state is authorized in law to fill a vacancy caused by the resignation of the clerk of said municipal court under the provisions of section 38 of the act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 11, 1918.

HON. MILTON C. MOORE, Judge of the Municipal Court, Alliance, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 12, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "The Municipal Court of Alliance, Ohio, was created by special act of legislature and said act is found in the 107th volume of the Ohio Laws, page 660.
> Section 26 of said act provides that the clerk of said court shall be elected for a term of four years beginning January 1, 1918.
> B. was duly elected and qualified and has served as clerk of said court ever since January 1, 1918. He has now tendered his resignation as clerk as aforesaid, effective September 30 next.
> The question now arises as to who has the authority to appoint his successor. Sections 35 and 38 of said act are the only sections within the act bearing upon this proposition and it is difficult to determine the intention of the legislature upon this proposition.
> Will you kindly advise me who has the authority to fill this vacancy?"

The act which created the municipal court of Alliance is indefinite and uncertain, not only in reference to the particular matter about which you inquire, but in relation to others as well. You call attention to the provisions of sections 35 and 38 of the act, as pertaining to the question which you submit, but suggest that it is uncertain as to whether they apply.

Section 35 of the act reads in part as follows (section 1579-229, 107 O. L. 669):

> "Whenever the incumbent of any office created by this act, excepting the municipal judge shall be temporarily absent or incapacitated from acting, the judge shall appoint a substitute who shall have all the qualifications required of the incumbent of the office. Such appointee shall serve until the return of the regular incumbent, or until his incapacity ceases. * * *."

In my opinion it would be placing a violent construction upon this provision to hold that it applies to a case in which the incumbent of an office resigns the same.

We will now consider the provisions of section 38 of the act (section 1579-232 G. C., p. 670 of 107 O. L.), as to whether they could be made to apply to the resignation of the clerk of the municipal court. This section reads as follows:

"The judge of the municipal court shall be subject to the same disabilities and may be removed from office for the same causes as the judge of the court of common pleas. The vacancies arising from any cause except as herein provided shall be filled by appointment by the governor of the state."

The provisions of this section are very peculiar. The first paragraph of the section deals exclusively with the judge of the municipal court, but says nothing in reference to him in the way of filling a vacancy in the event his office becomes vacant. It merely puts him on the same plane, in reference to disabilities and removal from office, as is the judge of the court of common pleas. The latter part of the section relates to vacancies and reads as follows:

"The vacancies arising from any cause except as herein provided shall be filled by appointment by the governor of the state."

At first thought we might reach the conclusion that the vacancy suggested has to do with the office of the judge of the municipal court only and not with any other office; but we must remember that the first part of this section does not deal with vacancies. Hence it is my opinion that the latter part might cover vacancies in general occurring under the provisions of this act, and that whenever vacancies occur, no difference to what office they may apply, the governor of the state shall fill the vacancy, except where the act itself makes provision for the filling of the vacancy. The fact that the word "vacancies," instead of "vacancy" is used in the latter part of the section, strengthens me in my view. If the legislature had intended the latter part of the section to apply merely to the judge of the municipal court and to no other officer provided in the act, it is my opinion that the singular instead of the plural of the word would have been used.

Hence answering your question specifically, it is my view that it becomes the duty of the governor of the state to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of the clerk of your municipal court.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE AMATEUR CLUB OF ROSSFORD—CORRECTIONS SUGGESTED.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 12, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted for my opinion the question as to the legality of the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of The Amateur Club of Rossford (Kolko Amatorskie Z Rossford).

The purpose clause of said articles reads as follows:

> "Said corporation is formed for the purpose of to play shows (theater), benefit for members, and spread patriotism for the Polish cause. The rehearsal and the private and public rendition of theatrical performances, the providing of other forms of public entertainment and amusement; the receipt from the performance to be used for the mutual protection and relief of the members of said organization, receiving and raising funds by donation and by assessment on its members; giving financial aid to its members when disabled by sickness or accident, and payment of benefits, on the death of members; of constructing, buying, leasing, owning, maintaining and selling such real estate, buildings and personal property as may be necessary or convenient to the carrying out of said purpose, and the doing of all things necessary or incident thereto."

The social features noted in the purpose clause above noted might well be covered by incorporation not for profit under the general incorporation laws of the state. Other provisions of the purpose clause, however, indicate a purpose on the part of the proposed association to conduct the business of insurance, and this purpose must be covered by incorporation under statutory provisions relating specifically to the incorporation of insurance organizations of this kind.

Authority to incorporate for insurance purposes set out in the purpose clause of these articles must be found, if at all, in the provisions of section 9427 General Code. The provisions of this section in its application to organizations of the kind here in question, have been discussed in opinions of this department from time to time, and it will serve no useful purpose for me to enter upon an extended discussion of the provisions of this section at this time.

It is sufficient to say that in my opinion the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation here submitted can be amended so as to substantially comply with the provisions of section 9427 General Code by making the following insertions:

(1) After the words "members of said organization" insert a semi-colon instead of the comma as now appears.

(2) Between the word "organization" and the word "receiving" and after the semi-colon to be inserted, insert the words "and for said purpose."

(3) Between the words "payment of" and the word "benefits" insert the words "stipulated amounts as."

The articles of incorporation submitted are herewith returned.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN THE AMERICAN GREENHOUSE MFG. CO., OF PANA, ILL., AND THE BOARD OF CONTROL OF THE OHIO AGRICULTURAL EXPERIMENT STATION.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1918.

HON. W. H. KRAMER, Bursar, Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, Wooster, O.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted for my approval contract entered into on June 28, 1918, between The American Greenhouse Mfg. Co., of Pana, Ill., and the board of control of the Ohio Agricultural Experiment Station, for the construction and completion of greenhouses for the sum of $8,500.00. With said contract you submitted a bond to secure said contract.

Having received from the auditor of state a certificate that there are funds available for the purpose not otherwise obligated, and finding the contract to be in compliance with law, I have this day approved the same and filed the same, together with the bond, in the office of the auditor of state.

I am herewith returning to you the balance of the papers submitted.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—MAY NOT CHARGE COST OF STREET FLUSHER AS PART OF COST OF CLEANING STREETS IN GIVEN YEAR NOR USE PROCEEDS OF STREET CLEANING ASSESSMENT BONDS THEREFOR.

A municipal corporation may not, under authority of section 3839 et seq. G. C., purchase a street flusher to be used in cleaning its streets through its officers and include the initial cost of the flusher as a part of the entire cost and expense connected with cleaning streets in any given year; nor may it purchase such a flusher out of the proceeds of bonds issued under section 3845 G. C. in anticipation of the collection of assessments for this purpose, such bonds being limited in amount to the assessments for a single year.

A municipal corporation is without power to issue bonds or borrow money for the purpose of buying a street flusher.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of a letter from the city solicitor of Washington C. H., Ohio, advising me that your bureau desires an answer to the following question which arises in that city:

> "Under authority of sections 3839 et seq. of the General Code, can a municipal corporation, through its officers, purchase a street flusher for cleaning its streets, and include the initial cost of flusher as part of the entire cost and expense connected with cleaning streets, the entire cost to be assessed against properties abutting on streets so cleaned?"

As I interpret this inquiry in the light of a conversation with the city solicitor the point in which all concerned are primarily interested is the question as to the manner in which a municipality may secure the funds with which to purchase apparatus of this character; for if the first cost of the flusher can be included in the assessment about which inquiry is made, then it may be purchased from the proceeds of the bonds issued in anticipation of the levy or collection of such assessment under authority of section 3845 of the General Code, which will be hereinafter referred to; whereas if this is not the case it would appear that there is no way to borrow money for this purpose, as section 3839 G. C., commonly known as the Longworth act, does not authorize bonds to be issued for the purchase of machinery or equipment to be used in sprinkling or sweeping the streets, and I know of no statutory or other authority in a municipality to borrow money for the purpose indicated, unless the expenditure involved may be regarded as a part of the cost of sweeping or cleaning the streets for which assessments or special taxes may be levied. It would follow, therefore, that if a negative answer be given to the question as submitted by the city solicitor we would be driven to the conclusion that apparatus of this kind could only be acquired for a village by the expenditure of the proceeds of general tax levies for the service fund.

The question as to the inclusion of the purchase price of a street flusher in the total cost of an assessment for cleaning streets, etc. invokes consideration of the following sections of the General Code:

Section 3839:—"Municipal corporations may sprinkle with water, sweep, and clean any streets or alleys, or parts thereof. All such work may be done by contract or by and through the officers of the corporation. Before such work shall be done by or through such officers, the council thereof shall pass an ordinance authorizing the officer or officers having the care of streets and alleys to purchase or rent the necessary tools, machinery and appliances, to employ the necessary labor, and to do such work."

Section 3841:—"* * * From the statements so filed (by a board of commissioners whom the director of public service is authorized but not required to appoint for the purpose of determining the necessity of sprinkling or cleaning a given street) and from such other information as may come to his knowledge, or upon failure of the commissioners to file such statement, the director of public service may determine and recommend to the council, as provided in the next section, what work is necessary to be done, upon such streets or alleys, or parts thereof, within any such period." (one year or part thereof).

Section 3842:—"The council of a city upon the recommendation of the director of public service, or the council of a village, may provide by ordinance for sprinkling with water, sweeping, or cleaning of such streets or alleys, or parts thereof. For the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this section and of the next three preceding sections, one ordinance may be made to include one or more streets or alleys, or parts thereof, and one or more of the powers granted by such sections."

Section 3844:—"The entire cost and expense connected with any such work in any year, except as herein provided, whether done by contract, or by and through the officers of the corporation, may, by ordinance, be assessed upon the abutting or other specially benefited property, and by any one of the methods mentioned in the first section of this chapter. The assessments so levied may be collected in one installment in the manner provided in the case of assessments for street improvements, but if it deems expedient the council may levy and collect such assessments, at any time, before or after the completion of the work. Such assessing ordinance may be made to include the property abutting upon any one or more streets or alleys, or parts thereof, and one or more of the powers granted in the preceding five sections."

Section 3845:—"Bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness may be issued and sold before or after doing such work in anticipation of the levy or collection of such assessments, and may be authorized and provided for in the assessing ordinance, or in a separate ordinance, but no publication of such assessing ordinance or of the ordinance authorizing and providing for such notes, bonds and certificates of indebtedness shall in any case be required."

Section 3846:—"No part of the cost and expense connected with such work shall be paid by the municipal corporation, except when the whole or any portion of a street or alley upon which work shall be done passes by or through a public wharf, market space, park, cemetery, structure for the fire department, waterworks, school building, infirmary, market building, workhouse, hospital, house of refuge, gas works, public prison, or any other public structure or public grounds within and belonging to the corporation, and, subject to the limitation hereinbefore imposed in this chapter, the council may authorize the proper proportion of the estimated cost and expense of such work to be certified by the clerk of the corporation to the county auditor and entered upon the tax list of all taxable real and personal property in the corporation, and they shall be collected as, and in addition to, all other taxes. The right of the corporation to levy such assessments shall not be affected by the tax valuation of the property to be assessed or by the amount of assessments theretofore levied upon such property."

The group of statutes from which quotation is made embodies a method of assessment entirely distinct from that embodied in sections 3812 et seq. of the General Code. It is true that in section 3812 G. C. it is provided that the council of any municipal corporation may assess upon specially benefited lots or lands

"any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street * * * by grading, draining, curbing, etc., * * * and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning, or planting shade trees thereupon."

This declaration in section 3812 may, in my opinion, however, be taken as declaratory of all purposes for which the municipality may levy and collect special assessments for the improvement of a street, and the sections immediately following and providing the machinery for making an ordinary street improvement to be paid for by special assessment cannot have complete application to sweeping, cleaning and sprinkling streets for the following reasons:

(1) No resolution of necessity is required. Merely the passage of an ordinance and service of notice thereof (sections 3842 and 3843 G. C.) is sufficient to initiate the machinery of sweeping streets. Moreover it would be ridiculous to hold that section 3815 G. C., which requires the establishment of a grade and the approval of plans, specifications and profiles for the proposed improvement, is applicable to cleaning and sweeping streets.

(2) The provision that the corporation shall pay part of the cost and expense of the improvement, not less than one-fiftieth and the cost of intersection, cannot apply, because of the explicit provisions of sections 3844 and 3846 G. C. to the effect that the entire cost and expense of the improvement shall be assessed upon the property owners unless the street to be cleaned or swept passes by public grounds, in which event the municipality is in effect to be assessed therefor. In fact the very inclusion of section 3846 G. C., above quoted, in the statutory scheme for the sweeping and cleaning of streets rather conclusively shows the separation of the two methods of procedure; for if the group of statutes immediately following section 3812 G. C. apply in their entirety, section 3846 G. C. would not have been necessary, section 3837 G. C. containing a complete provision practically identical with section 3846 on this point.

(3) The machinery of filing claims for damages, etc., which is a part of the general sections, could have no application to cleaning and sweeping streets. This is another reason for dispensing with the resolution of necessity as a part of the procedure for sweeping streets.

(4) An ordinary street improvement must be done by contract, (section 3833 G. C.) whereas it is expressly provided in section 3839, supra, that the work of cleaning and sweeping streets may be "by and through the officers of the corporation" as well as by contract.

(5) The requirement that no public improvement a part of the cost of which is to be specially assessed shall be made without the concurrence of three-fourths of council, except upon petition (section 3835); and the further provision to the effect that when a petition subscribed by three-fourths of the interested owners of abutting property is filed the entire cost may be assessed, cannot have any application to sweeping and cleaning streets.

Many of these features of the applicable statutes were dealt with in an opinion of recent date to your bureau relating to the power of municipal corporations to assess the cost of lighting streets upon the property abutting thereon. It is, perhaps, too much to say, as I have indicated, that the machinery for sweeping and cleaning streets on the assessment plan is entirely distinct from that for making street improvements by assessments generally. It is sufficient to observe that the latter is, in a large part at least, a separate and distinct procedure. Moreover I am of the opinion that in spite of what is said in section 3812 above referred to, the sweeping and cleaning of streets can only be done on the assessment plan by complying with the group of sections which I have quoted; so that the general features of the street improvement statutes cannot be used in sweeping and cleaning streets.

These observations clear the way for a careful examination of the statutes which I have quoted, and in particular for the consideration of the meaning of the declaration of section 3844 G. C. to the effect that "the entire cost and expense connected with any such work in any year * * * may be assessed upon the abutting or other specially benefited property" and that in section 3846 to the effect that "no part of the cost and expense connected with such work shall be paid by the municipal corporation" except when the public is the owner of abutting property. Do these provisions imply that a municipality may incur no expense in connection with the sweeping and cleaning of streets, which shall be a charge on the general duplicate, unless the street upon which the work shall be done passes by public ground? If this be the meaning of these provisions then it might be argued that the purchase of a street flusher, being an expense attributable to cleaning streets, could not be made as a charge on the general funds of the corporation, and if this should be true, we would have to inquire whether or not the initial cost of such equipment could be practicably and legally assessed upon the owners of abutting property when the equipment after its purchase would belong to the municipality.

Considerable difficulty is involved in the ultimate questions which have been suggested, for it is clear from the statutes which I have quoted that streets are to be swept and cleaned as separate thoroughfares, or at least that council is not obliged to pass a single ordinance providing for the sweeping and cleaning of streets which are to be swept and cleaned in a single legislative act. Moreover the council has power under section 3629 G. C. to provide for sweeping and cleaning streets by general taxation instead of on the assessment plan, and it has been held that the two plans may be combined.

Hunter vs. Austin, 9 C. C. 583.

Hence it would be very difficult to apportion the first cost of a street flusher among the various streets that are to be cleaned, or between the streets that are to be cleaned by assessment and those that are to be cleaned by general taxation.

Moreover, the validity of levying special assessments for the purpose of sweeping and cleaning streets may be called seriously into question. See Dillon on Municipal Corporations, Volume 4, page 2583, where it is pointed out that in many states:

> "The power to impose a special assessment for that purpose (sprinkling streets) is denied on the ground that the effects are not substantial or permanent and are too intangible to be designated as an improvement which will confer a special and peculiar benefit on the property" (citing cases from New York, Illinois, Michigan, Missouri, Montana, Utah and Kentucky).

So that it would seem that if the statute should be interpreted as requiring the inclusion in the total cost of the sweeping and cleaning for which assessments may be levied of the initial cost of a street flusher which is to become the property of the corporation, and may be used on any of its streets, the validity of the statutes themselves would be called into question.

The general statutes providing what may be included in the total cost and improvement for which assessments may be levied do not afford much help because of the extreme generality of their terms and because of the doubt which exists about their application to sweeping and cleaning streets. Thus section 3896, which possibly applies, after enumerating various items of cost which are to be included in the cost of the improvement, concludes with the vague and unsatisfactory phrase "and any other necessary expenditure."

Under this section it has been held in Ohio that the cost of surveying and engineering which is done by the salaried officers of a municipal corporation and was paid for out of the general fund cannot be included in the assessment.

> Longworth vs. Cincinnati, 34 O. S. 101.

The reason assigned, however, is that Municipal Code is to be so interpreted as to make such salaries a charge on the general duplicate.

Cases in several states are not all in accord with Longworth vs. Cincinnati on this point.

> See: In re Fifth Ave. Sewer, 4 Brew. (Pa.) 364, accord; People ex rel. vs. Kingston, 56 N. Y. Supp. 606; Gibson vs. Chicago, 22 Ill. 556; contra.

In our case, however, the operation of the principle relied upon in Longworth vs. Cincinnati is not clear because we must first decide whether it is the clear intent of all the statutes now in force that any expense incurred for the purpose of cleaning and sweeping streets shall be paid out of the general fund, and to do this we must interpret the language of sections 3844 and 3846 G. C. last above quoted.

Of course it is clear that the council might provide for sweeping and cleaning streets on the contract plan instead of through the officers of the municipality. If this plan should be chosen the contractor would undoubtedly include in the price for which he would do the work some part of the cost of equipment belonging to him which he would use on the work, and no question could be raised as to the validity of including the entire contract price in the cost of the improvement; and if the municipality should own a street flusher and then decide to let the work by contract, the contractor to use the city's street flusher and to pay or allow the city something in the nature of rent for its use, the total contract price could be assessed without making any deduction for the rent paid to the city for the use of its equipment.

McGlynn vs. Toledo, 22 C. C. 34.

So that it might be argued that if the city chose to do the work itself it could at least include as part of the total cost to be assessed a reasonable rental for the use of the equipment belonging to the city on the particular street which was being cleaned on the assessment plan.

It seems to me that the answer to the principal questions above suggested is furnished by consideration of the clause "in any year" as found in the context quoted from section 3844 G. C. in connection with what appears to be the controlling idea of the whole group of statutes under examination, which is that the thing to be assessed is the annual cost of a continuous service. As pointed out in the other opinion, to which reference has been made, the primary difference between the machinery for assessing the cost of sprinkling streets and that for assessing the cost of making a specific improvement in a street is just this: the latter is a method of apportioning a part or all of the cost of doing a single thing; the former is a method of apportioning all the cost of furnishing a continuous or intermittent service. Naturally the cost to be apportioned in the one case is certain and fixed once and for all when the specific thing to be done is accomplished; naturally also the cost to be apportioned in the case of the former must be ascertained from time to time by marking off a period of service, such as a year or a number of years.

In the case of the statutes under consideration the thing to be assessed is the annual cost. From this it follows rather clearly, it seems to me, that only such items as are referable to a given year are to be assessed.

This statement really furnishes a complete answer to the question submitted by the solicitor. For it is clear that the initial cost of a street flusher is not an expenditure referable to a single year because the probable life of the apparatus undoubtedly exceeds a single year, whatever may be said of the possibility of apportioning such an expenditure among the various streets.

It would, therefore, in my judgment be illegal to include the entire initial cost of a street flusher in the assessments for cleaning and sweeping streets for a single year.

It still might be argued that although the entire cost might not be assessed in a single year, it might be spread over a number of years which the council might estimate to be the probable life of the apparatus and the assessments for such subsequent years might be anticipated by the issue of bonds under section 3845 G. C. Such an argument would present an interesting question arising by analogy from the decision in McGlynn vs. Toledo, supra, on the theory that the municipality might, as it were, rent its own equipment to different streets and include a reasonable rental cost in the cost of sweeping for a given year, and thus ultimately reimburse itself for the initial expenditure of the assessments; but this argument would lead to no definite conclusion in connection with the question submitted, unless it could be determined that under section 3845 G. C. bonds, notes, certificates of indebtedness, etc., may be issued and sold in anticipation of the levying or collection of assessments for more than one year. I do not believe that this can be done. It is true, perhaps, that under section 3842 G. C. council may pass an ordinance providing for the sweeping and cleaning of a large number of streets or alleys on the assessment plan, and that this ordinance will stand until it is repealed, and afford the basis of making annual assessments thereafter. Nevertheless, each assessment is for the cost and expense of sweeping or cleaning a particular street for a single year, and section 3844 G. C. specifically provides that such assessments are to be collected in one installment. There is nothing to prevent council from repealing such an ordinance at any time after it has been passed except as to proceedings already initiated and deciding to sweep and clean all streets by general taxation, or to eliminate some streets from those to be swept and cleaned on the assessment plan and adding others.

This being the case I do not believe that section 3845 can be so interpreted as to authorize the borrowing of money in anticipation of more than one assessment.

I, therefore, arrive at the conclusion that whatever may be the power of a municipality to include in the assessment for sweeping or cleaning a particular street for a particular year, a reasonable sum by way of compensation for the use of a street flusher owned by the municipality in such work for such period of time—a question which I do not decide—the entire initial cost thereof may not be included in a single annual assessment upon all the streets swept and cleaned for that year, nor can funds for the purchase of such a flusher be acquired by the issuance of bonds under section 3845 G. C. in anticipation of the collection of assessments for sweeping and cleaning during future years sufficient in number to cover the probable life of the apparatus.

Finally it is my opinion that the only way in which a municipal corporation can acquire the necessary non-expendable machinery and appliances for doing the work of sweeping and cleaning, through its own officers, is by expending the proceeds of tax levies accumulated in the proper subdivision of the service fund for this purpose.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF CITY OF EAST CLEVELAND, OHIO. $17,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 14, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the city of East Cleveland, Ohio, in the sum of $17,500.00, to pay the city's portion of the cost and expense of certain designated street improvements in said city.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the city council and other officers of the city of East Cleveland, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find the said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said city, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering the above issue has been submitted to this department for approval, and I am therefore holding the transcript until such bond form is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TUITION OF PUPIL WHO HAS COMPLETED COURSE PRESCRIBED, EVEN THOUGH DIPLOMA WITHHELD, MUST BE PAID AT HIGH SCHOOL.

A pupil who completes the course of study prescribed by a board of education is considered a graduate even though his diploma has been withheld from him and the board of education of such pupil's residence must pay his tuition at a high school the same as though he had received said diploma.

A diploma must be granted to any one who completes the curriculum in any high school.

The statute which required a pupil to deliver an oration or declamation, or read an essay at a commencement exercise before such pupil was entitled to a certificate of graduation, has been repealed.

If the board of education has included in its course of study the writing of a thesis and a pupil refuses to write such thesis, the said pupil is not a graduate of such school and is not entitled to his diploma.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1918.

HON. WAYNE STILLWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Millersburg, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

"During the school year of 1914-15 the Killbuck Village School district maintained a second grade high school, under section 7748 G. C. One G. O. was, with several other pupils, attending the said Killbuck high school and doing the senior, or third year, work; that said G. O. did the work as stated and shown on the enclosed certificate, which gave him credit for twelve high school units, fully completed, and that several years prior to the year 1914 the board of education of Killbuck Village School district adopted the course of study as shown by the certificate hereto attached, and that the said G. O. had completed in a satisfactory manner said adopted course of study in all of its branches at the time that the commencement was held at the close of the school year of 1915; that the record of the school board does not show that graduates from the Killbuck high school were required to write an oration to the approval of the superintendent of the Killbuck school in addition to the adopted course of study above referred to. The facts concerning said oration are as follows:

The board of education placed the management and conduct of the commencement in the hands of their high school principal and superintendent, but the records of the school board do not disclose this fact, it being only a custom. The said superintendent required each member of the graduating class to deliver an oration, or write a satisfactory theme. The theme was written by G. O., but was not acceptable to the superintendent and G. O. refused to rewrite or compose another theme, and as a result of that action he was not permitted to take part in the commencement exercises, nor was he granted a diploma from the high school showing that he had completed the course required by the school board.

In the year 1915-16 the said G. O. attended the Millersburg school, a high school of the first grade, and the tuition for such attendance has not been paid. Who, under these facts and circumstances, is liable for the payment of the tuition, the Killbuck village board of education, or the parents of G. O?"

Section 7748 G. C. provides in part:

> "A board of education * * * providing a second grade high school as defined by law, shall pay the tuition of graduates residing in the district at any first grade high school for one year * * *."

The first question to be determined is, what is a graduate and was G. O. a graduate from said school at the end of the school year of 1914-15. You say in your statement of facts that he had completed the course of study in all of its branches, as said course had been adopted by the board of education and that it was completed in a satisfactory manner by said student, but that his high school diploma was refused him because he failed to re-write a theme as requested by the superintendent of schools, who had charge of the commencement exercises.

Boards of education are required to prescribe a course of study for all schools under their control and such courses of study are approved by the superintendent of public instruction. The said superintendent of public instruction, upon the course of study and the work performed in such school, issues to such board of education a certificate designating whether a school is a first, second or third grade high school. The writing of the theme in this case was not a part of the course of study prescribed by the board of education of such school and the question is, was said pupil a graduate, having completed the course of study but not having received his diploma.

To graduate is defined by Webster as "To pass to, or to receive a degree," and Patterson, J., delivering the opinion of the court in People ex rel. Johnson vs. Eichelroth, 2 L. R. A., 770, (Calif.) where a statute containing the word "graduate" was being construed, said:

> "But I do not think it necessary to give the word, as used in this statute, a strict and technical definition. In the construction of a statute the intention of the legislature is to be ascertained, not so much from the phraseology in which the intent has been expressed, as from the general tenor and scope of the legislation on the subject. * * * It cannot be said that the meaning of the word is clear; and in such case the statute should be given such construction as will not deprive the person in its construction of a substantial right."

What was the intention of the legislature, when it enacted General Code section 7748? Manifestly to secure to all pupils, who had finished a certain lower course of study, the advantages of a higher school education. The pupil in this case had finished all that was required of him by the board of education when it adopted the course of study and there was no provision of statute which required him to take part in the commencement exercises as requested by the superintendent. True, the board of education had a right to make all rules governing itself, its employes and pupils, but there is nothing in the statement of facts submitted by you which indicates that any rule of the board had been violated by the pupil when he refused to re-write his theme.

Section 7656 G. C. provides that:

> "A diploma must be granted by the board of education to any one completing the curriculum in any high school, which diploma shall state the grade of the high school issuing it as certified by the superintendent of public instruction, be signed by the president and clerk of the board of education, the superintendent and the principal of the high school, if such there be, and shall bear the date of its issue."

It seems to me, from the language contained in the above quoted section, that when said pupil completed the course of study of curriculum in said high school there was nothing for the board of education to do but to grant him said diploma, and the fact that they refused to do so would make him no less a graduate than if said diploma had been delivered to him after he had completed said school course. If the statute is to be given that construction as will not deprive the person interested in its construction of a substantial right, then this statute must be given that construction which, after a person has completed a course of study, will entitle such person to be considered a graduate and be entitled to high school tuition, even though a diploma is refused such pupil because he does not re-write a theme to make it satisfactory to the superintendent. The superintendent was following the statute as it existed prior to 1914, or under what was commonly known as the Boxwell-Patterson law. Said statute provided that each successful applicant for a Boxwell-Patterson certificate, which was a certificate entitling pupils to admission to high schools, should be required to deliver an oration or declamation or read an essay, and after the pupil had thus performed, then the board of education should issue such pupils a certificate, stating that the applicant took part in such commencement. But, that law was repealed in 1914 and no similar provision was enacted in its place. So that, I can come to but one conclusion and that is, considering the laws as they existed at the end of the school year in 1915, when a pupil finished the course of study provided by the board of education in said high school, he was entitled to his diploma and must be considered a graduate, and the board of education of the district where he resides must pay the tuition for such pupil at the first grade high school in Millersburg. If, however, the board of education had included in its course of study the writing of a thesis and the pupil would refuse to write same and thereby fail to complete the course so prescribed, then and in that event it would be unnecessary for me to conclude that the board of education of the district of such pupil's residence would not have to pay said tuition.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TEACHER—ATTENDING INSTITUTE DURING VACATION ENTITLED TO INSTITUTE FEES, THOUGH ONLY TEACHES TWO WEEKS, IF CALLED TO ARMY SERVICE.

Where a teacher attends the institute during the vacation period, or when the schools are not in session, and receives a certificate of attendance from the county superintendent for not more than five days of actual attendance, and begins to teach within three months after the institute, but teaches for only two weeks and then joins the United States army, the institute fees are payable as an addition to that part of the first month's salary received by such teacher.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1918.

HON. EUGENE WRIGHT, Prosecuting Attorney, Logan, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

"In Hocking county a teacher was employed to teach the Union Furnace school and he, being within the draft age, between 18 and 45, after teaching two weeks resigned his school to enter the Ohio University under the proposition from the government to furnish free tuition, board and clothing to registrants eighteen years of age, in colleges.

This young man has only taught two weeks and is making claim for institute money, he having attended the Hocking County Institute within three months prior to his employment.

It is my opinion that he is not entitled to his institute money for the reason that he did not teach a full month * * *. I am asking an opinion from your department on this question."

The statute which refers to institute fees for teachers is section 7870 G. C., and provides in part:

"* * * The board of education of all school districts shall pay the teachers and superintendents of their respective districts their regular salary for the week they attend the institute upon the teachers or superintendents presenting certificates of full regular daily attendance, signed by the county superintendent. If the institute is held when the public schools are not in session, such teachers or superintendents shall be paid two dollars a day for actual daily attendance as certified by the county superintendent, for not more than five days of actual attendance, to be paid as an addition to the first month's salary after the institute, by the board of education by which such teacher or superintendent is then employed. In case he or she is unemployed at the time of the institute, such salary shall be paid by the board next employing such teacher or superintendent, if the term of employment begins within three months after the institute closes."

In your case the teacher attended the institute as required by the statute and, I am taking it, received his certificate of attendance from the county superintendent. The institute was held during vacation time or at the time when the schools were not in session. He began teaching within the time required by statute, but failed to teach the full first month because he was permitted to attend the training school for persons within the draft age, he being within that age. He only taught two weeks, or one-half of the time mentioned in the statute, and the question now is, can he receive such institute fees as an addition to his first pay, the same being less than one month's salary?

The objects of the institute fees are, as noted by the circuit court in Board of Education vs. Burton, 11 O. C. C. (n. s.) 103-105:

"To encourage teachers to avail themselves of the opportunities afforded by the institutes and to better fit themselves to instruct the youths committed to their charge. This is a policy commendable in itself and likely to be a public benefit, and any act or agreement in contravention of it should receive little favor at the hands of courts."

But it is urged that the teacher did not teach the full month and did not earn the entire month's salary and therefore could not receive the month's pay. While the above is true, yet he did receive salary, whether rightfully or wrongfully I shall not decide here, and he received the same for the teaching he performed during the first month after the institute, and, as far as the teacher was concerned, he performed every act on his part necessary to the receiving of the institute fees, except, as above noted, possibly the act of teaching the remaining two weeks of the first month.

As noted in Beverstock vs. Board of Education, 75 O. S., 144, 152:

> "When he so becomes employed, his rate of compensation is fixed, and on presentation of the proper certificate, showing that he had attended the preceding institute for a week, his compensation for that week is ascertainable and his right to receive it complete."

You call my attention in your communication, and in that part which I have not quoted above, to an opinion of the Attorney-General rendered in 1913 and found in Volume 2 of the Attorney-General's Reports for that year, at page 1082. The case under consideration there was different from your case, as will be noted by the facts therein contained. In that case the teacher performed one full month's service and received his institute fees and the question was whether or not the substitute teacher, who had also attended the institute and who finished he term of the first teacher, and who began teaching within three months after attending the institute, should receive his institute fees after the institute fees had been paid to the first teacher. The opinion held, and we think rightfully too, that both teachers were entitled to the institute fees.

From a consideration of all the above, I can come to but one conclusion and that is that when the board of education paid the teacher in your case the salary he earned during the first month, he was also entitled to his institute fees, in addition thereto.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF HARRISON TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT.—$25,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 15, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

> In Re: Bonds of Harrison Township Rural School district, in the amount of $25,000.00, for the purpose of enlarging, repairing and furnishing school houses in certain subdistricts of said school district.

GENTLEMEN:—I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Harrison Township Rural School district in the issuance of the above described bonds and find that said proceedings are in all respects regular and that the bonds when issued will constitute valid, legal and binding obligations of said district, payable as therein provided.

No form of bond has been furnished.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE—AUTHORITY TO PURCHASE MILITARY PROPERTY AND TITLE THERETO—OHIO NATIONAL GUARD—DISPOSITION OF MONEYS AND PROPERTY OF LOCAL ORGANIZATIONS.

1. The state has authority to purchase military property for the national guard, but the officials of the national guard have no authority in law to use said property so purchased, to replace military property of the United States which has been lost or destroyed.

2. The property purchased by the various local organizations and paid for from their treasuries becomes the property of the State of Ohio, and, in case the local organizations are mustered into federal service, passes under the jurisdiction and authority of the adjutant general, as set out in section 817 of Article LXXVII of the "Regulations of the Ohio National Guard."

3. Until the adjutant general acts under the provisions of said section 817 of Article LXXVII, the state is under obligation to store the property of the local organizations and pay rent for said storage.

4. When military property purchased by the state and paid for out of state funds is condemned and sold, the proceeds of said sale must be placed in the state treasury, under section 5282 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of May 28, 1918, which reads as follows:

"In making an inventory of the property of the various units of the Ohio National Guard, left in their armories or placed in storage when the troops were federalized, numerous questions have arisen about which I wish your written opinion, as follows:

From the organization of the Guard in this state up to December 13, 1916, it was the custom to charge the Governor with all military equipment and stores furnished by the Federal government, and to credit said account with property which was sold, transferred or condemned, but it appears that no inventory was ever taken of such property to determine if it was intact, until the War department appointed a receiving and disbursing officer on said December 13, 1916, to take charge of said property, when it was found to be many thousands of dollars short of what the book accounts showed should be on hand. Numerous vouchers aggregating thousands of dollars were subsequently paid by the state to replace some of said shortages, but it was not known by me at the time of payment that they were intended for such purposes.

QUERY (1) Was this a proper use of state funds, and if not, who is liable?

The commanders of the various military units were paid regularly the amounts indicated in section 5287 G. C. They were also paid yearly the amount of six hundred ($600.00) dollars for armory rent, even when they occupied state-built armories. These amounts, together with rents accruing under the provisions of section 4262 G. C., were paid into the organization treasuries and disbursed therefrom for current expenses and for equipping the quarters with furniture, pictures, musical instruments, etc. It also developed that friends of the organizations had donated desks, tables and other furniture, and in one instance an automobile.

QUERY (2) Has the state any right or title to said property which was left behind when the Guard was called into the Federal service and to the balances in the organization treasuries as shown by the last report of the various treasuries?

The state is caring for this property through caretakers of state-owned armories, and by paying storage for many of the others—in one case as much as $5,000.00 a year.

QUERY (3) What proceedings should be had to dispose of the property and get rid of the rent? If we have a National Guard at this time, what is its status?

Prior to the provisions of section 196-12 G. C. going into effect, if state-owned military property was condemned and sold or the ordinary furnishings purchased by the state for state-owned armory were sold, could the money thus derived be legally placed in a junk fund, under the control of the Adjutant General, and promiscuously expended by him, or should it have been paid into the state treasury?"

In considering your first query, it will be necessary for us to note the provisions of a number of sections of the Revised Statutes of the United States. In an act passed by Congress on June 22, 1906, U. S. Stats. at Large, Volume 34, Part I, Ch. 3515, page 449, provision was made as follows:

"Chap. 3515. * * *.

Section 1. That the sum of two million dollars is hereby annually appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of providing arms, ordnance stores, quartermaster stores, and camp equipage for issue to the militia, such appropriation to remain available until expended. * * *."

Section 2 of said act provides that the money appropriated by Congress—

" * * * shall be apportioned among the several States and Territories, under the direction of the Secretary of War, according to the number of senators and representatives to which each state respectively is entitled in the Congress of the United States, * * *."

Section 3 of said act provides that the military property furnished the different states under and by virtue of said provisions—

" * * * shall be receipted for and shall remain the property of the United States, and be annually accounted for by the governors of the States and Territories * * * for which purpose the Secretary of War shall prescribe and supply the necessary blanks and make such regulations as he may deem necessary to protect the interests of the United States."

Section 4 of said act provides that in case said property so furnished by the Federal government to a state shall be lost or destroyed through—

" * * * carelessness or neglect or that its loss could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care, the money value thereof shall be charged against the allotment to the States under section sixteen hundred and sixty-one of the Revised Statutes as amended. * * *."

This section also provides for an examination by a disinterested surveying officer of the organized militia, to be appointed by the governor of the state or territory, as to the condition of the said property of the Federal government.

From these provisions it is readily seen how the property comes into the possession of the National Guard and how the Federal government is kept in touch with the same and what the results are if any of this property, so turned over to the National Guard of the state, shall be lost or destroyed, due to carelessness or neglect.

The provisions of this act were somewhat modified by the provisions of the national defense act which was passed by Congress on June 3, 1916, and it will be well for us to note a few provisions of this latter act.

Section 3064a of the Revised Statutes of the United States, which was section 67 of the national defense act, makes provision for the appointment of a property and disbursing officer for the United States, to be appointed by the governor of the state with the approval of the Secretary of War. This property and disbursing officer receipts and accounts for all funds and property coming into his possession.

Provision is also made in this act, in section 3057 R. S., which was section 87 of the act, as follows:

> " * * * If it shall appear that the loss, damage or destruction of property was due to carelessness or neglect, or that its loss, damage or destruction could have been avoided by the exercise of reasonable care the money value of such property shall be charged to the accountable state, * * *, to be paid from state, territory, or district funds, or any funds other than Federal. * * *."

Provision is also made in this section that if any state refuses to make payment for the value of the property so lost or destroyed, it shall be debarred from further participation in any and all appropriations for the national guard, until such payment shall have been made.

From this section it is seen that the state becomes absolutely liable to the Federal government for the value of all Federal military property lost or destroyed through carelessness or neglect while in the possession of the National Guard.

Under the provisions of this act a receiving and disbursing officer was appointed by the governor of the state on December 13, 1916. Up until that time it seems that there was no inventory taken by the state authorities of the property of the federal government in the hands of the National Guard of the state, but an inventory of said property is now being taken and, according to your communication, it is found that it is short many thousands of dollars, when compared with the reports that have been made from time to time by the proper officials of the National Guard.

It might be well for us to consider here that the state also has the authority to purchase military property for the National Guard of the state. For instance, section 5280 G. C. as it stood prior to the enactment of the law as found in 107 O. L., read as follows:

> "The adjutant-general, after the appropriations are made for that purpose, may purchase and keep ready for use, or issue to the National Guard, as the best interests of the service require, such amount and kind of camp and garrison equipage as are necessary. * * *."

The proper officials of the state have purchased many thousands of dollars' worth of military property, which was paid for by the state and for which you issued your warrants in favor of the proper parties. This property so purchased by the state was used to replace property of the Federal government which had been lost or destroyed. The question now arises as to whether this was a proper use of state funds. I think it was. The state has full authority in law to purchase military property for the National Guard of the state, but there was no authority in any one to use this property so purchased to replace property of the Federal government that was lost or destroyed. This property so purchased remains the property of the state and does not and can not become the property of the Federal government.

The rights of the Federal government against the state, in reference to property lost or destroyed by the National Guard, are fully set out and protected in the provisions of the sections hereinbefore quoted. If the Federal government, upon making an investigation through the proper officials, finds that this property was lost or destroyed through the carelessness and negligence of persons having charge of the same, then said government will have a claim, under the provisions above quoted, against the State of Ohio, for the value of the property so destroyed or lost. This I think answers your first question.

In your second question you ask whether the state has any right or title to property which some of the organizations of the National Guard left when they were mustered into the service of the Federal government, and to the money in the treasuries of the said organizations.

We will first observe how this fund of the local organizations is created. It comes from a number of sources. For example, section 5210 G. C. as it formerly stood provided for contributing members to the National Guard, who should pay dues of not less than five dollars each per annum. This money went into the treasury of the local organization.

Section 5252 G. C. provided for the assessing of certain fines against members of the organization and the recovery of the same. These fines also went into the treasury for the use of the organization.

Section 5264 G. C. provided that the local organization might rent the armory used by them, for temporary purposes, the money derived from such rental to be paid into the treasury of the organization so renting the armory.

Section 5287 G. C. provides for the payment of certain sums of money by the state to the National Guard, with the approval of the adjutant general, in return for the care of the state property and to be used by it for other incidental expenses. All of this money so accumulated by the different local organizations became the property of the organization, and in no sense that of the state.

There was one other source of income, which you suggest in your communication, and it was provided for in section 5261 of the old law. Said section read as follows:

> "Section 5261.— * * * In no city or village shall more than one building be erected or purchased until provisions have been made for all organizations therein, nor shall a building be leased or rented for the use of a company or single organization in excess of six hundred dollars per year for each organization provided for."

Under this section there was turned over to each local organization the lump sum of six hundred dollars each year. This was done whether or not the local organization used a state armory and whether it paid six hundred dollars, or a lesser sum, for rental. It is clear from a reading of the provisions of the law as it formerly stood that this was not in harmony with either the letter or the spirit of said law. Section 5254 G. C. provided for a state armory board consisting of four officers of the Ohio National Guard. Section 5255 G. C. provided that:

> "Section 5255.—The board shall provide armories for the purpose of drill and for the safe keeping of arms, clothing, equipments, and other military property issued to the several organizations of organized militia, and may purchase or build suitable buildings for armory purposes when, in its judgment, it is for the best interests of the state so to do. * * *."

Section 5268 G. C. read:

> "From the 'state armory fund,' the board shall provide armories by leasing, purchasing or constructing as provided in this chapter."

From all these provisions it is clear that it was the duty of the state armory board to make provision for suitable rooms for the National Guard, either by leasing, purchasing or erecting the same. To be sure, if the state built an armory, there would be no need of leasing one, and the local organization that used an armory owned by the state would not have been entitled under the law to the six hundred dollars; neither was it contemplated that in all instances the sum of six hundred dollars should be paid, even in the case of leased armories. Six hundred dollars was the maximum amount that could be paid for leased premises. If such premises could be secured for a lesser sum, it was the duty of the board to do this.

In this connection it might be well to note the provisions of section 5242 G. C. (107 O. L. 395), which provides in part as follows:

> "Section 5242.—* * * A sum of not to exceed six hundred dollars shall be allowed each organization to cover armory rent, heat, light, water and janitor service."

From this provision it is apparent that the officials of the state have authority to turn over to each organization a lump sum of not to exceed six hundred dollars, but such was not the law until this particular act was passed by the general assembly.

The question now arises as to what becomes of the money that remains in the treasury of any of these local organizations after the members thereof have been inducted into the United States army. The statutes are not clear on this matter but it is my opinion that the money would not become the property of the State of Ohio and that the state has no right, title or interest in and to the same.

It might be well for us to note the rules and regulations of the National Guard in reference to this matter, adopted under authority of sections 5240 and 5242 G. C. On page 208 of the "Regulations of the Ohio National Guard" we find the following provisions set forth in Article LXIX, sections 745, 746 and 747 thereof:

> "745.—All moneys, from whatever source derived, pertaining to or supplied for the use of any organization in the National Guard, are, as regards responsibility and accountability, public funds."
> "746.—The regimental treasurer is the custodian of the public money in the regimental fund; this fund includes all money pertaining to regimental headquarters and band; and donations, contributions and collections from any source."
> "747.—The company treasurer is the custodian of the public money in the company fund; this fund accrues from amounts transferred by commanding officers for care of State property and as balances from armory funds; from subscriptions of contributing members; from fines and dues of active members and from donations, contributions and collections from any source."

It will be noted that section 745 provides that this money is to be considered as public funds, in so far as responsibility and accountability is concerned. However, I do not feel that this departmental construction is sufficient to make the funds in the treasuries of these various local organizations state funds.

In your second question you also ask what right the state has to property of the local organizations of the National Guard, which was left behind when they were mustered into the Federal service. In this connection we are not considering what is technically known as military property, but simply property of various kinds which the local organizations purchased and paid for from money which from time to time came into their treasuries and also property which was donated to the organizations by individuals. The statutes are not clear as to this question and we will therefore consider the rules and regulations for the National Guard.

"844.—All property of whatever description purchased out of any public funds by authority of any council of administration, or by any other officer or officers, and all property commonly known as 'company property' or 'regimental property,' is property of the State of Ohio and will be carried on the proper property returns of the officer in whose care or custody the property may be, except such property as is expendable in ordinary service or business of the organization. Whenever necessary to transfer this property in the case of retirement, resignation, relief from command or any other reason, this property will be transferred in the manner prescribed for all public property. Should any council of administration at any time order the sale of any such property, the money derived from the sale thereof will be covered back into the incidental fund controlled by such council of administration. A certified copy of the deposit slip from the bank where such fund is deposited, attached to a list of the articles sold and the amounts received therefor, will be a voucher to and authority for dropping from the accountable officer's next returns of property."

This section makes it clear that said department has always considered this property to be the property of the State of Ohio. This construction is further borne out by section 817 of Article LXXVII (p. 222) which reads as follows:

"817.—When a company is ordered disbanded and is finally mustered out of the service, the officer accountable for all the property will transfer the same to the Governor of Ohio. All property in use by the organization, including all property not theretofore carried on property returns of the organization, will be regarded as property of the state, unless it can be proven to the satisfaction of the Adjutant General of Ohio that it is the private property of individuals. All property of disbanded organizations, after proper transfer to the Governor of Ohio, will be shipped to the state arsenal, stored or sold, as the Adjutant General may direct, and in no case will be disposed of except by his order."

Hence from all the above I feel that inasmuch as the statutes themselves are uncertain with reference to this question, I should follow the said rules and regulations, and hold that this property under consideration is the property of the State of Ohio.

The second part of your third question relates to the rent that the state is paying for the storage of property belonging to the local organizations of the National Guard. The matter arises as to what should be done with this property, left behind by the various local organizations. This matter is also provided for under the rules and regulations for the National Guard.

Under section 817, Article LXXVII, p. 222, above quoted, it becomes the particular duty of the adjutant general to look after such property as that inquired about by you. In other words, it becomes his duty to have the same shipped to the state arsenal and there stored or sold, as the adjutant general may direct, and in no case to be disposed of except by his order. Under this ruling it is my opinion this property should not be considered such property as comes under the authority and control of the state purchasing agent, but is under the authority and control of the adjutant general.

You further suggest that I set forth the status of the National Guard at this time. I will call your attention to an opinion I rendered on August 17, 1917 to Hon. George H. Wood, Adjutant General of Ohio, found in Volume II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, p. 1564. In this opinion I set forth my views as to the present status of the National Guard, which I think will fully answer the question you have in mind and I therefore refer you to said opinion.

In considering your question as to what should be done with the moneys realized from the condemnation and sale of military property and ordinary furnishings purchased by the state, I will note not only the condemnation and sale, but also the purchase and care of the property, especially with a view to ascertaining what might be included within the term "military property." I have already covered the property which is purchased by the local organizations and paid for out of their treasuries.

Section 5255 G. C. provides that the board shall provide armories for the purpose of drill and for the safekeeping of arms, clothing, equipments and other military property issued to the several organizations of organized militia.

Section 5256 G. C. provides that the board may receive donations of property for the purpose of furnishing an armory building. In the matter of the care of same, section 5279 G. C. provides that the adjutant general shall have charge of all the military stores received from the United States government or purchased by the state.

Section 5280 G. C. provides that the adjutant general shall see that all military stores, both the property of the state and of the United States, are properly cared for and kept in good order, ready for use.

From all the above, it is my opinion that any property that would be purchased by the state from state funds and issued to the various local organizations, would be issued to them in a sense as military property and for their use as military organizations of the state.

Section 5281 G. C. provided that when military stores become unserviceable, the adjutant general may convene a board of officers of the National Guard and if the board finds the military property unserviceable, it may condemn it.

Section 5282 G. C. provided that the adjutant general may then sell the condemned military stores and further provided:

> "The sums realized from the sales thereof, to be turned into the state treasury, to be credited to any fund appropriated for the use of the National Guard, as determined at the time by the governor, adjutant general and auditor of state."

Said section also provided that the adjutant general might exchange such condemned stores for such other military stores as the interests of the service might require.

From the two sections last above referred to, it is evident that the money realized from the sale of property purchased by the state and paid for from state funds and issued to the local organizations of the National Guard, must be turned into the state treasury, to the credit of the National Guard, and can not legally be used for any other purpose. The intention of the legislature evidently was that inasmuch as the state in the first place furnished the money for the purchase of the military stores, the state should have the benefit of any proceeds realized from the sale thereof.

Inasmuch as the matters about which you inquire took place prior to the enactment of the law of 1917, the quotations herein made are taken from the statutes as they then existed.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF GUERNSEY COUNTY, OHIO.—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 16, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Guernsey county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000 for the construction of certain improvements in the infirmary building of said county.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the Board of County Commissioners of Guernsey county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the constitution and laws of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue was submitted with and as a part of said transcript, and I am therefore holding the same until proper bond form is submitted and approved.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES AND EXPENSES—NO PROVISION FOR, WHEN PERSON CONVEYS CHILD UNDER FIFTEEN TO INSTITUTION FOR FEEBLE-MINDED.

There is no provision in law for the payment of expenses of a person other than the sheriff when such person conveys a child under fifteen years of age to the feeble-minded institution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1918.

HON. ERNEST THOMPSON, Probate Judge, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter as follows:

> "Some weeks ago I committed a girl nine years of age to the Institution for Feeble-Minded Youth, at Columbus, Ohio, directing my warrant to convey to a relative of the child. This relative has now handed me a bill for $10.00 to cover her expense. I should like to pay this bill if I could do so legally. Would you please give me your opinion as to whether I can lawfully pay the bill?"

Section 1891 G. C. reads:

> "The trustees of the Institution for Feeble-Minded Youth, may admit thereto all youth of this class not over fifteen years of age who have been residents of the state for one year, and are not capable of receiving instruction in the common schools."

On December 5, 1917, this department rendered an opinion in which it was held:

> "Where a child not over fifteen years of age, or a person over fifteen years of age and a public charge, is admitted to the Institution for the Feeble-Minded, no commitment by the probate court is necessary and no fees to physicians for mental examination can be allowed."

This opinion is found in Opinions of the Attorney-General, Volume 3, 1917, page 2236.

This opinion followed the views of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan and Hon. Edward C. Turner, my predecessors, as expressed in the opinion therein quoted.

Children under fifteen years of age are not committed to the feeble-minded institution by the probate court as are adults and the various provisions of law relative to the commitment to insane hospitals are without application to the commitment of children under fifteen years to the feeble-minded institution. The statutes, therefore, which authorize the probate judge to appoint some one other than the sheriff to convey the insane person to the hospital and the statute allowing such person compensation, are without application in the case you submit and I do not know of any statute which will permit the payment of the bill for $10.00, submitted by the person referred to in your communication.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE FROM SUPERINTENDENT OF PUBLIC WORKS TO UNION GAS AND ELECTRIC CO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 7, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, a contract (in triplicate) entered into by and between the Superintendent of Public Works and the Union Gas and Electric Company, for the lease of certain water to said company, to be taken from the Miami and Erie canal.

Under the circumstances I am returning this lease to you with my approval endorsed thereon, but I desire to call your attention to matters connected therewith which are not strictly in conformity to law.

(1) The party of the second part is a corporation and there is no authority given to the president of said company to sign contracts in general or this contract in particular. Inasmuch as this lease is signed by the president and attested to by the secretary and the seal of said company is thereto attached, I am inclined to overlook this technical irregularity in the contract lease.

(2) Section 14011 G. C. (107 O. L. 419) provides as follows:

> "Section 14011.—All sales, leases or conveyances of any water or right to use the same or of any hydraulic power, made by the superintendent of public works shall be subject to the rights of the state for purposes of navigation, and for the maintenance of the state reservoirs as public parks and pleasure resorts, and no water shall be used or taken by the lessee or vendee under such sale, lease or conveyance if the same is necessary for the purpose of navigation."

There is no provision in the contract reserving the right of the state in and to the water leased for the purpose of navigation, nor for maintaining state reservoirs, but inasmuch as this canal has already been leased to the city of Cincinnati for a consideration, and thus the rights of the state in and to said water to a certain extent having passed to the city of Cincinnati, I am inclined also to overlook this irregularity.

I am therefore returning said lease to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE DENTAL BOARD—DUTY OF SECRETARY TO FURNISH TRANSCRIPT UNDER SECTION 1318 G. C.

It is the duty of the secretary of the State Dental Board to furnish a transcript of the entries of the record of licensees, properly certified to, to soldiers who desire said certificate, that the same may be used for filing purposes with the war department when asking admittance to the dental corps.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 17, 1918.

DR. HOLSTON BARTILSON, Secretary Ohio State Dental Board, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You refer a letter to me and request my opinion as to whether or not you are required to give the certificate requested in said letter. The letter reads:

"I have a chance to apply for a commission in the Dental Corps but need a certified statement that I have passed the Ohio board. Can you send me a certified copy of my license or the equivalent in the near future?

Thanking you in advance, I beg to remain,

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) O. O. Leininger.
Post Dental Dept.
Fort Benjamin Harrison, Ind."

Replying to your request permit me to call your attention to several sections of the General Code affecting the duties of the secretary of the State Dental board.

Section 1314 G. C. provides for the appointment of the members of the State Dental board. Section 1315 provides that the board shall organize by the election from its members of a president and secretary. Section 1316 provides that the secretary, before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, shall give a bond to the state in the sum of $2,000, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Section 1317 provides that the salary of the secretary shall be fixed by the board and that he shall receive his necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties. Section 1318 reads:

> "The State Dental board shall have an official seal and shall keep a record of its proceedings, a register of persons licensed as dentists and a register of licenses by it revoked. At reasonable times, its records shall be open to public inspection, and it shall keep on file all examination papers for a period of ninety days after each examination. A transcript of an entry in such records, certified by the secretary under the seal of the board, shall be evidence of the facts therein stated."

The language of the last above quoted section is too clear to need any interpretation. It provides that the State Dental board shall keep a record of its proceedings and a register of the persons who are licensed as dentists and a register of licenses which have been revoked by the board. While the law does not provide in so many words, yet by necessary implication it follows, that the secretary is the person who shall keep such record and registers. The letter which you refer to me asks you to furnish a certified copy of a license, or the equivalent. The equivalent, of course, will be a transcript of the entry of the licensee on your records, and the statute provides that such transcript, when certified to by the secretary, under the seal of the board, shall be evidence of the facts therein stated.

The certificate asked for is, I am advised, required by the war department, before an applicant can be admitted to the dental corps. This being true, it is not only your right, but your duty to furnish the same by making a transcript of the entry upon your records and certifying to the same as secretary of the board, and affixing the seal of the board. When the same is thus made, it is evidence of what the facts in relation to said certificate are.

Answering your question, then, I advise you that it is your duty to furnish the soldier a certified transcript of the entries upon your records in relation to the license granted to him.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SENECA COUNTY, OHIO.—$25,700.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Seneca county, Ohio, in the sum of $25,700.00, in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments to pay the respective shares of said county, of Jackson township and of the owners of benefited property assessed of the cost and expense of the construction of Lima-Sandusky I. C. H. No. 22, section "F", road improvement located in said county and township.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Seneca county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN CLARK COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 18, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of October 17, 1918, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions for the following named improvements:

Clark county—I. C. H. No. 1, section F. Clark county—I. C. H. No. 1, section (g) & H.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you, with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO 205.30 ACRES IN VIRGINIA MILITARY DISTRICT, UNION TOWNSHIP, MADISON COUNTY, O.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 19, 1918.

The Ohio Penitentiary Commission, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Two abstracts have been submitted to me for examination, covering the 205.30 acres of land to be purchased by your commission from John Ellsworth, being located in the Virginia Military district, Union township, Madison county, Ohio, and bounded and described as follows:

First Tract:—Beginning at a stone in the north line of lands of James Kilgore (now John Ellsworth) S. E. corner to Thomas Meehan (now Charles and Martin Meehan) then with the east line of Thomas Meehan N. 14° W. 21.73 chains (chain 4 poles) to a stone N. E. corner to said Meehan's land; thence with said Meehan's N. line N. 85° 25′ W. 58.32 poles to a stone in Orcutt's road; thence N. 19° 13′ W. with said road to the center of the Columbus, Springfield and Cincinnati railroad 50 feet; thence with the center of said railroad S. 85° 39′ E. 135 poles and 13 feet to a stone in the center of said railroad N. W. corner to John Thompson, (now John Ellsworth) thence with the W. line of said Thompson S. 1° W. 73 poles and 12½ feet to a stake N. E. corner to said Kilgore; thence with the N. line of said Kilgore S. 82° 30′ W. 13.53 chains to the beginning, containing 33 acres more or less, being part of survey No. 6247.

Second Tract:—Beginning at an iron post in the east line of a 49.84 acre tract of land now owned by John Ellsworth and being northwesterly corner to 160.75 acres of land now owned by Robert Cooke; thence with the easterly line of said Ellsworth N. 4° E. 1822 to a stone in the center of the C. C. C. & St. L. railroad (formerly the Columbus, Springfield and Cincinnati railroad); thence with the center of said railroad S. 82° 45′ E. 5041 feet to a stone corner to lands now owned by Alice K. Downing; thence with two lines of said Downing S. 5° 15′ W. 464 feet to a corner post in the line between Military survey No. 4513 and Military survey No. 5429 and 8744; thence with said survey line S. 87° 30′ W. 1127½ feet to a corner post in the east line of a tract of land now owned by Ivy Armstrong and corner to said Downing; thence with three lines of said Armstrong N. 2° 45′ E. 214 feet to a post; thence S. 86° 30′ W. 1471 feet to a post; thence S. 5° 10′ W. 630½ feet to a post corner to said Armstrong; thence with another line of said Armstrong and of said Cooke (passing their corner) S. 86° W. 2450½ feet to the beginning, containing 122.40 acres of land, of which 37 acres are in Military survey No. 8743, 34 acres are in Military survey No. 4513, 8.40 acres are in Military survey No. 6247 and 43 acres are in Military survey No. 5429 and 8744.

Third Tract:—Beginning at a stone in the center of the Roberts Mill road corner to George Hunter and Evaline Armstrong, thence with Evaline Armstrong's north line S. 84° 45′ E. 9.82 chains (chain 4 poles) to a stone corner to said Armstrong; thence with her west line N. 3° 15′ E. 30.10 chains to a stone in John Thompson's west line and corner to Joseph Suver; thence with the south line of said Suver and Thomas Meehan S. 84° 10′ W. 25.17 chains to a stone in center of Roberts Mill road corner to Thomas Meehan and J. M. Porter; thence with the center of said road S. 26° 55' E. 29.92 chains to the beginning containing 49.84 acres more or less, part of survey No. 4513.

The abstract to the premises containing 49.84 acres of land situated in survey No. 4513, shows a good merchantable title in John Ellsworth.

The abstract covering the remaining property embraces two tracts, one of 33 acres located in survey No. 6247, and another tract containing 122.40 acres of land of which 37 acres are in Military survey No. 8743; 34 acres in Military survey No. 4513; 8.40 acres in Military survey No. 6247, and 43 acres are in Military surveys No. 5429 and 8744, and will be considered as to each tract separately.

The abstract shows a good and merchantable title in John Ellsworth to the 43 acres located in Military surveys No. 5429 and 8744.

There is a break in the title covering the 34 acres located in survey No. 4513. On page 72 of the abstract is shown a warranty deed from Peter Helphenstine to John Timmons, but there is no conveyance from John Timmons or his heirs to any of the succeeding owners of said premises. An agreement between a part of the heirs of John Timmons is shown at pages 74, 75 and 76. This agreement was entered into during the lifetime of said John Timmons and there is nothing to show that this agreement was ever executed or that it was ratified by his other heirs who did not join in the agreement.

On page 77 is shown a deed from Lewis Timmons to David Groves for an undivided seventh part of a 100 acre tract of land being a part of survey No. 4515. There is no conveyance from David Groves or from John Timmons or his wife, covering the premises under consideration.

On page 79 is shown a deed from David Dunkin and wife to John Thompson, covering the 34 acres in survey No. 4513, now under consideration. This deed is dated April 6th, 1847. This property was devised to John Ellsworth by said John Thompson, which will was probated in Madison county, Ohio, on February 8th, 1909.

The above constitutes a cloud upon the title, but as continuous possession and chain of title is shown from 1847 to the present time, this would constitute a good merchantable title by prescription.

The abstract shows a good merchantable title in John Ellsworth for the 37 acres located in Military survey No. 8743.

The abstract also shows a good merchantable title in John Ellsworth for the 8.40 acres located in survey No. 6247.

The abstract to the 33 acres located in survey No. 6247 and known as the first tract in the abstract, shows the following situation as to title thereto:

This 33 acre tract constitutes a part of a 60 acre tract which was conveyed by Daniel Orcutt and wife to William Watson and James Watson, under date of December 28th, 1863, as shown at page 30 of the abstract. This 60 acre tract constitutes the western part of a tract of land described in the abstract and containing 109½ acres of land. On page 41 of the abstract James Watson and wife conveyed to William Watson a ten acre tract off of the east end of said 109½ acre tract; also the 109½ acres excepting therefrom the 10 acre tract above mentioned and also excepting the 60 acre tract above in question and he then conveyed the undivided one-half of said 60 acre tract to William Watson in the same deed. As William Watson was already the owner of the undivided one-half of said 60 acre tract, this gave him title to the entire 109½ acres.

On page 43 of the abstract is shown a deed from William Watson and wife to James Q. Minshall. The description in this deed conveys by metes and bounds, first, the 10 acre tract off the east end of said 109½ acres, second, the 109½ acres, excepting therefrom the 10 acre tract and also the 60 acre tract, and he then conveys, thirdly, the undivided one-half of said 60 acre tract. This leaves an undivided one-half of the 60 acre tract not conveyed by William Watson. The abstractor certified that there is no further conveyance of said 60 acre tract or the undivided one-half thereof by William Watson. This conveyance was executed November 19, 1868.

The tax duplicate of Madison county for the year 1869 shows a transfer of the whole of said 60 acres from William and James Watson to James Q. Minshall. James Q. Minshall conveyed a part of said 60 acres to Thomas Meehan under date of March 9, 1871, as shown at page 44a of the abstract as containing 25.09 acres. In 1875 he conveyed the 33 acres. These two tracts cover the 60 acres in question.

The question arises as to whether or not the above facts are sufficient to create a title by prescription as against the undivided one-half interest which William Watson failed to convey to James Q. Minshall, and which has not since been conveyed. There is a continuous chain of title from James Q. Minshall to John Ellsworth, the present owner.

The general rule as to adverse possession as against the co-tenant is stated in Youngs vs. Heffner, 36 O. S., 232, where the first branch of the syllabus reads:

> "The statute of limitations does not run in favor of a tenant in common in the occupancy of the premises, against his co-tenant, until some overt act of an unequivocal character, clearly indicating an assertion of ownership of the entire premises, to the exclusion of the right of the co-tenant."

The question then arises as to whether the execution of the deed by a tenant in common for the entire premises, and the placing of said deed upon record, constitutes an overt act within the above case.

The general rule is stated at page 34, Volume 38 of Cyc. as follows:

> "An unauthorized or unratified sale or conveyance of the whole property or any specific part thereof by metes and bounds by one tenant in common, followed by entry by the grantee thereunder and his exclusive possession thereof, under adverse claim of the title to the whole or some specific part by metes and bounds, amounts to an ouster of the other co-tenants; and such a conveyance of the entire estate coupled with possession by the grantee and notice to the other co-tenants, actual or presumed, or open, hostile, exclusive, and notorious acts of ownership, constitutes adverse possession which may ripen into a valid title by prescription."

In support of this contention two Ohio cases are cited. The first is that of Payne vs. Cooksey, 7 O. N. P. page 90, wherein the syllabus reads:

> "Where a grantee enters under a deed describing his estate as a tenancy in common, with others, his possession will be presumed to be not adverse to the co-tenants until by unmistakable acts of which the co-tenants have or ought to have taken notice, re claims the entire ownership.
> P., being the owner of a part interest in land, sold the whole estate by warranty deed in 1864 to B., giving B. a mortgage on other land as a guaranty that he would procure the title of his co-tenant. B. sold to third parties who had no notice of any claim of others to an interest in the land. P. had failed to acquire the title of his co-tenant to his interest in the land, and such interest was conveyed in 1864 to Payne, who waited until 1896 before he brought suit to recover his interest in the land. Held, the statute of limitations applies against his claim, and he can not recover."

The second case is that of Ward vs. Ward, 11 C. C. n. s., 396, wherein the syllabus reads:

> "Where a tenant in common releases for a valuable consideration to a co-tenant by quit-claim deed all his right, title and interest in certain land therein described, expressly including the interest inherited by him from a brother, then believed to be dead; and where also the grantee goes into actual possession of the land upon which he and his heirs make valuable improvements and continue in peaceable possession thereof for more than twenty-one years, such grantee and his heirs acquire a good title to such interest as against the grantor and his heirs although the brother was not dead at the time of the execution of the deed of release."

On page 400 the conclusion of the court is stated as follows:

> "Again, is not the bar of the statute of limitations conclusive? The claim of defendants is that as these parties are all tenants in common the statute of limitations has no effect. This claim is not well founded in this case. If Seth were living he would have a right to rely on the bar of the statute, and his children have the same right. The deed was made in 1862 and Seth went into possession under the deed and made valuable improvements and paid taxes on the entire interest. This was an assertion of an independent absolute title under the deed as against all the heirs of the grandfather, as he obtained like deeds from all of them. These deeds were placed upon record. It was a direct assertion of entire title and a public proclamation to all persons that he was such owner. He took the property under color of title at least; he went into possession under such title, and he and his heirs continued in such possession openly and adversely as against these claimed tenants in common for more than forty years. Taken altogether 'it was an overt act of an unequivocal character clearly indicating an assertion of ownership of the entire premises to the exclusion of the right of the co-tenant.'"

From the above authorities it is clear that the circumstances in the present case as shown by the records of Madison county, and the affidavit of J. A. Porter, as to the possession of said premises, show an adverse possession as against William Watson for a period in excess of forty years, and that this possession constitutes an overt act within the case of Youngs vs. Heffner, supra.

Therefore a good merchantable title by prescription is shown to exist in John Ellsworth as to the 33 acres in question.

I find no other objections to said abstract.

The deed hereto attached, when signed by John Ellsworth and his wife, and duly acknowledged and witnessed, will convey a good title to said premises. Said deed should have attached the sum of $41.00 in stamps, covering the payment of revenue tax.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL—ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE LUMBERMENS' MUTUAL INSURANCE COMPANY.

INSURANCE COMPANY—IF IT AVAILS ITSELF OF POWERS GRANTED IN SUB-SECTION 1 OF SECTION 9607-2 G. C., CANNOT EXERCISE OTHER POWERS IN SAID SECTION.

A fire insurance company availing itself of the powers granted by sub-section 1 of section 9607-2 General Code by amendment to its articles of incorporation or otherwise, is limited to powers conferred by said sub-section, and cannot exercise the powers granted by section 9607-2 to corporations incorporated for any or all of the other purposes mentioned in said section of the General Code, nor of powers now or hereafter granted to other corporations other than life insurance companies.

Proposed amendment to the articles of incorporation of the Lumbermens' Mutual Insurance Company considered and disapproved.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 19, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have submitted for my opinion a question with respect to the legality of a proposed amendment to the purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of The Lumbermens' Mutual Insurance company of Mansfield, Ohio.

The purpose clause of the articles of incorporation of this company as it now reads is as follows:

> "To carry on and conduct the business of insuring property against loss or damage by fire, and on the plan of mutual fire insurance, under and in pursuance of the provisions of the laws of Ohio, and specifically in pursuance of section 3634 of the Revised Statutes of the State of Ohio, and the provisions of all the laws of Ohio, providing for the incorporation of companies, and for conducting and carrying on the business of insurance, other than life insurance."

The proposed amendment reads:

> "And to carry on and conduct a general insurance business by transacting all the kinds of insurance as is permitted under section 9607-2, subsection 1, of the General Code of Ohio, or that may hereafter be permitted under the provisions of all the laws of Ohio, providing for the incorporation of companies, and, for conducting, and carrying on the business of insurance, other than life insurance."

Though the provisions of the general incorporation laws of this state do not apply in any general way to insurance companies, as to which special provision is made by statute (38 O. S. 347), I am of the opinion that an insurance company of this kind may amend its articles under and subject to the provisions of section 8719 General Code. This much was held by my predecessor, Hon. T. S. Hogan, in an opinion to the then secretary of state, under date of April 10, 1911, (A. G. R. 1911, p. 98), and I have no reason to doubt the correctness of the conclusion reached by Mr. Hogan with respect to this question.

Though not as specific to that end as might be desired, the proposed amendment would probably be effective to confer upon this company the "fire insurance" powers granted by sub-section 1 of section 9607-2 General Code as enacted in the act of March 21, 1917 (107 O. L. 647). This proposed amendment, however, goes far beyond the powers granted by sub-section 1 of section 9607-2 General Code, and seeks to permit the company to avail itself of powers that may hereafter be granted to all companies incorporated for the purpose of carrying on the business of insurance other than life insurance.

Under its present charter this company is limited by the provisions of section 9511 General Code to the one particular purpose under section 9510 General Code, for which it is incorporated, and to the powers legally incident to said purpose, and if this company avails itself of the powers granted in sub-section 1 of section 9607-2 General Code, it will by the express provision of said section be limited to the fire insurance powers granted by said sub-section.

These considerations are sufficient to show that the proposed amendment as submitted is illegal, and should not be accepted by you.

A number of other questions have suggested themselves to my mind in the consideration of the question submitted by you, but inasmuch as their determination is not necessary with respect to the determination of the question submitted, the same are not here noted or discussed, and for the reasons above noted, the proposed amendment to the articles of incorporation of this company is disapproved.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT—CANDIDATES FOR WHOM FIXED MAXIMUM SUM NAMED IN SECTION 5175-29, CANNOT EXPEND IN EXCESS THEREOF.

The provision of section 5175-29 G. C. which permits an expenditure of five dollars for each one hundred votes cast in excess of five thousand at the last preceding state election is not supplementary to the fixed maximum sums named earlier in the act as the amounts which may be expended by candidates for the several offices designated, and the expenditure by a candidate, for any of the offices named therein, of a sum in excess of the amount designated for the particular office, is in violation of the corrupt practices act.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1918.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication in which you state:

> "As there is some misunderstanding among the candidates for office in this county as to the interpretation of section 5175-29 of the Corrupt Practices act, we have been asked by the Mahoning County Board of Elections to secure your opinion as to the construction of this act on the following point:
> The section sets forth the amount each candidate is allowed to spend, and then says:
> 'If the total number of votes cast therein at such last preceding election be in excess of five thousand, the sum of five dollars for each one hundred in excess of such number may be added to the amount above specified.'

Does this added amount apply to each of the offices enumerated in the previous part of the section, or does it apply only to those offices covered under the part of the section that reads:

'by a candidate for any other public office to be voted for by the qualified electors of the county, city, town or village, or any part thereof, if the total number of votes cast therein for all candidates for the office of Governor at the last preceding state election shall be five thousand or less, the sum of three hundred dollars.' "

Section 5175-29 G. C. reads as follows:

"The total amount expended by a candidate for a public office, voted for at an election, by the qualified electors of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, for any of the purposes specified in section 26 of this act, for contributions to political committees, as that term is defined in section 1 of this act, or for any purpose tending in any way, directly or indirectly, to promote or aid in securing his nomination and election, shall not exceed the amount specified herein; by a candidate for governor, the sum of five thousand dollars; by a candidate for other state elective office the sum of two thousand five hundred dollars; by a candidate for the office of representative in congress or presidential elector, judge of the court of appeals, the sum of two thousand dollars; by a candidate for the office of state senator, the sum of three hundred dollars in each county of his district; by a candidate for judge of common pleas, probate or insolvency court, the sum of five hundred dollars; by a candidate for the office of state representative the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars; by a candidate for any other public office to be voted for by the qualified electors of a county, city, town or village, or any part thereof, if the total number of votes cast therein for all candidates for the office of governor at the last preceding state election, shall be five thousand or less, the sum of three hundred dollars. If the total number of votes cast therein at such last preceding state election be in excess of five thousand, the sum of five dollars for each one hundred in excess of such number may be added to the amounts above specified. Any candidate for a public office who shall expend for the purpose above mentioned an amount in excess of the amounts herein specified shall be guilty of a corrupt practice."

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, was called upon to construe this section, as evidenced by an opinion to Hon. E. D. Fritch, judge of the common pleas court, Akron, Ohio, found in Volume II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 1517. As stated by Mr. Turner in said opinion, while the second sentence of the section is not entirely free from ambiguity, when it is taken in connection with the latter part of the sentence that precedes it the meaning of the second sentence is rendered reasonably clear. In concluding his opinion Mr. Turner held as follows (p. 1518):

" * * * the additional $5.00 for each one hundred in excess of five thousand votes cast therein provided in the second sentence of section 5175-29 G. C., supra, has reference only to candidates for any other public office than those specifically enumerated in the earlier portions of said section. I am strengthened somewhat in this conclusion by reason of the necessary result of the application of a different construction. For instance, it will be noted that it is provided that a candidate for any other state elective office than that of governor may not expend in excess of twenty-five hundred dollars in the first instance. If the provision for an additional amount of five dollars for each one hundred in excess of five thousand total votes in the state may be applicable to such other state officer, it would result that such increase in the amounts authorized to be expended would be many times the initial amount so authorized. That is to say, a candidate for any state office, other than that of governor, would be thereby authorized to expend in excess of the twenty-five hundred dollars, specifically provided in the earlier part of said section, under the provision of the second sentence thereof, as based upon the total vote for governor in the state at the last preceding state election, an amount equal to many times the initial amount of twenty-five hundred dollars.

It is hardly believed that it was the legislative intent that by reason of the application of the provision for the expenditure of five dollars for each one hundred votes cast in excess of five thousand, in addition to the original amount provided for candidates for state offices, they should be authorized thereby to expend an amount equal to many times the original amount of twenty-five hundred dollars."

In Baker vs. Slusser, 19 O. N. P. (N. S.) 523, McClure, J., of the common pleas court of Summit county, took a different view and held, as shown by the first paragraph of the syllabus, as follows:

"Under the section of the corrupt practices act which limits the amount which may be expended by candidates at an approaching election, the office of probate judge falls within the provision which fixes such expenditure at a sum not exceeding $500 with $5 additional for each one hundred votes in excess of 5,000 cast at the last preceding state election."

Despite the fact that the judge of the probate court was specifically enumerated in the list of candidates that were permitted under the section to expend the amount named, the court was of the opinion that the legislature was dealing with the office in the relation it sustained to the electorate which was, of course, confined to the county unit and that the provisions by which it was designated to afford additional amounts of expenditures to other county and municipal officers applied as well to the office of probate judge.

This decision was reversed by the court of appeals, as found in 27 O. C. A. (N. S.) 197. The first paragraph of the syllabus in that case reads: Baker vs. Slusser)

"The provision of the corrupt practices act, which permits an expenditure of five dollars for each one hundred votes cast in excess of five thousand at the last preceding state election, is not supplementary to the fixed maximum sums named earlier in the act as the amounts which may be expended by candidates for the several offices designated, and the expenditure by a candidate for probate judge of a sum in excess of five hundred dollars is in violation of that act."

Commenting on the claim that the intention of the legislature was to permit the additional sum of $5.00 per hundred to be expended for election purposes, over and above the sum specifically named, Leighley, J., says: (p. 200)

"That method of calculating would permit a candidate for governor to expend about $37,000; a candidate for this court over $10,000; a candidate for secretary of state, a two-year term, about $35,000, which is several times his salary for the term; a candidate for common pleas judge in Cuyahoga county over $6,000. Can it be possible that the legislature intended to put such sinews of war in the hands of a non-partisan judiciary for the purposes of political strife which would necessarily attend the expenditure thereof by the various candidates for judge? We think that this construction is in conflict with the apparent intention of the legislature in enacting the corrupt practice act, viewed with reference to the trend of public sentiment of late years which eventuated in the enactment of the non-partisan judiciary laws.

We think the sentence of section 29 last above referred to qualifies only the language after the last semi-coloon and only those offices and the amounts that may be expended by candidates for those offices which have not been specifically mentioned and opposite which no specific amount has been fixed by the legislature in the act. In short, we think that by law the contestee was obliged to confine his expenditures at or below the sum of $500."

This case was taken to the supreme court and was decided there on July 3, 1917, as shown in 96 O. S. 606. While the supreme court reversed the court of appeals, the per curiam opinion or entry shows that the reversal was—

"for the reason that it appears from the record that the contestor was not entitled to judgment against the contestee in this proceeding. Even if it be proven that there was a violation of the section of the statute under which this proceeding was brought, it would not constitute a ground for removal * * *."

It is evident that the supreme court did not pass upon the question decided by the court of appeals, in the first paragraph of the syllabus, above quoted.

I am inclined to agree with the opinion of my predecessor, Mr. Turner, and with the view expressed by the court of appeals on the reasoning therein set forth.

It is therefore my opinion that the provision of the second sentence of section 5175-29 G. C., permitting the expenditure of an additional sum of $5.00 for each hundred votes in excess of five thousand cast for governor at the last preceding state election, by candidates for office, is applicable only to candidates for other public offices than those specifically enumerated in the earlier part of said section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COUNCIL OF VILLAGE MAY FIX COMPENSATION OF POLICE JUSTICE.

The council of a village has authority to fix by ordinance the compensation of the police justice appointed by council under the provisions of section 4544 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have received the following inquiry from Hon Britton S. Johnson, solicitor of the village of Kent, O.:

"Has the council of a village the authority to fix and designate the salary and compensation of a police justice appointed under section 4544 of the General Code of Ohio?"

I am addressing this opinion to your bureau and will forward copy thereof to Mr. Johnson.

Section 4544 G. C. reads:

"Upon the recommendation of the mayor, the council may, by an affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the members elected, appoint a justice of the peace, resident of the corporation, or if there is no such justice of the peace, another suitable person resident of the corporation or a justice of the peace for the township in which such corporation is situated, police justice, who shall, during the term of office of such mayor, unless removed on suggestion of such mayor by a two-thirds vote of all the members of the council, have concurrent jurisdiction of all prosecutions for violations of ordinances of the corporation with full power to hear and determine them, and shall have the same powers, perform the same duties, and be subject to the same responsibilities in all such cases as are prescribed by law, to be performed by and are conferred upon the mayors of such corporations. Any person so appointed police justice, other than a justice of the peace, shall take an oath of office and give bond in such sum for the faithful performance of his duties as the council may require."

It is evident that the justice of the peace, or the suitable person where there is no justice of the peace, becomes an officer of a municipality, with the powers, duties and jurisdictions set forth in the section. No provision is made in the section for any compensation or salary to the police justice so provided for.

Section 4219 G. C. provides:

"Council shall fix the compensation and bonds of all officers, clerks and employes in the village government, except as otherwise provided by law. All bonds shall be made with sureties subject to the approval of the mayor. The compensation so fixed shall not be increased or diminished during the term for which any officer, clerk or employe may have been elected or appointed. Members of council may receive as compensation the sum of two dollars for each meeting, not to exceed twenty-four meetings in any one year."

Inasmuch as it is my opinion that the police justice provided for in section 4544 G. C. is an officer of the municipality, it is my view that council should fix his compensation.

One of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in an opinion found in Volume I of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1913, p. 257, was called upon to construe section 4549, which is somewhat similar to section 4544, inasmuch as it provides that a justice of the peace may be appointed in cities having no police judge to act during the absence or disability of the mayor, and held among other things that under section 4214 G. C., which is the general section authorizing council to fix the compensation of officers of the city government and is similar to section 4219 G. C., giving like authority to council of villages, the council was authorized to fix the compensation of the justice of the peace designated under section 4549, for services performed by him in ordinance cases.

Answering the question specifically, then, it is my opinion that the council of a village has authority to fix by ordinance the compensation of the police justice appointed by council under the provisions of section 4544 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CANNOT LEASE SCHOOL GROUNDS FOR OIL PURPOSES.

A board of education of a rural school district has no power to lease school grounds for oil or gas purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1918.

HON. FRANK B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—A communication comes to me from the president of a board of education and it seems to me that the question therein is of such general public interest that my answer thereto should be directed to you. The communication reads in part:

> "They have secured a very good gas well one-quarter mile from I---- school and the company is anxious to lease our school grounds. They offer to put a well in immediately or to pay $200.00 per year as rental and to furnish free gas for the use of the school until such well is drilled. While there is no law about the board leasing school grounds, could it be implied where the board bought the ground as in this case."

The question involves a consideration of those sections of the General Code which refer to the securing and the use of school property. Section 4749 G. C. provides that:

> "The board of education of each school district * * * shall be a body politic and corporate, and, as such, capable of suing and being sued, contracting and being contracted with, acquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real and personal property * * * and of exercising such other powers and privileges as are conferred by this title and the laws relating to the public schools of this state."

Under the above section a board of education may acquire, hold and dispose of real and personal property, and section 7620 provides that:

> "The boards of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor, or rights of way thereto, or purchase or lease real estate to be used as playgrounds for children, or rent suitable schoolrooms, provide the necessary apparatus and make all other necessary provisions for the schools under its control. It also shall provide fuel for schools, build and keep in good repair fences inclosing such school houses * * * and make all other provisions necessary for the convenience and prosperity of the schools within the subdistricts."

Under the provisions of this section power is granted to boards of education to provide school houses, rights of way thereto and play grounds for the children, and to make all necessary provisions for the schools under the control of such boards. Nowhere in the statute is there any authority granted to boards of education to grant leases of school lands or school property. In this the powers granted to boards of education are more limited than are the powers which are granted to county commissioners, for section 2486 provides that when in their opinion the county would be benefited thereby, the commissioners may make, execute and deliver contracts or leases to mine iron ore, stone, coal, petroleum, salt and other minerals, upon lands owned by such county, thus giving to boards of county commissioners full and complete authority to lease county property for oil or gas purposes.

It has been held by our courts numerous times that boards of education, being corporate bodies, hold the school property in trust for the uses and purposes to which it is designed by law and for no other purposes, and that a corporation can exercise only such powers as are expressly conferred upon it and are incidental to the powers expressly conferred.

8 Ohio, 257; 5 O. S., 59; 12 O. S., 601.

That is to say, a board of education which is authorized to purchase real estate would, by inference, be authorized to accept deeds to such real estate. But a lease of real estate for a purpose other than that granted by statute could not be held to be a power necessarily inferred from the power to purchase for school purposes. I know of no case in Ohio directly covering this matter, but in Weir vs. Day, 35 Ohio St., 143, the board of education attempted to lease a public school house to persons who desired to run a private school. In the syllabus of said case the court say:

1. "Boards of education are invested with the title to the property of their respective districts in trust for the use of public schools, and the appropriation of such property to any other use is unauthorized.

2. A lease of a public school house for the purpose of having a private or select school taught therein for a term of weeks, is in violation of the trust; and such use of the school house may be restrained at the suit of a resident taxpayer of the district."

If the building could not be used for private school purposes, naturally it would follow that it could not be used for purposes other than the conduct of a school or other commercial purposes.

I do find a case, however, bearing directly upon your question, viz., Herald et al. vs. Board of Education, 65 S. E., 102, (W. Va.), the syllabus of which reads:

"Residents and taxpayers in a school district, being patrons of a free school therein, suing for themselves and all others similarly circumstanced, may sustain a chancery suit to annul a lease of a school lot for oil and gas, as unauthorized and void, made by a board of education, and enjoin the use of the lot for such purpose.

A board of education is a quasi public corporation, existing only under statute, having only the powers given by statute, and such implied powers as are absolutely necessary to execute such express powers. It cannot engage in business or make contracts outside its functions touching education. It cannot lease a school house lot for production of oil and gas."

In that case the board of education had leased a school house lot for oil and gas purposes. Suit was brought by Herald, et al., to annul the lease. The plaintiffs prevailed, the syllabus above quoted stating the full conclusion of the court.

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, rendered an opinion in 1913, found in the Annual Reports of the Attorney-General for that year, Volume 2, page 1508, on the question as to whether or not boards of education had the right to lease part of the real estate which was not used for school purposes. The syllabus of said opinion reads:

"Section 4749, General Code, which enumerates the power of the board of education with reference to acquiring, holding, possessing and disposing of real and personal property, does not include any provision for the leasing of such property by the board, and as the statutes nowhere prescribe the manner of executing such a lease, the board cannot be held to possess such power."

It seems to be the universal rule followed by courts in Ohio that school property cannot be used for other than strictly school purposes unless otherwise authorized by statute. To this end the legislature made provision in sections 7622-1 et seq. that school houses might be used as recreation centers and for civic, social and grange meeting places. Without such statutory authority the school property could not be used for such purposes.

Provision is also made for the leasing of school and ministerial lands, that is, state, school and ministerial lands, but that authority does not cover the property which is held by local boards of education. I can come to but one conclusion, therefore, and that is that a board of education is not authorized, by our school laws, to lease the school property under its control for oil and gas purposes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COLUMBUS—UNDER CHARTER ENLISTMENT OF CITY AUDITOR DOES NOT CREATE VACANCY IN OFFICE.

Under the charter of the city of Columbus, the enlistment of the city auditor in the United States army would not affect the tenure of his office and council would have no authority to appoint a successor until he should die, formally resign or be removed by a legally constituted tribunal.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of communication from the solicitor of the city of Columbus, in which he requests my opinion as follows:

"Mr. W. M. G., city auditor of Columbus, has asked me for an early reply to the following question:

'If I should enlist in the National army for the duration of the war, what effect would this have on my tenure in office which expires January 1, 1922?'

I do not like to burden you with this request for an opinion, but, inasmuch as the provisions of the charter in relation to the office of city attorney are identical with those relating to the office of city auditor, it seems to me more appropriate that you pass upon this question."

I consider this matter of such state-wide importance that I am addressing my opinion thereon to you and will forward copy of same to the city solicitor.

The provisions of the charter of the city of Columbus which bear upon the question submitted are sections 79, 86, 87 and 232, which read as follows:

"Section 79.—The auditor shall be an elector of the city and be elected for a term of four years, excepting that at the first election under this charter he shall be elected for a term of two years."

"Section 86.—The auditor may appoint a deputy and such other assistants and clerks in his department as council may authorize. Said deputy shall have power to perform all the duties of the auditor."

"Section 87.—If the auditor die, resign, or remove from the city during the term of his office, his successor in office shall be appointed by council to serve until the first day of January following the next regular municipal election. If such election be the time for the regular election of the auditor, an auditor shall then be elected to serve for a term of four years; otherwise, for the unexpired term."

"Section 232.—All general laws of the state applicable to municipal corporations, now or hereafter enacted, and which are not in conflict with the provisions of this charter, or with ordinances or resolutions hereafter enacted by the city council shall be applicable to this city; provided, however, that nothing contained in this charter shall be considered as limiting the power of the city council to enact any ordinance or resolution not in conflict with the constitution of the state or with the express provisions of this charter."

The important provisions of these sections, as they pertain to the question under consideration, are:

(1) The only qualification of the city auditor is that he must be an elector of the city.

(2) The city auditor may appoint a deputy and other assistants and clerks, as council may authorize, and the deputy has power to perform all the duties of the auditor.

(3) If the auditor die, resign or remove from the city during the term of his office, the council of the city shall fill the vacancy under the conditions set out in section 87 of the charter.

There is no question but that the city auditor has the qualifications provided for by the charter and that there are in his office a deputy and assistants who are authorized in law to perform the duties of the office during his absence.

The city solicitor's communication also sets out the following:

"The council has fixed the salaries of the deputy city auditor and the assistants, and such deputy and assistants have been appointed and are now serving."

This leaves for consideration the provision of section 87 of the charter which provides that if the auditor shall resign or remove from the city during the term of his office, the council shall appoint his successor in office; that is, fill the vacancy. The question to be determined is: If the present city auditor enlists in the United States army for the period of the war, can he be said to have removed from the city? I think not. He would still have his domicile and legal residence in the city of Columbus. His voting residence would still remain in Columbus, at the place he lived at the time he enlisted in the army. He would merely be temporarily absent from his legal residence or domicile. By enlisting in the army and taking up his duties incident thereto, he would not remove from the city of Columbus any more than he would if temporarily absent from the state for some other reason.

The next question to be decided is whether he might be considered to have resigned his office by virtue of the fact that he in a sense abandoned it for the time of his enlistment in the army. I do not think an enlistment in the army and the taking up of the duties incident thereto can be considered an abandonment of the office and a resignation of the same.

I went into this matter at considerable length in an opinion (number 1349) which I rendered to your bureau on July 13, 1918, wherein I arrived at the conclusion above indicated. I distinctly held in that opinion that an appointing authority has no power in itself to declare a vacancy to exist; that is, it does not have judicial powers; and until a vacancy exists, either through death, resignation by the official or a removal by the proper judicial body, the appointing authority has no power vested in him to fill a vacancy.

Hence, answering the question specifically, it is my opinion that the enlistment of the auditor of the city of Columbus in the United States army, for the duration of the war, would have no effect upon his tenure of office, but that he would continue to hold the same until his death, resignation or removal by some legal tribunal which has authority conferred upon it by law or charter to remove him.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—ANNUAL REPORT MAY BE PUBLISHED IN NEWSPAPER PRINTED ANYWHERE IN COUNTY.

The county auditor's annual report, the publication of which is governed by section 2508 of the General Code, may be published in newspapers printed anywhere in the county and circulating generally in the county; such publication is not required to be made in a newspaper printed or published at the county seat.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1918.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of October 8th requesting my opinion upon the question as to whether or not the commissioners' report, the publication whereof is provided for by section 2508 of the General Code, is required to be published in a newspaper published at the county seat.

Section 3508 of the General Code provides for the publication of what was formerly the commissioner's report but what may now be called with perhaps more accuracy the "auditor's report." Among its provisions are the following:

> "Said auditor shall cause an exact copy of said report to be immediately published one time in one newspaper of the political party casting the largest vote in the state at the last general election, and in one newspaper of the political party casting the second largest vote in the state at the last general election, published in the county and of general circulation in said county."

If this statute governs the case alone it furnishes a complete answer to your question; for it does not require that the papers in which publication be made shall be printed or published at the county seat.

There is a general section which gives preference to newspapers printed at the county seat. I refer to section 6252 General Code, which provides as follows:

> "A proclamation for an election, an order fixing the times of holding court, notice of the rates of taxation, bridge and pike notices, notice to contractors and such other advertisements of general interest to the taxpayers as the auditor, treasurer, probate judge or commissioners may deem proper, shall be published in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there be such newspapers published thereat. In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city. This chapter shall not apply to the publication of notices of delinquent tax and forfeited land sales."

In my opinion, section 6252 does not apply to the report of the auditor. It is not one of the "other advertisements of general interest to the taxpayers as the auditor, treasurer, probate judge or commissioners may deem proper" to be published within the meaning of section 6252, for the reason that this provision of the section obviously refers only to advertisements the publication of which is discretionary with one of the officials named; whereas the publication referred to in section 2508 is mandatory.

Inasmuch as section 6252 of the General Code does not apply to the publication in question, it follows that section 2508 is the only provision of law in any way relating thereto, there being no other statute which has application. As section 2508 does not require that the papers in which publication be made shall be printed or published at the county seat, it follows that the auditor's report may lawfully be published in a newspaper of general circulation in the county and published in the county, whether at the county seat or not.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF STATE—TRUST COMPANIES—IF TWO TRUST COMPANIES, EACH QUALIFIED IN OHIO, MERGE, TREASURER OF STATE SHOULD NOT PERMIT WITHDRAWAL OF DEPOSITS WITHOUT ORDER OF COURT.

Two trust companies, each of them organized under the laws of New York, have qualified for the acceptance of trusts in the state of Ohio by depositing with the treasurer of state securities in the amount of one hundred thousand dollars for each company; one of these companies has since been merged into the other of them: HELD,

The treasurer of state should not permit the merging company to take down the deposit originally made by the merged company without an order of court.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 21, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—On September 18, 1918, you requested my opinion upon a question which may be phrased as follows:

> "Two trust companies, each of them organized under the laws of New York, have qualified for the acceptance of trusts in the state of Ohio by depositing with the treasurer of state securities in the amount of $100,000.00 for each company. One of these companies has since been merged into the other of them. The merging company desires to take down the deposit originally made by the merged company. May this be done and, if so, what is the procedure therefor?"

Since receiving your letter I have been in correspondence with counsel for the merging company with respect to the effect of a merger under the laws of New York. Before considering that question in this opinion, however, the meaning of the Ohio statute involved must be determined. This statute is found in sections 9778 and 9779 of the General Code, which provide as follows:

> "Section 9778. No such corporation either foreign or domestic shall accept trusts which may be vested in, transferred or committeed to it by an individual, or court, until its paid in capital is at least one hundred thousand dollars, and until such corporation has deposited with the treasurer of state in cash fifty thousand dollars if its capital is two hundred thousand dollars or less, and one hundred thousand dollars if its capital is more than two hundred thousand dollars, except that, the full amount of such deposit by such corporation may be in bonds of the United States, or of this state, or any municipality or county therein, or in any other state, or in the first mortgage bonds of any railroad corporation that for five years last past paid dividends of at least three per cent on its common stock."

> "Section 9779. The treasurer of state shall hold such fund or securities deposited with him as security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation, but so long as it continues solvent he shall permit it to collect the interest on its securities so deposited. From time to time said treasurer shall permit withdrawals of such securities or cash, or part thereof, on the deposit with him of cash, or other securities of the kind heretofore named, so as to maintain the value of such deposit as herein provided."

One striking feature of these sections is apparent upon first reading, viz.: they contain no provision whatsoever for taking down a deposit nor for permitting the withdrawal of cash or securities save when other cash or securities are deposited in place of that or those withdrawn so that the value of the deposit is maintained. In one sense, therefore, the entire question which is submitted may be answered by the statement that there is no procedure for the withdrawal of a deposit, as such.

However, it is impossible to suppose that the legislature intended that deposits made under these sections could never be withdrawn. In the absence of any express provision on the subject, then, a statement of the rules which must govern the withdrawal of deposits can be formulated only by having regard to the purpose for which the deposits are required to be made. This purpose is plainly stated in section 9779: the deposits constitute "security for the faithful performance of the trusts assumed by such corporation." This phrase, however, contains terms which perhaps require still further definition. What trusts are those secured by the deposit and when are they to be assumed; again, what corporation is contemplated by the statute?

Some light upon the questions thus suggested is afforded by section 9778 which prohibits the acceptance of any trusts in Ohio until the deposit therein required has been made and by section 9780, which has not been quoted, which makes null and void any trust deed or mortgage given or taken without complying with the provisions of sections 9778 and 9779. It is apparent to me, therefore, that the trusts for the faithful performance of which a deposit is intended to be security are those accepted after the making of the deposit.

This proposition is of some service in the solution of the question presented by your inquiry. Suppose in the case before us that the merging company had never entered Ohio and complied with section 9778; would it be required to comply with that section by reason of its merger of the merged company? I think not; for the Ohio law does not contemplate the making of a deposit to secure the performance of trusts already accepted; and unless the merger itself because of its effect be regarded as the acceptance of the trusts originally reposed in the merged company the statute could have no application; and if the merger itself be regarded as an acceptance of trusts we would have the anomalous proposition that the merger could not be effected, conformably to the laws of Ohio, in such a case, without making a deposit; whereas such assumption would be a necessary legal incident to the merger under the laws of New York. In other words, by the merger the merging company would be assuming the trusts originally reposed in the merged company as a legal consequence of compliance with the statutes of New York; but the statutes of Ohio, if applicable to such action, would make the merger itself, insofar as Ohio trusts are concerned, ineffective—"null and void"—unless an additional step not required by the laws of New York be taken, viz.: the prior deposit of securities in Ohio by the merging company before the completion of the merger.

Rather, I think that in a case such as that which I have imagined the securities deposited in Ohio by the merged company would remain on deposit to secure the performance of the trusts accepted by the merged company. In such event if the merging company thereafter should desire to accept other trusts in Ohio it would be necessary for it to make an independent deposit in Ohio, for the reason that the deposit already made by the merged company would be security for the performance of the trusts accepted by that company and that only.

In the foregoing statement I have suggested the opposite view which might be taken of the application of the Ohio statute to a case such as that which I have supposed. That view is that the merger of two foreign trust companies under the laws of a state permitting such merger would, if the laws of that state gave it such effect, itself constitute an assumption of trusts, viz.: the trusts originally assumed by the merged company and as a result thereof the problem might be worked out by requiring the merging company prior to the merger to make the deposit mentioned in section 9778 of the General Code.

What is perhaps a technical difficulty is encountered here, however, in that section 9778 applies only to foreign corporations which desire to accept trusts which may be "vested in, transferred or committed to it by an individual, or court." This language may not be broad enough to include the transfer or commission to a trust company of trusts by action of another corporation. If not, then it could not be said that the merger of two foreign trust companies resulting in the assumption by the merging company of the trusts originally reposed in the merged company could be regarded as such a vesting, transferring or committal of such trusts in or to the merging company as would require compliance with section 9778. Then, if the effect of the merger be to release the securities under such circumstances the result would be that the Ohio trusts would still subsist and be vested in a foreign corporation, but without any security of the kind contemplated by sections 9778 and 9779 G. C.

Of course, I have been speaking of a case in which the merged company alone had previously made a deposit in Ohio; but I can not see that the fact, present in the case now under consideration, that the merging company had also qualified in Ohio makes any difference. True, by its deposit it had qualified to accept trusts regarding Ohio property which might be reposed in it without limit as to amount involved; but if it should be held that its assumption through merger of the trusts originally reposed in the merged company did not constitute such acceptance of trusts as is contemplated by the Ohio statutes, that deposit so made by it prior to the merger would not be security for the trusts so assumed, but only for the trusts assumed by it alone prior to the merger.

The question which I have been discussing is enshrouded in considerable doubt. Another question which is doubtful is the exact effect of a merger under the laws of New York. This question will hereinafter be discussed. The point which I think is clear under the Ohio statute is that the deposit required to be made thereby cannot be withdrawn as a whole until the obligations the performance of which it was intended to secure have been discharged.

When I say this I mean that the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the beneficiaries and the trust company must come to an end and the trustee be discharged therefrom. The giving of additional security for the performance of the trust or the creation of a sub-trust by the trustee, with or without the consent of the cestui que trust, would not amount to a discharge of the trustee. The trust must either be performed as an obligation or there must be such an effective substitution of another trustee by order of the court or by operation of law as to release the original trustee from all obligations connected therewith. When these things occur I would be of the opinion that the deposit might lawfully be withdrawn without at this time expressing any view as to the procedure to be pursued in such case.

Thus, I do not believe that the dissolution of a foreign trust company, without the performance of the trust or the release by the cestui que trust or by the court of the trustee from the performance thereof, would justify the withdrawal of the deposit. So long as the obligation—which is a better term to use than the word "liability"—exists the deposit must remain.

With this expression of doubt as to whether or not the Ohio statutes contemplate the making of the deposit by the merging company, as such, on account of the result of the merger with respect to its relation to the trusts originally assumed by the merged company, and this conclusion as to the circumstances under which a deposit may be withdrawn, I come now to the consideration of the effect of a merger under the laws of New York.

The present statute of New York on this subject is that found in Birdseye, Cumming & Gilbert's Consolidated Laws of New York, 1914 supplement, pages 306 et seq., being sections 487 et seq. of the Revised Banking Laws of the State of New York (Laws of 1914, Chap. 369). I quote the following from this statute:

"Section 487. Any two or more corporations, other than savings banks, organized under any one article of this chapter or under the laws of this state for the purposes or any of them mentioned in any one article of this chapter, are hereby authorized to merge one or more of such corporations into another of them as prescribed in succeeding sections of this article. * * *."

"Section 488. The respective boards of directors of such corporations may, by a vote of a majority, and the respective boards of trustees of savings banks by a vote of two-thirds, of all the members of each board, make or authorize to be made between such corporations a written agreement in duplicate under their respective corporate seals, for the merger of such corporations. * * *."

"Such agreement shall specify each corporation to be merged and the corporation which is to receive into itself the merging corporation or corporations, and it shall prescribe the terms and conditions of the merger and the mode of carrying it into effect. Such agreement may provide the name to be borne by the receiving corporation and such name may be the name of any corporation which is a party to such agreement. * * *."

"Section 489. Such merger agreement and sworn copies of the proceedings of the meetings of the respective boards of directors or trustees at which the making of such agreement was authorized, shall be submitted in duplicate to the superintendent of banks for his approval."

"Section 490. Except in the case of savings banks, the merger agreement shall, within sixty days after due notice to such corporations of its approval by the superintendent, be submitted to the stockholders or shareholders of each of such corporations * * *; and if such agreement as approved by the superintendent of banks, shall be approved at each of such meetings by the vote or ballot of the stockholders or shareholders owning at least two-thirds in amount of the stock or shares of their respective corporations, it shall thereupon become binding upon such corporations. * * *."

"Section 493. Upon filing the duplicates of such merger agreement, together with copies of its approval by the superintendent as prescribed in the last preceding section, the merger agreement shall take effect according to its terms and the merger shall thereupon take place as provided in the agreement."

"Section 494.. Upon the merger of any corporation into another as provided in this article:

1. Its corporate existence shall be merged into that of such other corporation; and all and singular its rights, privileges and franchises, and its right, title and interest in and to all property of whatsoever kind, whether real, personal or mixed, and things in action, and every right, privilege, interest or asset of conceivable value or benefit then existing which would inure to it under an unmerged existence, shall be deemed fully and finally, and without any right of reversion, transferred to and vested in the corporation into which it shall have been merged, without further act or deed, and such last-mentioned corporation shall have and hold the same in its own right as fully as the same was possessed and held by the merged corporation from which it was, by operation of the provisions of this article, transferred.

2. Its rights, obligations and relations to any person, creditor, depositor, trustee or beneficiary of any trust, shall remain unimpaired, and the corporation into which it shall have been merged shall by such merger succeed to all such relations, obligations, trusts and liabilities, and shall execute and perform all such trusts, in the same manner as though it had itself assumed the relation or trust, or incurred the obligation or liability; and its liabilities and obligations to creditors existing for any cause whatsoever shall not be impaired by such merger; nor shall any obligation or liability of any stockholder or shareholder in any corporation which is a party to such merger be affected by any such merger, but such obligations and liabilities shall continue as fully and to the same extent as existed before such merger.

3. A pending action or other judicial proceeding to which any corporation that shall be so merged is a party, shall not be deemed to have abated or to have discontinued by reason of the merger, but may be prosecuted to final judgment, order or decree in the same manner as if the merger had not been made; or the corporation into which such other corporation shall have been merged may be substituted as a party to such action or proceeding, and any judgment, order or decree may be rendered for or against it that might have been rendered for or against such other corporation if the merger had not occurred."

The procedure outlined in these sections has been in the case before us fully complied with.

Looking now to section 494 above quoted, which defines the effect of the merger, it will be observed that the first effect thereof in the case at hand was to vest in the merging company all right, title and interest in and to the securities in your hands. However, these securities are pledged for a specific purpose, and this transfer of property rights to the merging corporation is palpably subject to your right, if any, to hold the securities for the purpose for which they were deposited. This would be true if it were not expressly so provided in the New York statute, but that section confers upon the merging company the property right of the merged company "as fully as the same was possessed and held by the merged corporation from which it was * * * transferred."

The second thing which is to be observed with respect to section 494 is that the obligations and relations of the merged company to its beneficiaries are to remain unimpaired. I interpret this clause to mean that such obligations are in nowise discharged. The second paragraph of the section goes on to say that the merging company shall "succeed to all such relations, obligations, trusts and liabilities, and shall execute and perform all such trusts, in the same manner as though it had itself assumed the relation or trust or incurred the obligation or liability." That is to say, the merging corporation does assume as a legal consequence of the merger all the trusts reposed in the merged company. But this is done without discharging the merged company. The legislature of the state of New York might perhaps have provided that the effect of the merger should be to discharge the merged company and that the assumption of obligations on the part of the merging company should have this effect; but it has not done so. And in view of the doubt which I feel as to the application of the Ohio statutes, and especially as to the applicability of a deposit previously made by the merging company to existing trust obligations thus assumed by it, and affecting Ohio property, I am unable to say that such assumption of trusts should have the effect of releasing the deposit originally made by the merged company.

In short, unless the effect of merger under the New York law is to discharge the merged company from the obligations of its trusts, as well as to impose them upon the merging company in what may be a secondary capacity, I can not say that any deposit which such merging company might have made under the laws of Ohio would secure the performance of the trusts so assumed by it on the one hand, nor can I say on the other hand that the purpose for which the deposit was made by the merged company has been achieved so that the security should be released.

Such expressions of opinion as to the effect of merger as have emanated from the court of appeals of New York serve rather to accentuate the doubts which I feel in the premises. I refer to the cases of In re Bergdorf, 206 N. Y. 309, and Irvine v. New York Edison Co., 207 N. Y. 425. In the first of these cases the court, construing a previous statute, the substantial effect of which I am unable to distinguish from that now in force, used the following language:

> "The former company became (with the nominal exception hereinafter stated) rightless, propertyless and powerless; and the latter company was enlarged by absorption of all that the former surrendered. The former disburdened itself of each and every obligation, undertaking and relation, and the Guaranty Company absorbed and assumed them all. The Guaranty Company was authorized to issue new shares of stock in favor of the stockholders of the Morton Company in lieu of the shares of the latter surrendered and cancelled. But the Morton Trust Company did not surrender its corporate existence. It was not dissolved. It remained a corporation, but for the single purpose and with the sole power of being sued or proceeded against upon and defending against causes of action alleged to exist against it at the time of the merger. All the other powers bestowed upon it and which were evidenced by its certificate of incorporation and the statute law relating to it were by the merger transferred to the Guaranty Company. A corporation may exist though it possesses no property, A corporation may have a partial as well as a total extinction, and a legislature may enact that the merged corporation shall be extinguished by the merger, except insofar as the legislature may keep it nominally alive for a specified purpose. Our conclusion is that the Morton Trust Company does not exist within or as a part of the Guaranty Company and the two are not identical. As a legal being, a corporate entity, it retained the one activity and power and otherwise is non-existent."

This language was quoted with approval in Irvine v. New York Edison Co., supra, in which the distinction between merger and consolidation under the general statutes of New York was pointed out.

The language which I have quoted leaves considerable doubt in my mind as to the question which I have raised. On the one hand the court says that the merged company by reason of the merger "disburdened itself of each and every obligation, undertaking and relation, and the Guaranty Company (the merging company) absorbed and assumed them all." If the first part of this sentence be taken literally it would amount to an adjudication to the effect that the result of a merger is to discharge the merged company. The court goes on to say, however, that the merged company does not surrender its corporate existence, but remains a corporation "for the single purpose and with the sole power of being sued or proceeded against upon and defending against causes of action alleged to exist against it at the time of the merger."

It seems obvious to me that if the merged company can be proceeded against as a defendant upon obligations matured against it at the time of the merger, it is not discharged therefrom in the eyes of the law. Moreover, as the court points out in Irvine v. New York Edison Co., a statutory provision to the effect that the rights, obligations and relations of the merged company to any person, etc., shall remain unimpaired must be broad enough to "include the right to sue the debtor corporation and to take the property which was of the debtor corporation by execution issued upon a judgment obtained against such debtor." (207 N. Y. 430.) It is true that this sentence was used in describing the effect of the general merger statutes of New York, which the court sharply distinguished from the statutes relating to the merger of banks. However, I can not see how one can say that the rights of creditors and beneficiaries of the merged company could remain "unimpaired" if a deposit such as that required by the laws of Ohio, made for the purpose of securing those rights as affecting Ohio property and citizens, could as a result of the merger be withdrawn, even though some other deposit which might secure the same rights be substituted therefor.

In short, I am in grave doubt as to whether or not by the New York statute itself it was intended that any vested rights of creditors and beneficiaries of a merged company should be disturbed by the merger. I would regard a deposit made to secure the performance of Ohio trusts as giving rise to such vested rights.

For all the foregoing reasons I arrive, not at a state of certainty in my own mind, but at a conclusion which is characterized by considerable doubt. In view of my doubt and of the total absence of any statutory procedure for the withdrawing of such deposit, my advice to you is that you decline to return the deposit save upon the order of a court of competent jurisdiction. Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASES OF CANAL LANDS TO ANNA SCHROEDER, CHARLES HENRY, H. E. AND G. S. LUCAS, JOHN R. ALLEN, CHARLES E. JOHNSON, MRS. ANNIE KREIG, MIDDLETOWN BOARD OF PUBLIC PARKS, S. L. AND SADIE PRICE.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 22, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 19, 1918, to which you attach the following leases (in triplicate) of canal lands, for my approval:

	Valuation
To Anna Schroeder, land at St. Marys, Ohio	$1,000 00
To Chas. Henry, island for cottage site at Buckeye Lake	1,666 66
To H. E. and G. S. Lucas, canal land at Massillon	1,066 66
To John R. Allen, Bradford, Ohio, lease reservoir land Lake St. Marys for agricultural purposes	250 00
To Chas. E. Johnson, Columbus, Ohio, cottage site at Buckeye Lake (half lot)	200 00
To Mrs. Annie Kreig, Hocking Canal land for agricultural purposes	200 00
To Middletown Board of Public Parks, berme bank M. & E. canal, park purposes	200 00
To S. L. and Sadie Price, Logan, Ohio, abandoned Hocking canal land for agricultural purposes	100 00

I have carefully examined these leases, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

While I have approved the leases, there are two irregularities to which I will direct your attention.

(1) In the lease to Charles E. Johnson the appraised value of the land is fixed at $200.00 and the rental value thereof at $24.00, the rental value thus being 12% of the appraised value. While the law provides that canal lands must be leased upon a basis such as to provide for an income to the state of at least 6% of the appraised value, yet if the state can realize 12% on the appraised value, of course there is nothing in this contrary to law. I refer to this matter, thinking there may be a mistake either in the appraised value of the property or in the rental value as set forth in the lease.

(2) In the lease made to the Middletown Board of Public Parks, the signature of the Middletown Board of Public Parks, by Douglas Robbins, president of said board, is witnessed by but one party, viz., "John E. Fay, secretary park board."

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SCHOOL—PARENTS TEMPORARILY RESIDING IN DISTRICT FOR SOLE PURPOSE OF SCHOOLING, WHEN MUST PAY TUITION.

Parents who move into a school district to reside temporarily in order that they may have the advantages of the schools therein for their children and intend to move back to the former residence, which is their permanent residence, at the end of the school term, cannot escape the payment of tuition for their children.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 25, 1918.

HON. A. C. MCDOUGAL, Prosecuting Attorney, Woodsfield, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You request my opinion as follows:

> "A number of parents are moving into the Woodsfield Village school district in order that they may have the advantage of the Woodsfield schools for their children. They have no property listed in the Woodsfield village school district and intend to move back to their former residence, which is their permanent residence, at the close of the school term.
> "Under this state of facts do they gain residence for school purposes so that the Woodsfield village school district is compelled to educate them free of charge?"

Section 7681 G. C., as amended in 107 O. L. 62, provides in part:

> "The schools of each district shall be free to all youths between six and twenty-one years of age who are children, wards or apprentices of actual residents of the district. * * *."

"Residence" may be defined to be the place where one's home is and, as used in law, the word denotes the fact that a person dwells in a given place. "Residence" is distinguished from domicile in that "domicile" always denotes permanency of habitation, while residence, if actual, may be of a temporary nature, but not necessarily so.

In State ex rel. v. Kuhn, 8 O. N. P. 197, the question of residence for school purposes was under consideration. Certain persons were living in the district of Cincinnati and the question was whether or not certain school privileges should be extended to them without charge. On page 199 the court says:

"Referring to the standard laid down by the terms of the gift by Mr. McMicken, the law, and the rules and regulations of the University for free tuition, we find it is confined to bona fide residents of Cincinnati. * * * 'Residence' is the favorite term employed by the American legislator to express the connection between person and place, its exact signification being left to construction to be determined from the context and the apparent object to be attained by the enactment. 'Residence' when used in statutes is generally construed to mean 'domicile.' * * *

In general, the term 'residence' implies the place of domicile, the place where a person has his home, and where he has gained a residence. Horton v. Horner, per Birchard, C. J., 16 O., 148.

The word 'residence' as used in the constitution has substantially the meaning of 'habitation,' 'domicile' or place of abode. Sturgeon v. Korte, Boynon, J., 34 O. S. 534.

What constitutes a person a resident of Ohio, for the purpose of voting, or admission to the public schools or benevolent institutions of the state, for the administration of estates, and in other cases, has been a frequent matter for consideration. There is no substantial difference between the words residence and domicile in regard to these matters, though they are not always synonyms. * * *.

Domicile is said to have its nearest equivalent in untechnical or colloquial language in the word 'home.' * * * 'Domicile' expresses the legal relation existing between a person and the place where he has, in contemplation of every law, his permanent home. * * * Every person must have a domicile somewhere. No person can at the same time have more than one domicile. * * * .The abandonment or change of domicile is a proceeding of a very serious nature, and an intention to make such a change requires to be proved by very satisfactory evidence. Jacobs on Domicile, section 124. * * *

One who goes to a place for the sole purpose of attending a school or university, intending to remain for a limited time, does not thereby gain a domicile. His stay is only temporary, and is to be treated like any other temporary residence. It sometimes happens, however, that when study is one of the purposes, or even the main purpose of residence in a place, there exists the ulterior intention of remaining there permanently after the period of study is at an end. In such case there can be no doubt that domicile is acquired. Up to this point the case of a student differs in nothing from that of any other person. He does not gain a domicile by intention to reside temporarily, and he does gain a domicile by intention to reside permanently; and where his intention clearly appears, the fact of his studentship is of no significance whatever. But when we come to consider residence as a proof of animus manendi, we are met by the fact that the residence of a student is usually temporary; and as hence results the presumption that the residence of the particular student is also temporary, it is necessary, in order to show the acquisition of domicile in the particular case, to overcome this presumption by suitable evidence. This is the ratio of all the cases in which the question of the domicile of students has been considered. * * *

I am therefore of the opinion that under Charles McMicken's will, the statute R. S. 4100, and the rules and regulations of the university of Cincinnati, Jacob H. Kapplan is entitled to free truition."

It will be noted that while the court in the above case started out to distinguish "residence" and "domicile," but concludes that a domicile has been acquired by the student, he bases his conclusion upon the fact of the student's intention. It is plain in our case that the parents of the children who desire to attend the Woodsfield village school do not intend to change their domicile. They are mere temporary residents at Woodsfield so that their children may live with them while attending school, and in that the case is different from the Cincinnati case above cited. In the Cincinnati case the court found not only the residence but the domicile of the student to be in Cincinnati, but in our case the domicile is conceded to be outside of Woodsfield and with only a temporary school residence within. It is also true that the section of the statute under consideration here is different from the section of the statute under consideration in the Cincinnati case, in that in our statute the words used are "actual residence," while the statute in the Cincinnati case read "citizens." A person may actually be a resident of a particular place and yet not be a citizen of that place.

In Hart v. Lindsey, 17 N. H. 235, it is held:

> "When a person has a fixed abode where he dwells with his family, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides. The place of his personal and legal residence are the same. So, when a person has no permanent habitation or family, but dwells in different places as he happens to find employment, there can be no doubt as to the place where he resides. He must be considered as residing where he actually or personally resides. But some individuals have permanent habitations where their families constantly dwell, yet pass a great portion of their time in other places. Such persons have a legal residence with their families, and a personal residence in other places; and the word 'reside' may, with respect to them, be used to denote either their personal or their legal residence."

If, following the above, we were to determine the actual residence of the person, it will be noted that the court uses the same synonymously with "personally;" that is to say, the person actually resides at places other than the permanent habitation of his family, and while it will be admitted the permanent habitation of the school children and their parents is not in Woodsfield, but in the school district in which the permanent home is located, yet they do personally reside, for the time being at least, in Woodsfield, which, under the above reasoning, would be their actual place of residence.

It is held, however, in State v. Selleck, 76 Nebr. 750, that:

> "The exact meaning of the word residence often depends upon the connection in which it is used."

So that, while a person might have a residence for a particular purpose at one place, yet for some other purpose his residence would be at another. It is the actual residence of the debtor and not his domicile which determines the status of parties in attachment proceedings (3 O. C. n. s. 51); and the residence of one who is serving a sentence of imprisonment is for the purpose of the service of summons in the county where the prison is located and service upon him in a suit brought in that county renders service valid upon co-defendants in the county where they reside. (2 O. N P. n. s. 368). On the other hand, an elector's residence is where his habitation is fixed and to which, when absent, he intends to return. (51 Bull. 30.)

In considering the question of residence for school purposes, this department held in opinion No. 1140, rendered under date of April 13, 1918, that any child who lives in a district temporarily, or simply to establish a school residence, or who resides in the district only during the time school is in session, does not establish a residence for school purposes in such district.

The above view is also taken by the author in Jacobs on Domicile, section 325.

While it is the object of our laws that every child should have a free education in the state of Ohio, yet it cannot be said that it is the policy of the law to permit parents to pay taxes in one school district and whose children are enumerated therein for school purposes, and whose actual place of residence is there located, to move into another school district during the school year simply to escape the payment of tuition therein. Such parents cannot be said to be actual residents of such school district.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that where parents move into a school district in order that they may have the advantages of the schools therein for their children, and intend to move back to the former residence, which is their permanent residence, at the end of the school term, they cannot be said to have gained an actual residence in the school district to which they move solely for school purposes.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL—LEASE TO H. S. WILLARD, WELLSTON, OHIO, OF CERTAIN COAL LANDS IN MEIGS COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 26, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Hon. A. V. Donahey, auditor of state, has submitted for the approval of the governor and attorney-general a lease in triplicate to H. S. Willard, of Wellston, Ohio, covering 300.25 acres of coal lands, situate in section 16, township 2, range 12, Meigs county, Civil township of Sutton, and more particularly described as original surveyed lots numbers two (2), five (5) and six (6).

I have approved said lease as to form and legality and herewith submit the same to you for examination and approval as to advisability and consideration. Should you approve the same, will you not kindly endorse your approval thereon and send the said lease to Mr. Donahey, auditor of state? Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—TITLE TO SCHOOL PROPERTY OF TOWNSHIP AND SPECIAL DISTRICTS VESTED IN RURAL DISTRICT.

When rural school districts were constituted from the township and special districts by the enactment of section 4735 G. C., the title to the school property which formerly belonged to said township and special districts became vested in the rural district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 29, 1918.

HON. J. L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

"A question of the title of the present boards of eudcation of rural school districts of certain townships in this county, to school lots or school lands, which were conveyed to the boards of education of township school districts before the enactment of the rural school code of 1914, is being discussed in this county and as the question is one of state importance and affects school lands all over the state, I consider it of sufficient importance to submit the question to you for a formal opinion, so that the matter may be settled so far as the school officials are concerned.

Before the enactment of the rural school code of 1914, the legal title to the land of a township school district was vested in the board of education of said township school district. Said rural school code of 1914 abolished township school districts, and provided that (section 4735 G. C.) 'the present existing and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education,' but nowhere in said rural school code of 1914 is any legislation, tending to transfer the legal title from the said boards of education of township and special school districts of school lots and lands belonging to them, and vest that legal title in boards of education of rural school districts.

Said section 4735 G. C. continues, 'and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified.' If this part of said section was intended to continue the legal rights and powers of said township boards, it would end at the expiration of their terms of office and as soon as their successors are elected and qualified.

The legal title to all township and special school district property was vested in those boards of education and their successors, or individual members thereof and their successors in office, but upon said township and special school districts being abolished and no express legislation transferring or vesting that legal title in the successor of said township and special school districts, to-wit, in the boards of education of rural school districts, where is that legal title now? Does the legal title transfer itself automatically and vest in the successor, that is, in the rural school districts or boards of education thereof, or does it require express legislation to accomplish that?

Suppose a board of education of a rural school district, under section 4758 G. C., decides to dispose of real estate over which it now exercises control, but the title to which was by deed of conveyance vested in a board of education of a township school district or in the individual members thereof as such, and their successors in office, during the year 1910, or any year prior to the going into effect of said rural school code of 1914, and would comply with the provisions of that section 4758, would the deed of said board of education of said rural school district convey any legal title to said real estate? Nowhere is there any direct legislation vesting any legal title to school land the board of education of rural school districts.

Section 4735–2 G. C., it will be observed, covers the legal title of school property which is affected by section 4735–1 G. C.

In the case of Crofton v. Board of Education of Cincinnati, 26 O. S. 571, the question of successor in title to school property was discussed, the question having been raised in that case, but in the act of May 1, 1873, then being construed, which was an act for the reorganization and maintenance of common schools, the 39th section of said act provided that 'all property, real or personal, which has heretofore vested in and is held by any board of education, or town or city council, for the use of public or common schools in any district, is hereby vested in the board of education provided for in this act, having, under this act, jurisdiction and control of the schools of such district.' The court in that case properly held that said board of education of Cincinnati succeeded to all rights of the city in and to the school property in question. But in the rural school code of 1914 no such legislation as that contained in said section 39 is embodied.

Section 4683 G. C. provides for vesting the title of former village school districts in the board of education of the rural school district of which it becomes a part.

Section 4749 G. C. refers to corporate powers of a board of education and empowers them to acquire and dispose of real estate, etc., but it cannot dispose of real estate to which it has no title, and my inquiry is, in what manner is the title to township and special school district property as it existed before the enactment of the rural school code of 1914 now transferred to and vested in their successors, to-wit, the board of education of rural school districts?

We have in this county several school lots which the boards of education of rural school districts desire to dispose of, the title to which was by deed of conveyance vested in the township board of education and its successor in office, but the attorney for a prospective purchaser discovered what seemed to him to be a defect in legislation, as above stated, so the purchaser and several boards of education desire to know further and for that reason a legal opinion is requested of you, and I hope you will be able to give it soon."

Section 4735 G. C., to which you refer, reads:

"The present existing township and special school districts shall constitute rural school districts until changed by the county board of education, and all officers and members of boards of education of such existing districts shall continue to hold and exercise their respective offices and powers until their terms expire and until their successors are elected and qualified."

By the authority of said section what formerly constituted township and special school districts in Ohio were constituted as rural school districts. School districts in Ohio are purely creatures of legislation, that is, they are established by statutory law. New districts may be formed, but only as is provided by statute and when the legislature provided that what was then township and special districts should constitute rural districts, the rural districts were by that act as completely established as though they had been newly formed districts from territory not theretofore constituting entire districts.

The word "constitute" means to establish, to make, to create. It is composed of the words con, meaning together, and statuere, meaning to set.

In Galveston, etc., Railroad Company v. State, 77 Texas 367, Staton, J., defines "constitute" as follows:

"The word constitute * * * is equivalent of the words 'compose, make up, be;' the unit composed of the several constituents which it is declared shall be perpetual, continuing indefinitely, without cessation or interruption by the department of government and subject to diversion only by the will of the people, which may be expressed in some future organic law."

In In re East and West India Dock Company, 38 Ch. Div. 576, Chitty, J., defined the word constitute as follows:

> "The term constitute is not equivalent to incorporated. It is of wider import. It seems to be equivalent to established."

In Kepner v. Commissioners, 40 Pa. St. 129, the court said:

> "The act says that the council may 'make, ordain, constitute, establish and pass' ordinances, etc., but all these verbs mean the same thing and any one of them would have been sufficient."

So that, when the legislature provided that the present township and special school districts should "constitute" rural school districts, it thereby established the rural school districts the boundaries of which were exactly the same as the township and special districts from which the same were so established. Provision was further made that such rural districts should continue until changed by the county board of education and that change can occur in any one of several ways; first, it is provided by section 4735-1 that when a petition, signed by not less than one-fourth of the electors residing within the territory which constitutes a rural school district, is presented to the board of education of the district, or when the board, by a majority vote of its entire membership,shall decide to submit the question, then and in either of the above cases the question of dissolving said district and joining the same to contiguous territory may be submitted to the electors of the district. If the question is so submitted and carries, then section 4735-2 provides that the legal title of the property of such rural school district which is so dissolved and joined shall become vested in the board of education of the rural or village district to which such district is so joined. Section 4692 provides for a transfer of territory from one school district to another by the county board of education and also makes provision for an equitable division of the funds and indebtedness by the county board of education. Section 4696 provides for a transfer of territory from certain school districts to others by the boards of education thereof and also provides for an equitable division of the funds or indebtedness before such transfer is completed. Section 4736 G. C. provides for the arranging of school districts by the county board of education and also authorizes the county board of education to direct an equitable division of the funds and indebtedness at the time of such arrangement, so that whenever territory is taken from or added to a rural school district or when the entire district is transferred or abolished, provision is made for an equitable division or distribution of whatever funds or indebtedness the district may have.

The general rule of law is that whenever a district is created from territory which formerly constituted another school district or districts, or parts thereof, the school property located within the territorial lines passes to the school officers of the new district.

Under our laws, however, provision is made in certain instances for school property to remain the property of the board of education from which the transfer is made until certain conditions are complied with. To illustrate:

Section 4690 provides that when territory is annexed to a city or village, such territory thereby becomes a part of the city or village school district, but the legal title to the school property in such territory for school purposes "shall remain vested in the board of education of the school district from which such territory was detached until such time as may be agreed upon by the several boards of education, when such property may be transferred by warranty deed." It is true that section 4683 makes provision that when a village district is dissolved, the territory formerly constituting the village district shall become a part of the contiguous rural district and that all school property shall pass to and become vested in the board of education of such rural district, but the fact that specific provision is made therefor does not in any manner vary the general principle of law which attaches thereto.

In Crofton v. Board of Education, 26 O. S. 571, the board of education of the city of Cincinnati had, by authority of the act of May 1,1873, succeeded to the school property of the city of Cincinnati. The court held:

> "The defendant in error succeeded to all the rights of the city in and to the school property and funds of the district, and was the proper party to sue for and recover the amount overpaid to Crofton on account of the building of the school-house."

In the case under consideration the districts are changed only in name. The property is the same after the districts become rural as it was when the districts were township or special. The board of education remains the same until the successors to the members thereof are property elected and qualified. There is a complete succession of interest passing from the old to the new district. The old township and special districts went out of existence by name only. The rural districts came into existence by name only. There was no legislation in relation to the transfer of the property and none was needed. The boards continued to exercise their powers exactly the same under the new name as they had exercised them under the old. The districts being creatures of statute, the legislature had perfect authority to make the change.

I can come to but one conclusion and that is that the property of the old township and special school districts vested completely in the boards of education of the rural school districts at the time such rural districts were formed from said old districts.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN HIGHLAND COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, October 30, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 24, 1918, to which you attach the final resolution adopted by the county commissioners of Highland county, in reference to the improvement of Section C-1, I. C. H. No. 258.

I am returning said resolution, without my approval, for the following reason: The resolution was adopted on September 26, 1918, while the certificate of the county auditor, to the effect that money was in the treasury to take care of the obligations assumed by the county under said final resolution, was made on October 4, 1918. This is not in harmony with section 5660 G. C., which provides that the county auditor must first certify that the money required for the payment of the obligation is in the treasury, to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SOUTH EUCLID VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—$4,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 1, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In Re: Bonds of South Euclid Village School district in the sum of $4,000.00, for the purpose of improving certain school property in said school district.

GENTLEMEN:—I have given careful consideration to the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of South Euclid Village School district relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind. I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to the bond form submitted covering the above issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of South Euclid Village School district, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF BROOKLYN HEIGHTS VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT, CUYAHOGA COUNTY, OHIO—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 1, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Brooklyn Heights Village School district, Cuyahoga county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000 for the purpose of enlarging and repairing certain school houses in said district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings relating to the above issue of bonds, and find the same to be in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State of Ohio applicable to bond issues of this kind, and I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted covering the above issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF CITY OF LAKEWOOD, OHIO—$15,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 2, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the City of Lakewood, Ohio, in the sum of $15,000 purchased by the Industrial Commission of Ohio as a part of an issue of $60,000 authorized by the council of said city for the purpose of erecting certain buildings for the fire department, purchasing or condemning the necessary land therefor, purchasing fire engines and paying the cost of placing underground wires and other signal apparatus.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council of the city of Lakewood, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the constitution and laws of the State of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said city, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—CITY—EMERGENCY POLICE AND FIREMEN NOT ENTITLED TO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

Emergency policemen and firemen, appointed by the city of Dayton because of the inability of the city to secure qualified persons through civil service channels for regular membership in the police and fire departments, are not entitled to participation in the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Law, for the following reasons:

1. Assuming their appointment as "emergency" policemen and firemen to be lawful, they would not be "regular" members of these departments, and the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Law are extended only to regular members of such departments.

2. Inasmuch as the city of Dayton maintains policemen's and firemen's pension funds, this fact alone would disqualify any of its policemen and firemen from receiving the benefits of the State Workmen's Compensation Law, whether particular policemen and firemen are entitled to the benefits of the local pension funds or not.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of October 5th submitting for my opinion the following question:

> "Are emergency policemen and firemen appointed or employed temporarily in a municipal corporation, and not being regular members of the departments in which they are respectively employed, entitled to the benefits of the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law of the State?"

In order to reach the question which you desire me to consider I shall have to assume certain things respecting the government of the city of Dayton, which is provided for by charter.

First, the power to appoint emergency policemen and firemen is a little broader under the Dayton charter than it is under the general law. The provisions relating to policemen and firemen are, respectively, as follows:

> (Sections 70 and 72 Charter of City of Dayton):
> "In case of riot, emergency, at time of elections or similar occasions, the director of public safety may appoint additional patrolmen and officers for temporary service who need not be in the classified service."
> "In case of riot, conflagration, or emergency, the director of public safety may appoint additional firemen and officers for temporary service who need not be in the classified service."

Dayton also has a civil service code of its own which is embodied in its charter, and is therefore not subject to the general civil service law of the state which provides for the making of provisional appointments to fill temporarily regular positions in the service of the city. (Section 486-14 General Code).

The facts stated in the communication which give rise to your inquiry are that an emergency is deemed to exist in the city of Dayton because of the effect of the selective service draft law and regulations thereunder, which makes it virtually impossible to comply with the requirements of the civil service of the city of Dayton in filling vacancies in positions in the regular police and fire departments; therefore recourse is to be had to the appointment of emergency policemen and firemen. I would seriously doubt whether this state of affairs would amount to an emergency under the general law, which is somewhat different from the charter provisions which I have quoted.

But I am assuming for the purposes of this question that such an interpretation of that charter as would make legal the proposed action would be correct. In this connection the fact that provisional appointments to fill regular positions for a temporary period can not be made must be taken into consideration.

I have gone over this matter because the question which is thus raised invokes consideration of section 1465-61 of the General Code, which provides, in part, as follows:

> "The terms 'employe,' 'workman' and 'operative' as used in this act, shall be construed to mean:
> 1. Every person in the service of the state, or of any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein, including regular members of lawfully constituted police and fire departments of cities and villages, under any appointment or contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, except any official of the state, or of any county, city, township, incorporated village or school district therein. Provided that nothing in this act shall apply to policemen or firemen in cities where policemen's and firemen's pension funds are now or hereafter may be established and maintained by municipal authority under existing laws.
> 2. Every person in the service of any person, firm or private corporation, including any public service corporation employing five or more workmen or operatives regularly in the same business, or in or about the same establishment under any contract of hire, express or implied, oral or written, including aliens, and also including minors who are legally permitted to work for hire under the laws of the state, but not including any person whose employment is but casual and not in the usual course of trade, business, profession or occupation of his employer. * * *."

It will be observed that in dealing with public employes the general assembly did not omit from the catalog of persons who should be considered as "employes," "workmen" or "operatives," within the meaning of the act, persons whose employment is but casual; that is, as a general rule the legislature did not see fit to exclude casual public employes from the benefits of the law.

But in dealing with the police and fire departments the legislature saw fit to restrict the definition so as to include only "regular" members thereof. I say that the definition is restrictive in this particular because, though perhaps the general phrase

> "Every person in the service of any * * * city * * * incorporated village or school district * * * under any appointment or contract of hire, * * * except any official * * *" would by itself be broad enough to include all members of the fire department and the police department, both regular and temporary, yet the legislature has seen fit to deal particularly with the members of the police and fire departments and in so dealing with them to use the word "regular" in the context from which it has been quoted.

The distinction is thus drawn, not between temporary or casual service and permanent service as in the case of private employment, but between incumbents of regular positions and those of emergency positions; that is to say, as to public employments the status of the position in the police or fire department seems to determine the application of the Workmen's Compensation Law to its incumbent; while in the case of private employments the duration of the service may be an element to be taken into consideration in determining whether or not it is "casual."

Assuming, as I have done, that the positions to be created may lawfully be considered as those of emergency patrolmen and firemen, it would follow on this ground alone that their incumbents would not be entitled to the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Law of the state.

However, there is another ground equally conclusive upon which the same conclusion must be based. It appears from the letter of the civil service board of Dayton, attached to your letter, that that city does maintain policemen's and firemen's pension funds. The letter states that the emergency policemen and firemen to be appointed would not share in the benefits of those funds—a statement which I accept as one of fact based upon the rules of the respective funds. However, section 1465-61 G. C., as I have quoted it, clearly withdraws from the Workmen's Compensation Act policemen and firemen in cities where policemen's and firemen's pension funds are established and maintained, without regard to whether or not particular policemen and firemen are entitled to the benefits of such funds.

Therefore, for the reason that the city of Dayton does maintain policemen's and firemen's pension funds, I am of the opinion that none of its policemen and firemen are entitled to the benefits of the Workmen's Compensation Law, whether particular policemen and firemen are entitled to share in the benefits of such local pension funds or not.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—NOT AUTHORIZED TO CANCEL CONTRACT FOR IMPROVEMENT, WHEN.

In a case where the state, through the state highway commissioner, has agreed to furnish brick for a road improvement and the contractor has never made a demand upon the state for brick and has a vast amount of work to do before he is ready for the brick, and the state, through its departments, declares that it has brick which will meet the plans and specifications required and can furnish it at any time, the state highway commissioner is not authorized in releasing the contractor from the obligations of his contract, merely upon his representation that the state may not be able to furnish the brick when he is ready for the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 8, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of September 26, 1918, which reads as follows:

"For your information I beg to quote the following entry from the journal of the advisory board as of September 4, 1918, with reference to the request of Swank & McIntyre for cancellation of their contract for the improvement of Section 'J', Inter-County Highway No. 357, Lancaster-New Lexington road, Perry county, Ohio:

'PERRY COUNTY—I. C. H. No. 357, Section "J", Lancaster-New Lexington road—Contractors request cancellation of contract.

A letter to Commissioner Cowen from H. S. Atkinson was presented attached to which was brief and argument of Swank & McIntyre for the cancellation of their contract for the improvement of Section "J", Inter-County Highway No. 357, Lancaster-New Lexington road, Perry county.

The secretary was authorized to submit the brief of Swank & McIntyre together with a statement of the facts as understood by the highway department to the Attorney-General of Ohio for an opinion as to the proper procedure to be followed by this department.'

I am attaching hereto statement of Swank & McIntyre, through their attorneys, Atkinson & Smith, together with statement signed by Chief Highway Engineer H. D. Bruning of this department.

I respectfully request an opinion from you as to what action, if any, may be taken by this department in response to Swank & McIntyre's request."

There is considerable correspondence attached to your letter, which is too lengthy to quote in full. Hence in the consideration of the question submitted to me I shall deduce those facts therefrom which I deem to be essential in arriving at the correct answer to your question.

The question is whether there is anything connected with the contract entered into by and between the state highway commissioner, for the State of Ohio, and Swank & McIntyre, for the improvement of Section J, I. C. H. No. 357, Lancaster-New Lexington road, Perry county, Ohio, that would warrant the state highway commissioner in cancelling this contract, the contractors, Swank & McIntyre, requesting that they be relieved from the obligations of the same.

The provision of the contract which gives rise to the question is as follows:

"Brick to be furnished the contractors f. o. b. cars at Junction City or New Lexington on T. & O. C. R. R."

In other words, the state, through the state highway commissioner, agreed that it would furnish the brick for the construction of this particular highway, and while the contract does not so specifically state, it was contemplated that these bricks would be furnished by the board of administration from the plants which it operates by means of prison labor. In reference to this particular provision, the contractors Swank & McIntyre, through their attorneys Atkinson & Smith, set forth the following in the facts:

"During the progress of the above work, it developed that the brick produced by the State of Ohio at its Junction City plant was not making the test above set forth and required by the state highway department. It is also a fact, that at no time during the life of this contract, has the state been in a position to deliver brick to these contractors that will meet such test. It is a further fact, that even now, the state is not producing brick that meet such test.

* * * * * * * * * * *

Immediately upon ascertaining the inability of the state to furnish the brick according to the contract, specifications and test, the contractors suspended further operations."

From these statements, as set out by the attorneys, they arrive at the following conclusions:

> (1) "The contractors are entitled to a cancellation of this contract, because of the inability of the state to furnish brick to meet the prescribed test.
> (2) Because of the inability of the state to furnish brick to meet the prescribed test, the contractors were justified in not proceeding with the work."

I might state in the beginning that if the statements made by the contractors, through their attorneys, were to be given their full force and effect, and could be taken for all they import, I think the conclusions drawn by the attorneys are correct and that the contractors should be released from the obligations of their contract.

We will first consider the matter from the standpoint of the contractors. The contract was let on July 21, 1916, and the date set for the completion of the same was July 1, 1917. The time for completion was extended by the state highway commissioner at two different times, one to September 15, 1917, and another to March 15, 1918.

The contractors received payments based upon estimates made by the state highway commissioner in a total amount of $6,477.76, the last payment being made on December 8, 1917, no work having been done on said contract since that date. About forty per cent. of the rough grading has been completed and the greater part of the bridges and culverts upon said improvement have been constructed. It will require something like $40,000.00 worth of work upon the part of the contractors, before they will be in a position to lay the brick upon said improvement. This last statement of fact is set out by Swank & McIntyre, through their attorneys.

The contractors never made any demand upon the state for brick, either in writing or orally; neither did they ever serve notice in writing upon the state highway department that they had decided not to complete the contract, owing to the fact that the state could not furnish brick to comply with its part of the contract; neither is there anything set out indicating at what time the contractors decided they would not proceed with the contract owing to the fact that the state was not able to furnish brick.

When we consider that no request or demand had ever been made upon the state for the furnishing of brick and that $40,000.00 worth of work remained to be done by the contractors before they would be in a position to require brick, and that the State of Ohio never refused to furnish the brick required, it would seem that the question is prematurely raised by the contractors in reference to this matter.

The contractors state that they hesitate to proceed with the improvement on the ground that other brick concerns are ready to enjoin them from laying brick upon said road as soon as they begin to lay them. Just how other brick concerns might have a right to enjoin the contractors from laying the brick furnished by the state, I am not able to understand, unless they follow the old familiar course that is followed by so many parties who are liable to suffer financial loss due to some course of the state or a county, and persuade a taxpayer to bring a taxpayer's suit against the contractor and the state officials.

We will now consider the other contracting party involved in this matter, namely, the State of Ohio, through the state highway department. The Ohio board of administration states it as a fact that it can furnish the state highway commissioner with all the brick that he may need for the completion of this contract, upon very short notice, and can furnish brick that will not only meet the specifications required by the state highway commissioner, but will more than meet the required tests.

The state highway commisioner has adopted a rule that brick must meet such a test that they will not lose more than twenty-two per cent. of their volume when placed in a certain tester with iron and revolved at a certain rate for a specified length of time. The board of administration has had tests made of the brick manufactured by it and has submitted four of these tests to this department, in which respective tests the brick lost as follows: 21.8 per cent., 20.1 per cent., 18.6 per cent., and 19.2 per cent. These tests indicate that the board of administration has brick on hands which more than meet the test required by the state highway commissioner.

The board of administration also represents to this department that at all times for more than a year last past it has had brick which would meet the test required by the state highway commissioner, and in quantities more than sufficient to construct the road in question. The state highway commissioner himself has had tests made of the brick manufactured by the board of administration and has also submitted the same to this department. These tests show the board of administration is manufacturing brick which meets the tests required by the state highway commissioner.

In view of all the above, I do not believe as a matter of law that you as state highway commissioner have authority to release the contractors from the obligations of their contract. Of course if the contractors are so released, the bond which the contractors gave for the faithful performance of the obligations of their contract would be of no force and effect and the parties signing the same would also be released. This undoubtedly under the present conditions would work great financial loss to the State of Ohio and the other parties interested and would be brought about through no fault of the State of Ohio.

It is suggested by the contractors that the state ought to deal fairly with those parties with whom it contracts. They use this language:

> "There is every reason for the state assuming the attitude of absolute fairness in its dealings with its citizens. Simply because the state has the power to insist upon the last pound of flesh and not be held responsible therefor in law, is not sufficient reason, moral or otherwise, for exercising such drastic authority."

I am in full accord with this observation. I believe that the state ought to deal just as fairly and equitably with the parties with whom it contracts, as would a private individual, and I might say even more so; but this principle does not warrant the state, without any consideration whatever, in releasing a contractor from the obligations of his contract because they have become burdensome to him.

If these contractors should proceed with their work and are enjoined by the courts from laying the brick furnished by the state, owing to the fact that they do not meet the specifications required by the state highway commissioner; or, if it should develop that the state would not be able to furnish the brick that would meet the required test, I could not imagine any state official or general assembly that would refuse to make the contractors absolutely whole for all the loss they might incur because of the fact that the state had failed to meet the obligations resting upon it under the contract between it and the contractors. However, at the present time and under the conditions now existing, I do not believe as a matter of law or equity that you should release these contractors from the obligations they assumed under this contract.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF TRUMBULL COUNTY, O.—$30,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 9, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Trumbull county, Ohio, in the sum of $30,000 for the stated purpose of providing a fund for paying the county's portion of improving, maintaining, dragging and repairing roads under the provisions of the Cass Highway law.

I am herewith returning to you without approval transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Trumbull county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds. From recitals contained in the resolution providing for this issue of bonds, it appears that at the general election held November 2, 1915, the electors of Trumbull county voted in favor of a tax levy for the county road fund, the same not to exceed one mill for a period of five years; and it further appears that this issue of bonds is under the assumed authority of said sections of the General Code. This action was taken under favor of sections 5649-5 et seq, of the General Code, the same being a part of the Smith One Per Cent. law so-called. There was ample authority in the provisions of the sections of the General Code above noted for this action, and pursuant to the authority of said vote, the commissioners were authorized to make an additional levy of taxes for road purposes not to exceed one mill for a period of five years, which levy would be outside of the three and ten mill limitations of the Smith law, and subject only to the fifteen mill limitations thereof. However, there is nothing in the provisions of said section or elsewhere in the statutes of this state authorizing an issue of bonds in anticipation of the collections of an additional tax voted and authorized under the provisions of the Smith law, and for want of any statutory authority whatever authorizing this issue of bonds, I am compelled to disapprove the same.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTION FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN HANCOCK COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 9, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of November 8, 1918, in which you enclose final resolution upon the following named improvement and ask my approval thereon:

Lima-Sandusky Road, I. C .H. No. 22, Section C-1, Hancock county.

I have carefully examined said resolution, find the same correct in form and legal and am therefore returning it to you with my approval endorsed thereon, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SCHOOLS—TEACHERS ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION DURING TIME SCHOOL CLOSED ON ACCOUNT OF SPANISH INFLUENZA.

Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic. The Spanish influenza condition was an epidemic in certain school districts in the State of Ohio.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1918.

HON. BENTON G. HAY, Prosecuting Attorney, Wooster, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request for my opinion which reads:

"The board of education of a village school district of this county desires to have your opinion on the question of whether the board is compelled to pay its teachers on account of the schools being closed by reason of the Spanish influenza, the schools perhaps being closed for a month or more. The board believes this lost time should be adjusted in fairness to both the teachers and the board. I informed the board that it was under legal obligations to pay the teachers for any lost time caused by the closing of the schools by reason of the provisions of section 7690 of the General Code, but that perhaps the teachers would be willing to make up a part or all of this time. I am enclosing the letters of the clerk of the board which show what information the clerk desires."

The clerk's letter reads in part:

"We are familiar with the section and the opinion that you quote and with this only as a basis, we cannot see where there would be any reason for presuming that instructors would be willing to make up lost time when there is no legal incentive to cause them to do so. If they should do so it would be unadulterated generosity on their part and the average instructor who follows teaching as a profession in which to make a livelihood does not usually emphasize this grace very strongly.

We call to your attention at this time the fact that it was on the recommendation of the Wayne County Tax Budget commission, of which commission you were a member in attendance, that our board permitted our tax levy for the coming year to be lowered to the point where we shall incur an indebtedness of two thousand dollars in the current running expenses of our schools for the present school year. Presuming that funds cannot be secured by borrowing to meet this deficiency, will a certificate of indebtedness be a very acceptable substitute for cash in the payment of the salaries of our teachers?

It is not clear to us how an individual can legally claim payment for a service or services that have not been rendered when there is an express written agreement to the effect that payment will be rendered only after such service has been performed. We admit the willingness of both parties to the agreement to do their part, but being restrained from doing so by the local health authorities. If one party to the contract is released or held by same why should not reciprocal release or binding become an obligation on the part of the other party? It is difficult for us to witness a gratuitons expenditure of public funds in this connection that in connection with any other object would undoubtedly carry a penitentiary sentence therewith.

While we do not question the application of the section and the opinion above referred to in connection with the circumstances under which they were rendered, we cannot see where the diploma of a school that may be deprived of two months of its work would amount to more than "a scrap of paper" nor the wisdom of continuing same through a period of time when this continuation will avail nothing and mean an additional usless expense, unless there can be some legal working arrangement devised that will make due provision for an exigency of this nature.

As the epidemic of influenza through which our state is now passing is very generally prevalent throughout the state we anticipate that this matter will be up for consideration in the very near future, as there are undoubtedly other boards of education that will have the same problem to deal with that we have.

We shall ask therefore that you secure an opinion from the Attorney-General in regard to these matters and that you advise us as to the opinion rendered. We feel that such an opinion would be of interest not only to ourselves, but of service and general application to the problems of other boards in our county who may be situated in circumstances similar to ours"

Section 7690 G. C.,as amended in 107 O. L., page 47, reads in part:

"* * * Teachers must be paid for all time lost when the schools in which they are employed are closed owing to an epidemic or other public calamity."

The only question which seems to call for any consideration is, is the Spanish influenza an epidemic?

An epidemic is defined as "wide spread occurrence of a disease in a certain region; spreading among the people; affecting a large number in a community at once, but of a limited period."

The above definition seems to cover precisely the conditions which have existed in relation to the said Spanish influenza and but one conclusion can be arrived at and that is that the conditions in relation to the disease which is called Spanish influenza has been an epidemic in this state recently.

Answering your question, then, I must advise you that the teachers must be paid during the time the schools have been closed on account of the existence of Spanish influenza in the school districts.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TAXES AND TAXATION—CORPORATION OR INDIVIDUAL CANNOT DEDUCT FEDERAL TAXES FROM CREDITS.

A corporation or individual, in determining the amount of credits to be listed for taxation for the year 1918, may not deduct, from the sum of all its legal claims and demands, the amount of income or excess profits tax due and payable to the federal government on or before June 15, 1918.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1918.

Tax Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago you submitted for my opinion the following question:

> "In determining the amount of credits to be listed for taxation for the year 1918, may a corporation deduct from the sum of all its legal claims and demands the amount of income tax or excess profits tax due and payable to the federal government on or before June 15, 1918?"

In your letter you referred to the opinion of the Attorney-General to the prosecuting attorney of Fairfield county, under date of April 23, 1913, found at p. 1235 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for that year. In that opinion it was held that unpaid taxes levied under the authority of the state itself, including, of course, county and local taxes, do not constitute debts which may be deducted from gross credits, for the purpose of ascertaining the taxable amount of such credits. With the conclusions of that opinion I agree and proceed therefore to the consideration of the question as to whether or not its principles are applicable to the question which you now submit. In my opinion they are so applicable.

The cases relied upon in that opinion were those of Peter vs. Parkinson, Treas., 83 O. S. 36, and Bailies vs. Des Moines, 127 Ia. 124. As stated in said opinion, these cases proceed upon the theory that the word "debts," when used in statutes like the one under consideration, imports an obligation ex contractu—one arising upon a contract express or implied and enforceable accordingly by a process in theory at least binding upon the person of the obligor. A tax lacks these characteristics. As an obligation it is created in invitum, i. e., without the concurrence of the will of the obligor.

In most instances it is not in theory enforceable by process in personam, but its collection may be secured only by seizure of specific property. This latter, however, is not always the case. The statutes frequently make the tax list equivalent in force and effect to a judgment in personam, to the extent that property other than that on account of which the tax is levied may be seized as upon execution for its satisfaction. But the courts in the cases cited attached no weight to this circumstance as giving to a tax the characteristics of a debt; and notwithstanding the remedy by distress or the creation of a statutory right of action against the taxpayer individually, to recover a judgment for taxes enforceable against his property generally, the essential character of the obligation remains unchanged; and, moreover, such a judgment while enforceable against the goods and chattels, and perhaps the lands of the persons against whom judgment might be rendered, would not be such a judgment as would have been, but for the statutes and constitutional provisions abolishing imprisonment for debt, enforceable by process against the body.

In the case of the federal income and excess profits taxes, it appears from the acts of Congress under which these taxes are levied—which I do not take time to quote—that the collector may seize and sell any property of the taxpayer in satisfaction of the tax. I do not find, however, that the acts of Congress authorize the bringing of suit against the taxpayer to obtain personal judgment. Such a remedy would not seem to be necessary, save for the purpose of reaching lands.

However, upon the broad grounds upon which the cases which were cited in the other opinion were decided, it is clear that their principles apply to the solution of the present question just as fully as they do to the solution of that considered in the former opinion, unless there is something in the character of the federal government and its relation to the taxes now under consideration which would force the adoption of a different rule in this case. I can think of no principle which could be based upon such a foundation, though I have given the question very careful consideration.

It will be borne in mind that the whole matter of the deduction of debts for the purpose of taxation is one of grace and not of right. There is nothing to prevent the state from taxing credits in gross without any deduction whatsoever. In fact it was at one time seriously doubted whether debts could be deducted even from credits.

> Exchange Bank vs. Hines, 3 O. S. 1; Opinions of Bartley, C. J., and Thurman, J.

Later on it became settled that the term "credits," as used in the constitution, might with propriety be defined by the legislature so as to be limited to the net choses in action other than investments in bonds owned by the taxpayer; but it has never been contended, nor could it be in my opinion, that the legislature is required to allow any deduction. It is certainly not required to do so as to taxes assessed by the federal government, any more as against "credits," than as against any of the other assets of the taxpayers.

In other words, I can think of no reason arising out of the framework of our national government and the relation of the government of the United States to that of the States, which would compel the States to allow a deduction for property taxation purposes of the amount of taxes due to the federal government at a given time, from the "credits" of the taxpayer, that would not likewise operate to compel the State to allow such a deduction from any other property of his. The burden, if any, upon the activities of the federal government in the one case would be no greater than in the other. It would follow, therefore, that if there is anything in the nature of the federal government that in anywise limits the taxing power of the state on account of taxes levied by the authority of the federal government, that thing would so operate as to exempt from taxation for state purposes any and all assets of a given taxpayer up to the amount of the federal tax; for suppose that at the day as of which taxes are assessed in Ohio a given taxpayer has no credits at all. It is obvious that if at that time the federal government should attempt the collection of a previously assessed income or excess profits tax by compulsory process, it would have to seize other personal property of the taxpayer, such as machinery or stocks of goods. Would it therefore be claimed that a taxpayer could hold exempt from state taxation, under these circumstances, goods and chattels equivalent in value to the amount of the federal tax, on the ground that to deny him this privilege would produce a clash between the paramount federal power and that of the state? This question I think must be answered upon reason in the negative. This being true, it is obvious that any argument that could be predicated upon the relation of the state and federal governments would prove too much and would have to be rejected.

Arguments have been addressed to me, in connection with this question, based upon provisions of the bankruptcy act and other considerations of a similar character, which have the same weakness, in that all of them would tend to prove, if they prove anything, that a deduction should be allowed for federal taxes, not only as against credits, but as against any of the assets of the taxpayer which would otherwise be taxable under the laws of the state. As stated, such arguments prove too much because it can not be contended that upon any account whatsoever can an Ohio taxpayer deduct any obligation as a "debt" or otherwise, from investments in bonds, etc., or tangible personal property.

For these reasons, then, I am of the opinion that the principles of the former opinion apply to the question which I have been discussing, and that a corporation or individual, in determining the amount of credits to be listed for taxation for the year 1918, may not deduct, from the sum of all its legal claims and demands, the amount of income or excess profits tax due and payable to the federal government on or before June 15, 1918.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE COVERING LOT NO. SIXTY-EIGHT OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following parcel of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

> Being lot No. sixty-eight (68) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book No. 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, O.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid, and a special assessment for Ridgview road improvement amounting, as shown by the abstract to 42c.

I am of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on November 12, 1918, a good title in Charlotte Rushmer, widow of Benjamin Rushmer, to the premises hereinbefore described.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE JUDGE—CLERK HIRE—NOT ENTITLED TO INCLUDE FINDING PAID IN ESTIMATING CLERK HIRE.

During a certain year a finding was paid by the probate judge into the probate judge's fee fund, the same being for fees received by him and not accounted for during a previous year. HELD: This amount so paid in could not be used as a basis for allowance for clerk hire by the county commissioners under section 2980-1 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1918.

HON. NATHAN B. GILLILAND, Probate Judge, Portsmouth, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of the 9th inst. as follows:

"I would be pleased to have your opinion in regard to fixing the amount upon which to base the salary of deputy clerk under section 2980-1.

Last year, in addition to the amount paid into the county treasury, there was paid by Thos. C. Beatty, my predecessor, the sum of $1,726.33, being the amount found due by the examiners, upon examination of his books.

Should this amount be included in the total in making the estimate for the next year?

The above sum was paid into the treasury by Mr. Beatty January 25, 1918, almost one year after the time he went out of office. Should he have paid interest upon the same?'

"The aggregate sum so fixed by the county commissioners to be expended in any year for the compensation of such deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes, except court constables, shall not exceed for any county auditor's office, county treasurer's office, probate judge's office, county recorder's office, sheriff's office, or office of the clerk of the courts, an aggregate amount to be ascertained by computing thirty per cent. on the first two thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, forty per cent. on the next eight thousand dollars or fractional part thereof, and eighty-five per cent. on all over ten thousand dollars, of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September thirtieth next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum; provided, however, that if at any time any one of such officers require additional allowance in order to carry on the business of his office, said officer may make application to a judge of the court of common pleas, of the county wherein such officer was elected; and thereupon such judge shall hear said application and if, upon hearing the same said judge shall find that such necessity exists, he may allow such a sum of money as he deems necessary to pay the salary of such deputy, deputies, assistants, bookkeepers, clerks or other employes as may be required, and thereupon the board of county commissioners shall transfer from the general county fund, to such officers' fee fund, such sum of money as may be necessary to pay said salary or salaries."

It will be noted that in this section the aggregate sum to be fixed by the county commissioners for clerk hire in the different county offices is based upon a certain percentage "of the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected for the use of the county in any such office for official services during the year ending September 30th next preceding the time of fixing such aggregate sum." The amount of $1,726.33, to which you refer, was not collected in the probate judge's office for the use of the county last year, but was collected during the administration of your predecessor. It is true that this money did not find its way into the county treasury until last year, when it was paid into the same by him upon the finding of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, but it was, nevertheless, collected in the probate judge's office during the administration of your predecessor and cannot, therefore, in my opinion, be used as a basis for allowance by the county commissioners at this time.

You ask further whether or not your predecessor should have paid interest upon the amount of $1,726.33, found due the county by the state examiners. The bureau informs me that this amount was paid by your predecessor at the time the finding was made, and inasmuch as the examiners did not see fit to include any interest in their finding, I am inclined to look upon this question as closed.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VILLAGE OF JOHNSTOWN, OHIO. $6,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 13, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Johnstown, Ohio, in the sum of $6,000, for the purpose of purchasing equipment for and making improvements in the water and light plant of said village.

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the council of the village of Johnstown, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find that I am compelled to disapprove said issue of bonds specifically for the reason that the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds does not make provision for an annual levy of taxes to pay the interest on said bonds and to create a sinking fund to retire said bonds at maturity as required by the affirmative provision of section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

> "No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

I find a number of other objections in the proceedings of such a nature as to prevent my approval of this issue of bonds without further information obviating the manifest defects disclosed. However, inasmuch as I am required to disapprove this issue of bonds for the specific reason first above mentioned, it will not serve any useful purpose for me to discuss the other objections disclosed in this transcript of the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds.

The transcript submitted is herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—USE OF ROTARY FUND.

The rotary fund created by the last general assembly, as found in 107 O. L. 187, cannot be used for the purpose of paying the state's proportion of the cost and expense of a road improvement, but only for paying the cost of completing an improvement when taken over under section 1209 G. C. (107 O. L. 126).

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of October 31, 1918, to which you attach final resolution of the county commissioners of Highland county, pertaining to the improvement of the Hillsboro-Chillicothe road, Section C-1, I. C. H. No. 258, Highland county, and ask my approval of the same, in accordance with the provisions of section 1218 G. C.

This resolution is in all respects legal and correct in form and I might therefore be justified in endorsing my approval thereon, under said section 1218 G. C.; but there is a matter in connection therewith which in my opinion is so directly in violation of the statutes that I feel I should call attention to the same. Because of this irregularity I am not approving the resolution of the commissioners.

The following statement is appended to the resolution:

"To the Attorney-General:

I do hereby certify that there has been appropriated from the Rotary fund of the State Highway department of Ohio the sum of $40,130.98 to the credit of Highland county.

H. L. Hastings,
Chief Clerk, State Highway Department."

Dated October 24, 1918.

It will be seen that the State Highway department expects to use the sum of $40,130.98 from the rotary fund provided by the General Assembly, to take care of the portion of the cost and expense of the improvement to be borne by the state. I am of the opinion that said fund can not be used in this way.

In 107 O. L. 187 there is an act which was passed by the General Assembly "to make general appropriations." Section 5 of said act (p. 351) contains the following language:

"The term 'rotary fund' as used in this act means a fund set aside to enable a department or institution to carry on a function or an activity, self-sustaining in its nature, the receipts from which are to be used for the function or activity for which the rotary fund is established.

Money obtained from the function or activity for which a rotary fund is provided shall be turned into the treasury, and such monies so turned into the treasury between July 1, 1917, and July 30, 1919, both inclusive, are hereby appropriated for the purpose for which such rotary fund is herein established. * * *."

The legislature made provisions for a rotary fund in the following language (p. 217):

"Rotary Fund—To pay when necessary the federal government's share of any estimate due contractors on road improvement under the Shackleford-Bankhead act, and

To pay when necessary the cost of completing any road improvement when the contractor has defaulted or has been removed therefrom, $50,000."

From the provisions above quoted it will be noted that the rotary fund was created by the General Assembly for specific and definite purposes, viz:

(1) To pay in the first instance any estimate that might be due the contractors on a road improvement, for which the federal government would be liable after it had passed upon said estimate.

(2) To pay the cost of completing an improvement when the original contractor fails and the State Highway department takes the same over under the provisions of section 1209 G. C.

Of course under this last provision as soon as the state realizes from the contractor and his surety, the money is turned back into the rotary fund. But there is no provision for the State Highway Commissioner's using money from the rotary fund to pay the cost and expense of an improvement to be assumed by the state. The cost and expense to be borne by the state must be paid from the amount which goes to each county of the state under the provisions of section 1221 G. C., and not from the rotary fund.

On account of this irregularity, although it is not directly connected with the final resolution and therefore does not strictly come within the provisions of section 1218 G. C., I am returning the resolution to you, without my approval thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF BARBERTON CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT.—$36,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Barberton City School district in the sum of $36,000 for the erection and equipment of a school building in said school district.

An examination of the transcript of the proceedings relating to the above issue of bonds discloses that the same is an attempted issue of bonds of the Barberton City School district in the amount and for the purpose above stated, without a vote of the electors of the school district under the assumed authority of section 7629 General Code. The resolution providing for said issue of bonds was adopted at a regular meeting of the board of education by the vote of three members only of said board. Section 7629 contains the following provision:

> "The order to issue bonds shall be made only at a regular meeting of the board and by a vote of two-thirds of its full membership taken by yeas and nays and entered upon its journal."

The board of education of Barberton City School district consists of five members. Under the provisions of section 7629 above quoted, it is apparent that the affirmative vote of at least four members of the board of education was required to legally adopt the resolution providing for this issue of bonds, and that the vote of three members only was wholly ineffectual for that purpose.

It follows from this that said issue of bonds is invalid, and the same is herewith disapproved.

The transcript submitted is herewith returned.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNCIL OF VILLAGE CANNOT EMPLOY LEGAL COUNSEL TO DEFEND MARSHAL.

The council of a village is without power to employ legal counsel to defend the village marshal against a complaint for shooting with intent to kill, arising out of the performance by the marshal of his duties as a conservator of the peace and in the enforcement of the state law, or of an ordinance passed by the council in the exercise of the police power delegated to it by the state.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date and brief prepared by the solicitor of the village of Hanford and requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "In the proper discharge of his duties the marshal of the village fired upon a person who was resisting arrest. An affidavit was filed against the said marshal for shooting with intent to wound. The hearing on said affidavit was set for a day certain in the police court of the city of Columbus, where the complaint was pending. Meanwhile the council of the village unanimously adopted a resolution employing the person who at that time was acting under general employment as village solicitor to defend the marshal on said charge.
> The solicitor accepted the employment and successfully defended the marshal, so that the complaint against the latter was dismissed by the police court for lack of probable cause.

Was the employment of the solicitor by the council legal and may the funds of the village lawfully be applied to the discharge of the obligation thus attempted to be created?"

The opinion of Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, former Attorney-General, found at page 1461 of Volume II of the Report of the Attorney-General for the year 1914, contains a very complete discussion of the principles upon which the answer to this question must be predicated. It is true that Mr. Hogan did not have before him the exact facts of this case. He was considering the question as to whether or not judgments obtained against police officers in civil actions for false arrest growing out of their mistaken but bona fide conduct in the course of their official duties could lawfully be paid by the council of a municipal corporation. His answer was that such claims could not be paid.

In the present case the proceeding against the police officer was criminal, not civil; the complaint against the marshal was dismissed, and not found sufficient in law as in the cases considered by Mr. Hogan; and the action of council is limited to the exoneration of the officer from the expenses of his defense, and does not go so far as to embody the indirect assumption of civil liability for an act done by the officer.

All these considerations serve to distinguish the question now presented from the one considered by Mr. Hogan. However, the distinction which exists is shown by the authorities cited by Mr. Hogan to be without a legal difference in result; for many of the cases cited therein were cases in which the action of the municipal legislative authority was limited to exoneration of the officer from expenses incurred by him in defending cases; and some of them presented the exact situation which now arises, in that the council was attempting to employ legal counsel for the defense of the police officer.

The principle laid down in all these cases, which must be regarded as settled so far as authority is concerned though perhaps not definitely so in Ohio, is that the right of the legislative body of a municipal corporation to incur expense for the purpose of saving one of its officers harmless as against legal expenses incurred by him in defending his official conduct is limited to cases in which the official conduct called in question is of such character as to be representative of the municipality in its corporate or proprietary aspect. That is to say, a police officer, though appointed locally and perhaps constituting a part of the machinery of the local municipal government, does not represent the municipality as such when preserving the public peace and enforcing the criminal laws of the state by pursuing offenders against them for the purpose of arrest. In such undertakings he represents the state itself and not the municipality as a quasi corporation. Therefore, it is not a matter of municipal concern that the police officer should be saved harmless from expenses incurred by him in defending his acts as an agent of the state. The situation of the marshal under the statutes of the state brings out this distinction very clearly. His compensation for services in state cases is not paid by the village, though the council may, if it chooses, give him "additional compensation" which, presumably, is referable to the services which he renders to the village, as such, by way of enforcing its ordinances and the like (see section 4387 G. C., which at least attempts to set up by appropriate reference a schedule of fees for the services performed by marshals in state cases). The validity of this statute may be doubted, but it shows at least the dual character of the office of marshal and the relation of the village, as such, to the duties of that office. In short, the compensation of the marshal under the statute for enforcing the criminal laws of the state and preserving the public peace is that which comes to him by way of fees, if any. These fees are presumed to compensate him for all the risks involved in the proper performance of his official duty.

From all the foregoing it appears that we are driven to the conclusion that if the marshal in the transaction out of which the complaint against him arose was engaged in enforcing the state laws the village was without authority to employ legal counsel for his defense. The facts submitted to me do not show clearly whether or not this was the case. The resolution of council recites that the charge "arises out of an attempted arrest by said marshal * * * for disturbance of the peace and quiet of said village." If this recital is correct, it may be assumed that the marshal was attempting to make the arrest by virtue of a warrant drawn under a village ordinance; for there is no such public offense under the general criminal laws of the state as that described, while municipal corportions are authorized by sections 3664 et seq. of the General Code to provide by ordinance for the punishment of persons disturbing the good order and quiet of the corporation in certain ways. If this is the case, the general principle relied upon by Mr. Hogan and quoted by him with approval from Mechem on Public Officers, section 879, will have to be more carefully applied to the facts at hand. The principle is put in Mechem as follows:

> "It is well settled that the public, such as towns or cities, have the power to indemnify their officers against liability which they may incur in the bona fide discharge of their duties, and may * * appropriate * * moneys raised for general purposes, even though the result may show that the officers exceeded their legal authority. But the subject must be one concerning which the municipality has a duty to perform, an interest to protect or a right to defend, and in which it has a pecuniary or corporate interest.
> "Where, however, the subject matter is one in which the municipality has no interest and in reference to which it has no duty or authority; where it has no direction or control of the officer, is not responsible for his fidelity, gains nothing by his diligence and loses nothing by his want of care; where the duties are imposed specifically upon the officer by statute and the municipality has no duty to perform, no right to defend and no interest to protect, in such case the right to indemnify does not exist, and any attempt to do so, or any vote or contract to that effect will be void."

This principle still leaves the subject in some doubt. As stated, it would appear to require the concurrence of a pecuniary interest in the subject-matter involved in the officer's conduct with the existence of a more or less academic public interest. In the case at hand the municipality, as the source of the legislation which was being enforced by the officer, did have apparently some duty or authority in the premises. It did have direction and control over the officer, in that he was serving its process; it did gain by his diligence, in that the public need that gave rise to the adoption of the ordinance was a municipal need and was being subserved by his official conduct; and, conversely, it would have lost by his want of care because his failure to enforce the ordinance and to serve the processes of the village would have amounted to a public loss to the municipality. But the concern which the municipality has in the enforcement of its police regulations is in no sense corporate and proprietary; rather, such regulations, though adopted by the municipality, constitute an exercise of the police power of the state which is merely delegated to municipal councils in deference to the difference between conditions in incorporated communities and those in rural communities.

Thus, if the municipality had been sued civilly for any conduct arising out of the discharge by the marshal of his duty in enforcing the police ordinances of the municipality, the action would have been unsuccessful upon the well settled principle that a municipality is not liable for the conduct of its officers in the course of their official employment while representing it in its governmental capacity rather than in its proprietary capacity.

Of course, the analogy furnished by the rule as to municipal liability or non-liability for the acts of officers or agents may not be a trustworthy one; for the power to indemnify might exist independently of the question of municipal liability.

But the cases cited by Mr. Hogan in his exhaustive opinion seems to adopt a principle which, if not analogous to the one just stated, is at least parallel to it in reasoning and result; while some of them go so far as to deny the power to indemnify upon grounds which might apply even in case the expense or liability of the officer were incurred in the course of representing the municipality in the exercise of its proprietary functions. To this effect is Lunkenheimer vs. Comptroller et al., 23 Bull., 433.

On the whole, though the question is not free from doubt, I am impelled to the conclusion as a matter of law (though as the present case is circumstanced my sympathies are the other way) that the council of the village was without power to make the employment which it attempted to make, and that the treasurer can not be compelled to pay the claim based thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—VILLAGE—MAYOR CAN FILL VACANCIES.

Under section 4252 G. C. (103 O. L. 65) the mayor is authorized to fill a vacancy caused by death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer of a village, unless otherwise provided by law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 15, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of letter from Hon. Fred Gribbell, mayor of the village of Deshler, asking me for an opinion as to how a vacancy should be filled in the office of a village. I am addressing the opinion to you and will forward copy to the mayor.

Prior to the enactment of section 4252 G. C. in 103 O .L. 65, there was no section of the statute that provided for the filling of vacancies caused by the death, resignation, removal or disability of an officer in a village, as that section then read as follows:

> "Section 4252.—In case of death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer or director in any department of a city, unless otherwise provided by law, the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed, or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed."

This section provided how vacancies should be filled in such offices in a city.

The identical question was presented to one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, as disclosed by an opinion found in Volume II, Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, p. 2003. That opinion was to the effect that there was no authority to fill a vacancy in the office of village marshal, and further there was no authority to call a special election to fill such vacancy. In that opinion Mr. Hogan said that it was expected that the next legislature would cure this defect. Presumably following some suggestion along this line, the succeeding legislature, as shown in 103 O. L. 65, amended section 4252 G. C. to read as follows:

> "Section 4252.—In case of death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer or director in any department of any municipal corporation, unless otherwise provided by law, the mayor thereof shall fill the vacancy by appointment, and such appointment shall continue for the unexpired term and until a successor is duly appointed, or duly elected and qualified, or until such disability is removed."

True, section 4252 G. C. is found in Tit. XII, Div. 5, Subdiv. 2, Ch. 2, and under the heading "Mayor," subheading "Cities"; but as the provision already cared for vacancies arising in cities, there can be no question but that the amendment broadening the section to include vacancies "of any municipal corporation" was intended to cure the omission in the statute, and so provided for the filling of vacancies by the mayor in villages in the same manner as in cities.

It will be noted that the authorization for filling vacancy by mayor under section 4252 G. C. is further limited by the provision "unless otherwise provided by law." An examination of the statutes does not disclose any such provision.

It is therefore my opinion that section 4252 G. C., as amended, gives the authority to the mayor to fill the vacancy caused by death, resignation, removal or disability of any officer of the village.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE VILLAGE OF COAL GROVE, LAWRENCE COUNTY, OHIO.—$5,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 16, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

> In Re: Bonds of the village of Coal Grove, Lawrence county, Ohio, in the sum of $5,000 for the purpose of funding certain bonded indebtedness of said village.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the council of the village of Coal Grove, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and regret to say that I am compelled to disapprove said issue specifically for the reason that the resolution providing for said issue of bonds does not make any provision for annual tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to said bonds, as required by the provisions of section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

Calling your attention to another defect in the proceedings, I note that sections 3923 and 3924 G. C. provide that the bonds of a municipal corporation shall be first offered to the board of trustees of the sinking fund of a municipality and to the board of commisioners of the sinking fund of the school district of such municipality before such bonds are otherwise disposed of. These statutory provisions are consistent with those of section 1465-58 G. C. which authorize you to purchase only such municipal bonds as shall have first been offered to the board of trustees of the sinking fund and the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district. In this case it appears that these bonds were offered to the trustees of the village sinking fund and rejected. Thereupon the bonds were offered to the board of education of the village school district. This was erroneous. From the fact that the bonds were offered to the board of education of the village school district I infer that the school district has no board of commissioners of the sinking fund appointed by the common pleas court under the provisions of section 7614 G. C. Under such circumstances the board of trustees of the village sinking fund and not the board of education of the school district would have the right to act as the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district, and these bonds after they were offered to the board of trustees of the sinking fund in its capacity as such should have been offered to the board of trustees of the sinking fund of the village in its capacity as the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the village school district and should have been rejected in that capacity.

This last objection is one which might be corrected by further proceedings in line with the suggestions above made, but the objection first noted is one which affects the validity of the resolution providing for this issue of bonds and for this reason I have no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove the issue and advise that you should not purchase the same.

I am herewith returning the transcript.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VILLAGE OF MILTON, MIAMI COUNTY, OHIO.—$2,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 16, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Milton, Miami county, Ohio, in the sum of $2,500 for the purpose of procuring real estate and building for fire department purposes.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the village of Milton, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said village to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION—NOT AUTHORIZED TO MAKE CASH DISTRIBUTION OF UNEARNED PREMIUM SURPLUS.

The Industrial Commission, exercising the powers of the State Liability Board of Awards, is not authorized by rule or otherwise to make a cash distribution of an unearned premium surplus, but is authorized to distribute such unearned premium surplus shown by actuarial computations to be not necessary to the solvency of the state insurance fund nor needed to protect against contingencies by way of credits on future premium payments.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 16, 1918

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You submit the following request for my opinion:

> "The Industrial Commission desires to have your interpretation of the third paragraph of section 1465-54 G. C., as amended.
> As you will note in our July communication to subscribers, we made the statement that certain risks would participate in a refund to the amount of $336,452.46.
> Before authorizing this refund we should like to have your opinion as to whether we are within the law in doing so, calling your particular attention to Rule 16 found on page 9 of our insurance manual, which makes provision for such refunders resulting from the application of adjustment rates.
> For your convenience, I enclose herewith copy of our communication as well as the insurance manual containing rules effective July 1, 1917."

Rule 16 to which you refer provides as follows:

> "Disbursements will be made only to employes of subscribers to the state insurance fund who are injured in the course of their employment, or their dependents in the event death results from such injury within the period of two years from the date thereof; for refunders provided for in the last preceding rule; for refunders resulting from the application of adjustment rates; and for bonds of the United States, the State of Ohio, or any county, city, village or school district of the State of Ohio when purchased in accordance with the provisions of section 11 of the Act approved by the Governor, March 14, 1913."

Acting under this or other authority the commission proposes to refund to existing subscribers to the Ohio state insurance fund a part of a large surplus in the fund representing the amount of unearned premium over all losses, and indicating by actuarial computation that in aggregate the rates of premium fixed by the commission in past years have been too high, i. e., more than sufficient to carry the risk as developed by actual experience.

I regard the question thus presented as involving the interpretation of the statutes under which the Industrial Commission, as the State Liability Board of Awards, is operating. Any rules which the commission may have adopted must, therefore, be laid on one side as not pertinent to the question. If the formal rules already in force do not justify the measure which is contemplated and the statutory power is present, another rule may, of course, at any time be adopted by the commission for the purpose; but the validity of such a rule as well as that of any rule now in force which might seem to sanction what the commission proposes to do depends ultimately upon the law which governs the commission.

Therefore the real question is as to the power of the commission, by rule or otherwise, to make cash refunders to subscribers to the state insurance fund by which a part of the unearned premium representing surplus may be distributed among them. Obviously, therefore, as has been said, the rules of the commission as they now exist do not afford any basis upon which a conclusion may be reached.

These statements make it clear, then, that the Workmen's Compensation Law of Ohio must be searched for authority, express or implied, to take the action inquired about; for though it be premised that the scheme of workmen's compensation which exists in Ohio is a kind of insurance so that insurance principles must be regarded as applicable to its administration, yet the whole enterprise is the creature of statute, so that we must still look to the statute to see just what kind of insurance it is and just how in detail the general assembly of the state, which created the scheme, may have provided for its administration.

I quote the following sections of the Workmen's Compensation Act as bearing upon this general question:

> "Section 1465-53.—The state liability board of awards shall classify occupations with respect to their degree of hazard, and determine the risks of the different classes and fix the rates of premium of the risks of the same, based upon the total payroll and number of employes in each of said classes of occupation sufficiently large to provide an adequate fund for the compensation provided for in this act, and to maintain a state insurance fund from year to year."
> "Section 1465-54.—It shall be the duty of the industrial commission of Ohio, in the exercise of the powers and discretion conferred upon it in the preceding section, ultimately to fix and maintain, for each class of occupation, or industry, the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent state insurance fund and the creation and maintenance of a reasonable surplus, after the payment of legitimate claims for injury and death that it may authorize to be paid from the state insurance fund for the benefit of injured and the dependents of killed employes; and, in order that said object may be accomplished, said commission shall observe the following requirements in classifying occupations or industries and fixing the rates of premium for the risks of the same:
> 1. It shall keep an accurate account of the money paid in premiums by each of the several classes of occupations or industries, and the losses on account of injuries and death of employes thereof, and it shall also keep an account of the money received from each individual employer and the amount of losses incurred against the state insurance fund on account of injuries and death of the employes of such employer.

2. Ten per cent. of the money that has heretofore been paid into the state insurance fund and ten per cent. of all that may hereafter be paid into such fund shall be set aside for the creation of a surplus until such surplus shall amount to the sum of one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000.00) after which time the sum of five per cent of all the money paid into the state insurance fund shall be credited to such surplus fund, until such time as, in the judgment of said commission, such surplus shall be sufficiently large to guarantee a solvent state insurance fund.

3. On the first day of July, 1917, and annually thereafter, a revision of rates shall be made in accordance with the experience of said commission in the administration of the law as shown by the accounts kept as provided herein; and said commission shall adopt rules governing said rate revisions, the object of which shall be to make an equitable distribution of losses among the several classes of occupation or industry, which rules shall be general in their application."

"Section 1465-56.—The treasurer of state shall be the custodian of the state insurance fund and all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon vouchers authorized by the industrial commission of Ohio and signed by any two members of said commision; * * *."

"Section 1465-62.—Every employer mentioned in subdivision one of section thirteen hereof (section 1465-60 G. C.) shall contribute to the state insurance fund in proportion to the annual expenditure of money by such employer for the services of persons described in subdivision one of section fourteen hereof (section 1465-61 G. C.) the amount of such payments and the method of making the same to be determined as hereinafter provided."

Section 1465-69.—Except as hereinafter provided, every employer mentioned in subdivision two or (of) section 1465-60, General Code, shall, in the month of January, 1914, and semi-annually thereafter, pay into the state insurance fund the amount of premium determined and fixed by the industrial commission of Ohio for the employment or occupation of such employer the amount of which premium to be so paid by each such employer to be determined by the classifications, rules and rates made and published by said commission; and such employer shall semi-annually thereafter pay such further sum of money into the state insurance fund as may be ascertained to be due from him by applying the rules of said commission, * * *."

"Section 1465-72.—The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes of employers as have paid into said fund the premiums applicable to the classes to which they belong, who have been injured in the course of their employment, wheresoever such injuries have occurred, and which have not been purposely self-inflicted, or to their dependents in case death has ensued. * * *."

"Section 1465-89.—In addition to the compensation provided for herein, the industrial commission of Ohio shall disburse and pay from the state insurance fund, such amounts for medical, nurse and hospital services and medicine as it may deem proper, not, however, in any instance, to exceed the sum of two hundred dollars unless in unusual cases, * * *; and, in case death ensues from the injury, reasonable funeral expenses shall be disbursed and paid from the fund in an amount not to exceed the sum of one hundred and fifty dollars, and such commission shall have full power to adopt rules and regulations with respect to furnishing medical, nurse and hospital service and medicine to injured employes entitled thereto, and for the payment therefor."

While there may be other provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law which might bear remotely upon the question under consideration, the foregoing constitutes, I believe, a sufficient quotation of the provisions of the act which need to be considered in this connection.

Power to adopt rules governing various matters is conferred by specific enumeration throughout the above quoted sections. None of them, however, expressly authorizes the adoption of rules for the making of refunders of the kind now contemplated. The problem is to determine whether the power to make such rules or to authorize the refunders without formal action by rule may fairly be implied from the express provisions of the act or from the controlling principles of the law as a whole. In this connection I observe that section 1465-54 G. C., which was amended in 1917, formerly provided as follows:

"3. On the first day of July, 1914, and semi-annually thereafter, a readjustment of the rates shall be made for each of the several classes of occupation or industry which, in the judgment of the board, have developed an average loss ratio in accordance with the experience of the board in the administration of the law as shown by the accounts kept as provided herein.

"4. Should any such accounting show a balance remaining to the credit of any class of occupation or industry, after the above mentioned amounts have been credited to the surplus fund, and after the payment of all awards for injury or death lawfully chargeable against the same, the premium rate for such class shall be reduced; and, each individual member of such class, who has been a subscriber to the state insurance fund for a period of six months or longer prior to the time of such readjustment, and whose premium or premiums so paid to the fund exceeds the amount of the disbursements from the fund on account of injuries or death to his employes during such period, shall be entitled to a credit on the installment or installments of premium next due from him, the amount of which credit shall be such proportion of said balance as the amount of his prior paid premiums sustains to the whole amount of said premiums paid by the class to which he belongs since the last readjustment of rates."

These paragraphs of the section were in the place now occupied by sub-section 3 thereof as above quoted. So long as the section provided as it formerly did the answer to your question was plain. The commission certainly did not have the power under former sub-sections 3 and 4 of section 1465-54 to make a cash distribution of an unearned premium surplus, but in case any periodical accounting and readjustment of rates by actuarial computation should disclose the existence of such a balance it was the duty of the commision to reduce the rate for the class of subscribers represented in the surplus, and it became the right of each subscriber of six months' standing or longer to receive a credit on the installment or installments of premium next due from his representing his proportion of the balance.

I may interpolate here that if the calculations made in years prior to 1917 were correctly made and this section was complied with, I am unable to see how there can be any considerable surplus to distribute at the present time, unless it has accumulated within the past year or unless the calculations of a previous year had disclosed a surplus too large to be absorbed by credits on premiums under the previous law. However, I can not, of course, question the facts stated by the commission, and I am assuming that whether from revision of actuarial computations or otherwise, the most recent calculations of the commission have disclosed the state of affairs indicated by the action which is now proposed.

In case of doubt as to the meaning of a statute it is often true that legislative intent can be gathered with some accuracy from the history of the provision in question. In this instance we find that the legislature has stricken out the provision for distributing an unearned surplus by crediting the amount thereof on future premium payments and has substituted therefor the language which we find in the present act. Instead of the semi-annual process being called a "readjustment of rates" it is now called a "revision of rates"; otherwise the first clause of paragraph 3 of the amended section is substantially identical in purport with paragraph 3 of the section as formerly in force. Instead of the hard and fast rule for crediting balances remaining to the credit of any class of occupation or industry on future premiums by classes and in strict proportion to prior paid premiums, we have a direction to the commission to adopt rules "governing said rate revisions, the object of which shall be to make an equitable distribution of losses among the several classes of occupation or industry, which rules shall be general in their application."

Undoubtedly the amended section is broader and more elastic in its import than the old one was. For one thing, the new section does not give to the individual subscriber the absolute right to share in the refund in proportion to the premiums which he has paid in the past. Whatever his rights may be they result from the command that the distribution of losses shall be "equitable * * * among the several classes of occupation"; he is not mentioned by description as he was before. Moreover, under the old law the only subscribers entitled to participate in the distribution by credit on future premiums were those "whose premium or premiums so paid to the fund exceeds the amount of the disbursements from the fund on account of injuries or death to his employes during such period"; whereas, unless this requirement be involved in the rule that the distribution of losses shall be "equitable," the new section does not limit the right to participate in the rate revision with a view to making an equitable distribution of losses to those whose premiums paid in may have exceeded the losses incurred on account of injuries or death to their employes during the period of six months referred to in the old statute.

These and perhaps other evidences of intent show that the legislature meant to enlarge the power of the commission to deal with the subject of the revision or readjustment of rates. The question now is as to whether or not this enlargement of power went so far as to authorize the commission to distribute such a surplus by cash payments instead of by premium credits.

This question depends in turn upon the further question as to whether or not the specific provision of the former law, to the effect that premium adjustments should result in the distribution of surplus through premium credits, was in the legal sense a restriction upon the power which the commission would otherwise have had, or, on the other hand, a grant of power, so that the commission would have no power at all in the premises but for such provision. I do not mean to say that the question now under consideration can be fully answered by applying this test, but it will at least afford a serviceable background for the further investigation of the question at hand.

To get at the answer to the question last suggested, then, let us imagine for a moment that neither sub-paragraph 4 of section 1465-54 as it existed prior to 1917 nor the latter part of paragraph 3 of the same section as it now exists were in the law; what would be the power of the commission in the premises? With these subtractions we would have the following provisions upon which to base an answer to this question:

(1) The rates of premium are to be fixed so as to be "sufficiently large to provide an adequate fund for the compensation provided for in this act, and to maintain a state insurance fund from year to year." (Section 1465-53).

That is, in the strict sense, the state liability board of awards and the industrial commission as its successor is and at all times has been without power consciously to fix premium rates larger in amount than might be sufficient to attain these two objects.

(2) More particularly and with a view to the accomplishment of these purposes the commission must "ultimately fix and maintain, for each class of occupation, or industry the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent state insurance fund and the creation and maintenance of a reasonable surplus, after the payment of legitimate claims." (Section 1465-54—General provisions)

Here we have the same thing stated in another way—positively rather than negatively. It is the commission's express duty ultimately to fix and maintain the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent fund, etc. That is, the ultimate aim of the commision must be to get the rates down to the lowest possible level consistent with solvency and the maintenance of a reasonable surplus. The word "ultimately" is entitled to weight here; its meaning as given in the Standard Dictionary is:

"In the end; at last; finally."

That is, it denotes an object to be attained, as soon as possible to be sure, but in all likelihood not immediately; but rather at the end of a process of experimentation. Putting it in another way: the object of the discharge by the commission of its duties under section 1465-53 is to secure in time the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent state insurance fund, etc. When the legislature enacted this language it understood perfectly that state workmen's compensation insurance was a new venture and that the experience upon which actuarial computations might be based was lacking. The legislature understood perfectly well that the first premium rates established by the state liability board of awards must be in the very nature of the case more or less tentative. No one could say just what the proper rate for a given class of occupation measured by the criteria of solvency and the maintenance of a reasonable surplus might be; no one could even say at the outset what a reasonable surplus would be; it would take several years' experience to bring out the facts upon which the legislative command which fixed the policy of the law in this respect could be carried out. Therefore the legislature sensibly did not attempt to require anything like accuracy at the outset, but merely enjoined upon the state liability board of awards and its successor the duty of working toward a goal through a period of years.

This interpretation of the clause now under consideration is made very clear when other language of section 1465-54 is taken into account. For example, the last clause of the general part of the section says that "in order that said object may be accomplished, said commission shall observe the following requirements in classifying occupations or industries and fixing the rates of premium for the risks of the same." Here the law speaks of an object to be accomplished—and in the light of the earlier part of the section not immediately but ultimately; and the accomplishment of the object is to be worked out by observing certain requirements in classifying occupations and fixing rates of premium. In other words, the legislature makes very clear in this part of the statute the idea already disclosed in the earlier part of the section, namely, that in fixing premium rates and classifying occupations the commission shall have a definite object in view, an object not to be attained at once but ultimately—at the end of a sufficient number of repeated processes as may afford a groundwork of experience sufficient to enable the commission to formulate a judgment upon the required point.

Going on in section 1465-54 we find certain detailed directions to the commission which are to be observed "in order that" the "object," which is ultimately to fix and maintain * * * the lowest possible rates * * * "may be accomplished." These detailed directions appear in the remaining paragraphs of section 1465-54, as follows:

> (a) The commission is directed to keep an accurate account of premiums paid in by each of the several classes and by each individual employer, and also an account of the losses both by classes and by individual employers.
> (b) The commission is required to set aside ten per cent. of the premiums paid into the fund for the creation of a surplus until the surplus shall amount to one hundred thousand dollars, after which five per cent. of the money paid in is to be credited to the surplus until such time as in the judgment of the commission the surplus shall be sufficiently large to guarantee a solvent state insurance fund.

Here is a provision which looks to an ultimate goal, and a goal the attainment of which can not be foreseen. Indeed, the goal—the accumulation of a sufficiently large surplus to guarantee the solvency of the fund—is a thing the very existence of which can be predicated only upon experience through a series of years. The commission could have nothing at the outset upon which to base a judgment as to whether or not a given amount would constitute a reasonable surplus, sufficiently large to guarantee the solvency of the fund. Here is another thing which is to be "ultimately" arrived at.

> (c) An annual revision of rates, or—as the old law had it—a semi-annual readjustment is to be made.

This adjustment or revision was under the old law to be by classes. The new law is broader in this respect, but we are not interested in this aspect of the case. Both the old law and the new law required the semi-annual or annual process to be carried through "in accordance with the experience of the board in the administration of the law as shown by the accounts kept as provided herein." Here again is clearly expressed the idea that the ability of the commission to arrive at accurate results is to be expected to enhance from period to period as its experience under the law accumulates. Each revision or readjustment of rates is naturally expected to approach more closely to the ideal than its predecessor. Bear in mind that the revision of rates or the readjustment of rates—whichever it be called—is itself a means to an end, just as everything provided for in the sub-paragraphs of section 1465-54 is declared to be a means to an end, namely, the ultimate fixing and maintenance for each class of occupation of the lowest possible rates of premium consistent with the maintenance of a solvent state insurance fund and the creation and maintenance of a reasonable surplus. In other words, there is to be an annual or semi-annual changing of rates with a view ultimately to arriving at the lowest possible rates.

Now if we stop here and ask ourselves the question as to whether or not, in the absence of anything about distribution of what accumulated experience may demonstrate to be an unnecessary surplus, the state liability board of awards or the industrial commission is authorized to make such a distribution, it seems to me that we must answer this question in the negative. It will be remembered that we are now working upon a hypothesis that requires us to ignore both the provisions of the old law respecting the distribution of surpluses by premium credits and the admittedly broader provisions of the new law that authorizes the adoption of rules governing rate revisions with the object of making an equitable distribution of losses, etc. In other words, we are supposing for the time being that the law is perfectly silent in respect to the subject, and we are seeking for implications in one direction or another with respect to the question as to what the power of the board or commission would have been in such a state of the written law. We are doing this for the purpose of determining whether sub-section 4 of section 1465-54 was a grant of power on the one hand or a restriction upon the power which would otherwise exist on the other hand.

I say that the question last suggested would have to be answered negatively in the light of sections 1465-53 and 1465-54 as they would be without anything in them on the subject of refunding, for the following reasons:

These sections, which contain the entire law so far considered with respect to the functions of the commission in its rate-making capacity, deal solely with the functions of fixing rates of premium. They say that ultimately the lowest possible rates of premium shall be maintained. They therefore infer that while the experience upon which only an accurate judgment as to what rates may be the lowest possible rates is being accumulated rates may be fixed which shall not be the lowest possible rates. The legislature did not intend that the commission should err on the side of low rates at the beginning of the experience of the state under the law. On the other hand, it clearly intended that solvency and the creation of a reasonable surplus should be the first objects to be achieved; then, and after experience had demonstrated the bases for proper actuarial computations, there was to be, through a series of readjustments or revisions, an approach to an ultimate goal, which should be the lowest possible rates consistent with the maintenance of a condition of solvency and a reasonable surplus. The legislature might well have made provision for any unnecessary surplus that might be shown to have been accumulated by the perfected experience of the commission in the administration of the law. In point of fact it did do so by express provision in the old law, but we are now supposing that such provision is lacking. We are left with the question as to whether the legislature's silence, together with the express provision that there shall be an annual or semi-annual revision with the ultimate object of fixing the lowest possible rates, can be made the predicate of a successful claim of implied authority to refund a surplus accumulated during the period of experimentation. I base my conclusion that this could not be done not only upon the legislature's silence, but also upon the fact that the legislature has limited the commission's authority to the accomplishment through rate revisions of an ultimate goal.

Now, rates are fixed for the future. Other provisions of the law which I have quoted extensively and to which I do not need to refer again make this very clear. When the commission fixes a rate of premium it is determining what a subscriber to the fund must pay in order to obtain the protection which it affords for a period of time running in the future. This idea pervades the whole act. I can not give to the phrase "fix and maintain" any meaning other than that which these related provisions indicate, namely, the determination of a rate that shall be applied to the payroll of a given class of employes for a particular period of time in the future.

I am aware of the fact that an unearned premium might be said in a sense to belong equitably to him who has been required to pay it. This statement, however, must be taken with considerable reservation and is not strictly true in law. What the early subscribers to the fund were legally and equitably entitled to was no more than the fair exercise of judgment and discretion on the part of the commission in fixing premium rates based upon the then accumulated experience of the commission. If it could be shown that the commission had not exercised reasonable discretion, but had fixed exorbitant rates, a different question would be presented; but I take it and am therefore assuming that the commission did nothing of the kind but that the rates fixed by it for any semi-annual period in the past were such rates as then appeared to the commission, in the exercise of reasonable discretion based upon its then accumulated experience, to be the proper rates. I do not see how any equitable rights or legal rights could be predicated upon the payment of a premium so fixed, even though it should ultimately turn out after an experience of several years had afforded additional ground for more accurate actuarial computations that such premiums had been too high.

But, it may be asked, if no legal or equitable right in such unearned premium surplus belonged to the subscribers whose premium payments helped to create it, to whom does it belong? The answer to this question will be further elaborated in the course of this opinion. At the present time it is sufficient to say that whenever any premium is paid to the state industrial commission it thereby become a part of the state insurance fund, together with all accretions thereto caused by the profitable investment of such fund. In short, then, all moneys coming into the fund become a part of the fund, whether that fund be divided into reserve, surplus and capital or otherwise. The fund can be used for those purposes to which it is dedicated by the provisions of the law under which it was collected, and to those only. In this sense it is a "trust fund." The legislature of Ohio could not without violating this trust authorize the fund to be used in any manner inconsistent with the objects for which it was collected. It could not be used to enhance the general revenues of the state. It could not be used even to pay the necessary overhead expenses of administering the fund, for these by provisions of the law which have always been a part of the workmen's compensation act are a charge upon the general revenues of the state. But it could be used without violating anybody's legal or equitable rights in paying compensation claims, because this is the object for which it has been collected; and this statement so far as I am able to see applies just as well to the accumulated unearned premium surplus as to any other part of the fund. For example, A was a subscriber to the fund, but no longer is; he paid premiums in his proper classification greater in amount than was necessary to constitute his proper contribution to a solvent insurance fund and a reasonable surplus, as subsequently ascertained by the commision in the course of its rate revisions with a view to fixing ultimately the lowest possible rates of premium; yet A, who is no longer a member of the fund, could hardly be said to have a right to have any part of his contribution to the fund returned at such later date as at which this fact might appear; and if A has no equitable rights in the premises I am unable to see that B, who has continued to be a subscriber, has any greater equitable rights than A would have.

Now if these supposititious persons have no equitable rights, I am unable to see how the industrial commission can be said to have any power in the premises in the absence of express provision of statute and in the face of express provisions limiting its authority to the fixing and revision of rates with an ultimate goal in view. Therefore, I repeat my conclusion on this point, which is that so far as sections 1465-53 and 1465-54, without the last provision of the latter section either in its present form or in the form in which it existed prior to 1917, are concerned they do not in my opinion authorize the commission to make a cash distribution of the unearned premium surpluses.

I have not found any case strictly in point on this question, but I do feel that some light on it is shed by the decision and reasoning of the Court of Appeals of New York in Greeff vs. Equitable Life Assurance Society, 160 N. Y. 19; 46 L. R. A. 288. In that case the plaintiff, who was a member of a mutual life insurance company, filed a complaint against the company alleging its mutual character, setting up the contract of insurance by which he became a member of the company, asserting that the company had accumulated a large surplus which ought to have been distributed among the members, and praying for an order to compel the defendant to appropriate to plaintiff's policy its share of the surplus in the defendant's possession. The law of New York, under which the defendant company was organized and by which it was governed, provided, among other things, that annually or at other intervals such companies should have power "to ascertain * * * the proportion of surplus accruing to each policy from the date of the last to the date of the next succeeding premium payment, and to distribute the proportion found to be equitable either in cash, in reduction of premium, or in reversionary insurance, payable with the policy, and upon the same conditions as therein expressed at the next succeeding date of such payment." In holding that the plaintiff's complaint stated no cause of action against the defendant the court, per Martin, J., employed the following language:

> "It is to be observed that the agreement (embodied in the policy) was that the plaintiff should participate, not in the whole surplus, but in the distribution of the surplus, or in other words, in the surplus which, according to the defendant's methods and principles, was to be distributed. * * *
> * * * the complaint * * discloses that the defendant has never divided among its policy holders its entire surplus, but has * * * retained a portion thereof in its own hands. The purpose for which it was retained does not appear. It may have been to insure the defendant's continued solvency, * * * or because the fund so retained was dedicated to other classes of insurance, or to its annuity fund. Presumptively, it was for some proper and lawful purpose.
> It is manifest that by the terms of the plaintiff's policy the only right he acquired was to share in an equitable distribution of the accumulated surplus. Until a distribution was made by the officers or managers of the defendant, the plaintiff had no such title to any part of the surplus as would enable him to maintain an action at law for its recovery. We think the principles which control the disposition of the surplus earnings of a stock corporation are applicable here. In those cases it has often been held that until dividends have been declared a stockholder had no right of action at law to recover any part of the fund applicable to that purpose, and that when directors have exercised their discretion in regard thereto the courts will not interfere unless there is bad faith, or wilful neglect, or abuse of such discretion. * * *
> The learned appellate division, * * * held that as the fund remaining in the defendant's hands had been denominated by it as surplus, instead of a reserve fund, all the usual powers and authority of its directors and managers * * * were spent, and hence they were required, as matter of law, to distribute the entire amount among its policy holders. We are not disposed to agree with that conclusion. * * * In a sense, all the funds in the possession of a mutual insurance company, over and above its immediate and present liabilities, may be regarded as surplus, yet it is not for that reason understood as belonging to, or to be immediately distributed among, the policy holders, either by them or by the company. * *

> The word 'surplus,' like the word 'liabilities,' has acquired a special meaning in this branch of the insurance business. Under the provisions of this policy, it is plain that the surplus and the distributable surplus are regarded as two distinct and separate funds. The liabilities of a life insurance company are calculated upon rules based upon experience, which are dependent upon various contingencies. As applied in that class of insurance, the liabilities of a company do not represent the full amount of outstanding policies. So the word 'surplus' is used to designate the amount of funds in the hands of the company after deducting its liabilities, as ascertained by certain rules adopted by the insurance department for determining the value of each risk. Obviously, the word 'surplus' was * * * used in the defendant's charter or policy * * * to represent the amount which should remain after certain calculated liabilities were deducted. When that amount was ascertained, it became the duty of the officers of the defendant to determine the portion of such surplus which should be distributed and the portion which should be retained for the benefit and security of the company and its members."

There is more in the opinion that might be quoted, but enough has been taken from it to show that even under a statute which authorizes and perhaps requires a mutual life insurance company to make an equitable distribution of a surplus, no member—policy holder—has any direct equitable and proprietary interest in any specific part of the surplus until a decision to distribute it has been made by the governing authorities of the company.

We have before us a supposititious statute (for it will be remembered that we are dealing, not with the law as it is or has been, but with the law as it might be if certain provisions which have been and are in it were left out of it) which says nothing whatever about distributing surpluses, but in point of fact used the word "surplus" in a sense which shows that so far from being distributable it was intended to be held as a reserve for contingent losses.

The case also may be taken rather remotely as an index to the powers of the industrial commission as the administrator of the state insurance fund in Ohio. It will be remembered that the state insurance fund is not an insurance company, mutual or otherwise, and that the state liability board of awards or the industrial commission as its successor does not occupy the same position that the directors or trustees of any kind of an insurance company would occupy. On the contrary, they are public officers responsible primarily to the state and not to the subscribers to the state insurance fund. But even if they were the directors of a private corporation they would have no greater power to distribute the legally accumulated assets of the corporation among its members than the fundamental law of the corporation might by express provision or necessary implication give them. Therefore, the plaintiff in the case from which quotation has been made was obliged, and properly obliged, to predicate his theory for recovery upon the law which stated what distribution should be made.

Another thought may be stated here, though it may amount to a repetition of what has already been said: The state insurance fund does not constitute the capital stock of a private enterprise; it is public money in the custody of a public officer. Therefore, although the general principles of private corporation law might be sufficient to raise an implied power in the managers of a corporate fund to distribute the surplus above necessary working capital and contingent liabilities among the members of the corporation, who are in a sense the equitable owners of the fund (though as the case shows such principles could not have enough operation to give the members any absolute right to compel such distribution); yet such principles can have no application to determine the implied power of a public officer to deal with public money, even though such public money is devoted upon principles at least approximating those of the law of trusts to certain specified objects. In other words, the right to distribute the surplus of a mutual insurance corporation arises from the fact that it is a corporation, and not because it is in the insurance business. The principles governing such cases are the same as those governing all mutual corporations, whether insurance companies or not. But the state insurance fund and its subscribers are not a corporation (See: State vs. Standard Life Association, 38 O. S. 281).

Without discussing this phase of the case further I conclude, therefore, as I have already stated, that authority to distribute a surplus the existence of which has been determined in the manner which I have described must be predicated upon some positive provision of the Workmen's Compensation Law and can not be based upon any supposed general principles of equity.

We come, then, back to the statutes in their present form and fix our attention again upon section 1465-54 with the consciousness that nothing therein, down to the third paragraph at least, can be regarded as the source of the power in question. The third paragraph of the section, which it will be remembered supplanted two sub-paragraphs of the section in its former state and quite evidently was intended to create a more elastic state of the law on the point with which it deals, is, in full, as follows:

> "3. On the first day of July, 1917, and annually thereafter, a revision of rates shall be made in accordance with the experience of said commission in the administration of the law as shown by the accounts kept as provided herein; and said commission shall adopt rules governing said rate revisions, the object of which shall be to make an equitable distribution of losses among the several classes of occupation or industry, which rules shall be general in their application."

I call attention to the grammatical structure of this section, which on its face at least is free from any ambiguity. The commission is annually to revise rates of premium. This revision is to be made in accordance with the experience of the commission; that is. the experience of the commission is to be employed for the purpose of determining what the revised rate shall be, it being the grand object of the whole process as indicated by the first clause of section 1465-54 ultimately to arrive at the lowest possible rates of premium. The revision of rates is not to be, as it formerly was, governed by statutory rules, i. e., it is not to be made by classes exclusively and it is not to give rise to certain fixed rights on the part of subscribers as formerly. Instead, the revision shall be made in accordance with rules which the commission shall adopt to govern it. I stop here to observe that the authority of the commission to adopt rules herein conferred is, so far as the law in its present form is concerned, limited to such rules as may govern rate revisions. If the language "governing said rate revisions" were not here one might easily infer that the commission might adopt such rules as might achieve the object next mentioned in the statute, whether such rules were confined strictly to the subject of rate revision or not. But the phrase just mentioned is in the statute, and I can give it effect only as a limitation, for it has that necessary effect both grammatically and logically.

The section now goes on to say that the object of the rules shall be to "make an equitable distribution of losses among the several classes of occupation or industry." Just what this means I do not feel able to say, except that it can not logically mean anything more than that the equitable distribution which shall be the object of the rule is a distribution of losses—not moneys—in the state insurance fund, and that it is such distribution of losses as can be effected through rate revision and that only. Unless, then, the process of rate revision naturally and in and of itself results in disbursement from the state insurance fund, I can not see that anything can be claimed in favor of the power under consideration from this part of the section.

I am aware of the fact that formerly a distribution of the surplus was provided for upon a hard and fast basis; so that it can with great show of reason be argued that the legislature must have intended in doing away with these hard and fast rules to authorize a distribution of the unearned surplus upon any basis that might appear to be equitable. Here is one source of an implication—not an expression—in favor of the existence of the power. Another like implication may be drawn from the fact that the computations necessary to revise the rates might show, and in this instance have shown, the existence of the unneeded surplus which had perhaps been theretofore unsuspected. In other words, the mathematical processes necessary in order to determine the basis of rate revisions disclose the existence of the unearned premium surplus, partial distribution of which is deemed advisable. Therefore it might be argued that a rule providing for the distribution of such surplus would be a rule governing a rate revision because it would be a rule disposing of a surplus disclosed by the rate revision. If an implication in favor of the power to base a rule on this subject arises here, however, it must be conceded that it is very remote.

These implications, if they may be called such, are opposed by considerations already alluded to. The word "revision" in its natural and ordinary meaning is defined in the Standard Dictionary as follows:

> "The act * * * of revising; examination or re-examination with correction or change."

To revise rates, therefore, is to re-examine the rates as they exist in the light of new experience with a view to changing them when experience shows that they are incorrect. The rates for fixed past premium paying periods have expended their force. The thing that is done when a rate is revised is to change the rate for the next premium paying period so as to accord with correct principles. A premium rate is merely a statement of what an employer is required to pay, based on his total payroll, for insurance for a future period, as I have said. When the payment has been made the rate has served its purpose. I do not see that it can be said to be subject to revision in any proper sense.

However, I recognize the existence of some argument tending to find an implication from which the power to do the thing contemplated can be drawn.

I now proceed to the examination of further provisions of the act with a view to ascertaining whether or not such implications, if they are valid, are strengthened or weakened by anything else that appears in the law. Without quoting them for the moment I now refer the commission to sections 1465-55, 1465-56, 1465-58 and 1465-72, all of which deal in one way or another with the authority of the commission, as the state liability board of awards, to "disburse" the state insurance fund. I propose to look at these sections now with the following questions in mind:

(1) What is the state insurance fund? Is an unearned premium surplus a part of such fund?

(2) What does the word "disburse" mean as used in the law?

(3) Has the industrial commission authority to make any "disbursements", under favor of a rule or otherwise, for which the law does not expressly provide?

I think it is rather clear, as I have already intimated, that the state insurance fund includes all the money which has been paid into that fund by way of premiums or otherwise. The fact that actuarial computations may show a part of that fund to be in such state as that if it were the funds of a private corporation it would be proper to distribute it as dividends does not in any way, legally or equitably, sever it from the state insurance fund and make it anything but a part of that fund. Indeed, if such undivided surplus is not a part of the state insurance fund it does not belong in the custody of the treasurer of state, for his responsibility is that of "custodian of the state insurance fund" and he has no right to hold moneys that do not constitute a part of that fund. It is clear, therefore, that for the purposes of the act the phrase "state insurance fund" can mean but one thing, viz: the moneys in the custody of the treasurer of state which have come to him by way of premium payments or by way of interest on investments of the principal fund.

The meaning of the word "disbursement" is made rather clear by section 1465-56, which provides that "all disbursements therefrom shall be paid by him upon vouchers authorized by the industrial commission of Ohio and signed by any two members of said commission * * *." It is apparent from this that the word is used in its natural and ordinary sense, as a paying out by check or voucher. It is not equivalent to the word "distribution," which may be on the credit basis. In other words, that is not a "disbursement" which does not result in an order to the treasurer of state to pay out moneys in the state insurance fund.

We come therefore to the third and most vital of the three questions last suggested. As bearing upon this question I find the following statutory phraseology:

> Section 1465-72.—"The state liability board of awards shall disburse the state insurance fund to such employes," etc.
> Section 1465-58.—"The treasurer of state shall honor and pay all vouchers drawn on the state insurance fund for the payment of such bonds, * * *."
> Section 1465-55.—"The state liability board of awards shall adopt rules and regulations with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of the state insurance fund; one of which rules shall provide that in the event the amount of premiums collected from any employer at the beginning of any period * * * is ascertained * * * by using the estimated expenditure of wages * * * as a basis, that an adjustment of the amount of such premium shall be made at the end of each six months' period and the actual amount of such premium shall be determined in accordance with the amount of the actual expenditure of wages * * *; and, in the event such wage expenditure for said period is less than the amount on which such estimated premium was collected, then such employer shall be entitled to receive a refunder from the state insurance fund * * * or to have the amount of such difference credited on succeeding premium payments at his option."

Here are three classes of disbursements expressly authorized by law—indeed they are commanded by law in a sense. Looking at the subject from the viewpoint of the treasurer of the state, who is the custodian of the fund and in a sense the disbursing officer thereof, he is authorized thereby to honor vouchers for the payment of compensation claims, etc., for the purchase of bonds, and for the making of refunders when premium amounts have been calculated on estimated payrolls and it subsequently develops that the actual payroll was less than that estimated. If this were all there would be no doubt in my mind that the subject-matter of disbursements, having been fully dealt with in the law, is one which would be withdrawn thereby from the power of the industrial commission. That is to say, the general principle of law applicable to the subject of dealing with public moneys is that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of others; so that certain disbursements being authorized, others not mentioned are impliedly forbidden. Putting it in still another way: the question of disbursement, involving as it does the paying out of moneys essentially public though charged with a particular trust, is one of power.

But on the other hand we have the declaration of section 1465-55 that the state liability board of awards shall adopt rules and regulations with respect to the subject of disbursement. The section provides that one of the rules shall deal with the subject of disbursements by way of refunder of excess premiums collected on the basis of estimated payrolls, etc., from which it might be argued that another of such rules might deal with the subject of disbursements by way of refunder in the distribution of unearned premium surpluses. The question which must be solved here is involved in some doubt; yet on the whole I am of the opinion that the authority to make rules with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement is not equivalent to authority to provide for other collections and other disbursements than those specifically authorized by law. For example, one of the bases of the premium is the payroll (section 1465-53, supra); it could not be claimed that the authority to adopt rules and regulations with respect to the "collection" of the state insurance fund granted in section 1465-55 is broad enough to enable the commission to reject the payroll as a proper basis for the calculation of premiums and to substitute some other criterion in place thereof. In other words, it seems to me that the authority to adopt rules and regulations conferred by section 1465-55 is limited to dealing with the mode or manner in which authorized collections shall be made. So also with the subject of disbursements. The commission may regulate the manner of disbursement, but it seems to me that it is without power to provide by rule for a disbursement which the law does not specifically authorize.

Whatever implication there is, then, arising out of the manner in which the related statutes deal with the subject of disbursements tends at least to neutralize, if not entirely to overthrow, the slight implications which can be discerned in the law in the direction of authorizing a cash distribution of the unearned premium surplus in the state insurance fund, which would be pro tanto a "disbursement" of the state insurance fund. Short of making a disbursement, i. e., ordering money to be paid out of the fund, I am clearly of the opinion that the broad and elastic provisions of present sub-paragraph 3 of section 1465-54 do authorize the commission to distribute such a surplus. That is to say, the commision may make the distribution by reducing premium rates or by crediting the amount of the distribution on premium payments. This it can do because such action would not go beyond the fair boundaries of a rule governing a rate revision and because, secondly, such action would not involve any disbursement of the state insurance fund already in the custody of the treasurer of state, the disbursing officer.

I find myself in full sympathy with the policy and purpose of the commission in its desire to make a partial cash distribution of the surplus in question. I think I realize fully the substantial advantages by way of assisting in the enforcement of the safety measures which the industrial commission is also required by law to administer which will accrue through making such a cash refunder and will probably not, in like degree at least, accrue from making a distribution in any other way. Nevertheless, as the foregoing discussion has disclosed, I can not bring myself to the conclusion that the Workmen's Compensation Law as framed authorizes such refunders to be made.

I therefore advise the commission that under the law as it now is the commission is without authority to order the treasurer of state to pay out of the state insurance fund any money in his custody by way of refunder to subscribers of their respective shares of a distributable unearned premium surplus in such fund; but I am further of the opinion that the power of the commission is broad enough to authorize it to distribute such surplus indirectly by allowing credits on future premium payments of such subscribers.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY RECORDER—SOLDIER'S DISCHARGE—WHAT "SOLDIER" INCLUDES—PERSON "DISCHARGED FROM DRAFT" NOT INCLUDED.

1.—The endorsements required by sections 2758 and 2771 G. C. should be placed on a soldier's discharge, the same as upon a deed, mortgage or other instrument of writing.

2.—The term "soldier" as used in section 2770 G. C. includes sailors, marines and aviators, as well as those persons connected strictly with the land forces of the army. It also includes army nurses, but not those persons generally termed Red Cross nurses.

3.—A person "discharged from the draft" does not come within the term "soldier," as used in section 2770 G. C.

4.—The county recorder must index the record of the discharge as provided in section 2770 G. C. He is not entitled to charge an index fee for such services.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 19, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication in which you submit the following questions for my opinion:

> "1. Are the endorsements required to be made by sections 2758 and 2771 G. C. necessary on the soldier's discharge mentioned in section 2770 of the General Code?
> 2. Does the term 'soldier' as used in section 2770 G. C. apply to sailors, marines, aviators, army nurses, or any person who has been regularly inducted into some branch of the military service which issues a discharge at the termination thereof?
> 3. Is the discharge known as 'discharge from the draft' such a discharge as is contemplated by section 2770 G. C. and subject to record if presented to county recorders?
> 4. Is the record thus made required to be indexed and can the county recorder charge an index fee or does the fee for recording as mentioned in section 2779 G. C. cover all the charge that the recorder can make to the soldier, unless, of course, he asks for certified copy?"

Section 2770 G. C., upon which your questions are mainly based, is as follows:

> "Section 2770.—Upon request of any discharged soldier and presentation of his discharge, the county recorder shall record such discharge in a book to be furnished by the county commissioners for that purpose. Such record, or a certified copy thereof, shall be received in evidence in all cases where the original discharge would be received."

Under this section, whenever a discharged soldier presents his discharge it becomes the duty of the county recorder to record the same.

Your first question is as to whether the county recorder is under obligation to make the endorsements provided in sections 2758 and 2771 G. C.

Section 2771 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Upon the presentation of any instrument of writing for filing or record, the recorder shall indorse thereon the fee charged by him for filing or recording such instrument and also enter such fee upon the margin of the folio upon which the filing or recording of such instrument is entered."

This section is broad and inclusive in its terms, providing that the recorder shall endorse thereon certain things, "upon the presentation of any instrument of writing for filing or record." I believe this language is broad enough to include the provisions of section 2770 G. C., and that the county recorder should make the endorsements provided in section 2771.

Section 2758 G. C. provides in part as follows:

> "Upon the presentation of a deed or other instrument of writing for record, the county recorder shall indorse thereon the date and the precise time of day of its presentation, and a file number. * * * When a deed or other instrument is recorded, the recorder shall indorse thereon the time when recorded, and the number or letter and page or pages of the book in which it is recorded."

This language is broad also, in that it provides: "Upon the presentation of a deed or other instrument of writing for record." The discharge of a soldier comes within this language inasmuch as it is presented for record.

Of course the particular object which the legislature had in mind in the first part of section 2758 would not obtain to the discharge of a soldier. This provision evidently was made with the purpose of definitely establishing the time at which the title to property, either by deed or mortgage, passes from one party to another. The latter part of this section, above quoted, would be as necessary in the case of a discharge as in the case of a deed or mortgage. Hence it is my view that while the first part of this section does not so strictly apply to a discharge as to a deed or mortgage, yet since the language is broad and inclusive, a county recorder should strictly follow the provisions of this section.

Your second question has to do with the construction to be placed upon the term "soldier." as found in section 2770 G. C., as to whether it could be made to apply to sailors, marines, aviators or army nurses. This term is used in different ways and with various meanings.

The Century Dictionary defines a soldier as follows:

> "(a) A person in military service. One whose business is warfare, as opposed to a civilian. (b) One who serves in the land forces, as opposed to one serving at sea."

Webster gives the following definition:

> "One who is engaged in military service as an officer or private; one who serves in the army; one of an organized body of combatants."

The Standard Dictionary defines the term in this way:

> "A person engaged in military service; a member of an army or organized military body. Specifically (1) a private in a military body, as distinguished from a commissioned officer. (2) One employed in military service on land, as distinguished from one who serves at sea; as soldiers and sailors."

From the above definitions it is readily seen that this term may be used in two ways—general and special.

When we consider the intent and purpose of section 2770 G. C., it would seem that the term "soldier" therein is used in its broad and general sense; that is in reference to a person in the military service or one whose business is warfare, as opposed to a civilian. Hence "soldier" in my opinion embodies not only those serving in the land forces of the army, but sailors, marines and aviators as well.

The question as to whether said term also includes army nurses is more difficult to determine. However, it is my view that said term includes a nurse that is employed by the military authorities and who forms a part of the organized body which is engaged in warfare. But I do not believe that it includes Red Cross nurses.

Section 9373 of the United States Revised Statutes provides among other things as follows:

> "The production of the honorable discharge of a deceased man shall be sufficient authority for the superintendent of any cemetery to permit the interment."

This section also provides:

> "Army nurses honorably discharged from their services as such may be buried in any national cemetery; and if in a destitute condition, free of cost."

Section 9070 of the United States Revised Statutes provides for pensions, under certain conditions, to those who were honorably relieved from service. Of course this section applies merely to the War of the Rebellion.

From these two sections it will be seen that the discharge of an army nurse might be as valuable to her in certain instances as is a soldier's discharge to him. Therefore it would be as essential to have a record of this instrument, in case of its being lost, as to have one of the discharge of a soldier. So that using the term "soldier" in its very broad sense, as found in section 2770 G. C., and keeping in mind the purpose and intent of the legislature in enacting the same, it is my opinion that said term includes what are strictly called army nurses.

On January 5, 1905 Congress passed an act providing for the incorporation and internal government of what is known as "The American National Red Cross." This act is embodied in sections 7697 to 7704 inc. of the United States Statutes.

On April 24, 1912 Congress passed an act which makes provisions enabling the President to use the persons in the American National Red Cross in times of war or when war is imminent, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. When accepted by the President of the United States, the nurses shall be transported and subsisted at the cost and charge of the United States "as civilian employes employed with the said forces."

It will be noted that the Red Cross nurses do not become a real part and parcel of the army but are treated as civilians, notwithstanding they are granted many privileges and perform most valuable services to the army. Hence they can not be brought within the provisions of section 2770 G. C.

Your third question is as to whether a person "discharged from the draft" comes under the provisions of section 2770 G. C. I think not. This question is rather difficult to understand, but upon inquiry I find that it has to do with those persons who have never been accepted in the service of the United States but have been discharged from the obligations of the draft owing to the fact that they are aliens or alien enemies, or on account of physical unfitness or dependency and the like. These persons have never been inducted into the army and therefore never became soldiers.

In order for any one to come within the term "soldier", as found in section 2770, it is my opinion that he has to take an oath and be inducted into the service of the United States. He then becomes a part and parcel of the army and from that time on is a soldier. But prior to the time of his induction into the army he can not in any sense be considered a soldier, although he might be subject to a future draft. So I would say that the "discharge from the draft" which a person receives on account of being an alien, alien enemy, or on account of physical unfitness or dependency, etc., does not come within the provisions of section 2770 G. C.

Your last question pertains to indexing the discharges, as to whether the recorder is entitled to a fee for indexing the same, or whether the fee provided in section 2779 G. C. covers the entire cost.

In order to understand section 2779 G. C., it will be necessary for us to also note the provisions of section 2778. These two sections read as follows:

> "Section 2778.—For the services hereinafter specified, the recorder shall charge and collect the fees provided in this and the next following section. For recording mortgage, deed of conveyance, power of attorney or other instruments of writing, twelve cents for each hundred words actually written, typewritten or printed on the records and for indexing it, five cents for each grantor and each grantee therein; for certifying copy from the record, twelve cents for each hundred words. The fees in this section provided shall be paid upon the presentation of the respective instruments for record upon the application for any certified copy of the record.
> Section 2779.—For recording assignments or satisfaction of mortgage or discharge of a soldier, twenty-five cents; for each search of the record, without copy, fifteen cents; for recording any plat not exceeding six lines, one dollar; and for each additional line, ten cents."

Section 2778 G. C. provides a fee not only for recording a mortgage, deed or other instrument of writing, but also for indexing it; that is, five cents for each grantor and grantee therein named. But no provision is made in section 2779 G. C. for a fee to be charged for indexing the discharge of a soldier. Hence it is my opinion that the recorder can not charge for indexing the discharge of a soldier, and that twenty-five cents was intended by the legislature to cover the entire cost to a soldier presenting his discharge for record.

You also ask whether the recorder is obligated to index the discharge. I think he is. Section 2764 G. C. provides:

"Section 2764.—At the beginning of each day's business the recorder shall make and keep up general alphabetical indexes, direct and reverse, of all the names of both parties to all instruments theretofore received for record by him. * * *"

That is, he must make an index of all the names of all instrumentss received for record by him. This language is broad enough to include the indexing of the discharge of a soldier. I also think section 2770 G. C. is broad enough to cast this duty upon the county recorder. The recording of an instrument is of but little use or value unless the record can readily be found. It is well known that without an index it is very difficult, indeed almost impossible, to find the record of an instrument where many instruments are recorded in the same book. Hence the duty of the county recorder to index the instrument is inferred from the duty placed upon him to record the same.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WAYNE COUNTY, OHIO.—$125,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 21, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In Re: Bonds of Wayne county, Ohio, in the sum of $125,500, in anticipation of the collection of taxes and assessments to pay the respective shares of said county, of Chester and Plain townships, and of the owners of benefited property assessed, of the cost and expense of the construction and improvement of I. C .H. No. 141, section A.

GENTLEMEN:—I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Wayne county, Ohio, and of other officers, relating to the above issue of bonds and find same to be in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county .

The bond form submitted is not entirely satisfactory to me and I am therefore holding said transcript for the preparation of proper bond form.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF ALLEN COUNTY, OHIO.—$12,480.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Allen county, Ohio, in the sum of $12,480.00, for the purpose of creating a fund for the payment of the cost of compensation, damages and expenses of the improvement of seven certain ditches.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the commissioners of Allen county in the improvement of the David Aumstutz ditch No. 571, the Henry W. Ruhlen ditch No. 572, the W. E. Boughan ditch No. 575, the W. H. Nungester ditch No. 576, the A. C. Harruff ditch No. 577, the J. L. Cochrun ditch No. 578 and the Chas. J. Gossard ditch No. 581, and in the issuance of bonds to pay the cost of compensation, damages and expenses thereof issued in anticipation of assessments levied therefor, and beg to advise that I am of the opinion that the said bonds when issued will constitute valid and binding legal obligations of Allen county, Ohio, payable in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form has been submitted to me for examination.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF EDEN TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT.—$20,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Eden Township Rural School district, in the sum of $20,000, for the purpose of furnishing and equipping centralized school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Eden Township Rural School district, Wyandot county, Ohio, relating to said bond issue, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said school district, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue was submitted with the transcript, and I am therefore holding said transcript until proper bond form is submitted and approved.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE COVERING LOT NO. EIGHTY-FOUR OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lot of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

> Being lot No. eighty-four (84) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid, and a special assessment for Ridgview road improvement amounting to forty cents and two cents interest.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on November 20 ,1918, a good title in Frances G. Murrell, to the premises hereinbefore described.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE COVERING LOT NO. SIXTY-THREE OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1918

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lot of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and State of Ohio, and described as follows:

> Being lot No. sixty-three (63) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

Said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which are undetermined and unpaid, and a special assessment for Ridgview road improvement amounting to forty cents and two cents interest.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract disclosed on October 15, 1918, a good title in Samuel T. Legg, W. A. Legg, J. N. Legg, Mary Alice Slyh and Myrtle Howard.

I will call attention to two irregularities which could be technically considered as defects in the title to this lot:

(1) The lot was transferred to Minnie Legg by Daniel W. Brown, trustee, on October 17, 1893. From an affidavit filed with the county recorder of Franklin county for record, it develops that said Minnie Legg died intestate on the 7th day of January, 1894, and that no administration was ever had upon her estate. Said lot descended to Samuel T. Legg, W. A. Legg, J. N. Legg, Mary Alice Slyh and Rena Ortman. This affidavit further states that said Minnie Legg was never married and left no debts of any kind. The date of her death being in the year 1894, I feel justified in passing favorably upon this abstract, as the question of claims against her estate could hardly arise at this late date.

(2) A second affidavit is attached to this abstract, which shows that Rena Ortman, one of the parties to whom this lot descended, died intestate on August 21, 1918, and that no administration has been had upon her estate, nor is there any administration being contemplated. The affidavit shows that Myrtle Howard is the only heir at law of said Rena Ortman and that Rena Ortman died leaving no debts excepting those of her last illness and funeral expenses, which have since been paid in full, and that she died seized of real estate unencumbered, to the value of $3,000.00, in addition to her interest in the lot in question.

This raises a more serious question than the one referred to above, because Rena Ortman has died recently; but inasmuch as the value of this lot is not great and the affidavit sets forth there are no debts remaining unpaid and that she died seized of real estate valued at $3,000.00 and unencumbered, I feel inclined to pass favorably upon the abstract and not put said Myrtle Howard to the expense and trouble of administering upon the estate of her deceased mother.

The principle is well established, as I held in another opinion to you, that the real estate of Rena Ortman would be liable for debts in the inverse order in which it is sold. Inasmuch as this lot is the first part of her real estate to be sold and hence the real estate valued at $3,000.00 would first be held for any claims that might arise against said Rena Ortman, it is my view that the interest of said Rena Ortman in this particular lot being liable for claims is so slight that it ought in this case to be overlooked.

However, I am passing favorably upon the abstract, notwithstanding the two irregularities above set out.

The two affidavits attached to the abstract have not been recorded and I suggest that this be done and the affidavits reattached to the abstract and made a permanent part thereof.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CITIZENSHIP—STATUS OF AMERICAN WOMAN MARRYING FOREIGNER.

The status of an American woman who marries a foreigner is controlled by the act of March 2, 1907, Chap. 2534, (United States Compiled Statutes, 1916, Volume 4, p. 4833) and under its provisions she takes the nationality of her husband.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1918.

State Liquor Licensing Board, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter requesting opinion upon an inquiry from the Stark County Liquor Licensing board. It appears that Mrs. S. is a licensee under the liquor laws of Ohio, by transfer of license from her husband, Rudolph S., who was an American citizen holding a liquor license and who died. It appears further the present licensee, Mrs. S., has now married an unnaturalized person by the name of W. The question presented is, was Mrs. S., the licensee, divested of her citizenship by her marriage to an unnaturalized man?

Article XV, section 9 of the Ohio Constitution provides for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors and for the passage of license laws by the legislature. This section among other things specifically states that license to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted when a person, who at the time of making application therefor, is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character.

Section 1261-34 G. C., which was section 19 of the act passed by the legislature in pursuance of the constitutional provision for license to traffic in intoxicating liquors, contains among other matters the constitutional provision that license shall not be granted to a person who is not a citizen of the United States or who is not of good moral character.

The common law doctrine was that no person by an act of his own, without the consent of the government, could put off his allegiance and become an alien, and prior to the passage of the act of February 10, 1855, marriage had no effect upon the citizenship of a woman.

Following the British act of 1844, Congress passed a law (1855) under which any woman capable of naturalization under our laws, and who is married to a citizen of the United States, was deemed to be a citizen and as said by the Supreme Court in Kelley vs. Owen, 7 Wall. 496, the object of the act was to allow the citizenship of the wife "to follow that of her husband without the necessity of any application for naturalization on her part." While the federal statute had provided for naturalization by marriage, the legislation did not touch upon expatriation by marriage.

Under the facts in the present case Mrs. S. at the time of the death of her husband was a citizen of the United States and she would still remain so unless her citizenship was lost by her marriage with an unnaturalized resident alien.

In Mackenzie vs. Hare, et al., 134 Pac. 714 (1913) will be found an illuminating decision on the question under consideration. As stated by Shaw, J., at p. 714:

> "(1) The statute of persons as citizens or aliens, respectively, is controlled entirely by the Constitution of the United States and the acts of Congress passed in pursuance thereof. We must look solely to them to ascertain whether or not the plaintiff is a citizen and, as such, a voter entitled to registration.
> (2) And in determining their meaning and effect the state courts are bound by the interpretation put upon them by the courts of the United States.
> (3) Prior to any legislation on the subject by Congress, there was some uncertainty and conflict of authority concerning the right of expatriation. The question first arose in 1795, in Talbot vs. Janson, 3 U. S. (3 Dall.) 133, 162, 1 L. Ed. 540, where Iredell, J., discusses it at length, stating his conclusion to be that a citizen could not denationalize himself without the consent of his government. The other justices expressed no opinion on the point. Similar views were stated in Shanks vs. Dupont (1830) 3 Pet. 246, 7 L. Ed. 666; Inglis vs. Sailors' Snug Harbour (1830) 3 Pet. 101, 125, 7 L. Ed. 617, and in United States vs. Gillies (1815) Pet .C. C. 161, Fed. Cases No. 15,206. In Shanks vs. Dupont, the court said, per Story, J.: 'The general doctrine is that no person can, by any act of their own, without the consent of the government, put off their allegiance, and become aliens.' And on this ground it was held that the marriage of a woman citizen with an alien did not change her allegiance to the United States. There was at that time no legislation permitting expatriation. In Stoughton vs. Taylor, 2 Paine C. C. 661, Fed. Cas. No. 7,558, it is said that the right of expatriation is fundamental and inherent. To the same effect, see Alsberry vs. Hawkins, 39 Ky. (1 Dana) 178, 33 Am. Dec. 546. Other state courts were of the same opinion. The denial of the right of voluntary expatriation was somewhat inconsistent with the laws of the United States providing for the naturalization of foreigners, the first of which was enacted in 1779. Act March 26, 1790, c. 3, 1 Stat. 103. The question was practically set at rest by the act of July 27, 1868. 15 Stat. 223, c. 249; Rev. Stat. U. S. section 1999 (U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1269). The preamble thereof declares that the right of expatriation is a natural and inherent right of all people. The body of the act declares further that any decision of any officer of the government denying, restricting, or impairing the right of expatriation is 'inconsistent with the fundamental principles of this government.' This language seems to be but little more than a legislative declaration of national policy. But it clearly is operative in this, that it gives the consent of the national government to the expatriation of any citizen by his or her voluntary act. If such consent of the nation is essential to a valid expatriation, this law is evidence thereof. The absolute right of expatriation is now recognized as the settled doctrine of this country. Browne vs. Dexter, 66 Cal. 40, 4 Pac. 913; Kane vs. McCarthy, 63 N. C. 302; Burton vs. Burton, *40 N. Y. 359; 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 271; Kelly vs. Owen, 74 U. S. (7 Wall.) 496, 19 L. Ed. 283; in re: Look Tin Sing (C. C.) 21 Fed. 905. In the case last cited the court says: 'The United States recognize the right of every one to expatriate himself and choose another country.' In view of the contention to be hereafter mentioned, it is to be noticed that this case was decided after the adoption of the fourteenth amendment.

(5) The act of 1855 determines the citizenship of an alien woman who marries a citizen. We have in this case the converse of the proposition; the effect of the marriage of a native female citizen to a man who is not a citizen, but is a subject of some other country. In Pequignot vs. Detroit (C. C. 1883) 16 Fed. 211, Judge Brown, afterward Justice of the United States Supreme Court, decided that an alien woman who had become a citizen under the aforesaid act of 1855 by marrying a citizen, and who was divorced from that husband, and thereafter married an unnaturalized alien, lost her citizenship by the last marriage and again became an alien, although both she and her last husband continued to reside in this country with the intention of remaining, * *. *."

As it frequently happened, when an alien and a citizen intermarried, they returned to reside, either temporarily or permanently, to the country of the alien spouse, which gave rise to questions concerning their rights as citizens or aliens of the respective countries, from which there have ensued international disputes to be discussed and settled by diplomatic correspondence between the United States and the foreign country. Under the different phases presented by the questions, diversity of opinions appeared from time to time in the correspondence of the state department, and the courts of this country held variant views, as is shown by Van Dyne in his work on Citizenship of the United States, Chap. 3, Naturalization by Marriage. As stated by this writer, the authority is not entirely uniform, but the decided weight of authority is to the effect that the marriage of an American woman to an alien confers upon her the nationality of her husband (page 138).

The situation presented a case for federal legislation and the history of what transpired is succinctly stated by Shaw, J., in Mackenzie vs. Hare, supra, at p. 716:

> "* * * All the courts have agreed, however, that the entire subject of naturalization and expatriation, including the method by which each might or could be accomplished and manifested, is a matter within the exclusive control of Congress. Under these conditions, the United States Senate, on April 13, 1906, passed a joint resolution for the appointment of a commission to 'examine into the subjects of citizenship of the United States, expatriation, and protection abroad', and make a report with proposals for legislation thereon. In June, 1906, the house committee on foreign affairs, to which this resolution had been referred, requested the secretary of state to select three men connected with the state department, familiar with the subject, to investigate and make the desired report and recommendations. In pursuance of this request, Hon. Elihu Root, then secretary of state, directed Mr. James B. Scott, solicitor for the department of state, Mr. David Jaynes Hill, then minister to the Netherlands, and Mr. Gaillard Hunt, chief of the passport bureau, to make an inquiry, report, and proposals for legislation, as requested. These gentlemen proceeded, and on December 18, 1906, they made an elaborate and exhaustive report of 538 pages, with recommendations for legislation covering all the phases of the subject except that of naturalization, which was already provided for. With this document before it, Congress framed an act which became a law on March 2, 1907. Act March 2, 1907, c. 2534, 34 Stat. 1228 (U. S. Comp. St. Supp. 1911, p. 490). This act now controls the subject referred to, including that involved in this case. Section 3 thereof is practically decisive of the case before us, and it is as follows: 'That any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband. At the termination of the marital relation she may resume her American citizenship, if abroad, by registering as an American citizen within one year with a consul of the United States, or by returning to reside in the United States, or, if residing in the United States at the termination of the marital relation, by continuing to reside therein.'"

At present the act of March, 1907 (section 3960, page 4833, Volume 4, United States Compiled Statutes, 1916) is controlling. Under this section Mrs. S., when she married W., an unnaturalized resident alien, thereupon took the nationality of her husband and ceased to be a citizen of the United States. She must bow to the will of the nation as expressed by the act of Congress. Said act of March, 1907, was held valid in Mackenzie vs. Hare (1915), 36 Sup. Ct. 106.

From what has been said, the conclusion is clear that Mrs. S. is not a citizen of the United States, and answering the specific inquiry it is my opinion that she was divested of her citizenship by her marriage to an unnaturalized resident alien.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SHERIFF—CANNOT DEMAND OR RECEIVE REWARDS—IF RECEIVED NOT PART OF FEE FUND.

Public policy and sound morals alike forbid that a sheriff should demand or receive, for services performed by him in the apprehension of thieves of automobiles and the return of the stolen property, a remuneration or reward offered by the owners of said stolen property.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 23, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "The owners of numerous automobiles which have been stolen offered various rewards for the apprehension of the thieves and the recovery of the machines.
> May a sheriff, incited to activity by the offer of said rewards, legally accept the same for any services rendered in connection with the apprehension of the thieves or the recovery of the machines?
> If you should hold that the sheriff may legally accept such rewards, is such money a perquisite of the office under the provisions of section 2977 G. C. and should it be paid into his fee fund?"

It is my opinion that your query should be answered in the negative. Such an answer would seem to be based upon a well settled principle of law as enunciated by the courts of our state as well as the courts of most of the other states.

In Gilmore vs. Lewis, 12 Ohio 281, we find the following stated in the syllabus:

> "* * * A reward offered for the apprehension of a thief, and money, cannot be claimed by a constable, who arrests the thief by virtue of a warrant delivered to him for that purpose."

In the opinion on p. 287 we find the following:

> "It is for the apprehension of the thief, and seizure of the money; and as this was done in virtue of his office, the plaintiff must be content with his legal fees, and the reflection that he has done the state some service."

The facts upon which the court based its opinion are almost identical, if not entirely so, with the facts set out by you. You ask whether a sheriff might receive a reward for the apprehension of the thieves or the recovery of the machines, while the important fact in Gilmore vs. Lewis, supra, was the offer of a reward for the apprehension of the thief and seizure of the money.

In Brown vs. Commissioners of Sandusky county, 2 C. C. (N. S.) 381, the syllabus reads as follows:

> "It is contrary to public policy and the law of this state, and generally of other states, that an officer be paid a reward for the performance of an act which his duty as such officer requires him to perform; and where a sheriff of a sister state arrests a fugitive from justice at the request of the sheriff of the county in this state where the crime was committed, and performs no other duty than to go to the place indicated and make the arrest and hold the accused until the arrival of an officer from this state to whom the accused is surrendered, such sheriff does no more than is strictly within the line of his duty, and is not entitled to any further compensation than the fees allowed by law, and can not recover from the commissioners of the county a reward offered by them under section 918 for the arrest and conviction of such accused person."

Throop on Public Officers, section 485, sets forth the following principle:

"It is evident from what has been heretofore said, that where a reward has been offered by the public authorities or by an individual, for a service which is within the line of the officer's duty, he can not claim the reward although he may have performed the service."

In Bank vs. Edmund, 76 O. S. 396, the following is stated in the syllabus:

"Public policy and sound morals alike forbid that a public officer should demand or receive for services performed by him in the discharge of official duty, any other or further remuneration or reward than that prescribed and allowed by law.

The office of constable is not an office created for the private emolument of the holder. Every constable is a conservator of the peace, and it is his duty, within his jurisdiction, 'to apprehend and bring to justice all felons and disturbers and violators of the criminal laws of the state,' without other reward or compensation therefor than such as is fixed and allowed by law.

A constable who, within his jurisdiction, arrests a person who has committed a felony, will, in making the arrest, be presumed and held to act in his official capacity, whether such arrest be made by him under, or without a warrant. And the law will not permit him to claim that an arrest made, pursuant to official duty, was made by him in his individual capacity as a private citizen."

In this case the court held it to be against public policy and sound morals for a public officer either to demand or receive a reward for services performed by him in the discharge of his official duty.

The courts of most of the other states are as strict in enforcing this principle as are the courts of our state.

In in re Application of Russell, 51 Conn. 577, the court held in the syllabus:

"It is well settled that a public officer whose compensation is fixed or whose fees are prescribed by law can not legally contract for or demand a larger compensation or higher fees, in the form of a reward or in any other form, for services rendered within the scope of his official duties."

In this case some police officials arrested certain persons charged with crime, while the said officers were off duty, and hence in a strict sense they owed the city no duty or obligation at that time. Nevertheless the court held that it would be against the spirit of the law and of the ordinances of the municipality for said officials to receive a reward for the performance of duties which ordinarily devolve upon them.

In Hogan vs. Stophlet, 179 Ill. 150, the court said in the syllabus:

> "The compensation of a sheriff being prescribed by law, it is against public policy to permit him to recover a reward for the apprehension in his own county of a person committing a felony there, although he exercises extraordinary diligence."

On p. 156 the court say:

> "It is against public policy to allow a man to recover a reward for doing his duty as a public officer. It is also against public policy and illegal for a sheriff to receive, for services for which fixed compensation is prescribed by law, any other or further fees, although extraordinary diligence may have been exercised by him in the discharge of his duties."

To the same effect are:

Lees vs. Colgan, 120 Calif. 262.
Gould vs. County, 85 Miss. 123.
Malpas vs. Caldwell, Governor, 70 N. C. 130.

In the light of all the above, let us turn to our statutes in order to ascertain what the duty of the sheriff is along the line suggested by you.

Section 2833 G. C. provides in part:

> "Each sheriff shall preserve the public peace and cause all persons guilty of breach thereof, within his knowledge or view, to enter into recognizance with sureties to keep the peace and to appear at the succeeding term of the common pleas court of the proper county and commit them to jail in case of refusal. * * *."

Section 2834 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The sheriff shall execute every summons, order or other process, make return thereof as required by law and exercise the powers conferred and perform the duties enjoined upon him by statute and by the common law.

I am of the opinion that the services referred to in your letter come within the provisions of these two sections and that it would be the duty of the sheriff of any county to exercise the utmost activity in the apprehension of the thieves of automobiles or the recovery of the property stolen and hence he could not receive extra compensation, by way of a reward, for the services so performed.

Without quoting the statutes it can be said that the fees of the sheriff for the performance of his statutory duties are specifically fixed by law. Hence the principles enunciated by the courts in the above cited cases cover the facts set out by you, to the effect that a sheriff is not warranted in law, either in demanding or receiving a reward offered by the owners of machines, for the apprehension of the person who steals the same and the return of the property.

The answer I have given to the query set out in the first part of your communication makes it unnecessary for me to answer the latter part of said letter, inasmuch as I have held that the sheriff can not legally accept such rewards. Notwithstanding he can not accept rewards so offered by automobile owners, what results would follow if he did accept them? Would the money be considered a perquisite of his office and thus be paid into the fee fund of the county under the provisions of section 2977 G. C.? This section reads as follows:

> "Section 2977.—All the fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation for services by a county auditor, county treasurer, probate judge, sheriff, clerk of courts, or recorder, shall be so received and collected for the sole use of the treasury of the county in which they are elected and shall be held as public moneys belonging to such county and accounted for and paid over as such as hereinafter provided."

It will be noted that it is the "fees, costs, percentages, penalties, allowances and other perquisites collected or received by law as compensation" which must be turned into the officers' fee fund of the county. The reward which the sheriff would receive would in no sense be collected or received under the provisions of law, as held in the first part of this opinion.

It is further to be noted in this section that it is the fees, etc. "collected or received by law as compensation for services" which is to be turned into the officers' fee fund of the county. If the sheriff accepts the rewards referred to by you, he does not accept them for services rendered in his official capacity as sheriff, for the reason that the statute specifically and definitely fixes the compensation of the sheriff for the services he must perform by virtue of his office.

Hence I answer specifically that if the sheriff, notwithstanding the principle set forth in the first part of this opinion, accepts a reward, he is not under obligation to turn the same into the officers' fee fund of the county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WARREN CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT. $89,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Warren City School district in the sum of $89,500 for the purpose of funding a certain indebtedness of said school district, which from its limits of taxation said school district is unable to pay at maturity.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Warren City School district relating to the above issue of bonds, and as a result of my examination, I find the said proceedings are in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and laws of the State of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WOOD COUNTY, OHIO.—$12,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Wood county, Ohio, in the sum of $12,000 for the purpose of improving inter-county highways Nos. 220 and 282 into and within the city of Bowling Green, Ohio.

I have made a careful examination of the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds, and to the improvements for which said bonds are issued. I find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio, relating to bond issues of this kind, and I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SCHOOL DEPOSITORY—SURPLUS AND UNDIVIDED PROFITS NOT PART OF "PAID IN CAPITAL STOCK."

The surplus and undivided profits of a bank, whether incorporated or unincorporated, do not constitute a part of its "paid in capital stock" for the purposes of the school district depository law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 27, 1918.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 12th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> In fixing the amount of the capital of an incorporated bank for the purpose of determining its eligibility to act as school district depository, is the surplus fund to be regarded as a part of the capital?

You refer to an opinion which I addressed to you on September 4, 1917, and which is found in Volume 2 of the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for that year, at page 1658. The question which you submit was indirectly passed upon in that opinion. Inasmuch as you now raise it independently, however, I am glad to proceed to the elaboration of my views thereon.

The only statute which needs to be considered in this connection is section 7604 of the General Code, which provides, in part, that > "no bank shall receive a deposit larger than the amount of its paid in capital stock * * *."

In my opinion, this phrase denotes that corporate fund which represents payments in satisfaction of subscriptions to the capital stock, and accordingly excludes all corporate funds which consist of accretions to the assets of the corporation, as earnings on the business investment, whether any part of such accretions are held and set apart as not subject to distribution among stockholders or not. In my opinion, this meaning is definitely pointed out by the use of the phrase "paid in" in the statute. If the phrase "capital stock" stood alone some doubt might be engendered as to whether its meaning would be that just indicated or some broader meaning which might include all or a greater part of the corporate assets. I think, however, that the term "paid in capital stock" means what is defined in section 3404 of Thompson on Corporation, as follows:

> "The capital stock of a corporation may be said to be the amount stated in the articles of incorporation, and which, ordinarily, is to be subscribed and paid by those who wish to join in the enterprise and become members of the corporation. * * * While this limitation of capital prescribes the amount and subdivisions of the respective contributions of the corporators to the common fund, it also determines the power that each shall exercise in the control and management of the concern, and forms a basis for the apportionment of the profits of the undertaking. Thus measured, it announces to the community at large the extent of the means contributed and enables the public to judge of its ability to meet its engagements and > fulfil its promises. The denominated amount, whether paid in cash or not, usually stands as a security for the promises of all undertakings on the part of the corporation. As to the creditors the corporation is presumed to have sought credit based upon its supposed capital actually paid in or due from stockholders. * * * An approved definition of capital stock is that it is * * * the money contributed by the corporators to the capital, and belongs to the corporation. It is said to be the money or property put into the corporate fund by the subscribers, and which fund becomes the property of the corporation. * * * The supreme court of New Jersey, in defining it, said: 'The capital stock is the sum fixed by the charter as the amount * * * to be paid in, by the stockholders for the prosecution of the business of the corporation, and for the benefit of the creditors of the corporation.' * * * It may be wholly in cash or in property, or both, which may be counted and valued; but any surplus which the corporation has accumulated and holds as a reserve fund, and any undivided profits that it may have, cannot be regarded as capital stock."

Many cases are cited by the author of the above quoted text for each of the propositions advanced by him. That principally cited in support of the last of these propositions is People vs. Coleman, 126 N. Y. 433.

Of course, decisions are not lacking in which the phrase "capital stock" standing by itself is held to mean, as I have intimated, something broader than the money contributed or to be contributed by the subscribers. But where the phrase "paid in" is used, denoting as it does the act of the subscriber in making contribution to the capital, then no other meaning than that which I have just mentioned can be given to the phrase.

There would be no doubt about this proposition but for the decision of the Common Pleas Court of Franklin County in the case of State ex. rel. vs. Madison Township School district, 15 Ohio Dec. N. P., 720, in which it was held that the statute under consideration could have application to an unincorporated bank. The entire decision of Judge Dillon on the point is as follows:

> "As to the use of the word 'capital stock' it is evident to me the meaning of the legislature was not to limit the depositories to a corporation, but that the expression clearly means 'capital'. It was the amount of the capital, not the favor to corporations that was expressed by the legislature by the language used. The other construction would possibly render it unconstitutional."

I am, of course, not disposed to question the correctness of this holding, which is to the effect that an unincorporated bank may have a capital stock. I point out that Judge Dillon ignores the presence in the section of the phrase "paid in" in connection with "capital stock", and I would say that his decision goes to the very verge of the legal principles involved and could not be used to justify the substitution of the word "assets" for the phrase "paid in capital stock." Even as to an unincorporated bank, therefore, it would follow that there must be some fund contributed by the partners as a working capital on which business is to be done before such an association of individuals could qualify under the depository act. It was so held by Hon. Timothy S. Hogan in an opinion given by him to Hon. Arthur Van Epp, prosecuting attorney of Medina county, on March 8, 1912, (Annual Report of Attorney-General for that year, page 1197). In that opinion it was held, in the face of the Nisi Prius decision which has been cited, that so-called "bank" owned by a single individual could not qualify as a depository; he might be able to say that he had set aside a fund on which he would do the banking business, but he could not have anything that would satisfy the statutory requirement of a "paid in capital stock."

In an earlier opinion, following Judge Dillon's decision, Mr. Hogan had held (Annual Report for the year 1911, page 1177) that an unincorporated bank "which has capital invested in the business thereof" could quality as a depository on the basis of the capital so invested. This holding would exclude the surplus and undivided profits from consideration in ascertaining the capital, for neither such surplus nor such undivided profits constitutes an "investment" on the part of the members of the association or corporation.

In the previous opinion to you to which I have referred I intimated the view which I now repeat, namely, that the surplus and undivided profits of a bank, whether incorporated or unincorporated, do not constitute a part of its "paid in capital stock" for the purposes of the school district depository law.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BEQUEST OF AMOUNT TO PURCHASE CEMETERY LOT AND ERECTION OF MAUSOLEUM THEREON NOT SUBJECT TO.

A bequest to executors of a sufficient amount for the purchase of a suitable cemetery lot, the erection thereon of a mausoleum and the cremation of the remains of the decedent's previously deceased husband and those of herself, and the placing of the resultant ashes in the said mausoleum, is not subject to the collateral inheritance tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. HARRY M. RANKIN, Prosecuting Attorney, Washington C. H., Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 12th requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> Is a bequest to executors of a sufficient amount for the purchase of a suitable cemetery lot, the erection thereon of a mausoleum and the cremation of the remains of the decedent's previously deceased husband and those of herself, and the placing of the resultant ashes in the said mausoleum, subject to the collateral inheritance tax?

In this connection you submit a copy of a last will and testament which extends such authority to the testatrix's executors and limits the amount to be expended for the lot to $3,000 and the amount to be expended for the construction of the mausoleum to $6,000.

In my opinion, that part of the decedent's estate which is used without objection by the residuary or specific legatees for the purposes thus authorized, or attempted to be authorized, is not subject to the collateral inheritance tax. In the first place, the tax is laid, not upon the estate as a whole, but upon the distributive shares which pass to particular persons whose interests are taxable. In this case it is obvious that the funds expended for these purposes never reach the residuary legatees, i. e., they do not represent "interests passing to" such legatees. Technically, of course, all of the estate which is necessary to pay debts and funeral expenses passes to the executors for this purpose, but it is universally held under a statute like that in Ohio, which taxes distributive shares instead of the whole estate, that the succession of the executors for this purpose is not taxable. This is the same thing as a holding to the effect that debts and proper funeral expenses are to be deducted from the estate for the purpose of assessing the tax.

Here, however, we have a case where the executors are to succeed to property of the testatrix for a purpose which goes somewhat beyond the payment of mere funeral expenses; yet upon careful analysis it will be observed that the only respect in which this is so lies in the fact that the remains of the husband are to find a last resting place in the structure to be erected and are to be cremated, if possible. Clearly, if the testatrix had limited her direction to her executors to the proper interment or cremation of her own remains, their succession to so much of her estate as might have been necessary to accomplish this result would have been controlled by the principles which I have described. I would say, of course, that a bequest to executors or a granting to them of authority to expend the funds of the estate for the purpose of providing a place of interment for friends or relatives of the testatrix generally would go too far to stay within these principles. I believe, however, that it is reasonable to permit these principles to apply to the construction of a proper mausoleum and proper placing therein of the remains of a decedent and his or her spouse. The universal custom of the country in such matters commands some deference.

I may say that while the amounts named are large they are, after all, merely outside limits upon the discretion of the executors. There is nothing to show that the purchase price of the lot was not that ordinarily paid for lots of this character in the cemetery designated. There is nothing per se unreasonable about the construction of a mausoleum, especially in connection with the fact that cremation was desired by the testatrix. I know of no principle of law by which one could draw a dividing line between ordinary burial and cremation as a reasonable means to dispose of the remains of the decedent.

I may add that the testatrix also directs that stained glass windows shall be placed in the mausoleum, which may be regarded as an extravagance. However, considered broadly, as I feel obliged to consider the question, it is very clear that neither the executors nor any other living person will ever obtain any benefit from the expenditure of the moneys thus authorized to be spent. The case is therefore not within the policy of the statute, and upon the principle which allows a deduction of burial expenses I arrive at the conclusion that the amount actually expended by the executors for these authorized purposes is not subject to the collateral inheritance tax. See 23 L. R. A. N. S. 474.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SCHOOLS—EFFECT OF DIPLOMA GRANTED PUPIL AFTER REPEAL OF SECTION 7744 (104 O. L. 129).

The diploma granted by the county board of school examiners to a pupil who has finished the elementary course, is sufficient evidence to show that the said course was completed, and this is true even though said diploma was granted after the repeal of section 7744 became effective, but prior to the time the county superintendent was selected.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request for my opinion, which reads:

> "Section 7744, General Code, prior to its repeal in 1914, provided that a diploma could be issued to successful applicants entitling them to enter any high school in the state.
> I notice that this section was repealed in 104 Ohio Laws, page 129. This repeal became effective in May, 1914. I am unable to find any provision granting the authority to a board of county examiners subsequent to this repeal. The board of county examiners of Trumbull county, under date of June 27th, 1914, issued a diploma in substance as follows:
> 'The board of county examiners of Trumbull county, Ohio, hereby issues to E. E. S., who has successfully passed the examination as required in section 7740 of the General Code, this DIPLOMA which entitles the holder to admission to any high school in the state as provided in section 7740 of the General Code and further entitles the holder to FREE TUITION to a high school according to section 7748 of the General Code.'
> I desire your opinion as to whether or not the certificate is of any value to the holder during the school year 1917 and 1918. She attended the Warren high school and the question has been raised whether or not she should pay tuition, inasmuch as she is not a resident of the school district."

Your question involves a consideration of the sections of our General Code which deal with the furnishing to pupils who have completed an elementary course, certain evidence which shows that such elementary course was completed. That is to say, prior to the enactment of what is commonly called the new school code in 1914, section 7744 G. C. provided that:

> "The board of county school examiners shall provide for the holding of a county commencement not later than August fifteenth, at such place as it determines * * * at the conclusion of which a diploma shall be presented to each successful applicant who has complied with the provisions hereof. Such diploma shall entitle its holder to enter any high school in the state."

Said section was repealed February 19, 1914, and the repeal became effective May 20th of the same year. In the same act in which said section was repealed, there was enacted section 7747, which provided for a new method of furnishing the evidence to the pupil that the elementary course was completed. Said latter section read in part:

> "The district superintendent shall certify to the county superintendent each year the names of all pupils in his supervision district who have completed the elementary school work, and are eligible for admission to high school. The county superintendent shall therefore issue to each pupil so certified a certificate of promotion which shall entitle the holder to admission to any high school. * * *."

So that, instead of the board of county school examiners granting the pupil who had finished the elementary course a diploma, under the new order the county superintendent grants the pupil a certificate. From the fact that the diploma was granted by the county board, I must assume that the course was entirely completed and all conditions in relation thereto were fully complied with, so that the pupil was entitled to some evidence that the course had been completed, which evidence should have been either in the form of a diploma or a certificate. The new law, which provided for the furnishing of the certificate, while becoming effective May 20, 1914, provided in what manner the county board of education should be selected and how the county board of education should divide the county school district into supervision districts and how the presidents or members of the boards of education, as the case might be, should elect a district superintendent and how the county board of education should select the county superintendent, but, under the provisions thereof it was impossible to have any county or district superintendent selected on June 27, 1914, and therefore impossible to issue the evidence of the completion of such course by such pupil.

I am informed by the superintendent of public instruction that in many instances the course which was followed by your board of county school examiners was followed by other boards, and I am of the opinion that there being no other way of furnishing the evidence to such pupil, and the pupil being entitled to the same, the county board of school examiners was authorized to furnish said diploma to said pupil. If, however, the county board of school examiners had attempted to furnish the same after a district and a county superintendent had been elected, then it is my opinion that the evidence should be furnished by the county superintendent in the form of a certificate, as provided by section 7747, instead of in the form of a diploma.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that the diploma granted by the county board of school examiners to a pupil who has finished the elementary course, is sufficient evidence to show that the said course was completed, and this is true even though said diploma was granted after the repeal of section 7744 became effective, but prior to the time the county superintendent was selected.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION— CANNOT ENTER INTO CONTRACT TO RENT WITHOUT CERTIFICATE OF CLERK THAT MONEY IN TREASURY— BONDS CANNOT BE ISSUED UNDER SECTION 7629 TO PAY RENT OF SCHOOL BUILDING.

Before a board of education can enter into a contract to rent a certain building for school purposes at a consideration of $10,500.00, for the entire term of five years, the certificate of the clerk must be filed showing that the money required for the payment of such obligation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn and not appropriated for any other purpose.

Bonds cannot be sold under the provisions of section 7629 to pay the rental of school buildings.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. DEAN E. STANLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Lebanon, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

"The board of education of the village school district of Lebanon, Ohio, desires to enter into a contract of rental of certain property to be used by them for school purposes for a term of five years at a consideration of $10,500 for the entire term. I am informed that they have not in the treasury to the credit of the contingent fund that sum of money. I desire to inquire first whether or not the provisions of section 5660 G. C. apply to such a contract and require a certificate that the money is in the treasury. Second, whether or not under section 7629 G. C. (which authorized boards of education to borrow money for the purpose of obtaining school property) they would be justified in borrowing sufficient money to enable them to execute this contract."

Section 7620 of the General Code provides in part as follows:

"The board of education of a district may build, enlarge, repair and furnish the necessary school houses, purchase or lease sites therefor or * * * rent suitable school rooms * * * for the schools under its control."

Authority is given under the above section to boards of education to lease sites for school houses and also for the rental of suitable school rooms for the schools under their control. But you say in your request that the consideration passing from the board of education to the owner of the property is $10,500, and that there is not sufficient money in the treasury to cover said amount. Section 5660 G. C. provides in part:

"* * * The board of education of a school district shall not enter into any contract, agreement, or obligation involving the expenditure of money, or pass any resolution or order for the appropriation or expenditure of money unless the * * * clerk thereof * * * first certifies that the money required for the payment of such obligation or appropriation is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, or has been levied and placed on the duplicate, and in process of collection and not appropriated for any other purpose; * * *. Such certificate shall be filed and forthwith recorded, and the sums so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the * * * board of education is fully discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or as long as the order or resolution is in force."

Section 5661 G. C. provides:

"All contracts, agreements or obligations and orders or resolutions entered into or passed contrary to the provisions of the next preceding section, shall be void, but such section shall not apply to the contracts authorized to be made by other provisions of law for the employment of teachers, officers, and other school employes of boards of education."

So that, before the board of education could enter into the agreement to lease said property, in which lease it binds itself to pay $10,500, it is necessary that the certificate of the clerk of the board be filed and recorded, certifying that the money is in the treasury to meet the conditions of said obligation as the same are due and payable. The renting of a school room is not made an exception to the rule above stated as is the hiring of teachers or other school employes, and I must therefore advise you, in answer to your first question, that the provisions of section 5660 of the General Code do apply to the matter in question.

Coming now to your second question, that is, as to whether or not under section 7629 the board would be justified in borrowing sufficient money to enable them to execute this contract, section 7629 reads in part:

> "The board of education of any school district may issue bonds to obtain or improve public school property, and in anticipation of income from taxes, for such purposes, levied or to be levied, from time to time, as occasion requires, may issue and sell bonds under the restrictions and bearing a rate of interest specified in sections seventy-six hundred and twenty-seven. The board shall pay such bonds and the interest thereon when due, but provide that no greater amount of bonds be issued in any year than would equal the aggregate of a tax at the rate of two mills, for the year next preceding such issue. * * *."

The only question to determine in relation to this section is whether the word "obtain" applies to the rental of school property. In a contract to lease school property, the property itself is not obtained, but only the use of said property for school purposes, and I am of the opinion that the word "obtain", as used in said section, means more than to simply acquire the use of. It is used in connection with the words "improve public school property" and title and ownership is meant rather than simply the use of same for the particular purpose.

Holding these views then, I must advise you that the provisions of section 7629 are not sufficient to warrant the raising of money thereunder to cover the consideration mentioned by you for the leasing of said property.

I might suggest, however, that your board of education could take a lease, say for one year, if you have sufficient money in the treasury to pay the rental for that time, and place in said lease an option in the board of education to have the use of said property from year to year for a period of five years and, as the board of education would exercise the option each year, the certificate of the clerk could be filed that the money was in the treasury to cover the obligation of said annual rental.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of November 19, 1918, which reads as follows:

"On October 1st you gave to the Board of State Charities Opinion 1490 which, among other matters, related to the power of the Board of State Charities to consent to adoption of children. We are anxious to have your advice as to the proper method to pursue for the legal adoption of children as the following listed:

1. E. M. born at county infirmary July 13, 1915; transferred by infirmary officials to the county children's home, August 7, 1916. This child remained in the home until January 11, 1918, when by action of the board of trustees of said home, in accordance with section 3252-3 (1352-3), transferred said child to the Ohio Board of State Charities which consented to the adoption of the child which was consummated in the Probate Court on August 30, 1918. No action was taken in this case by the Juvenile Court.

2. W. C. was placed by his father in a county children's home. Father did not make any provision for the child's maintenance who was, therefore, considered abandoned in pursuance to the provision of section 3093. On August 20, 1917, the trustees of said home transferred said child to the Board of State Charities. Adoption proceedings were consummated in the Probate Court April 3, 1918, the consent thereto having been given by the Board of State Charities. No Juvenile Court decision in this case.

In accordance with our interpretation of your former opinion, these adoptions have not been properly made. As we are anxious to correct such defective adoption, your advice is awaited with interest."

In answer to your communication I will consider each case mentioned separately. The child mentioned in No. 1 was undoubtedly transferred to the county children's home from the infirmary of the county under the provisions of section 3091 G. C., and was afterwards transferred from the home to the Ohio Board of State Charities. This language is used:

"No action was taken in this case by the Juvenile Court."

From this language I take it that you mean that under the provisions of section 1352-3 G. C. the guardianship of the child was transferred to your board, not by an order of the Juvenile Court, but by the trustees of the home itself.

The only case in which the Juvenile Court must consent to a transfer of a child from a county children's home to the Board of State Charities is that in which the child was committed to the home by the Juvenile court. In this case the child undoubtedly was not admitted to the home from the county infirmary upon an order of the Juvenile Court, and this would not be essential under the provisions of section 3091 G. C. and hence it would not be essential for said court to consent to the transfer of the guardianship of the child from the home to your board.

With these preliminary statements made, I will suggest that in the adoption of this child the provisions of section 8024 G. C. must be followed by the Probate Court. This section reads as follows:

"Any proper person not married, or a husband and wife jointly, may petition the Probate Court of their proper county, or the Probate Court of the county in which the child resides, for leave to adopt a minor child not theirs by birth, and for a change of the name of such child. A written consent must be given to such adoption by the child, if of the age of fourteen years, and by each of his or her living parents who is not hopelessly insane, intemperate, or has not abandoned such child, or if there are no such parents, or if the parents are unknown, or have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then by the legal guardian, or if there is no such guardian, then by a suitable person appointed by the court to act in the proceedings as the next friend of the child."

In the opinion to which you call attention, namely, Opinion No. 1490, I used the following language in placing a construction upon said section:

"We note here that if there are no parents living, or if the parents are unknown, or if they have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then the consent may be given by the legal guardian of the child. It is my opinion that the board becomes the legal guardian of a child transferred to it under the provisions of section 1352-3 G. C., and therefore if the conditions obtain as set out in section 8024 G. C. then the board might give its consent, it being the sole and exclusive guardian of the child and being its legal guardian. But if it has parents living who are not hopelessly insane or intemperate, or who have not abandoned the child, and they are not unknown, then the parents would have to give the consent to the adoption of the child, even though it was at the time under the jurisdiction of the Board of State Charities."

Hence, if the child in question had a parent or parents living who were not hopelessly insane or intemperate, or who had not abandoned the child, and who were not unknown, then the parent or parents if both living would have to give their consent to the adoption of the child, and the consent of the Board of State Charities would not be sufficient in law, even though the child at the time was under the jurisdiction of said board. In the case suggested, undoubtedly the court could yet act upon the matter as based upon the petition which was filed asking for the adoption of the child. The part of the proceedings which was based upon the consent of the Board of State Charities, as I view it, would be irregular and void, but the parent or parents could file their consent by way of answer, and the court then could make the proper finding in reference thereto.

To be sure, as said in Opinion No. 1490, if the parents had abandoned the child, or if the parent or parents are unknown, then your board would have authority to give consent to the adoption of the child.

In the second case mentioned by you, it seems clear that the parents have abandoned the child; at least, the statement so indicates. If this is the case, then under the provisions of section 8024 G. C. and under the opinion heretofore rendered by me, namely 1490, your board would have authority to give consent to the adoption of the child, because it, under the law, is the guardian of said child.

Therefore, under the facts as stated in your communication, I should take it that the adoption of the second child is entirely legal.

It is my opinion that the finding of the court should be based upon the fact that the child was abandoned by its parents in order to show that your board had jurisdiction in the premises to give consent to the adoption of the child. However, this latter is merely a suggestion.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

LLOYD LOAN ACT—APPLIES ONLY TO LOANS OF MONEY—BUT REAL FACTS MAY BE INVESTIGATED.

1. The Lloyd Loan Regulation Act applies only to loans of money, and has no application to a case where chattels are sold, and an additional or higher price charged for same than a cash price asked.

2. If a pretended sale of chattels is made a mere cover of a transaction the real object of which is the collection of usurious interest, the law has application thereto.

3. If a pretended vendor of chattels made a practice of receiving title to chattels only at the moment of sale, and for the purpose of adding a substantial amount to the price in order to make usurious profit on his money, but did not acquire title otherwise or retain the same in the event of a failure to sell, such business would really be loaning money at usurious interest, and would come within the provisions of the law.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. P. A. BERRY, Commissioner of Securities, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of October 10, 1918, you made to this department the following statement with request for an opinion thereon:

> "An investigation made by me with reference to a possible violation of the Lloyd Loan Regulation Act discloses the following facts:
> Mr. Smith is a money lender, at least his office directory says so and the city and telephone directory also say the same. The county recorder's records show whole pages of chattel mortgages with hardly a consecutive number missing.
> These mortgages are on second-hand automobiles generally.
> Mr. Smith has two other places of business designated as an auto exchange or a garage as the case may be, but each are in charge of a hired man and each of whom have no scruples whatever so far as the public is concerned, generally they do not know that Mr. Smith has any interest whatever in the second-hand automobile exchanges, or garages.
> Mr. Smith advertises an automobile or automobiles for sale or exchange at street number so and so almost daily and his advertisements state that these machines can be secured by paying a small payment down, and time and easy payments on the balance. This time or easy payments plan appeals to prospective purchasers who visit these sales places in great numbers.
> The prospective purchaser goes to this second-hand place because of the easy payment plan and naturally finds what he wants providing he is satisfied that he can meet their time payments.
> Mr. Smith's hired man gives the customer a time payment or easy payment plan price so customers universally say.
> As an illustration, this hired man and the customer get together on a second-hand Ford for the time or easy payment price of $250.00 upon condition that he pay $100.00 down and $30.00 per month on the balance, $150.00. At this stage of the transaction the hired man takes his customer up to Mr. Smith's loan office to execute the papers necessary to close the deal. The customer may or he may not know what interest if any Mr. Smith has in the second-hand automobile already purchased. When he is asked to sign a note for the agreed balance of $150.00 he finds that $45.00 has been added to the agreed balance and that the note reads $195.00. The customer asks for an explanation of the new balance and refuses to sign for the time.

Mr. Smith's explanation is that the $45.00 is his commission or his drag as the case may be. The customer signs a contract and note for the latter amount of $195.00 under protest. This note bears interest at 6 per cent. and runs long enough to liquidate it at $30.00 per month. The face of the note draws interest until the last and final payment is made instead of permitting that customer to pay interest on the unpaid monthly balance. This interest plus the commission, $45.00, or what would be termed a charge under the Lloyd act amounts to $51.34 interest, or charge for the use of the $195.00 for six and a half months, or until paid off at $30.00 per month.

The customer or borrower while he did not borrow pays $51.34 interest or charges wherein $4.90 is the maximum he can be charged by a lender not a licensee.

If Mr. Smith has not violated the Lloyd Act directly he certainly has indirectly or by subterfuge or evasion.

I do not feel that the law contemplates that he can do indirectly what he cannot do directly.

Mr. Smith's defense, if he has any, is that the commission is the difference between the cash and time price of the machine and his contract is drawn for the purpose of enabling him to make that defense.

Every borrower says, however, that the contract does not state facts incident to the agreed time price, and in connection with the transaction.

He advertises only time and easy payments plans and the customer goes to the garage and gets his time prices only and proceeds to the loan office to close the deal at the price agreed upon at the garage.

Many concrete cases like the above can be presented to the grand jury in November and will be unless your Honor feels that Mr. Smith is not liable to prosecution under the Lloyd Act or that he can escape because of the indirect procedure."

To this is attached a chattel mortgage made by one of the customers alluded to, which is upon an automobile, and upon the same sheet below the mortgage, a bill of sale, being a printed blank filled in showing a sale of the automobile by Smith, to whom you allude, to the customer who signs the mortgage.

The first section of the Lloyd Act referred to by you is as follows:

> "Section 6345-1.—It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, association or corporation, to engage, or continue, in the business of making loans, on plain, endorsed, or guaranteed notes, or due-bills, or otherwise, or upon the mortgage or pledge of chattels or personal property of any kind, or of purchasing or making loans on salaries or wage earnings, or of furnishing guarantee or security in connection with any loan or purchase, as aforesaid, at a charge or rate of interest in excess of eight per centum per annum, including all charges, without first having obtained a license so to do from the commissioner of securities and otherwise complying with the provisions of this chapter."

The complete statement of facts set out by you clearly indicates a studied and carefully prepared evasion or attempt to evade this law. It does not appear, however, from that statement affirmatively that Smith is not the owner of the automobile, although there is very strong circumstantial evidence that he is not, and that the transaction is a mere cover for usurious loan, and without compliance with the law. If Smith is actually in the second-hand automobile business and owns these machines and sells them to customers, he cannot be required to comply with this Act. If that be the case he is practicing deceit upon the public by pretending not to own property which he really does own, and offering it for sale at a price less than he intends to accept for it, and afterwards springing the price upon a doubtful state of mind of the customer as to whether he is buying the automobile of him or borrowing the money of him.

If it can be shown that he does not own these automobiles and that he is merely in a conspiracy or combination or arrangement of some kind with the owners of the machines whereby they sell them in this manner, then he is guilty of a violation of the law. Supposing, for instance, a given customer fails to take a machine. If Smith does not own that machine afterward his attempt was a violation of the law, and he is engaged in the business of loaning without complying with the law. Or even if he did not own the machine up to the moment of the sale, but by an understanding between him and the owner of a machine, the title passes through him to the customer, still what he is doing is an evasion of the law. But if the fact is as indicated in your statement that the man in charge of the garage or the automobile exchange, is merely Smith's employe, and Smith does own the machine all the time, then he is as to this transaction a dealer in the machines and not a loan shark, although he practices deceit to spring the price. Reprehensible as this conduct would be, it could not be brought within the letter of the law by an interpretation.

It would seem that it would not require a very great amount of detective work to ascertain the ultimate facts as to the ownership of this property. If he is the owner, it presents a case where nobody can get at him but the Legislature, which will soon be in session.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—MAY PURCHASE TOPOGRAPHIC MAPS WHEN.

Under the provisions of section 1180 G. C. the state must furnish all necessary supplies for the office of the state highway department and under this provision topograhpic maps could be purchased, if necessary, to enable the state highway commisioner to perform the duties of the office, and the same can be paid for from the appropriation made for office supplies.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR: --I have your communication reading as follows:

"For your information I beg to quote the following from the Journal of the Highway Advisory Board as of November 12, 1918:

'War Department—Authority requested to purchase topographic maps for compilation of statistics in preparation of military maps.

Chief Engineer Bruning referred to the action of the commissioner, approved by the board, as of September 11 in undertaking the preparation of statistics requested by the war department for preparation of a military map of Ohio.

Mr. Bruning stated that it is now desired to purchase three sets of topographic maps at a cost of approximately $75.00 for the purpose of properly preparing this compilation.

The secretary was authorized to request the advice of the Attorney-General of Ohio as to whether or not this department has authority to purchase these maps for this purpose, and if the department has authority from what fund payment for same shall be made.

The secretary was further authorized to send the Attorney-General copy of the entry on the Journal of the advisory board as of September 11, relating to this matter.'"

The only theory, as I view it, upon which you would be justified in purchasing the topographic maps referred to would be in considering them necessary office supplies to assist you to perform the duties of your office. This is not a legal proposition for this department, but a matter for you to decide.

Section 1180 G. C. reads as follows:

"The state highway commissioner shall be provided with suitable rooms for the use of the department. Such office shall be open at all reasonable times for the transaction of public business and be furnished by the state with necessary stationery, office supplies, fixtures, apparatus for testing material, engineering instruments and supplies. The salary of the state highway commissioner shall be four thousand dollars per annum. In addition to his salary, he shall be allowed his actual and necessary expenses incurred in the discharge of his official duties."

This section provides that the state must furnish the office of the state highway commissioner "with necessary stationery, office supplies, fixtures, apparatus for testing material, engineering instruments and supplies." Hence if the topographic maps are necessary to assist you in performing the duties of your office, you would be justified in law in purchasing the same.

You also inquire from what fund the money would be taken to pay for said topographic maps.

In 107 O. L. 292-293, we find that the General Assembly appropriated the sum of seven hundred dollars for office equipment of the state highway commissioner for the year 1918-1919. As I view it, the money necessary to purchase said topographic maps, should you decide to purchase the same, would be paid from the appropriation so made by the General Assembly. Under the law the state must furnish the highway department necessary office supplies. If topographic maps are essential to the performance of the duties of said department, there is authority in law for the purchase of the same, which would be paid for from the appropriation made by the General Assembly for the office of the state highway department.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—CANNOT COMPEL NEW OR ADDITIONAL BOND FOR HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT.

1. There is no provision in law whereby the state highway commissioner can compel a contractor for a road improvement to give a new or additional bond even though the surety on the original bond should become insolvent or the company giving the bond should cease to do business in this state.

2. The state highway commissioner owes material men and laborers no duty in the way of requiring a bond of the contractor, other than to comply with the provisions of section 1208 G. C. to the effect that he shall require a bond with sufficient sureties before entering into a contract for a road improvement.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 12, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "For your information, I beg to quote the following from the Journal of the highway advisory board as of November 12th, 1918:
> 'Cuyahoga County—Section "a", I. C. H. No. 3, Cleveland-Sandusky Road—Letter from the Ohio Coal and Supply Company regarding insufficiency of bond.'
> The following letter from the Ohio Coal and Supply Company under date of November 1st was presented:
> 'We understand that the American Fidelity Company, Montpelier, Vermont, has ceased doing business, due to the state authorities of Vermont, and that the paving of Cleveland-Sandusky road, section 3, under contract with the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Company, dated November 1st, 1916, county contract number 3068, state contract number 1095, is now being done without any bond covering.
> As we are interested to the extent of furnishing the contractors with considerable material for this work, we will hold the state and county authorities liable unless another bond is given to cover the work.
> Please acknowledge receipt, and oblige,
> Yours very truly,
> The Ohio Coal and Supply Company.
> (Signed) E. E. Ellsworth.'
> The secretary was authorized to request the advice of the Attorney-General of Ohio as to the proper procedure to be followed in the matter."

Your communication naturally divides itself into two different propositions, first the relationship which your department sustains to the contractor, the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Company, as to whether you could demand the said contractor to give a new bond; and secondly, your relationship to the Ohio Coal and Supply Company as to whether you owe it any duty or consideration under the facts as set out in your communication.

The question as to whether you could compel a contractor to give an additional bond was carefully considered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion rendered by him to you as of date August 9, 1916, and found in Annual Reports of the Attorney-General, 1916, Volume 2, page 1346. In this opinion he arrived at the following conclusion:

> "There is no provision in either section, either requiring or authorizing the taking of an additional or supplementary bond in case the surety on the original bond should, subsequent to the execution of such bond, become insolvent or the affairs of a surety company signing such bond be thereafter placed in the hands of a receiver. Not only is this true, but it is also true that no method exists by which a contractor could be forced to give an additional or supplementary bond. It might be, indeed, that the contractors who have been successful in their work and who have found their contracts profitable would be willing to give additional or supplementary bonds if so requested, but contractors who find themselves so placed may be reasonably expected to complete their work and in such instances there will be no necessity for resorting to the bond. Contractors who through mismanagement, or otherwise, are not succeeding with their work and who are finding the same unprofitable would, especially if financially irresponsible, welcome a forfeiture of their contracts and if such contractors were to be requested to give additional bonds and were to refuse to do so, there would be no method of compelling compliance on their part with such a request and it might be reasonably expected that they would refuse to so comply. A forfeiture of their contracts under such circstances and for the sole reason that they had refused a supplemental bond, might, and indeed probably would, have the effect of releasing the surety on the original bond. It is therefore my opinion that there is no action which you can take at the present time in the premises."

The provisions of law insofar as they relate to the matter under consideration, are the same now as they were at the time Mr. Turner rendered his opinion. I am of the opinion that Mr. Turner was correct in his conclusion, and therefore advise you that you are not in a position to compel the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Company to give additional bond.

The question then arises as to whether you owe any duty in any respect to the Ohio Coal and Supply Company which is furnishing material to the contractor for the construction of the road mentioned in your communication.

It is my opinion that you owe no duty whatever to this company. The material furnished by this company to the contractor prior to the time that the American Fidelity Company ceased to do business in the state, was furnished in view of the bond, and therefore a company could not look to the state or to the county in reference to any liability for material so furnished. The material that has been furnished, if any, since the time that the American Fidelity Company ceased doing business in the state, has been furnished in the light of our statutes, which make no provision whatever for the demanding of an additional bond upon the part of the contractor, and hence neither the state nor the county interested would be liable for such material.

I might say further in reference to this matter that even though the state should be able to get additional bond from the contractor, yet this bond would not cover obligations entered into prior to the giving of the bond, hence at all events the material which is already furnished by the Ohio Coal and Supply Company would not be covered by a new bond.

If the said company continues to furnish material to the contractor, it does it in the light of the fact that the contractor has no bond, and hence the said company could not look to the state or to the county for payment, provided the contractor fails to pay for any material that may be so delivered.

In view of all the above, it is my advice to you that you permit the Cleveland Trinidad Paving Company to complete the work in accordance with its contract unless you are compelled to take it over under and by virtue of the provisions of section 1209 General Code.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—PERSON USING SAME WITHIN LIMITS OF SECTION 7246 TO 7249 CANNOT BE ENJOINED NOR BE HELD LIABLE FOR DAMAGES.

If a person using the improved public streets, highways, bridges and culverts within the state keep within the limits and restrictions as set out in section 7246 to 7249 G. C., inclusive, he cannot be enjoined from the use of said streets and roads, neither can he be held in damages for the destruction of the same, even though the use to which he puts them is more than ordinarily destructive of the said streets and highways.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of recent date which reads as follows:

> "In a certain road from the south township line of Palmer township, directly through Palmer township to the north line, which is the county line between Putnam and Henry counties, Ohio, is located a public highway designated as 'Main Road, No. 6B and inter-county highway No. 491' in said Putnam county, Ohio.
> Said road has been improved by hauling stone and placing it on the road the full length of the part described herein, and used, causing the stone to become compact and making an improved road usually described as a traffic-bound pike, said road not having been taken over by the state nor having been improved in any manner other than above described.
> A concern at Napolean, Henry county, Ohio, purchased some forty acres of timber near the south end of the above described road, and are now removing the timber from said land with a motor truck and trailer. From the information I am able to get, the width of tire used by the truck would permit them to haul more than 12 ton, including the weight of the vehicle, and my construction of this law would be that they would not be entitled to haul more than 12 ton including the weight of the vehicle, without the consent of the county surveyor, and I will say now that they have not received the consent of the county surveyor for the hauling of a load of more than 12 ton.
> It appears from the road that the load hauled is much in excess of the strength of the road, and at numerous places the said pike has been broken through and the road is rapidly being destroyed. It is almost impossible to determine the weight being moved over the road on these vehicles, and the question I wish to satisfy myself is, whether or not this concern is entitled to destroy the roads of Putnam county, or the road herein described, although they are loading their conveyance or vehicle within the sections provided in chapter 10, to-wit, 7246 to 7251 inclusive, without a remedy to either stop the destruction of the road or a recovery of damages."

Your question, as I understand it, is to this effect: Suppose persons using an improved street, highway, bridge or culvert within the state should comply strictly with the provisions of sections 7246 to 7249 G. C., but notwithstanding this fact the use to which the roads are put should be very destructive of the same, could said persons be enjoined from using the roads or would they be liable in damages for the destruction of the same. Without quoting same, these sections provide briefly as follows:

Section 7246 G. C. limits the total weight, including weight of vehicle, to 12 tons, when used upon the improved public streets, highways, bridges or culverts within the state.

Section 7247 G. C. provides that a vehicle of a greater weight may be used providing consent be obtained from the county surveyor of the county.

Section 7248 G. C. provides that the maximum weight of loaded vehicles shall vary in accordance with the width of the tire surface used upon the wheels of said vehicle.

Section 7249 G. C. provides the rates at which vehicles may travel over improved streets and roads, the rate depending upon the weight of the load carried. Now suppose any one using the improved streets and highways of the state keep strictly within the provisions of these four sections, but nevertheless greatly damages the same, could he be enjoined from the use of said roads or streets or be compelled to pay damages for the destruction of the same. It is my opinion that he could not be enjoined from the use of the improved streets and roads of the state under such conditions, neither could he be held in damages for the destruction of the improved streets and highways under such conditions. It might be held that under the principles of the common law, the traveling public would be compelled so to use the improved streets and highways of the state as not to unduly destroy them and thus do damage and injury to the public in general, but inasmuch as the legislature has seen fit to speak upon this question and has seen fit to lay down certain limits and restrictions within which the traveling public must keep themselves, it is my opinion that the matter is taken outside the domain of the common law and is strictly controlled by statute. It would seem that the legislature meant to give the traveling public the right to use the improved streets and highways of the state, provided they should keep within the limits and restrictions set out in these sections. This seems clear from the fact that the legislature laid down certain conditions and restrictions beyond which the traveling public must not go. While they cannot go beyond these limits and restrictions, it was evidently the intention of the legislature that the traveling public might use the improved streets and highways of the state provided they keep within these limits and restrictions.

Hence, answering your question specifically, it is my opinion that if a person complies strictly with the provisions of sections 7246 to 7251 inclusive, he cannot be enjoined from the use of the improved streets and highways of the state, neither can he be held in damages for the destruction of the same, and this even though the use to which he puts said highways is more than ordinarily destructive of the same.

In passing I might say that I note you suggest in your request that possibly trucks of greater than ten ton weight are being used upon said highway without the consent of the county surveyor of the county. Of course if this be correct, the parties would be liable under the law. The above opinion is based upon the theory that the parties in question are keeping strictly within the provisions of the sections above referred to.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ELECTIONS—ABSENT VOTER—TIME WITHIN WHICH TO APPLY FOR BALLOT.

An absent voter has a right to make application for an absent voter's ballot at any time up to midnight of Saturday, where an election is held on Tuesday.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, November 29, 1918.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your inquiry of November 12, 1918, is received. You submit the following question:

> "For the benefit of deputy state supervisors of elections I would like for you to interpret section 5078-1 as to the latest date before a general election a person may apply for an absent voter's ballot. In other words, is Friday or Saturday the latest date under this section that an application may be made for such a ballot?"

The act to which you refer is found in 107 O. L., page 52. Section 5078-1 of said act provides in part as follows:

> "It shall be lawful for any qualified elector who finds that he will be unavoidably absent from his home precinct on the day of any general, special or primary election to apply to the clerk of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections of his home county in writing or in person not earlier than thirty days and not later than three days prior to election day, stating the fact of his unavoidable absence from his precinct on election day and making application in writing for an absent voter's ballot. * * *."

The phrase to be construed is "not later than three days prior to election day." The rule to be applied in computing this time has been determined by the Supreme Court in the case of State vs. Board of Deputy State Supervisors and Inspectors of Elections, 93 O. S., 14, wherein the syllabus reads:

> "Under the provisions of section 5004 G. C., the period for filing nominating petitions does not expire until the end of the sixtieth day previous to the day of election, and it is the duty of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections to provide opportunity for the presentation of such petitions up to midnight of that day.
> Where a statute requires that an act be performed a fixed number of days previous to a specified day, the last day should be excluded and the first day included in making the computation.

A nominating petition of one seeking to qualify as a candidate in an election to be held on November 2, may be filed as late as September 3."

On page 17 of the Opinion Matthias J. cites from the case of Cosgriff vs. Election Commissioners, 151 Cal. 407, wherein the phrase to be construed was "not less than twenty days before the day of election." And the phrase to be construed in the above case was that "nomination papers of candidates shall be filed * * * not less than sixty days previous to the day of election."

The above phrases are like the one now under consideration and in computing time, the last day shall be excluded and the first day included in making the computation. Under this rule Monday, where an election is held on Tuesday, would be the first day prior to the election, Sunday the second day prior thereto and Saturday the third day.

Therefore, an absent voter has a right to make application for an absent voter's ballot at any time up to midnight of Saturday, where an election is held on Tuesday.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—NOT AUTHORIZED TO TRANSFER REAL ESTATE FROM ONE CORPORATION TO ANOTHER, WITHOUT EVIDENCE OF TITLE.

The county auditor is without authority to make transfer of real estate from an old corporation to a reorganized corporation, unless such corporation presents to the county auditor evidence sufficient under the statutes to show title to the real estate to be transferred to be in the new corporation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1918.

HON. C. G. ROETZEL, Prosecuting Attorney, Akron, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter in which you submit the following inquiry:

"Some 21 or 22 years ago a corporation was organized and formed in this city, known as The Peterson & Wright Company. Some years later, to-wit, about seven years ago, this company was reorganized and took the name of The Wright-Eddy Company. This existed for about one year, and the company was again reorganized and known as the W. E. Wright Company, and are now doing business under this name.

At the time of these various reorganizations, the real estate held by these corporations was not changed in name on the tax duplicate. The W. E. Wright Company has now made a request upon our county auditor that all of this property be placed on the tax duplicate in the name of the W. E. Wright Company. The county auditor is asking an opinion from this office as to whether or not this can be done without deeds being presented to him, showing a transfer of the property. I can find no statutory authority for such a transfer, and even if there was, inasmuch as a number of the officers of the old organization are now dead, with the exception of Mr. Wright, I doubt if there is an officer living who was in the old organization.

My opinion was that this could be brought about by some action to quiet title, but The W. E. Wright Company, through their attorneys, seem to think there might be something done in another way, but they do not seem to be able to suggest a manner in which it can be done. Will you kindly inform me whether, under the existing conditions, the auditor has a right to make this transfer without a petition being filed in our Common Pleas Court to quiet title, or if there is any authority by which the auditor can transfer this property now in the name of the two previous corporations and place it on the duplicate in the name of The W. E. Wright Company, unless deeds setting forth a transfer of this property are filed with him."

The duties of the county auditor in reference to the transfer of property upon the tax duplicate is prescribed by section 2573 General Code, which reads as follows:

"On application and presentation of title, with the affidavits required by law, or the proper order of a court, the county auditor shall transfer any land or town lot or part thereof charged with taxes on the tax list from the name in which it stands into the name of the owner, when rendered necessary by a conveyance, partition, devise, descent or otherwise."

Under this provision it is the duty of a person or a corporation desiring to have property transferred on the tax duplicate, to make application therefor to the county auditor and to make presentation of title to the lands to be transferred.

In the case of Cincinnati College vs. LaRue, 22 O. S., 469, the second branch of the syllabus reads in part:

"Before the auditor of a county can be required to transfer real property from the name in which it stands charged on the duplicate, to the name of a party to whom it has been assigned or conveyed, evidence of the title of the party, to whom the transfer is to be made, must be presented to the auditor."

The same conclusion is reached in the case of Dye, Auditor, vs. State, 73 O. S., 231, wherein the second branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

"Where the vendee of the coal underlying lands, desires to have the part of the premises transferred into his name on the tax list of the county, it is incumbent upon him, under the provisions of said section, to present to the county auditor proper evidence of his title and make satisfactory proof to him of the value of such coal as compared with the valuation of the whole lands as charged on the tax list; and a written agreement between the vendor and vendee of the coal as to a division of the valuation on the tax list between them, is not binding upon the auditor. The evidence on which he is to act is prescribed by the statute, and he can be compelled to act on no other."

These cases clearly show that before the county auditor can be required to make a transfer of real property upon the tax duplicate, evidence of title must be produced. He cannot make a transfer upon any other conditions.

You state in your letter that the corporation in question was reorganized. By this, I understand that a corporation was organized, and that it took over the assets in some manner of the old corporation. The old corporation did not, as I take it from your letter, merely amend its charter by a change of name.

The effect of a reorganization is stated at page 281, Volume X of Cyc., as follows:

> "It is often a matter of great importance to determine whether the effect of a statutory provision or a corporate act is to revive and continue an old corporation or to create a new one. If it has the latter effect, the new corporation does not possess the rights and is not subject to the liabilities of the old one, but if the effect is simply to renew or continue an old corporation its identity remains unchanged and its liabilities unimpaired."

It appears from this citation that where a new corporation is formed, such corporation does not possess the rights and is not subject to the liabilities of the old one.

At section 5985 of Thompson on Corporations, second edition, it is stated:

> "So a new corporation organized by the officers and stockholders of an existing corporation for the purpose of acquiring its property, but which did not acquire the same by purchase at judicial sale, was held not a continuance of the old corporation."

Where a new corporation is formed, such corporation does not, as a matter of course, succeed to the rights and property of the old corporation. There are several methods of affecting a reorganization. Under each method there is usually an agreement entered into by which the property of the old corporation is transferred to the new and the stockholders of the old corporation secure for their rights, stock in the new corporation.

Whatever the method of reorganization may be, the property cannot be transferred from the old corporation to the new without some agreement of transfer. Where property consists of real property, under the statutes of frauds, it is necessary that the conveyance be made in writing.

Therefore, the county auditor is without authority to make transfer of real estate from an old corporation to a reorganized corporation, unless such corporation presents to the county auditor evidence sufficient under the statutes to show title to the real estate to be transferred to be in the new corporation.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COUNCIL CANNOT ISSUE CERTIFICATES OF INDEBTEDNESS AGAINST TAX COLLECTION, WHEN.

The council of a municipal corporation may not under Section 3913 G. C. lawfully issue certificates of indebtedness against the tax collection for the first half of a given year and apply the proceeds to defray current expenses of the preceding fiscal year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have letters from you under recent dates raising the same general question, which may be phrased as follows:

> May the council of a municipal corporation under favor of Section 3913 G. C. lawfully issue certificates of indebtedness against the tax collection for the first half of a given year, and apply the proceeds to defray current expenses of the preceding fiscal year?

It appears that this practice has grown up to a considerable extent within the past year or so and that, doubt existing in your minds as to its legality, you desire my opinion as a guide for the future.

Section 3913 General Code provides as follows:

> "In anticipation of the general revenue fund in any fiscal year, such corporations may borrow money and issue certificates of indebtedness therefor, signed as municipal bonds are signed, but no loans shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for such fund, after deducting all advances. The sums so anticipated shall be deemed appropriated for the payment of such certificates at maturity. The certificates shall not run for a longer period than six months, nor bear a greater rate of interest than six per cent., and shall not be sold for less than par with accrued interest."

The section as I have quoted it was enacted as a part of the Municipal Code of 1902 (Section 95-96 O. L. 51). Prior to that time Section 2700 Revised Statutes had contained a similar provision. It provided as follows:

> "Loans may be made by municipal corporations in anticipation of the general revenue fund; but the aggregate amount of such loans in any fiscal year shall not exceed, * * * in a village, fifteen thousand dollars, in a city of the second class, fifty thousand dollars, in a city of the third grade of the first class, one hundred thousand dollars, and in any other city of the first class two hundred thousand dollars; provided, however, that no new loans shall be made until the loan previously made under this section has been fully paid and canceled; and provided further, that no loan as aforesaid shall be made during any fiscal year in anticipation of such fund exceeding the amount of taxes, and revenue from other sources, due and payable into the fund for the fiscal year."

Had your question arisen under Section 2700 Revised Statutes its answer would be pretty obvious. The borrowing power therein provided for was intended as an expedient whereby money actually levied for the purposes of a given fiscal year could during that year be brought into the treasury in advance of its collection, and applied to the proper purposes for which it had been levied. Section 2700 R. S. was never intended as a means whereby revenues levied for a subsequent year could be applied to the needs of a current year.

Putting it in another way: That section did not afford a method of borrowing money for real deficiencies, but only a method of bringing estimated revenues into the treasury in advance of their collection for expenditure for the purposes for which they had been levied. This is made clear by the whole tenor of Section 2700 R. S., and particularly by the following language thereof:

> (1) First, the amount was limited not only by the precise enumeration of the various classes of municipalities, but also by the amount payable into the fund "for the fiscal year." That is, at a time in the fiscal year when no more revenue remained payable into the general revenue fund for that year, the last tax collection for that year having been made and no miscellaneous revenues being in sight, this limitation would prevent the making of loans.
> (2) The very word "anticipation" carries something of the same idea. While I am unable to find any judicial definition of this word in a context like the one now under consideration, it seems to me that its use implies that the revenues anticipated are to be expended for the purposes for which they were levied.

The practice of issuing bonds or notes in anticipation of special taxes is well established in the statutory law of this state, especially with regard to counties. I would have no difficulty in holding as to a special tax that a loan made in anticipation of it could not be expended for any other purpose than that for which the tax is levied. Now, in a sense, all tax levies are special; that is, they all relate to the expenditures to be made in a particular year. But whether or not it is accurate to speak of a general tax levy as special in this sense for every purpose, Section 2700 R. S. clearly made them so for its purpose.

This was the view apparently taken of Section 2700 by the Circuit Court of Warren county in Dunham vs. Opes, 3 C. C. 274, 282, in the opinion in which the following dictum is found:

> "We took it for granted that this section (2700 R. S.) which allows loans to be made in anticipation of the general revenue fund levied for the current year related to the same fund for which the council of a village, under the provisions of Section 2682 was authorized to levy a tax * * * 'for the general purposes of the corporation' * * * and distinguished from those taxes which it was authorized to levy for any of the purposes mentioned in Section 2683 * * *."

It must be conceded, of course, that Section 3913 General Code, as adopted in 1902 and since codified, is dissimilar in phraseology to Section 2700 R. S., and can not be considered as a mere revision or codification of it; yet I think the same essential meaning is carried by Section 3913 G. C. as was expressed in Section 2700 R. S.

In the first place, we have again the phrase "in anticipation," which, as I see it, implies that which I have previously expressed. I may add at this point that neither Section 3913 G. C. nor Section 2700 R. S. contains any explicit expression regarding the purpose for which the loans may be made. Yet it would not be claimed, of course, that such loans might be made for any municipal purpose, and indeed this was one of the points directly involved in Dunham vs. Opes, supra, arising under Section 2700 R. S. On the contrary, it would have to be conceded that the purpose for which the loan is made must be one which at least pertains to the general revenue fund of the municipality; that is to say, it would not be lawful to borrow money in anticipation of the general revenue fund and expend it for a special purpose outside the pale of the general revenue fund. But I think, as I have already stated, that more is implied here, not by the word "anticipation" itself, but by the phrase "in any fiscal year" which immediately follows the phrase "general revenue fund" in the first clause of Section 3913. What may be anticipated? Not the general revenue fund as a continuous fund, but that fund "in any fiscal year." In other words, the general revenue fund for each fiscal year is considered as a special and distinct subject of anticipation for the purpose of Section 3913.

We have it, then, that the word "anticipation" expresses the purpose for which the borrowing may be made and means that the loan may be made for any purpose for which the anticipated revenues could be expended lawfully; we have it also that the revenues to be anticipated under Section 3913 are those for a given fiscal year; it must follow, therefore, that the purpose of the borrowing must be one within the scope of the levy anticipated, i. e., it must be an expenditure of the fiscal year for which the levy is made.

This view is enforced by all that follows in Section 3913. For example, it is therein provided "that the sums so anticipated shall be deemed appropriated for the payment of such certificates at maturity." Ordinarily, an appropriation can be lawfully made only from a fund which is susceptible to such appropriation. It would not be lawful, for example, to appropriate for sinking fund purposes from the general revenue fund. The very idea of a fund carries with it a partial appropriation, in that the fund may be appropriated and expended only for the purposes for which it was levied. This result follows from the plain meaning of the terms under discussion, but it is enforced by the provision of Article XII, Section 5 of the Constitution, which provides, in part, as follows:

> Every law imposing a tax shall state distinctly the object of the same, to which only it shall be applied."

So that it would take at least very clear and unequivocal language to permit the result that moneys levied for the purposes of a given fiscal year could be appropriated for any other purpose than those for which they were levied; and the similar purposes of a different fiscal year would be other purposes within this principle.

Again, Section 3913 G. C. contains, in different form to be sure, practically the identical provision of old Section 2700 R. S. which made that section so clear on the point under consideration. I refer, of course, to the limitation upon the amount of the loans which may be made. This part of Section 3913 is as follows:

> "No loans shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for such fund, after deducting all advances."

In order to get the full meaning of this clause the antecedent of the word "such" must be found. This appears to be the "general revenue fund in any fiscal year" as referred to in the first clause of the section. Thus expanded, the context now under examination would read as follows:

> "No loans shall be made to exceed the amount estimated to be received from taxes and revenues at the next semi-annual settlement of tax collections for the general revenue fund in any fiscal year."

We still have a slight ambiguity which leads me to say that, in my opinion, the phrase "in any fiscal year," used in connection with the phrase "in anticipation" as it is in the first clause of Section 3913 G. C., means substantially the same thing as was meant by the last clause of Section 2700 R. S. when it said:

> "No loan shall be made during any fiscal year in anticipation of such fund exceeding the amount * * * due and payable into the fund for the fiscal year."

the only difference being that under Section 2700 R. S. the entire income of the general revenue fund could be anticipated up to the amount limitations therein imposed; while under Section 3913 G. C. only receipts from taxes can be anticipated, and there is no amount limitation otherwise.

I do not take time to refer to the tax levying provisions of the Municipal Code as adopted in 1902 and as embodied in Sections 3787 to 3795, inclusive, nor to the appropriation provisions thereof found in Sections 3796 to 3798, inclusive, General Code. Suffice it to say that the general framework of these sections is consistent with all that I have said about the separation of fiscal years; the general intent running through all of them being that the needs of each fiscal year shall be estimated in budget form and that each fiscal year shall be considered as a separate time unit for the purposes of levying and appropriating. If Section 3913 G. C. should be interpreted in the opposite way from that in which I have interpreted it, it would constitute a striking exception to the general policy of the fiscal provisions of the Municipal Code in this respect.

But there are other evidences pointing in the same direction. To permit Section 3913 G. C. to be used as your question suggests that it has been used would be to allow it to be the means of borrowing money for the purpose of meeting deficiencies. This was never its intent, for the reason, as I have shown, that to anticipate revenues implies no such idea. But I am sure that it was never the legislative intention to permit Section 3913 G. C. to be so used, because special provision for the issue of deficiency bonds was found in Section 99 of the Municipal Code of 1902, now embodied in Section 3931 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "Council may issue deficiency bonds in such amount and denominations, for such periods of time, not to exceed fifty years and at such rate of interest not to exceed six per cent as it deems best when in the opinion of council it is necessary to supply a deficiency in the revenues of the corporation. The total amount of deficiency bonds issued by a corporation, outstanding at any time, shall not exceed one per cent of the total value of all property in the corporation as listed and assessed for taxation. The issuance of such bonds shall be approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the electors of the corporation voting upon such question at a regular or special election to be provided for by council."

We are, I think, not to look upon Sections 3913 and 3931 as roughly corresponding to provisions of the so-called "Longworth Act", Section 3939 et seq. of the General Code, under favor of one of which the council may issue bonds for specific purposes up to a certain limit and the electors by a two-thirds vote may authorize the issuance of such bonds beyond that limit but within certain further specified limits. Section 3931 does not say that the vote of the electors may be invited, at the option of council, nor that it shall be taken whenever the bonds to be issued exceed a certain amount. On the contrary, its mandate is that the issuance of deficiency bonds "shall be approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the members elected to council, and approved by the votes of two-thirds of all the electors of the corporation voting upon such question." In other words, the general assembly intended to impose very strict limitations upon the practice of borrowing money for the purpose of supplying a deficiency in revenues. The whole tax levying machinery of a municipality had been so constructed in the sections to which I have referred but which I have not quoted as to make as nearly impossible as could be the creation of deficiencies. Municipal administrative officers would know long in advance just what their revenues would be during the year, and it was contemplated that the municipality should live within its revenues. Accordingly the strict checks which are found in Section 3931 G. C. were placed upon the borrowing of money to supply deficiencies. I attach no importance to the fact that Section 3913 G. C. deals with non-negotiable evidences of indebtedness, while Section 3931 deals with bonds. My point is that, having regard to the whole fiscal machinery of the Municipal Code, it will not do to hold that Section 3913 can lawfully be used for the purpose of supplying deficiencies in municipal revenues. It may, as I have said, be used only for the purpose of bringing revenues into the treasury before they would otherwise be collected.

What I have said makes it unnecessary for me to refer, except in a general way, to the Smith one per cent law, so-called, and particularly Section 5649-3a and succeeding sections of the General Code. While this law was passed some years after the Municipal Code of 1902 was enacted, yet its general purport is strikingly similar to that of the Municipal Code. Prior to 1911, when the "Smith Law" was enacted, a municipality was the only taxing sub-division of the state having a definite fiscal year, a budgetary system of levying and an annual and semi-annual appropriation-making. The Smith Law now extends this scheme to all taxing districts, and though it modifies in some particulars in which we are not now interested the law applicable to municipal corporations, as such, yet it is not too much to say that the fundamental idea of the Smith Law, in so far as its budget and appropriation provisions are concerned, is borrowed from the Municipal Code. In fact, the language of some of the sections of the Smith Law is palpably transcribed from the corresponding provisions of the Municipal Code to which I have referred. Like the Municipal Code, the Smith Law contains provisions to the effect that the levying authorities, including the council of a municipality, shall annually determine the needs of the subdivision for which they are levying for the ensuing fiscal year, and at the beginning of each half year appropriations shall be made from which all expenditures within the following six months shall be made. The Smith Law adds a new provision in this latter connection, in that it requires that no appropriation shall be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget.

We have it, then, that both the tax levying provisions of the Municipal Code and the subsequent and controlling provisions of the Smith Law have the effect of dedicating the levies for a particular year to the expenditures of that year. The fiscal year of a municipal corporation begins and ends on the first day of January, and the February tax settlement of a given year is for the purpose of running the government of the city for the first half of the calendar year in which it occurs.

Without going into detail, I conclude that under all the sections in pari materia money may not be borrowed in one fiscal year in anticipation of a tax settlement which belongs to a succeeding fiscal year, and applied to the needs of the municipality for the year in which the borrowing is made.

I am aware that this conclusion forces the result that between the date of the August settlement and the end of the year no money can be borrowed under Section 3913 G. C., because the next ensuing tax settlement would be for the purposes of the succeeding fiscal year. Nevertheless, I am of the opinion that the principle which I have laid down is correct, and that if the funds of the municipality are depleted during the second half of the fiscal year and after the August settlement, some other way to secure money must be found.

The foregoing conclusions are in a measure supported by the opinion of one of my predecessors, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, to Hon. Edward C. Turner, prosecuting attorney, which is found in Volume II of Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1912, at page 1128. Mr. Hogan was dealing with a condition existing in the finances of Franklin county. It appeared that there were overdrafts in certain funds represented by outstanding warrants stamped, "Not Paid for Want of Funds," under Section 2675 G. C., as previously in force.

Section 2677 G. C., as previously in force, provided that:

> "As soon as sufficient funds are in the treasury of the county to redeem the warrants drawn thereon, and on which interest is accruing, the treasurer shall give notice * * * that he is ready to redeem such warrants * * *."

In other words, the effect of outstanding warrants stamped "Not Paid for Want of Funds." upon moneys coming in at a succeeding tax settlement, was something like the effect of the certificate of indebtedness issued under Section 3913 G. C. upon the next succeeding tax settlement.

After pointing out that the treasurer could not give the notice provided for by former Section 2677 G. C. until there had been an appropriation under Section 5649-3d, Mr. Hogan came to the question as to whether or not the commissioners might make such an appropriation, and in that connection used the following language.

> "Inasmuch as the purpose of a levy under the Smith Law for a certain fund is, * * * in the absence of express language in the budget to the contrary, presumed to be provision for the needs of the fund for the incoming year; inasmuch as no appropriation can be made for any purpose not set forth in the annual budget; * * * I am clearly of the opinion that neither is it the duty of the auditor to credit any part of the February collection for taxes against the overdraft or deficiency in the treasury; nor is it within the power of the county commissioners to appropriate any such moneys for that purpose."

In short, overdrafts are simply illegal and can not have the effect, under the Smith Law, of depleting the funds levied for a given fiscal year. In my opinion, therefore, a certificate of indebtedness issued under the circumstances stated would be unauthorized.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—NOT AUTHORIZED TO LEVY ASSESSMENTS FOR STREET LIGHTING.

Municipal corporations in this state are not authorized to levy special assessments to pay any part of the cost of lighting streets.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have requested my opinion upon the following question:

"Statement of Facts.

A municipality of this state which has a municipal electric light plant makes its charges for public lighting by special assessment plan, assessing all properties of the municipality by property valuations. On this assessment no assessment bonds are issued, of course, and the plan is evidently to circumvent the limitations of the Smith one per cent tax law by assessing as described in preference to a general tax levy for lighting purposes. The assessments levied are certified to the county auditor for collection and when paid into the municipal treasury are transferred to the sinking fund trustees to apply upon the bonded debt of the municipality. There are some outstanding bonds of the municipal light plant but these revenues are not credited to these specific bonds but to general bonded debt.

Question: Is this procedure legal?"

Section 3812 of the General Code provides as follows:

"Each municipal corporation shall have special power to levy and collect special assessments, to be exercised in the manner provided by law. The council of any municipal corporation may assess upon the abutting, adjacent and contiguous or other specially benefited lots or lands in the corporation, any part of the entire cost of an expense connected with the improvement of any street, * * * or place by grading, draining, curbing, paving, * * * or laying of water pipe and any part of the cost of lighting, sprinkling, sweeping, cleaning or planting shade trees thereupon, and any part of the cost and expense connected with or made for changing the channel of, or * * * improving any stream or watercourse, and for constructing or improving any levee or levees, or boulevards thereon, or along or about the same, * * * which the council may declare conducive to the public health, convenience or welfare, * * *."

I call attention to the fact that this section, which embodies the enabling clause of what has come to be known familiarly as the "Taylor Law", empowers the council of a municipal corporation to levy special assessments for three distinct purposes or objects, viz:

(1) Street improvements, in which is contemplated work of a structural nature, or at the most that which is capable of exact estimation and constitutes a specific "job."

(2) (Departing from the order in which they are found in the statutes). River improvements, with respect to which the same remarks are applicable.

(3) A group of objects to which the above remarks are not applicable at all, such as sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning streets. These are rather in the nature of continual services than specific jobs; and in this clause is found the word "lighting", the application of which is involved in your inquiry.

Consistently with this enumeration of objects in Section 3812 G. C. is found the machinery for making "a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments" (Sec. 3814), consisting of the passage of a resolution of necessity, the preliminary preparation of plans, specifications, estimates and profiles, service of notice of the resolution, the passage of an ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement, etc., culminating in the letting of the contract for the improvement. These sections run from Section 3814 to Section 3837 General Code, both inclusive, and have to do solely with the first two classes which I have above distinguished. In other words, they deal with making a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments as the introductory section indicates. There are some special provisions, of course, for sewers found in Sections 3871 et seq. of the General Code which it is not necessary to notice here.

All this machinery, as I have hinted, is appropriate only in case of the making of an improvement, i. e., the doing of the work on a specific job, and can have no application to the rendition of a municipal service, like sweeping or cleaning streets or lighting them. This is made very clear by comparison of the sections to which I have just referred with Sections 3839 to 3845, inclusive, relating to sweeping, sprinkling and cleaning of streets, and in particular by observing the parallel provisions of Sections 3846 and 3837. Both of these sections deal with what shall happen when municipal or other public property is specially benefited by the improvement or service for which assessments are levied. If the schemes were not entirely separate and distinct there would have been no necessity for Section 3846.

Coming now to Sections 3839 et seq. of the General Code, it is to be observed that the procedure therein outlined is as follows:

Unless street commissioners are provided for (Sections 3840-3841), the council passes an ordinance providing for the sprinkling, sweeping or cleaning which is contemplated (Section 3842); notice of the passage of this ordinance is to be given by newspaper publication (Section 3843); the entire cost and expense connected with the work in any year may by ordinance be assessed (Section 3844); bonds may be issued and sold in anticipation of the assessments (Section 3845).

I have now dealt with all the statutes found in the chapter of the present Municipal Code which relate to assessments, excepting those dealing with the method of making assessments according to benefits (Sections 3847 to 3852, inclusive) and those dealing with the construction of sidewalks and curbing, etc. (Sections 3853 to 3870-2 inclusive).

It will be seen that the procedure for assessing the annual cost of a service is much simpler than that for assessing the cost of a specific improvement, and that the two procedures are entirely separate and distinct.

This examination of the related provisions, however, has disclosed the striking fact that no machinery for assessing the cost of lighting a street is specifically provided for in the existing laws in spite of the grant of power in Section 3812 to assess such cost. Lighting a street is not an "improvement" and therefore the provisions of Sections 3814 et seq. do not apply, and authority to proceed thereunder for this purpose is lacking. On the other hand, the simpler procedure for assessing the annual cost of a municipal service found in Sections 3839 et seq. is limited to sprinkling, sweeping and cleaning, which are the very matters that, together with "planting shade trees thereupon," are mentioned in the same context in Section 3812 with "lighting." It is very clear to my mind that the procedure outlined in Sections 3839 et seq. of the General Code can not directly be applied to lighting the streets. Yet we still have the express provision of Section 3812, which must mean that the General Assembly at least attempted to grant authority to a municipal council to assess the annual cost of lighting streets upon the specially benefited property.

The statutes are thus ambiguous and an investigation into their legislative history with a view to resolving the ambiguity is suggested. Such investigation discloses a curious state of affairs. Section 3812, which I have referred to as the enabling provision of the so-called "Taylor Law", is in point of fact a codification of Section 9 of the Municipal Code of 1902 (96 O. L. 26). To explain the presence of the word "lighting" in it we go back to Section 2292 Revised Statutes, which was repealed at the time the Municipal Code of 1902 was enacted. That section provided as follows:

> "For the payment of the cost of lighting the corporation the council may, by ordinance, levy and assess a tax in proportion to the feet front on the lots and lands bounding or abutting on the streets and avenues lighted; but in cities of the second grade of the second class, council shall, by ordinance, levy and assess a tax of five-tenths of one mill on all property assessed upon the general duplicate * * for such purpose, and in addition thereto, a tax according to the valuation of the property, as assessed upon the tax duplicate, on the lots and lands bounding and abutting on the streets and avenues so lighted; and all the provisions of this chapter concerning special assessments and the collection thereof, which, in their nature, are applicable, shall apply to assessments for this purpose."

This section dates from the revision of 1880. The codifiers in the official edition of the Code for that year assigned Section 584 of the Municipal Code of 1869 (66 O. L. 248) and the act found in 76 O. L., 13, as the source of the law then codified. There is absolutely nothing about lighting streets in Section 584 of the Municipal Code of 1869. The act found in 76 O. L. 13 applied only to cities of the second grade of the second class, viz: the City of Toledo. It is evident, therefore, that the codifiers of 1880 so changed the form of the pre-existing law as to make a special act general in part, and it remained general in form and unambiguous in purport, except in so far as the careless legislative method of adopting other statutes by reference "which in their nature are applicable" might have made it difficult to interpret, down to the revision of 1902. What happened then was the repeal of the pre-existing statutes and the enactment of a new set of provisions in which the naked power to assess for the purpose of lighting was reaffirmed, but from which the provision found in original Section 2292 R. S., to the effect that all provisions for making assessments which in their nature might be applicable should apply to this particular section, was omitted; and in which again the procedure or machinery for making assessments of various kinds was so outlined as to exclude from the operation of any of the methods of making assessments the exercise of the power to assess for lighting.

Two choices only are open to me:

> (1) To regard the present statutes as incomplete and defective and to hold accordingly that, despite the mention of the power in Section 3812, it does not effectually exist at the present time.
> (2) To interpret the Municipal Code of 1902 as a codification of the pre-existing law, and where ambiguity or incompleteness exists to resolve or supply such ambiguity or incompleteness by referring to the pre-existing law.

I find myself unable to interpret the Municipal Code of 1902 in the way last suggested. It was not a mere codification of the pre-existing law. It was in form and in substance an entirely new act, except in so far as previously existing statutes were adopted by reference. This conclusion is borne out by the legislative and judicial history of this state. It is well known that prior to 1902 the General Assembly, acting under the seeming authority of a long line of decisions by the Supreme Court, had passed laws for the government of municipal corporations which, though general in form and theoretically operating with uniformity throughout the state, were in fact and in substance special and local.

In Platt vs. Craig et al., 66 O. S., 75, and State ex. rel. Knisely et al. vs. Jones et al., 66 O. S., 453, the Supreme Court upset this whole legislative scheme and made it necessary to enact an entirely new system of legislation. In fact in State ex rel. vs. Beacom et al., 66 O. S., 491, decided with State ex rel. Knisely vs. Jones, the execution of the judgment of the Supreme Court was suspended from June 26, 1902, when such case was decided, until October 2, 1902, in order to give the legislature an opportunity to pass a constitutional set of statutes. This was done in extraordinary session of the General Assembly, the work of which is found in Volume 96 of the Ohio Laws.

In view of these facts I feel myself unable to apply to the interpretation of the legislation of 1902 the principles which the Supreme Court has recently applied to the codification of 1910 in the case of Elmwood Place vs. Schanzle, 91 O. S. 354. In that case an omitted provision of a former statute was read back into the codified statute to supply the deficiencies of the latter. But the legislation of 1910 was an avowed codification—a mere revision, and the opinion in the case last cited makes it very clear that this was the sole ground upon which the court felt able to arrive at the conclusion there expressed. The Municipal Code of 1902 did not partake of this character, and if it is found to have imperfections it must stand or fall as a unit and can not be aided by provisions found in the pre-existing law but omitted from it.

Taking the statutes as we find them, then, the reasons already stated compel the first of the two answers above suggested. The naked grant of power to assess the cost of lighting streets is in the statutes, but this is not enough; the machinery must be supplied in order to make that grant effectual; the machinery of improving a street is not appropriate, and the machinery of sweeping or cleaning a street, though appropriate, is not made applicable to lighting streets.

Thus far in this opinion I have assumed that the word "lighting" means the furnishing of a service. It is at least susceptible to another meaning, viz: the installation of equipment for lighting, such as cluster light posts and the like. I do not decide the question as to what the word "lighting" means, though I am inclined to think that it was intended to mean that which the municipality about which you inquire construed it as meaning; for if it does not mean that, then your question must be generally answered in the negative, while, as I have shown, if it does mean that, your question must still be answered in the negative for lack of machinery to make the grant of power effectual.

The conclusion at which I have arrived makes it unnecessary for me to consider the subsidiary question relative to the application of the assessments.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—PAYMENT OF SPECIAL ASSESSMENTS AFTER THIRTY DAY PERIOD WITHOUT INTEREST, WHEN.

Deferred installments of special assessments for street improvements made by municipal corporations do not bear interest. The interest on the bonds issued in anticipation of their collection constitutes a part of the body of the assessments themselves and is inseparable from such assessments.

Council is authorized, however, to provide by legislation in alternative form for two assessments; one exclusive of the interest and payable in cash within a certain time to be fixed by the ordinance (there being no statute fixing such time), and the other inclusive of the interest on the bonds and payable in annual installments.

Where the interest has been assessed and the assessment has been certified to the county auditor for collection, the city council may not by resolution authorize the county treasurer and county auditor to accept payment of all or any part of the assessment less such interest; nor can the county officers, acting under such resolution or on their own initiative, lawfully accept such lesser amount.

A resolution of council authorizing the acceptance of payment of an assessment without the interest after the period within which, under the assessing ordinance, such payment was originally authorized is effectual to authorize the city treasurer to accept such payment prior to the certification of such assessment to the county auditor, if the same does not amount to a discrimination against those who may have already paid in cash in accordance with the terms of the original assessing ordinance.

The city treasurer is authorized to accept full payment of an assessment or of any installment thereof falling due prior to the certification thereof to the county officers, notwithstanding that the assessing ordinance may have provided for payment in cash, less interest on the bonds, to the city treasurer within a limited period of time expiring before such certification; but without authority from council the city treasurer can not remit such part of the assessment as represents the interest on the bonds after such period has expired, even as to a property owner who desires to pay the assessment in full.

The city treasurer's authority to accept payment of an assessment terminates when the assessment has been certified for collection to the county officers.

As to whether the county treasurer can lawfully accept full payment (including interest on bonds) of an assessment certified to the county auditor for collection in installments, QUERY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion as follows:

"Statement of Facts.

In a municipality of the State of Ohio, the assessing ordinances provide that a property owner shall have the privilege of making full cash payment in thirty days. The solicitor advised the auditor and treasurer that cash payment can be received and accepted by the city treasurer after the expiration of such thirty days and for a protracted period. Under advice of an examiner of this department, the treasurer and auditor have refused to accept payment after the thirty day period specified in the ordinance; and after the assessment bonds have been issued and the unpaid assessments have been certified to the county auditor for collection, the council of such municipality passed a resolution authorizing the county auditor and the county treasurer to accept cash payment when tendered and to remit the interest, thus throwing the interest on the assessment in such instance upon the municipality. We are referring you to the provisions of Sections 3815, 3881, 3892 and 3905 G. C.

Question 1: Has council power to pass a resolution of such nature?

Question 2: Can the city treasurer accept cash payment upon an assessment after the period provided for cash payment in the assessing ordinance has expired?

Question 3: Can the county auditor and county treasurer legally accept cash payments on assessments after assessments have been certified to the county auditor for collection?

Question 4: Can the county auditor and treasurer legally remit the interest charges on such assessments?

Question 5: Section 3881 G. C. fixes the period which shall be allowed a person to pay the cash assessments at thirty days. Is there any statutory provision for the fixing of the time of allowing cash payments on street improvements?"

The sections to which you refer me are as follows:

"Section 3815. * * * In such resolution (of necessity) council shall * * determine the method of assessment, the mode of payment, and whether or not bonds shall be issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. Assessments for any improvement may be payable in one to twenty installments at such time as council prescribes." (107 O. L. 151)

"Section 3881. * * * Any person so assessed shall have the option of paying his proportion of the assessment in cash within the period of thirty days from the date of the levy thereof upon due notice being given."

"Section 3892. When any special assessment is made, has been confirmed by council, and bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness of the corporation are issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, the clerk of the council, on or before the second Monday in September, each year, shall certify such assessment to the county auditor, stating the amounts and the time of payment. The county auditor shall place the assessment upon the tax list in accordance therewith and the county treasurer shall collect it in the same manner as other taxes are collected, and when collected pay such assessment to the treasurer of the corporation, to be by him applied to the payment of such bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness and interest thereon, and for no other purpose. For the purpose of enforcing such collection, the county treasurer shall have the same power and authority as allowed by law for the collection of state and county taxes."

"Section 3905. The council may order the clerk or other proper officer of the corporation to certify any unpaid assessment or tax to the auditor of the county in which the corporation is situated, and the amount of such assessment or tax so certified, shall be placed upon the tax list by the county auditor, and shall, with ten per cent penalty to cover interest and cost of collection, be collected with and in the same manner as state and county taxes, and credited to the corporation. Such ten per cent penalty shall in no case be added unless at least thirty days intervene between the date of the publication of the ordinance making the levy and the time of certifying it to the county auditor for collection."

Some of these provisions I do not believe to be applicable to the questions submitted by you. On the other hand, there are other provisions which you have not mentioned which are applicable.

"Section 3893. In all other cases, such assessments shall be paid to and collected by the treasurer of the municipality, and in any event the clerk of the council, when the receipt is presented to him by the owner, showing the payment of an assessment on his property, shall enter such receipt on the margin of the record of the assessment."

"Section 3817. When bonds are issued in anticipation of the collection of the assessment, the interest thereon shall be treated as part of the cost of the improvement for which assessment may be made. If such assessment or any installment thereof is not paid when due, it shall bear interest until the payment thereof at the same rate as the bonds issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, and the county auditor shall annually place upon the tax duplicate the penalty and interest as therein provided."

Your statement of facts makes it plain that all the questions which you have asked relate to the collection of assessments in anticipation of which bonds have been issued.

A few general comments on the theory of assessments under the present Municipal Code will, I think, clear the way of several seeming difficulties. Assessments do not bear interest until due. On the contrary, the interest which the municipality has to pay on the bonds is a part of the total cost which is to be apportioned; it enters into and becomes a part of the assessment itself, and is not a thing separate from it. This statement is not affected, in my judgment, by the last sentence of Section 3881 G. C. above quoted. So far as this provision is concerned it does not purport to authorize the payment of any different amount when payment is made in cash than would be paid if all the installments should be allowed to run their course before payment. In other words, payment in cash as referred to in Section 3881 G. C. does not, in my opinion, contemplate the payment of a lesser amount than the aggregate of all the installments. In the original Municipal Code of 1902 the phrase was "in full." The word "full" was stricken out and the word "cash" inserted by the amendment in 97 Ohio Laws, page 51, in which other changes not material in the present case were made. I do not see that this amendment effected any material change in the section in this respect. The phrase "his proportion of the assessment" must be read in connection with Section 3817 G. C., which shows that such proportion of the assessment includes the interest on the bonds.

Of course, Section 3881 G. C., however interpreted, does not have general application but only applies to assessments for sewer purposes.

Indeed the statutes will be searched in vain for any authority to permit a person assessed for a municipal improvement to pay anything less than his proportion of the entire cost of the improvement, including interest on the bonds.

But I can not shut my eyes to the fact that the practice has been otherwise. I feel that the best that can be done under the circumstances is to find some basis for power on the part of the council to authorize the collection of less than the proper proportion of the entire assessment from an individual who pays the same before the installments thereof are due, and to point out, if possible, the proper procedure by which such a result can be achieved and the limitations on the power to achieve it.

If the assessment is made before any bonds are issued, then, of course, Section 3817 G. C. does not apply and the interest on the bonds is not to be treated as a part of the cost of the improvement. See in this connection Section 3896 G. C., which states what the cost of the improvement shall include and in which the phraseology is as follows:

"Interest on bonds, where bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection of assessments."

But when the assessment is made in this manner I know of no authority in any administrative officer subsequently to include the interest on the bonds as a part of the assessment.

Section 3812 of the General Code authorizes the council to assess "any part of the entire cost" of a municipal improvement. Section 3817, which has been quoted, merely provides that the interest on the bonds when bonds have been issued in anticipation of the collection of the assessment "shall be treated as a part of the cost of the improvement for which assessment may be made." Section 3820 provides that—

> "The corporation shall pay such part of the cost and expense of improvements for which special assessments are levied as council deems just, which part shall be not less than one-fiftieth of all such cost and expense, and in addition thereto, the corporation shall pay the cost of intersections."

I think it is clear from these sections that the city may decide to assume the entire burden of the interest; and that if the assessment is made before the bonds are issued and nothing else is done by council the legal result would be that the interest on the bonds is not a part of the assessed cost of the improvement, and that there will be no administrative authority to include it therein. In such a case, therefore, if the owner of the property which is assessed exercises his privilege of paying in cash he will not pay any part of the interest which would be a burden on the general tax duplicate; and even if this privilege is not exercised and the assessment is certified for collection to the county auditor, the interest on the bonds will not, without more, constitute a part of the deferred installments.

I now call attention to Section 3909 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

> "If an assessment proves insufficient to pay for the improvement and expenses incident thereto, the council may, under the limitation prescribed for such assessment, make an additional pro rata assessment to supply the deficiency. In case a larger amount is collected than is necessary, it shall be returned to the persons from whom it was collected, in proportion to the amounts collected from such persons respectively. This section shall be subject to the limitations contained in other sections of this chapter."

It is apparent from this section that the powers of council are not functus officio when it has made a single assessment if it turns out that the total cost of the improvement as elsewhere defined, excepting that part which the council has determined that the city shall pay, is not covered by the assessments which have already been made. So that, returning to the first case which I have supposed, if the council should have levied assessments before any bonds were issued and without determining formally that the city should bear the interest on any bonds that might thereafter be issued, it should simply apportion in the first assessment the total cost of the improvement other than the interest on bonds; and if it should later become necessary to issue bonds in anticipation of the collection of assessments that were not paid in cash, an additional assessment might be made under favor of section 3909 to provide for the payment of interest.

We have it, then, that council may by passing two separate assessing ordinances apportion, first, the cost of the improvement without the interest on the bonds; and second, the cost of the interest on the bonds. If this can be done, I do not see why it is not perfectly lawful for council to achieve the same object by passing a single assessing ordinance with alternative provisions; first assessing the total cost, exclusive of the interest on the bonds, and making that assessment payable in cash only, and not in installments at all; then making another apportionment of the total cost, inclusive of the interest on the bonds, and providing that that may be paid in installments. This, in my judgment, is the legal way to put into effect the practice which obtains so largely in the municipalities of this state.

The foregoing comments are intended to show just what authority there is in law for the separation of the interest on the bonds from the remainder of the total cost and expense of the improvement for the purpose of apportionment.

I am aware that this is not the practice which obtains, and that the form given, for example, in Ellis' Municipal Code, page 290, was evidently drafted upon another theory. I quote the form to illustrate the difference in ideas:

> "That the total assessment against each lot shall be payable in cash within ____ days of the date of the final passage of this ordinance, or in ____ annual installments with interest at the rate of __ per cent per annum upon deferred payments, at the option of the owner."

As I see it, this form is entirely erroneous, in that it assumes that the interest is no part of the assessment but that the deferred installments bear interest. Both assumptions are wrong, as I have shown. I suppose that most of the assessing ordinances that have been passed in municipalities have followed the form which I have quoted. I am not disposed to say that these ordinances are invalid but am suggesting that they be treated as if they had been phrased in accordance with the theory which I have laid down, viz: that of alternative assessments.

Your questions, however, go to the power of the council to remit what in legal effect is a part of an assessment after the same has been made and certified to the county auditor for collection. The power of the council to do this by legislation appropriate to that end would afford an interesting study. The effect of the assessment is to impose a liability in favor of the corporation secured by lien on the property assessed. The general question would be as to the power of the council to release obligations existing in favor of the municipality; for if the council can release in part it can release the whole, and I see no distinction in principle between remitting interest which has entered into the assessment and canceling the entire assessment as to particular property owners. Council has the general control of the finances of the corporation. In the case of an over-assessment it has authority to remit the excess, and it is even its duty to return that which has been collected in excess of the amount necessary. (Sec. 3909, supra).

However, when the assessment has been certified to the county officers for collection another principle operates. It has been decided that when this is done the cause of action on the assessment passes from the city and vests in the county officers. Not even the statutory requirement that actions shall be brought in the name of the real party in interest can operate so as to authorize the city to sue. (Railroad Co. vs. Bellaire, 67 O. S., 297). The decision cited was rendered under statutes other than those immediately under consideration, but it is believed that its principle applies to the latter. It is difficult to see how council could have any authority to release a claim which does not constitute an actual or potential cause of action in favor of the city. I would be content, therefore, to rest my conclusion upon this ground upon the exact facts submitted by you.

If council, instead of attempting by resolution to authorize the county auditor and the county treasurer to accept the payment of a lesser sum than that which really constituted the assessment certified to them for collection, had amended the ordinance by the passage of another ordinance changing the assessment itself, a different question would arise. Though the cause of action which exists when an assessment has been made and certified to the county auditor vests in the county treasurer, yet it rests upon an ordinance of council which is of continuing force and not fully executed. It would seem (though I do not so decide) that council might by repealing or amending the ordinance remove the entire foundation of the assessment and that such action would be binding upon the county officers. Of course, this could not be done in any event where some of the property owners had paid their assessments in cash; for this would result in discrimination among property owners of the same class. This, however, was not done in the case described by you; but council has attempted to treat the assessment as a claim in favor of the city subject to release in part. Such action by resolution can not be effective as a repeal or amendment of the assessing ordinance, and for reasons already stated it is nugatory as an attempt to release a claim existing in favor of the city.

For all the foregoing reasons I answer your first question in the negative; that is, council may be said, of course, to have the power to pass such resolutions as it pleases but the resolution which it has passed in the case stated by you is neither binding upon the county officers nor does it authorize them to act in accordance with its terms.

The reasoning in which I have indulged also answers your fourth question. The county auditor and the county treasurer are without authority on any ground whatsoever to remit what you have designated as the "interest charges on such assessment" but which in contemplation of law amount to a part of the body of the assessments themselves. The least action that can authorize them to accept less than the amount certified to them for collection is an ordinance of council amending the assessing ordinance; but I do not wish to be understood as passing upon the question that would be raised if such an ordinance had been passed.

Your second question was in a way passed upon in the opinion of this department directed to the bureau under date of December 7, 1917, (Opinions of the Attorney-General for that year, Volume 3, page 2380). Therein, in referring to Section 3893 of the General Code, which, following Section 3892 above quoted, provides:

> "In all other cases, such assessment shall be paid to and collected by the treasurer of the municipality, * * *."

I said:

> "I am able to apprehend no sufficient reason for holding that these sections can not be applied to assessments when bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued in anticipation of the collection thereof, but the date of certification has not yet arrived. The phrase 'in all other cases' in Section 3893 should not in my opinion receive such an interpretation as to mean cases other than those in which bonds, notes or certificates of indebtedness have been issued in anticipation of assessments; rather it means in my opinion cases other than those in which, under the preceding section, the unpaid assessments have been certified for collection to the county auditor. An assessment is, under Section 3897, a lien from the date thereof. It would be most unjust to create such a lien and prevent its discharge by the owner of the property at any time after it is created. The statutes should not receive such an interpretation but in my judgment should be so construed as to permit the payment of the assessment at any time after it is levied."

In other words, at least up to the time when the certification to the county auditor was made the property owner has the right to pay his whole assessment in cash.

But, as I have already pointed out, this does not mean that the city treasurer can accept payment of the amount assessed less interest during this entire period. The assessing ordinance will have fixed the date within which such payment without interest can be made. After that date the city treasurer is, in my opinion, not authorized to accept anything except a cash settlement of the entire assessment including all interest which would run if the assessments should remain unpaid until due.

But, again, we encounter the question as to the right of council to release the assessment in part at this stage of the proceedings. It will be observed that at this time the county authorities have nothing whatever to do with the collection of the assessment. It is in the hands of the city authorities and they are subject to the control of the council by proper action. We now face, therefore, the question as to whether council, without amending the assessing ordinance, can by resolution release that part of the assessment which represents the interest on the bonds in favor of all property owners who after the cash payment period has expired, but before the certification to the county officers, are willing to pay cash. In my opinion this may lawfully be done, if no one has paid his assessment within the cash payment period. To extend the time as to some after exacting payment of others would involve discrimination against those who had paid under the original rule, which could not be sustained against their objections at least. The only material difference between a resolution and an ordinance is that respecting the necessity of publication. Both resolutions and ordinances are subject to the same rules as to the formalities of adoption, excepting that an ordinance requires the concurrence of a majority of all members elected to council (Sec. 4224 G. C.); both are subject to the referendum (Sec. 4227-2 G. C.); both must be presented to the mayor for approval (Sec. 4234 G. C.). Instances are recorded wherein the compromise of litigation and the confession of judgment have been authorized by resolution (Walcutt vs. Columbus, 6 C. C. n. s., 271).

When, therefore, prior to the certification to the county auditor the council, by resolution, takes action which in effect amounts to an extension of the time of making payments in cash, less the interest (which in legal effect constitutes a part of the assessment) such action is sufficient to authorize the city treasurer while the assessment remains in his hands to accept such lesser sum, subject to what I have said about discrimination against those who may have already paid.

If Section 3881 G. C. above quoted really meant (as you seem to infer that it means) that the thirty day period should be allowed to the property owner to pay his assessment in cash without the inclusion of interest therein, there would be strong ground for asserting that this statute would be controlling and would prevent council from fixing a longer period as to sewer assessments, either in its assessing ordinance or by the indirect means just discussed, within which such payment might be accepted. I have already stated that I do not hold this to be the meaning of Section 3881 G. C., and in repeating that statement I have, of course, incidentally answered your fifth question.

One element of your second question remains to be considered: Can the city treasurer lawfully accept payment of an assessment at any time after it has been certified for collection to the county officers? The answer to this question would seem to be obvious but for another provision of Section 3893 G. C. above referred to, viz:

> "In any event the clerk of the council, when the receipt is presented to him by the owner, showing the payment of an assessment on his property, shall enter such receipt on the margin of the record of the assessment."

This statute, however, does not purport to authorize the city treasurer to accept payment of an assessment after it has been certified to the county officers. I am of the opinion, therefore, that this part of your second question should be answered by the statement that the city treasurer has no authority to accept payment of any kind of an assessment after it has been certified to the county officers for collection.

The statutory provision just quoted becomes applicable when your third question is considered. I shall, however, first have to interpret your question. I assume that you mean by the phrase "cash payments" payments of less than the total amount assessed, which, of course, includes, as I have stated, the interest. So interpreted the question must, of course, be answered in the negative, with the reservation that I am not passing upon the effect of an amendment of the ordinance by the passage of another ordinance after the assessment has been certified to the county officers for collection.

If this is what your question means, then I have sufficiently answered it by the negative statement just made. If, however, you mean to inquire whether the county auditor and county treasurer can lawfully accept payment of an entire assessment in cash, including, however, the interest at the rate carried by the bonds, at any time after such assessment is certified to the county for collection, then Section 3893 becomes material. This section at least assumes that full payment of an assessment can be made at any time. Such an idea is consonant with principles of justice which ought to permit the owner of property charged with a lien to discharge the lien, while safeguarding the interests of the party in whose favor the lien exists. Though some essential machinery would seem to be lacking, I incline to the view that cash payment of the proper amount may be accepted by the county officers at any time. I imagine, however, that this question is not the one which you have in mind, and do not therefore intend to express a final opinion upon it.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1918.

The Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication of August 29, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matters:
> We are enclosing you herewith copies of two communications received from F. D. Green, state examiner, giving all the information we are able to obtain on the question of the hospital of the city of Findlay, Ohio.
> Question 1. Is not this hospital purely a municipal institution?
> Question 2. Have the board of managers or any other officers a legal right to incur obligations?
> Question 3. Should not such obligations be made through the director of public safety?
> Question 4. Is not any compensation paid any employes of such hospital, when such compensation is not properly fixed by ordinance or resolution of council, illegal?
> Question 5. Was the payment of expenses of pupil nurses in attending Cincinnati legal?
> Question 6. Can municipalities legally pay traveling expenses and compensation of pupil nurses while they are taking such training?"

To your communication are attached two letters received by you from F. D. Green, state examiner. These letters are too lengthy to quote in full, but the facts therein set forth are briefly as follows:

> (1) Prior to 1899 there was a corporation under the name of the Home and Hospital, of Findlay, Ohio, which owned and operated a hospital therein.
> (2) In 1899 this corporation transferred to the city of Findlay all its grounds, buildings and equipment in consideration of the payment of $1.00 to it and the assumption of a mortgage of $5,100.00. As a part of the consideration also of the transfer, an agreement was entered into by and between the said corporation and the city of Findlay, to the effect that the corporation was to continue to manage and operate the hospital in accordance with its constitution and by-laws. This agreement was for a period of ten years.
> (3) Some time after this the hospital building was destroyed by fire. Under an agreement made between the parties, the city deeded the property back to the Home and Hospital company, the company agreeing to rebuild the hospital building and when the building should be completed and equipped, to deed the property back to the city of Findlay.
> (4) Under date of February 18, 1901, the said corporation did transfer by warranty deed the property to the city of Findlay, the consideration being $1.00, and, "the contractual relations now existing between the Home and Hospital, of Findlay, Ohio, and the city of Findlay."
> (5) While the contract in reference to the management of said institution was not possibly expressly renewed, yet it has at least tacitly been considered to be renewed and still in force and effect. In fact, the council of the city passed a resolution in 1910 which practically renewed the contract, and the corporation still continues to operate the hospital, fixing the salaries, employing and dismissing employes, etc.

(6) The corporation admits to the hospital free of charge patients who are not able to pay and makes a charge for admission to those who are able to pay. The city helps to support the hospital by levying a tax from year to year, about three-fourths of the expense of the hospital being taken care of from fees charged and about one-fourth of the expense being secured through taxation.

(7) The hospital maintains a nurses' training school and pays the pupil nurses six, eight and ten dollars per month. In order that they may comply with the requirements of the state medical board, the pupil nurses must take about a year's training in some other hospital and they have been attending the Cincinnati city hospital. Last year the board paid the traveling expenses of these pupil nurses. This next year they propose to keep them on the pay roll as well as pay their traveling expenses in their attendance upon the Cincinnati city hospital.

From these facts the questions set out in your communication arise. Before taking up your questions in the order in which they are set out in your communication, it will be well for us to note the provisions of the law in reference to hospitals. The provisions of our statutes are such that it will require a pretty careful analysis of the statutory provisions before we can arrive at a very safe answer to your questions.

At first sight, the provisions of our statutes, in reference to the management and control of hospitals, seem to be conflicting. For example, Section 4370 G. C. places the management of hospitals under the supervision of the director of public safety. Section 4035 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The director of public safety shall have the entire management and control of such hospitals, when completed and ready for use, and subject to the ordinances of council, shall establish such rules for its government, and the admission of persons to its privileges, as he deems expedient. Such director may also employ a superintendent, steward, physician, nurses and such other employes as he deems necesary, and fix the compensation of all persons so employed, which compensation shall be subject to the approval of the council."

This section places the entire management and control of certain hospitals under the supervision of the director of public safety. Sections 4043 and 4051 G. C. reads as follows:

> Section 4043.—"Such board shall have the entire management and control of the erection, rebuilding and repair of all buildings, and the entire management and control of all grounds so acquired, and shall adopt rules and regulations for the protection, care and government thereof, and such rules, when approved by the council of the municipality, shall have the same effect and may be enforced by the same penalties as ordinances thereof."
> Section 4051.—"The board of hospital trustees may employ such superintendents, physicians, nurses and other employes as it deems necessary for the execution of its duties and fix their salaries or compensation. Any of such persons may be removed by the board at any time."

Here we find the management of certain hospitals placed under the supervision of a board of hospital trustees. Section 4036 G. C. reads as follows:

> "In any municipal corporation which has become or may hereafter become the owner or trustee of property for hospital purposes, or of funds to be used in connection therewith, by deed of gift, devise or bequest, such property or funds shall be managed and administered in accordance with the provisions or conditions of such deed or gift, devise or bequest."

Here we find another provision in reference to the management of hospitals in that certain hospitals are to be managed and administered in accordance with the provisions or conditions under which they were deeded or devised to the city. From all these provisions it is quite evident that we must distinguish carefully between different kinds of hospitals in order to be able to answer your questions intelligently.

In 1898 an act was passed by the General Assembly entitled "An act to provide for the creation of a board of hospital trustees, and to prescribe the powers and duties of such board in cities of the second class, third grade "A." This act applied at the outset to the city of Springfield only and is found in 93 O. L., page 708. Section 5 of this act provided that the entire management and control of any hospital or hospitals belonging to such city should be under a board of hospital trustees, and Section 14 of the act read as follows:

> "Such board of hospital trustees may employ such superintendents, physicians, nurses and other employes as it may deem necessary for the execution of its duties, and fix their salaries or compensation; and any of such persons may be removed by such board at any time."

With these provisions in mind let us pass to another act of the General Assembly which was passed in 1902 and formed a part of what is known as the municipal code. Section 220 of this act contains the following provisions:

> "In any municipal corporation which has become or may hereafter become the owner or trustee of property for any part or hospital purposes, or of funds to be used in connection therewith, by deed of gift, devise or bequest, said property or funds shall be managed and administered in accordance with the provisions or conditions of said deed of gift, devise or bequest."

This section then proceeds:

> "Provided that in all cases where such deed of gift, devise or bequest requires the investment, or change of investment, of the principal of said property or funds, or any part thereof, to be made upon the approval of any advisory committee."

The section then makes provision that a board of trustees consisting of four resident electors shall be appointed to have charge of the said matters. The act found in 93 O. L., 708, above noted, became Sections 1536-425 to 1536-437 of Bates Statutes, omitting Sections 1 and 2 of the act, while the act found in 96 O. L., 92, became Section 1536-943 of Bates Statutes. In adopting the General Code the General Assembly brought these two acts together and they practically became one act, entire and complete in its scheme. Section 1536-943 became 4036 to 4039 G. C., while Sections 1536-425 to 1536-437 became Sections 4040 to 4052 G. C.

Let us now again call attention to the proviso that was originally found in Section 220 of the Municipal Code, which afterwards became Section 1536-943 of Bates Statutes. This proviso is not specifically mentioned in the General Code, but Section 4036 G. C. includes all the matter that came before the proviso, as found in the original act and in Bates Statutes, and Section 4037 G. C., et seq. contains all the matter that was found after the proviso.

It is important to keep this in mind for the reason that there are contained in the original section two distinct matters not in any way connected. That is, the part before the proviso formed one plan or scheme while the part that followed the proviso formed the other, hence Section 4036 is entire and complete in its provisions while Sections 4037 to 4052 form another plan or scheme for a different purpose entirely.

In noting the different sections of our statutes having to do with hospitals, it will be necessary for us to consider the provisions of one other section, viz., Section 4022 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "Such council may agree with a corporation or association organized in the municipality for charitable purposes, for the erection and management of a hospital for the sick and disabled, and a permanent interest therein to such extent and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between them. The council shall provide for the payment of the amount agreed upon for such interest, either in one payment or installments or so much each year as the parties may stipulate."

In this section we find provisions similar to those found in Section 4036 G. C.

Let us now turn to the facts with a view to ascertaining, if possible, under what provisions of the General Code they may be logically brought. In deciding this question it might be considered that there were two separate and distinct transactions between the Home and Hospital company and the city of Findlay, viz., the one in which the Home and Hospital company deeded the hospital property to the city in consideration of one dollar, and the assumption by the city of a certain mortgage on said property. The second transaction would be that in which the city of Findlay deeded the property, after the fire, to the Home and Hospital company and it in turn, after the hospital building was erected, deeded it back to the city of Findlay upon the consideration therein set out, viz., $1.00, and the agreement which had formerly been entered into by and between the city of Findlay and the Home and Hospital company. If this view could be taken, then in that event it is my opinion that the hospital would be one coming under the provisions of Section 4036 G. C., inasmuch as the second deed to the city by the Home and Hospital company was practically a deed of gift. But, when we come to look at the whole transaction, we note that the former transaction was carried forward into the second transaction because of the fact that the agreement which had been entered into in the first instance was carried into the second transaction. Further, the second transaction was not so much a deed of gift as it was an agreement between the said parties, to the effect that the city would deed the lot to the Home and Hospital company on consideration that said company would erect a hospital thereon and then re-transfer the same to the city of Findlay. It can hardly be said with propriety that this latter transaction was in the nature of a deed of gift, but rather the deed was made to the city on consideration of the agreement which had been made between the two parties, to the effect that the Home and Hospital company should erect a hospital building and then transfer the entire property to the city.

It is my opinion that these facts come more nearly, and possibly within, the provisions of Section 4022 G. C. That is, the city agreed with the corporation for the erection and management of a hospital, securing thereby a permanent interest therein, the terms and conditions of said transfer having been agreed upon between the parties interested. This being true, we can readily eliminate the provisions of Sections 4043 and 4051, to which we made reference in the beginning, and which are to the effect that the board of trustees shall have the management and control of the institution. We can also eliminate the provisions of Section 4035 G. C., above referred to, which is to the effect that the director of public safety shall have the entire management and control of certain hospitals. In passing I might say that this section undoubtedly refers to the hospitals erected under provision of Section 4023 G. C. We can also eliminate the provisions of Section 4370 G. C., to which reference was made. This section undoubtedly applies to strictly municipal hospitals. If we consider it as one transaction, as I have done, we can eliminate the provisions of Section 4036 as well.

Having settled upon the proposition that the facts in the case bring this hospital within the provisions of Section 4022 G. C., let us again note the provisions of this section. It is to be noted that the municipality, under this section, secures a permanent interest in the hospital to the extent and upon such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon between it and the association with which it deals. This, then, brings us to the question as to what was the agreement between the city and the Home and Hospital association. The agreement was that the hospital was to continue under the management of said company under its constitution and by-laws.

Now from all the above, what is the answer to your question? Your first question is, is not this hospital purely a municipal institution? In my opinion it is not. It is an institution such as is provided for in Section 4022 G. C. Your second question is, have the board of managers, or any other officers, a legal right to incur obligations? They have. That is, this hospital must be managed in accordance with the agreement that was entered into originally by and between the city of Findlay and the corporation known as the Home and Hospital of Findlay. Your third question is: "Should not such obligations be made through the director of public safety?" They should not, and this for the reasons above stated. Your fourth question is, "Is not any compensation paid any employes of such hospital, when such compensation is not properly fixed by ordinance or resolution of council, illegal?" It is not. The question of compensation is to be decided by the agreement hereinbefore mentioned.

We come now to your fifth and sixth questions, which are somewhat more difficult to answer satisfactorily. The questions are as to whether the hospital managers are justified in law in paying the traveling expenses of pupil nurses while attending the Cincinnati city hospital and whether they would be justified in law in keeping said pupil nurses on the payroll. In answering these questions it must be remembered that the management of the hospital in question is under the control of the Home and Hospital company. The proper officials of this company fix the salary and compensation of the different employes therein, as said before, under the constitution and by-laws of this company. Hence, if the managers of the hospital desire, in addition to paying the student nurses a certain stipulated sum each month, to pay also their traveling expenses to the Cincinnati city hospital, and at the same time keep them upon the payroll of the company, I can see no legal objections to their so doing. This payment of expenses and keeping them upon the payroll virtually becomes a part of the agreement and consideration, by virtue of which student nurses enter the said hospital. The management could, if it so desired, pay these student nurses, instead of six, eight and ten dollars per month, twelve, fifteen and eighteen dollars per month, or, for that matter, any other reasonable sum. Hence, if the management of the hospital desires, as an inducement to cause student nurses to enter said hospital, it may agree to pay their traveling expenses to the Cincinnati city hospital and at the same time keep them upon its payroll during the time they are in attendance at said hospital.

I think this answers all your questions. I desire to suggest that the answer to your sixth question is limited and restricted to the particular hospital in question. You ask whether municipalities can legally pay traveling expenses and compensation of pupil nurses while they are taking such training. I am not answering this question as I do not think you intended same, in the form in which it is put, to be answered, but what you desired to know, as I understand it, is as to whether the management of this particular hospital can so pay expenses as set out in your communication.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MONTGOMERY COUNTY IN THE SUM OF $18,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 4, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Montgomery county, Ohio, in the sum of $18,000.00, for the purpose of providing a fund for the repair of certain bridges in said county.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Montgomery county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code relating to bond issues of this kind. I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ARTICLES OF INCORPORATION OF THE PERSHING REPUBLICAN LEAGUE—CORPORATIONS MAY BE FORMED TO ACCOMPLISH A SINGLE OBJECT—MAY BE FORMED FOR FURTHERING POLITICAL CANDIDACY.

A corporation not for profit may lawfully be formed for the purpose of doing a thing which is capable of accomplishment once and for all.

Such corporation may lawfully be formed for the purpose of furthering the political candidacy of an individual.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 6, 1918.

HON. WILLIAM D. FULTON, Secretary of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 25, requesting my opinion as to the legality of the proposed articles of incorporation of The Pershing Republican League.

The incorporators of this proposed corporation not for profit state that it is formed for the purpose of:

> "First. Nominating and electing General John J. Pershing president of the United States.
> Second. Organizing like associations and leagues in all the States, Districts and possessions of the United States, for the purpose aforesaid.
> Third. Doing all things necessary and proper for the accomplishment . . of the purposes aforesaid."

In spite of the division of the purpose clause as I have quoted it into three parts it is manifest to me that but a single purpose is stated by it, so that it is not open to objection on the ground of multiplicity of objects.

I have given some consideration to the question as to whether or not a corporation can be formed for the purpose of accomplishing a single specific thing, so that when that thing is accomplished it will no longer have any lawful existence. This question is presented by the articles as I have quoted them, for it is apparent that if and when General John J. Pershing is elected president of the United States this proposed company will no longer have any legal existence.

I have found no case—indeed no authority whatsoever—on this point. While it is usual, of course, to incorporate companies and associations for purposes which imply the carrying on of continuous activities, I do not believe that it is unlawful in the absence of statute to incorporate a company for a purpose which is capable of accomplishment once and for all. Thus, a corporation might be organized for the purpose of acquiring, subdividing into lots and selling a particular tract of real estate. I do not believe it would be necessary to authorize such a corporation to deal generally in real estate without limitation. In fact the security of the investment would rather be enhanced than otherwise by the restriction thus imposed.

Surely there is nothing in our statute, Section 8623 G. C., from which an implication of the kind which has just been imagined can be drawn. That section authorizes the formation of corporations > "for any purpose for which natural persons lawfully may associate themselves."

It will be noticed that the word in our statute is not "business" or any like term importing continuity of activity. Therefore I reach the conclusion that the fact that the incorporators of this association have in mind an object that is logically capable of complete attainment does not afford a ground for characterizing the articles of incorporation which they have filed as illegal.

So far as Section 8623 is concerned indeed there is nothing in the proposed articles of incorporation which could give rise to any doubt. If the test of the legality of the purpose of a corporation is furnished by considering whether or not natural persons lawfully might associate themselves for such purpose, it is clear that we have in the articles of incorporation under consideration nothing that is open to criticism. Natural persons may, of course, lawfully associate themselves to procure the nomination and election of the person of their common choice for any office. So far as Section 8623 is concerned it seems to give authority to individuals to do under corporate form anything they might do as an unincorporated association.

It would not be safe, however, to lay down this principle as one of universal application. Section 8623 is in this respect subject to implied exceptions, as in the case of insurance companies (State vs. Livestock Co., 38 O. S. 347); as well as to the express exceptions against the carrying on of professional business which is found in Section 8623 itself. The implied exceptions just referred to result from the fact that the legislature has chosen to provide for the organization of certain companies by special laws, thus taking them out of the general statutes on the subject of the formation of corporations, of which Section 8623 is a part. No implied exception of this character operates against the formation of a corporation for the purpose under consideration.

There may be, however, an implied exception arising from certain provisions of the penal code, which I now quote:

> "Section 13,320.—Whoever, being a corporation engaged in business in this state, directly or indirectly, pays, uses, offers, or consents or agrees to pay or use money or property for, or in aid of a political party, committee or organization, or for or in aid of a candidate for political office, or for a nomination thereto, or uses money or property for any political purpose whatever, or for the reimbursement or indemnification of any person or persons for money or property so used, shall be fined not less than five hundred dollars nor more than five thousand dollars."
> "Section 13,321.—Whoever, being an officer, stockholder, attorney or agent of a corporation violating the next preceding section, participates in, aids or advises such violation or solicits or knowingly receives money or property in violation of such section, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars or imprisoned not more than one year, or both."
> "Section 13,322.—Whoever, being a corporation for profit, violates any provision of the law requiring it to make out, have sworn to by an officer thereof who has knowledge of the facts, and file with the secretary of state, auditor of state or state superintendent of insurance, an affidavit respecting the use of its funds or property for political purposes, or its consent thereto, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five hundred dollars."

These sections constituted Sections 1 and 3 of an act found in 99 Ohio Laws, 23. Section 2 of that act required every corporation for profit doing business in Ohio to file certain reports with certain officers setting forth that such corporation had not, directly or indirectly, paid or contributed to the funds of any political organization, committee or candidate. These are the reports to which Section 13,322 as I have quoted it refers.

I think it is obvious that if these sections apply to a corporation of the kind now proposed to be organized they would effectively prohibit the organization of a company for such purpose, and would give rise to another implied exception to the general terms of Section 8623, supra.

The question then is as to whether or not a corporation formed for political purposes, and no other, is within the scope of Sections 13,320 et seq.; or, more accurately, whether in enacting Sections 13,320 et seq. the General Assembly intended to prohibit the formation of corporations for political purposes. For example, are Sections 13,320 et seq. to be regarded as a prohibition against the incorporation of political clubs affiliated with political parties?

In my opinion, these sections are not open to so wide an interpretation. In the first place, Section 13,320 applies to corporations "engaged in business in this state"; Section 13,321 uses language indicative of business companies or corporations for profit; Section 13,322 refers expressly to corporations for profit. While I would not say that only those corporations which are formed technically for profit are amenable to Sections 13,320 et seq., I get from these sections and from the act of which they were originally parts as a whole the impression that they were intended to apply to corporations formed for other than political purposes, and to prevent them from intermeddling in politics and misapplying their corporate funds for such political purposes. The use of the word "business" and the other words and phrases to which I have referred at least makes these statutes ambiguous so far as their application to a case like that under consideration is concerned. Being ambiguous they are open to interpretation or construction. One of the recognized rules of construction of statutes is that the evil to be remedied may be looked to, to determine the probable legislative intent. In this case it seems clear that the evil to be remedied was not the formation of corporations for political purposes but the participation in politics of corporations formed for other purposes.

For these reasons I advise that the formation of a corporation for political purposes is not prohibited by Sections 13,320 et seq. of the General Code.

Knowing of no other reason for which it might be alleged that the articles of incorporation in question are not lawful, I advise that they should be accepted and filed by you as secretary of state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VILLAGE OF CORTLAND, OHIO. $3,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

In Re: Bonds of the village of Cortland, Ohio, in the sum of $3,500.00, for the purpose of providing a fund for the purchase of certain fire apparatus, consisting of an engine and hose, said engine to be mounted on a truck.

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the council of the village of Cortland and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds, and regret to say that I find myself unable to approve said issue. This issue is one for the above stated purpose provided for by ordinance of the council of the village of Cortland, Ohio, without the authority of a vote of the electors, under the assumed authority of Section 3939 of the General Code.

As a limitation on the amount of bonds that may be issued by a municipal corporation during any fiscal year, under authority of said section, without a vote of the electors, Section 3940 G. C., as amended in the Terrell act (107 O. L., 575-578) provides as follows:

> "Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year, by the council of a municipal corporation under the authority conferred in the preceding section, shall not exceed one-half of one per cent. of the total value of the property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation."

The financial statement appended to and made a part of the transcript of the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds shows that the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in said village is the sum of $674,560.00. One-half of one per cent. of this amount is $3,372.80, which is the maximum amount of bonds that may be issued by this village under authority of Section 3939 G. C. during the current fiscal year, without a vote of the electors. It is thus seen that the amount of the proposed issue of bonds exceeds the amount of bonds that the council of the village was authorized to provide for in the ordinance above referred to. The bonds authorized by said ordinance are probably invalid only to the extent of the excess of said proposed issue over the amount of bonds for which the council might have legally provided, but inasmuch as you have not, in your resolution providing for the purchase of this proposed issue of bonds, indicated any intention on your part to purchase any part of said issue less than the whole thereof, I feel that I have no discretion to do otherwise than to advise you to reject said issue and to rescind your former resolution providing for the purchase of the same.

The transcript submitted is herewith enclosed.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—MUNICIPAL COUNCIL MAY PROVIDE BY ORDINANCE DISPOSITION OF SHARE THEREOF TO OTHER THAN GENERAL FUND.

The fifty per cent of the collateral inheritance tax which is to go into the treasury of a city or village under the provisions of Section 5331 G. C. should be credited, in the absence of legislation by the council thereof, to the general revenue fund of such city or village.

Such council may, however, provide by ordinance that such inheritance tax revenue shall go into some fund other than the general revenue fund.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 7, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 11 requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Section 5331 G. C., in covering the collateral inheritance tax designates that 50 per cent shall go to the city or village but does not designate into what fund or funds such taxes shall be credited. It has been the custom of this office to direct that in the absence of specific statutory authority such inheritance tax should be placed into the general fund of the city.

Question 1. Is it within the powers of the city council to designate into what fund or funds this tax shall be placed?

Question 2. Are such taxes properly to be credited to the general fund?"

It will not be necessary to quote Section 5331 General Code, referred to by you. As you say, it does not specify into what fund of a municipal corporation the half of the inheritance tax to which such municipality is entitled shall go.

I am clearly of the opinion that in the absence at least of authorized action by the council of a municipal corporation revenues arising from inheritance taxes should be credited to the general fund of the municipality. The other funds, such as the sinking fund, the safety fund, the service fund and the health fund, are proceeds of levies made for these specific purposes and of revenues by statute directed to be placed to the credit of such funds—as premiums and accrued interest derived from the sale of bonds, special assessments in anticipation of the collection of which bonds have been issued, interest on deposit of sinking fund moneys, etc. The general fund, on the other hand, is primarily the recipient of miscellaneous revenues not otherwise provided for. I can not say that there is any statute now in force which contains an express declaration to this effect. However, the very term "general fund" must mean a fund available for expenditure for any lawful purpose of the corporation, as opposed to the special funds which can be expended only for such specified purposes. Therefore, miscellaneous revenue which is not dedicated by law to any particular purpose must necessarily belong in the general fund.

The following sections of the General Code, now or formerly in force, do show that the general fund is available for expenditure for any lawful purpose:

Section 3800.—"* * * Any balance remaining in such contingent fund at the end of the fiscal year shall thereupon become a part of the general fund, to be again appropriated as other moneys belonging to the corporation. * * *."

Section 3801: (Repealed 103 O. L. 522)—"When a municipal corporation has been authorized, * * * to create a fund for a public improvement, and the authority so conferred has been exercised * * *, and there remains a cash balance in such fund unexpended, the auditor or other accounting officer shall immediately transfer such balance to the credit of the general fund of the corporation."

Section 3802: (Repealed 103 O. L. 522)—"When a cash balance exists at the end of such fiscal year, in a fund, other than a fund created for a public improvement, and for any reason such cash balance can no longer be lawfully used for the purpose for which it was created, the auditor * * shall transfer such balance to the general fund of the corporation."

Section 3803: (Repealed 103 O. L. 522)—"When money so authorized to be transferred to the general fund of a municipal corporation has been so transferred, it shall be available for the general purposes of the corporation, as other moneys in the general fund."

Although the three sections last above quoted have been repealed, they may properly be looked to to determine the meaning of the term "general fund" as it occurs in other statutes originally in force at the same time. It is true that these three sections constituted a separate act by themselves (95 O. L. 96) but they were allowed to remain in force by the Municipal Code of 1902 (96 O. L.) and may severally be looked to for evidence of the meaning of the phrase "general fund" as occurring in that act, for example, and in Section 3800 G. C. above quoted.

I do not find it necessary to pass upon the question as to whether moneys in the general fund may be expended without transfer for purposes within the purview of some of the special funds, such as the health fund. It is perfectly obvious, however, that the proceeds of an inheritance tax could not belong in any of these special funds because not dedicated to such special purposes and therefore they do belong, as I have said, in the first instance to the general fund and may be expended for any purpose to which that fund may be applied.

These observations answer your second question in the affirmative.

Your first question requires me to consider whether or not the council can pass an ordinance which shall, so to speak, have the effect of a permanent and automatic transfer of inheritance tax moneys to some fund or funds of the city or village other than the general fund.

As to revenues created by council itself through the enactment of ordinances imposing licenses and the like, I am clearly of the opinion that council may direct the revenue into a fund other than the general fund. In fact, this would be the appropriate thing to do in such cases. Here, however, we have the case of a revenue arising from a state law, and the question is as to whether or not council in the absence of a provision of that law or elsewhere in the statutes of the state may control the course of such revenue and divert it from the general fund into which it would otherwise go by a standing ordinance.

In my opinion, council has power to do this. As may be inferred from statements already made, there is no statute of the state setting up by express mention specific funds in the treasury of a city other than the sinking fund and the general fund. There is nothing, for example, requiring the city council to make any levy for a service fund, as such. The levies of council are to be made "for the several purposes allowed by law" (Section 3793; see also Section 5649-3a). "Purposes allowed by law" referred to in other sections are as follows:

> Section 3784.—"Each municipal corporation shall have special powers * * * to levy and collect taxes * * * for the purposes of paying the expenses of the corporation, constructing improvements authorized, and exercising the general and special powers conferred by law."
> Section 3785.—"The aggregate of all taxes levied by a municipal corporation, exclusive of the levy for * * * free public libraries and library buildings, for university and observatory purposes, for hospitals, and for sinking fund and interest, on each dollar of valuation of taxable property in the corporation on the tax list, shall not exceed in any one year ten mills."
> (This section was, of course, repealed by implication by the so-called Smith One Per Cent Law. I cite it to show that there is no mention in it of any such fund as a safety fund or a service fund, for example.)
> Section 3787.—"On or before the first Monday in March of each year the several officers, boards and departments in each municipal corporation, shall report an estimate, in itemized form, to the mayor and auditor, or clerk, of the corporation, stating the amount of money needed for their wants for the incoming year and for each month thereof."
> Section 3788.—"On or before the first Monday in April of each year the auditor of such city and clerk of such village shall furnish to the mayor and council and to each member thereof, the following statements, which council may require to be printed:

1. A statement showing the balance standing to the credit or debit of the several funds on the balance sheet of the corporation, at the end of the last fiscal year.

2. A statement showing the monthly expenditures from each fund in the twelve months, and the monthly expenditures from all the funds in the twelve months of the last fiscal year.

3. A statement showing the annual expenditures from each fund for each year of the last five fiscal years.

4. A statement showing the monthly average of such expenditure from each of the several funds for the last fiscal year, and also the total monthly average from all of them for the last five fiscal years."

There are other statutes in this same context which might be quoted. Suffice it to say, however, that there is nothing to prevent the municipal corporation from treating as a single "fund", i. e., the proceeds of a single levy of taxes, all revenues derived by taxation for the purpose of paying all expenses of the corporation other than the construction of special improvements, the maintenance of free public libraries, universities and observatories, hospitals, and for sinking fund and interest. In short, so far as the statutes are concerned there need be no "funds" of a municipal corporation other than the sinking fund, the hospital fund, the library fund, the university and observatory fund, the special improvement fund and the general fund.

The custom prevails, however, of making a further sub-division of the general expense fund into the funds which I have previously mentioned in this opinion. I suspect that this custom may have the sanction of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, if indeed it did not result from suggestions emanating from your Bureau. However that may be, there is nothing illegal about designating the purposes of the service department as a "purpose" for which taxes may be levied separate from the other purposes pertaining to the general expenses of the municipality. So also with respect to the safety and health funds. In point of fact, when a levy is made for the health fund under favor of Section 4451 General Code, its proceeds must constitute a separate fund in contemplation of the law. Of course, I do not take account of funds arising from other sources than general taxation, such as the water works fund (Section 3960 General Code).

In the face of this generality of expression I think we must concede something to the power of council under Section 4240 of the General Code, which provides that > "The council shall have the management and control of the finances * * of the corporation, except as may be otherwise provided, and have such other powers and perform such other duties as may be conferred by law."

Inasmuch as it is not "otherwise provided" with respect to the proceeds of inheritance taxes which are to be paid into the treasury, I am of the opinion that council may exercise its control over the finances of the corporation by passing an ordinance to the effect that the proceeds of such taxes shall be paid into some fund set up on the books of the city auditor or village clerk other than the so-called "general fund." In other words, Section 4240 evinces a legislative intent to the effect that the council shall have legislative power over finances except in so far as such power may be denied by general law. Were it not for this section it might be argued that the silence of the general law would have the effect of a negation as to the power of council. The statute, however, reverses the presumption and produces, I think, an opposite result. Now there is nothing in the general law so far considered which is inconsistent with such an exercise of power on the part of council. The only other statutory provisions which occur to me as affording ground for a contrary argument are those dealing with the subject of transfers. It might be argued because the power to transfer funds has been expressly given, with certain limitations, the council has no other authority to control the course of moneys coming into the treasury. I do not think that such an argument would be well taken. "Transfer" means that money which is actually in a fund is removed from that fund as the result of the process and placed in another fund. It has nothing whatever to do with the rules by which general receipts shall be credited to particular funds.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I answer your two questions, as follows:

(1) It is within the power of a city council by permanent ordinance to designate into what fund or funds the proceeds of the inheritance tax accruing to the municipality may be placed.

(2) In the absence of such action on the part of council such receipts are to be credited to the general fund.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VILLAGE OF WESTERVILLE, OHIO. $4,540.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Westerville, Ohio, in the sum of $4,540.00 in anticipation of the collection of assessments for the improvement of Glenwood Drive by grading and draining.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the commission of the charter village of Westerville, and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds. I find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind, and to the provisions of the charter of the village of Westerville.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said village to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BONDS—DELIVERY OF, TO INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION AT COST OF TAXING DISTRICT.

Bonds sold to the Industrial Commission of Ohio by a taxing district must be delivered to the treasurer of state at the expense of the taxing district. Such delivery may be made in person or by express, or otherwise, at the discretion of the district officials, unless limited by ordinance.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 23 requesting my opinion as follows:

> "We are referring you to your opinion No. 758, under date of November 3, 1917, Annual Report of Attorney-General for 1917, page 2028.
> Question: In bonds sold to the Industrial Commission of Ohio by a taxing district of this state, can such taxing district bear the expense of the delivery of the bonds to the Industrial Commission either when taken there by an officer or sent by express?"

The opinion to which you refer holds, in effect, that a municipal corporation is without authority to pay the expense of delivery of bonds to a private purchaser. In the course of that opinion, however, and by way of contrast attention was called to the provisions of Section 1465-58 of the General Code, which deals with the power of the State Liability Board of Awards (The Industrial Commission) to invest the state insurance fund in municipal bonds, and creates the duty in the officers of the several taxing districts before offering bonds issued by them for sale at competitive bidding to offer them in writing to such State Liability Board of Awards. That section expressly provides that > "all such bonds so purchased forthwith shall be placed in the hands of the treasurer of state."

The section does not in words say who shall place the bonds in the hands of the treasurer of state. In the former opinion, however, I assumed that this sentence imposed the duty upon the municipal authorities to make the delivery. Upon reflection I am satisfied that I was then right. The bonds upon acceptance would be in the possession of the municipal officers. The command to place them in the hands of the treasurer of state is therefore naturally directed to them.

It is true that I did not find it necessary specifically to pass upon the question now submitted in preparing the former opinion, but having the opportunity to do so by virtue of your present request I advise you that it is the duty of the municipal officers charged with the sale of bonds to deliver such as have been accepted by the Industrial Commission of Ohio to the Treasurer of State. The statutes are entirely silent as to the manner in which such delivery shall be made. In the absence of specific provisions of ordinances governing such matters the choice of the means by which the delivery shall be made would seem to rest in the sound discretion of the municipal officers. I would not think that it would be an abuse of such discretion to deliver such bonds in person or by express, especially in view of the fact that payment therefor is to be made upon delivery of the bonds.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—COUNCIL IN FIXING COMPENSATION OF EMPLOYES MAY FIX SAME AT SO MUCH FOR ONE MONTH AND LESSER AMOUNT THEREAFTER.

The council of a city may, without exceeding its powers, fix compensation of certain municipal employes for service during good behavior at so much for one month of the year and at a lesser amount for each month thereafter, even though it is apparent that the motive of council in so acting was to give each employe affected thereby the monthly salary fixed for the later months substantially for one month prior to the time when such ordinance could under the initiative and referendum provisions of the statutes go into effect.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 11 requesting my opinion as follows:

"Enclosed find copy of ordinance passed by the council of the city of Mt. Vernon, together with the lead pencil notation, showing the compensation in effect in June, July and August. In short, it is openly manifest that such legislation was drafted in a manner to intentionally circumvent Section 4227-2 of the General Code.

Question 1: Is such ordinance legal?

Question 2: Was the amount drawn in July legally paid?

Question 3: Will the continuance of the payments of the amounts shown in the August list be legally payable?"

The ordinance to which you refer provides as follows:

"AN ORDINANCE

Fixing the salary and the bonds of the superintendent of water works, clerk of the water works, engineers and assistants at the power house, pipe fitters and laborers.

Be it ordained by the council of the city of Mt. Vernon, Ohio:

Section 1. That the superintendent of water works, clerk of the water works, engineers and assistants, pipe fitters and laborers shall receive the salary hereinafter provided, payable out of the water works fund of the city, and each shall give respective bond as required:

1—A superintendent of water works who shall receive for the month of July, 1918, the sum of $115.00 and $95.00 per month for each and every month thereafter, and shall give bond in the sum of $1,000.00.

2—A clerk of water works who shall receive $100.00 for the month of July, 1918, and $85.00 for each and every month thereafter, and shall give bond in the amount of $1,000.00.

3—An engineer at the power house who shall receive $95.00 per month for the month of July, 1918, and $85.00 for each and every month thereafter. Two assistants of the engineer at the power house who shall receive $90.00 for the month of July, 1918, and $80.00 per month for each and every month thereafter.

4—Pipe fitters who shall receive 37½ cents per hour and laborers 34⅜ cents per hour.

Section 2. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after the earliest period allowed by law.

J. D. WEAVER, President of Council,
B. H. BAIR, Mayor.

Passed May 28, 1918. Approved May 28, 1918.
Attest: Howard C. Gates, City Auditor."

It is manifest that the effect of this ordinance is such as to allow to the incumbent of each of the positions enumerated therein such amount of salary for the month of July as would represent the difference between the salary which he was thereafter to receive and the salary which he had received during the preceding month of June. That is to say, it being apparent that the ordinance could not take effect for thirty days because of the operation of the initiative and referendum statute to which you refer, council has, as you put it, undertaken to circumvent that statute by paying for July an amount great enough to make up the deficiency for June, so that the same person occupying one of these positions during both of these months of June and July would receive an amount in the aggregate for the two months equal to the salary for any period of two months thereafter. In short, in such a case the result would be the same as if council had fixed the salary in the amount per month that was ultimately fixed for each position and had made the change effective on the first day of June. Putting it in still another way: council sought to raise the salaries of the positions affected by this ordinance and to make its action effective as of the first of June; and not being able to do this directly it sought to do it indirectly in the manner described.

Of course, in legal contemplation what council did was not exactly that which has just been described; for if, for example, the clerk of the waterworks had died on the first day of July and his successor had been immediately appointed it would have been the latter and not the former who would have received the increased salary for that month. It is only by assuming what undoubtedly was the fact, viz: that the incumbents of all these positions remained the same during the three months beginning with June 1 of the year in which the ordinance was passed, that the action may be characterized as a retroactive increase of salary.

Nevertheless, it will not do to dismiss the question upon this narrow and technical ground. Council has, as you say, undertaken, broadly speaking at least, to accomplish indirectly a thing which it could not do directly. The general principle of law is that an attempt to accomplish by indirection something that is prohibited or illegal when done directly is ineffectual and void. This principle must be taken into account.

But this principle is not to be laid hold of to afford an easy solution to the question any more than the other view which has been previously expressed, for it remains to be demonstrated that the thing which council could not do directly was illegal or ultra vires the council. Such a conclusion can not be predicated upon the provisions of the initiative and referendum act. The thirty days' stay of the effectiveness of municipal legislation provided for by that statute is merely for the purpose of affording to citizens the right to circulate and file referendum petitions against the legislation. It is not created for any other purpose. It was not interposed for the purpose of preventing any public evil but merely as a part of the necessary machinery of the referendum. It would be too much therefore to say that council violated either the letter or the spirit of the referendum by acting as it did.

If the ordinance is to be regarded as void it must be, then, because of some other principle than that embodied in the initiative and referendum law. I have sought for such a principle and have considered in this connection the question as to whether or not in fixing the salary or compensation of municipal employes the council may establish a rate which shall be other than a uniform rate. The statute under which the council acted was Section 4214 of the General Code, which reads, in part, as follows:

> "Council, by ordinance or resolution, shall determine the number of officers, clerks and employes in each department of the city government, and shall fix by ordinance or resolution their respective salaries and compensation."

This section gives to the council the right to fix pecuniary reward of municipal employes, either by way of salary or by way of compensation. The ordinance in this case shows that council has chosen in the instances mentioned by you to fix salaries. The question now arising is as to whether or not council acted within the scope of this power in passing the ordinance which has been quoted.

The definition of the term "salary" as given in the Century Dictionary is:

> "the recompense or consideration stipulated to be paid to a person periodically for services, usually a fixed sum to be paid for the year, half year or quarter."

The Standard Dictionary defines the term as follows:

> "a periodical allowance made as compensation to a person for his official or professional services or for his regular work."

Perhaps a better legal definition is that given in Benedict vs. United States, 176 U. S. 357-360, as follows:

> "A fixed annual or periodical payment for services, depending upon the time and not upon the amount of services rendered."

Thompson vs. Phillips, 12 O. S. 617.

Our own statutes use the term frequently to apply to special emoluments, such as the additional compensation of a judge. (See General Code, Sections 2252 et. seq.).

On the contrary, our statutes frequently stipulate of salaries that they shall be paid in equal periodical installments (See Sections 3001 and 3003), from which it might be inferred that the division of an annual salary into equal installments would not necessarily be the case if such a provision were not in the statute.

In the case before us the council did not fix an annual salary, nor did it say that each of the officers or employes named in the ordinance should receive a salary of so much per month. On the contrary, it assumed, or attempted to fix, a salary for the month of July and then a salary for each of the months thereafter, the amounts or rates being different.

I have been unable to find any principle upon which I feel justified in holding that this action on the part of council is illegal; especially do I feel constrained against the adoption of such a view because of the fact that the authority of council is not limited to the fixing of salaries. It may if it chooses provide for the compensation of municipal officers and employes on some basis other than that of a salary. Though council has given to the compensation provided for the officers named in the ordinance in the case at hand the name of "salary", yet it must be remembered that that name does not control its specific intent manifested by the express provision that the compensation for the month of July shall be different from that for other months. Not being obliged to fix the compensation by way of determining annual salaries, and not being obliged to apportion the annual salary equally among the several months of the year, council is, I believe, vested with complete discretion as to how the compensation which it fixes shall be allowed and paid.

In view of all these considerations, I feel unable, as I have said, to say that the action of council in the case at hand is illegal because of the inequality between the amounts fixed for the month of July and those fixed for the other months. Having already held that the action of council can not be condemned as an attempt to do indirectly a thing which is prohibited when done directly, I come to the conclusion that the ordinance is legal, that the amount drawn in July was legally paid, and that the continuance of the payments of the amounts shown in the August list will be legally payable.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—WITNESSES AT HEARING BEFORE COUNCIL PAID FIFTY CENTS A DAY.

Where a hearing is held before council for charges against an officer by virtue of Sections 4263 and 4264 of the General Code, the witnesses called in such hearing are to be paid at the rate of fifty cents per day for each day's attendance, as provided under Section 3011 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 9, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of October 31, 1918, as follows:

"The charter of the city of Columbus provides that on matters wherein the charter is silent the statutes shall obtain. The charter is silent relative to witness fees, and there is no legislation covering. An investigation was held before council relative to charges of delinquency against officers, under authority of Sections 4264 et seq. G. C.

Question: In view of the provisions of Sections 3011 and 3012 G. C., to what compensation would witnesses called before the council investigation be entitled?"

Sections 4263 and 4264 G. C. read:

Section 4263.—"The mayor shall have general supervision over each department and the officers provided for in this title. When the mayor has reason to believe that the head of a department or such officer has been guilty in the performance of his official duty of bribery, misfeasance, malfeasance, nonfeasance, misconduct in office, gross neglect of duty, gross immorality or habitual drunkenness, he shall immediately file with the council, except when the removal of such head of department or officer is otherwise provided for, written charges against such person, setting forth in detail a statement of such alleged guilt, and, at the same time, or as soon thereafter as possible, serve or cause to be served a true copy of such charges with the person against whom the charges are made. Such service may be in person or by leaving a copy of the charges at the office of such person, and due return thereof made to council, as is provided for the return of the service of summons in a civil action."

Section 4264.—"When so filed with council, such charges shall be for hearing at the next regular meeting thereof, unless council extends the time for such hearing, which shall be done only on the application of the accused. The accused may appear in person and by counsel, examine all witnesses, and answer all charges against him. The judgment or action of the council shall be final, but to remove such officer the votes of two-thirds of all members elected to the council shall be required."

Section 4266 G. C. empowers council to compel the attendance of witnesses at the hearing. Section 4267 G. C. reads:

Section 4267.—"In all cases in which the attendance of witnesses may be compelled for such investigation, any member of the council may administer the requisite oaths, and the council shall have the same power to compel the giving of testimony by the attending witnesses as is conferred upon courts of justice. In all such cases, witnesses shall be entitled to the same privileges, immunities and compensation as are allowed witnesses in civil cases, and the costs of all such proceedings shall be payable from the general fund of the municipal corporation."

It will be noted from a reading of Section 4267 that the witnesses attending the hearing are to be allowed the same compensation as "witnesses in civil cases."

Sections 3011 and 3012 G. C. read:

Section 3011.—"In all cases not specified in this chapter, each person summoned as a witness shall be allowed fifty cents for each day's attendance, and the mileage herein specified. When not summoned, each person called upon to testify in a cause shall receive twenty-five cents."

Section 3012.—"Each witness in civil causes shall receive the following fees: For each day's attendance at a court of record, to be paid on demand by the party at whose instance he is summoned, and taxed in the bill of costs, one dollar, and five cents for each mile from his place of residence to the place of holding such court, and return; for testifying before an officer authorized to take depositions, under a subpoena, seventy-five cents, and five cents for each mile from his place of residence to the place of taking depositions, to be paid on demand by the party at whose instance he is summoned; for attending a coroner's inquest, one dollar for each day and the same mileage allowed a witness in the taking of depositions, to be paid from the county treasury; for attending a trial before a justice of the peace, or mayor of a municipal corporation, fifty cents for each day and such mileage. No mileage shall be allowed if the distance from the place of residence of the witness to the place where called to testify is less than one mile."

Section 3014 G. C. provides for fees of witnesses in criminal cases, and Sections 3011 and 3012, above quoted, have reference to civil cases. Section 3012 enumerates certain classes of civil cases, providing different witness fees for the different classes of cases. A hearing before council is not included in the classes enumerated in that section, so reference must be had to Section 3011, which takes care of all civil cases not specified in Section 3012. Section 3012 was originally Section 26 of an act "to regulate the fees of probate judges, clerks of courts, sheriffs, witnesses, jurors' fees in partitions and to repeal certain acts therein named," found in 73 O. L., p. 127, and Section 3011 was originally Section 28 of the same act. It is quite clear from a reading of the act that Section 3011 G. C. is authority for the payment of fees in civil cases, not included in Section 3012.

Answering your question, therefore, I am of the opinion that the witnesses called before council in the hearing to which you refer should be paid the fees provided in Section 3011 G. C., which is 50 cents for each day's attendance.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE VILLAGE OF BEACH CITY, STARK COUNTY, OHIO.—$4,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 10, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Beach City, Stark county, Ohio, in the sum of $4,500 for the purpose of purchasing electric light equipment for suppplying and transmitting electricity to the corporation of the village of Beach City and the inhabitants thereof.

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the council of the village of Beach City and of other officers, relating to the above issue of bonds which was purchased by you by resolution under date of November 13, 1918, subject to the approval of this department.

This issue of bonds is one for the above stated purpose, and is provided for by ordinance of the council of the village of Beach City without a vote of the electors. I know of no statutory provisions authorizing a municipal corporation to issue bonds for the purpose above stated other than those of Section 3939 General Code. This section of the General Code is a part of the Longworth law, so-called, and the amount of bonds that may be issued for any of the purposes provided for therein is subject to limitations provided by other sections of the General Code which form an integral part of said Longworth law. One of these sections is 3940 General Code, which as amended in the Terrell act (107 O. L. 575, 578), provides as follows:

"Such bonds may be issued for any or all of such purposes, but the total indebtedness created in any one fiscal year, by the council of a municipal corporation under the authority conferred in the preceding section, shall not exceed one-half of one per cent. of the total value of the property in such municipal corporation as listed and assessed for taxation."

The financial statement appended to and made a part of the transcript of the proceedings relating to the above issue of bonds shows that the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in said village is the sum of $696,530; one-half of one per cent. of this amount is $3,482.65, which is the maximum amount of bonds that may be issued by this village for any particular purpose under the authority of Section 3939 General Code, during the current fiscal year without a vote of the electors of the municipality.

It is thus seen that the amount of the proposed issue of bonds exceeds the amount of bonds that the council of the village was authorized to provide for in the ordinance above referred to. As pointed out in my recent opinion to you disapproving the bonds of Cortland village, I am inclined to the view that the bonds authorized by said ordinance are invalid only to the extent of the excess of said proposed issue over the amount of bonds for which council might have legally provided under the limitation of Section 3940 General Code.

However, inasmuch as you have not in your resolution providing for the purchase of this issue of bonds, indicated any intention to purchase any part of said issue less than the whole thereof, I am not in position to advise you to do otherwise than to reject said issue and to rescind your former resolution providing for the purchase of the same.

I note a couple of other defects in the transcript, one at least of which would prevent my approval of the proceedings independent of the fundamental defect above considered in the absence of further information.

The transcript does not show that the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds was published in the manner required by law, and further, does not contain enough facts to show affirmatively that the meeting of council under date of September 4, 1918, at which the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds was enacted, was a legal meeting. This last defect is cured by the fact that apparently all of the members of council attended and participated in said meeting, and both of said defects are of such a nature that they probably could be obviated by further information. However, the first defect in the proceedings above pointed out is of such a nature as requires my disapproval of the issue.

The transcript submitted is herewith enclosed for return to the village authorities.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—OFFICES—MEMBER OF BOARD AND MEMBER OF COUNTY AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY INCOMPATIBLE.

The offices of member of a board of county commissioners and member of a county agricultural society are incompatible.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1918.

HON. D .H. PEOPLES, Prosecuting Attorney, Pomeroy, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "Are the office of commissioner of Meigs county, Ohio, and member of the Meigs County Agricultural society compatible?"

The court in State ex rel. vs. Shaffer, 6 O. N. P. (N. S.) 219, in the opinion on p. 221 lays down the following principle as applying to incompatible offices:

> "It was early settled at common law that it was not unlawful per se for a man to hold two offices; if the offices were incompatible with each other, that is, if the attempt to fill one disqualified the officer from performing the duties of the other, so that, for instance, in one position the officer was superior in functions to himself filling the other, as in the case of a man attempting to fill at one time the office of councilman and village clerk, then he could hold but one, but if the duties of one were not in conflict with the duties of the other, then both could be held. And it was early held that the test of incompatibility was not that it was physically impossible for the officer to perform the duties of one office because he was at that time elsewhere performing the duties of the other, but the distinction was in an inconsistency in the functions of the offices, as in the example above given."

In State of Ohio ex rel. vs. Gebert, 12 C. C. (N. S.) 274, the court in the opinion at p. 275 lays down the following principle:

> "Offices are considered incompatible when one is subordinate to, or in any way a check upon, the other; or when it is physically impossible for one person to discharge the duties of both."

It is readily seen that the court in this case has extended the principles of incompatibility far beyond that set out in State ex rel. vs. Shaffer, supra.

The question arises as to whether these offices might be considered incompatible due to the fact that the duties of the one are subordinate to those of the other, or in some way are a check upon the other.

The provisions of the law having to do with a county agricultural society are found in Sections 9880 to 9910 G. C., inc. Without quoting any of these sections in full, it is evident, from a study of the same, that the matters pertaining to a county fair and the property connected therewith are to be performed not alone by the county agricultural society, but also to a considerable extent by the county commissioners of the county. Sometimes these two bodies perform the duties together. At times the county commissioners act upon the request of the county agricultural society. And I would say at the outset that the duties of the county agricultural society in regard to county fairs are so interwoven with the duties of the board of county commissioners, that it can readily, and should be, held that these two offices are incompatible.

For instance, in Section 9894 G. C. we find a provision that—

> "* * * the county commissioners shall on the request of the agricultural society annually levy taxes of not exceeding a tenth of one mill upon all taxable property of the county, * * *."

In Section 9895 G. C. we find this provision:

> "If a county society and the county commissioners decide that the interests of the society and county demand an appropriation from the county treasury for the purchase and improvement of county fair grounds * *" the county commissioners may levy a tax upon all the taxable property of the county.

In Section 9900 G. C. there is a provision made in reference to the selling of its site by a county society, to the effect that if the county paid all or any portion of the purchase money for the site to be sold or leased, written consent must be given by the county commissioners to the sale or lease of the premises.

Section 9908 G. C. provides that under certain conditions consent of the county commissioners must be given to an agricultural society before it can encumber the real estate owned by it in order to pay the costs of necessary repairs and improvements. Other sections might be cited along the same line.

On account of all of these provisions it is my opinion that the offices of county commissioner and member of a county agricultural society are incompatible.

It does not appear in the request how or under what conditions the agricultural society of Meigs county holds its real estate, but I do not feel that it is essential for me to know this particular fact. I am of the opinion that in no case should a member of the board of county commissioners of a county be at the same time a member of the county agricultural society.

JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASES TO DAYTON POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY, JENNIE FRAHM, CELINA, OHIO, AND JAMES BENADUM, BALTIMORE, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 10, 1918, in which you enclose three leases, in triplicate, for my approval, as follows:

	Valuation
To The Dayton Power & Light Co., a small tract of land and water main crossing under the Miami and Erie canal at Piqua, O	$400 00
To Jennie Frahm of Celina, Ohio, a small tract of land on the south shore of Lake St. Marys, for agricultural purposes	259 50
To James Benadum, Baltimore, Ohio, a small portion of the abandoned Ohio canal property in the village of Baltimore, Fairfield county, Ohio, for agricultural purposes	100 00

I have carefully examined these leases, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES AND COSTS—REQUISITION—PAYMENT OF COSTS FOR RETURNING PRISONER NOT PAID BY STATE WITHOUT.

Section 13,722 G. C. authorizes the payment of costs covering the arrest and return of a prisoner from outside of Ohio only when such arrest and return have been made upon the requisition of the Governor.

If the prisoner has been returned to Ohio prior to either the time of the application for the extradition papers or the issuing of the same, the state is not authorized to pay the cost of the arrest and return.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1918.

HON. SAMUEL DOERFLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Cleveland, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 23, 1918, as follows:

"The following situation has presented itself in the matter of the extradition of prisoners from other states and the payment of bills for expenses incurred in returning them. Under the law, of course, the state reimburses the county for all expenses incurred.

It sometimes happens that prisoners will return without the formality of extradition papers. In such cases we have presented the bills to the auditor of state, but he has refused payment thereon for the reason that no extradition proceedings were brought.

I was therefore compelled in all cases, whether extradition was waived or not, to secure extradition papers from the Governor of Ohio so as to present them, or a certificate that they were granted, to the auditor with the county's bill.

In some cases the authorities outside of the state notified us that they would only hold the prisoner for a limited period of time and that inasmuch as extradition was waived, we must immediately secure our prisoner. In those cases we did not have time to send to Columbus for extradition papers, but would send the officer first to secure his prisoner and then would secure the extradition papers later, solely for the purpose of permitting the county to be reimbursed by the state.

I realize that securing extradition papers after a prisoner has been returned is an absurdity, yet as an official of this county I must protect it by such proceedings as will reimburse it for necessary expenses incurred.

It seems to me that the state auditor's contention that he will not reimburse the county unless the county has gone to the expense of securing extradition papers, whether necessary or not, is unsound.

I am submitting this whole proposition to you for solution, feeling that both the state and county will be dealt justly with."

Section 110 G. C. reads:

"The demand or application must be accompanied by sworn evidence that the party charged is a fugitive from justice, and that the demand is made in good faith for the punishment of crime and not for the purpose of the collection of debt or pecuniary mulct or of removing the alleged fugitive to a foreign jurisdiction to serve him with civil process, and by a duly attested copy of an indictment or an information, or a duly attested copy of a complaint made before a court or magistrate authorized to take it and accompanied with an affidavit or affidavits to the facts constituting the offense charged by persons having actual knowledge thereof."

It will be noted from this section that in making an application to the Governor for extradition papers, an affidavit must be made to the effect that the party sought to be extradited is a "fugitive from justice." This being so, it is clear that extradition papers cannot be issued if the prisoner has already been returned to Ohio, since he would not be a fugitive from justice at the time the application to the Governor was made.

Of course there might be cases where the person accused of a crime is a fugitive from justice at the time the application is made, but is returned to Ohio before the extradition was finally issued. It might be argued that in such cases the issuing of extradition papers, even after the return of the fugitive, would justify the payment of the expense of the prisoners returned by the state. However, the sections of the statute governing payment of costs in these cases force us to the opposite conclusion.

Section 2491 G. C. provides:

"When any person charged with a felony has fled to any other state, territory or country, and the governor has issued a requisition for such person, or has requested the president of the United States to issue extradition papers, the commissioners may pay from the county treasury to the agent designated in such requisition or request to execute them, all necessary expenses of pursuing and returning such person so charged, or so much thereof as to them seems just."

Section 13722 G. C. reads:

"Upon sentence of a person for a felony, the officers, claiming costs made in the prosecution, shall deliver to the clerk itemized bills thereof, who shall make and certify, under his hand and the seal of the court, a complete bill of the costs made in such prosecution, including the sum paid by the county commissioners for the arrest and return of the convict on the requisition of the governor, or on the request of the governor to the president of the United States. Such bill of costs shall be presented by such clerk to the prosecuting attorney, who shall examine each item therein charged, and certify to it if correct and legal."

It will be noted that Section 2491 makes provision for the payment of expenses in extradition cases in the first instance by the county commissioners, and that Section 13722 provides for the reimbursement of the county by the state. It will be noted, however, that Section 13722 only authorizes the reimbursement of the county by the state for the "sum paid by the county commissioners for the arrest and return of the convict on the requisition of the governor." It will be seen from this provision that the state pays the costs only when the convicted person has been arrested and returned on the requisition of the governor. If the prisoner has been returned to Ohio prior to either the application for the extradition or the issuing of the same, it is clear that he has not been returned "on the requisition of the governor," and in such cases it is my opinion that the state should not pay the costs of such prisoner's return.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—LAW IN FORCE AT TIME OF DISTRIBUTION GOVERNS DISTRIBUTION.

Inheritance taxes accruing under the law as it existed prior to the amendment of Section 5331 G. C. in the year 1913 but paid thereafter must be distributed in accordance with the provisions of the amended section.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 12, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 21, in which you invite my opinion upon a question submitted by the auditor of Auglaize county, as follows:

> "In our settlement of collateral inheritance tax in February we will be confronted with the following situation:
> L. N. Blume, of Wapakoneta, died on July 4, 1912, and the probate court, in reviewing the subject of inheritance tax pertaining to the estate, ordered that certain amounts be paid into the county treasury which was done on October 29, 1918.
> In making settlement, shall we make distribution based on the provisions of the law in force at the time of death of Mr. Blume or does the law in force at the time of payment into the treasury apply?"

In my judgment, the answer to this question depends upon the intention of the legislature as manifested in its amendment to Section 5331 of the General Code and that of the people in adopting Article XII, Sections 7 and 9 of the Constitution.

The history here involved is brought out by a quotation of the constitutional amendments and a statement as to the date as of which the legislature acted. The amendments are as follows:

> "Section 7.—Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at different rates upon collateral and direct inheritance, and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation."
> "Section 9.—Not less than fifty per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village, or township in which said income and inheritance tax originates."

These sections went into effect January 1, 1913. At that time there was in force a collateral inheritance tax law which did not, however, distribute its revenue in the manner provided in Section 9 as above quoted. At the succeeding session of the legislature Section 5331 of the General Code was so amended as to provide for the even division of inheritance tax revenues in the manner which I have indicated. The evident intention of the legislature was to conform the statute to the amended constitution.

Other amendments were made in the collateral inheritance tax law at the same time: the exemption of two hundred dollars was raised to five hundred dollars and the exclusion of brothers and sisters, etc., from the list of direct relatives whose inheritances were not taxable was made. The amending act contained no express saving clause; neither did the framers of the constitutional amendments offer for the approval of the people at the election at which they were adopted any clause saving pending proceedings from the effect of the amendment.

Section 26 of the General Code is a saving clause which can be read into every ordinary amending or repealing act. Without quoting it, however, I may remark that it evidently does not apply here, first, for the reason that we are dealing rather with a change in the constitution than with a change in the statute, and second, for the reason that it has been held that the collection of taxes is not a "proceeding" wihin the meaning of the section.

Alexander vs. Spencer, 13 C .C., n. s., 475.
Lee vs. Dawson, 8 C. C., 365.

In the absence of such a statute, however, it is a general principle applicable to inheritance taxes as well as to other forms of taxation that a change in the law does not affect substantive rights which have already vested; so that, for example, if the decedent in the case about which you inquire had left property to a brother, and before the tax had been assessed the law had been changed as it was in 1913 by making such inheritance theretofore exempt subject to taxation, such change would not in my opinion have affected the rights of the brother.

On the other hand, it is also stated as a general principle that changes in procedure may, in the absence of the expression of a contrary intention, result from a change in the statute. (See Gleason and Otis' Inheritance Taxation, pp. 25, 27.) In my opinion the change respecting the distribution of the tax is rather to be regarded as a change in procedure than as a change affecting substantive rights; especially is this true when we take into account the fact that this particular change was made in deference to an amendment to the constitution. In short, after January 1, 1913, it was no longer possible under the constitution to divide the proceeds of an inheritance tax otherwise than equally between the state and the municipality or township, unless the constitution be interpreted as applicable only to inheritance tax laws passed after the amendment went into effect. The general assembly of 1913, however, upon which devolved the duty of making the contemporaneous interpretation of the amendment, evidently proceeded upon the opposite basis and determined that it was incumbent upon it as a legislative body to conform the existing inheritance tax law to the provisions of the new constitution. The legislature must therefore have intended that all inheritance taxes distributed after Section 5331 was amended at least should be divided equally between the state and the local subdivision. I know of no constitutional impediment in the way of arriving at such a result.

For all the foregoing reasons I am of the opinion that although the right to collect the tax in question accrued prior to the amendment of Section 5331 G. C., the tax must be distributed in accordance with the section as it now is.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—POWER TO ISSUE BONDS UNDER SECTION 3939 NOT AUTHORITY TO ENGAGE IN BUSINESS OF OPERATING ICE PLANT—IF MUNICIPAL ICE PLANT PUBLIC UTILITY, UNDER CONSTITUTION, BONDS MAY BE ISSUED THEREFOR.

The mere grant of power by the legislature to a municipal corporation to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a municipal ice plant is not of itself sufficient authority to it to engage in the business of operating an ice plant.

If a mnuicipal ice plant is a "public utility" within the meaning of Article XVIII, Section 4 et seq. of the Constitution, which apply to all municipalities, such grant of power to issue bonds would, however, be fully efficacious.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of November 2, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "Under paragraph 27 of Section 3939 of the General Code, as amended, 107 O. L., 553, a municipality may issue bonds for installing and operating a municipal ice plant. We know of no other authority of law for the construction and operation of a municipal ice plant.
> Question: Is the authority to issue bonds sufficient authority in non-charter municipalities for the erection and operation of municipal ice plants?"

As you say, there is nothing in the General Code relating to the powers of municipal corporations generally which authorizes such a municipal corporation to own and operate a municipal ice plant.

If the Municipal Code were the sole source of the authority of a municipal corporation in this regard, I should feel grave doubt as to whether the mere grant of power to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing an ice plant would be sufficient to authorize a municipality to embark in such an enterprise.

However, under the present constitution of this state the authority of a municipal corporation to own and operate a public utility is not limited to that granted by the legislature, but is found in Article XVIII, Sections 4, 5 and 6, as follows:

> "Section 4.—Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility, the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility."
> "Section 5.—Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of Section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission."

"Section 6.—Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality."

In this connection Section 12 of the same article provides as follows:

"Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure."

The reference in Section 12 to the authority of any municipality to issue mortgage bonds is clearly not intended to exclude the issuance of general tax bonds as a means of acquiring, constructing or extending a public utility. On the contrary, it is clearly intimated in Section 12 that the mortgage bonds may be in addition to bonds which are subject to the "general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law."

The above quoted provisions of the Home Rule amendment are, in my opinion, self-executing and apply to all municipalities. As much was clearly intimated in the leading case on the subject of the Home Rule amendment, which is State ex rel. vs. Lynch, 88 O. S. 71. In the leading opinion of Shauck, C. J., in that case I find the following language: (p. 97)

"Among those who had attentively studied the functions of written constitutions it was accepted as a sound proposition that a municipality might own and operate only such utilities as it used in its municipal operations. Those who are responsible for this amendment were aware that no enlargement of that capacity was denoted by the provisions of the third section that 'municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government,' and, therefore, they employed the express language of the later section of the article to confer that capacity with respect to other utilities. * * *."

In other words, Judge Shauck intimated, if he did not expressly hold, in this passage from his opinion that the capacity to own and operate public utilities was conferred upon all municipal corporations by "the later section of the article," by which he meant of course Section 4.

I think it is clear, therefore, that all municipal corporations, non-charter as well as charter, have power to own and operate any public utility "the product or service of which is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants."

Of course, this conclusion still leaves open the question as to whether or not a municipal ice plant is a "public utility." This question is by no means easy of solution in the present confused state of the law on this vexed subject. If we go back to the time honored test of natural monopoly, that is, the existence of natural restrictions respecting production or distribution of a product or service, we would still be left in doubt, for there would seem to be no natural restriction upon the distribution of ice at least, such distribution being made by wagons, nor would there seem to be any natural limitation upon the production of artificial ice as any one who has the necessary capital may construct and operate an ice plant. The furnishing of artificial ice would therefore be brought with difficulty within the same category as the furnishing of electric current, gas, street car service, water, and the like, with respect to all of which there are natural limitations tending to a monopoly either upon the process of production as in the case of natural gas or in the process of distribution or direct rendition of the service as in the case of all of those enumerated. However, I am not prepared to say that a court would necessarily adhere strictly to the strict test of what constitutes a public utility which I have just suggested.

On the other hand we find that the legislature has actually conferred upon municipalities the power to issue bonds for this purpose. This must be taken as a legislative determination to the effect that a municipal ice plant does constitute a public utility; for it must be presumed that the legislature in granting the power to issue bonds either determined or took it for granted that a municipal corporation having the power to own and operate a public utility would be thereby authorized to own and operate a municipal ice plant.

In this state of legislation I would advise that it would be improper for the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices or any other state authority to question the power of a municipal corporation to own and operate an ice plant. To do so would be to question the constitutionality of the act. This should be done, in my judgment, at the instance of some taxpayer or other pecuniarily interested party. As for myself, I would prefer not to express an opinion upon the question, feeling that in doubtful cases it is the duty of the attorney-general to strive to uphold the constitutionality of a law rather than, as a general rule at least, to seek to strike it down.

I answer your question therefore by saying that although the authority to issue bonds conferred by amended Section 3939 of the General Code for the purpose of installing and operating a municipal ice plant may not be in and of itself sufficient authority in non-charter municipalities for the erection and operation of a municipal ice plant, this authority may be coupled up with the grant of authority in the above quoted sections of the Home Rule amendment to the constitution in such manner as to give color of authority to a municipal corporation, not only to issue bonds for the purpose, but also to undertake the enterprise of operating a municipal ice plant as a public utility; and that the ultimate question as to whether or not a municipal ice plant is a public utility should at this time, in view of the legislative action in the amendment of Section 3939, be regarded as a doubtful constitutional question which should be resolved by the administrative officers of the state in favor of the constitutionality of the statute and the existence of the power.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—VILLAGE LIABLE FOR EXPENSES INCURRED BY BOARD OF HEALTH IN ESTABLISHING QUARANTINE HOSPITAL.

Where a municipality established a quarantine hospital within its limits, accepts patients residing in the township outside the municipality and cares for them in said hospital, the village is liable for the expenses incurred by the board of health in reference thereto, under the provisions of Section 4451 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1918.

HON. JARED P. HUXLEY, Prosecuting Attorney, Youngstown, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication which reads as follows:

"This office has been requested to secure your opinion upon the following facts:

The village of Struthers in the past has made no levy for relief and support of the poor, these activities being exclusively discharged by the township trustees.

The village of Struthers has established a temporary hospital for the purpose of taking care of people suffering from Spanish Influenza which at the present time is an epideimc in said village. Patients suffering from this malady are also accepted from the township of Poland, within whose territorial limits the village of Struthers lies.

It is now suggested by the authorities of the village of Struthers that in view of the fact that the township has been bearing the expense of relief of the poor in the past, the village should assume the indebtedness incident to the establishment and maintenance of said hospital during the continuance of said Spanish Influenza epidemic.

Should the village of Struthers or the trustees of Poland township bear such indebtedness for the establishment of said hospital and its maintenance?"

The answer to your question is mainly based upon three sections of the General Code. That the village of Struthers, through the board of health, has full power and authority in law to erect a temporary hospital, is clearly evident from Sections 4456 and 4457 G. C. These sections read as follows:

"Section 4456.—A municipality may establish a quarantine hospital within or without its limits. If without its limits, the consent of the municipality or township shall be first obtained, but such consent shall not be necessary if the hospital is more than eight hundred feet from any occupied house or public highway. When great emergency exists, the board of health may seize, occupy and temporarily use for a quarantine hospital, a suitable vacant house or building within its jurisdiction. The board of health of a municipality, having a quarantine hospital, shall have exclusive control thereof."

"Section 4457.—The board of health may erect temporary wooden buildings or field hospitals deemed necessary for the isolation or protection of persons or freight supposed to be infected, and may employ nurses, physicians and laborers sufficient to operate them and sufficient police to guard them. Such board may cause the disinfection, renovation or destruction of bedding, clothing or other property belonging to corporations or individuals when such action is deemed necessary by the board or a reasonable precaution against the spread of contagious or infectious diseases."

If the municipality has authority to erect said quarantine hospitals and employ nurses, physicians and laborers sufficient to operate them, the next question to be considered is, who is responsible for the expenses incurred in the establishment and maintenance of the hospital?

In my opinion the provisions of Section 4451 G. C. apply. This section reads as follows:

"Section 4451.—When expenses are incurred by the board of health under the provisions of this chapter, upon application and certificate from such board, the council shall pass the necessary appropriation ordinances to pay the expenses so incurred and certified. The council may levy and set apart the necessary sum to pay such expenses and to carry into effect the provisions of this chapter. Such levy shall, however, be subject to the restrictions contained in this title."

I think it is clear from this section that the village of Struthers is liable for the indebtedness about which you make inquiry, and not the township of Poland, in which said village is located.

I am aware that the question might arise as to whether said township should pay at least a part of the cost and expense of the establishment and maintenance of said hospital, because patients suffering from Spanish Influenza were accepted from the township as well as from the territorial limits of said village. However, it is my opinion this would not alter the principle above laid down. While the authorities of the village of Struthers might have refused to accept patients residing in the township of Poland, yet if said authorities did so accept patients from said township, I know of no principle of law by which a part of the cost and expense of establishing and maintaining the hospital could be charged back to the township.

In an opinion rendered by me to Hon. C. M. Caldwell, prosecuting attorney, on April 16, 1917, found in Volume I, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, page 508, I practically so held. The facts in that case differ somewhat from those in the one now before me, but it seems to me the same principle applies to both. In the case Mr. Caldwell presented, a certain village had quarantined a person who was a resident of the township outside the village, said person having been taken sick with a contagious disease while in the village, and the question arose as to who should pay the cost and expense of the quarantine when such quarantined person was unable to pay the same. I held that said cost must be borne by the village, and used the following language in said opinion: (p. 510)

> "There is no provision for charging such payment back to the township or municipality in which the quarantined person might reside. The only time there can be such a charge back is when a person with a contagious disease is quarantined and is a legal resident of another county of the state and is unable to pay such expense."

Hence it is my view that if the village of Struthers accepted patients from the township of Poland, admitted them to the hospital and took care of them while so located therein, it is the duty of said village to provide payment therefor under the provisions of Section 4451 G. C.

I might say in passing, I am rendering this opinion upon the theory that the hospital established was a quarantine hospital and established for the purpose of isolating persons suffering with said disease and protecting other persons from the contagion of the same. A different question would arise if this hospital was a measure adopted merely to take care of what might be termed the indigent poor of the township and village. I take it that this was a regular quarantine hospital, from the fact that you speak of the disease as an epidemic and that the hospital was erected not so much with a view to taking care of the indigent poor, but to prevent the spread of the epidemic.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—BOARD OF HEALTH—PERSON QUARANTINED BY, SECTION 4436 APPLIES.

Section 4436 G. C., and not Section 3480, should be made to apply in a case where a resident of a village is quarantined by the board of health of said village and said person so quarantined is in need of medical attention and is unable to pay for the same.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1918.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication reading as follows:

"Some months ago Mr. A, a resident of the village of E, was quarantined by the board of health of said village of E. Mr. D, the attending physician, notified, in writing, the township trustees of the township in which said village of E is located, that he was attending Mr. A. Mr. D is now asking the township trustees to pay him for his services.

Please advise me whether, in your judgment, Section 4436 of the General Code, or the chapter embracing the Poor laws (3476-3496) govern and should be followed in the payment of this bill."

The provisions of the General Code which lie primarily at the foundation of your question are Sections 3480 and 4436, which read as follows:

"Section 3480.—When a person in a township or municipal corporation requires public relief, or the services of a physician or surgeon, complaint thereof shall be forthwith made by a person having knowledge of the fact to the township trustees, or proper municipal officer. If medical services are required, and no physician or surgeon is regularly employed by contract to furnish medical attendance to such poor, the physician called or attending shall immediately notify such trustees or officer, in writing, that he is attending such person, and thereupon the township or municipal corporation shall be liable for relief and services thereafter rendered such person, in such amount as such trustees or proper officers determine to be just and reasonable. If such notice be not given within three days after such relief is afforded or services begin, the township or municipal corporation shall be liable only for relief or services rendered after notice has been given. Such trustees or officer, at any time, may order the discontinuance of such services, and shall not be liable for services or relief thereafter rendered."

"Section 4436.—When a house or other place is quarantined on account of contagious diseases, the board of health having jurisdiction shall provide for all persons confined in such house or place, food, fuel, and all other necessaries of life, including medical attendance, medicine and nurses, when necessary. The expenses so incurred, except those for disinfection, quarantine, or other measures strictly for the protection of the public, when properly certified by the president and clerk of the board of health, or health officer where there is no board of health, shall be paid by the person or persons quarantined, when able to make such payment, and when not by the municipality in which quarantined."

Section 3480 G. C. is part of the act which has to do with the indigent poor of a township or municipal corporation, while Section 4436 is a part of the act relating to health conditions of municipalities, and especially with the board of health. Section 3480 is rather broad and general in its scope, while Section 4436 is specific and limited in its provisions, in that it applies to persons who are quarantined on account of contagious diseases.

For this reason, inasmuch as your question relates to a person who was quarantined by the board of health of a certain village, it is my opinion that Section 4436 should be made to apply, rather than the provisions of the act of which Section 3480 is a part.

While the above may be a sufficient answer to your question, it might be well, in order to have a somewhat broader foundation for the answer, to note the nature of the acts of which Sections 3480 and 4436 are a part.

Sections 3476 to 3496 inc. G. C. relate to the indigent poor of a township or municipality and are embodied in Ch. 1, Div. IV, Tit. XI of Part First. This act was originally passed as found in 73 O. L. 233 and was an act entitled "For the relief of the poor." It dealt with county infirmaries and the duties of township trustees. Section 11 of said act, which afterwards became Section 3476 G. C., provided that the township should afford public support or relief to all persons therein who were in condition requiring the same. Section 14 thereof, which afterwards became Section 3480 G. C., provided for medical attention to those who might be in need of it. The whole act pertained to indigents or paupers as they are usually called.

In 93 O. L. 261, an act is found entitled "To revise and improve the statutes of Ohio relating to the care of the poor." This act was passed in 1898. The section of this act which afterwards became Section 3476 G. C. was amended so that it included not only the township trustees, but also "the proper officers of each corporation therein." The section of the act which afterwards became Section 3480 G. C. was also made to include the same provision.

So that Sections 3476 to 3496 inc. G. C. furnish a complete scheme for the support of or relief to all persons within a township or a municipal corporation who are in such a condition as to require it, whether it be medical or other relief. That is, this chapter makes provision for the support and relief of the poor, in the various townships and municipal corporations, who are in need of relief because of general and ordinary conditions.

We will now consider the general provisions in connection with the board of health of cities and villages. This act is found in Ch. II, Div. 5, Subd. 2, Tit. XII, Part First, being Sections 4404 to 4476 inc. G. C. The general headings of this chapter are:

> Organization and Powers. Nuisances. Dangerous Communicable Diseases. Quarantine Hospitals. Food and Supplies. Sanitary Plant.

These headings indicate clearly the underlying principle of the chapter, viz., the preservation of the health of the people of the municipality. The name, board of health, also clearly indicates this. When we consider the chapter in detail, we find that every provision thereof has to do with but one thing, and that is, that the board of health is to take such steps and adopt such measures as to prevent the inception of infectious and contagious diseases and the spreading of the same. It deals with water-closets, privies, cess-pools, sinks and drains; with yards, pens and stables, and the use, cleaning and emptying of the same; with the quarantining of persons exposed to infectious or contagious diseases and all kinds of buildings needed for said quarantine; with the disposition of bodies of persons dying with infectious or contagious diseases; with the erection and maintenance of quarantine hospitals; with the inspection of all kinds of foods and supplies with reference to whether they are pure or not; and with the erection and maintenance of plants for the removal from the municipality of liquid or solid wastes dangerous to the public health.

In all this there is not one word said relative to the indigent poor of the municipality, nor provision made in reference to them. This was not the object or purpose which the legislature had in mind in enacting the statute in regard to the board of health. The object and purpose of this chapter is specific and definite and relates entirely to the prevention of the inception of infectious and contagious diseases and the spreading of the same; while, as said before, the object and purpose of the chapter heretofore considered is just as definite and specific, to the effect that it deals entirely and absolutely with measures for relief of the poor, whether this relief be medical or otherwise.

Hence when we consider the two fundamental or basic sections of these two acts as applied to your question, and the general scope and nature of the acts themselves, I think we are safe in concluding that a state of facts, such as you submit, should be controlled by Section 4436, rather than by Section 3480 G. C.

I might call your attention to a decision of the circuit court found in 18 C. C. (N. S.) 196 in village of Barberton vs. Lohmers. In this case the court was not directly considering whether a state of facts, as set out by you, should come under Section 4436 or Section 3480 G. C., but it held, under facts very similar to those set out by you, that a physician would have a right of action against the municipality under the provisions of Section 4436. It was an action to recover compensation for medical services rendered to quarantined smallpox patients alleged to have been unable to pay therefor themselves. Of course the procedure of the physician in said circuit court case differed from the course pursued by the physician in your case, but to my mind the decision of the court at least tends to the point that Section 4436 is the proper section to control in those cases in which persons quarantined are in need of medical attention and are unable to pay for the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—BASED ON RIGHT TO RECEIVE AND NOT ON RIGHT TO TRANSMIT.

Where a residuary estate is divided by will among four collateral relatives, the shares of two of whom are less than five hundred dollars in amount, the collateral inheritance tax is to be computed by subtracting these shares together with the sum of one thousand dollars from the total amount of such estate and is to be paid out of the share received by the two remaining collateral relatives in the proportion that they are entitled to share in what is left after these deductions are made.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1918.

HON. H. T. PHILLIPS, Probate Judge, Athens, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your letter of recent date you request my opinion as follows:

> "A dies testate leaving a net estate amounting to $5,000.00. By the terms of the will of A, $300.00 was given to a niece, B, $350.00 to a nephew, C, and the residue to two nephews, D and E. How much of the estate is subject to the collateral inheritance tax? Should the total inheritance tax be paid from the residue willed to D and E, or should it be apportioned among the legatees according to the amount received by each?"

You are advised, in accordance with principles laid down in numerous opinions of this department and the courts, that the tax in the case about which you inquire should be computed upon the sum of $3,350.00, and that the total tax should be paid by D and E in the proportions in which they are entitled to share in so much of the residue as exceeds the sum of $1,000.00.

The tax is based upon the right to receive by inheritance and not upon the right to transmit. Each distributive share constitutes a separate subject of taxation. The shares of A and B fall below the statutory exemption of $500.00 and are not taxable; those of D and E are taxable to the extent of the excess of the value of each above $500.00. I assume that the shares which they will respectively get are both above the sum of $500.00 in value.

For these reasons the conclusions which I have previously expressed have been arrived at.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DOG LICENSE LAW—SHERIFF—DEPUTIES OF SHERIFF UNDER SAID LAW ORDINARY DEPUTY—DUTY OF SHERIFF TO SEIZE AT SIGHT.

1. The deputy sheriffs who perform the duties devolving upon the sheriff under the law found in 107 O. L. 534, are the ordinary deputies selected by the sheriff under the law.

2. The county commissioners must make an allowance for deputy hire, in view of the added duties placed upon the sheriff in said act. If the amount allowed should not be sufficient, the only remedy is for the sheriff to apply to the common pleas court for an additional allowance.

3. Under the provisions of section 5652-7 G. C. (107 O. L. 535), the sheriff is required to seize at sight and impound a dog under the conditions therein set out, and is not required to file an affidavit before a justice of the peace, before he can make such seizure.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1918.

HON. FRANK B. GROVE, Prosecuting Attorney, Cadiz, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication requesting my opinion on the following matter:

> "Under Section 2980-1 G. C., the commissioners of Harrison county, Ohio, fixed the deputy hire for the sheriff at about $400.00, said sum fixed being the greatest amount they could allow under said statute, i. e., they allowed the full 30 per cent of the fees, etc., collected by the sheriff, which fees amounted to less than $2,000.00.
> The amount of deputy hire as so fixed by the commissioners is insufficient for the sheriff to employ deputy or deputies to enforce the provisions of the dog law, as found in 107 O. L. 534-540.
> Section 5652-8 G. C. (107 O. L. 535) provides that "county commissioners shall provide for the employment of deputy sheriffs necessary to enforce the provisions of this act."
> My question is this: May the county commissioners make an allowance for the sheriff to provide pay for deputies mentioned in preceding paragraph, and have said amount of said allowance drawn from the county fund and placed to credit of the sheriff's fee fund to be used for such deputies?
> Or must the sheriff first expend the amount allowed by the commissioners under Section 2980-1 G. C., and then apply to the common pleas court for a further allowance as provided in said Section 2980-1?

I should further like to inquire whether you construe Section 5652-7 (107 O. L. 535) as requiring the sheriff to seize untagged dogs on sight or information? Or before he can legally be required to take said untagged dogs must an affidavit be filed as mentioned in said section?"

Your communication divides itself into three questions as follows:

1. The nature of deputy sheriffs who are to be provided to perform the duties under the dog law as found in 107 O. L. 534.
2. The payment of these deputies.
3. Seizure of untagged dogs.

In an opinion (No. 861) to Hon. Perry Smith on December 15, 1917, I held that the duty of seizing untagged dogs primarily rests with the sheriff of the county, and that if he performs this duty through a deputy, it must be done through his ordinary force of deputies, selected under the provisions of law relating to this matter; that is, the same force which performs the general duties devolving upon the sheriff must perform the duties set out in the above act, providing the sheriff desires to perform those duties through deputies. This opinion, I think, answers your first query and I am enclosing a copy of the same for your consideration.

In an opinion (No. 973) rendererd to Hon. John V. Campbell, prosecuting attorney, on January 29, 1918, I held that the deputy sheriffs who performed the duties under the law designated above are to be paid in the same manner as are the ordinary deputies in the sheriff's office. In other words, the sheriff must make his report to the county commissioners, and said commissioners make an allowance, in accordance with the provisions of law, which will take care of the full deputy force needed by the sheriff. To be sure the county commissioners would take into consideration the added duties placed upon the sheriff under the above law and would make their allowance in view of said added duties. Of course if your commissioners have allowed the maximum for deputy hire, the sheriff of your county can not do otherwise than to apply to the common pleas court of your county for an additional allowance for deputy hire. I am enclosing a copy of said opinion No. 973, which I think fully answers your second question.

Your third question asks for a construction of Section 5652-7 G. C. (107 O. L. 535), which reads as follows:

"County sheriffs shall seize and impound all dogs more than three months of age, except dogs kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel found not wearing valid registration tags. Upon affidavit made before a justice of the peace, that a dog more than three months of age and not kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel is not wearing a valid registration tag and is at large, or is kept or harboured in his township, such justice of the peace shall forthwith order the sheriff of the county to seize and impound such animal. Thereupon such sheriff shall immediately seize and impound such dog so complained of. Such sheriff shall forthwith give notice to the owner of such dog, if such owner be known to the sheriff, that such dog has been impounded, and that the same will be sold or destroyed if not redeemed within four days. If the owner of such dog be not known to the sheriff, he shall post a notice in the county court house describing the dog and place where seized, and advising the unknown owner that such dog will be sold or destroyed if not redeemed within four days."

In order to understand this section, it will be well for us to consider Section 5652-6 G. C., which reads as follows (107 O. L. 535):

> "Every registered dog, except dogs constantly confined to registered kennels, shall at all times wear a valid tag issued in connection with the certificate evidencing such registration. Failure at any time to wear such valid tag shall be prima facie evidence of lack of registration and shall subject any dog found not wearing such valid tag to impounding, sale or destruction, as hereinafter provided."

Section 5652-7, supra, specifically provides that county sheriffs shall seize and impound all dogs more than three months of age, unless they are dogs kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel, or unless they are wearing a valid registration tag. In my opinion this requires the sheriff to seize untagged dogs outside of a registered dog kennel, without the necessity of filing an affidavit before a justice of the peace. The latter part of this section gives the right to any individual to appear before a justice of the peace and file an affidavit stating that a dog more than three months of age, and not kept constantly confined in a registered dog kennel, is not wearing a valid registration tag and is at large. When such an affidavit is filed, the justice notifies the sheriff, at which time it immediately becomes his duty to seize and impound the dog so complained of. But this provision does not have any effect upon the duty of the sheriff to seize upon sight and impound a dog, as hereinbefore set out.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COMMON PLEAS COURT—POWER TO COMMIT CHILD TO CHILDREN'S HOME.

A common pleas court exercising the divorce jurisdiction is without power to commit a child to the children's home of a county in the sense that it may order the officials of such home to receive the child; but it may order any person who may be a party in the case to place such child in such children's home by complying with the statutory procedure for the voluntary placing of children in such home.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 14, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Some time ago I received from you a request for opinion in the following language:

> "We find that occasionally a judge of the common pleas court is committing dependent children to a county children's home. This has been occurring where there seems to be a designation of the judge of the probate court to act in the capacity of judge of the juvenile court.
> We wish to inquire whether a commitment by the judge of the common pleas court, under such circumstances, is legal, and if the superintendent of the county children's home is required to accept such commitment. See Section 1639 of the General Code."

Section 1639 General Code, referred to in your letter, relates to the exercise of the juvenile jurisdiction.

Suspecting the possibility of misunderstanding, I later requested specific information from you relative to the facts upon which your question was based, and am just in receipt of such information in the form of abstracts of records and journal entries in five cases, as follows:

"Dreyfuse Case No. 1.

Three children. Admitted to ———— County Children's Home, 3-3-16, by one trustee upon application of the Associated Charities and juvenile probation officer. Parents separated, mother living in adultery.

Later, action for non-support brought by trustees of children's home, in common pleas court against father, resident of Seneca county. Man indicted by grand jury of ———— county 4-9-17. April 11, 1917, defendant pleaded guilty for non-support of children and court fixed bond of $500 and placed order of $4 per week for the support of children, appointing a guardian as trustee, these payments to be continued until each child attains the age of sixteen years. The said trustee was further ordered to pay this money to the children's home.

Halliwell Case No. 2.

Two children, admitted to ———— County Children's Home, 4-20-17, by one trustee upon application of an aunt. Divorce proceedings in court December, 1916, were dismissed, male children being given to an aunt and the female child to the mother of the defendant who was ordered to pay for the support of the children. Order fails to state how much. This aunt secured the admission of the boys to the county home. Father later voluntarily agreed to contribute through the clerk of the court $4 a week toward the support of his boys.

Drake Case No. 3.

Two boys, placed in ———— County Children's Home, 10-13-17, by order of common pleas judge, with order on father to pay $2 a week for support, with a further order that if he was not able to pay, he should present himself to the home and the matron would furnish him with work to do to the extent of his indebtedness. Matron complained that she could not tolerate about the place a man of Mr. Drake's character and reputation and to give him work would be impossible. The judge therefore secured the placing of the boys in family homes.

Commitment on October 1, 1917, of common pleas court of the boys, Andrew and John, to ———— County Children's Home. On October 25, 1917, custody and control of common pleas court released in this case in favor of juvenile court.

Neusbaum Case, No. 4.

——— Neusbaum admitted to ———— County Children's Home, 12-10-12, by trustee on application of mother; parents separated. Kidnapped from county home on 12-18-12 by father. Later divorce trial, court ordered child to live with mother, and father to pay support. Mother later remarried, later separated; claims she could not keep child on what court sent to her; child admitted to county home 6-12-18 as a boarder. Common pleas judge sent for father and requested him to make provision for the care of the child who by order of court was on July 6, 1918, placed out in family home.

Graham Case, No. 5.

Children admitted to ———— County Children's Home 3-29-18 on order common pleas judge. After divorce proceedings which were denied and dismissed, children were placed in children's home on court order with charge of $8 per week toward the support of the children."

I observe at once that cases Nos. 1, 2 and 4 do not answer the description set forth in your original letter, inasmuch as they are not commitments at all but in each of them the children were admitted on application to the trustees of the home under favor of Section 3089 or Section 3090 of the General Code. No such question as that originally submitted by you is therefore even remotely raised in these cases.

Turning now to cases Nos. 3 and 5 I find that the following journal entries were made:

Case No. 3.—Drake vs. Drake.

"On this first day of October, 1917, it appearing to the court that the defendant, ——— Drake, has not a fit place to keep the two boys, minor children of the parties, that they have not had proper care or schooling in the last year, at least, and that there is no dependence to be placed upon the defendant that he will be able to take proper care of them or send them regularly to school, it is ordered that the said children, ———— and ———, be committed to the ———— County Orphans' Home until further order herein, and that the defendant contribute to their maintenance there at least the sum of two ($2.00) dollars per week in advance.

On this, 25th day of October, 1917, it appearing to the court that the children of the parties herein, ————, are in need of juvenile jurisdiction as now exercised by the juvenile court of this county, in order that they may be properly reared and educated as contemplated by the statute of this state, and that this court is not provided with the proper agencies to that end.

It is ordered that the custody and control of this court be released in favor of said juvenile court, and that said court be requested to take charge of said children and make such order in the premises as may seem to be to the best interest of the children."

Case No. 5.—Graham vs. Graham.

"* * * it is ordered that a divorce be denied them and each of them and that both the petition and the cross petition therefor be dismissed.

And the court further finding that neither the plaintiff nor the defendant is a proper person to have the care and custody of said children, it is ordered by the court that the care and custody of said children be confided to the ———— County Orphans' Home and the defendant is ordered to pay the sum of $8.00 per week for their support, said payments to be made through the clerk of this court."

Neither of these cases really raises the question which you submit in your general letter. For in that letter you state as a conclusion that the judge of the common pleas court has assumed to exercise juvenile jurisdiction without being designated to exercise that jurisdiction, whereas the journal entries which I have quoted show that in both cases now under consideration the common pleas court was exercising the divorce jurisdiction and not the juvenile jurisdiction. Among the powers of the common pleas court in the exercise of the divorce jurisdiction is that set forth in Section 11987 of the General Code, as follows:

> "* * * The court shall make such order for the disposition, care and maintenance of the children, if any, as is just."

This jurisdiction is a continuing one in the sense that the order for disposition, care and maintenance may be modified from time to time whether there is any reservation in the original order to that effect or not.

Hoffman vs. Hoffman, 15 O. S. 427. Rogers vs. Rogers, 51 O. S. 1.

Jurisdiction in divorce cases, in so far as the power to award alimony and regulate the custody, etc., of the children is concerned, is exercised upon equitable principles, one of which is that the court acts in personam. In this respect the jurisdiction and powers of the court differ both from its jurisdiction and powers respecting the decree of divorce itself and from the jurisdiction and powers of the court exercising juvenile jurisdiction in adjudicating upon the status of a child. In cases of the last two described classes the court acts quasi in rem.

It is indispensable to the valid exercise of jurisdiction in personam that the decrees and orders of the court shall be directed to persons who are parties in the case and upon whom the process of the court has been personally served. For this reason alone a divorce court is without power to order any person or institution which is not a party to the case to assume the custody of minor children. Moreover, consideration of the statutes relative to the admission of children into a county or district children's home discloses the fact that there are two methods by which children may be admitted: These may be described as application and commitment. In the one case, exemplified by statutes already referred to, the efficient official act which constitutes a child a legal inmate of a children's home is the order of admission on the part of the trustees of the home; in the other case, that act is an order of a court having jurisdiction directed to the proper officers of the home and binding on them whether agreed to by them or not. Without quoting statutes it is sufficient to say that the juvenile court is expressly authorized to commit children to children's homes as well as to other institutions, whereas the common pleas court in the exercise of divorce jurisdiction is not given such express authority. For reasons which I have previously stated, I do not think that such authority could be claimed by implication arising from Section 11987.

I therefore arrive at the conclusion that a common pleas court exercising divorce jurisdiction is without power to commit a child to a children's home.

But, though technically such commitment can not be made by a divorce court in a direct way, a child may be placed in a children's home as a result of a decree of such a court in the following manner:

The court acting in personam may order the parties, husband and wife presumably, and more particularly the one party having the actual custody of the child at the time, to take such steps as may be necessary to place such child in a children's home or in any other public or private institution. It then becomes incumbent upon such parties to comply with the order of the court at peril of proceedings in contempt. Such compliance can be effected only by making application to the trustees of the home in the case of a children's home; if the trustees refuse admission to the child for any proper reason, the court would have to take other action, being without power, as has been stated, to compel the trustees to receive the child; but should the trustees admit the child under such circumstances it would be legally admitted.

Now in case No. 3 the court exercising divorce jurisdiction appears to have assumed power to commit children to the "———— County Orphans' Home." Technically this order was void for reasons already stated. It nevertheless appears that the children referred to in the order were admitted to the home and that subsequently the common pleas court, perhaps feeling unable to deal with the situation, had released the custody of the children to the juvenile court. Such release, I may say, was necessary for the divorce court having previously acquired jurisdiction the juvenile court could not properly have interfered and assumed control of the custody of the children without such action on the part of the common pleas court.

In Re: Angeline E. Crist, 89 O. S. 33. Children's Home vs. Fetter, 90 O. S. 110. Orphan Asylum vs. Soule, 24 C. C. n. s. 151.

If the juvenile court has assumed jurisdiction in this case, which does not appear, and if in the exercise of such jurisdiction it has ordered the children to remain in the children's home in question, it would appear that no question could now be raised as to the legality of their status as inmates of such home. It must be admitted, however, that there was an irregularity in this case, though not the kind of irregularity suspected by you as indicated in your general inquiry. That is to say, the defect in proceedings did not arise from an attempt on the part of the common pleas court to exercise juvenile jurisdiction but rather from an attempt on the part of the common pleas court, having properly acquired divorce jurisdiction, to exercise that jurisdiction in an improper manner.

In case No. 5 the entry shows that the court did not frame its decree in the objectionable manner in which the decree in case No. 3 was framed. The order was that the custody and control of the children "be confided to the ———— County Children's Home." This order was proper and amounted to a direction to the parties in the case to take the proper steps to place the children in the home. The detailed statement of facts upon which your abstract is based seems to show that the authorities of the children's home regarded this order as in the nature of a commitment and accepted the children into the home without formal application. This was erroneous, and for that reason the children are not properly inmates of the home; they may be made so, if desired, however by complying with the statutes relative to the voluntary admission of children to the home.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ADJUTANT GENERAL—DUTY OF, RE MAINTENANCE LEGISLATIVE HALLS—RE APPOINTMENT OF EMPLOYES.

1. The duty of the adjutant general respecting the maintenance and repair of the legislative halls is limited by Section 150 of the General Code to their preparation for the reception of the general assembly at the commencement of each ses- sion. Such work required to be done during the session may, without conflict with this section, be done under the supervision of the respective houses and paid for out of appropriations for their purposes, as may be the cleaning and renovation necessary at the conclusion of a session and after the adjournment thereof.

Under Section 150 G. C. and appropriations to the House and Senate, respectively, for purposes of cleaning, repairs, etc., the renovation of the legislative halls immediately preceding the regular session of the general assembly devolves upon the adjutant general and such appropriations can not be lawfully extended for such purpose.

2. The adjutant general is without power to appoint more than the three officers with police powers mentioned in Section 151 G. C. Such power can not be derived from an appropriation for the salaries of six policemen.

Such appropriation bill constitutes authority to employ and pay the extra policemen as general employes, though they might not lawfully exercise the police powers provided by statute.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request for an early opinion upon the following questions:

> "Under the language of Section 150 G. C., is the adjutant general required to renovate the furniture, carpets, curtains, clocks and other equipment of the legislative halls, and make all necessary repairs therein which may become necessary during the session of the legislature; or may that body, by resolutions, authorize its own employees to renovate carpets, curtains, clocks and other fixtures and supplies and to make such repairs either during the session of the legislature, or after its adjournment?
> Section 151 G. C. specifically designates the number of certain employees that may be appointed by the adjutant general, and Section 154 G. C. specifically designates the pay of such appointees.
> May the adjutant general, in the face of the provisions of Section 151 G. C., appoint more of such employees than are therein designated, and may the legislature legally provide compensation for a greater number of such employes in the appropriation bill than are so specified by Sections 151 and 154 G. C.?
> In other words, where the law specifically fixes the number of employees, and fixes their compensation, may the legislature, in its appropriation bills, legally provide funds for a greater number, or at a higher compensation?"

Sections 150, 151 and 154 G. C., referred to in your inquiry, provide as follows:

> "Section 150.—The superintendent shall annually make a report of his transactions to the governor, keep the state house, grounds and appurtenances constantly protected and in order, and prepare the legislative halls for the reception of the general assembly at the commencement of each session."
> "Section 151.—The adjutant general shall appoint for the term of two years one day policeman, one night policeman and one visitors' attendant."
> "Section 154.—The day policeman and visitors' attendant shall receive an annual salary of seven hundred and twenty dollars, and the night policeman shall receive an annual salary of eight hundred dollars.

Section 150, the interpretation whereof is involved in your first question, clearly limits the duty of the adjutant general as superintendent of the state house to preparing the legislative halls for the reception of the general assembly at the commencement of each session. This particular duty is separately enjoined upon him by the section, so that I would find it impossible to reach the conclusion that the continuing care of the legislative halls devolves upon the adjutant general in his capacity as superintendent under the provision that he shall "keep the state house, grounds and appurtenances constantly protected and in order." Nor could I say that the adjutant general acquires general authority to care for the legislative halls as a part of the state house, etc., under Section 146 of the General Code, which gives to him "supervision and control of the state house and heating plant therein, the fixing and placing of all offices, commissions, departments and bureaus of the state therein, * * * materials and persons employed in and about the state house, the grounds and appurtenances thereof and all work or materials required in or about them."

That is to say, if the general assembly had intended in enacting these statutes to give to the adjutant general the power and the duty to attend to the care and maintenance of the legislative halls generally, it would not have dealt specifically with his duty as regards the legislative halls in the way in which it actually deals with that duty in Section 150.

I am therefore of the opinion that the adjutant general has nothing to do with the care, renovation and repair of the equipment in the legislative halls during the session of the legislature. His duty is fully discharged when he has prepared such halls for the reception of the general assembly "at the commencement of each session."

A somewhat closer question is presented by that part of your question which deals with the cleaning, etc., which has to be done after the conclusion of a legislative session. The General Code sections which have been referred to and quoted leave this question very much in doubt. Certainly the sections are not explicit enough to control a given session of the general assembly in the proper expenditure of the moneys appropriated for the use of the separate houses. So that in practice if in making up the budget for the House of Representatives and the Senate, respectively, appropriations are made upon the assumption that at the conclusion of the session the hall devoted to each branch of the assembly is to be cleaned and renovated, so that it is left in good condition for other proper uses during the recess or adjournment of the assembly, and then by proper House or Senate resolutions provision is made for expending these appropriations in the doing of such work, such expenditures are, in my opinion, legal.

From conversations with you I have gathered the impression that your first question relates to a state of facts more specific than that described in your formal inquiry. I shall attempt to cover these facts as I understand them:

The time for the commencement of the regular session of the general assembly is at hand; the legislative halls presumably stand in need of renovation and cleaning in preparation for that session; the sergeants-at-arms of the respective houses or other representatives of such houses of the general assembly are preparing to make, or are making, these repairs and doing this cleaning.

This, in my opinion, is improper. As I have pointed out, the plain duty of preparing the legislative halls for the reception of the general assembly rests upon the adjutant general. The appropriations made for the House and Senate, respectively, at the last session of the general assembly do not in any wise conflict with the provisions of Section 150 of the General Code, as it must be presumed that those appropriations are intended to provide for maintenance and repair, etc., in and about the legislative halls during the sessions and immediately after the conclusion thereof.

Answering your second question, I beg to advise that without more authority than what is set forth in Section 151 G. C. the adjutant general may not, of course, appoint or employ in his capacity as superintendent of the state house any policemen or attendants other than those therein mentioned. I take it, however, that your question is asked in the light of appropriations which have been made, such as that which I find in 107 Ohio Laws, 265, setting aside under the head of "Personal Service—State House and Grounds" a sum so itemized as to care for the compensation of the following employes:

> "Superintendent of laborers, 11 laborers, 2 night policemen, 2 visitors' attendants, 2 day policemen, carpenter, chief engineer, 2 engineers, 2 firemen, 2 elevator attendants."

Here are appropriations to pay twenty-six employes instead of the three specifically mentioned in Section 151. I take it, however, that your question does not relate to all of these employes. For example, the superintendent of laborers. the chief engineer, the carpenter, the under-engineers, the firemen and the elevator attendants are not employes of the character mentioned in Section 151. While the adjutant general is not specifically by statute authorized to employ other persons, yet the inference is plain that, subject to such appropriations as the general assembly may make, he is to have authority to do so. When he is given by Section 146 supervision of the heating plant of the state house he is not, of course, expected to operate that plant in his own proper person. The same principle holds good for and justifies all the appropriations made save those for the six policemen mentioned in the appropriation. The statute gives him three, who are respectively designated as a day policeman, a night policeman and a visitors' attendant. It is very clear, however, that the visitors' attendant is just as much a "policeman" as either of the other two who are mentioned (See Sections 152 and 153 G. C., not quoted).

In short, the appropriation multiplies by two the number of persons to be appointed by the adjutant general for each of these positions; he is to have two day policemen instead of one, two night policemen instead of one and two visitors' attendants instead of one.

I am very clearly of the opinion that the extra policemen and attendants thus provided for can not exercise the police powers mentioned in Sections 152 and 153 of the General Code; that is to say, they can not take an oath of office, they are not entitled to wear a uniform and badge of office and they have not the same authority to make arrests as policemen of cities, etc. These police powers are conferred by law upon three persons only and not six.

I think it follows from this that, strictly speaking, the appropriations for additional policemen, etc., are ineffectual to create additional officers of this class; so that, still dealing with the question from the standpoint of strict logic, the adjutant general is not authorized by the appropriations alone to have more than the one day policeman, the one night policeman and the one visitors' attendant which the statute authorizes him to appoint. Not being empowered to appoint such additional officers, the provision as to their compensation might be said necessarily to be equally ineffectual. However, I have already stated that, in my opinion, the law does not limit the number of employes which may be authorized by appropriation in the department of the adjutant general as superintendent of the state house, etc. Therefore, while it is probably true that the additional policemen referred to in the appropriation could not, strictly speaking, have or exercise police powers, I would be further of the opinion that their employment in a general capacity as assistants to the adjutant general would not be illegal. You are not interested in the powers of these officers or employes but merely in the question as to whether compensation may be lawfully paid to them. This question, I think, must be answered in the affirmative. I take it that the employes in question have already rendered services and that your question relates to the legality of payments previously made. I am of the opinion that such payments were legal.

Your second question also raises the issue as to whether the salaries mentioned in Section 154 can be exceeded under favor of the appropriation. It does not appear that such has been the case, however, as the amounts appropriated for the salaries of night policemen, day policemen and visitors' attendants are in each instance exactly twice the amount mentioned in Section 154 of the General Code. Unless, therefore, I am informed that what you hint at in this part of your question has actually been done or attempted I would prefer not to pass upon that feature of your question.

For all the foregoing reasons, then, I answer your questions as follows:

(1) The duty of the adjutant general respecting the maintenance and repair of the legislative halls is limited by Section 150 of the General Code to their preparation for the reception of the general assembly at the commencement of each session. Such work required to be done during the session may, without conflict with this section, be done under the supervision of the respective houses and paid for out of appropriations for their purposes, as may be the cleaning and renovation necessary at the conclusion of a session and after the adjournment thereof.

Under Section 150 G. C. and appropriations to the House and Senate, respectively, for purposes of cleaning, repairs, etc., the renovation of the legislative halls immediately preceding the regular session of the general assembly devolves upon the adjutant general and such appropriations can not be lawfully extended for such purpose.

(2) The adjutant general is without power to appoint more than the three officers with police powers mentioned in Section 151 G. C. Such power can not be derived from an appropriation for the salaries of six policemen.

Such appropriation bill constitutes authority to employ and pay the extra policemen as general employes, though they might not lawfully exercise the police powers provided by statute.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENT IN CLERMONT, JACKSON, JEFFERSON, MADISON, MORGAN AND SUMMIT COUNTIES.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1918

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 13, in which you enclose for my approval, final resolutions for the following improvements:

Milford-Hillsboro Road.—I. C. H. No. 9, Section N-1, Clermont county.

Jackson-McArthur Road—I. C. H. No. 396, Section I. Jackson county, (Cont. No. 2).

Jackson-Pomeroy Road—I. C. H. No. 395, Section F, Jackson county, (Cont. No. 1).

Skelly-Empire Road—I. C. H. No. 378, Section A, Jefferson county.

Marysville-London Road—I. C. H. No. 239, Section C-2, Madison county.

McConnelsville-Marietta Road—I. C. H. No. 393, Section P, Morgan county.

Akron-Canton Road—I. C. H. No. 66, Section R, Summit county.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with the provisions of Section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—CITY SOLICITOR AS POLICE COURT PROSECUTOR NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION UNDER SECTION 13440.

A city solicitor or assistant designated as prosecutor of the mayor's or police court is not entitled to compensation under Section 13440 G. C. for services rendered in the prosecution of the cases enumerated in said section in such courts.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 16, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of September 11, 1918, as follows:

"We respectfully request your written opinion upon the following matter:

Is a city solicitor or assistant, designated as prosecutor of the mayor's or police court, entitled to the compensation fixed by Section 13440 G. C., for prosecutions in such cases before the mayor or police court of a municipality? See also Section 4306 and 4307 G. C."

Sections 4306 and 4307 of the General Code read:

Section 4306—"The solicitor shall also be prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court. When council allows an assistant or assistants to the solicitor, he may designate an assistant or assistants to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court. The person thus designated shall be subject to the approval of the city council."

Section 4307.—"The prosecuting attorney of the police or mayor's court shall prosecute all cases brought before such court, and perform the same duties, as far as they are applicable thereto, as required of the prosecuting attorney of the county. The city solicitor or the assistant or assistants whom he may designate to act as prosecuting attorney or attorneys of the police or mayor's court, shall receive for this service such compensation as council may prescribe, and such additional compensation as the county commissioners shall allow."

You will note that Sections 4306 and 4307 make it the duty of the solicitor to prosecute all cases brought before the police or mayor's court. Section 13440 G. C. provides that the humane society "may employ an attorney to prosecute" certain cases therein enumerated. If the humane society does not see fit to employ an attorney, it is the duty of the city solicitor to act in these cases. For this reason it is my opinion that the city solicitor may not be allowed any additional compensation for his services with respect to the cases enumerated in Section 13440 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF UNION TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, LICKING COUNTY—$2,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Union Township Rural School district, Licking county, Ohio, in the sum of $2,500.00 for the purpose of completing a school building in the course of erection in said school district.

I have examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Union Township Rural School district, Licking county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds.

This proposed issue of bonds is one by the board of education of said Rural School district without a vote of the electors under authority of Section 7629 G. C.

As a result of my examination of this transcript I am compelled to disapprove said issue specifically for the reason that the board of education in the resolutior providing for this issue of bonds did not make any provision for an annual levy of taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes on said bonds, as required by Section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state or any political sub-divisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

The above quoted provision of the State Constitution is obviously mandatory and the failure of the board of education in the adoption of this resolution to comply therewith leaves me no discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove the issue.

An examination of the transcript discloses two other defects, which may be briefly noted:

(1) The transcript shows that this school district has an outstanding bonded indebtedness. This being so the board of education of the school district is required under Section 7614 G. C. to provide a sinking fund with respect to said bonded indebtedness to be managed by a board of commissioners of the sinking fund of said school district to be appointed in the manner provided in said section. Under the provisions of Section 7619 G. C., the board of education is required to offer this proposed issue of bonds to said board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district before otherwise disposing of the same, and under Section 1465-58 G. C., the Industrial Commission of Ohio is authorized to purchase only such school bonds as shall first have been offered to the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district and by such board rejected.

(2) The transcript shows that the tax duplicate valuation of taxable real and personal property in such school district is $2,131,930.00. Presumably these figures represent the tax duplicate valuation of the school district for the year 1918. The issue of bonds here under consideration, as one provided for during the current school year, is limited with respect to the authorized amount thereof under Section 7629 by the tax duplicate valuation of the year 1917. It is altogether probable that the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in said school district for the year 1917 was sufficient under the limitation provided in Section 7629 G. C. to authorize this issue of bonds in the amount above stated. However, the transcript should properly have stated said tax duplicate valuation of the school district for the year 1917.

By reason of the objections first above noted herein said issue of bonds is hereby disapproved and you are advised not to purchase same upon the present legislation of the board of education providing for said issue.

Said transcript is herewith enclosed for return to the clerk of the board of education of said school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—SCHOOLS—UNLESS BONDS ISSUED UNDER SECTION 7625 PROVIDE FOR EMERGENCY UNDER SECTION 7630-1 RESOLUTION MUST DETERMINE FUNDS RAISABLE UNDER SECTION 7629 NOT SUFFICIENT—DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF DEFIANCE CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT—$30,000.

Unless a proposed issue of bonds by the board of education of a school district for any one or more of the purposes mentioned in 7625 G. C. is to provide for an emergency under the terms of Section 7630-1 G. C. such board of education is not authorized to submit the question of such bond issue to a vote of the electors of the school district, unless in its resolution providing for the submission of such question, or in other appropriate legislation it first determines that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised by a bond issue without a vote of the electors under Section 7629 G. C., are not sufficient for the purpose.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Defiance City School district in the sum of $30,000, for the purpose of securing funds to furnish and complete the new school building to be used for high school and grade purposes and to repair and equip the old high school building for the proper accommodation of the schools in said district.

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the board of education of Defiance City School district relating to the above issue of bonds, which appears to be one pursuant to the vote of the electors of the school district under the authority of Section 7625 to Section 7628, inclusive, of the General Code.

As a result of such examination I am compelled to disapprove said issue of bonds specifically for the reason that the resolution of the board of education, providing for the submission to the electors of the school district of the question of said bond issue, does not comply with the requirements of Section 7625 of the General Code. Under the provisions of this section, before a board of education can submit to the electors of the school district the question of a bond issue in any determined amount, for any one or more of the purposes provided for in said section, the board of education is required to determine, among other things, "that the funds at its disposal or that can be raised under the provisions of Sections 7629 and 7630 are not sufficient to accomplish the purpose." In other words, a board of education is not authorized to submit to the electors of the school district the question of a proposed bond issue in any particular or determined amount for any of the purposes mentioned in Section 7625, unless the board otherwise determines that the funds at its disposal, or that can be raised by a bond issue under Section 7629 of the General Code, without a vote of the electors, are not sufficient to accomplish such purpose. The determination of these facts can be made only by some appropriate action of the board of education as a body, to be entered upon its records. In the present instance the resolution of the board of education finds that it is without sufficient funds at its disposal to accomplish the purpose of said proposed bond issue, but does not contain any finding to the effect that the amount of funds that can be raised by the issue of bonds, under Section 7629, General Code, without a vote of the electors, would not be sufficient for the purpose. As before indicated, such a finding or determination was jurisdictional to the power of the board of education to submit the question of this proposed bond issue to a vote of the electors of said school district, and to the authority of said board of education to provide for the issue of said bonds, pursuant to such vote.

I note in the resolution of the board of education, authorizing this issue of bonds, pursuant to a vote of the electors, a recital that said issue of bonds is under the authority, among other sections of the General Code, there stated, of Section 7630-1 G. C. If this issue of bonds were one as a whole, under the authority of Section 7630-1 G. C., it is probable, on considerations that need not be here discussed, that the resolution drawn under said section for the purpose of submitting the proposed bond issue to the vote of the electors, would not be required to determine that the funds that could be raised by an issue of bonds by the board of education, under Section 7629 G. C., would not be sufficient for the purpose of said bond issue. However, as I see it, the recital that said issue of bonds is under the authority of Section 7630-1 G. C. is wholly gratuitous, inasmuch as the transcript not only fails to set out any facts by way of recital or otherwise, showing the application of this section, but on the contrary the stated purpose of said bond issue quite clearly shows that said issue, as a whole, was not an emergency issue within the purview of Section 7630-1 of the General Code.

It follows from what I have just said that this resolution in failing to make this necessary determination or finding of fact is fatally defective and that this proposed bond issue should be and hereby is disapproved.

My examination of this transcript discloses a number of other defects which may be briefly noted:

(1) The transcript does not contain sufficient facts to indicate affirmatively that the meeting of the board of education, under date of September 10, 1918, at which the resolution above referred to was adopted, was a legal meeting. It appears that this meeting was one held by way of adjournment from a meeting of the board of education on September 3, 1918. This being so, it is obvious that the legal character of the meeting of September 10, 1918, depends upon whether or not the meeting of September 3, 1918, was a legal meeting of the board of education, that is, a regular meeting or a special meeting called in exact compliance with the provisions of Section 4751 of the General Code.

However, any defect in the legal character of said meeting of September 10, 1918, is cured by the fact that apparently this meeting was attended and participated in by all of the members of the board of education.

(2) The transcript does not show that any notice of the election on the question of this bond issue was given by the clerk in the manner required by law.

(3) The resolution of the board of education, under date of November 18, 1918, authorizing this issue of bonds, pursuant to a vote of the electors, provides that for the purpose of paying the interest on said bonds and to create a sinking fund sufficient to discharge the interest on said bonds, as the same mature, there shall be levied and ordered collected annually a tax on all the real and personal property in the City of Defiance, Ohio, sufficient for the purpose. This provision of the resolution is obviously erroneous and fails as a compliance with Section 11 of Article XII of the state constitution. Clearly this annual tax should be levied upon the taxable real and personal property in Defiance City School district, which is an entirely distinct political subdivision from the city as such. In this connection it may be observed there is nothing in the transcript to indicate that the boundaries of Defiance City School district are coextensive with those of the city itself, and even if such were the case, there can be no assurance that such boundaries will remain coextensive with those of the city during the life of the bonds, provided for by this resolution.

(4) The transcript does not contain the financial statement which is required by this department with respect to bonds of school districts, or other political subdivisions.

The transcript submitted is herewith enclosed for return to the authorities of the school district.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATION—CERTIFICATE UNDER SECTION 3806 NEED NOT BE EXECUTED UNTIL JUST PRIOR TO AWARDING CONTRACT.

The certificate required by Section 3806 G. C. (the Burns Law) need not be executed and filed until just prior to the awarding of the contract for a municipal improvement, such certificate not being necessary as a preliminary to the passage of an ordinance authorizing or directing such contract to be made or improvement to be executed; as to whether such certificate is necessary prior to the award, or its issuance may be postponed until just prior to the execution of the contract. Query.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 18, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of October 29, receipt whereof is acknowledged, you request my opinion upon a question presented by the city auditor of a certain city in the state. The auditor advises in his letter, which is attached to your communication, that a contract was let by the city in July 1917, for street improvements and that under that contract work had proceeded to a certain point when the contractors defaulted; that the city was about to proceed to complete the work when it was enjoined by the city solicitor, at the instance of a taxpayer, from so doing on the ground that no certificate of the auditor that the money was in the appropriate fund for the particular purpose had been filed.

The auditor's question is, in his own words, as follows:

> "as to where the proper starting point would be to place the matter upon a legal footing; that is—would it be necessary to have council pass new legislation, or could we start by advertising for bids and putting auditor's certificate on file before entering into new contract?"

For the purposes of this opinion I shall assume that the question relating to the applicability of the so-called "Burns Law," which is now found in Section 3806 et seq. of the General Code, to contracts of the kind mentioned by the city auditor is as between the city and its taxpayers res judicata. I therefore eliminate from consideration such decisions as that in Emmert vs. Elyria, 74 O. S. 185, and Akron vs. Dobson, 81 O. S. 66. The contract is said to be one for street improvement, but nothing is said in the auditor's letter as to whether or not any part of the cost thereof is to be paid for by special assessments. I am eliminating from consideration therefore any question relating to the application of the requirement as to the auditor's certificate to the entire cost of the work rather than to the city's portion thereof, in accordance with what was held in Comstock vs. Nelsonville, 61 O. S. 288, and Carthage vs. Diekmeier, 79 O. S. 323.

In short, the facts as submitted, though not complete, lead me to assume that the statute requiring the filing of the certificate of the auditor applies to the case and that such certificate must be filed covering at least some part of the total cost of the improvement.

Sections 3806 and 3807 of the General Code in their present form provide as follows:

> "Section 3806.—No contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council or by any board or officer of a municipal corporation, unless the auditor or clerk thereof, first certifies to council or to the proper board, as the case may be, that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation, or to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury to the credit of the fund from which it is to be drawn, and not appropriated for any other purpose, which certificate shall be filed and immediately recorded. The sum so certified shall not thereafter be considered unappropriated until the corporation is discharged from the contract, agreement or obligation, or so long as the ordinance, resolution or order is in force."

"Section 3807.—All contracts, agreements or other obligations, and all ordinances, resolutions and orders entered into or passed, contrary to the provisions of the preceding section shall be void, and no person whatever shall have any claim or demand against the corporation thereunder, nor shall the council, or a board, officer, or commissioner of any municipal corporation, waive or qualify the limits fixed by such ordinance, resolution or order, or fasten upon the corporation any liability whatever for any excess of such limits, or release any party from an exact compliance with his contract under such ordinance, resolution or order."

If the street improvement in question is one to be paid for in part by special assessments the following statutes apply:

"Section 3814.—When it is deemed necessary by a municipality to make a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments, council shall declare the necessity thereof by resolution, three-fourths of the members elected thereto concurring, except as otherwise herein provided. Such resolution shall be published as other resolutions, but shall take effect upon its first publication."

"Section 3815.—Such resolution shall determine the general nature of the improvement, what shall be the grade of the street, alley, or other public place to be improved, the grade or elevation of the curbs, and shall approve the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles for the proposed improvement. In such resolution council shall also determine the method of the assessment, the mode of payment, and whether or not bonds shall be issued in anticipation of the collection thereof. Assessments for any improvement may be payable in one to twenty installments at such time as council prescribes."

"Section 3816.—At the time of the passage of such resolution, council shall have on file in the office of the director of public service in cities, and the clerk in villages, plans, specifications, estimates and profiles of the proposed improvement, showing the proposed grade of the street and improvement after completion, with reference to the property abutting thereon, which plans, specifications, estimates and profiles shall be open to the inspection of all persons interested."

"Section 3824.—At the expiration of the time limited for so filing claims for damages, the council shall determine whether it will proceed with the proposed improvement or not, and whether the claims for damages so filed shall be judicially inquired into, as hereinafter provided, before commencing, or after the completion of the proposed improvements."

"Section 3825.—If the council decides to proceed with the improvement, an ordinance for the purpose shall be passed. Such ordinance shall set forth specifically the lots and lands to be assessed for the improvement, shall contain a statement of the general nature of the improvement, the character of the materials which may be bid upon therefor, the mode of payment therefor, a reference to the resolution theretofore passed for such improvement with date of its passage, and a statement of the intention of council to proceed therewith in accordance with such resolution and in accordance with the plans, specifications, estimates and profiles provided for such improvement."

"Section 3833.—The contract for any such improvement shall be let by the director of public service, in the same manner as other contracts, and in case all bids be rejected such director in cities and the council in villages may order a readvertisement for bids."

If the improvement is not to be paid for in part by special assessments the following section applies:

"Section 4328.—The director of public service may make any contract or purchase supplies or material or provide labor for any work under the supervision of that department not involving more than five hundred dollars. When an expenditure within the department, other than the compensation of persons employed therein, exceeds five hundred dollars, such expenditure shall first be authorized and directed by ordinance of council. When so authorized and directed, the director of public service shall make a written contract with the lowest and best bidder after advertisement for not less than two nor more than four consecutive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation within the city."

In either event the last sentence of Section 4328, just quoted, and Sections 4329 et seq. relating to the opening of bids and entering into the contract govern.

It must be assumed for purposes of discussion that the city council has either passed a resolution of necessity and an ordinance determining to proceed with an improvement to be paid for partly by special assessments, or that if the contract is not to be so paid, for an ordinance has been passed authorizing and directing the director of public service to enter into a contract with the lowest and best bidder, etc., for the doing of a specific piece of work involving the expenditure of more than five hundred dollars. The injunction suit decides at least that the attempt of the director of public service to enter into a contract without the previous filing of an auditor's certificate was ineffectual. The question now is as to whether or not, were an auditor's certificate now placed on file, the underlying legislation of council would be efficacious to authorize him under such certificate to enter into a binding contract for the doing of so much of the work as remains to be done. That is to say, would the underlying legislation of council form the legal predicate of valid procedure on the part of the director of public service, or is the legislation itself invalidated because at the time of its passage the certificate was not on file; and if the improvement be one to be paid for in part by assessment, should the certificate be on file at the time of the passage of the resolution of necessity, or at the time of the passage of the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement?

I may say at this point that I do not interpret the auditor's question as an inquiry relative to what can be done to legalize expenditures already made by way of the payment of estimates to the contractor under the contract which has been held to have been invalid. As to this I would say, of course, that nothing can be done. That contract can not at this stage of the proceedings be validated at all. Expenditures made under it can not be recovered back. (State vs. Fronizer, 77 O. S. 7); but it can not be made binding upon the contractor nor upon the city by anything that can be done now. This follows from the plain provisions of Sections 3806 and 3807, one of which requires the certificate to be on file first, and the other of which makes void anything done in contravention of the policy of the statute. In the face of such provisions it would be impossible to construct any principle by which on the theory of ratification the contract which was entered into might be made binding.

Therefore I repeat that I am interpreting the auditor's question as one relating to the necessary legal steps to be taken in order that a valid contract for the completion of the work may be entered into.

Such a question presents considerable difficulty because of the two-fold aspect of Section 3806. It first declares that > "no contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money shall be entered into, * * * unless the auditor or clerk * * * first certifies to the * * * proper board, * * * that the money required for such contract, agreement or other obligation * * * is in the treasury," etc.

If this were all it would be easy to reach the conclusion that the certificate is not required to be on file until just prior to entering into a contract imposing upon the municipality a definite obligation involving the expenditure of money. In other words, if this language of Section 3806 were all there is to be construed one could easily reach the conclusion that a valid contract could now be entered into by the director of public service for the completion of the work if a certificate were first filed.

But this is not all that we find in Section 3806; the section also declares that

> "nor shall any ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money, be passed by the council * * * unless the auditor or clerk * * * first certifies to council * * * that the money required * * * to pay such appropriation or expenditure, is in the treasury," etc.

This language standing by itself might seem broad enough to require the filing of the certificate as a condition precedent to the valid passage of the underlying legislation by the council in cases in which the action of council is necessary.

The whole question is thus thrown into doubt and it must be admitted that a perusal of the decisions which have been made on or affecting the point does not clear away this doubt.

Perhaps the case nearest in point is that of Braman vs. Elyria, 26 C. C. 731; 5 C. C. n. s. 387; affirmed without report in 73 O. S. 346. That was a case of a street improvement to be paid for in part by special assessment; the council had duly passed a resolution of necessity and later an ordinance determining to proceed; subsequently the board of public service (the court speaks of the "council" but this must be an error as the proceedings were had in 1903 and were governed by the Municipal Code) had advertised for bids and received them and awarded the contract to a certain company. This contract, however, was not signed until a later date. When it was signed, and not before, the city clerk (doubtless the auditor is meant) certified on the contract (which seems to be the usual practice) that the money to pay the amounts coming due thereunder was in the treasury of the city to the credit of the proper fund. In point of fact, the statement of the case shows that until that time he could not have made such a certificate because the money was not actually in the treasury until after the contract was awarded, having been brought there by the issuance of a certificate of indebtedness in the amount of the contract price.

These facts squarely raised the issue as to whether the certificate was properly filed at the time the contract was entered into, or whether it should have been filed at an earlier stage of the proceedings.

Before going on with the discussion of this case let me say that if reasoning like that in Emmert vs. Elyria and Akron vs. Dobson had been followed the case would have been decided in favor of the city—as it was—upon the broad ground that the Burns Law did not apply to the contract at all. This makes the decision more or less unsatisfactory as a precedent, especially in view of the fact that the supreme court in affirming it did not express its views on the law. However, the principles involved in Emmert vs. Elyria and Akron vs. Dobson being eliminated from consideration by the decision of the common pleas court in the case now before me, I proceed to a further analysis of the opinion of Winch, J., in Braman vs. Elyria, as responsive to the question under consideration and for that purpose quote the following portions thereof:

"It is conceded that no such certificate was made before the resolution of necessity was passed, the ordinance for the improvement and assessing its cost was adopted, bids advertised and received, or the contract awarded. The certificate was made, however, before the contract was signed.

Was it made in time?

* * * There are two cases cited to us which contain language indicating that perhaps this certificate should have been made at least before the ordinance for improvement and assessment was adopted."

(The court here comments upon Ryan vs. Hoffman, 26 O. S. 109, and Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S. 104, which will be hereinafter considered. The court concludes that these decisions, notwithstanding dicta in the respective opinions, are not conclusive).

"It therefore becomes necessary to construe Section 1536-205, former Section 2702 R. S. (repealed 96 O. L. 96) and determine at just what stage in the proceedings culminating in a contract for a municipal improvement, the clerk's certificate becomes necessary, and all subsequent proceedings without it void.

Certainly no 'contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money' was 'entered into' by the passage of the resolution of necessity, the ordinance to improve and assess, the advertising or receiving bids.

Nor was such contract, etc., 'entered into' when the contract was awarded. The statute elsewhere provides how municipal authorities shall enter into contracts, and the formalities with reference thereto, without which the contract is void.

The certificate was therefore in time as far as the entering into a contract, agreement or other obligation is concerned.

But the law further provides that no 'ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money shall be passed, until the certificate is made.

We have in this case to consider a resolution—the resolution of necessity; and ordinance—the improvement and assessment ordinance; and an order—the order awarding the contract.

All of these in one sense concern both the appropriation and expenditure of money, but certainly the resolution is not for them, because the whole proceeding may stop upon the hearing of objections to the improvement, and the expenditure of money will not necessarily be made because of the adoption of the resolution.

The same may be said of the ordinance—bids may be advertised for, but none received; * * * the ordinance may be repealed before any step is taken under it actually necessitating the expenditure of money. The passage of the ordinance in no wise binds the city to make the improvement, and after its passage, who is to see that the improvement is made? What interested party is there, who can compel the city to go ahead, advertise for bids and accept them? Sometimes when bids for such improvements come in they are so high * * * that the whole matter is then dropped. Who can interfere with the judgment of the city authorities thus exercised? The mere passage of the ordinance creates no liability against the city, and therefore the ordinance can not be said to be one for the expenditure of money. * * *

The same may be said of the order awarding the contract. That order is simply an expression of opinion * * * that a certain bid is the best and should be accepted; that a contract should thereafter be made with such bidder. It authorizes the making of a contract, but it is not a contract, agreement or obligation binding upon the city, until the contract authorized is executed, on behalf of the city, by the proper authorities. Suppose there were no Burns Law, would the contractor claim that he could go ahead with the work immediately, without any further contract with the city, upon the mere awarding of the contract to him? We think not. Such action on the part of the council might be reconsidered and its award revoked before any contract was signed. * * *

If we are right in our construction of the Burns Law, in the case of municipal improvements to be let by contract the clerk's certificate of money in the treasury to the benefit of the proper fund, unappropriated for any other purpose, is not required until just before the contract is signed. While we reach this conclusion with doubt, from a mere interpretation of the words of the law, such doubt is removed when we consider the necessities of the case * * *.

The intention of the law is to prevent the entering into of improvident contracts—improvident, because the payment of obligations is not foreseen when the obligations are incurred. Such intention is strictly complied with if the certificate is made before the final step is taken which makes a contract absolutely binding upon the municipality and absolutely requiring the expenditure of money. Such intention does not contemplate that all preliminary steps leading up to the making of such binding contract shall be void, unless the certificate is made before all such preliminary steps are taken; and at what stage in the proceedings are we to draw the line, except at the entering into the contract?

To take any other view of the case would fill our municipal treasuries with idle money for improvements finally abandoned and never made, would prevent obtaining bids upon which to determine how much money must be so certified; would delay municipal improvements, contrary to the spirit of the law; would involve loss of interest in the case of delayed improvements; would, in fact, * * * extend the scope of the law far beyond its plain and reasonable intent."

I may say very frankly that this reasoning appears to me to be sound and convincing, except possibly as to the legal effect of awarding the contract. The correctness of the court's conclusion on this point would depend upon whether or not a person to whom a contract was awarded could compel the execution of that contract by the city authorities as against action on the part of, say, the council repealing its ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement, or its ordinance authorizing and directing the expenditure to be made, as the case might be. If such person could compel the execution of the contract, or, conversely, if at this stage of the proceedings the city has done its last act and passed the locus penitentiae, then upon the general course of reasoning in Judge Winch's opinion his conclusion should have been otherwise with respect to the question as to whether the certificate should be on file at the time the contract is awarded; yet practical considerations support his conclusion here, and it is also true that unless the awarding of a contract be called an "order" within the terminology of Section 3806 it is not such an act as is referred to in that section because manifestly it is not the "entering into" of a contract.

Without deciding this question at this time, but renewing my expression of approval of the general course of reasoning of the opinion from which quotation has been made, I may briefly refer to other cases in which the same view is taken.

In Carthage vs. Diekmeier, supra, the facts were as follows:

The original plaintiff had sued the village to recover for work done and material furnished in the improvement of a certain street for which he had been paid in part only. The village set up in its answer the absence of the certificate required by the statute then in force, which was Section 2702 Revised Statutes. The jury returned a special verdict, finding the following facts:

The village began its proceedings by the passage of resolutions of necessity and ordinances determining to proceed with the improvement of several different streets. It then, and before receiving any bids, borrowed money to pay the village's portion (which was all excepting the cost of the curb and gutter) of all of the improvements. It then solicited bids for each improvement separately, received them, and awarded contracts directing the mayor to execute them. These contracts were awarded separately for each improvement. Action in awarding such contracts was by resolution. At the end of the resolution awarding the contract for one of these streets to the original plaintiff the clerk executed a certificate as follows:

> "I hereby certify that there is money in the village treasury in the fund from which the above fund is proposed to be drawn for payment of the village portion of the improvement, and not appropriated for any other purpose, sufficient to pay for the same."

As stated, this certificate was executed on the face of the resolution awarding the contract. The village solicitor, being present at the meeting of council, objected that no specified amount for the improvement of the particular street was set forth in the certificate. The engineer thereupon furnished the necessary figures and the clerk inserted them in his several certificates. The resolutions were then adopted by the council. A contract was thereupon entered into with the plaintiff. A supplementary contract was entered into calling for the performance of additional work, but no certificate was filed by the clerk showing any money in the treasury for the purposes of the supplementary contract.

In the opinion of the supremet court, per Price J., the following language appears:

> "On the approximate estimate of quantities of material to be used, the bid of Diekmeier was made at the figures contained in the seventh finding, and his bid being the lowest, the same was accepted, and the mayor was instructed to execute a contract on behalf of the village. This instruction was in the form of a resolution adopted August 10, 1900. There was then due, under the law, a certificate of the village clerk under Section 2702 Revised Statutes. If not due and essential when the resolution was adopted, it certainly was requisite to a valid contract with the bidder that the section be complied with when the contract was executed on the 13th or 14th of August of that year. The section referred to then provided: (Here follows quotation of Section 2702 R. S., which is in the same words as present Section 3806 G. C.)
> The contractor claims that such a certificate was on file and recorded before his contract was entered into * * *.
> The * * * finding * * * indicates that there was on hand a certificate for each of the eighteen streets in similar form and substance, and that the engineer was ready to supply the amount allotted to Linden avenue (the street improved by Diekmeier) without delay. Thus corrected (as above stated) the certificate was left on file, and doubtless recorded. * * *."

(The court then finds that the correction of the certificate by the engineer and clerk before the legislation was adopted made it a valid certificate for the sum of money thus inserted in it).

"But how will the case stand if we discard those figures and deal with the original certificate? * * *

It is contended that the certificate without the figures is according to the language of the statute, and therefore sufficient; * * * that it is a compliance to certify that there is enough in the treasury unappropriated to other purposes, to meet the obligation or contract. If there was but a single contract or expenditure in contemplation, the claim might be tenable in such an instance, but this we do not decide. But in the present case it appears there were eighteen resolutions, including the one here involved, adopted at the same council meeting. The bids accepted were separate for the different streets, and separate contracts were executed for such streets. * * *.

Whatever may be the correct view as to the meaning of this statute where a single contract is let, it seems to be a reasonable construction that there be a definite sum certified for each contract where there are several of the same species entered into at the same time to be paid from a theretofore gross fund. * * * it is quite clear to us that when the statute is to be applied to the subject matter where several different streets are to be improved for which purpose separate contracts are let on different separate bids, the certificate should contain a specified sum set apart for each of such contracts. * * * Under the facts of this case * * * the original certificate did not conform to the statute, and the contractor would be without remedy. But with the figures added to the face of the instrument, $2,030 was the sum certified and to that extent the village set apart from the gross fund the amount to cover the Linden avenue improvement. We are told this amount has been paid before suit was brought, and the suit is to recover over $2,260 in excess of that amount.

It is urged for the contractor, that he did not bid a gross sum for improving Linden avenue, but bid for material according to quantity and for certain labor at so much per yard or foot, and so on, and therefore with only the approximate estimate for a basis, it would not be known in advance what should be certified, * * *.

Again, it is said in the brief that finding 10 in the special verdict shows that 'in said specifications the right was reserved to the said village of Carthage to increase or diminish or omit entirely any of the work therein set forth.' * * *.

* * * It was not within the power of the council or the village engineer to increase the liability of the corporation beyond the amount for which the certificate had been filed and thereby nullify Section 2702. * * No mere final estimate of the engineer, no matter if it is correct in its terms, can increase the corporate liability, neither did the acceptance of the work by the public authorities accomplish that result. * * *

We presume the village refused to pay in excess of the $2,030 certified, and having paid that amount, the plaintiff in error is entitled to judgment on the special verdict. * * *."

While perhaps in a sense not necessary to the exact decision in the case, it is clear from the above quotation that the court regarded the certificate, which in this instance had been made just prior to the award by the council of the contract, as made in time. If the court had been of the opinion that the certificate should have been made at the time the resolution of necessity was adopted or at the time the ordinance determining to proceed with the improvement was passed, the reasoning of the opinion would have been entirely different. On the contrary, the court repeatedly refers to the corrected certificate as being a legal certificate determining the pecuniary extent of the village's obligation. We observe that the court expresses doubt as to whether this certificate was required prior to the award of the contract, intimating that it might have been in time if it had been filed afer the award but before the execution. That question was not raised in the case as it was in Braman vs. Elyria because a certificate had actually been issued at the time of the award.

I shall now consider cases in which intimations or decisions to the contrary have been made.

First I call attention to Pullen vs. Smith, 26 C. C. 549; 5 C. C. n. s. 1. In this case the council of the village of Lebanon had responded to the proposition of Mr. Andrew Carnegie relative to the erection of a public library building in that village that it would > "agree for and on behalf of said village to maintain said free public library at a cost of not less than one thousand dollars a year, and to provide a suitable site for the same."

At the time of the passage of this resolution no certificate that the funds necessary to do the things which the council attempted to agree to was on file. The court held that the attempted contract was void and action under it would be enjoined at the suit of a taxpayer. This decision is clearly right and not inconsistent with anything which is held in the two cases from which I have quoted, because it is clear, as held by the court, that the council had undertaken directly to bind the city, so that what it had done amounted to an attempt to enter into a contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money without the necessary certificate. The court, however, went on to say that the statute was violated in another respect, in that the action of council was also an ordinance for the expenditure of money. Here the court clearly fell into error, for Jelke, J., in quoting this part of the statute reads it as follows:

> "It provides against 'a resolution involving the expenditure of money.'"

As will be observed by a reading of the statute, it contains no such language. The one part prohibits entering into a contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money without the filing of the certificate; the other part prohibits the passage of an "ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money." The difference in force between the participle and the preposition which I have underscored is obvious and is brought out by the very reasoning of Judge Jelke when he says at page 551:

> "Further, it will not do to say that this action does not involve the expenditure of money. If it does not do that, it does nothing else, and is meaningless. That is all that Mr. Carnegie asks. It is not in itself the expending of money, like an ordinance to pay, but the statute goes further, it provides against 'a resolution involving the expenditure of money.'"

Of course, Judge Jelke was in error, as I have pointed out, because he misread the statute. On his own reasoning the ordinance in question, while it amounted to an agreement involving the expenditure of money and was therefore void, was not an ordinance for the expenditure of money, i. e., providing for the direct payment of a specific sum of money.

But it is to be admitted that while this verbal slip was committed by Judge Jelke, he sustains his reasoning here by quotation of other cases in which ordinances of like general character had been held to be ordinances for the expenditure of money under different statutes. That is, upon the authority of these cases he might have argued, and doubtless intended to argue—though he unfortunately fell into the use of inaccurate words—that the ordinance was one "for the expenditure of money."

The cases cited by him were Rhodes vs. Toledo, 3 Cir. Dec. 325, and Ryan vs. Hoffman, 26 O. S. 109.

In Rhodes vs. Toledo it was held that an ordinance providing for the condemnation of private property for street purposes is an ordinance for the expenditure of money within the meaning of Section 2702 Revised Statutes, which, as already stated, is identical in phraseology with present Section 3806 G. C. A glance at the opinion shows that this holding was based entirely upon Ryan vs. Hoffman, supra. I therefore turn to that case. It was one involving the application of a certain statute to the action of council in initiating condemnation proceedings, just as was Rhodes vs. Toledo. The court held that the statute which it was considering did not apply to the case at hand because the statute was not passed until after the proceedings were initiated. It was the dicta in the case that were relied upon in Rhodes vs. Toledo, Judge Scribner in that case saying that > "If the statute in question had no application to a resolution or ordiance providing for the condemnation of lands, it was entirely unnecessary for the court to base its decision, as it did, upon the ground that the law operated prospectively only, and, therefore, did not affect the case pending before it. In the opinion it is declared in express terms that an ordinance providing for the appropriation of lands was within the act, but it was held that the ordinance there objected to was not affected by it for the reason that the law operated prospectively only, * * *."

It might be said, of course, that an ordinance for the condemnation of land, involving as it does the sole action of council and not being a mere order to an administrative authority to enter into a contract, can not be likened to an ordinance of such character with respect to the application of statutes like the Burns Law; so that it would be perfectly possible to distinguish cases like Rhodes vs. Toledo and Ryan vs. Hoffman from cases like the one now under consideration on this ground. However, it appears that the statute involved in Ryan vs. Hoffman was not the Burns Law, though Judge Scribner in his opinion in Rhodes vs. Toledo erroneously assumed that it was. In Ryan vs. Hoffman the court was considering the application of Section 3 of the act of April 16, 1874 (71 Ohio Laws, 80). This was what was known as the "Worthington Law" and was applicable only to Cincinnati, whereas the so-called Burns Law was applicable to all cities for the government of which no special laws had been passed. The one was Section 2699 R. S., the other Section 2702 R. S. Their terms, though similar, are essentially of different import. Section 3806 G. C. will, as stated, serve as a quotation of former Section 2702; Section 2699, which was before the court in Ryan vs. Hoffman, was as follows:

> "In cities of the first grade of the first class, no ordinance or other order for the expenditure of money shall be passed by the city council, or a board, officer, or commissioner having control over the moneys of the city, without stating specifically in such ordinance or order the items of expense to be made under it, and no such ordinance or order shall take effect until the auditor of the city shall certify to the city council that there is money in the treasury specially set apart to meet such expenditure; and all expenditures greater than the amount specified in such ordinance or order shall be absolutely void, and no party whatever shall have any claim or demand against the city therefor."

To me it is perfectly apparent that this section applied to the initial action of council in any case in which the expenditure of money was involved. True, the language is "for the expenditure of money" and not "involving the expenditure of money"; but the certificate was to be made to the council in all cases and the statute did not apply to any "board, officer or commissioner" other than the council, except in cases in which such board, officer or commissioner might have "control over the moneys of the city," i. e., act independently of council. It will thus be seen that the vital difference between the Worthington Law, indirectly construed in Ryan vs. Hoffman, and the Burns Law, which we have to construe in this case and which was before the circuit court in Rhodes vs. Toledo, lies in the fact that the former governed proceedings of council in all cases in which council was to have anything to do; whereas the latter governs the proceedings not only of the council but also of administrative officers entering into contracts. Under the one statute the certificate is to be made in every instance to the council; under the other it is to be made to the council where the action is that of council and to the administrative officer where the action is his. Under the one statute no distinction is made between contracts, agreements and obligations involving the expenditure of money, on the one hand, and ordinances, resolutions and orders for the expenditure of money, on the other hand; under the other statute such a distinction is clearly drawn. Therefore, it seems to me that Rhodes vs. Toledo, whether correctly decided or not, is based upon erroneous reasoning, in that it assumes that a decision under the Worthington Law is authority for the interpretation of the Burns Law.

I am emboldened to make this criticism of the decision in Rhodes vs. Toledo by the fact that a contrary result was reached by a court of equal dignity in Tyler vs. Columbus, 6 C. C. 224. This decision, rendered after Rhodes vs. Toledo had been decided, holds simply that the Burns Law does not apply at all, that is, at any stage of the proceedings, to condemnation cases. I do not attempt to say which of these two decisions is right, except by pointing out that for the reasons stated Rhodes vs. Toledo and Ryan vs. Hoffman are not serviceable as authorities in regard to the present question and do not militate against the correctness of Braman vs. Elyria, supra. In Braman vs. Elyria, as I have said, Ryan vs. Hofman was considered.

There remains to be considered Cincinnati vs. Holmes, 56 O. S. 104, also referred to in Braman vs. Elyria. In that case the application of the Burns Law was involved because the original obligation sued on was that of the village of Avondale which had been subsequently annexed to the city of Cincinnati. The court held in the syllabus that the Burns Law did not apply to the village of Avondale, which had proceeded under special statutes construed as exceptions to that law. Certain reasoning in the opinion of Minshall, J., however, is of interest. Preliminary to a quotation of parts of his opinion I may observe that under the special statutes applicable to the village of Avondale when the petition of the requisite number of owners of feet front of a proposed improvement was filed with the council, it was the duty of the council to refer it to certain commissioners who were to make an investigation, adopt a grade and plans, ascertain the probable cost and, if satisfied, recommend the making of the improvement. The statute then provided that "the council shall order the same to be made." It is obvious that such a statute is radically different from the statutes now in force relative to the making of improvements to be paid for in whole or in part by assessment. The difference lies in the fact that the petitioners when they had secured the recommendation of the commissioners for the improvement might compel the council to proceed with it; whereas under the statutes now in force council has at all times the control over the policy of making the improvement as vividly pointed out in Braman vs. Elyria, supra. It was upon this very point that the reasoning of Judge Minshall proceeded as the following quotation will make clear:

> "The order of the council, that the improvement be made, fixes an indebtedness for the entire cost of the improvement, one-half as an assessment on the property benefited and the other half on the general taxpayers of the village. It is against the fixing of an indebtedness on the corporation without the money being in the treasury to meet it, that the Burns Law is designed as a protection. Hence, it cannot apply to the act in question, for it would prohibit the council from making the order that the improvement be made—if not all the initiatory steps required by the law. How could any action be taken for the issue of bonds * * * until the order for the improvement had been made; and yet, if the Burns law is applicable, this order cannot be made until the money from the bonds and assessments are in the treasury. It may be said that the indebtedness is not created until a contract for the improvement is made. It is true that it does not exist in favor of any particular creditor, nevertheless, on making the order, the successive steps—the advertisement for bids, action on them, the letting of the work and making of the required contract—all follow as a necesssary sequence under the statute. If the council should refuse to take any of these steps without cause, it could be compelled by mandamus to do so. Hence, if the Burns Law can have any application to this statute, according to its spirit it must apply to the order of the council that the improvement be made. It is this order that fixes and entails the indebtedness upon the corporation. It is in fact an order for the expenditure of money. Therefore the Burns law cannot apply to this statute as it would render the statute nugatory. The plain purpose of the Burns Law was to prevent the incurring of an indebtedness by a municipal corporation beyond the ordinary resources of its revenue and whereby an annual excess of indebtedness will be created over these revenues. But it has not the vigor of a constitutional provision, * * *."

It is very evident that this language has been misunderstood by the courts which have quoted it as an interpretation of the Burns Law in its application to statutes like those which we now have under consideration. The reasoning is perfectly consistent with that in Braman vs. Elyria because in both cases the inquiry is made as to what is the last municipal act that fixes obligation upon the municipality in an irrevocable way. In Cincinnati vs. Holmes that action was determined to be the order of the council determining to proceed with the improvement because under the special statutes there involved such order—if not the recommendation of the commissioners made prior thereto—would give rise to rights in the petitioners which could be enforced by mandamus. In other words, the order of the council fixed the obligation of the municipality. In the general statutes considered in Braman vs. Elyria and before us now for consideration no such consequence attaches to any of the actions of council. After having adopted the resolution of necessity or after having passed the ordinance determining to proceed council is still at liberty to change its mind and by appropriate repeal abandon the project. The difference is obvious.

The Burns Law was also under consideration in other cases like Akron vs. Dobson and Emmert vs. Elyria, both of which have been cited. I do not find in them, however, either reasoning or decision directly reflecting upon the problem now before me. True, in Emmert vs. Elyria Judge Summers says broadly that the Burns Law was an extension of the Worthington Law to cities other than Cincinnati (page 193). It is not clear, however, that any question in the case required him to make such a statement.

When we turn from these cases, which possibly leave the subject in some confusion, to Section 3806 of the General Code, itself, it seems to me that the answer to the question submitted by the city auditor can be reached without great difficulty. One has but to ask the question as to whether any given steps in the procedure for making public improvements is "an ordinance for the expenditure of money" or "a contract, agreement or other obligation involving the expenditure of money." Taking the latter first it is clear that nothing can belong in that class which does not create an obligation binding upon the municipality. Unless the award of the contract upon the opening of bids creates such an obligation there is certainly nothing in the ordinary legislation of council looking toward a public improvement under the existing statutes and the other procedure preliminary to the actual entering into a contract which fastens obligation upon the municipality. Neither the resolution of necessity nor the ordinance determining to proceed in the case of assessment improvements, nor an ordinance making an appropriation for a specific improvement and authorizing or directing the director of public service or safety to enter into a contract therefor gives rise in any third party to any contractual rights against the municipality. In the case at hand we are not concerned with the question as to whether or not the award of the contract creates such an obligation; for it is clear that new bids will have to be invited. If at the time the bids are opened and the award is made the necessary certificate is filed, it would seem clear that the statute would be complied with to the extent that it relates to a "contract, agreement or other obligation."

The sole remaining question is as to whether or not the ordinance determining to proceed or the resolution of necessity, or either of them, constitutes an "ordinance, resolution or order for the expenditure of money." In my opinion none of them comes within this description, nor would an ordinance appropriating money for a particular expenditure and authorizing or directing the head of the particular department to proceed with the work of an improvement not to be paid for in part by special assessments come within this class. Taking the three things named in this part of the section in the inverse order, it is clear that none of the legislative measures which I have mentioned constitutes an "order for the expenditure of money." They are not of this general character. They come under the headings "ordinance" or "resolution" and must be considered as such.

In my opinion such legislative action on the part of council does not constitute either an ordinance or resolution "for the expenditure of money." To say that a measure which authorizes a contract the discharge of which on the part of the municipality will give rise to an expenditure of money is "an ordinance for the expenditure of money," is to ignore the distinction between the two parts of the section in two respects:

First, such a view would not take into account the difference between the preposition "for" and the participle "involving." The sense in which the preposition is used here is believed to be that one defined in the Century Dictionary as follows:

"designed to be or serve as; with the purpose or function of (becoming or doing something) * * *."

The only other possible meaning is that expressed in the same lexicon, as follows:

"in the direction of; toward; with a view of reaching."

This latter, however, is opposed to the meaning of the participle "involving." The verb from which it is derived is defined, in the sense in which the participle is used here, as follows:

"to bring into a common relation or connection; hence, to include as a necessary or logical consequence, * * *."

The simple question is as to whether the expression "an ordinance * * * for the expenditure of money" implies an ordinance which is a part of a procedure which logically will lead to an expenditure of money, on the one hand, or an ordinance which is passed for the direct purpose of making an expenditure of money. As suggested, choice between these two meanings would be difficult and the broader one, which is the former, might be chosen, as it was by the court in construing the Worthington Law, if it were not for the fact that the word "involving" is also used in the statute in such way as to indicate a distinction between the two.

In the second place, a holding to the effect that any of the ordinances or resolutions which I have been considering would be one "for the expenditure of money" would ignore distinctions apparent on the face of the statute, in that it would fail to take into account the separate enumeration therein of ordinances and contracts. Section 3806 is of general application to all classes of municipalities governed by the General Code. Without going into detail, it is familiar statutory law that the council of a village possesses the power to enter into contracts to a much greater degree than does the council of a city. Indeed, it may be safely asserted, as a general proposition applicable to the facts now under consideration at any rate, that the council of a city has no contractual power. Nowhere is this better expressed than in General Code Section 4211, which provides that "The power of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever * * *. All contracts requiring the authority of council for their execution shall be entered into and conducted to performance by the board or officers having charge of the matters to which they relate, and after authority to make such contracts has been given and the necessary appropriation made, council shall take no further action thereon."

One gets the impression at least that the dual aspect of Section 3806 may be due to a desire on the part of the legislature to cover the case of a city and that of a village in a single section, and that accordingly that part which deals with ordinances, resolutions and orders may have been primarily intended to govern villages and that part which deals with contracts, agreements and other obligations involving the expenditure of money may have been intended for the regulation of the affairs of cities. I do not pursue this thought further because other considerations bearing upon the same problem sufficiently disclose the correct answer to the question involved. It is at least true that in a city governed by the General Code the underlying legislation of council of the character under consideration is not creative of legal obligation. This much I have previously stated. If that is the case, then the thing that does create a legal obligation must be the administrative act of some such officer as the director of public service. If this is true, then Section 3806 clearly requires a certificate to be filed as a condition of the lawful exercise of such functions by such administrative officer; moreover, the certificate is to be filed with the "proper board," which now means, as I take it, the proper director. In this connection it must be remembered that when Section 3806 took its present form the Municipal Code was framed on the "Board Plan," so-called, that is, instead of a director of public service and a director of public safety we had a board of public service and a board of public safety. The reference in Section 3806 is to these boards. When the law was changed so as to abolish these boards and substitute for them single officers as heads of departments the legislature overlooked the propriety of amending Section 3806. Nevertheless, the section now has application, in my opinion, to such directors as the successors in function to the boards which formerly existed.

Now I do not think that Section 3806 contemplates the making of two certificates as a part of any one procedure. That is, I do not think it would be necessary to have a certificate on file in connection with the action of council and also to have another certificate on file in connection with the action of the service director, for example; and yet if Section 3806 means what I have said it does mean in connection with the action of the service director, the filing of two certificates would be required by such construction of the statute as would characterize the underlying legislation of council as an ordinance or resolution "for the expenditure of money."

From these considerations I arrive at the conclusion that wherever an administrative officer has the power to do the final act which binds the city and leads to the expenditure of money as a necessary result of that act, the case is within that part of the section which deals with contracts, agreements and other obligations involving the expenditure of money; but that wherever the action of council is the final act which not only logically leads to the expenditure of money, but makes such expenditure on the part of disbursing officers a mere ministerial act when ordered by council, the other part of the section applies. Whether such a case can occur in a city I am not prepared to say. It is clear that it could occur in a village; so that inasmuch as Section 3806 applies both to cities and villages this part of it is not deprived of meaning by the construction which I have given to it.

What I have just said constitutes merely a statement of additional reasons for arriving at the result reached in Braman vs. Elyria. I have already given my approval to the reasons advanced by the court in that case for arriving at that result.

For the reasons mentioned, then, and upon the authority of the cases which seem to me to be in point, I am of the opinion that in the case described by the auditor a valid contract for the completion of the improvement in question can be entered into without re-passing any of the ordinances or resolutions of council which have been adopted in connection with the improvement; but that to be on the safe side the certificate required by Section 3806 should be filed with the director of public service preliminary to awarding the contract to a particular bidder.

I may say that I have not heretofore considered the meaning of the word "appropriation" as it occurs in Section 3806. It might be argued from this word that any ordinance making an appropriation would be subject to the requirements of this section. Such an argument, however, is answered, in my opinion, by the statement that it is not every appropriation that must be certified to but only appropriations made by the ordinances or resolutions described in the section.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—FEES OF ATTORNEYS FOR CONTESTORS OF WILL NOT DEDUCTIBLE.

The fee of an attorney employed by contestors of a will who succeed in having the same set aside should not be deducted from the value of the estates passing to the heirs and next of kin for purpose of assessing the inheritance tax.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

HON. D. M. CUPP, Prosecuting Attorney, Delaware, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have previously acknowledged receipt of your letter of December 9, requesting my opinion upon the following facts and question:

> "S. C. P., late of Delaware county, died possessed of an estate, leaving no children but a brother and sister, as her only next of kin.
> She died leaving what purported to be a last will, devising the major portion of her estate to strangers.
> The brother and sister instituted proceedings to contest the will and by the verdict of the jury the will was set aside, and her estate passes to this brother and sister as her only next of kin.
> The brother and sister entered into an agreement with their counsel to pay such counsel thirty-three per cent of the estate recovered, if the will should be set aside.
> The administrator has filed his account, and the question now arises, are the heirs the brother and sister, required to pay the tax on the entire estate, or only on two-thirds thereof, which they in fact realize? We might put the question this way:
> Is such counsel fee a part of the costs of administration as would be exempt from the tax?"

In my opinion, the attorney's fee about which you inquire is no part of the costs of administration and should not be deducted from the amount upon which the inheritance tax in the case inquired about should be computed.

In Re: Westburn, 152 N. Y. 93.

The fees of the attorney for the administrator would have been a proper administration expense, had the contest suit turned out the other way.

Connell vs. Crosby, 210, Ill. 380.

The distinction is based upon the principle that the defense of a contest case is for the preservation of the estate; while the prosecution of such a case is for the assertion of the individual rights of the heirs and does not in any way involve the estate, as such, either by asserting a claim against it or by defending one in its behalf.

The distinction may seem to be a fine one, but the cases so hold.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNCIL OF CITY AUTHORIZED TO TRANSFER TO LIBRARY TRUSTEES OF SCHOOL DISTRICT A SITE FOR LIBRARY PURPOSES—CITY COUNCIL CANNOT ISSUE BONDS UNDER SECTION 3939 FOR BENEFIT OF TRUSTEES OF SCHOOL DISTRICT LIBRARY.

(1) Sections 3711 and 3712 of the General Code confer ample authority upon the council of the city of Cincinnati to transfer to the board of trustees of the Library of the School district of Cincinnati a site and buildings thereon suitable for library purposes, without the assumption of any indebtedness of the city existing on account of the acquisition of such sites and buildings by the city, and without the receipt of enough money to reimburse the city for the indebtedness thus incurred; and upon such board of trustees to take title thus transferred.

(2) The city council may not lawfully issue bonds under Section 3939 G. C. for the purpose of creating a fund to be paid over to the trustees of the School District Library to enable the latter to purchase a site for library purposes.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of recent date requesting my opinion as follows:

> "We are referring you to the Cincinnati library created under authority of Sections 14993 to 15005 G. C., and are advising that some years ago by annexation of the village of Madisonville, the city of Cincinnati acquired the Madisonville town hall and site, and also assumed a considerable indebtedness thereon, about $25,000.00 of such bonds being still unpaid and to a considerable degree unprovided for at the present. We are calling your attention to Section 3704 G. C., and are enclosing copy of ordinance No. 85 by which the city of Cincinnati has given this property to the library trustees.
> Question 1: In view of the indebtedness mentioned above can the city of Cincinnati legally transfer such property to the trustees of the library under authority of Sections 3711 and 3712 of the General Code?
> We are also enclosing copy of ordinance No. 203 of 1913 under which the city issued bonds to pay for the site for a library.
> Question 2: May the city legally issue bonds or expend moneys to provide a site or sites for libraries?
> You will understand it is not a municipal library, but a separate and distinct levy is made for such library, while the city proper must pay the bonds and interest and the bonds issued under the last named ordinance were issued under authority of the Longworth act."

Ordinance No. 85 of the council of the city of Cincinnati, referred to in your first question, provides that the city of Cincinnati shall, by deed to be executed by the mayor of the city, convey to the trustees of the public library of the School district of Cincinnati a certain tract of land described by metes and bounds and located in the village of Madisonville, upon such terms as that the trustees of the public library shall, at their own expense, put the property in good repair and beautify the premises and at all times maintain the premises in good condition and repair, and use the same for public library purposes, paying all expenses and charges in connection with the ownership, maintenance and upkeep thereof; and that the trustees of the public library shall assume and perform the obligations of the city of Cincinnati under any and all outstanding agreements or leases for the occupancy of any part of the premises. This is the only consideration named in the ordinance for the transfer of the real estate in question.

The trustees of the public library of the School district of Cincinnati occupy a peculiar position. In the first instance this body seems to owe its existence to an act of April 30, 1891, amending Section 3999 Revised Statutes (88 Ohio Laws, 446). The section had theretofore provided that in cities not having less than twenty thousand inhabitants it should be lawful for the board of education having custody of any public library therein to constitute a board of managers for said library. (64 Ohio Laws, 100). The amendment introduced a proviso to the effect > "that in cities of the first grade of the first class, the board of managers of the public library therein is hereby abolished, and a board of trustees of such library shall be appointed, as follows, viz: the board of education of the school district of such city, the union board of high schools, and the board of directors of the university of said city shall each by ballot appoint two persons to serve for a term of three years each as members of a board of trustees of said public library, and at the expiration of each term of three years, said boards shall each likewise make appointments for the succeeding three years. * * *"

Nothing is said in this act as to the legal title of property belonging to the public library to be thus administered.

Subsequently, on April 21, 1898, the general assembly amended and supplemented Section 3999 of the Revised Statutes, (93 Ohio Laws, 192). I quote certain provisions of this act:

> "Section 3999.—* * * provided, that in cities of the first grade of the first class upon the expiration of the terms of office of the trustees of the public library therein, heretofore appointed under this section, as amended April 30, 1891, there shall be appointed as successors to said board, a board of trustees of said library consisting of seven persons, as follows: Two by the board of education of the school district within which such city is situated, two by the board having charge of the high schools of such city, two by the directors of the university in such city, * * *; and one by the judges of the court of common pleas of the county within which such city is situated, * * *; and thereafter said boards and said judges shall, upon the expiration of the terms of office of said appointees, and each three years thereafter, appoint successors to said trustees. * * *"
> "Section 3999a.—Each and every resident of the county within which is situate any city of the first grade of the first class, having therein established a public library, shall be entitled to the free use of such library, reading rooms, and any branch of the same, and all the privileges thereof, upon such terms and conditions not inconsistent therewith, as the board of trustees of such library may prescribe."
> "Section 3999b—The board of trustees of the public library in cities of the first grade of the first class shall have sole and exclusive charge, custody and control of the public library in such city, including all property, both real and personal, used and occupied by such library. * * *.

Said board of trustees shall have power over, and exclusive control of, the library fund hereinafter provided for, and of the expenditure of all moneys collected to the credit thereof. They shall have power and it shall be their duty to establish in said city and throughout the county within which is situated said library, reading rooms, branch libraries and library stations in connection with said library, * * *"

"Section 3999c.—For the purpose of increasing, maintaining and managing the public library in cities of the first grade of the first class, the board of trustees thereof may levy annually a tax of not to exceed three-tenths of one mill on each dollar valuation of the taxable property in the county wherein is situated such city, to be assessed, collected and paid in the same manner as are other taxes levied throughout the county. * * *"

"Section 3999d.—The amount of any fund heretofore raised by a levy or tax by the board of education in such city for school library purposes, and all library funds remaining unexpended, shall be transferred from the respective funds to the library fund herein created, to be expended and paid out as herein provided * * * and any and all funds, bonds, stocks or other species of property held by the board of education of such city, or by any of the departments of such city for the benefit of the public library thereof, shall be transferred to the board of trustees of such public library, to be held and controlled by them subject to the terms of the respective donations."

This act, assuming it is constitutional (which will not be disputed for the purposes of this opinion) had the effect of transforming the school library in the city of Cincinnati into a public library of the county of Hamilton, to be managed and controlled by a board of trustees as therein provided. The legal title to personal property, at least, was vested in the board of trustees by transfer from the former board of trustees or the board of education. Nothing, however, was said in this act about transferring the legal title of the real estate formerly devoted to school library purposes. So far it would seem that the title to such real estate was still in the board of education of the city of Cincinnati; at least I have not been able to find any indication to the effect that the public school library, which had been in Cincinnati for a number of years prior to this time, belonged, in legal effect, to any other than the board of education of the city.

The last mentioned act was again amended by act passed April 14, 1900 (94 Ohio Laws, 204); but the amendments therein made are not important. Suffice it to say that the supplementary sections, designated as Sections 3999a et seq. of the Revised Statutes, as so enacted and amended are now found in the Appendix to the General Code, as Sections 14993 to 14998, inclusive.

On May 19, 1902, the general assembly passed another act affecting these library trustees (95 Ohio Laws, 902). This act was passed for the evident purpose of authorizing the board of trustees in question (now more accurately designated as "the board of trustees of the public library of the school district of Cincinnati") to accept a donation to be made by Andrew Carnegie for the construction of branch libraries. The board is authorized to issue bonds for this purpose, known and designated as "The Public Library bonds of the School district of Cincinnati," and "to purchase or lease and to hold land necessary for suitable sites on which to erect said branch libraries." (See Sections 14999 to 15005, inclusive, Appendix to General Code).

I quote from the act as follows:

"WHEREAS, Andrew Carnegie, Esquire, of New York City, has offered to give the board of trustees of the public library of the school district of Cincinnati, the sum of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars for the erection of branch libraries in said city on condition that the sites therefor be provided by the said board * * *; and * * *

WHEREAS, the said board under its powers is able to support said branch libraries as required by the conditions of said offer, but immediate legislation is necessary to authorize the acceptance of said offer, and to enable the said board to obtain the means with which to provide the sites for and equip said branch libraries; therefore

Be it enacted by the general assembly of the State of Ohio:

Section 1.—(Section 3999f Bates' Revised Statutes, Section 14999 Appendix to General Code.) That the board of trustees of the public library of the school district of Cincinnati be and it is hereby authorized to receive and accept the said donation of Andrew Carnegie upon the terms and conditions therein expressed, the branch libraries constructed under the provisions of said donation to be * * * forever kept open for the free use of the public.

Section 2.—(Section 15000 Appendix to General Code.) That for the purpose of providing the sites and furnishing the equipment necessary for said branch libraries the said board of trustees is hereby authorized and empowered to borrow * * such sum as may be necessary, not exceeding one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, and to issue * * * bonds therefor, which shall be known and designated as 'The Public Library bonds of the School district of Cincinnati' * * . For the purpose of paying the interest and providing a sinking fund for the final redemption of said bonds, the said board of trustees shall levy annually a tax upon the taxable property of said school district sufficient in amount to pay the said interest, etc. * * *"

Secton 3. —(Section 15001 Appendix to General Code.) Said library trustees shall have power to purchase or lease and to hold land necessary for suitable sites on which to erect said branch libraries, and shall use said fund in the payment therefor, * * *. Said trustees shall have power and they are hereby authorized to make all necessary contracts for the construction, furnishing and equipping of such branch libraries. The title to the land acquired under this act shall be taken in the name of 'The Trustees of the Public Library of the School district of Cincinnati,' and shall be held by them in trust for public library purposes, and said trustees shall have the care, custody, management, and control of all property provided for public library purposes under this act."

I pause here to remark that so far there is no power to acquire title to land or lands and buildings for branch library purposes vested in the board of trustees, save in so far as may be necessary in order to accept Mr. Carnegie's donation. The power to purchase and take title to lands is strictly limited in this way, and can not be the predicate of any acquisition of title by donation, or otherwise, of any other lands required for branch library purposes.

"Section 5.—(Section 15003 Appendix to General Code.) Said trustees shall have the right to receive and accept donations of land, money, or other things of value, and to invest, use, or dispose of the same in the interest of the library."

Here is a provision which probably does give to the trustees, as a quasi corporation, capacity to take title to lands other than those acquired for the purpose of establishing branch libraries in accordance with the terms of Mr. Carnegie's gift; but no power is reposed in the board of library trustees to establish branch libraries otherwise than perhaps in the administration of an express trust.

I have traced the legislative history of the board of trustees of the Cincinnati school library to show the exact situation so far as this body is concerned. Your question, however, does not relate to the power of this board to take, but rather to the power of the city of Cincinnati to give, as it has attempted to do by and through Ordinance No. 85 of the year 1918. That ordinance treats the transaction as if it involved the conveyance of the title vested in the city of Cincinnati to this board of trustees. The attempt of the council to dispose of the city's property in this way invokes consideration of Section 3704 of the General Code, referred to by you, in connection with other sections in the same chapter relating to the sale or lease of property.

Section 3698 of the General Code provides as follows:

> "Municipal corporations shall have special power to sell or lease real estate or to sell personal property belonging to the corporation, when such real estate or personal property is not needed for any municipal purpose. Such power shall be exercised in the manner provided in this chapter."

Section 3704 General Code, referred to by you, provides as follows:

> "Money arising from the sale or lease of real estate, or a public building or from the sale of personal property, belonging to the corporation, shall be deposited in the treasury in the particular fund by which such property was acquired, or is maintained, and if there be no such fund it shall be deposited in the general fund. If the property was acquired by an issue of bonds the whole or a part of which issue is still outstanding, unpaid and unprovided for, such money, after deducting therefrom the cost of maintenance and administration of the property, shall on warrant of the city auditor be transferred to the trustees of the sinking fund to be applied in the payment of the principal of the bond issue."

If these sections stood alone there would be strong ground for asserting that Ordinance No. 85 could not be sustained as a valid exercise of the legislative power of the council of the city of Cincinnati. Unquestionably, the transaction authorized, or attempted to be authorized by that ordinance, is not a "sale," and on this ground, as well as that suggested by you in view of Section 3704 of the General Code, I would be inclined to question the transaction. However, you call attention to Sections 3711 and 3712 of the General Code. These sections provide as follows:

> "Section 3711.—A municipal corporation may transfer by ordinance duly passed, any property, real or personal, acquired or suitable for library purposes, to the trustees of any public library for the school district within which such municipal corporation is situated, upon such lawful terms and conditions as are agreed to between the municipal corporation and trustees."
> "Section 3712.—The trustees of a public library in such district may receive and accept such transfer, and receive and accept from any other source or acquire in any other manner, any property, real or personal, for library purposes, and use and apply it for such purposes, and enter into any contract relating thereto."

Here is found independent authority in the council to transfer the property to the trustees of the library and independent capacity in the trustees of the library to receive the title. These sections solve all the questions raised by the consideration of the other sections which have been referred to, as relating to the powers of the trustees, on the one hand, and the council, on the other.

Ordinance No. 85 is, in my opinion, authorized by these sections and the trustees of the public library are, in my opinion, empowered by these sections to accept the ordinance and receive the conveyance.

Section 3704 G. C. does not prevent the transaction from being consummated under authority of Section 3711, because Section 3704 does not operate unless there has been a sale or lease. However disadvantageous the transaction may be from the viewpoint of the city of Cincinnati, which is divested of the title to the property in question, but remains liable for the debt incurred on account of its original purchase by the village of Madisonville, the legality of the transaction is, in view of the sections last above mentioned, not open to question.

Ordinance No. 203 of the year 1913, referred to in your second question, provides, in part, as follows:

> "Section 1.—That it is deemed necessary by the council of the city of Cincinnati to issue and sell the bonds of said city * * * for establishing a free public library on north side of West Eighth street, between State and Glenway avenues, * * * as a branch of the Public library of the city of Cincinnati. * * *"
> "Section 3.—The proceeds from the sale of said bonds * * * shall be credited to the fund for said purpose aforesaid, and shall be paid out upon the order of the board of trustees of the Public library of the city of Cincinnati, and shall be expended by said board of trustees of the Public library of the city of Cincinnati for the purposes specified in Section 1 of this ordinance."

It is apparent, as you say, that this bond issue was made under the supposed authority of Section 3939 of the General Code, known as the "Longworth Act," one subdivision of which authorizes council to issue bonds "for establishing free public libraries and reading rooms" and another of which authorizes bonds to be issued "for procuring the real estate for an improvement authorized by this section * *."

I assume from the statement in your letter that the city of Cincinnati does not maintain any free public library under authority of Sections 4004 et seq. of the General Code; or that if it does, the reference in the ordinance is not to the trustees of such a municipal library (who are appointed by the mayor), but to the trustees of the school library, the legislative history of which has been traced in dealing with your first question. Of course, if the city of Cincinnati actually does maintain a municipal library, and if the proceeds of the sale of the bonds issued under authority of Ordinance No. 203 of the year 1913 were to be expended for such purpose by the trustees of such municipal library, no question as to the legality of the transaction could arise. I take it, however, that, as above suggested, the ordinance discloses a transaction whereby the city council issued bonds of the city and turned the proceeds over to the trustees of the independent library, which seems to be, in one aspect of the case, a school library and, in another aspect, a county library. I know of no authority to do this, and if this is actually what was done I am of the opinion that Ordinance No. 203 was illegal.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—CITY SOLICITOR HAS NO AUTHORITY IN OWN RIGHT TO COMPROMISE CLAIMS—COUNCIL CANNOT AUTHORIZE SOLICITOR GENERALLY TO COMPROMISE CLAIMS.

The city solicitor has no authority in his own right to compromise claims for damages against the city and to pay the same from an appropriation to his account for "court costs and damages."

Council may not authorize the city solicitor by general or blanket resolution or ordinance to compromise any and all claims against the city. He may be authorized to negotiate settlements, but each settlement must be separately approved by council.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter of November 20 in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "The council of a municipality of this state in its semi-annual appropriation ordinance regularly appropriates from the general fund for 'Court costs and damages.'
> Question 1: Has the city solicitor legal authority to compromise claims of damages and have the same paid from this appropriation without authority of council to compromise claims?
> Question 2: Can such authority of council legally authorize such compromise, and if so may it be by blanket authority or should there be authority of council covering each individual case?"

The city solicitor has no power under the statutes to act for the city in compromising damage claims; that is to say, this is not one of his functions as expressed in the statutes relative to his office or fairly implied therefrom.

His duties in so far as they approach the matter inquired about are set forth in the following sections of the General Code:

> Section 4308.—"When required so to do by resolution of the council, the solicitor shall prosecute or defend, as the case may be, for and in behalf of the corporation, all complaints, suits and controversies in which the corporation is a party, and such other suits, matters and controversies as he shall, by resolution or ordinance, be directed to prosecute, but shall not be required to prosecute any action before the mayor for the violation of an ordinance without first advising such action."
> Section 4311.—"The solicitor shall apply in the name of the corporation, to a court of competent jurisdiction for an order of injunction to restrain the misapplication of funds of the corporation, or the abuse of its corporate powers, or the execution or performance of any contract made in behalf of the corporation in contravention of the laws or ordinance governing it, or which was procured by fraud or corruption."
> Section 4312.—"When an obligation or contract made on behalf of the corporation granting a right or easement, or creating a public duty, is being evaded or violated, the solicitor shall likewise apply for the forfeiture or the specific performance thereof as the nature of the case requires."
> Section 4313.—"In case an officer or board fails to perform any duty expressly enjoined by law or ordinance, the solicitor shall apply to a court of competent jurisdiction for a writ of mandamus to compel the performance of such duty."

It will be observed that the authority of the solicitor to act generally—that is in cases other than those specifically enumerated in Sections 4311 et seq. as above quoted, none of which touch the present case—is carefully safeguarded, in that an ordinance or resolution of council is required to confer upon him the powers of an attorney for the city. In other words, in his own proper office, so to speak, he can not exercise the capacity of the city to sue and be sued, nor any implied authority that might flow from such basic power. On the other hand, Section 4308 itself makes it clear that the corporate power of the city to sue and be sued is lodged in and controlled by the council. It is the corporate body which must act for the city, at least primarily, on this side of its corporate existence; the solicitor is rather the public officer whose duty it is when moved to action by the corporation as a litigant to represent it as its attorney.

I assume that you are inquiring about a case where council has made an appropriation for "damages" under such circumstances as to make it clear that the intention was that the city solicitor was to draw on this appropriation. This would not, in my opinion, be enough to authorize the solicitor to compromise a particular case. It is sufficient authority to authorize him to draw on the appropriation when he has made a compromise which council has authorized. That is the full effect which I feel able to give to an appropriation of this sort.

I have already said enough to answer your first question, which is that on the basis of the appropriation only and without other authority of council, a city solicitor would not have power to compromise claims for damages against the city and draw on the appropriation in settlement of such compromises. I would, however, be of the opinion further that in case such action had been taken a subsequent resolution or ordinance by council ratifying the settlement made by the solicitor would validate the entire proceeding.

I have already indicated partially what my answer to your second question must be. Council can authorize the solicitor to defend any case against the corporation. It is, as I have said, that municipal functionary which may exercise all incidents of the capacity of the municipality to sue and be sued. In other words, it may control municipal litigation. Therefore it may direct the settlement or compromise of any claim either for or against the city which is or may be the subject of litigation.

The question that now arises is as to whether or not this power may be delegated to the solicitor. Strictly speaking, it may not be so delegated. Each settlement which the solicitor makes must be specifically approved by council. Council may require and thus authorize the solicitor to defend any controversy, though not in suit, and this gives to the solicitor all the powers usually reposed in an attorney in the conduct of the controversy from the legal standpoint. The solicitor thus becomes the agent of the municipality as represented by the council with full authority to act as an attorney might act in a similar case. Such authority would not go so far, however, as to permit the solicitor to bind the city finally and in his own right as such agent by the terms of any compromise upon which he might agree. He would be authorized to negotiate no doubt and to formulate terms; but before the settlement would be binding upon the city the action of council would be necessary. Such action should, in my opinion, be taken in each individual case. For the council to attempt to confer upon the solicitor blanket authority to compromise at his discretion damage claims of any given class asserted against the city would be for the council to delegate discretion which is reposed by the law in it to the solicitor. This can not lawfully be done.

I answer your second question therefore by saying that council may legally authorize the solicitor to effect a compromise for not more than a stated figure in the case of a damage claim against the city, and when such compromise is effected it would be complete and binding upon the city. Council may also ratify and confirm the compromise of damage claims negotiated by the city solicitor where he is authorized to represent the city generally in such controversies. Authority to act to this extent may be conferred upon the solicitor generally, that is by blanket ordinance or resolution, but council may not by such a general ordinance confer upon the solicitor power to compromise individual cases at his own discretion.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOMES—MEANING OF PHRASE "SEMI-PUBLIC CHILDREN'S HOME" IN SECTION 3088, 7676, 7677, 7678 AND 7681.

The phrase "semi-public children's home" appearing in Sections 3088, 7676, 7677, 7678 and 7681 of the General Code refers to institutions established and maintained by private donations but operated by or under public authority as exemplified by Sections 3070 et seq. and 3110 G. C. Charitable institutions wholly under private management, though open to all on the same terms, are not such institutions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—From several sources the question as to the meaning of the phrase "semi-public children's home" as used in Section 7676 General Code, pertaining to the admission of pupils to the public schools, has been raised. Most recently there has come to this office a letter from the office of the city solicitor of Cincinnati presenting specific facts involving an interpretation of this language, which facts are as follows:

> "Your opinion on this point is desired in order that the board of education of the school district of the city of Cincinnati may determine the rights of the inmates of the Home for Colored Girls and inmates of the Children's Home of Cincinnati to attend the public schools of this district.
> There is located in this city a home for colored girls, and the management of the home has advised us that the home is a semi-charitable institution. This home has existed for seven years; it has a capacity for twenty-five girls, and is always crowded. Girls are received from improper homes and also those homes broken by death and other misfortune. These girls are placed with the home either by the juvenile court (which usually includes commitment) or they are brought to the home voluntarily by parents or other relatives, and of this latter class there are usually three or four girls from school districts of this county outside of the school district of the city of Cincinnati.
> The home is careful to receive only those girls for whom no other provision can be made, those whose morals are in jeopardy and who stand much in need of the protection and training that the home endeavors to give. For obvious reasons they demand as much financial support as can be secured from some relative. This, however, never covers the cost of maintenance and the home is compelled to solicit funds through the Council of Social Agencies of the city of Cincinnati.

> The Children's Home is a corporaton not for profit organized under the laws of the State of Ohio; it makes no charge for the care of children entrusted to it and is wholly supported by its endowment fund by voluntary contributions in the form of money and supplies. If a child is placed in the home and the parents pay a stated sum per week, this sum is not accepted as a charge for the care of this child, but is considered as a donation for the general support of the Children's Home. Persons of this city and other localities make bequests by will to the Children's Home and it also receives money from persons charitably inclined, while still other persons send it supplies in the way of clothing and food. These various donations constitute the means of support of the Children's Home and are used for the support of the home in general."

In view of the importance of the question and the frequency with which it has been raised throughout the state, I venture to address an opinion to the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices.

I may say at the outset that on the facts pertaining to the two Cincinnati institutions as they are presented by the letter from which I have quoted, I would have no hesitancy in pronouncing each of them an "institution of purely public charity" within the meaning of the former language of the constitution respecting the exemption of property from taxation, the statutes passed in the exercise of the power to exempt, and the decisions interpreting such constitutional and statutory provisions. That is to say, these institutions, both of which are charitable, are "public" in the sense that they form proper beneficiaries of tax exemptions; that is, they seem to be open to all members of certain natural classes on equal terms, and are clearly instrumentalities for the satisfaction of public needs.

It would seem, however, that if the legislature had intended to refer to properly charitable institutions or institutions of public charity, it would have used some other term than "semi-public" to describe such institutions. In point of fact, as the solicitor states in his letter, Section 7681 of the General Code distinguishes between "semi-public children's homes" and "private children's homes."

Inasmuch as practically all institutions which would be called "children's homes" are charitable and most of them open to the public on equal terms, it would seem most likely that the distinction here drawn was not intended to be based upon the principles to which I have referred.

Of course, there may be children's homes in the state which are open, for example, only to children of parents of a certain religious denomination or fraternal order, in which event, of course, they could be classed as "private children's homes" in contradistinction to institutions of the class described in the letter from which quotation has been made. Therefore, I do not place much reliance upon the argument just advanced.

The phrase under consideration is new in legislation passed in 1917 (107 Ohio Laws, 60). I find it most helpful, therefore, to turn to that act in an effort to find a clue to the meaning of the term, which is not used elsewhere in the statutes.

The act found in 107 Ohio Laws, 60, amends Sections 3085, 3088, 7676 to 7678, inclusive, and 7681 of the General Code. The phrase "semi-public children's home" is found in Sections 3088, 7676, 7677, 7678 and 7681 of these sections. Of the enumerated statutes the last four which I have mentioned relate to public schools and attendance therein, and consideration of these sections by themselves does not shed any light upon the meaning of the phrase "semi-public children's home," which it will be remembered is apparently used in contradistinction to the phrase "county or district children's home" on the one hand and "private children's home or orphan asylum" on the other hand.

In other words, consideration of these sections by themselves will show merely that a "semi-public children's home" is a children's home which is neither a county or district children's home nor a private children's home or orphan asylum.

But, as indicated, the phrase is found in Section 3088 of the General Code. This section is a part of the act relating to the powers and duties of county officials with respect to children's homes. One would naturally suppose, therefore, that the phrase "semi-public children's home" would have some reference to a type of institution recognized by the statutes found in the chapter in which Section 3088 General Code appears.

I call attention to Sections 3070 et seq. and 3110 of the General Code, which are found in the chapter under the heading "Children's Homes." The first group of statutes authorizes county commissioners to receive bequests, donations and gifts, real and personal, for the purchase of a site to erect thereon and maintain an orphans' asylum, which is to be under the control of a board of six persons serving gratuitiously. These sections seem to contemplate that private bequests and donations shall form the source of the revenues applied to the maintenance of such a home. Section 3110 authorizes the commissioners of any county or district to accept any donation or bequest of land, money or other personal property for the use and benefit of children's homes " on such terms as are agreed upon by such board, and such persons, agents or executors."

Under these statutes an institution would exist under the control of the county commissioners and yet be distinguishable from a regular county or district children's home, in that such institutions would be established and partly or wholly maintained through the use of privately donated trust funds, whereas a regular county or district children's home is established by the county or district and maintained by taxation.

There may be other statutes authorizing cities to engage in similar enterprises. I have not made a search in an effort to find out whether the statutes to which I have referred constitute the only ones under which such arrangements for the establishment and maintenance of children's homes may be carried out. I say merely that these sections do provide for institutions which do not constitute private children's homes on the one hand, because they are under the control in a greater or lesser degree of public officials; and do not constitute county or district children's homes on the other hand because they are not established in the manner in which regular county or district homes are established, because they are not supported only by taxation as regular county children's homes are maintained, and because finally they are not under the control of the trustees provided for in Section 3881 and 3112 for county and district children's homes respectively.

Such institutions being, therefore, neither county or district homes on the one hand nor private homes on the other hand, I take it that they must constitute the class of institutions which the legislature had in mind in speaking of "semi-public children's homes."

I am of the opinion, therefore, that a "semi-public children's home" within the meaning of the sections referred to is one of the type exemplified by Sections 3070 et seq. and 3110 of the General Code. Inasmuch as neither of the institutions referred to in the letter of the solicitor appears to be such an institution, as both of them are under private management, I am further of the opinion that the institutions referred to in the letter constitute private children's homes and not semi-public children's homes within the meaning of the related statutes.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

DITCHES AND DRAINAGE—NOT NECESSARY FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS TO ACT WITH EMERGENCY COMMISSIONERS, WHEN.

In straightening or cleaning out a creek, river or water course, for the protection of a bridge or road, under the provisions of Sections 2428 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L. 549-550), the commissioners need not act in conjunction with the emergency commission created in the act found in 103 O. L. 206.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

HON. HARRY S. CORE, Prosecuting Attorney, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication which reads as follows:

"The commissioners of Putnam county are acting on a petition filed about August, 1918, under Section 2428, to straighten Sugar Creek for the protection of a bridge and fill leading to said bridge, which crosses said creek.

The bridge crosses the creek at right angles, running east and west, and the improvement in the creek will reach from the bridge directly south about forty rods straightening the channel which is, as it now exists, long and winding, and coming toward the grade, and the improvement as they have undertaken is by petition under the section above referred to and Sections 2429, 2430 and 2431.

Referring to Attorney-General's Opinion in Volume II, 1913, pages 1269 to 1274, which seems to join the emergency commission in action with the county commissioners in such work, the question to be determined here is, does the act referred to anticipate the necessity of the appointment of an emergency commission to act with the commissioners in this matter, or does the act stand alone and may the commissioners of the county, themselves, perform this duty?"

Sections 2428, 2429, 2430 and 2431 G. C. (107 O. L. 549-550) under which your county commissioners are proceeding, read as follows:

"Section 2428.—The commissioners may cause a river, creek or watercourse to be straightened or cleaned out for the protection of any bridge or road within their control."

"Section 2429.—Before the commissioners proceed to straighten or clean out any river, creek or watercourse, there must be filed with the county auditor of the county a petition, signed by one or more taxpayers of the county, setting forth the benefits to be derived from straightening or cleaning out such river, creek or watercourse, the starting point and terminus, with a description of such river, creek or watercourse, and an estimate of costs to be incurred to complete the work. At the next regular or special meeting of the commissioners, the auditor shall notify them of the filing of the petition."

"Section 2430.—Upon receiving the petition, the commissioners shall forthwith appoint a competent engineer, resident of the county, who shall go upon the line of the river, creek or watercourse, carefully examine, and make his report to the county auditor in writing, stating whether he deems the straightening or cleaning out of the river, creek or watercourse will be beneficial for the protection of any bridge, state, or county road, or other road in control of the commissioners, and, if so, an estimate of the costs thereof."

"Section 2431.—If the engineer recommends the straightening or cleaning out of such river, creek or watercourse, and the commissioners deem it advisable, at the first regular session after receiving the report, they shall advertise the letting of the work at least twenty days, and let it to the lowest responsible bidder, taking from him a bond in a sum fixed by them, payable to the state, with good sureties, for the performance of the work in a proper manner, and within a time therein named. No bid shall be accepted that exceeds the estimated cost in such report, and the commissioners may reject all bids."

Your question is as to whether, under the opinion to which you refer, the county commissioners ought to join with the emergency commission provided for in an act found in 103 O. L. 206, or whether the commissioners can proceed independently with the improvement asked for in the petition filed with them.

It is my opinion that the county commissioners may proceed with said improvement, without being joined with the emergency commission as provided for in said act.

The part of Mr. Hogan's opinion, to which you refer, is found on page 1272 of Volume II of Annual Report of the Attorney General for 1913 and is as follows:

"I am, therefore, further of the opinion that because of the fact that the two acts of the legislature above referred to must be construed together, the powers of the emergency commission extend to the proceedings provided for in Section 2428 et seq., so that although the taxpayer's petition would be filed with the county auditor as provided in Section 2431 and the employment authorized by Section 2430 should be made by the county commissioners with the approval of the emergency commissioners. It therefore follows that upon the necessary jurisdictional steps being taken, the employment of the resident engineer, authorized to be employed under Section 2430, should be made jointly by the county commissioners and the emergency board. The foregoing constitutes an answer to your first and second questions."

It is my view that this finding of Mr. Hogan does not apply to your case. It must be remembered that the act as found in 103 O. L. 206 was merely an emergency act to take care of the damages caused by the floods of March and April, 1913. The title to this act is as follows:

"An act to establish the Ohio flood relief commission; to define its powers and duties and to provide for the establishment of emergency commissions in certain counties and municipalities of the state, to assist in restoring the public works and public property damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913."

Section 10 of said act reads as follows:

"The emergency commission of any county shall exercise in conjunction with the county commissioners such powers and duties as are conferred upon the county commissioners in so far as they extend to the repairing, rebuilding and restoring of public works destroyed or damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913, and the emergency commission shall exercise and perform such duties jointly with such county commissioners."

Here again we note that the emergency commission of a county unites with the county commissioners only to the extent of repairing, rebuilding and restoring public works destroyed or damaged by the floods of March and April, 1913.

The provisions of this act should not be extended beyond the purpose for which the act was passed, and as the improvement which your county commissioners have under consideration has nothing whatever to do with the restoring of public works destroyed or damaged by said floods of March and April, 1913, it is my opinion that the act referred to does not apply to the matter.

Hence in view of all the above it is my opinion that the county commissioners may cause a creek, river or water course to be straightened or cleaned out for the protection of any bridge in conjunction with the emergency commission created in the act found in 103 O. L. 206.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

AUDITOR OF STATE—HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PRESCRIBE ACCOUNTING SYSTEM FOR LEGISLATURE.

The auditor of state, as chief inspector and supervisor of public offices, has no authority to prescribe a system of accounting for the houses of the general assembly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of recent date requesting an early opinion upon the following questions:

"As Chief Inspector and Supervisor of Public Offices may the auditor of state legally prescribe a system of accounting for the State Senate and House of Representatives?

If he has such right, and the members of said body ignore the same by resolution, or otherwise than by the enactment of a statute, do they come within the provisions of Section 283 G. C., and what is the proper authority to pass upon their removal?

Referring again to the provisions of Section 283 G. C., kindly designate the proper authorities to pass upon the removal of the following officials for failure to keep the accounts and make the reports required by the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, also the proper procedure to accomplish the same; viz: State officials, county officials, municipal officials, school officials, township officials and justices of the peace."

The answer to your first question is in the negative. The only authority which the auditor of state has to prescribe systems of accounting for anybody is that which exists under the act creating the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices. This act, which begins with Section 274 of the General Code, authorizes the bureau to "inspect and supervise the accounts and reports of all state offices, including every state, educational, benevolent, penal and reformatory institution, public institution and the offices of each taxing district or public institution in the state of Ohio."

Section 277, which is the particular section which gives the power under consideration, authorizes the auditor of state "as chief inspector and supervisor" to "prescribe and require the installation of a system of accounting and reporting for the public offices, named in Section two hundred seventy-four."

The general assembly of the state is not a "state office"; it is not "named in Section two hundred seventy-four."

These statements answer your first question and make unnecessary an answer to your second question.

Your third question refers to Section 283 of the General Code, which provides as follows:

"A public officer or employe who refuses or neglects to keep the accounts of his office in the form prescribed, or make the reports required by the bureau of inspection and supervision, shall be removed from office on hearing before the proper authority."

To answer your third question as you have asked it would require me separately to consider the case of every public officer in the state subject to the supervision of the Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices. No one of them would suffice as an answer to the whole question nor as an answer applicable to any particular class of officers, such as "state officials," "county officials," etc. With the exception of certain general statutes which authorize removal of any public official upon complaint signed by citizens and heard in a court, the general policy of our statutes is to provide specifically for the question of removal in connection with each particular officer. In other words, it is purely accidental that any two officers happen to be subject to removal by the same authority and in the same way. Indeed there is no provision whatsoever for the removal of some officers.

Unless advised that you wish me to write a lengthy article on the subject of the removal of public officers in the state of Ohio and to spend the time necessary to prepare such an article, I must answer this part of your letter by advising that I should be pleased to state the law in this respect as to any particular officer or officers whom you may have in mind upon receipt of advice from you as to who they may be. Any other course would make it impossible for me to render an opinion at an early date, which seems to be one of the points in your mind.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF MORGAN COUNTY, OHIO—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Morgan county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000.00, for the purpose of providing a fund for the repair of certain bridges in said county.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Morgan county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and the laws of Ohio in regard to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted, when the same are properly executed and delivered, will constitute valid and binding obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF CITY OF BELLEFONTAINE, OHIO—$20,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the city of Bellefontaine, in the sum of $20,000.00, for the purpose of equipping and furnishing city hospital building.

I have carefully examined the transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the city of Bellefontaine, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and find the same to be in conformity to the provisions of the constitution and the laws of Ohio in regard to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds properly prepared according to bond form submitted, when the same are properly executed and delivered, will constitute valid and binding obligations of said city, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUES OF THE CITY OF WARREN, OHIO—$107,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the city of Warren, Ohio, four issues in the aggregate amount of $107,000.00, as follows:

$70,000 in anticipation of the collection of assessments for the sewer in sub-district No. 2 of the southeast sewer district.

$19,000 to pay the city's share of the cost of construction of a sanitary trunk sewer in sub-district No. 2 of the southeast sewer district.

$14,000 in anticipation of the collection of assessments for the sewer in sub-district No. 1 of the northeast sewer district.

$4,000 to pay the city's share of the cost and expense of constructing sewer in sub-district No. 1 of the northeast sewer district.

I have examined the consolidated transcript of the proceedings of the council and other officers of the city of Warren, Ohio, in the issuance and sale of the above described bonds, and find that said proceedings are in all respects legal.

I am therefore of the opinion that said bonds, when issued, will constitute valid, legal and binding obligations of the city of Warren, payable in accordance with the provisions thereof.

A form for the bonds has been examined and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOL LANDS—SALE IF COMMENCED PRIOR TO ACT OF 97 O. L., 617, CONTINUES UNDER PRIOR LAW.

Where an action is started under authority of the Act of 97 Ohio Laws, 617, for the sale of a tract of school lands, such action is not discontinued by virtue of the Act of 107 Ohio Laws, 357, and such action may continue and the tract of land legally sold thereunder.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

HON. E. E. LINDSAY, Prosecuting Attorney, New Philadelphia, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 12, 1918, you submit the following statement of facts and inquiry:

"By an Act of Congress under date of May 26, 1824, one-thirty-sixth part of certain tracts of land lying in Clay, Goshen and Salem townships in this county was vested in the state to be held in trust for the use of schools for the benefit of the purchasers of said several tracts of land, each containing four thousand acres and designated as follows: Gnadenhutten tract in Clay township, Schoenbrun tract in Goshen township and Salem tract in Salem township.

The Legislature of our state on the 20th day of March, 1840, passed an Act found in Volume 38, page 164, of Ohio Laws, providing the manner in which all said school lands could be sold or leased.

Under the terms of said Act the school lands known as the Schoenbrun tract and the Salem tract were sold.

The school tract known as the Gnadenhutten tract containing about 120 acres of land was not sold under said act, but has been used ever since for school purposes under the terms and conditions of said Act of Congress and said Act of the Legislature and the amendments.

On the 6th day of April, 1877, Volume 74, page 429, of Ohio Laws, said last mentioned Act was amended in certain particulars.

On the 15th day of March, 1904, said Acts were amended and supplemented by the Legislature and provided the means and manner by which said Gnadenhutten tract could be sold, Volume 97, page 617, Ohio Laws.

Said acts remain in force still unless they were repealed by implication by the last Legislature, passed on the 20th day of March 1917, Volume 107, page 357, of Ohio Laws.

On the 16th day of February, 1917, we filed a petition in the court of common pleas in this county to sell said Gnadenhutten tract as provided by the terms of the aforesaid laws for the trustees of said Gnadenhutten tract, and this action was still pending in court when the Act of March 20, 1917, was passed.

It is important for the reason that we desire to make a good title in the event of sale and it is important by reason of the fact that the auditor of state may claim jurisdiction over said lands by reason of said last mentioned Act."

You refer to the amended acts of the Legislature passed for the purpose of granting authority for the control and sale of certain school lands. The only acts that need to be referred to in this opinion are those contained in 97 Ohio Laws, 617, and in 107 Ohio Laws, 357.

Section 1 of the Act of 97 Ohio Laws, 617, provides as follows:

"That the three trustees of the school lot in the Gnadenhutten tract in the township of Clay, county of Tuscarawas and state of Ohio, elected under and by virtue of an act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio, entitled 'An Act supplementary to an act to provide for the sale of three several tracts of Moravian lands in the county of Tuscarawas, passed March 20, 1840,' passed April 6, 1877 (Ohio Laws Volume 74, page 429), be and they are hereby authorized to file a petition in the court of common pleas of said Tuscarawas county, Ohio, containing a pertinent description of said school lot in said Gnadenhutton tract, and setting forth that they are the proper and lawful trustees for the management thereof under said act of the general assembly of the state of Ohio, passed April 6. 1877, that it is the desire of two-thirds majority of said inhabitants of said Gnadenhutten tract, that said school lot be sold, and the interest arising from the proceeds of said sale be applied to the use of the common schools of said Gnadenhutten tract, and praying for a sale thereof. And within thirty days thereafter said trustees shall procure and file in said court in the same proceeding, a written consent to the sale of said school lot, in the nature of an answer to said petition, signed by not less than two-thirds of the qualified electors residing within said Gnadenhutten tract."

Sections 2 and 3 of said Act prescribe the duties of the court and other details and need not be here quoted.

It appears from your inquiry that on February 16, 1917, a petition was filed in the common pleas court of your county, to sell the Gnadenhutten tract of land under authority of the above act; that action was still pending when the Legislature passed the Act of 107 Ohio Laws, 357. The title to said Act reads as follows:

"An Act—To provide for the better administration of the school and ministerial land held in trust by the state of Ohio, to codify the laws relating thereto, to safeguard both the trust and the rights of the citizens of Ohio holding leasehold or fee simple titles in and to said lands, and make more certain the rights and obligations of the state and the lessees of such lands."

Section 1 of said Act, known as Section 3181 General Code, reads as follows:

"It shall be the duty of the treasurer, clerk and trustees of all original surveyed townships, and all other officers, excepting county recorders, charged with or having the possession or custody of records or papers pertaining to the lands appropriated by congress for the support of schools, or the purposes of religion, and of all officers charged by law with the administration of such lands, to transfer and deliver to the state supervisor of school and ministerial lands, all field notes, maps, surveys, books, records, deeds or leases and copies thereof, school land sales, records, documents and papers of every description, in their possession, relating to any school or ministerial lands in the state, whether such lands shall have been sold or still remain unsold. The state supervisor shall be the custodian thereof."

Sections 36 to 42, both inclusive, known as Sections 3203-13 to 3203-19 inclusive, General Code, provides for the sale of school lands. It is not necessary to quote from said sections:

Section 59 provides:

"That all acts or parts of acts that conflict with any of the provisions of this act are hereby repealed. * * *"

Here follow a number of sections of the General Code which are specifically repealed.

This act must be read in connection with Section 26 of the General Code, which reads as follows:

"Whenever a statute is repealed or amended, such repeal or amendment shall in no manner affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, civil or criminal, and when the repeal or amendment relates to the remedy, it shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions, or proceedings, unless so expressed, nor shall any repeal or amendment affect causes of such action, prosecution or proceedings, existing at the time of such amendment or repeal, unless otherwise expressly provided in the amending or repealing act."

In the case of Elder vs. Shoffstall, 90 O. S., 265, the supreme court had under consideration the application of the three-fourths jury law to pending actions. The first branch of the syllabus reads as follows:

> "Section 11455 General Code, as amended February 6, 1913 (effective May 14, 1913), does not apply to causes pending in the common pleas courts of this state on the 13th day of May, 1913."

On page 271 of the Opinion, Donahue, J., says:

> "This act of the general assembly is remedial in its nature and must be considered and construed in connection with Section 26 of the General Code, for so long as that section remains the law of Ohio, all subsequent legislation must be construed in accordance therewith."

In the case of Kelley vs. The State, 94 O. S. 331, the first and second branches of the syllabus read:

> "The amendment of Section 1637, General Code, passed February 6, 1914 (104 O. L. 179), withdrawing the jurisdiction of the court of insolvency of Hamilton county after December 31, 1914, in actions for divorce and alimony, being an act remedial in its nature must be read and construed as though Section 26, General Code, were a part thereof.
> The legislature having failed to incorporate in such amending and repealing act an express provision making it applicable to pending actions, those actions by virtue of the provisions of Section 26, General Code, are exempt from the operation of the amended statute. The insolvency court of Hamilton county, therefore, was authorized to hear and determine all actions in divorce and alimony which were pending in that court December 31, 1914."

On page 338, Matthias, J., says:

> "The language of Section 26, General Code, is not that such repeal or amendment shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings unless such inference may be gathered from the repealing statute, but it is that such repeal or amendment shall not affect pending actions, prosecutions or proceedings unless so expressed. When therefore the intention of the legislature is to give to such repealing or amending act a retroactive effect such intention must not be left to inference or construction, but must be manifested by express provision in the repealing or amending act."

There is no express provisions in the Act of 107 Ohio Laws, 357, which makes that act applicable to pending actions. The case which was filed on February 16, 1917, to sell the Gnadenhutten tract of land was a pending action when the act of 107 Ohio Laws, 357, became effective. Said action is continued by virtue of the provisions of Section 26 General Code.

It is my opinion therefore that the trustees may proceed under and by virtue of the proceedings now pending in common pleas court and legally sell the Gnadenhutten tract in question.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DEPUTY STATE SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION MAY DRAW INCREASED COMPENSATION DURING TERM.

The provisions of Section 20 of Article II of the Constitution do not apply to members of the board of deputy state supervisors of elections, and they can draw the increased compensation as provided for in Section 4943 G. C. (107 O. L. 684), even though they were holding office at the time said amendment became effective, for the reason that they do not draw a salary as therein contemplated, but merely compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your communication requesting my opinion upon the following matter:

> "Are members of boards of election officers whose salaries (general salaries) can not be increased during the term for which they were appointed?"

Your question rests upon the provisions of Section 20 of Article II of the Constitution, which reads as follows:

> "The general assembly, in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers; but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

You call attention to Section 4943 G. C. (107 O. L. 684). As this section relates to deputy state supervisors of elections and not to deputy state supervisors and inspectors of elections, I shall limit my consideration to deputy state supervisors of elections.

Section 4822 G. C. provides for compensation of members of boards of deputy state supervisors of elections and reads as follows:

> "Section 4822.—Each deputy state supervisor shall receive for his services the sum of three dollars for each election precinct in his respective county, and the clerk shall receive for his services the sum of four dollars for each election precinct in his respective county. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such county at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each of such deputy state supervisors under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk shall in no case be less than one hundred and twenty-five dollars each year. Such compensation shall be paid quarterly from the general revenue fund of the county upon vouchers of the board, made and certified by the chief deputy and the clerk thereof. Upon presentation of any such voucher, the county auditor shall issue his warrant upon the county treasurer for the amount thereof, and the treasurer shall pay it."

In addition to the provisions of this section, we must consider Section 4942 G. C., which covers counties containing registration cities and reads as follows:

"Section 4942.—In addition to the compensation provided in Section forty-eight hundred and twenty-two, each deputy state supervisor of elections in counties containing cities in which registration is required shall receive for his services the sum of five dollars for each election precinct in such city, and the clerk in such counties, in addition to his compensation so provided, shall receive for his services the sum of six dollars for each election precinct in such cities. The compensation so allowed such officers during any year shall be determined by the number of precincts in such city at the November election of the next preceding year. The compensation paid to each such deputy state supervisor under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred dollars each year and the compensation paid to the clerk under this section shall in no case be less than one hundred twenty-five dollars each year. The additional compensation provided by this section shall be paid monthly from the city treasury on warrants drawn by the city auditor upon vouchers signed by the chief deputy and clerk of the board."

Section 4943 G. C. provides a maximum compensation which may be paid to each deputy state supervisor of elections under the two sections above quoted. This section before its amendment provided in part as follows:

"Section 4943.—* * * In counties containing cities having a population of fifty thousand and less than seventy-five thousand, each deputy state supervisor, seven hundred fifty dollars and the clerk, nine hundred dollars;

In counties containing cities having a population of twenty-five thousand and less than fifty thousand, each deputy state supervisor, six hundred fifty dollars, and the clerk, eight hundred fifty dollars; * * *."

This section as amended (107 O. L. 684) reads in part as follows:

"In counties containing cities having a population of fifty thousand and less than seventy-five thousand, each deputy state supervisor, twelve hundred dollars and the clerk fifteen hundred dollars.

In counties containing cities having a population of twenty-five thousand and less than fifty thousand, each deputy state supervisor, eleven hundred dollars, and the clerk fourteen hundred dollars."

It will be seen that the section as amended raises the maximum salary which may be received by members of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections in those counties containing cities with a population between fifty and seventy-five thousand, from seven hundred fifty to twelve hundred dollars, and in the counties having cities of a population between twenty-five and fifty thousand, from six hundred fifty to eleven hundred dollars.

The question is whether those members of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections who were in office at the time this amendment became effective would be entitled to draw this maximum salary as provided for in the amendment. or whether they would be limited to the maximum salary provided for in the section as it stood at the time of their appointment.

We will first consider the nature of the compensation which is received by the deputy state supervisors of elections, in order to determine whether it is a salary or compensation only, for the reason that said Section 20 of Article II provides that:

> "* * * no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished."

The fundamental and basic compensation of these offices is not changed. Section 4822 G. C., which fixes the compensation of these offices at three dollars for each election precinct, is not amended.

Section 4942 G. C., fixing the compensation of said officers in those counties having registration cities at five dollars for each election precinct in said cities, is not changed or amended.

The only change that is made is to the effect that the maximum compensation which may be received under said two sections is in certain cases increased. It must be further noted that these persons do not receive a fixed and definite salary for services rendered during a fixed term, but receive compensation based upon the number of precincts in the county and in registration cities, or in other words they receive a compensation to be determined by the services they render. The greater the number of precincts in any county and in any registration city in the county, the greater would be the services rendered by the members of the board.

In State ex rel. Taylor vs. Carlisle, et al., 3 O. N. P. (N. S.) 544, the court was passing upon a question somewhat similar to the one now under consideration. In that case the legislature had increased the compensation of county commissioners of Franklin county from $2,000.00 to $3,500.00 per annum. The compensation of the county commissioners for any one year was to be determined by the amount of the tax duplicate in each county for real and personal property. Judge Evans, in rendering the opinion in this case, held that this did not come within the inhibition of Section 20 Article II of the Constitution, upon two grounds, viz., because the law under which the county commissioners had formerly drawn compensation was unconstitutional and void and hence in reality there was no law fixing the compensation of county commissioners until the amended act was passed. This practically disposed of the case, but Judge Evans went further and made the following suggestion in the opinion (p. 548):

> "Another consideraton of this question is whether the amended act of 1904 provides for a salary such as comes within the inhibition of said Article II, Section 20 of the Constitution.
> The act does not provide for any definite fixed salary. The compensation depends on the aggregate of the tax duplicate from year to year. It may be less one year and greater another, depending on the variation of the tax duplicate, and the amount from one year to another can not be determined until December of each year when the aggregate is ascertained."

He based this statement upon the holding of our supreme court in Thompson, ex rel. vs. Phillips, 12 O. S. 617. In this case the court was passing upon the question we have before us, as it pertained to a county auditor whose compensation was not a fixed sum for a definite period of time, but was based upon the tax duplicate—that is, on the amount of services rendered by the county auditor in any one year. This was a per curiam opinion and reads as follows (pages 617-8):

> "The relator, to show that he is not affected by the act of April 9, 1861, relies on the following section of the constitution:
> 'The general assembly in cases not provided for in this constitution, shall fix the term of office and the compensation of all officers, but no change therein shall affect the salary of any officer during his existing term, unless the office be abolished.' Section 20, Article II.

It is manifest, from the change of expression in the two clauses of the section, that the word 'salary' was not used in a general sense, embracing any compensation fixed for an officer, but in its limited sense, of an annual or periodical payment for services—a payment dependent on the time, and not on the amount of the services rendered. Where the compensation, as in this case, is to be ascertained by a percentage on the amount of money received and disbursed, we think it is not a salary within the meaning of the section of the constitution."

Hence it is my view that from the holdings of the courts in the two cases above quoted, and especially in the latter, and the fact that the basic compensation of the deputy state supervisors of elections has not been changed, but that merely the maximum which may be received under the sections providing a basic compensation is increased, said members of the boards of deputy state supervisors of elections do not come within the prohibition of Section 20 of Article II of the Constitution, and that they would be entitled to draw the compensation fixed in said amended Section 4943, supra, even though they were holding said office at the time said change became effective.

I am not passing upon whether or not members of boards of deputy state supervisors of elections are officers. They have many of the indicia of officers. They have a fixed term, take an oath very much the same as that taken by officers generally and they perform many sovereign and independent functions of the state, and one might readily conclude they are officers; but the court in State ex rel. vs. Craig, et. al., 8 O. N. P. 148, held they are not officers, the syllabus in said case reading as follows:

"The deputy state supervisors of elections are not officers within the legal definition of that term and though their jurisdiction may be coterminous with that of the county, they are not county officers.

Hence we note that this court held that said members are not officers. If this be accepted as authority, they would not come within the prohibition set out in Section 20 of Article II of the Constitution, for the reason that they are employes and not officers. But however this may be, it is my view they would not come within said prohibition because they receive compensation and not a salary.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE COVERING LOTS 18, 19, 20 AND 21 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 20, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lots of lands located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and state of Ohio, and described as follows:

Beings lots No. 18, 19, 20 and 21 of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof of the record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and as it applies to lots No. 19, 20 and 21 I find no material defects in the chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby. In reference to said lots, said abstract does not show any liens or incumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918, which is small in amount and still unpaid. It is true there is a suit pending in the court of common pleas of Franklin county, Ohio, styled Rhoda J. Sells vs. The Kroger Grocery and Baking Company, for money only to the amount of $1,151.56. At best, possibly the plaintiff would be liable for nothing more than costs in this case if the suit should terminate against her and therefore said suit is not of any great moment.

I am therefore of the opinion that said abstract discloses on December 2, 1918, a good title in said lots 19, 20 and 21, in Rhoda J. Sells and Mary K. Sells Bower.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you, without passing favorably upon the same, in so far as it applies to lot No. 18. There are defects in connection with the title to this lot which it seems to me should be corrected before the state accepts title to the same.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF STATE—AS CUSTODIAN OF INSURANCE FUND SHOULD GIVE SINGLE BOND.

Under Section 1465-56a G. C. the treasurer of state should give a single bond in the amount fixed by the governor and not give a number of bonds for said sum so fixed.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 21, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The State Treasurer-Elect, Hon. Rudolph W. Archer, has submitted to me four separate and distinct bonds, each in the sum of $25,000.00, said bonds being signed by various bonding companies as sureties. These bonds are given to comply with the provisions of Section 1456-56a G. C. and are conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as custodian of the state insurance fund. This section reads as follows:

"Section 1465-56a.—The treasurer of state shall give a separate and additional bond, in such amount as may be fixed by the governor, and with sureties to his approval, conditioned for the faithful performance of his duties as custodian of the state insurance fund herein provided for. Such bond shall be deposited with the secretary of state and kept in his office."

Upon inquiry I find that the governor has fixed the amount of the bond under this section at $100,000.00. Hence, in so far as this feature is concerned, the bonds comply with the provisions of said Section 1465-56a G. C.

However, I desire to call attention to an opinion rendered by my predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, found in Volume I, Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, p. 320. In this opinion Mr. Turner was passing upon whether the state librarian could give two bonds of $5,000,00 each, in compliance with a statute which required a bond of $10,000.00. This section was Section 790 G. C. and read as follows:

> "Before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, the librarian and each assistant shall give bond to the state, the former in the sum of ten thousand dollars, and the latter in the sum of one thousand dollars, with two or more sureties approved by the board of library commissioners, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. Such bond, with the approval of the board and the oath of office indorsed thereon, shall be deposited with the secretary of state and kept in his office."

In passing upon this question Mr. Turner held as follows (p. 321):

> "It is my opinion that in enacting Section 790 of the General Code, as amended, the legislature intended that one bond for ten thousand dollars with two or more sureties should be given, and it would therefore not be in accordance with law to accept two bonds of five thousand dollars each, as suggested by Mr. Galbreath in his letter.
> I have to advise you, therefore, that unless the bond of the librarian submitted to you for your approval is in the sum of ten thousand dollars and contains the names of at least two sureties, if a personal bond, or a surety company under Section 9573 of the General Code, the same should not be approved by you."

When the language of Section 1465-56a G. C. is compared with that of Section 790 G. C., it will be noted that there is very little difference in the two sections. Section 1465-56a G. C. is even more susceptible of the construction given by Mr. Turner than is Section 790. Section 1465-56a provides that "the treasurer of state shall give a separate and additional bond."

It is my opinion that the conclusion reached by Mr. Turner should be followed and that you would not therefore be justified in law in approving the bond of Mr. Archer in compliance with Section 1465-56a G. C., unless a single bond is submitted in the sum of $100,000.00, with sufficient surety to meet your approval.

Inasmuch as the statute provides that the sureties on the bond must be approved by you as governor, I am addressing this opinion to you and am forwarding a copy of the same to Mr. Archer.

I am enclosing the four bonds.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MADISON HOME—PROPERTY OF, CANNOT BE SOLD FREE OF TRUSTS.

The property located in Madison township, Lake county, Ohio, sold to the National Women's Relief Corps is burdened with the trusts imposed upon it in said deeds to said Relief Corps. It therefore cannot be sold so as to eliminate said trust conditions.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication, signed by your executive clerk, which reads as follows:

"The examiner from the bureau of accounting in a report filed with the governor has recommended that the Madison Home in Lake county be abolished and the inmates taken care of in some other institution. The expenses of operation are heavy and the number of inmates constantly growing smaller, there being at the present time but twenty-seven.

Before making any recommendations to the legislature, the governor would like to have an opinion from your office on the following questions:

(1) Can the property on which the Madison Home is located be legally sold? We understand that the deed made to the state grantors restricts the use of the land to certain charitable purposes.

(2) If the property can be legally sold, what steps will it be necessary to take?"

There are a number of facts which must be taken into consideration, in answering your questions.

On March 5, 1914, the National Women's Relief Corps deeded to the State of Ohio the fifteen acres located in Madison township, Lake county, Ohio, by warranty deed. This land was made up of three tracts, containing respectively two acres, 98 rods, seven acres, 62 rods and five acres.

In connection with this deed made to the state of Ohio by the National Women's Relief Corps, we must also consider the manner in which said National Women's Relief Corps acquired title to this same property.

On July 11, 1890, the trustees of Madison Seminary deeded to the National Women's Relief Corps the two acres, 98 rods contained in the deed to the state, by a warranty deed, for certain uses and purposes therein set out, viz:

"as a home for army nurses of the Civil war, who by reason of age or disability are unable to support themselves, dependents or widows of Union veterans, disabled veterans with their wives under such regulations and instructions as the National Convention of the Women's Relief Corps from time to time may give."

On July 20, 1892, the same grantor deeded the same premises to the same grantee, modifying to a slight extent the trust to which the property should be devoted and with this additional provision:

"When the National Women's Relief Corps shall have ceased to exist as an organization, the said premises shall pass to and become the property of the state of Ohio, in trust for some benevolent or charitable use, in the manner, under the rules and regulations and upon the terms and conditions which may be prescribed by the General Assembly."

On July 15, 1890, C. M. Gillett deeded to the National Women's Relief Corps, by warranty deed, the seven acres, 62 rods contained in the deed to the state of Ohio from the Women's National Relief Corps. This deed contained the same language as that set out in the deed made by the trustees of Madison Seminary to the Relief Corps.

On July 30, 1892, the said C. M. Gillett made another deed to the same grantee for the same premises, and modified to some extent the trust which was imposed upon the property so granted and with the following additional condition:

"* * * so long as the National Women's Relief Corps shall exist as an organized society, and when it shall have ceased to exist as an organization, then unto the state of Ohio."

In the habendum clause of this deed we find the following:

> "When the National Women's Relief Corps shall have ceased to exist as an organization, the said premises shall pass to and become the property of the state of Ohio, in trust for some benevolent or charitable use, in the manner, under the rules and regulations and upon the terms and conditions which may be prescribed by the General Assembly."

On May 25, 1894, S. Lee Colby and others deeded to the National Women's Relief Corps the five acres of land set out in the deed to the state of Ohio from the Relief Corps, with the same trust imposed upon the land as that found in the deeds above set out, but with this additional provision:

> "* * * but nothing herein is intended to restrict the ownership of said grantee—but that it shall, through its own proper officers, have the full right to sell the same, or to make such other disposition thereof, as the national convention of said National Women's Relief Corps may, by its action, legally determine."

On account of this last quoted matter it can safely be asserted that the title to the five acres is vested in the state of Ohio absolutely, with no trust imposed upon it, especially in so far as the deeds themselves are concerned.

But what can be said in reference to the other two deeds, in which certain trusts were imposed upon the land deeded, so long as the National Women's Relief Corps should be in existence, and after that passing to the state of Ohio with certain trusts imposed upon said property?

It is my view that the grantors to the National Women's Relief Corps have no interest in this property. The trust imposed upon the property is neither a condition precedent nor a condition subsequent, so that if the property should no longer be used for the purposes for which it was deeded in trust, it would revert to the original grantors. This is clear from the finding of the court in Watterson, Trustee, vs. Ury. et al., 5 C. C. 347, and Methodist Episcopal Church of Cincinnati vs. Gamble, 4 C. C. (N. S.) 45.

However, we have the further proposition to consider as to whether the property now held by the state of Ohio can be sold and the trusts, which were imposed upon said property by the grantors to the National Women's Relief Corps, eliminated. I call your attention to an act found in 97 O. L. 69, entitled:

> "An act to provide for the establishment and maintenance of a home for indigent ex-soldiers, sailors, and marines of Ohio, with their wives and widows of ex-soldiers and marines and army nurses."

This act was passed on April 5, 1904. It is now found in the General Code as Sections 1919 to 1925 inclusive. Section 1 of the act, as originally passed, read as follows:

> "Section 1.—That there shall be established at Madison, Lake county, state of Ohio, on a tract of land containing fifteen acres which has been deeded to the state of Ohio by the National Women's Relief Corps of the United States, the title to which in the state has been approved by the attorney-general of the state of Ohio, an institution under the name of The Home of the Ohio Soldiers, Sailors, Marines, and their Wives, Mothers and Widows; and Army Nurses. Provided that the benefits of this act shall not extend to persons who are now the inmates of any home or institution established by the state or national government for the care of soldiers, sailors and marines, and provided further that the present inmates of said Madison Ohio Home shall be entitled to all the benefits of this act."

It can be readily seen that this act was passed as a result of the deed made by the National Women's Relief Corps to the state of Ohio, in order to carry out the trust provisions found in the deeds made to the National Women's Relief Corps.

In view of all the above, the question is, could the state of Ohio sell this property and thus eliminate the trusts which were imposed upon the property when it was deeded to the Relief Corps? As stated above I do not feel that the grantors of this property could object to such a course as this being pursued by the state of Ohio. They made a deed in fee simple without any conditions of reversion attached to it. But the question remains whether the public has such an interest in this property that a court of equity would protect it and compel the state to carry out the uses and purposes for which this property was deeded, or the state's grantee, if the state should sell.

Baldwin, et al. vs. Atwood, 23 Conn. 367 is a case in which the trusts imposed upon certain lands were very similar to those under consideration. The syllabus in this case reads as follows:

"Where a deed of land stated in the premises that the land was conveyed 'in trust, for the uses and purposes hereinafter mentioned,' and in the habendum, that the grantees were 'to have and to hold said land in trust, that they shall at all times forever hereafter permit such ministers and teachers belonging to the Methodist Episcopal church in the United States of America, as shall be duly authorized, from time to time, by the general conference of the ministers and teachers of said church, or by the annual conference authorized by the general conference, to preach and expound God's holy word in the house, or place of worship, which has been erected on said land for the use of the members of said church;' and said deed subsequently prescribed the mode of supplying trustees in the place of the grantees, who might die or cease to be members of the church, for whose benefit the grant was made, in further trust and confidence; it was held, that such deed was not to be construed as a deed on condition, in which case the breach of it would be followed by a forfeiture of the estate, but as a deed in trust, cognizable in chancery.

Therefore, where the land described in such deed was afterwards conveyed, with the consent of the cestuis que trust, and sold by the trustees for other purposes, it was held, that such disposition did not operate as a forfeiture of the estate to the heirs of the grantor."

In the opinion the court uses the following language (p. 371):

"The defendant, however, insists that, by the just construction of the language used in this conveyance, in reference to the use to which the property was to be appropriated, it was not the intention of the parties, that the estate granted should be defeated by the use of it for other purposes, and that therefore no conditional estate was granted, but that it was an absolute grant, creating only a trust for the purpose specified, to be enforced, if not complied with, by a court of equity, but not followed, in case of a violation of such trust, by a forfeiture of the legal estate granted, or a reverter of it to the heirs of the grantor."

In Barclay, et al., vs. Howell's Lessee, 6 Peters Rep. 498, in the opinion on p. 507, the court uses the following language:

> "If this ground had been dedicated for a particular purpose, and the city authorities had appropriated it to an entirely different purpose; it might afford ground for the interference of a court of chancery, to compel a specific execution of the trust, by restraining the corporation, or by causing the removal of obstructions. But, even in such a case, the property dedicated would not revert to the original owner."

From all the above it is my opinion that the state of Ohio has no authority to sell the land in question and thus defeat the trusts which were imposed upon the land in the deeds made to the National Women's Relief Corps, and that a court of equity might interfere and compel the owner of the property, whether it be the state or the state's grantee, to carry out the trusts imposed upon it under said deeds. This, as said before, does not apply to the five acre tract, inasmuch as the grantee of said tract was given full power and authority in the deed to sell, but it does apply to the other two tracts.

On March 17, 1908, Hon. Wade H. Ellis rendered an opinion in reference to this same transaction, in which he found that the state would be obliged to devote the land to some charitable use, similar to that created in the deeds. He used the following language in said opinion:

> "* * * This procedure would accomplish the result sought to be accomplished by the supplementary deeds above described and would give the state of Ohio a perfect title in fee simple to the premises, subject, however, to the trust created by the terms of the first deeds from the seminary trustees and Gillett respectively. The state would be obliged to devote the land to some charitable use similar to that created by the first two deeds above mentioned.
> In my opinion the use to which the property is now being put under Sections 674-16, et seq., above referred to, is such a use as conforms to the terms of the trust imposed upon the property."

In passing I might say that I do not see how the two supplementary deeds above set out could have any effect upon the title granted in the deeds first made by the seminary and by Gillett, but even if we should so hold, it must be remembered that a certain trust was imposed upon this land in the deeds first made by the seminary and by Gillett, and that therefore the National Women's Relief Corps could not sell the land and defeat the trusts, in so far as the public is concerned. Neither do I know of any principle whereby a court might free this property from said trust conditions. In Robbins et al., vs. Smith, Admr. et al., 72 O. S. 1, the court say in the first branch of the syllabus:

> "A trust created by will, the provisions of which are not repugnant to law or contrary to public policy, will not be decreed terminated where the objects of the trust have not been fully accomplished and their accomplishment has not been made impossible."

In the opinion, on page 21, the court say:

"It is enough to say that this purpose was a lawful one, and that it is not the duty of courts to defeat it, but to respect and enforce it."

Hence, at least until the trust conditions set out in the deeds first made to the National Women's Relief Corps by the seminary and by Gillett have been fulfilled, the state cannot deed said lands and defeat said trusts.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND OF STATE TREASURER.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1918.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—The State Treasurer-Elect, Hon. Rudolph W. Archer, has submitted to me for my opinion a bond signed by him as principal, and the Chicago Bonding and Insurance company as surety, in the sum of $600,000.00, for the faithful discharge of the duties imposed upon him by law as such state treasurer.

Section 297 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"Before entering upon the discharge of the duties of his office, the treasurer of state shall give a bond to the state in the sum of six hundred thousand dollars with twelve or more sureties approved by the governor, conditioned for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office. * * *."

Section 9571 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"When a bond, recognizance or undertaking is required or permitted by law, with one or more sureties, its execution or the guaranteeing thereof, as the case may be, as sole surety, by a company authorized to guarantee the fidelity of persons holding places of public or private trust, to guarantee the performance of contracts other than insurance policies, and to execute and guarantee bonds and undertakings in actions or proceedings or by law allowed is sufficient, * * *."

Attached to the bond is a certificate of the superintendent of insurance, Hon. W. H. Tomlinson, setting forth that the Chicago Bonding and Insurance company has qualified to transact business in the state of Ohio.

Hence, so far as I am able to see, this bond is correct in form and legal in all respects.

Inasmuch as the statute provides that the sureties must be approved by the governor, I am forwarding the bond to you with this opinion, for your consideration, and will forward a copy of the opinion to Mr. Archer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE VILLAGE OF BROOKVILLE. MONTGOMERY COUNTY, OHIO—$10,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Brookville, Montgomery county, Ohio, in the sum of $10,000, in anticipation of the collection of assessments for the improvement of Maple street from Hayes avenue to Perry street in said village.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the council of the village of Brookville and of other officers relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind. I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said village, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF FINAL RESOLUTIONS FOR ROAD IMPROVEMENTS IN KNOX COUNTY.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter of December 20, in which you enclose, for my approval, final resolutions for the following named improvements:

Columbus-Wooster Road—I. C. H. No. 24, Section L, Knox county, type A, petition No. 3150.

Columbus-Wooster Road—I. C. H. No. 24, Section L, Knox county, type B, petition No. 3150.

I have carefully examined said resolutions, find them correct in form and legal and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon in accordance with the provisions of Section 1218 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF THE VILLAGE OF COAL GROVE, OHIO—$5,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Coal Grove, Ohio, in the sum of $5,000.00, for the purpose of funding certain indebtedness of said village.

I have examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the council of the village of Coal Grove, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds, and as a result of such examination I find that I am compelled to disapprove said issue specifically for the reason that the ordinance of council providing for said issue of bonds was not passed in the manner required by law.

Section 4224 of the General Code provides, among other things, that no ordinance of a general nature shall be passed unless it has been fully and distinctly read on three different days and that with respect to such ordinance there shall be no authority to dispense with this rule except by a three-fourths' vote of all elected members of council.

The ordinance here in question, which is clearly one of a general nature, was not read on three different days but was passed on an attempted suspension of the rule requiring the ordinance to be read on three different days. Two of the six elected members of the council of the village were absent from the meeting at which this ordinance was passed, and the motion to suspend the rule requiring the ordinance to be read on three different days received the affirmative vote of but four members of council. It does not require any argument to show that the vote of four councilmen out of an elected membership of six does not meet the requirement of the section of the General Code above noted, that said rule may be suspended on the vote of three-fourths of the elected members of council. In other words, under the provisions of this section where the council has an elected membership of six it requires a vote of at least five members in order to suspend the rule requiring ordinances to be read on three different days.

It follows from what has been said above that the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds was not legally passed and that said issue for this reason should be and hereby is disapproved.

I hardly need say that I regret very much the situation here presented and the necessity that I am under of disapproving this bond issue. Some weeks ago I was required to disapprove the proceedings of the council of this village providing for an issue of bonds for the above stated purpose specifically for the reason that the ordinance providing for said issue of bonds did not make provision for an annual levy of taxes for interest and sinking fund purposes, as required by the state constitution. I am aware that these disapprovals of said bond issue for the above stated purpose, and the resultant delay to the village officials in obtaining the proceeds of the contemplated bond issue for the purpose of meeting the over-due indebtedness of the village, may be the cause of considerable embarrassment both to the village authorities and to those to whom the village is indebted. However, unless the members of the council of this village take interest enough in its proceedings to attend the meetings of council and see that its proceedings are conducted in substantial compliance with the provisions of statute, it can not be expected that a public official called upon to pass on such proceedings can do otherwise than disapprove the same.

I am sending you herewith the transcript of proceedings so that it may be returned to the village officials.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—WHERE LAND WHICH TESTATOR HAD CONTRACTED TO SELL IS DEVISED—PASSES AS PERSONAL PROPERTY—AND TAX THEREON ORIGINATES WHERE TESTATOR DOMICILED AT TIME OF DEATH.

L. S. died testate a resident of the city of Circleville; shortly previous to his death he had by written contract sold to C. L. a farm situate in Washington township, Pickaway county; said contract was to be completed by the execution and delivery of a deed in 1919; a small part of the consideration was paid at the time of the contract and the remainder was not due until after the testator's death:

HELD: For collateral inheritance tax purposes the above transaction left in the testator as a subject of succession personal property, viz: the right to receive the purchase money of the real estate; and the collateral inheritance tax on succession to such property originated in the city of Circleville.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 23, 1918.

HON. E. A. BROWN, Probate Judge, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have previously acknowledged receipt of your letter of November 9 requesting my opinion upon the following questions:

"G. S. L. died June 24, 1918, testate, a resident of the city of Circleville. His will was probated, H. S. L. appointed executor, an inventory and appraisement of his estate was made and returned showing an estate valued at $39,023.97. On May 27, 1918, said G. S. L., by written contract, sold to C. F. and I. C. L. a farm containing 119.29 acres of land, situate in Washington township, Pickaway county, Ohio, for a consideration of $26,800.00, said contract to be completed by the execution and delivery of the deed on March 1, 1919, and the consideration money paid as follows: $1,000.00 in cash in hand, $9,000.00 on March 1, 1919, the remainder to be paid in two equal payments, one-half due in one year from March 1, 1919, and one-half due in two years from March 1, 1919, evidenced by two notes secured by mortgage on said premises.

Decedent died leaving no lineal descendants or adopted child; all property, subject to debts, subject to collateral inheritance tax.

Executor, H. S. L., is now ready to pay said tax.

Question 1: As to proceeds of farm, where does said tax originate as provided by Section 5331 G. C.?

Question 2: If tax originates in Washington township, is said fund proportionately liable for specific bequests, debts, costs of administration, etc.?

I am at a loss to know what kind of an order to make to the auditor of our county because there is a possibility that the purchaser, by reason of death or otherwise, may not be able to carry out his contract, and therefore, the title would remain in the estate."

You do not submit a copy of the last will and testament which gives rise to the questions; nor do you state whether or not the will was executed before the land was sold. However, I find it possible to answer your questions generally without the specific facts before me.

The supreme court of this state has repeatedly considered the nature of the equitable property rights resulting from the making of a specifically enforceable executory contract to convey real estate.

Manley vs. Hunt, 1 Ohio, 258. Butler vs. Brown, 5 O. S. 211. Jaeger vs. Rardy, 48 O. S. 335. Lefferson vs. Dallas, 20 O. S. 68. Ranney vs. Hardy, 43 O. S., 157. Bank vs. Logue, 89 O. S. 288.

Nowhere, however, is what might be termed the "Ohio doctrine" on this point more clearly stated than in Coggshall vs. Marine Bank, 63 O. S. 88. The following quotation from the syllabus in that case will show the legal principles therein laid down and the character of the question before the court:

"1. The interest of the vendee of land, before conveyance, is an equitable estate in the land, equal to the amount of the purchase money paid, and which, upon full payment, may ripen into a complete equity entitling him to a conveyance of the legal title according to the terms of the contract, and it is of these rights that notice is given to all the world by the possession of the vendee.

2. The interest of the vendor is not that of a mere naked trustee for the vendee, but he holds not only the legal title, but a beneficial estate in the lands to the extent of the unpaid purchase money.

3. Such interest of the vendor is subject to levy by attachment on the land, and it is not essential that garnishee process be served on the vendee."

In the opinion, per Spear, J., at pages 94 et seq., the following language is used:

"That, in such case, the vendee is the beneficial owner to the extent of the purchase money paid, and that the vendor holds the legal title in trust for the purchaser, subject to the duty of conveying the legal title on compliance with the terms of the contract by the vendee, is, we suppose, not disputed anywhere. The position of the vendor is sometimes described as that of a trustee, and it is declared, * * * that the lands of a cestui que trust cannot be taken for the debts of the trustee. * * * in a number of cases, * * * color is given to the conclusion that the rule applies in all cases of vendor and vendee. * * *

We are of the opinion that the broad language of the earlier cases, and of some text books, is not in accord with later holdings, nor with reason. The misapprehension arises, as we think, in assuming that the vendor is a mere naked trustee. Such in reality is not his position. * * The rule undoubtedly is that, while, in a general sense, the vendor holds the legal title in trust, yet so long as any purchase money remains unpaid, he still retains a personal right and interest in the land, and cannot be compelled to part with the title except upon full compliance by the purchaser with the terms of the contract. * * * Every just right of the vendee is protected by the rule that his ownership extends to the amount of the purchase money paid, and the right to receive a deed upon payment of the balance of the purchase money in compliance with the contract. Possession by the purchaser gives notice of his right to all the world, and of nothing more. Record title being in the vendor, his creditors are justified in treating the land as his save only as to the rights of the vendee, and so long as the latter is protected in his rights under the contract and his possession, he cannot reasonably object to creditors of the vendor collecting their debts, * * *."

It would seem, therefore, that the situation in the case described by you as it existed prior to the death of the testator was such as that beneficial interests in the land itself were owned both by the testator and by the vendees. The Ohio cases which have been cited, however, deal only with such matters as executions and attachments and, in my opinion, the conclusions laid down by the court must be limited to the facts before it in such cases; for these principles will not serve to solve a case where the question as to who is the owner of the land as between the two must necessarily be solved. For example, suppose that after the making of an enforceable executory contract of this character, the buildings and improvements which were on the land at the time of the sale were destroyed and the value of the land itself were reduced to almost nothing by some disastrous flood or fire: in that case we would have to say that either the vendor or the vendee should bear the loss, or that they should share it in the proportions represented by the unpaid and the paid parts of the agreed purchase price, respectively.

However, even for purposes of attachment the Ohio rule is unsatisfactory, as the following quotation from Jaeger vs. Hardy, supra, made with approval in Coggshall vs. Marine Bank, supra, will upon reflection demonstrate:

"A vendor's interest, before conveyance, 'is the legal title, and a beneficial estate in the lands to the extent of the unpaid purchase money,' while that of the vendee is 'an equitable estate in the land equal to the amount of the purchase money paid by him.'"

But suppose the land is worth more than the agreed purchase price: this rule furnishes no solution to the question as to whether it is the creditors of the vendor or those of the vendee who can reach the excess; nor, conversely, does it answer the question, in case of attachments against the interests of both to the full extent of the unpaid purchase money in the one case and the paid purchase money in the other, and in the event that the land should sell for less than the agreed price, what the respective rights of the creditors of the vendor and those of the vendee might be.

A case somewhat remotely bearing upon the first of these above suggested problems is Gilbert vs. Port, 28 O. S. 276. I will not quote from this case, but it at least tends to establish the conclusion that the loss in case of destruction of property must fall upon the vendee. The opinion does quote with approval from Sugden on Venders, 8 Am. ed. (291), ch. 7, sec. 2, in part, as follows:

"A vendee, being equitable owner of the estate from the time of the contract for sale, must pay the consideration for it, although the estate itself be destroyed between the agreement and the conveyance; and, on the other hand, he will be entitled to any benefit which may accrue to the estate in the interim. * * *."

It seems to me that what our supreme court meant to say in these attachment and execution cases was that the vendor under the circumstances with which we are dealing, though he retains the legal title and therefore needs no affirmative relief for the enforcement of his equitable rights, does have such equitable rights in the nature of a vendor's lien to the extent of the unpaid purchase money. In other words, his equitable rights are no different than they would be if he had actually conveyed the estate, but the purchase money had not been paid. As between the parties he would have a lien on the premises which he might enforce by appropriate remedies; but he does not need such remedies when he retains the legal title. But Coggshall vs. Marine Bank is of service in this case because of the concessions made in the opinion as to the effect of such an executory contract of sale for purposes of inheritance and testamentary disposition. This part of the opinion, beginning at page 98 of the report, is as follows:

> "But it is insisted that the question here discussed is controlled by the consideration that the interest of the purchaser, in case of death, would descend to the heirs and not to the legal representative, while, in case of death of the vendor, his interest would pass to his legal representative and not to his heirs. It is true that, under our statutes, an equity in lands may be the subject of devise, and a perfect equity in lands held by an intestate, passes to his heirs by descent; and it is true, further, that by force of the statute, money due as purchase money passes to the personal representative, and he may, upon receipt of it, obtain authority to deed to the purchaser. So, too, the personal representative may, in case the personal property is insufficient to pay all debts, resort to all real estate in which the intestate had an interest in order to make up the deficiency. The authority given is to sell the real estate, and that is the interest one has in lands, tenements or hereditaments. This may, under the statute, be legal or equitable or both, although under our former practice the test was that if it be such an interest as could be enforced in a court of law, it was legal interest or estate, but if such as could be enforced only in a court of chancery, it was an equitable interest or estate. But the instances above given are only examples, of which many are found in the course of the law, where, for some purposes real estate is treated as personalty, and personalty as real estate. In general these rules are resorted to in order to the more easily work out the rights of the parties in respect to descents and distributions, and the more convenient administration of estates of intestates, but they cannot, we think, be regarded as changing the essential character of the different kinds of estates in land; nor do they, as we think, support the contention urged by counsel, that the interest of the vendor in this case is such as to be beyond the reach of levy by execution or attachment."

With these comments as to the nature of the vendor's interest while the transaction remains inter vivos and its character for purpose of succession at his death, it appears to me that we may safely say that the devisee of the land in the case about which you inquire took through the will the mere legal title thereof which was no more than security for the payment of the unpaid purchase money.

In short, the testator by his act inter vivos had divested himself, either completely or to a considerable extent, of the beneficial interest in the land, being entitled merely to hold the legal title until such time and upon the performance of such acts as under the contract would perfect the right of the vendees to call for a deed. It is obvious therefore that such interest in the land as of which the testator had been originally possessed but of which he had divested himself prior to his death could not pass by his will to any one because he did not have it; yet the will, whether made before or after the contract of sale was executed, operates perfectly to pass what the testator did retain himself to such persons as he may have devised such interest.

See Sections 10556 and 10558 G. C. Kent vs. Mahaffey, 10 O. S. 204.

It follows from what has been said that the beneficial interests in the land to the extent existing at the death of the testator as determined by the terms of the contract of sale were then vested in the vendees, and, consequently, as interests in the land, they form no part of the vendor's estate, did not pass by the will (as previously stated) and could not be subject to any inheritance tax.

Instead of an interest in the land, as such, the vendor by his contract acquired the right to have the contract performed by the payment of money in installments. This right he could have enforced by suit for specific performance (assuming the contract to be so enforceable), which is essentially an action in personam. The vendee of a land contract might have under statutes which are found in this and other states a remedy substantially in rem as against a non-resident vendor; but it is both logically true and true in fact that the vendor, though entitled to specific performance, can not have the remedy without actual personal service on the vendee.

This right of the vendor to the money partakes of the character, then, of personal property; so that if the land had been devised to one person, and all the personal estate of the testator had been bequeathed to another and different person, the right to the proceeds of the land would have vested under such a will in the legatee of the personality, subject to the debts of the estate.

1 Jarman on Wills, 163: Citing: Farrar vs. Earl of Williston, 5 Beav. 1. Moor vs. Raisbeck, 12 Sin., 123. Knollys vs. Shepard, cited in Wall vs. Bright, 1 J. & W., 499.

These points being established, it would seem to follow without difficulty that the proceeds of the real estate, to which alone the inheritance tax could practically apply (the legal title of the land as passing to the devisee being presumably worthless as a subject of appraisement), would partake of the same character as other personal assets of the testator and would be taxable for general purposes at the testator's usual place of residence or domicile on the principle that movable things follow the person.

It is by no means clear, however, that this result does follow. The jural relations and rights established by the analysis above attempted have sometimes been put under the heading of "equitable conversion," although the process is not the same as the typical case of equitable conversion by will resulting from a devise to executors or others coupled with a direction to sell the land and convert it into personal property. If, however, the situation as developed is to be governed by principles which do apply in a typical case of equitable conversion, note must be taken of decisions in which it has been held that the principles of equitable conversion can not be employed in the application of the inheritance tax law. The leading case so holding is In re Wolcott's Estate, 157 N. Y. Supp. 268. I speak of this decision as the leading case because though that of a mere surrogate's court it is characterized by careful reasoning. In this case the decedent, who was a resident of New York, at the time of his death held the legal title to certain real estate in New Jersey which he had contracted to sell upon considrations payable in installments, just as in the instant case, delivery of the deed being, however, postponed until the last installment of the purchase price should be paid. The inheritance tax appraiser having included the amount unpaid on the land contracts at the time of decedent's death in the taxable assets of the latter's estate, the executors appealed to the surrogate's court, where their contention was sustained upon the following reasoning:

> "When real estate situated in a foreign state is owned by a resident of this state at the time of his death it is not subject to a transfer tax in this state. Matter of Swift, 137 N. Y. 77, * *; Keeney vs. New York, 222 U. S. 525, * * *. The question presented by this appeal, therefore, is whether the contract of sale * * * modified or changed his title to the real estate, so as to make his interest personal property for the purpose of taxation in this state. No proof of the statute law of New Jersey in the application to real estate held under a contract of sale was submitted to the appraiser. In this state the vendor is deemed in equity to stand seized of the land for the benefit of the purchaser, * * * but it has been held that the question of the jurisdiction of this state to impose a tax is one of fact and cannot be made to depend upon theories or fictions (Matter of Swift, supra, * * *). The actual form or character of the property at the date of a decedent's death determines its liability to taxation under the provisions of the tax law. * * * It has been held that where there is an equitable conversion of testator's real estate because of directions contained in the will the property will be regarded as real estate for the purpose of the transfer tax. Matter of Sutton, 3 App. Div. 208. * * *
> * * * the state comptroller contends that (there has been overlooked) * * * that part of subdivison 9 of Section 2672 of the Code which provides that 'moneys unpaid on contracts for the sale of land' shall go to the executors or administrators, to be applied and distributed as part of the personal property of the testate or intestate. In the matter under consideration the testator specifically devised to his children the various parcels of land in * * N. J., which he had contracted to sell. As the legal title to the land was in the decedent at the time of his death, his will transferred that title to his children. Our statutes can have no application to real estate situated in a foreign state; they cannot prescribe that the interest of the owner of real estate in a foreign state shall be personal property after such owner has executed a contract for the sale of the real estate. The section above referred to has reference to the administration of estates in this state and is designed to assist the executor or administrator in determining what part of the property of the decedent may be applied in liquidation of his indebtedness or distributed to the legatees or next of kin. While it may govern the action of an executor or administrator in the course of his administration of an estate, it can have no effect upon the nature of a decedent's title to real estate in a foreign state. Matter of Swift, supra, * * *. As the decedent held the legal title to the real estate in New Jersey at the time of his death, and as real estate situated in a foreign state is not subject to the provisions of our tax law, the appeal is sustained. * * *"

The converse of this decision is found in In re Stanton's Estate, 142 Mich. 491. This was an appeal from an order of the probate court determining the amount of the inheritance tax due from the estate of a testatrix who died a resident of New York, owning the legal title at least to real estate in Michigan which she had sold by executory contract to various parties. The court held that the succession to this real estate was taxable in Michigan and apparently subject to valuation at its full market value. The reasons for this decision are of peculiar interest. It appeared that the law of Michigan did not impose any inheritance tax upon the succession to real estate passing to direct relatives, and that all of the real estate did so pass under the will. It seems to be clear therefore—though not so specifically stated in the opinion—that the land which had been sold under contract was not subject, in respect of its succession, to the Michigan inheritance tax upon the theory that it was real estate located in Michigan. The following excerpt from the opinion seems to show this:

> "Counsel for the executor (claims that) * * * the precise character of the property owned by the vendor in a land contract may be said to be undetermined; that as real estate it passes in the case at bar to the children, and is not considered in levying the tax, while as personal estate it is valued. The point seems to be ruled, for this case, by the decision in City of Marquette vs. Iron Co., 132 Mich. 130."

Turning to the case cited by the court it will be found that it is a decision to the effect, as stated in the head-note, that

> "A contract for the sale of land at a specified price, with the usual forfeiture clauses, and an agreement that the vendee shall pay all taxes assessed upon the land, should be assessed as personal property." (Apparently for general property tax purposes.)
> "Under such contracts the purchaser is the equitable owner of the property."

In the body of the opinion the following language is used:

> "Defendant's counsel insists that the obligations in question are not credits. He argues that they should be classed with obligations to pay future rent upon existing leases, * * * but, in our judgment, they are clearly distinguishable. * * * In none of these cases is a credit contemplated. On the other hand, by the contracts under consideration * * the equitable title to the property therein described is at once transferred to the vendee. From the time these contracts are made, the vendor holds the legal title only as trustee for the vendee. * * * The vendor has, in effect, exchanged his property for the unconditional obligation of the vendee, the performance of which is secured by the retention of the legal title. The fact that the vendee, in the case of the land contract, may, when making his final payment, demand a conveyance, does not distinguish the obligation from that of a credit secured by a mortgage, as the mortgagor may, when making his final payment, demand a discharge of the mortgage. The obligations under consideration, therefore, resemble, * * * credits secured by mortgages. * * * they differ only in this: That the vendor has a remedy to enforce his rights which is not given to the mortgagee, namely, he may take immediate possession of his security. Such an inconsequential difference affords no ground for a legal distinction. * *"

It thus clearly appears, as I have stated, that the Michigan inheritance tax was sustained in the first of the last two cases from which quotation has been made, not on the ground that the succession was to land in Michigan, but that it was to personal property subject to the taxing jurisdiction of Michigan. The ground is that expressed in the language of the court in the same opinion, as follows:

"The statute is adopted * * * from the state of New York. * * And, as interpreted by the courts of New York, the design of the legislature to tax the transfer of every thing which it has the power to tax is found in the act. * * * a policy of general taxation, which recognizes, to some extent at least, the rule of universal succession and the theory of taxation of personal property, generally, at the domicile of the owner, is not logically controlling of the interpretation of a statute imposing a tax upon a right of succession or upon a transfer of property which can only be tangible and enforceable—be made effective—in the jurisdiction, and by virtue of the laws and institutions, of the situs of the property. A third reason is that, as a tax upon succession or transfer, uniformity of operation and an equal measure of the tax to the property of residents and non-residents can be, with no other construction, secured. There is property situated within the state, belonging to non-residents, which the state does not tax, generally, * * * though it might tax it * * *. Property of the same class owned by residents is taxed, generally."

In other words, the personal property in question was taxed as to its succession, not because it was physically in the state of Michigan,—which it could not be, having no physical existence at all,—nor because according to the policy of the general property tax laws of Michigan its situs as a subject of property taxation could be said to be in Michigan; but because it represented an obligation which could only be enforced in Michigan by an administrator appointed in that state. Hence it was subject to the taxing jurisdiction of Michigan, should Michigan choose to exercise that jurisdiction; and as Michigan had chosen to embrace within her inheritance tax all successions within her taxing jurisdiction the tax applied.

It will thus be seen that while the New York case and the Michigan case appear on the surface to be merely opposite applications of the same principle, they really proceed upon entirely different principles. In the New York case the real estate sold by the testator in his lifetime was regarded as real estate still, and because not located in New York the succession to it was held to be not taxable; and this in the face even of the statutory declaration of the general principle of law that the credit represented by the contract of sale is personal property. In the Michigan case the thing taxed was the credit represented by the contract of sale and it was taxed because it was personal property; for if the legal title to the land had been regarded as the thing to which the tax had attached the opposite result would have been reached.

The two cases may, however, be reconciled upon the principle that after all it is the law of the state where the land is located and where the vendees presumably reside which must determine the nature and quality of their respective obligations and the extent to which the contract of sale qualifies or affects the beneficial interest of the vendor in the property; and when the vendor dies, either testate or intestate, the quality of the interest represented by inheritances from him is in turn to be decided by the law of the state where the real property is situated. If that law determines that the entire beneficial interest in the land has vested in the vendee and the vendor's interest is no longer in the land but consists of a personal obligation running to him, that law, whether or not efficacious to confer jurisdiction back upon the state of the domicile of the testator (a point not actually decided in the New York case because of lack of proof as to the New Jersey law), is at least enough to confer taxing jurisdiction over the inheritance in the state whose law determines the quality of the succession.

The supreme court of Nebraska reached a result opposite to that arrived at by the Michigan court in the case of Dodge County vs. Burns, 131 N. W. 922; apparently upon the language of the statute which limited the incidence of the inheritance tax of that state to interests in property owned by non-residents "which property, or any part thereof, shall be within this state." Obviously, there is a difference between property which is in a state and property the succession to which is subject to the taxing jurisdiction of a state. It is very clear from a perusal of the decision of the Nebraska court, however, that it agrees with the Michigan court in regarding the right to the purchase money as personalty.

I say that a consideration of these cases has raised a doubt in my mind as to the answer to your first question because of their apparent holding to the effect that the doctrine of equitable conversion is not recognized in applying inheritance taxes, and because also where it is recognized, as it apparently is in the Michigan case, the resultant personal property is regarded as taxable, for inheritance tax purposes, at the place where the land is located. This difficulty, however, disappears upon reflection. All the cases which have been cited involved questions of conflict of laws and the jurisdiction of a state. No such question is presented by you. Unquestionably the law of Oho applies to the thing which is subject to inheritance taxation and which I have held to be the right to receive the proceeds of the sale of the land. There is therefore no question of conflict of law. The only question is as to the allocation of so much of the tax as represents this part of the estate for the purpose of our constitution and statute, which declare that a part of the proceeds of the tax shall go to the municipality or township "in which the tax originates." The exact meaning of this phrase remains unsettled by final judicial authority, and the question is in point of fact now pending in the courts. It has been the previous ruling of this department, however, that the test by which to determine the district in which a tax originates is furnished by applying principles of situs which are embodied in the statutes and the common law applicable to general property taxation. In other words, wherever the property the succession to which gives rise to the right of the state under the inheritance tax law to claim an exaction has its taxable situs for general property tax purposes, there the tax must be held to "originate." As pointed out by my predecessors who have considered this question, this rule, though open to criticism, is the only one which will afford any reasonable application to the statute.

Now I think it is clear that the credit for the unpaid purchase money has a taxable situs for general property tax purposes at the place where the testator was domiciled at his death. Rather, I should say that it had that situs at the death of the testator, that being the time as of which all legal relations which may be considered in applying the inheritance tax became fixed. I deem it unnecessary to cite statutes or authorities upon the elementary principle that in Ohio credits must be listed for taxation at the actual residence or domicile of the owner thereof.

Upon this reasoning, then, I arrive at the conclusion that the tax on the proceeds of the real estate originated in the city of Circleville, where the testator resided.

This statement answers your first question. From the form in which your second question is submitted I take it that the answer given to the first question makes it unnecessary for me to consider the second question.

In conclusion I note that you call attention to the possibility that the purchasers may not be able to carry out the contract. This possibility does not affect the legal aspect of the question. If the contract is legally enforceable it has the effect which I have described, though either or both parties by their subsequent acts may choose not to enforce it in the manner in which it might be enforced.

APPROVAL OF CONTRACT BETWEEN OHIO BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION AND THE FLEXSTONE CONSTRUCTION CO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 24, 1918.

Ohio Board of Administration, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You have submitted to me contract entered into by your board with the Flexstone Construction Co., an Ohio corporation with its principal place of business at Columbus, Ohio, said contract having been entered into on the 5th day of December, 1918, for the installation of approximately 21,723 square feet and 3,988 lineal feet of sanitary flooring at the State School for the Blind, for the sum of $8,644.00. At the same time you submitted bond securing same.

Having obtained from the Industrial Commission of Ohio a certificate that the said company has duly complied with the Workmen's Compensation Law and having received from the auditor of state a certificate to the effect that there is money available for this purpose, I have this day approved said contract and filed the same, together with the bond securing said contract, with the auditor of state.

I am herewith returning to you the balance of the papers submitted.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH McGHEE,
Attorney-General.

TREASURER OF STATE—MAY TURN OVER TO SUBORDINATE AMOUNT RECEIVED AS COMPENSATION FROM CONSERVANCY DISTRICT.

The treasurer of state may lawfully turn over to one of his subordinates who has done the work compensation in connecton with payment of the bonds and interest coupons of a conservancy district.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

HON. CHESTER E. BRYAN, Treasurer of State, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I acknowledge receipt of your letter of December 13, requesting my opinion upon the following question:

> "I am today in receipt of check for $300.00 of the Miami Conservancy District, Dayton, Ohio, payable to my order as treasurer of state, same being for six months salary in connection with the paying of interest coupons of the district and keeping records incident thereto.
> Section 47, 104 O. L. 40, says in part:
> 'Any expenses incurred in paying said bonds and interest thereon and reasonable compensation to the state treasurer for registering and paying same, shall be paid out of the other funds in the hands of the district treasurer and collected for the purpose of meeting the expenses of administration.'

I would like your opinion as to whether it is proper for me to endorse the above described check to my cashier, W. J. Hiler, who has handled all of the work in connection with the paying of the coupons.

Mr. Hiler is the only employe of this department who is under bond to me. I have thought it best to give him exclusive charge of the Miami Conservancy District funds, the accounting of which is necessarily handled as separate from the regular and established routine of this office."

In answer thereto I beg to advise that, in my opinion, you may lawfully dispose of the proceeds of the check mentioned by you in the manner described. The work in connection with the payment of the bonds and interest of a conservancy district is no part of the official duties of the cashier in the office of the treasurer of state. The law allows the treasurer of state extra compensation for doing this work. It does not presume that he must do it in his own proper person. He might employ for this purpose a person other than a regular member of his official force as treasurer of state.

As to whether or not one of the employes or subordinates in the treasurer of state's office might do such work for the treasurer of state without conflicting with his duties as such employe or impairing his usefulness in that capacity, the treasurer of state is the sole judge. By asking Mr. Hiler to do this work you have evidenced your judgment that he could take care of it without bringing about any such result. The compensation paid to you is yours and is between you and the conservancy district or is between you and the state of Ohio; you may do with it as you see fit; Mr. Hiler's right to receive it could be questioned only upon some such reason as that which has already been disposed of.

I answer your question therefore in the affirmative.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY TREASURER—CANNOT EMPLOY DELINQUENT TAX COLLECTOR.

The county treasurer cannot employ a person to collect delinquent taxes under authority of Section 5696 General Code. Opinion of Hon. Edward C. Turner, Attorney General, page 2026 of the Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, followed and adhered to.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918

HON. CALVIN D. SPITLER, Prosecuting Attorney, Tiffin, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of November 18, 1918, you submit the following inquiry:

"The question has arisen in this county as to whether under the provisions of Section 5696 G. C., if the county commissioners deem it necessary, they may authorize the treasurer to employ collectors to collect delinquent personal property taxes and whether such collector can be paid out of the county treasury, and I would like your opinion thereon.

It is my opinion that Section 5696 is broad enough to cover the employment of such collectors and the payment thereof out of the county treasury, but my attention has been called to Opinion No. 945 found at page 2026 of Volume 3 of the Opinions of the Attorney General for 1915, which seems to hold to the contrary, although Section 5696 is not expressly mentioned in the said Opinion No. 945."

Section 5696 General Code, to which you refer, provides as follows:

"The county commissioners, at each September session, shall cause the list of persons delinquent in the payment on personal property to be publicly read. If they deem it necessary, they may authorize the treasurer to employ collectors to collect such taxes or part thereof, prescribing the compensation of such collectors which shall be paid out of the county treasury. All such allowances shall be apportioned ratably by the county auditor among all the funds entitled to share in the distribution of such taxes."

You also call attention to the opinion of Hon. Edward C. Turner, Attorney General, at page 2026 of the Opinions of the Attorney General for the year 1915, wherein the first branch of the syllabus reads:

"The county treasurer may not contract with an attorney to collect delinquent taxes on real estate, or employ a collector to collect delinquent personal taxes."

The fourth inquiry in this opinion was as follows:

"Under the provisions of Section 5696 of the General Code of Ohio, can a collector be appointed to collect personal taxes as therein provided?"

It is apparent from the above inquiry that Section 5696 General Code was under consideration when this opinion was written, although it is not otherwise referred to in the opinion.

It is my opinion that the conclusion of Mr. Turner should be adhered to.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SCHOOLS—BOARD OF EDUCATION—DRIVER OF SCHOOL WAGON NOT ENTITLED TO COMPENSATION DURING EPIDEMIC.

Where a driver of a transportation wagon used for the transportation of pupils to and from a centralized school is employed at a sum certain per day for "each school day for the period of time as the schools are in session," he cannot recover for the time the schools were closed on account of the epidemic of Spanish influenza.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

HON. J. L. HEISE, Prosecuting Attorney, Circleville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—In your communication of November 19, you enclose a copy of a contract with a driver of one of your school wagons and you inquire if the board of education is compelled to pay said driver during the time the schools were closed on account of the epidemic of Spanish influenza. The contract reads in part:

> "This agreement made and entered into this 26th day of August, 1918, by and between the board of education of the Muhlenberg township rural school district, Pickaway county, Ohio, and James Collins of Muhlenberg township, Pickaway county, Ohio, parties of the first part and second part, respectively.
> "That in consideration of the sum of two and fifteen one-hundredths dollars per day, payable monthly, the party of the second part agrees to furnish a suitable team and to convey pupils and teachers to and from the central school building in Muhlenberg township school district, each school day for such period of time as the schools are in session, from the 9th day of September, 1918, to the end of the school year. * * * Twenty days of actual driving including legal holidays shall constitute a school month. * * *"

In construing a contract the first thing to ascertain, if possible, is what was the intent of the parties thereto. That intent, as gathered from the language used by said parties to the above contract, seems to indicate but one thing and that is that the drivers should be paid for only those days upon which the services were actually rendered and for only each school day that the schools were in session. The contract says, in so many words, that the consideration shall be by the day. This of itself would not be sufficient to make the contract one from day to day, but the consideration is followed by words which show that the driver is to convey the pupils "each school day for such period of time as the schools are in session" and that 20 days of actual driving shall be considered a month.

Section 7689 G. C. provides that a school month shall consist of four weeks of five days each. So that it seems clear to have been the intention of the parties that the driver could only be paid for the actual days he furnished the transportation.

It is held in 9 Cyc, 628, that "where the party by his own contract creates a duty or charge upon himself, he is bound to make it good." This is true even though it is impossible for him to perform.

In School district No. 1 vs. Dauchy, 25 Conn., 530, the court commented upon the above rule and uses the following language:

> "It is said, however, that there is one real exception to the rule, viz., where the act of God intervenes to defeat performance of the contract; and that is the exception on which the defendant relies in this case. The defendant insists that where the thing contracted to be done becomes impossible by the act of God, the contract is discharged. This is altogether a mistake. The cases show no such exception."

While the closing of the schools by the board of health cannot be considered in exactly the same class as the exception above mentioned, yet the epidemic which caused the order to be made is of that class, and if no exception can be had to the terms of a contract on that ground, the parties are left to complete the terms entered into by them.

Holding these views, then, I must advise you that the driver can only recover for those days on which he actually performed the duties of transporting said pupils.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CANNOT ISSUE BONDS SOLELY BECAUSE IT DETERMINES SUCH ISSUE TO BE FOR BEST INTERESTS.

The board of education of a school district is, under the provisions of Section 5656 General Code, only authorized to fund and thereby extend the time of payment of existing indebtedness of such school district by an issue of bonds when such indebtedness cannot be paid at maturity by reason of the limits of taxation of such school distrtict. Under said section such board of education is not authorized to fund existing indebtedness of the school district by an issue of bonds simply for the reason that the board of education may find and determine that it is to the best interests of the school district to do so.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Milford Village School district in the sum of $12,000 to extend the time of payment of certain indebtedness represented by notes executed by the board of education of said school district to the Milford National bank of Milford, Ohio.

I have examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the board of education of Milford Village School district relating to the above issue of bonds. As stated above, this issue of bonds is for the purpose of extending the time of payment of certain indebtedness now due and payable, represented by certain notes executed by said board of education to the Milford National bank of Milford, Ohio.

The preamble to the formal part of the resolution of the board of education providing for this issue of bonds reads as follows:

"Whereas the board of education of the Milford Village School district, Clermont and Hamilton counties, Ohio, has by the properly drawn resolutions issued its notes for the sum of $12,000.00, to the Milford National bank of Milford, Ohio, and whereas all of said notes have been by said board deemed and declared to be legal, existing, valid and binding obligations of said school district, by formal resolutions passed before the issuing of each and every one of said notes aggregating in all the sum of twelve thousand dollars, and, whereas, said notes are now all due and payable and it is deemed by said board of education of the Milford Village School district to be for the best interest of said school district to extend the time of payment of said indebtedness by issuing the bonds of said school district for the periods of time and in the denominations hereinafter mentioned, and whereas said notes are all now again declared by this board to be the legal, existing, valid and binding obligations of the said Milford Village School district.

Now, therefore, be it resolved by the board of education of the Milford Village School district, Clermont and Hamilton counties, Ohio, at and during a regular meeting of said board of education," etc.

It is clear from the language of this resolution above quoted that the actuating reason of the board of education in providing for this issue of bonds is the finding and determination by the board of education that it is for the best interests of said school district to extend the time of payment of this indebtedness to the bank by issuing bonds of said school district. The issue of these bonds is provided for under the assumed authority of Section 5656 General Code, and I am wholly unable to find anything in the provisons of said section authorizing the board of education of a school district to fund existing indebtedness of said school district by an issue of bonds simply for the reason that the board of education finds and determines that it will be to the best interests of the school district to do so. On the contrary, under the provisions of said section, the existing indebtedness of a school district can be funded by an issue of bonds by the board of education only when the school district, by reason of its limits of taxation, is unable to pay said indebtedness at maturity. This requirement of the statute naturally implies that before the board of education can issue bonds for such purpose, that it be without funds to pay such indebtedness, and this by reason of its limits of taxation.

With respect to the bond issue here under consideration, it may well be for aught that appears in the resolution of the board of education, that it has ample funds in the treasury of the school district out of which to pay this indebtedness, and that said bonds are to be issued for the purpose of paying said indebtedness simply for the reason that the board of education deems it for the best interest of the school district to pay such indebtedness in this way.

In this connection I note that under the provisions of Section 3916 General Code, a city or village may fund existing indebtedness by an issue of bonds when either such municipality by reason of its limits of taxation is not able to pay such indebtedness at maturity "or when it appears to the council for the best interests of the corporation." As before noted, Section 5656 General Code is more limited in its authority, and authorizes a board of education to fund or extend the time of payment of existing indebtedness only when from the school district's limits of taxation, such indebtedness cannot be paid at maturity.

It follows from what has been said above, that the resolution of the board of education of Milford Village School district providing for this issue wholly fails to show any legal authority for said issue, and for this reason the same is hereby disapproved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

JUVENILE COURT—JUVENILE UNDER FOURTEEN MAY NOT BE CONFINED IN CELL.

A juvenile under fourteen years of age may not, pending final disposition of his case, be confined in a cell in the upper part of the county jail even though such cell is separate and apart from the county jail proper.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

HON. H. M. SUMMERS, Probate Judge, Ottawa, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 11, 1918, as follows:

> "Complaint was filed in this court against a boy under fourteen years of age for having broken into several business places here in Ottawa within the last year. He carried away money and merchandise. Warrant was issued and said boy arrested. Having no place within which to place him pending final disposition of the case, would the jail matron have been justified in keeping him in a cell in the upper part of the jail, separate and apart from the county jail proper. The probation officer had no place to take him and could not be with him personally during the pendency of the case, he having other cases to look after. Please advise."

Section 1657 of the General Code reads as follows:

"Pending final disposition of a case, the judge may commit any person arrested or cited to appear, except the minor under fourteen years of age, to the county jail until the case is disposed of, but such trial shall be commenced within four days of such commitment unless upon the request of the defendant. Pending final disposition, the judge may direct that the minor in question be left in the possession of the person having charge of him, or that he be kept in some suitable place provided by the county or city authorities."

In discussing the case of in re Januszewski, 10 O. L .R., p. 151, Sater, J., in discussing the purpose of the juvenile court statute, says:

"The purpose of the statute is to save minors under the age of seventeen years from prosecution and conviction on charges of misdemeanors and crimes, and to relieve them from the consequent stigma attaching thereto; * * * A consideration of the acts enumerated which respectively constitute delinquency precludes the thought that it was the legislative intent that they or any of them, when committed by infants within the specified age, should for correctional purposes be treated as a crime—such purposes, as regards such minors, being the only ones contemplated by the statute. The intent to disassociate juvenile from criminal cases is evidenced by the provision of Section 1649 that the former shall not be heard, if it can be avoided, in a room used for the trial of the latter, and by the prohibition against the detention of any delinquent child in the county jail pending the disposition of its case."

It will be seen from this and a thorough examination of the juvenile statutes that the purpose of the provision, to the effect that the juvenile may not be confined in the county jail pending the disposition of his case, is to save the minor from the stigma attaching to criminal charges.

You ask in your request whether the jail matron would have been justified in confining the minor in question in a "cell in the upper part of the jail, separate and apart from the county jail proper." It may be that this cell, as a matter of fact, would be considered apart from the jail proper, but it seems to me that the spirit of the juvenile court act would require the youth to be confined in some place separate and distinct from the county jail building. It is true the entire building may not be used for jail purposes, but I think it is to be viewed, so far as the juvenile court act is concerned, as the county jail.

It is therefore my opinion that the confinement of the youth in question in this cell would be in violation of the provisions of the juvenile law.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

DISTRICT TUBERCULOSIS HOSPITAL—OFFICERS AND EMPLOYES NOT UNDER CIVIL SERVICE.

The officers and employes of a district tuberculosis hospital, created under Sections 3148 et seq. G. C. (107 O. L., 497), do not come within the provisions of the civil service act (Sections 486-1 to 486-31 inc. G. C.)

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

Civil Service Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I am in receipt of your communication which reads as follows:

> "Section 3148 et seq., General Code of Ohio, provides that the county commissioners of any two or more counties, not to exceed five, may form themselves into a joint board for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a district hospital for the care and treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis, etc. Under the law the operation and management of such institutions is in the hands of a board of trustees, one member of which is selected by the board of county commissioners of each county concerned.
> Under this provision of the law, a number of district tuberculosis hospitals have been established throughout the state. In a communication from the board of trustees of one of these institutions, the following claims are made:
> 'It is our opinion that the civil service law of Ohio does not apply to employes of this hospital, as it is a district institution. Our employes are not in the service of the state, nor of any county or city, but in the service of a new political subdivision, as was held by the supreme court in the case of Brissel vs. State, 87 O. S. 154 to 163.'
> Your opinion is respectfullly requested as to whether the civil service law of Ohio applies to employes of such institutions."

In considering the question submitted by you, we will first turn to the act providing for establishments of districts for the purpose of erecting and maintaining tuberculosis hospitals therein. The basic section of the act is Section 3148 G. C. (107 O. L. 497), which reads as follows:

> "Section 3148.—The commissioners of any two or more counties not to exceed ten, may form themselves into a joint board for the purpose of establishing and maintaining a district hospital, provided there is no municipal tuberculosis hospital therein for care and treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis, and may provide the necessary funds for the purchase of a site, which site shall be separate and apart from the infirmary boundaries in any county and also may provide for the erection of the necessary buildings thereon; and provided further that where any number of counties have already constructed and are operating a district tuberculosis hospital, counties may join such counties for enlargement and use of such hospital. Any new district or addition to a district shall be approved by the state board of health. Such necessary expenses as may be incurred by the county commissioners in meeting with the commissioners of other counties for consideration of the proposal to establish a district tuberculosis hospital shall be paid from the general fund of the county. After the organization of the joint board such expenses shall be paid from the fund provided for the erection and maintenance of such hospital."

It will be seen that the district thus formed is not co-extensive with county or municipal lines, but is a distinct district formed from a number of counties not exceeding ten.

The remaining sections of this act provide for a board of trustees to be chosen by the county commissioners of the counties uniting in the project, which trustees are to have the general management and control of the hospital. They prepare the plans and specifications, erect the necessary buildings, appoint a suitable person as medical superintendent of the hospital and fix the compensation of said superintendent and the other employes. So that the entire control and management of the hospital are placed in the hands of a distinct set or body of officers who are not in any sense county or municipal officers.

I might suggest that it becomes the duty of the commissioners of the various counties joining in the project to levy a tax to provide the necessary funds for the establishment and maintenance of the hospital. Outside of this, county officers have nothing to do with the management of the hospital.

In Brissel, et al. vs. State, 87 O. S. 154, Johnson, J., in the opinion on p. 163, uses the following language in regard to such a hospital:

"In the first place, it is plain that Section 3148 provides for the creation of a complete legal entity, a political subdivision, for the specific purpose of 'establishing and maintaining' a district hospital, for the care and treatment of persons suffering from tuberculosis.

The enactment is, the commissioners of two or more counties * * * may form the joint board and may provide the necessary funds.

It is the board, as a board, which shall determine what buildings are necessary for its purpose, and shall provide the funds for the 'purchase of the site' and erection of the 'necessary buildings' thereon."

With the nature of such an institution in mind, we will consider the provisions of the civil service act in reference to the officers included in the act.

Section 486-1 G. C. provides in part as follows:

"The term 'civil service' includes all offices and positions of trust or employment in the service of the state and the counties, cities and city school districts thereof.

The 'state service' shall include all such offices and positions in the service of the state or the counties thereof, except the cities and city school districts.

The term 'classified service' signifies the competitive classified civil service of the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

Section 486-2 G. C. provides:

"On and after the taking effect of this act, appointments to and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, cities and city school districts thereof, shall be made only according to merit and fitness * * *."

The language of the whole act, in so far as it applies to the particular question under consideration, is very similar to the language which we have quoted therefrom. The act applies to the state, the several counties of the state, cities and city school districts thereof. It nowhere mentions the districts created from the subdivisions of the state and for that reason it would seem that the act could not be made to apply to a district such as that about which you inquire. The only theory upon which the act could be made to apply to such a district would be to place such a construction upon the language used in Section 486-1 G. C. as to make it read that the term "civil service" includes all offices and positions of trust or employment which may be created within the state, whether said offices have reference strictly to the state or to counties, cities, city school districts or any other kind of districts; that is, to make the word "state" include everything within the state. I do not think this was the intention of the legislature, for if it had been, there would have been no need of adding the language the "counties, cities and city school districts thereof."

In other words, if the term "state" were meant to include all officers and positions within the state, irrespective of the nature of the offices and positions, there would have been no necessity of adding "counties, cities and city school districts thereof." Hence it is my opinion that when the legislature used the term "offices and positions of the state" it meant to include therein state offices and state positions only, and not those which might be termed district offices and positions. If this interpretation be correct, then it is readily seen that the positions and offices connected with a district tuberculosis hospital would not come within the provisions of the civil service act.

My predecessor, Hon. Edward C. Turner, in an opinion rendered on July 11, 1916 and found in Volume II, Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1916, p. 1186, passed upon a question which throws some light upon the question we are considering. The syllabus reads as follows:

> "Offices, positions and employments in villages and village school districts are not included in the operation of the civil service law of this state."

Mr. Turner reasoned as follows in said opinion (p. 1187):

> "This paragraph specifies what offices, positions and employments are included in the civil service law of the state and it is exclusive. It will be observed that it does not include offices or positions in villages, or village school districts. It follows, therefore, that the position held by the janitor named in your inquiry is not within the operation of the civil service law, and said janitor is not entitled to its protection or to hold his position under any of its provisions, including the provision of Section 486-31 G. C., as amended 106 O. L. 418, referred to in your inquiry and commonly known as the seven-year service clause."

This reasoning would not permit our placing such a construction upon the term "offices and positions of the state" as I assumed above. That is, it would not permit us to say that the term "state" was meant to include the various subdivisions of the state; for if such a construction could be placed upon the word "state," then villages could be included in said term. I think Mr. Turner is right in his reasoning and that the civil service act is limited to state, county, city and city school district offices and positions.

In People ex rel. vs. Haywood, et al., 19 App. Div. (N. Y.) 46, the court was passing upon a question somewhat similar to the one before us. The syllabus is as follows:

"A union free school is not, within the meaning of chapter 312 of the laws of 1884, as finally amended by chapter 821 of the laws of 1896, a public department of the state or of a village in it, and the board of education of the district, to which is committed, by the Consolidated School Act, the care of the school building, is not subject to the direction or control of the village or state authorities in the exercise of such duties, and cannot be compelled to give preferential employment, as a janitor of the school building, to a veteran of the late war under the statute entitling such veteran to preferential employment in the public service in every public department of the state, counties, cities and villages, and upon all public works of the state, counties, cities and villages."

In the opinion the court uses the following language (p. 47):

"The question here is whether the union free school is, within the meaning of the statute, a public department of the state or village. I do not think it is. The respondent is a school district organized, existing and supported by taxation levied upon the taxable inhabitants of the district, which may or may not be co-extensive with the corporate limits of the village; and when organized by force of the statute, becomes a district having a distinct classification in the civil divisions of the state. The care of the school building is committed, by the Consolidated School Act, to the board of education, and the board is in no way subject to the direction or control of the village or state authorities in the execution of such duties, and, in my judgment, under no legal requirement to prefer the relator as janitor. A privilege of this character must have its foundation in express provision of the statute. The demurrer should be sustained."

In this case the court was passing upon whether a "public department of the state" would include a school district which is made up of a part of another subdivision of the state, and as to whether the appointees under the act creating such district would come within the civil service provisions of the laws of the state. The court held they would not come under said provisions and that the term "public department of the state" could not be made to include such a school district. And it is my view that the term "state," as used in our civil service act, could not be made to include a district created from other subdivisions of the state.

Hence answering your question specifically it is my opinion that the officers and appointees about which you inquire do not come within the civil service laws of the state.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

CHILDREN'S HOME—ADMISSION TO—REMOVAL FROM—CONSENT TO ADOPTION.

1. The mere fact that a juvenile court does not accompany its order to the superintendent of the children's home, to admit a certain minor thereto, with a statement of facts as set forth in Section 3090 G. C., does not warrant the superintendent in refusing to admit the child.

2. When a juvenile court removes, from a children's home, a child theretofore committed to the home by it, all duties and obligations of the home in reference to said child thereby cease.

3. When a child is so removed from a children's home by the juvenile court, the trustees of the home are no longer under obligation to make the visitations provided for in Sections 3098 and 3099 G. C.

4. The board of trustees of a children's home is the proper body to decide whether or not a child is suitable for the home. The power of the juvenile court to commit to the home is merely incidental to its duties under the juvenile act. An exception to this general rule is found in Section 3091 G. C.

5. An orphan asylum or children's home organized under the laws of this state may give consent to the adoption of an inmate thereon, provided it was voluntarily surrendered to the institution or was previously abandoned by its parents. In no case does a private institution for the care and support of minor children become the legal guardian of the inmates of the institution, and therefore has no authority to grant consent to the adoption of the inmates of the institution, excepting under the order of the juvenile court as set out in Section 1672 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

Board of State Charities, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your letter in which you request my opinion on the following questions:

"1. Children are occasionally sent out to county children's homes by judges of juvenile courts without any papers whatever. Pursuant to Section 3097 of the General Code, a uniform family history blank has been prepared and furnished each juvenile court judge for use in the commitment of children, but in some instances the use of this blank or any other is entirely ignored. Section 3090 requires the judge to set forth certain particulars relative to a committed child. Is the superintendent of a county children's home required to accept a child committed by the juvenile court, unaccompanied by statement of facts required in Section 3090?

2. The judge of a juvenile court commits to a county children's home a dependent child. Pursuant to the provisions of Section 1643, the judge subsequently recalls the child and places it in a private family home. While in this home the child dies. Is the children's home or the juvenile court responsible for the payment of expenses incident to the care and burial of such child?

3. When a child, regularly committed to a children's home, is subsequently recalled by the committing judge of the juvenile court and placed by him in a family home, does the obligation of the trustees of such children's home cease at the time of the withdrawal, or do the provisions of Sections 3098 and 3099 relative to visitation of children placed in foster homes apply to a child under the circumstances stated above?

4. We have contended that under the provisions of Section 3090 the trustees of a county children's home may accept the legal guardianship and custody of the dependent children by means of release or surrender from each parent, if living, or from the legal guardian, and that all other cases, including those of abandoned children, should be taken into a juvenile court for judicial action. Is our interpretation of said section correct? It is found that in some instances trustees of county children's homes and some other child-caring institutions are accepting the guardianship of children from the mother solely, although the father is living, or from grandparents or other near relatives when parents are dead; and that so-called abandoned infants are taken to public and private institutions without any formal commitment by a juvenile court and accepted by the officers of these institutions who thereupon consider themselves legal guardians of such children and competent to give legal consent later to adoption."

Your first question is as to whether the superintendent of a children's home would be warranted in refusing admission to a child whom the juvenile court had ordered to be placed in the home, if said court fails to accompany the order with the data set out in Section 3090 G. C. Said section reads as follows:

"Section 3090.—They shall be admitted by the superintndent on the order of the juvenile court or of a majority of such trustees, accompanied by a statement of facts signed by the court or trustees, setting forth name, age, birthplace, and present condition of the child named in such order, which statement of facts contained in the order, together with any additional facts connected with the history and condition of such children shall be, by the superintendent, recorded in a record provided for that purpose, which shall be confidential and only open for inspection at the discretion of the trustees."

In this connection it might also be well to quote Section 3097 G .C., which reads as follows:

"Section 3097.—Full and complete records of the inmates shall be kept in the children's home and they shall be uniform throughout the state. It shall be the duty of the board of state charities to secure uniformity by providing a standard form of blanks and records for the guidance of such institutions, wherein shall be recorded the full name, age, place of residence, name of parent or other relatives, so far as obtainable, and other information as the board of state charities requires, which records shall not be open to inspection unless on special permission of the trustees. The name and place of residence of the person with whom a child is placed or by whom adopted shall be recorded together with the terms of the agreement in a separate record, which shall not be open to inspection except by special permission of the trustees, having regard at all times to the well-being of the child, except that duly authorized representatives of the board of state charities, may see such record at any time."

Said section provides that the data therein mentioned, "so far as obtainable," shall be recorded by the superintendent of the home, but shall not be open for public inspection. The section is silent as to the person upon whom the duty or obligation rests to get the data mentioned in said section, but it is fairly evident, from a reading of the section, that this duty devolves primarily upon the superintendent of the children's home.

It is true Section 3090 G. C. provides that when the juvenile court or the trustees of a home make an order for the admission of a child to the home, this order shall be accompanied by a statement setting forth the name, age, birthplace and present condition of the child. This information of course is furnished for the use of the superintendent.

The question now is as to whether this statement must accompany the order before the superintendent is warranted in admitting the child into the home. I do not think such a construction should be placed upon this language. The main and important thing is the order, and if a superintendent of a home should receive an order from the juvenile court, to admit a certain child to the home, it is my opinion that the superintendent should admit it, notwithstanding said statement might not accompany the order. The statute does not state that the superintendent shall admit the child upon the order of the juvenile court, if said order is accompanied by said statement of facts, but does provide that a child shall be admitted by the superintendent on the order of the juvenile court.

If the construction should be placed upon this section that a superintendent of a children's home shall not receive a child upon the order of the juvenile court, unless said order is accompanied by such a statement of facts, the same interpretation would have to be given to an order made by the board of trustees of a home; that is, if a board of trustees should order a child admitted to the home and the order was not accompanied by said statement of facts, the superintendent would be warranted in refusing to admit the child. I do not think this was the intent of the legislature in making this provision. To be sure,for the advantage of the superintendent, said statement should accompany the order, whether made by a juvenile court or by the trustees of the home; but if they should fail to perform their duty in this respect, it would not be sufficient to warrant the superintendent of the home in refusing admission to the child.

Your second question pertains to the jurisdiction of a children's home over a child who has been committed to the home by the juvenile court, but has afterwards been taken from the home by the court and placed elsewhere.

Section 1643 G. C. reads as follows:

> "When a child under the age of eighteen years comes into the custody of the court under the provisions of this chapter, such child shall continue for all necessary purposes of discipline and protection, a ward of the court, until he or she attain the age of twenty-one years. The power of the court over such child shall continue until the child attains such age."

Under this section the jurisdiction of a juvenile court over a child, when once assumed, is continuing and it can make any order, from time to time, in reference to the child, until it becomes twenty-one years of age, which may seem to the court to be for the best interests of the child. Hence when a juvenile court commits a child to the children's home, it is merely temporarily and the order committing the child may be modified at any time. From the provisions of this section it is my opinion that when a juvenile court modifies its order committing a child to a children's home and orders it to be placed elsewhere, the duties, obligations and responsibilities of the officers of the home cease and the home is not responsible for the payment of expenses incident to the care and burial of such child.

I might further say, in respect to this question, that the juvenile court would not be responsible for the payment of said expenses. A careful study of the juvenile act will develop the fact that said court has no funds from which it could make an expenditure such as you suggest. However, I will not go into this matter further, as your question relates to whether the home is responsible for the payment of said expenses.

Your third question is similar to the second and is in regard to whether the obligations of the trustees of the children's home cease at the time of a withdrawal of a child from the home by the juvenile court, or whether the provisions of Sections 3098 and 3099 G. C., relative to visitation of children placed in foster homes, apply to a child under such circumstances.

I think the observation made in answer to your second question will apply to this question, and that the trustees of the home are no longer under obligation to visit a child when it is taken from the home by the juvenile court and placed in a private home. In this connection I will quote Section 3098 G. C. which is as follows:

> "Section 3098.—The trustees shall visit, or cause to be visited, each child placed out by them, at least once in each year, and as much oftener as the welfare of the child requires. The trustees may at any time vacate any agreement when the welfare of the child may demand it, and replace it in another family home or return it to the institution."

In this section the visitation is in reference to a child "placed out by them"; that is, by the trustees, and therefore would not apply to a child who is placed in a private home by the juvenile court.

Your fourth question relates to the jurisdiction of the juvenile court in committing minors to a children's home. As I understand it, the question is as to whether in certain cases minors ought to be taken before the juvenile court to have it determine whether or not they should be committed to the children's home. This is the theory upon which I will attempt to answer the same.

Section 3089 G. C. reads as follows:

> "The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of eighteen years, of sound mind and not morally vicious and free from infectious or contagious diseases, who have resided in the county not less than one year, and for such other children under such age from other counties in the state where there is no home, as the trustees of such home and the persons or authority having the custody and control of such children, by contract agree upon, who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them. In no event shall a delinquent or incorrigible child be committed to or be accepted by such home. If an inmate of such home is found to be incorrigible, he or she shall be brought before the juvenile court for further disposition. Parents or guardians of such children shall in all cases where able to do so, pay reasonable board for their children received in such children's home."

Under this section the board of trustees of the home is the proper body to determine whether a child is suitable for admission because of "orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents, or inability of parents to provide for them." There is nothing said in this section as to a juvenile court's having jurisdiction to pass upon the question as to whether or not a child is suitable to be admitted to the home.

It is true Section 3090 G. C., above quoted, provides that the superintendent of a home shall admit a child upon the order of a juvenile court, but to understand this provision it will be necessary for us to turn to the act having to do particularly with the jurisdiction of the juvenile court. Section 1642 G. C., in this act, gives the juvenile court jurisdiction over and with respect to delinquent, neglected and dependent minors under eighteen years of age.

Section 1644 G. C. defines with great particularity the term "delinquent child," as does Section 1645 G. C. "dependent child" and Section 1646 G. C. "neglected child." One can not study these sections carefully without reaching the conclusion that the object of this act is not so much to take care of the bodily, mental or moral wants of the child, as it is to get the child away from conditions and circumstances which have a tendency to make of him a bad and dangerous citizen.

The act provides for the filing of a complaint, the issuing of a citation by the court and the apprehension or arrest of the minor. It provides for serving a notice, either actual or constructive, upon the parent, and also for a hearing upon the complaint so filed. This proceeding sounds very much in crime, either upon the part of the minor himself or of some one connected with the minor.

The children's home and the statutes pertaining to the same do not bear such a construction as do the statutes pertaining to the juvenile court, set out above. It is true the juvenile court may commit minors to the children's home, if they are brought before said court under the juvenile act and if the judge thereof deems it to be for the best interests of the minor, but this is merely incidental.

In other words the juvenile court is not given exclusive jurisdiction over placing children in children's homes. The judge thereof is merely given authority to commit children to the home in his carrying out the provisions of the juvenile act. His jurisdiction is to determine whether any child brought before him is dependent, delinquent or neglected. If he finds such a condition exists, he may, for the best interest of the child, commit it to the children's home.

If this theory be correct, the trustees of a children's home have in all cases the authority to admit a minor to the home, provided they find any of the conditions set out in Section 3090 G. C. to exist. Further, a minor would never be taken before the juvenile court merely for the purpose of having the court decide whether or not it should be admitted to a children's home. The committing of a minor to the home by a juvenile court, as said before, is merely a matter incident to enable said court to perform the duties as contemplated in the juvenile act, and the juvenile court is not given the jurisdiction to determine whether a child shall be admitted to a children's home. This is the function of the trustees of the home. In all cases they, and they alone, have the authority to decide, when the mere question is as to whether or not a child should be admitted to the home.

As hereinbefore stated, the provisions of Section 1643 G. C. provide a continuing jurisdiction of the juvenile court over a minor, when it finds that the child is delinquent, dependent or neglected, and in exercising this continuing jurisdiction said court may commit the minor to the children's home, as it might commit it to a private home or to the Board of State Charities or some training or industrial school, or to the care of some association willing to receive it.

From all the above I think it is clear that in no case would a minor be taken before the juvenile court merely for the purpose of determining whether or not it should be admitted to a children's home. In all cases this is a function of the trustees of the home.

I am aware there is one exception to this broad statement and that is found in Section 3091 G. C., which provides that—

> "* * * When the children are found by township trustees to be proper subjects for the care of the county, said trustees shall file their complaint with the juvenile court, and if said court orders such children to be committed to a children's home, they shall be conveyed to such home by the township trustees, and the expenses thereof paid from the township poor fund. * * *."

This is the only exception to the above general rule, with which I am familiar.

In studying the language which you have used in setting forth your fourth proposition, I am wondering whether you are not laboring under the impression that the trustees of the children's home would have authority to admit a child to the home and thus accept the legal guardianship and control of the same only in those cases in which the child is surrendered or released by its parents, or guardian if no parent be living. It is my opinion this theory is not correct. Section 3093 G. C. clearly indicates otherwise. It makes it clear that a child may be admitted to the home either voluntarily upon the part of the parents or guardian, or against their will if the trustees of the home should decide that it would be for the best interests of the child. It provides that—

> "All inmates of such home who (1) by reason of abandonment, neglect, or dependence have been admitted, or (2) who have been by the parent or guardian voluntarily surrendered to the trustees, shall be under the sole and exclusive guardianship and control of the trustees * * *."

Here we find two conditions existing, viz., voluntarily admitted and involuntarily admitted. In other words, if the trustees of the home should find that a child is abandoned, neglected or dependent, said child may be admitted to the home, notwithstanding the parents or guardian of the child should take no action in regard to admitting the child.

Then on the other hand the trustees may admit a child to the home if it be voluntarily surrendered by the parent, or guardian if no parent be living. This is clearly borne out by Section 3094 G. C., which provides that—

> "* * * The trustees may discharge any inmates of such home and may return them to their parents or guardians when they believe them capable of providing for themselves or their parents or guardians for them."

From this language I gather that the question as to whether a child shall be admitted into the children's home and how long it shall remain there does not rest entirely or primarily with the parents or the guardians of the children, but the sole question is, what is for the best interests of the child? This is also clearly indicated by Section 3089 G. C., wherein it is provided that—

> "The home shall be an asylum for children under the age of eighteen years * * * who are, in the opinion of the trustees, suitable children for admission by reason of orphanage, abandonment or neglect by parents or inability of parents to provide for them. * * *."

I might say in passing that I believe the word "parent" in Section 3093 G. C. should be interpreted as if it were "parents"; that is, the trustees of the home would have no authority to admit a child into the home on the theory that it has been voluntarily surrendered, unless both parents, if living, should surrender the child for the purpose of having it admitted to the home.

But suppose one parent, or, as you suggest, the grandparents, should bring the matter to the attention of the trustees of the home in reference to a certain child, and the trustees should find that the child is neglected or is dependent, then the trustees of the home could admit the child to the home, not upon the theory that it has been voluntarily surrendered to them, but because it would be for the best interests of the child to be admitted to the home, even though it may be against the will of one or both of its parents, or the guardian of the child in case there are no parents.

In connection with this question it might be well for us to consider Section 3092 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "In any county where such home has not already been provided, the board of commissioners shall make temporary provisions for destitute children by transferring them to the nearest children's home where they can be received and kept at the expense of the county, or by leasing suitable premises for that purpose, which shall be furnished, provided and managed in all respects as provided by law for the support and management of children's homes, but if such child be not abandoned or surrendered by its parents, a complaint must first be filed with the juvenile court setting forth the facts as to such children, and if such court commits such children to an institution or agency for the care of children, then said commissioners may pay reasonable board for such child, whether placed in an institution or with a private family. But the commissioners may provide for the care and support of such children within their respective counties, in the manner deemed best for the interest of such children, which may include the payment of board for such children in a private home, when placed therein by an institution or society certified by the board of state charities as provided by Section 1352-1 of the General Code, and they shall levy an additional tax, which shall be used for that purpose only."

The language to which especial attention must be paid is:

"* * * but if such child be not abandoned or surrendered by its parents, a complaint must first be filed with the juvenile court setting forth the facts as to such child * * *."

However it must be remembered that this section does not deal with children's homes. It covers those cases in which there are no children's homes in the county, and the board of county commissioners is given jurisdiction over the care of the destitute children of the county. This is evident from a reading of the section, which states:

"* * * if such court commits such children to an institution or agency for the care of children, then said commissioners may pay reasonable board for such child, whether placed in an institution or with a private family. * * *."

The question of committing the child to the children's home is not raised and this language was evidently used advisedly by the general assembly. The general assembly was not dealing with children's homes in this section. It therefore used the language "institution or agency for the care of children."

Hence I will repeat what I have heretofore said in this opinion, namely, that with the exception of the provision made in Section 3091 G. C., above quoted, the trustees of the home are the proper authority to decide in all cases whether or not a child should be admitted to a children's home, and that the committing of a child to the children's home, by the juvenile court, is merely incidental to its duties as set forth in the juvenile act itself.

There is another matter connected with question No. 4, and that is that both public and private institutions without any formal commitment by a juvenile court accept children into said institutions and thereupon the institutions consider themselves legal guardians of the child so accepted, and consider themselves competent to give legal consent later to adoption.

The question is whether these institutions can give their consent to adoption when they are admitted under the above procedure. In reference to this matter, let me say that the question as to whether a child is placed in a public or private institution by a juvenile court or not, has nothing whatever to do with the question as to whether these institutions may give consent to adoption or not. This matter is governed by a statutory principle which is not at all based upon the question as to how the child was admitted into the home. Section 8024 G. C. reads as follows:

> "When such child is an inmate of an orphan asylum, or children's home, organized under the laws of this state, and has been previously abandoned by its parents or guardians, or voluntarily surrendered by its parents or guardians to the trustees or directors of such asylum, or children's home, then the written consent of the president, or in his absence or disability, the vice-president, of the board of trustees or directors of such asylum, or children's home, shall be received by the probate court in place of the consent of the parents or guardians."

It is to be noted from the provisions of this section that even the authorities of a children's home cannot give consent to adoption unless the child so adopted has been voluntarily surrendered by its parents or guardians to the trustees of such home. Hence, even though a child were committed to a home by the juvenile court, unless possibly when the court would make an order as set out in Section 1672 G. C., the authorities of the home would have no authority to give consent to the adoption of the child. This section further provides that an orphan asylum or children's home organized under the laws of this state may give their consent to adoption if the child has been previously abandoned by its parents or guardians. The basic section which has to do with the matter of giving consent to the adoption of a minor child is Section 8025 G. C., and reads as follows:

> "Any proper person not married, or a husband and wife jointly, may petition the probate court of their proper county, or the probate court of the county in which the child resides, for leave to adopt a minor child not theirs by birth, and for a change of the name of such child. A written consent must be given to such adoption by the child, if of the age of fourteen years, and by each of his or her living parents who is not hopelessly insane, intemperate, or has not abandoned such child, or if there are no such parents, or if the parents are unknown, or have abandoned the child, or if they are hopelessly insane or intemperate, then by the legal guardian, or if there is no such guardian, then by a suitable person appointed by the court to act in the proceedings as the next friend of the child."

Let us note carefully what this section says. It provides that a written consent to adoption must be given by the child if it be of the age of fourteen years, and by each of his or her living parents who is not hopelessly insane, intemperate or has not abandoned such child. If there are no parents, or if they are unknown, or if they have abandoned the child, then the legal guardian must give its consent. A legal guardian would be a person or institution which had been made a guardian of the child under and by virtue of some provision of law, and hence in no case could the children's home or orphans' asylum, under Section 8024 G. C., give consent to the adoption of a child unless as is provided in Section 8024 G. C. it has been voluntarily surrendered "by its parents or guardians, to the trustees of such asylum or children's home," or unless, as suggested above, the parents have abandoned the child.

I know of no provision of law that would prevent a private institution from accepting a child and providing for its wants in a home established for the purpose or otherwise, just as there is no provision of law which would prevent any one taking a child and caring for the same provided no question was raised by the parents or legal guardian of such child. But in no event could a private institution in any way get the legal guardianship over a child and then give its consent to the adoption of the child, excepting as it provided in Section 1672 G. C. The provisions of Section 8024 go only to those institutions which "are organized under the laws of this state" for the purpose of taking care of children. Hence, from the provisions of both Section 8024 and 8025 G. C. it is very clear that no private institution, even though it accepts a child for the purpose of giving it care and support, gets the legal guardianship of the child and has authority under said legal guardianship to give its consent to its adoption, except as provided in Section 1672 G. C.

This, if I understand your communication correctly, answers what you have in mind.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—ON FAILURE OF CONTRACTOR TO COMPLETE HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT—APPORTIONS WHOLE COST OF IMPROVEMENT INCLUDING ENGINEERING COST.

(1) Where the state highway commissioner takes over a contract under the provisions of Section 1209 G. C. and completes the same at a cost greater than the contract price, and is not able to recover from the contractor and his surety the difference, then, in that event, he apportions the total cost and expense of the improvement among the state, county, township and property owners, and not merely the contract price.

(2) If the state highway commissioner incurs engineering and inspection fees during the time he is completing it under a force account, then this amount must be added to the total cost and expense of the improvement and is collectible as against the contractor and his surety.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 2, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "In the apportionment of cost and expense of road improvements under the supervision of this department, same is made under the provisions of Section 1211 of the General Code of Ohio, upon the completion of the improvement.
> We now have ready for such apportionment a number of jobs on which the contract was forfeited and the work completed under "force account" by the department and in a number of cases the final cost of the work exceeded the contract price under the original contract. Several jobs thus completed carry the Illinois Surety company as surety for the original contractor and we will no doubt be unable to recover some of the excess cost from either the surety or the original contractor.
> Under the above statement I respectfully ask for your opinion on the following two questions:
> First—If the contract price is exceeded and collection can not be made from the original contractor or the surety, shall the state pay all of the excess cost, or must we assess the county, townships and property owners one-half of the excess cost?

Second—In making the apportionment of cost must we include in the amount to be collected from the original contractor and the surety, any or all of the cost of engineering and inspection incurred after the date of forfeiture of the contract?"

I will answer your questions in the order in which they are set out in your communication.

In answering your first question it will be well for us to keep in mind that the proportion of the cost and expense of any road improvement to be borne by the state, county, township and property owners is fixed by statute as is shown by Sections 1213 and 1214 General Code. Section 1213 reads as follows:

"Whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county, and the cost and expense thereof does not exceed twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay fifty per cent. of such cost and expense.

Whenever there are one or more improvements to be made in a county and the cost and expense thereof exceeds twice the amount apportioned by the state to a county, then the state shall pay such proportion of the cost of said improvement or improvements as may be agreed upon by the state highway commissioner and the county commissioners or township trustees."

Section 1214 reads in part as follows:

"Except as otherwise provided in this chapter, the county shall pay twenty-five per cent of all cost and expense of the improvement. Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement, except the cost and expenses of bridges and culverts, shall be apportioned to the township or townships in which such road is located. If the improvement lies in two or more townships the amount to be paid by each shall be apportioned according to the number of lineal feet of the improvement lying in each township. Ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement, excepting therefrom the cost and expense of bridges and culverts, shall be a charge upon the property abutting on the improvement, provided the total amount assessed against any owner of abutting property shall not exceed thirty-three per cent. of the valuation of such abutting property for the purposes of taxation."

In connection with these two sections, I desire to call attention to two things: First, that the statute itself fixes the proportion, as said above, that is to be borne by the state, county, township and property owners; and secondly, that the proportion which each of these different parties is to pay is based upon the cost and expense of the improvement.

In Section 1214 we find the language "all cost and expense of the improvement," and the following: "Fifteen per cent. of the cost and expense of such improvement," and "ten per cent. of the cost and expense of the improvement"; while in Section 1213 we find it just as clearly indicated that the state bears a certain portion of the cost and expense of the improvement. For example, we find the following language: "Then the state shall pay such proportion of the cost of said improvement or improvements as may be agreed upon."

So that the statute itself fixes the proportion that must be paid by the different parties interested, and is not particularly based upon any agreement or contract.

With this in mind, let us notice some further provisions of the General Code. Section 1218 General Code provides as follows:

> "* * * No contract shall be let by the state highway commissioner in a case where the county commissioners or township trustees are to contribute a part of the cost of said improvement, unless the county commissioners of the county in which the improvement is located shall have made a written agreement to assume in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state. Where the application for said improvement has been made by township trustees, then such agreement shall be entered into between the state highway commissioner and the township trustees. * * *."

It is to be noted first in connection with this section that the agreement entered into by the county commissioners is based merely upon the estimated cost of the improvement, and this for the reason that the contract has not yet been entered into, and the actual cost and expense of the improvement is not known.

Secondly, in connection with this section it is to be remembered that the primary purpose of the agreement entered into by the county commissioners is to the effect that they will assume "in the first instance that part of the cost and expense of said improvement over and above the amount to be paid by the state." The object of this is not particularly to bind the county commissioners to the payment of a definite and specified amount, but simply to bind them to pay that part of the cost and expense of the improvement which will ultimately have to be paid by the township and the property owners as well as to pay the share which the county will have to pay. In other words, it makes such a provision that the state has no subdivision to deal with except the county.

Further, before the contract for any improvement can be entered into by the state highway commissioner, he must require a bond as is provided in Section 1208 General Code. This section reads in part as follows:

> "The state highway commissioner may reject all bids. Before entering into a contract the commissioner shall require a bond with sufficient sureties, conditioned that the contractor will perform the work upon the terms proposed within the time prescribed, and in accordance with the plans and specifications thereof, and that the contractor will indemnify the state, county or township against any damage that may result by reason of the negligence of the contractor in making said improvement."

With these matters noticed, let us turn to the provisions of Section 1209, which has to do with the matter of the state highway commissioner completing a contract after the failure of the contractor himself so to do. This section reads in part as follows:

> "If, in the opinion of the state highway commissioner, the contractor has not commenced his work within a reasonable time, or does not carry the same forward with reasonable progress, or is improperly performing his work, or has abandoned, or fails or refuses to complete a contract entered into under the provisions of this chapter, the state highway commissioner shall have full power and authority to enter upon and complete said improvement either by contract, force account or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public, paying the full costs and expense thereof from the balance of the contract price unpaid to said contractor, and in case there is not sufficient balance to pay for said work, the state highway commissioner shall require the contractor or the surety on his bond to pay the cost of completing said work. It shall be the duty of the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney of the county in which said improvement or some part thereof is situated, upon request of the state highway commissioner, to collect the same from the contractor, and the surety on his bond."

There are several matters in connection with this section to which I desire to call attention:

(1) The state highway commissioner completes the improvement either by contract, force account, or in such manner as he may deem for the best interest of the public.

(2) He pays the full cost and expense thereof from the balance of the contract price unpaid to said contractor.

(3) In case there is not sufficient balance to pay for said work, the state highway commissioner shall require the contractor or the surety on his bond to pay the cost of completing said work.

(4) It becomes the duty of the attorney-general or the prosecuting attorney of the proper county to collect the excess cost from the contractor and the surety on his bond.

In reference to the third and fourth suggestions I desire to call attention to an opinion rendered by me to Hon. R. A. Kerr, prosecuting attorney, as of date August 10, 1918, being No. 1393. In this opinion I held that neither the attorney-general nor the prosecuting attorney could collect any amount from the contractor and his surety until the improvement was fully completed, and that up to that time the same is fully completed, the state highway commissioner must pay the same over and above that which the county obligated itself to pay in the final resolutions entered into by it.

Hence, in the first instance, the state must pay all over and above the contract price which it may cost to complete said improvement. The question now arises as to whether the state will be compelled to bear this excess cost; that is, supposing the contract price of an improvement was $20,000 and the contractor failed to complete the same, and the state highway commissioner completed it at a cost of $25,000. The $5,000 in the first instance would have to be paid by the state highway commissioner out of state funds in accordance with the provisions of Section 1209 General Code. Under the provisions of said section the contractor and his surety would be liable for the difference, namely, $5,000; but supposing the state cannot recover from the contractor and his surety, due to insolvency or to some other reason. Then, in that event, who would pay this added cost of $5,000?

In answering this let us turn to Section 1211, which reads as follows:

"Upon completion of the improvement, the state highway commissioner shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property. He shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement and his apportionment thereof either to the county commissioners or to the trustees of the township upon whose application the improvement was made."

Here we find the provision that as soon as an improvement is completed, the state highway commissioner shall immediately ascertain the cost and expense thereof, and apportion the same to the state, county, township or townships and abutting property owners.

This section further provides that he shall certify the total cost and expense of the improvement and his apportionment thereof either to the county commissioners or to the trustees of the township. It seems to me that this section clearly indicates that the total amount of, say, $25,000 in the case used for illustration, would be apportioned among the state, the county, the township and the property owners in accordance with the provisions of the statutes and in accordance with the agreement of the county commissioners with the state highway commissioner. It isn't the $20,000, the original contract price that is to be apportioned, because that isn't the total cost and expense of the improvement; neither is it the estimated cost and expense of the improvement which is to be apportioned, but it is the total cost and expense of the improvement.

If this were not the theory upon which the General Assembly enacted this law, why did it provide that the apportionment should not be made until the contract was fully completed? If the estimated cost was to be used as a basis of apportionment the apportionment could be made as soon as the plans, specifications and estimates of the improvement were made. If the contract price of the improvement were to be used as the basis of the apportionment, then the apportionment could be made as soon as the contract was entered into; but such is not the provision of the statute. The apportionment is to be made when the contract is fully completed, and then whatever the cost may be to the state, the amount is apportioned among the different parties according to law, and according to the agreement entered into by and between the county commissioners and the state of Ohio.

I might call attention to the provisions of the White-Mulcahy law, which is found in Section 1214 General Code, and reads as follows:

> "The county commissioners or township trustees upon whose application the improvement is made shall cause the county surveyor to make a tentative apportionment of the amount to be paid by the owners of the property specially assessed which apportionment shall be made according to the benefits accruing to the land so located. The county surveyor shall file such apportionment with the county commissioners or township trustees for the inspection of the persons interested. Before adopting the estimate so made and reported the commissioners or trustees shall publish once each week for two consecutive weeks in some newspaper published in the county and of general circulation in the township where the improvement is located notice that such estimated assessment has been made and that the same is on file in the office of the county commissioners or with the township trustees and the date when objection, if any, will be heard to such assessment."

Here we find a provision for an apportionment among the property owners before the completion of the improvement, but this provision clearly indicates that the apportionment so made is merely a provisional or conjectural apportionment and not a final apportionment, and this because the word "tentative" is used.

So that I do not think this provision in any wise modifies the conclusion to which I have come, and which I have indicated above. Let us then in concluding the answer to your first question take again the illustrative example set out above.

The state highway commissioner has paid out $5,000 more than the contract price in order to complete the road under the provisions of Section 1209. The next step he would be compelled to take would be to endeavor to recover on the bond. If he succeeded in recovering the full amount of $5,000, then he would apportion the $20,000 among the parties in interest. If he fails in recovering any amount from the contractor and his surety, then he would apportion the full amount of $25,000 among the parties in interest. If he recover any part of the $5,000 from the contractor and his surety, then he would reduce the $25,000 by the amount so recovered and apportion the balance among the parties interested, namely, the state, the county, the township and the property owners.

The answer I have given to your first question makes the answer to your second comparatively simple. The contractor and his surety under the bond is liable for the difference between the contract price and the total cost and expense of the improvement to the state. Hence, if the state highway commissioner pays out engineering and inspection fees after he has taken the same over under the provisions of Section 1209 General Code, the amount so paid would be a part of the total cost and expense of the improvement, and would be collectible as against the contractor and his surety. To be sure, this would include only money actually paid out. Services rendered by the county surveyor himself or by the engineering department connected with the state highway commissioner's office would be rendered the same after the contract was taken over by the state as before it was taken over, and no charge could be included for services so rendered.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY TREASURER—MAY BE MANDAMUSED TO PUBLISH TAX RATE.

The county treasurer may be compelled by mandamus to make the publication of the tax rate in two newspapers as provided in Section 2648 and 6252 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

HON C. M. CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Waverly, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of November 28, 1918, as follows:

> "Referring to Section 2648 and 6252 G. C. Section 2648 specifically commands the county treasurer to publish the rates of taxation in 'a newspaper having general circulation, etc.'
> Section 6252 provides that such notices shall be inserted in two newspapers, but does not state who shall cause the publication to be made.
> Suppose the county treasurer inserts such notice in one newspaper, as provided by Section 2648, and declines to insert in two papers. Can he be compelled by mandamus, or otherwise, to cause it to be published in two papers?
> I am familiar with the decisions holding the two sections mentioned to be in pari materia; also, that Section 6252 is supplemental to Section 2648.
> So it is not necessary to go into these. Your Opinion No. 1024, given February 20, 1918, also covers the two statutes mentioned thoroughly, but does not answer the question as to whether mandamus would lie. It is this one question on which I now wish your opinion, and would like to have any authorities you may care to cite.

I might state the question a little differently, thus:

Where a statute provides generally that a thing shall be done, but does not state who shall do it, and another statute specifically commands an officer to do a certain thing (as in Section 2648), will not the specific provisions govern as against the general provisions? And would not mandamus lie under Section 2648, and fail under Section 6252?"

Sections 2648 and 6252 of the General Code read:

Section 2648.—"Upon receiving from the county auditor a duplicate of taxes assessed upon the property of the county, the county treasurer shall immediately cause notice thereof to be posted in three places in each township of the county, one of which shall be at the place of holding elections in such township, and also be inserted for six successive weeks in a newspaper having a general circulation in the county. Such notice shall specify particularly the amount of taxes levied on the duplicate for the support of the state government, the payment of interest and principal of the public debt, the support of state common schools, defraying county expenses, repairing of roads, keeping the poor, building of bridges, township expenses and for each other object for which taxes may be levied on each dollar valuation."

Section 6252.—"A proclamation for an election, an order fixing the times of holding court, notice of the rates of taxation, bridge and pike notices, notice to contractors and such other advertisements of general interest to the taxpayers as the auditor, treasurer, probate judge or commissioners may deem proper, shall be published in two newspapers of opposition politics at the county seat, if there be such newspapers published thereat. In counties having cities of eight thousand inhabitants or more, not the county seat of such counties, additional publication of such notices shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics in such city. This chapter shall not apply to the publication of notices of delinquent tax and forfeited land sales."

In an opinion rendered to you under date of February 20, 1918, various cases and opinions relative to the relations of the two foregoing sections are discussed, and it was held that "the publication of the rates of taxation shall be made in two newspapers of opposite politics at the county seat, if there was such newspaper published thereat, as provided in Section 6252 G. C., and that such publication shall be made for six successive weeks as provided in Section 2648 G. C." It will be seen from a reading of these decisions and opinions that Section 6252 is supplemental to Section 2648 and that the two sections are in pari materia, and are to be read and construed together. This being so, a mandamus proceeding to compel the county treasurer to publish the tax rate would not be brought under either one of the sections separately, but by virtue of the provisions of both sections, since the two sections must be read and construed together to determine the treasurer's duty.

In the case of State of Ohio ex rel. vs. Board of County Commissioners of Preble county, 4 O. N. P., p. 180, application was made by the owners of a newspaper for a peremptory writ of mandamus against the board of county commissioners to compel the commissioners to deliver to the newspaper for publication in their paper the commissioners' financial statement, together with a report of the examiners, as was required by Section 917 R. S. The relators set out in their petition that they were proprietors of the Eaton Weekly Democrat; that there were but two different political parties in the county having a paper published therein and that the paper of the relators was the only Democratic paper printed in the county. The relators further set out that they were taxpayers in the county, both as a firm and individuals. The commissioners maintain that the relators had no capacity to sue or maintain the action and the court said on this point:

> "Clearly, the object and purpose of Section 917 is to provide a way through which the public generally shall be informed as to the manner the commissioners have conducted the business of the county. In the performance of this duty of furnishing this information as to the receipts and expenditures of the county, each citizen and taxpayer is interested, but not differently from any other citizen.
> While the performance of this duty may incidentally result to the material benefit and profit of the printers of weekly newspapers, the law does not and could not give to the printers of newspapers any contractual right in the printing.
> The duty imposed upon the commissioners is to cause the report to be printed. The purpose of the printing is information to the public, and not to furnish employment for the printer.
> The purpose of the law being to give information to the public, each member of the public is alike interested in it and the duty to furnish the information; and hence, the duty of the commissioners to cause the report to be printed, is purely a public duty. The interest of publishers of newspapers is purely incidental.
> The relators aver that there are only two political parties in Preble county having a paper published therein; that the paper printed by them is the recognized organ of the Democratic party, and is the only Democratic paper printed and published in the county, and for this reason they have such a special interest in the publication of the report as to enable them to maintain this suit.
> This allegation, in substance, admits that if there were two Democratic organs printed in the county, that they, the relators, by reason of their being publishers of one, would have no special and forcible right to the report. And we do not think that the accident in not having more than one organ in the county adds anything to their rights.
> The question must be determined by the primary object of the duty enjoined by the statute, and being of the opinion that the duty enjoined upon the commissioners by this statute is purely a public duty, the relators are not the proper parties to invoke the aid of mandamus, and the demurrer must be sustained."

This case followed the view expressed by Judge Shauck in State ex rel. vs. Murphy, 3 C. C., 332, in which case Judge Shauck, quoting from Bobbett vs. State, 10 Kas., 9, said:

> "All citizens are in a certain sense interested in a proper discharge of their duties by public officers, but it is not such an interest as will enable each citizen to describe himself as 'the party beneficially interested.' The party beneficially interested in the discharge of a purely public duty is the public. These considerations all point to the conclusion that a private citizen may not invoke the aid of mandamus to compel the performance of a purely public duty."

Practically the same view was taken in a comparatively recent case of State ex rel. vs. Branson, county treasurer, 12 O. N .P. (n. s.) 590, in which it was held:

> "Mandamus to compel public officials to perform duties required by law can be instituted only by a public officer whose duty it is to enforce the performance of official duty by other officers and by other relators having a direct beneficial interest, or where the public injury will be serious if the duty be not performed, or the proper public officer refuses to bring such proceedings; and hence a mandatory order to compel publication by the county treasurer of the rates of taxation, does not lie upon application of a publisher having no contract to publish the same, notwithstanding relator may own the only newspaper printed in the German language in the county able to qualify under General Code, 2648, 6253."

In that case the court said:

> "In the present case the relator has no right to publish the commissioners' report until the proper contract has been made. It has no interest in this matter except as a taxpayer, and as such can not bring this action to compel the officials in question to do their duty. Such an action must be brought by a public official whose duty it is to enforce official duty on other officials.
> To allow any taxpayer to bring proceedings in mandamus against an official whom he judges is not following his legal duty, would open a fruitful field for annoyance of public officials, and unwise and unnecessary multiplicity of suits. The more orderly way is to leave the instituting of these extraordinary proceedings to the officers clothed by law with the authority to determine when the writ of mandamus should be invoked and to institute the proper proceedings to secure its aid in enforcing official duty."

In the case of State ex rel. Carpenter vs. Fayette county, 22 O. C. C., 433, it was held:

> "Mandamus will lie to compel county commissioners to make the necessary itemized and detailed report of their financial transactions of the preceding year as required by Section 917 R. S., as amended 94 O. L., 400, on the application of publishers of newspapers having the necessary circulation to entitle them to such publication and as taxpayers. It need not be by a public officer. The publishers of newspapers have an individual interest, independent of the public, viz., the right to publish the report, and the benefits derived from the increase of the report in that it increases their fees for publication, upon which they are entitled to maintain the action."

It will be seen from these decisions that there is a conflict of authority in Ohio as to whether an action in mandamus could be brought, in such case as you present, by a taxpayer or the publisher of a newspaper entitled to make the publication. However, all the authorities are agreed that mandamus will lie to compel the publication and that the action can be brought by the proper public officer.

In the case of State ex rel. Monnett, Attorney-General vs. Board of County Commissioners of Preble county, 4 O. N. P., p. 177, it was held that in an action compelling the county commissioners to make a detailed report in writing of their financial transactions, as was required by Sections 917 R. S., the state being the party financially interested, the attorney-general or prosecuting attorney are proper officers to prosecute the action. The court, after stating that the "party beneficially interested," where the duty sought to be enforced is a purely public duty, is the public, concludes that a suit invoking the aid of mandamus to compel the performance of the duty, must be prosecuted in the name of some public officer charged with the duty of seeing that the laws are executed. The court then concludes:

> "The attorney-general of the state, as well as the prosecuting attorney of the county, are such officers charged with the duty of seeing that the laws of the state are executed."

The court adds that it is sustained in its view by numerous reported cases where mandamus proceedings have been prosecuted in the name of these officials, which long continued practice has been acquiesced in both by the bar and the courts.

In view of the above quoted authorities, it is my conclusion that in the case you present mandamus will lie to compel the county treasurer to make the second publication and that such mandamus proceeding would properly be instituted by the prosecuting attorney.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF DELAWARE COUNTY, OHIO—$21,750.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 26, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

> In Re: Bonds of Delaware county, Ohio, in the sum of $21,750.00, in anticipation of the collection of assessments for the improvement of certain designated single county ditches therein.

I have carefully examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners and of other officers of Delaware county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF BEDFORD VILLAGE SCHOOL DISTRICT—$40,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 27, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Bedford Village School district in the sum of $40,000.00 for the purpose of completing and equipping and repairing school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of th proceedings of the board of education of Bedford Village School district relating to the above issue of bonds, and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF LEASES OF CANAL LANDS TO THE NORFOLK & WESTERN RAILWAY COMPANY, JENNIE FRAHM AND W. H. HAYDEN.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1918.

HON. JOHN I. MILLER, Superintendent of Public Works, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 21, 1918, in which you enclose for my approval three leases of canal lands, in triplicate, as follows:

	Valuation.
To Norfolk & Western Railway company, Portsmouth, Ohio, crossing over the Ohio canal at Lockbourne, Ohio	$400 00
To Jennie Frahm, Celina, Ohio, a small tract of land on the south shore of Lake St. Marys, for agricultural purposes	250 00
To W. H. Hayden, Columbus, Ohio, small tract of land on the south shore of Buckeye lake, for landing and agricultural purposes	100 00

I have carefully examined said leases and find them correct in form and legal, and am therefore returning the same to you with my approval endorsed thereon.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOTS NOS. 61, 64, 74 AND 76 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE ADDITION, COLUMBUS, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 28, 1918.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering lots of lands located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin, State of Ohio, and described as follows:

> "Being lots number sixty-one (61), sixty-four (64), seventy-four (74) and seventy-six (76) of Wood Brown Place addition as the same are numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio."

I have examined said abstract and find no material defects in chain of title to said premises as disclosed thereby.

In reference to said lots said abstract does not show any liens or encumbrances on said property, except the taxes for the year 1918 which are small in amount and still unpaid.

I am, therefore, of the opinion that said abstract discloses on December 21, 1918, a good title in said lots sixty-one (61), sixty-four (64), seventy-four (74) and seventy-six (76) in George H. R. Tyler.

While I have passed favorably on the title to these lots I desire to call attention to one matter connected with the title to lots seventy-four (74) and seventy-six (76). On December 17, 1898, Theo. E. Ebright began action in attachment against Daniel W. Brown, trustee, who was at that time owner of lots seventy-four (74) and seventy-six (76). On December 17, 1898, an affidavit for attachment was filed to the effect that the defendant was a non-resident of the state of Ohio. On December 17, 1898, an affidavit was filed for service by publication upon the defendant stating that he resided in the state of Arizona and that his residence was not known and could not with reasonable diligence be ascertained. This affidavit for service by publication was sufficient under the statute, but the affidavit for attachment was not sufficient in that it merely alleged that defendant was a non-resident of the state of Ohio; so that on December 24th, 1898, an additional affidavit for attachment was filed setting out that the defendant was not only not a resident of the state of Ohio, but that he absconded to defraud his creditors. This brought it within the statute providing for attachment. On the same day an additional affidavit for service by publication was made containing the same allegations as the first affidavit for publication, but those affidavits were filed after the first insertion of the notice was made in a newspaper. The question might arise as to whether this would be good service upon the defendant, but inasmuch as the first affidavit insofar as it applied to service by publication was good, and only the affidavit for attachment was defective, it is my opinion that the above irregularity would not in any way vitiate the service by publication and that due service was had upon the defendant and that all proceedings in reference to said suit were regular. Hence, I conclude as above set out.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF VILLAGE OF CORTLAND, OHIO—$3,500.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Cortland, Ohio, in the sum of $3,500 for the purpose of providing a fund for the purchase of certain fire apparatus.

Under date of December 7, 1918, I addressed an opinion to you disapproving the above issue of bonds for the reason that the amount of said bonds exceeded the amount of bonds which the council of the village was authorized to issue during the current fiscal year without a vote of the electors, on the tax duplicate valuation of taxable real and personal property in the village, which was stated in the transcript as being $674,560.00.

After this opinion was addressed to you I received a communication from the solicitor of the village advising that the statement in the transcript with respect to the tax duplicate valuation of the taxable real and personal property in the village was a mistake and I am now in receipt of an affidavit of the deputy auditor of Trumbull county advising that as a matter of fact such tax duplicate valuation is $961,950.00. This new statement of fact, which is made a part of the transcript, obviates the objection voiced in the opinion above referred to, and inasmuch as no other objections to the validity of the proceedings relating to this bond issue appear on a consideration of the transcript, I am of the opinion that said proceedings are in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind and that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said village to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT—RULE 14 OF INDUSTRIAL COMMISSION NOT WARRANTED.

Rule 14 of the Industrial Commission of Ohio, relating to self-insuring employers, which in effect provides for an ex-parte investigation of each industrial accident occurring in the establishment of such non-insuring employer and the issuance of orders compelling such non-insuring employer to pay the proper compensation to the injured workman or his dependents in case of death, is not warranted by the Workmen's Compensation act; the only way in which the Industrial Commission can properly acquire jurisdiction directly to order the payment of compensation in case of industrial accidents occurring in the establishment of non-insuring employers is upon complaint or application filed by the workman or his dependents under what is known as Section 27 of the Workmen's Compensation act.

But the commission does have continuing supervision over non-insuring employers and their conduct under the law for the purpose of periodically determining their fitness to continue to carry their own insurance, and for this purpose the commission may make such investigation as it sees fit to determine whether or not a particular self-insuring employer is complying with the law in the payment of compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1918.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Claim No. 20,690, Section 22, Dan O'Brien, deceased.

I am in receipt of your letter of recent date with respect to the above entitled claim, which raises a question of general importance as shown by the following quotation from your letter:

"The facts in this case are that one Dan O'Brien was killed while in the course of his employment with the Warren City Tank and Boiler company, January 26, 1916. At the time of his death he was earning a weekly wage of $13.50. He was 25 years of age and unmarried. The employer had elected to carry its own insurance under the provisions of Section 22 of the Compensation law.

The employing company filed a first notice of death , our form C-51, February 9, 1916. Deceased's mother as administratrix of his estate filed a civil action for damages in the court of common pleas of Trumbull county, Ohio, April 8, 1916, alleging that the deceased's death had been caused by the negligence of the employing company, and that she and deceased's father had been damaged in the sum of $20,000.00. The employer filed a motion to require plaintiff to make the petition more definite and certain.

The motion was overruled by the court and the employer given leave to answer, but no answer was filed.

The commission received from the employer a final report of accident, our Form C-61, February 28, 1918, the only statement being:

'The widow (apparently meaning the mother) of the deceased refused to accept compensation and brought suit against the employer.'

The employer further provided the information that the civil action for damages above mentioned was terminated by the jury returning a verdict against the employer in the sum of $1,050.00. This amount, we may assume, was paid by the employer.

The 'Final Report of Accident and Payment,' our Form C-61, was presented to the commission for its approval under the practice prescribed by rule 14 of the rules of the commission applicable to claims arising under the provisions of Section 22 of the Compensation law, which is as follows:

'Upon receipt of Final Report, as provided for in rule 13 hereof, the same shall be examined and if found to provide for the payment of compensation, etc., in accordance with the provisions of the Compensation act, the award shown therein shall be approved by the commission.

In the event the award shown on said Final Report is not in accord with the provisions of said act, notice of such fact shall be given to the employer forthwith, and it shall be the duty of such employer to immediately pay such award as may be indicated by said notice and to file corrected Final Report.'

During the commission's consideration of the final report, it is apparent that no means had been provided for determining whether deceased's dependents had received compensation equal to that provided by the terms of the Compensation act, and the question arose whether the commission, in view of the civil action for damages, had jurisdiction to investigate and determine whether the proper amount of compensation had been paid, and whether it could lawfully make an order requiring payment of the proper amount of compensation. It was upon this question that your opinion was requested.

You may assume that the civil action above mentioned was founded merely upon negligence, and did not involve the violation of a lawful requirement pertaining to the safety of employes; also, that there was no allegation that deceased's injury was occassioned by the wilful act of the employer or any of its agents.

Your opinion will be of assistance to the commission not only in the above entitled case, but also in several others involving the same question."

You really ask two questions: First, as to whether the commission has jurisdiction to investigate and determine whether or not in the case mentioned a proper amount of compensation had been paid; and, second, whether the commission could lawfully make an order requiring payment of the proper amount of compensation. In my opinion the commission is without jurisdiction on its own motion to inquire into the payments made by a self-insurer to his injured and the dependents of his killed employes, or to make an effective order compelling the payment of the proper compensation in such cases except for the purpose of determining whether or not the self-insurer should be allowed the privilege of self-insurance for the next premium paying period, and perhaps as a condition of his being allowed such privilege.

It is true that under Section 1465-72 General Code it is the plain duty of such self-insurer to "pay to such injured employes, or to the dependents of employes who have been killed in the course of their employment, * * * the compensation * * * as would have been paid and furnished by virtue of this act under a similar state of facts, by the state liability board of awards out of the state insurance fund, in case said employer had paid the premium * * * into said fund." But while the duty exists, it does not therefore follow that the Industrial Commission, as the State Liability Board of Awards, has any right or power to see that it is discharged. The law might provide other means of securing the performance of this duty than through agency of the Industrial Commission. Therefore we must look elsewhere in the act to find just what function is to be performed by the commission in case this duty is not properly discharged. I find full provision on this subject in Section 1465-74 of the General Code, which provides in part as follows:

"* * * any employe whose employer has elected to pay compensation to his injured, or to the dependents of his killed employes in accordance with the provisions of Section twenty-two hereof (Section 1465-69 G. C., supra), may, in the event of the failure of his employer to so pay such compensation or furnish such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services and attention or funeral expenses, file his application with the state liability board of awards for the purpose of having the amount of such compensation and such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services and attention or funeral expenses determined; and thereupon like proceedings shall be had before the board and with like effect as hereinbefore provided" (with respect to the case of employers who fail to comply in any respect with the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation act and elections by their employes to secure compensation in lieu of damages.)

> And the state liability board of awards shall adopt and publish rules and regulations governing the procedure before the board provided in this section, and shall prescribe forms of notices and the mode and manner of serving the same in all claims for compensation arising under this section. * * *."

This provision makes it reasonably clear that the relation, so to speak, of the Industrial Commission to the self-insuring employer is exactly the same with respect to the enforcement of the payment of proper compensation as is its relation to the non-insuring employer; that is to say, in a single section—popularly called Section 27—the Industrial Commission is authorized to proceed in exactly the same way in the case of an employe of a non-insuring employer who has elected to claim compensation instead of damages and in the case of an employe of a self-insuring employer who complains that such employer has not paid the proper compensation.

If it were the duty or the power of the Industrial Commission to act on its own motion in such cases upon receipt of the accident reports and final reports prescribed by its rules, there would be no necessity for any such provision as that last above quoted. The fact that there is such a provision in the statute is evidence enough to satisfy me that the legislature did not intend that the Industrial Commission should have any such power as your question seems to assume that it has. In fact, we are dealing with a statute which confers a species of administrative jurisdiction upon the Industrial Commission, which is the creature of statute; that is to say, we have in the latter part of Section 27 a grant of power to the Industrial Commission to make an order which shall affect the legal rights and pecuniary interests of a citizen. Statutes containing such grants of power are peculiarly subject to the operation of the rule of construction to the effect that the expression of one thing is the exclusion of all others. Hence I am clearly of the opinion that the only way in which the Industrial Commission can directly enforce the payment of the proper compensation by a self-insuring employer is upon application of the injured employe or his dependents. So that if the self-insuring employer should make a settlement with the injured employe or his dependents whereby they were to receive a lesser amount than the proper compensation which it is the duty of the employer to pay in such case, and the employe or his dependents, as the case might be, should be satisfied with such settlement and take no steps to complain thereof by application to the Industrial Commission, that would be the end of the matter so far as the payment of compensation in that case were concerned. It would simply be no concern of the Industrial Commission that due compensation had not been paid.

In arriving at this conclusion I have not been unmindful of the broad power of the Industrial Commission to adopt rules to govern it in the administration of the Workmen's Compensation act. For example, I have noted Section 1465-44 giving to the commission the authority, among other things, to adopt rules governing the nature and extent of the proofs and evidence, etc., to establish the right to benefits from the state insurance fund and the forms of application of those claiming to be entitled to benefits or compensation from the state insurance fund. Admitting that the phrase "the state insurance fund" is broad enough to include the bond liability of self-insurers—a conclusion apparently reached by the supreme court in a recent case involving the interpretation of a like phrase which occurs in Section 1465-90 of the General Code—yet the authority to adopt rules found in Section 1465-44 extends only to the regulation of the nature and extent of proof to establish the right to benefits and the regulation of the forms of application, etc. It does not extend to the adoption of a rule by which the Industrial Commission might confer upon itself power to intervene in a matter which under the statutes might be no concern of its.

So also with respect to Section 1465-55 which gives to the state liability board of awards the power to > "adopt rules and regulations with respect to the collection, maintenance and disbursement of the state insurance fund."

I find it impossible to accept the principle of the decision of the supreme court to which I have referred as applicable to the interpretation of this section. Obviously the phrase "state insurance fund" here used is a thing that is to be collected, maintained and disbursed. It must refer to the fund that is to be in the custody of the treasurer of state subject to disbursement on voucher, etc.—something that is to be collected before it is to be disbursed. Especially in view of the express provision of Section 27 and the operation of the principle of statutory interpretation which I have mentioned in connection with that express provision, I can reach no other conclusion than that Section 1465-55 does not confer upon the commission authority to take any active steps directly to force a self-insuring employer to pay the proper compensation to his employe.

I do not find in the statute any other provision authorizing the adoption of rules such as your rule 14 as you have quoted it, excepting the specific one which you apparently cite as authority for the adoption of the rule, viz: Section 1465-69 G. C. (Section 22 of the act). That section provides, in part, as follows:

> "* * * such employers who will abide by the rules of the State Liability Board of Awards and as may be of sufficient financial ability or credit to render certain the payment of compensation to injured employes or to the dependents of killed employes, and the furnishing of medical, surgical, nursing and hospital attention and services and medicines, and funeral expenses equal to or greater than is provided for in this act. * * * may, upon a finding of such facts by the State Liability Board of Awards elect to pay individually * * * such compensation, and furnish such medical, surgical, nursing and hospital services and attention and funeral expenses directly to such injured or the dependents of such killed employes; * * and said board shall make and publish rules and regulations governing the mode and manner of making application and the nature and extent of the proof required to justify such finding of facts by the board as to permit such election * * * one of which rules shall provide that all employers electing directly to compensate their injured and the dependents of their killed employes as hereinbefore provided, shall pay into the state insurance fund such amount or amounts as are required to be credited to the surplus * * *."

In connection with this section it is to be observed that the rules and regulations which the board is to make are to govern the mode and manner of making application for permission to carry one's own insurance and the nature and extent of the proof required to justify a finding of facts by the board so as to permit such election. Your rule 14, if it is to be justified at all, can only be supported as a means of advising the commission as to the degree to which self-insurers are following the law. The only action the commission can take under Section 22 is to refuse to the employer the privilege of electing to carry his own insurance.

In view of the conclusions which I have previously expressed, I have not gone into the interesting question respecting the situation of the dependents of the killed employe in the case inquired about should they decide to apply to the Industrial Commission under Section 27; nor have I considered the question as to whether such conduct on the part of the employer and the dependents as is described in your letter would amount to such a violation of the spirit of the law as to enable the commission to find as a fact that the employer in question is not of "sufficient financial ability or credit to render certain the payment of compensation to injured employes, etc.", or is not one who "will abide by the rules of the state liability board of awards." I may say, however, that I interpret the phrase last quoted rather liberally and, as previously intimated, I have no hesitancy in advising the Industrial Commission that any employer who by any scheme of overreaching might evince a disposition to avoid the payment of proper compensation might lawfully be denied the privilege of carrying his own insurance for the succeeding premium paying period.

If the commission wishes further advice on this feature of the question I should be glad to give it. I stop here, however, because I desire to make it clear that in my opinion rule 14 of the commission governing self-insuring employers, if intended to enable the commission directly to compel a self-insuring employer to pay the proper amount of compensation in each case without any application being made to the commission under Section 27 by the employe or his dependents, is illegal and void under the statutes as they now exist. This conclusion leads to the following answers to your specific questions:

(1) The commission may investigate and determine whether the proper amount of compensation was paid in this case for the purpose only of making up its mind whether or not the employer has complied with the rules of the commission, as bearing upon its fitness to continue as a self-insurer.

(2) The commission may not in any real sense determine the amount of compensation in this case, nor may it make any order requiring the payment of any amount of compensation unless the dependents of the killed employe file an application under Section 27 of the Workmen's Compensation act for this purpose; but the commission may, in my opinion, require the payment of proper compensation in any given case in which no application has been made under Section 27 as a guarantee of trustworthiness under Section 22 of the act, and hence as a condition of being allowed to continue as a self-insurer under the terms of that section. As to whether or not such an order ought to be made in the case inquired about I express no opinion, but shall be glad to consider this point if advised that the commission would make such an order for such a purpose.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

STATE HIGHWAY COMMISSIONER—CANNOT ACCEPT PART OF ROAD IMPROVED.

Under the provisions of Section 1212 G. C. (106 O. L. 636), the state highway commissioner can not accept a part of a road included in a contract, pay the full contract price for the particular part completed and relieve the contractor from all obligations in connection therewith.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1918.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication in reference to the contract for the construction of Section M, I. C. H. No. 3, Cleveland-Sandusky road, Lorain county, which reads in part as follows:

"I am quoting hereunder entry upon the journal of the Highway Advisory board as of September 24, 1918:

'Lorain County—Section "M", I. C. H. No. 3, Cleveland-Sandusky road—contractor requests that state accept west half of improvement.

Mr. Hahn, representing Mr. Sigmund Korach, together with Mr. Korach, and Mr. Donnelly of The Utilities Contracting Co., were present, and Mr. Hahn narrated the incidents relating to the improvement of Section "M", Inter-county highway No. 3, Cleveland-Sandusky road, Lorain county, from the date of contract with The Public Contracting Co., in May, 1916, to the present. Mr. Hahn dwelt upon the fact that Mr. Sigmund Korach was persuaded by Mr. Nathan Siegel, practically the sole owner of The Public Contracting Co., to reindemnify the surety on the bond of The Public Contracting Co. for the above mentioned improvement and that Mr. Korach's losses as a result of said reindemnification and owing to conditions disadvantageous to the contractor, were about $75,000.00.

Mr. Hahn stated that the contract for the above mentioned improvement consists of a nine mile stretch beginning at the city limits of Lorain and extending easterly to the Cuyahoga county line, and stated further that the road practically divides itself into two lengths of almost equal size, that the work on the westerly half of the road has practically been completed with the exception of the bermes and ditches.

Mr. Hahn requested that the State Highway department accept the westerly section of the road lying between the Steve-Moore road on the east and the Lorain city limits on the west, subject to the requirements that the contractor complete the bermes and ditches. Such action on the part of the state, Mr. Hahn stated, would release a considerable sum of money which is needed to help complete the eastern section of the road and would release the contractor from responsibility owing to the traffic which now passes over the westerly half of the road. * * *.'"

You ask me to advise you what action may be taken by your department in response to the request of the above mentioned contractor.

Briefly stated, the facts are as follows:

1. The Public Contracting Co. entered into a contract with the state highway commissioner in May, 1916, for the construction of the above designated road. The National Surety Co. signed the bond which is required by law, in favor of The Public Contracting Co., but before so doing a friend of the principal stockholder of The Public Contracting Co. signed an indemnity bond in favor of the National Surety Co.

The improvement of this road did not progress as well as the parties interested had hoped, due mainly to a rise in the price of material and in the cost of labor, and up to the present time Mr. Sigmund Korach, who signed the indemnity bond for the National Surety Co., has already paid $86,000.00 on the improvement and to keep the same moving.

2. The road to be improved is about nine miles in length and naturally divides itself into two parts of almost equal length, each part being about four and one-half miles long. The one part is practically complete and is being used by the public for travel. Furthermore, the part that is complete connects with another road which gives easy access to the city of Cleveland by making a little detour.

The contractor is in need of more funds with which to prosecute the work yet to be done upon this improvement and Mr. Korach asks if it would be possible for the state to pay to the contractor the full half of the contract price and accept the half of the road as fully completed and thus relieve the contractor from further responsibility, and what is more, give him funds with which he might be able to complete the road without further loss to the contractor and especially to Mr. Korach himself.

The facts in this case are so much in favor of Mr. Korach, when viewed from an equitable standpoint, that I have withheld an answer, hoping that the highway department might be able to work out a plan by which in equity it could pay the contractor the full contract price for the half of the road completed.

When viewed under strictly legal principles, it seems impossible for me to advise that the law will permit the carrying out of the above request. This contract was let under the Cass Highway act and so the provisions of that act apply. The particular provision of that act which applies is found in Section 1212 G. C., which reads as follows: (106 O. L. 636)

> "Section 1212.—* * * The payment of the cost of the construction of such improvement shall be made as the work progresses upon estimates made by the engineer in charge of such improvement, and upon approval of the state highway commissioner. No payment by the state, county or township, on account of a contract for any improvement under this chapter shall, before the completion of said contract, exceed eighty-five per cent. of the value of the work performed to the date of such payment. Fifteen per cent. of the value of the work performed shall be held until the final completion of the contract in accordance with the plans and specifications."

This section clearly provides that no payment by the state, on account of a contract for any improvement, shall, before the completion of said contract, exceed eighty-five per cent. of the value of the work performed to the date of such payment, and to make it absolutely clear what the legislature had in mind, it further provided that fifteen per cent. of the value of the work performed shall be held "until the final completion of the contract in accordance with the plans and specifications."

It goes without argument that the construction of said nine miles of road was let in one contract. It was not two contracts, each one providing for the construction of four and one half miles of road; neither is it one contract for two sections of road of four and one-half miles each; but it is a contract for the construction of nine miles of road as a whole.

The statute provides that no more than eighty-five per cent of an estimate made at any time shall be paid to the contractor before the work is fully completed and that fifteen per cent. of the value of the work must be retained until the final completion of the contract. The meaning of these provisions is so evident that one would have to ignore them entirely to arrive at a conclusion that the state may pay one-half of the contract price to the contractor upon his having completed half the mileage involved in the contract, thus paying him the fifteen per cent. as well as the eighty-five per cent. which the statute provides must be retained until the final completion of the work.

There is another matter to which I will direct your attention. However, I do not consider this suggestion as vital as the one above referred to. The contract contained the following provision:

> "Until final acceptance by the commissioner, the work shall be under the contractor's charge and care, and he shall take every necessary precaution against accident or injury to the improvement or any part thereof, by the action of the elements or from any other cause whatsoever, whether arising from the execution or non-execution of the work. The contractor shall rebuild, repair, restore and make good, at his own expense, all injuries, or damages to any portions of the work occasioned by accidental causes, or by the action of the elements or from any causes whatsoever, before the final acceptance of the work by the commissioner. The contractor shall hold the state and county harmless from any claims for injuries to structures or from any damage to persons or property occasioned by any neglect, default, want of proper care, or misconduct on the part of the contractor or any one in his employ, during the continuance of this contract."

This provision was evidently inserted with the intention that the contractor would be responsible as therein set out, until the state accepted the work as being fully completed. However, one might with a fairly liberal construction be able to construe this provision in favor of the contractor and the indemnitor of the surety company, but as said before, it is not possible to construe the provisions of the above section of the General Code in favor of the contractor and his indemnitor.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

OFFICES COMPATIBLE—CONTRACTOR WITH STATE HIGHWAY DEPARTMENT AND LEGISLATOR.

A person holding a contract with the state of Ohio for the construction of a highway may qualify as a member of the General Assembly and hold office therein and still retain the benefits of his contract with the state. Neither Section 4 of Article II of the Constitution nor Section 15 G. C. would prohibit this.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1918.

HON. GEORGE S. YORK, Member of the General Assembly, Greenville, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication which reads as follows:

"I have been elected to the General Assembly, as a member from Darke county, Ohio, having been elected at the general election in November, 1918.

I wish to have your opinion whether there is anything in my occupation or work which will in any way conflict with any of the laws of the state, or which will in any way affect my status as a member of the new General Assembly. The situation is as follows:

In partnership with one E. E. Studabaker, under the firm name of York and Studebaker, in October, 1917, we bid for and were awarded a contract for building a section of state highway, under the state highway department. This work is still uncompleted, there being three or four weeks work yet to perform.

Kindly inform me whether there is anything arising from this contractual relation with one branch of the state work, which would affect my status as a member of the assembly, or which would in any way conflict with any laws of the state."

We will first consider the constitutional provision which pertains to the office of member of the general assembly in reference to the matter about which you inquire. Section 4 of Article II of the Constitution reads as follows:

"No person holding office under the authority of the United States, or any lucrative office under the authority of this state, shall be eligible to, or have a seat in, the General Assembly; but this provision shall not extend to township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public, or officers of the militia."

It will be seen that in so far as the provisions of the constitution are concerned, there is no inhibition upon your holding the office of member of the General Assembly and at the same time being under contract with the state highway department for the building of a certain highway.

We will next turn to the provisions of our statutes in regard to the inhibitions placed upon members of the General Assembly to hold other positions and employments. Section 15 G. C. reads as follows:

"No member of either house of the General Assembly except in compliance with the provisions of this act shall:

1. Be appointed as trustee or manager of a benevolent, educational, penal or reformatory institution of the state, supported in whole or in part by funds from the state treasury.

2. Serve on any committee or commission authorized or created by the General Assembly, which provides other compensation than actual and necessary expenses;

3. Accept any appointment, employment or office from any committee or commision authorized or created by the General Assembly, or from any executive, or administrative branch or department of the state, which provides other compensation than actual and necessary expenses.

Any such appointee, officer or employee who accepts a certificate of election to either house shall forthwith resign as such appointee, officer or employee and in case he fails or refuses to do so, his seat in the General Assembly shall be deemed vacant. Any member of the General Assembly who accepts any such appointment, office or employment, shall forthwith resign from the General Assembly and in case he fails or refuses to do so, his seat in the General Assembly shall be deemed vacant. But the provisions of this section shall not apply to school teachers, township officers, justices of the peace, notaries public or officers of the militia."

Your being a contractor with the state could come under neither subdivision 1 nor 2 of this section, and it remains to be determined whether it comes under subdivision 3. You are not holding any appointment, but are you holding an employment with an administrative branch or department of the state? My view is that you are not. I do not think the term "employment" in this section was intended to embrace such a relationship as that of contractor and contractee, which seems clear from the following language:

"* * * which provides other compensation than actual and necessary expenses * * *."

This language could hardly be said to be used in reference to a contractor with a department of the state. There is a difference, recognized by the courts, between mere employment and contractual rights.

In Farmer vs. St. Croix Power Co., 117 Wis. 76, the court on p. 87, after quoting various definitions given by lexicographers, reached the following conclusion from said definitions:

> "Thus it will be seen, without any extended analysis of the various lexical definitions, that the significant element in the relation of an employe and his employer, specifically considered, is personal service; while the significant element in such relation between a contractor and his principal is the work as an entirety to be performed by him."

In Lang vs. Simmons, 64 Wis. 525, on p. 530 in the opinion the court uses the following language:

> "We think it very clear that servants, laborers or employes, who can be said to earn wages of an employer must hold such a relation to the employer that he can direct and control them in and about the work which they are doing for him."

In Campfield vs. Lang, 25 Fed. 128, 131 (Wis.), the court uses the following language:

> "A servant is one who is engaged not merely in doing work or services for another, but who is in his service, usually upon or about the premises or property of his employer, and subject to his direction and control therein, and who is generally liable to be dismissed. If a person is engaged under a contract in an independent operation, not subject to the direction and control of his employer, the relation is not regarded as that of master and servant, but is said, in modern phrase, to be that of contractor and contractee."

Hence in view of what evidently was the intent and purpose of the General Assembly in enacting this section and in view of the meaning which courts ordinarily give the terms "employee" and "contractor," it is my opinion that a person holding a contract with the state highway commissioner for the construction of a highway could qualify as a member of the General Assembly and still retain the contract which he has with the state.

I might also call attention to Sections 12910 and 12911 G. C. and say that I do not feel that either of said sections apply. They apply merely to "the purchase of property, supplies for fire insurance for the county, township, city, village, board of education or a public institution" with which he is connected, or with which he is not connected. Hence I do not feel that either of said sections apply to a state of facts such as you submit.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—TOWNSHIP TRUSTEES—OWNER OF HORSE BITTEN BY DOG CANNOT RECOVER—PERSON BITTEN BY OWN DOG ENTITLED TO PROVISIONS OF SECTION 5851.

1. Under the law a person is not entitled to recover, either from the township trustees or the county commissioners, for an injury to a horse bitten by a dog, when the owner of the horse is also the owner of the dog.

2. Under Section 5851 G. C. a person is entitled to recover from the county commissioners the amount he spends for medical or surgical treatment and the expenditures incident thereto, as a result of being bitten by a dog afflicted with rabies, even though he be the owner of the dog so afflicted.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 31, 1918.

HON. FLOYD E. STINE, Prosecuting Attorney, Medina, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 14, 1918, in which you request my opinion as follows:

> "A man living in this county has presented a bill to the county commissioners for injury to himself and to his horse on account of being bitten by a dog affiicted with rabies. The dog was owned by the injured man. Will you kindly advise whether or not in that case the county commissioners should pay for his Pasteur treatment?"

Your inquiry contains two questions: (1) In reference to injuries to the horse and (2) relative to injuries sustained by the owner of the horse. We will first consider whether the owner of the horse, which was bitten by a dog afflicted with rabies, is entitled to compensation from the county commissioners for injury to the horse.

There are only two provisions of the General Code which would authorize your county commissioners in allowing compensation to the owner of the horse for its injury. The one is Section 5851 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "A person bitten or injured by a dog, cat or other animal afflicted with rabies, if such injury has caused him to employ medical or surgical treatment or required the expenditure of money, within four months after such injury and at a regular meeting of the county commissioners of the county where such injury was received, may present an itemized account of the expenses incurred and amount paid by him for medical and surgical attendance, verified by his own affidavit or that of his attending physician; or the administrator or executor of a deceased person may present such claim and make such affidavit. If the person so bitten or injured is a minor such affidavit may be made by his parent or guardian."

It is clearly evident that the owner of the horse could not recover under this section. It begins with this language:

> "A person bitten or injured by a dog, cat or other animal afflicted with rabies."

This could not be made to apply to a horse bitten or injured by such animals.

The other provision of law is that found in Sections 5840 and 5841 G. C. (107 O. L., 537), which reads as follows:

> "Section 5840.—Any owner of horses, sheep, cattle, swine, mules and goats which have been injured or killed by a dog not belonging to him or harboured on his premises, may present to the township trustees of the township in which such loss or injury occurred, at a regular meeting of said trustees, within six months after such occurrence, a detailed statement of such loss or injury done, supported by his affidavit; that it is a true account of such loss or injury. Such statement shall set forth the kind, grade, quality and value of the horses, sheep, cattle, swine, mules and goats so killed or injured, and the nature and amount of the loss or injury complained of, and shall be supported by the testimony of at least two freeholders who viewed the results of the killing or injury and who can testify thereto."
> "Section 5841.—The owner of such killed or injured horses, sheep, cattle, swine, mules and goats, or the person having charge thereof, must make it clear to the trustees that the loss or injury complained of was not caused in whole or in part by a dog or dogs kept or harboured upon the owner's premises and that the owner of the dog or dogs which caused the loss or injury, is to him unknown; or, if owner is known, he must make it clear to the trustees that a judgment for the damages complained of could not be collected on execution."

These sections clearly evidence the fact that a person can not recover for an injury to a horse, if the dog belongs to the owner of the horse injured, or if the owner of said horse harbors the dog on his premises. The language is "injured or killed by a dog not belonging to him or harboured on his premises, may present to the township trustees," etc.

Section 5841 G. C. provides:

> "The owner * * * or the person having charge thereof, must make it clear to the trustees that the loss or injury complained of was not caused in whole or in part by a dog or dogs kept or harboured upon the owner's premises."

Hence under these two sections, and according to the facts before us, the owner of the horse is not entitled to recover from the county for his loss. Under said sections, the claim must be presented to the township trustees and not to the county commissioners.

In view of all the above, I think it clear that neither the county commissioners nor the township trustees are warranted in law in allowing the claim of the owner of the horse which was injured by a dog belonging to the owner of the horse.

Your next question is whether the owner of said horse and dog can recover for injuries suffered by him from the bite of the dog which was afflicted with rabies. The provision controlling in this matter is Section 5851 G. C., above quoted, which provides:

> "A person bitten or injured by a dog, cat or other animal afflicted with rabies, * * * may present an itemized account," etc.

I can see nothing in this language indicating that the mere fact that a person bitten was the owner of the dog which bit him precludes his recovering under said section. When we consider the nature of the disease known as rabies, I can see no reason why a man should not recover merely because he was bitten by his own dog. Rabies comes upon animals quickly and is the result, usually, of being bitten by some other animal affected with the same disease. So I can see no reason why the person referred to should not recover. But it must be remembered that under this section the only amount that a person is entitled to receive from the county under any event is the expense which he incurs by virtue of employing medical or surgical treatment which required the expenditure of money. It is the amount which the person spends that becomes a claim against the county, and not damages in general which he may have suffered by virtue of being injured by a dog or other animal afflicted with rabies.

Therefore it is my opinion that the person referred to by you may present a claim to the county commissioners for expenses incurred and amount paid by him for medical and surgical attendance, and that the county commissioners would be justified in law in allowing him, what he actually spent for such medical or surgical treatment and the expenditures incident thereto.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SUMMIT COUNTY, OHIO—$30,000.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1919.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Summit county, Ohio, in the sum of $30,000 for the purpose of improving the infirmary building by the erection of a disposal plant and erection of electric transmission line on infirmary grounds.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of county commissioners of Summit county and of other officers relative to the above issue of bonds, and find same to be in substantial conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that bonds covering said issue will, when properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said county, to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COLLATERAL INHERITANCE TAX—COMPUTED ON INTEREST OF EACH INHERITOR.

The exemptions under the collateral inheritance tax law are to be computed on the interests of each inheritor and not upon the estate of the deceased as a whole.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 2, 1919.

HON. DONALD F. MELHORN, Prosecuting Attorney, Kenton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have previously acknowledged your letter of December 20th, in which you request my opinion upon the following facts:

> "X, a resident of Ohio, dies, leaving property within the jurisdiction of this state, worth $5,000.00. Said property passes, in five equal shares, to A, B, C. D, and E. None of such persons sustain to the decedent the relation of father, mother, husband, wife, lineal descendant or adopted child.
> For this reason, said property is subject to the collateral inheritance tax provided for by Section 5331 G. C., namely, 'five per cent, of its value above the sum of five hundred dollars.'
> Query: Is the statutory exemption of $500.00 to be taken only once, and then from the sum total of the whole estate; or, does said exemption apply to the interests of each heir, legatee, or beneficiary?"

You are advised that, in my opinion, the statutory exemption applies to the interests of each beneficiary. This question has been frequently passed upon by this office and by the lower courts of this state, and the rulings are uniform to the effect stated.

> In re: Hooper, 4 N. P. 186; in re: Thomson, 48 Bull. 212; in re: Inheritance Tax, 7 N. P. 547.

In fact no other conclusion is possible under the language of Section 5331 G. C., which fastens the tax upon

> "All property * * which pass by will, etc., * * to a person"; and under Section 5331, which provides that

> "When a person bequeaths or devises property to or for the use of (an exempt person) * * *, and the remainder to a collateral heir, or to a stranger to the blood, the value of the prior estate shall be appraised, * * * and deducted, together with the sum of five hundred dollars, from the appraised value of such property."

Again, Section 5336 provides that

> "An administrator * * * shall not deliver any specific legacy or property subject to such tax to any person until he has collected the tax thereon."

Section 5337 provides that

"When a legacy subject to such tax is charged upon or payable out of real estate, the heir or devisee, * * * shall deduct the tax therefrom * * *."

In short, every bit of internal evidence available on the face of the statute supports the view which I have expressed.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FOOD AND DRUGS—VINEGAR COMPOUND OF SUGAR VINEGAR AND VINEGAR MADE IN PART FROM DISTILLED LIQUOR MAY NOT BE MANUFACTURED OR SOLD IN THIS STATE.

Certain compound vinegar on the market is made by mixing sugar vinegar with distilled vinegar and then diluting the compound. The distilled vinegar is made from distilled liquor produced from grain. This vinegar compound has a brown color and is for that reason more marketable than distilled vinegar, which is practically colorless.

HELD: Such vinegar compound may not be manufactured for sale, sold, delivered, offered or exposed for sale in this state, nor made or had in possession with intent to sell or deliver.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

The State Board of Agriculture, Dairy and Food Division, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—I have your request for my opinion as follows:

"A certain vinegar company in this state has put upon the market a vinegar which is being sold as a 'compound of distilled and sugar vinegar.' This vinegar is made by mixing sugar vinegar with distilled vinegar and then diluting the compound. The distilled vinegar is made from distilled alcohol produced from grain. This vinegar compound has a brown color and for that reason is more marketable than the distilled vinegar, which is practically colorless.

Kindly advise me whether this vinegar compound may be placed on the market for sale in this state?"

Section 5786 of the General Code reads in part as follows:

"No person shall manufacture, offer or expose for sale, sell or deliver, or have in possession with intent to sell or deliver vinegar not in compliance with the provisions of this chapter. * * *."

Section 5787 G. C. governs the process by which cider or apple vinegar may be made. Section 5788 G. C. lays down similar provisions relative to wine or grape vinegar, and Section 5789 regulates the manufacture of malt vinegar.

Section 5790 G. C., which relates to distilled vinegar, reads as follows:

> "Vinegar manufactured, offered or exposed for sale, sold or delivered or in the possession of a person with intent to sell or deliver, under the name of distilled vinegar, shall be the product made wholly or in part by the acetous fermentation of dilute distilled alcohol and shall contain in one hundred cubic centimeters, at a temperature of twenty degrees centigrade, not less than four grams of acetic acid, and shall be free from coloring matter, added during, or after distillation and from coloring other than that imparted to it by distillation. Vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor shall be branded 'distilled vinegar,' and free from coloring matter, added during or after distillation, and from color—other than that imparted to it by distillation."

It will be noted that this section provides that vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor shall be branded "distilled vinegar" and shall be free from coloring matter added during or after distillation, and from "color other than that imparted to it by distillation."

The first question that confronts us is whether the vinegar which you refer to is "'vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor." You advise us that this vinegar partly consists of distilled vinegar made from alcohol and it becomes necessary to decide whether "distilled alcohol" is "distilled liquor."

It might be urged that because the legislature used the words "distilled alcohol" in the first part of this section, and the words "distilled liquor" in the latter part, it was drawing a distinction between alcohol and liquor. However, a great deal of whatever force this argument has is overcome by an examination of the original act.

Section 5790 is composed of parts or Section 1 and 2 of an act passed February 28, 1908, entitled "an act to amend Sections 1 and 2 of an act entitled an act to prevent the adulteration of vinegar, passed April 14, 1888, as amended March 30, 1896," found in 99 O. L., p. 28. Subdivision 4 of Section 1 of that act read:

> "(4) Any vinegar manufactured for sale, offered for sale, exposed for sale, sold or delivered or in the possession of any person with intent to sell or deliver, under the name of distilled vinegar, shall be the product made wholly or in part by the acetous fermentation of dilute distilled alcohol, and shall contain in one hundred (100) cubic centimeters (at a temperature of twenty (20) degrees centigrade), not less than four (4) grams of acetic acid, and shall be free from coloring matter, added during, or after distillation, and from coloring other than that imparted to it by distillation."

Section 2 of that act read:

> "All vinegar made by fermentation and oxidation without the intervention of distillation shall be branded 'fermented vinegar'; with the name of the fruit or substance from which the same is made. And all vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor shall be branded 'distilled vinegar,' and all such distilled vinegar shall be free from coloring matter added during or after distillation and from color other than that imparted to it by distillation. * * *."

It will be seen from this that the words "distilled alcohol" and "distilled liquor" were used not in the same section but in different sections of the original act, and therefore if it is found that the word "liquor" is frequently used as referring to alcohol, it would seem that the words "distilled alcohol," appearing in the first part of Section 5790, and the words "distilled liquor," in the latter part, do not necessarily indicate a legislative reference to different products.

Webster defines the word "liquor" as follows:

> "Any liquid or fluid substance, as water, milk, blood, sap, juice and the like.
> "2. Especially alcoholic or spirituous fluid, either distilled or fermented; a decoction, solution or tincture."

The New Standard Dictionary gives the following definition:

> "Any alcoholic or intoxicating liquid, specif., one of a spirituous character, as distinguished from beer, wine, etc."

In Houser vs. State, 18 Ind., 106, 107, it is stated:

> "Liquor is said by Webster to be a liquid or fluid substance, a word extending in its general signification to water, milk, blood, sap, juice, etc., but its most common application is to spirituous fluids, whether distilled or fermented."

It would seem from these definitions that it would not be at all unusual to refer to alcohol as liquor, and when I take into consideration other provisions of the act, I feel satisfied that it was in this sense that the legislature used the word liquor in this act. For instance, Section 5790 provides that vinegar manufactured or sold "under the name of distilled vinegar" shall be "the product made wholly or in part by the acetuous fermentation of dilute distilled alcohol." Now if the word "liquor," as used in the latter part of the section, does not mean the same as alcohol. as used in the first part of the section, there would here be an irreconcilable conflict in the two provisions. Give, however, alcohol and liquor the same meaning, the conflict disappears and the different provisions of the act are in perfect accord.

Because of these authorities and different provisions of the act referred to, I am convinced that the words "distilled liquor," as used in Section 5790 G. C., are used synonymously with "distilled alcohol," as used in that section. The vinegar compound, to which you refer, being made, then, from sugar vinegar and vinegar made in part from distilled liquor, it follows that the provisions in the last sentence of Section 5790 apply to this vinegar compound. The distilled vinegar used in making this compound being such distilled vinegar as is made from "distilled liquor," I fail to see how it could be successfully urged that the compound vinegar is not a "vinegar made wholly or in part from distilled liquor."

It being settled, then, that the provisions of the latter part of Section 5790 G. C., apply to this vinegar compound, let us see which, if any of them, are being violated in the manufacture and sale of such vinegar compound. The provisions of this section applying to this compound are, first, such vinegar shall be branded as distilled vinegar; second, such vinegar shall be free from coloring matter added during or after distillation; and, third, such vinegar shall be free from coloring other than that imparted to it by distillation.

It will be noticed that the first provision requires this product to be labeled as "distilled vinegar." The product is, however, labeled as "compound of distilled and sugar vinegar." I understand that it is the opinion of those who are manufacturing this compound because the words "distilled vinegar" appear on the label, this provision is complied with notwithstanding that these words appear in conjunction with other words. I am not inclined to believe this contention sound. It seems to me that when the legislature said such vinegar should be branded "distilled vinegar" it meant it should be branded "distilled vinegar" and nothing else. In other words, where vinegar was made wholly or in part from distilled liquor, the legislature wanted it sold as "distilled vinegar." However, I do not believe it necessary to finally pass here upon this question, since I think that we may reach a conclusion independently of this provision.

The second provision is that the vinegar compound must be free from coloring matter added during or after distillation. In the case you submit the color is given to this compound vinegar by the sugar vinegar which it contains. While it might be that the real purpose of the addition of this sugar vinegar is to give color to the distilled vinegar, I am not unmindful of a certain line of authorities that hold that the words "coloring matter" extend only to coloring substances used merely or chiefly for coloring purposes, and the words "coloring matter" cannot always be interpreted to include materials employed chiefly to make up the substance of the compound which imparts some color only as a necessary incident of their use. The purpose of using this sugar vinegar is a question of fact, and in the absence of more detailed information concerning this product, I am not inclined to hold its sale a violation of this second provision referred to.

The third provision of Section 5790, applying to this vinegar compound, is that it shall be free from color other than that imparted to it by distillation. Distilled vinegar is white or about the color of alcohol. The vinegar compound which is being sold is brown. Nothing can be clearer than that this vinegar compound, although it may possibly be free from coloring matter, is certainly not free "from color other than that imparted to it by distillation." To my mind this third provision of Section 5790, referred to above, is clearly violated by the manufacture and sale of this vinegar. It being violative of Section 5790 it is also violative of Section 5786, which provides in part:

> "No person shall manufacture, offer or expose for sale, sell or deliver, or have in possession with intent to sell or deliver vinegar not in compliance with the provisions of this chapter. Vinegar shall be made wholly from the fruit or grain from which it purports, or is represented, to be made and shall not contain a foreign substance or less than four per cent, by weight, of absolute acetic acid."

and of Section 12774, which reads:

> "Whoever manufactures for sale, sells, delivers, offers or exposes for sale, or has in possession with intent to sell or deliver, vinegar not made in compliance with law, or contained in packages not branded in compliance with law, or violates any provision of law relating to vinegar, adulterated vinegar, or 'fermented' or 'distilled' vinegar, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than one hundred dollars or imprisoned not less than thirty days nor more than one hundred days, or both, and pay all necessary costs and expenses incurred in inspecting and analyzing such vinegar."

I am therefore of the opinion that the vinegar compound to which you refer in your communication may not be manufactured for sale, sold, delivered, offered or exposed for sale in this state, nor may it be had in possession with intent to sell or deliver.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF OLD FORT RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, SENECA AND SANDUSKY COUNTIES—$5,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Old Fort Rural School district, Seneca and Sandusky counties, Ohio, in the sum of $5,500 for the purpose of making certain improvements in the public school property of said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Old Fort Rural School district relating to the above issue of bonds, and find same to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering said issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and binding obligations of said school district to be paid in accordance with the terms thereof.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISAPPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WOOSTER CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT—$20,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

The Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.
GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Wooster City School district in the sum of $20,000.00 for the stated purpose of extending the time of certain indebtedness incurred by said school district for the salary of teachers, making needed improvements and current expenses, which indebtedness said school district is unable to pay at maturity by reason of its limits of taxation.

I have examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the board of education of Wooster City School district relating to the above issue of bonds, and find that I am required to disapprove said issue specifically for the reason that the provision for interest and sinking fund levies in the resolution authorizing this issue of bonds does not conform to the requirements of Section 11, Article XII of the State Constitution.

The resolution of the board of education provides that the bonds covering this issue shall be forty in number, of the denomination of $500.00 each; that they shall bear interest at the rate of 5½ per cent per annum, payable semi-annually and be dated January 15, 1919. With respect to the maturity of said bonds, said resolution provides as follows:

> "Two bonds shall be payable each year from January 15, 1926, to and including January 15, 1931.
> Four bonds shall be payable each year from January 15, 1932, to and including January 15, 1938."

The provisions of the resolution with respect to levies for interest and sinking fund purposes to pay the interest on these bonds and to retire the same at maturity requires that for the years 1919 to 1925 inclusive there shall be levied the sum of $1,100 annually for the purpose of paying the interest on the bonds. For the years 1926 to 1931 inclusive, provision is made for the levy of $1,000 annually for the purpose of paying the principal of said bonds and also for the levy of certain specified amount for interest purposes in each of said years. For the years 1932 to 1938 inclusive, provision is made for the levy of $2,000 annually for the purpose of paying principal, and likewise provides for the levy of certain specified amounts during each of said years for the purpose of paying accruing interest on said bonds.

It is apparent from the resolution that no provision is therein made for the levy of taxes for sinking fund purposes during the years 1919 to 1925 inclusive, and in view of the fact that the plain language of Section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution required provision to be made in this resolution for an annual levy of taxes for both interest and sinking fund purposes, this resolution is defective for want of conformity to the provisions of said section of the Constitution.

In view of the fact that I have just addressed to you an opinion disapproving the bonds of another taxing district in this state for the reason that the provisions made for interest and sinking fund levies in the legislation authorizing the bonds did not conform to the constitutional provisions above noted, I do not deem it necessary to pursue the argument further in this opinion, further than to say that this issue of bonds is invalid by reason of the failure of the resolution here in question to conform to the constitutional provisions in the respect above noted.

I note a number of other defects in the proceedings which may properly be noted at this time. As above stated, this issue of bonds is for the purpose of funding certain indebtedness of the school district incurred as stated in the resolution "in paying teachers' salaries, making needed improvements and current expenses." That the salaries of teachers when due are an indebtedness that may properly be funded under the provisions of Section 5656 General Code is a proposition that is not questioned. Neither do I question the right of the board of education to fund by an issue of bonds an indebtedness created by the borrowing of money for the purpose of paying teachers' salaries when such money is borrowed in conformity to the provisions of Section 5656 and 5658 General Code. However, it appears from this resolution that one of the purposes of the proposed bond issue is to fund certain indebtedness incurred by the board of education of the school district in making needed improvements. Notwithstanding the fact that the resolution recites that all of the indebtedness sought to be funded is an existing, binding and valid obligation of the school district, it is not apparent to me on the transcript submitted how an indebtedness created for making improvements can be a valid, legal obligation of the school district in view of the provisions of Section 5660 General Code which requires that before any contract is entered into by the board of education, a certificate must be filed with such board showing that the money necessary to pay the contract is in fund and unappropriated for any other purpose, and in view of the provisions of Section 5661 General Code, which makes void all contracts and agreements other than those specified therein, which are not entered into in conformity with the provisions of Section 5660 General Code. In other words, as I see it, if this indebtedness for making needed improvements does not represent simply wages due to some employe or employes of the board in making such improvement, and said improvements were made on contract or contracts, it was the duty of the board of education to have the money to pay such contract or contracts in fund at the time such contracts were entered into, and if such was not the case, and no certificate or certificates were filed by the clerk that the money needed for said purposes was in the treasury, said contracts are invalid and no legal indebtedness arises by reason of the performance of the same.

It is obvious that the observations just made will apply to some of the items making up the indebtedness for current expenses sought to be funded by this issue of bonds.

No financial statement is appended to or made a part of the transcript as required by the provisions of Section 2295-3 General Code. Such financial statement would in any event be required before this department could approve the bond issue.

In this connection, although for want of such financial statement, I do not know affirmatively that this school district now has an existing and outstanding indebtedness, it may be safely assumed that such is the case, and if such be the case the transcript is further defective for the reason that same does not show that this proposed bond issue has been offered to and rejected by the board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district.

Under the provisions of Section 7619 General Code, a board of education issuing bonds is required to offer said bonds to the board of commisioners of the school district before otherwise disposing of same, and under the provisions of Section 1465-58 General Code, you have authority to purchase only such school bonds as shall have first been offered to and rejected by such board of commissioners of the sinking fund of the school district.

It follows from what has been said above that I am required to disapprove this issue of bonds and to advise you not to purchase same on the present resolution of the board of education.

The transcript submitted is herewith enclosed for return to the authorities of the school district.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—ISSUING SERIAL BONDS MUST PROVIDE FOR ANNUAL SINKING FUND.

Where a political subdivision of the state issues bonds for any purpose Section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution requires provision to be made in the legislation authorizing such issue of bonds for an annual levy of taxes for both interest and sinking fund purposes with respect to such bonds; and where the ordinance of a village authorizing the issue of serial bonds for a municipal purpose provides that the first of said series of bonds shall mature fifteen years from the the date of their issue, and further provides for an annual levy of taxes for interest purposes only during the first fifteen years after the issue of such bonds, and provides for an annual levy of taxes thereafter for both interest and sinking fund purposes until the maturity of said bonds, said provision in the ordinance with respect to tax levies for interest and sinking fund purposes is not a compliance with the provisions of Section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of the village of Batavia, Clermont county, Ohio, for the sum of $6,000.00, for the purpose of supplying a deficiency in the funds of said village.

The above issue of bonds is one provided by ordinance of the council of the village of Batavia, Ohio, pursuant to the authority of a two-thirds vote of the electors of said village for the above stated purpose, under the authority of Section 3931 of the General Code. The transcript submitted discloses a number of defects in the proceedings relating to this issue of bonds, one of which, in my view, is absolutely fatal to the validity of the issue.

The ordinance providing for the above issue of bonds provides that said bonds shall be in the denomination of $500.00 each, numbered from one (1) to twelve (12) inclusive, and that they shall bear interest at the rate of five and one-half per cent per annum, payable semi-annually. With respect to the matter of said bonds the ordinance provides that bond No. 1 shall mature in fifteen years from the date of the sale thereof and that one bond shall become due and payable each year thereafter, bond No. 12 being due and payable twenty-six years from the date of the sale thereof. Section 5 of said ordinance making provision for interest and sinking fund levies with respect to said bonds reads, in part, as follows:

"For the purpose of paying the interest on said bonds and to create a sinking fund sufficient to pay the principal thereof at maturity, there shall be and there is hereby assessed upon all the taxable property of the village of Batavia, Clermont county, Ohio, an annual tax sufficient to raise in the years 1919, 1920, 1921, 1922, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1931, 1932, and 1933 the sum of three hundred and thirty dollars ($330.00), being the interest accruing on said bonds in each of said years, and in years and each of them from 1933 to 1944, both inclusive, the principal sum of five hundred dollars ($500.00), and sufficient also to pay the interest accruing on all bonds remaining unpaid in any year."

In my opinion, the provision thus made for interest and sinking fund levies is not a compliance with the provisions of Section 11 of Article XII of the State Constitution, which reads as follows:

"No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivision thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds, and to provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity."

My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in considering the provisions of the section of the constitution above quoted in an opinion by him under date of September 12, 1914, (Attorney General's Report 1914, Volume II, page 1224) held that where serial bonds are issued by a political subdivision the issuing authority is required by the above noted section of the State Constitution to make provision for an annual levy of taxes for the retirement of the indebtedness so incurred considered as a unit, the levies being substantially equal in amount and distributed over the entire number of years between the incurring of the indebtedness and the date of the last of the series. Mr. Hogan in this opinion says:

"The fundamental and underlying idea of a sinking fund is the equalization of the burden of the indebtedness among the years, or other periods of time between the date of its incurring and that of its maturity. This idea of equality of burden is the ruling and determining factor. For instance, no calculation as to the amount required to be set aside in a given year can be made, except upon the basis or assumption of equality.

In short, then, that is a 'sinking fund' which is accumulated by the periodical setting aside of approximately the same amount, and its investment with a view to accumulating a fund equal to the principal of the indebtedness, when the latter matures.

This is the public policy that is embodied in the constitutional amendment under discussion. * * * The framers of the constitution undoubtedly had in mind the temptation of public officers in common with all human beings to provide for present needs and to let the future take care of itself. Posterity not possessing the immediate and effective privilege of political suffrage, the line of least resistance suggests to the public officer the expediency of ignoring their just rights and catering to the seemingly more pressing desires of present constituents. This tendency when allowed to operate unchecked undoubtedly constitutes one of the greatest evils to which popular governments are subject, and has in it the elements of self-destruction. For if a bonded indebtedness is permitted to be incurred without any obligation to commence accumulation of a redemption fund, or otherwise to provide for its retirement; and if the evil day of making such provision is put off from time to time by officers who will have retired before the bonds become due, then when the date of maturity arrives and the public treasury contains no funds available for payment of the debt, the officials then in office will face the alternative of refunding or repudiation, unless the tax limits permit the production of revenue in a single year sufficient in amount to discharge the indebtedness.

Any one of the three possible consequences of such a course is a great public evil. Repudiation wipes out credit, halts further public improvements, and thus, as I have stated, is destructive of the commonwealth itself.

Refunding casts upon future generations the obligation to pay for an improvement which has been enjoyed in the past and to which the people who have enjoyed it have not contributed, save by way of payment of interest—a tremendous injustice; while discharging the loan out of the proceeds of a single tax levy makes the taxpayers of a given year pay for the improvement of which they have no greater benefit than those of preceding and possibly succeeding years.

So it is that the only sound public policy is that which decrees that the cost of an improvement for the making of which a debt must be created, shall be shared in as equally as possible by the tax paying public which will enjoy the improvement during the life of the indebtedness.

These fundamental considerations then clearly disclose the evil intended to be remedied by Article XII, Section 11, and indicate with accuracy that the requirement respecting provision for a sinking fund is designed to secure equality of the burdens of taxation during the life of an indebtedness; which indeed is the primary purpose of any sinking fund.

This, then, is the intent which in my opinion, must be given effect under Article XII, Section 11, of the constitution. I am of the opinion that serial bonds may be issued as well under this section, as under the former constitution, but I am further of the opinion that in any issue of serial bonds, provision must be made and carried into effect, whereby during the life of the whole indebtedness considered as a unit, the burden of taxation will be equalized and the indebtedness ultimately retired. That being the case, if the series are so arrangd as to fall due at intervals of years; such as every five years, until the last series matures, I would be of the opinion that substantially equal annual levies must be made during the life of the whole indebtedness. That is, during the period between the date of issuance and the date of maturity of the last series. This could be done, and the series could be paid as they fall due."

In other words, as I see it, the plain language of this constitutional provision requires provision to be made in the legislation authorizing the issue for an annual levy of taxes for both interest and sinking fund purposes, and though said constitutional provision is not effective to require that bonds issued should be redeemable in annual installments, the intent thereof "is that a certain sum shall be raised annually in anticipation of payment; and whether paid out in redemption of the bonds annually, or into a sinking fund for their payment at the expiration of a term of years, it is a sufficient compliance with the requirement."

Dillon Municipal Corporations (5th ed.) Volume II, Section 211. Wilkins vs. Waynesboro, 116 Ga. 359. Bruce vs. Pittsburgh, 166 Pa. St., 152.

In this case it may be observed that the constitutional provisions here under consideration did not require the council of the village of Batavia to specify in said ordinance the specific amounts of money to be levied for interest and sinking fund purposes in the years intervening between the issuance of the bonds and the maturity of the last of the series; such provision for interest and sinking fund levies could have been made by council in general terms in keeping with the language of the constitutional provision itself. Inasmuch, however, as council saw fit to specify in said ordinance the particular amounts which should be thereafter levied for said respective purposes in each of the years during the life of these bonds, it was equally necessary that the amounts so specified for levy should be such as to show compliance with the provisions of said section of the State Constitution, which, as above noted, requires an annual levy for both interest and sinking fund purposes. Inasmuch as the provision for such levies does not do this, I do not feel that I have any discretion to do otherwise than to disapprove the bonds.

In addition to the foregoing I note a number of other objections to the proceedings which are of such a nature as to prevent my approval of this issue of bonds without further information correcting the objections which I have in mind.

Tested by the case of Gas and Water Co. vs. City of Elyria, 57 O. S. 374, the resolution of the village council under date of June 24, 1918, providing for the submission of the bond issue proposition to a vote of the electors, seems to be one of a general nature within the provisions of Section 4224 General Code, and, as such, required to be passed in conformity to the provisions of said section; that is, by being fully and distinctly read on three different days or on suspension of this rule by a three-fourth's vote of all elected members of council. It does not appear that this resolution was passed in conformity to the provisions of this section.

The transcript does not show how the returns of the vote cast at the election on the bond issue proposition were canvassed. Section 3931 General Code, providing authority for the issue of deficiency bonds, does not prescribe the machinery with respect to the election on the bond issue proposition required by said section, but I take it that the returns of the vote on the election provided for in this section should be made in the manner required with respct to bond issue elections under the Longworth Law (Section 3945 General Code); that is, in the manner required as to regular elections in the municipal corporation for the election of officers thereof (see Section 5114 G. C.).

There is nothing in the transcript to indicate the legal character of the meeting of council under date of August 19, at which was adopted the ordinance providing for the issue of the above bonds. The transcript recites that said meeting was an adjourned meeting. This being so, it is evident that the legal character of the meeting of August 19, 1918, in turn depends upon the legal character of the meeting from which the adjournment was made. The question of the legality of this meeting becomes one of vital importance for the reason that one of the members of council was absent.

The same observation may be made with respect to the meeting of council under date of June 24, 1918, at which was adopted the resolution providing for the submission of the bond issue question to the vote of the electors of the village. However, any defect in the legal character of this meeting is probably cured by the fact that, apparently, said meeting was attended by all the members of council.

The transcript shows that the ordinance providing for this issue of bonds was so passed on a suspension of the rule requiring ordinances of a general nature to be read on three different days. It does not affirmatively appear, however, that the vote on the suspension of said rule was taken by yeas and nays and entered on the records of council.

The objections last before considered herein can probably be cured by further information, but, in my opinion, the defect in the ordinance with respect to the provision therein made for interest and sinking fund levies is so defective as to require me to disapprove this issue of bonds and to advise you not to purchase th same on the present legislation of the council of said village.

I am enclosing herewith the transcript for return to the village officials.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF SCOTT TOWNSHIP RURAL SCHOOL DISTRICT, MARION COUNTY—$30,000.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Scott Township Rural School district, Marion county, Ohio, in the sum of $30,000.00, for the purpose of purchasing a site for, erecting and equipping a centralized school building in said school district.

I have carefully examined the corrected transcript of the proceedings of the board of education of Scott Township Rural School district, Marion county, Ohio, relating to the above issue of bonds and find said proceedings to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relative to bond issues of this kind.

I am therefore of the opinion that properly prepared bonds covering the above issue will, when the same are properly executed and delivered, constitute valid and subsisting obligations of said school district, to be paid according to the terms thereof.

No bond form of the bonds to be printed covering said issue was submitted with the transcript, and I am therefore retaining said transcript until proper bond form is submitted and approved.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—COUNCIL OF CITY AUTHORIZED TO EMPLOY PERSON TO OBTAIN WAIVERS.

Council of a city has authority to employ a person to obtain waivers of the special assessment limitations from owners of property abutting upon the improvement and may fix the compensation of such person at so much per hour.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—Under favor of November 22, 1918, you submit the following question:

"The council of the city of Barberton, Ohio, has passed an ordinance providing for the employment of a person to obtain waivers of the special assessment limitations from property owners abutting upon certain proposed sewer improvements, and fixed his compensation at 40 cents per hour for time actually employed in obtaining these waivers. Council has further elected a man to this position.

Question: Is such procedure legal?"

Section 4210 General Code provides as follows:

"Within ten days from the commencement of their term, the members of council shall elect a president pro tem, a clerk, and such other employes of council as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation. The officers and employes of council shall serve for two years, but may be removed at any time for cause, at a regular meeting by a vote of two-thirds of the members elected to council."

Under the provisions of this section, council has authority to provide for such other employes " as may be necessary, and fix their duties, bonds and compensation."

The question arises, as to whether or not the person employed, as stated in your inquiry, is to be considered as an employee of council and whether the duties which he wants to perform are for the purposes of legislation.

The first sentence of Section 4211 General Code reads:

"The powers of council shall be legislative only, and it shall perform no administrative duties whatever and it shall neither appoint nor confirm any officer or employe in the city government except those of its own body, except as is otherwise provided in this title. * * *."

From this section the powers of council are legislative only. Section 3818 General Code provides in part as follows:

"A notice of the passage of such resolution shall be served by the clerk of council, or an assistant, upon the owner of each piece of property to be assessed, in the manner provided by law for the service of summons in civil actions. * * *."

This section makes it the duty of the clerk of council to serve notices of the passage of resolution by council, declaring the necessity of making a public improvement to be paid for in whole or in part by special assessments.

Section 3819 General Code limits the amount of assessments which may be placed against abutting property. This section reads:

"The council shall limit all assessments to the special benefits conferred upon the property assessed, and in no case shall there be levied upon any lot or parcel of land in the corporation any assessment or assessments for any or all purposes, within a period of five years, to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent of the actual value thereof after improvement is made. Assessments levied for the construction of main sewers shall not exceed the sum that in the opinion of council would be required to construct an ordinary street sewer or drain of sufficient capacity to drain or sewer the lots of lands to be assessed for such improvement, nor shall any lots or lands be assessed that do not need local drainage or which are provided therewith."

The question then arises as to whether or not abutting property owners may waive by contract or otherwise, the limitations provided for in Section 3819 General Code.

In the case of Thornton vs. City of Cincinnati, 4 C .C. N. S., 31, the first branch of the syllabus reads:

> "The constitutional limitations as to the amount of an assessment for a street improvement may be waived by contract or by the conduct of the parties in pais."

It appears, therefore, that an abutting property owner may waive by contract, the limitations placed by statutes upon the amount which council may levy against property by way of special assessments for improvement. The purpose therefore of securing waivers of the special assessment limitations was to lay the foundation for legislation seeking to make the improvement in question and to make an assessment in excess of the amount limited by statute. This is a legislative function and it is proper for council to employ a person to obtain such waivers and it may fix a compensation of such person at so much per hour.

It is my opinion, therefore, that the procedure as stated by you is legal.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF ADMINISTRATION—METHOD OF TRANSFER OF CATTLE TO OHIO SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' ORPHANS' HOME.

Cattle may be transferred from board of administration to Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home by appraisement and purchase.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

HON. A. V. DONAHEY, Auditor of State, Coolumbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—You have handed me a letter addressed to you by Governor Cox, under date of December 19, wherein he states:

> "I am very anxious to establish a better herd of cattle at Xenia. The output of milk is very low—in fact it hardly justifies the feed, but that is because the grade of stock is very inferior. I am anxious to transfer fifteen or twenty head of registered Holsteins from the state farm to Xenia. In view of the divided responsibility in the conduct of the Xenia Home, I would like to have you advise how the transfer can be legally made by the board of administration."

The Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Orphans' Home is, as you know, under the jurisdiction of a board of trustees, the same not having been placed in charge of the Ohio Board of Administration when the various institutions of the state, benevolent and penal, were placed in charge of said board of administration.

While it has been the policy of the state that each department is entirely separate and there has been no way until the enactment of the state purchasing department act, 107 O. L., 422, for the transfer of property in charge of one department to that of another, except by agreement between the parties, nevertheless, I believe that it would be perfectly legal to proceed in conformity with the provisions of Section 196-12 et seq., 107 O. L., 425, and permit the state purchasing agent to inventory and appraise the cattle in question and turn the same over at the appraised value to the Xenia home.

While it is true that the Ohio Board of Administration and the educational institutions of the state are expressly exempted from the provisions of the state purchasing agent's department act, nevertheless, and in order that the transfer may be properly evidenced and the responsibility of the Ohio Board of Administration in regard to the cattle may terminate, it would seem to me that the plan outlined would be satisfactory, or if the Xenia Home and the Ohio Board of Administration can themselves agree upon a price for the cattle and there are funds available to the Xenia home for the purchase of said cattle, the Ohio Board of Administration could sell said cattle to the Xenia home, receiving in return a state warrant for the purchase price thereof.

Either of the above suggestions if followed would, as I see it, legally transfer the custody of the cattle from the Ohio Board of Administration to the Xenia home.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—METHOD OF PAYMENT OF ASSISTANTS, CLERKS AND STENOGRAPHERS DEPENDS ON.

Whether or not the assistants, clerks and stenographers in the office of the prosecuting attorney are entitled to compensation on the strict time basis as distinguished from the basis of the official year of the prosecuting attorneys, depends upon the manner in which he has fixed their compensation.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

HON. JOHN V. CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Under date of December 28, 1918, Hon. Walter M. Locke, assistant prosecuting attorney of Hamilton county, requested my opinion upon a question which I may state as follows:

The official year of the prosecuting attorney begins and ends on the first Monday in January. As a result of this fact, the term of office which commenced in 1917 will be five days longer than two calendar years.

Should the assistants, clerks and stenographers appointed by the prosecuting attorney, under Section 2915 of the General Code, receive compensation for such service as they may render during these five days in 1919?

I have phrased the question substantially as Mr. Locke has asked it. One way of answering it would be to say that of course the assistants, clerks and stenographers are to receive compensation for these five days the same as for any other days. I apprehend, however, that what Mr. Locke desires to know is whether or not compensation for these five days should be paid to these persons in addition to the compensation which by this time has been paid to them, or their predecessors in position during the two years, and amounting to twenty-four full months' salary. In other words, assuming that a given assistant prosecuting attorney served during the entire official term, would he be entitled to twenty-four months salary only, on the theory that he was employed by the official year, or to salary for twenty-four months and five days as a fractional part of another month?

Sections 2914 and 2915 of the General Code are as follows:

> Section 2914.—"On or before the first Monday in January of each year in each county, the judge of the court of common pleas, or if there be more than one judge, the judges of such court in joint session, may fix an aggregate sum to be expended for the incoming year, for the compensation of assistants, clerks and stenographers of the prosecuting attorney's office."
> Section 2915.—"The prosecuting attorney may appoint such assistants, clerks and stenographers as he deems necessary for the proper performance of the duties of his office, and fix their compensation, not to exceed in the aggregate the amount fixed by the judge or judges of the court of common pleas. Such compensation after being so fixed shall be paid to such assistants, clerks and stenographers monthly from the general fund of the county treasury upon the warrant of the county auditor."

It is reasonably clear that the allowance made by the common pleas judge, or judges, covers the official year, and not the calendar year. In this respect it differs from the allowance made by the county commissioners for clerk hire in other offices of the county under Section 2980 of the General Code. That allowance is, "for the year beginning January first next thereafter"; while the allowance to be made under Section 2914 is "for the incoming year," and must be granted "on or before the first Monday in January of each year."

But it by no means follows that because the prosecuting attorney is limited to a certain allowance as the aggregate sum which he may pay out to assistants, clerks and stenographers for their compensation during an official year of his term beginning and ending on the first Monday in January, he must fix their compensation with reference to such official year. On the other hand, he is given complete liberty by Section 2915 with respect to their appointment and the compensation which they shall have. They hold their positions at his pleasure, subject to civil service regulations, and they are to receive such compensation as he prescribes. It need not be by way of annual salary; it may indeed be on the per diem basis, or in proportion to the services rendered, if he so fixes it. To be sure, such compensation is to be paid "monthly * * * upon the warrant of the county auditor." But this payment is to be made only upon some sort of voucher drawn by the prosecuting attorney, for the section does not provide that the action of the prosecuting attorney shall be certified to the county auditor in any way; so that the county auditor would not know what compensation was due at any time to any particular assistant, clerk or stenographer, unless he would have the prosecuting attorney's voucher to show it. Moreover, the section does not say that the compensation which is to be paid "monthly," shall be in equal installments, as some statutes dealing with similar matters expressly provide.

These considerations lead me to the conclusion that Mr. Locke's question cannot be answered by any general statement; whether or not the assistants, clerks and stenographers appointed by a given prosecuting attorney are to receive annual salaries based upon the official year, depends upon the manner in which the prosecuting attorney has fixed their respective compensations. It is possible for him to fix such compensation in that manner, in which event the persons entitled to such compensation would receive twenty-four months' salary for performing services during the entire official term, though that might be five days more than two calendar years. On the other hand, he might fix the salaries at so much per month. The proper interpretation of such an act on his part would seem to be such as to require payment on a strict time basis, and to entitle the persons whose compensation might be so fixed to salary for twenty-four months and five days who have served throughout the official term mentioned by Mr. Locke.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF AGRICULTURE—SECRETARY OF AGRICULTURE AUTHORIZED TO APPOINT EXPERT.

Under the provisions of the act creating the board of agriculture, the secretary of agriculture has the authority to appoint a person skilled in matters pertaining to game birds and game preserves and pay him his compensation out of the fund created from license fees, after being duly appropriated by the general assembly.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

HON. N. E. SHAW, Secretary of Agriculture, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 16, 1918, as follows:

> "The Board of Agriculture of Ohio desires, if lawful, in exercising its general control in all matters pertaining to the protection, preservation and propagation of game birds, game animals and fish within the state, as provided in Section 1390 General Code, to employ some skilled individual who shall devote his exclusive time in connection with the exercise of such control. It is designed particularly to establish many new game preserves throughout the state, and to exercise more care and study over game preserves already established. The duties of such individual, as proposed, would be largely as manager thereof. The board has funds accumulated under Section 1423.
> The board desires to know whether it would have jurisdiction to employ such person and pay his salary out of funds arising by virtue of Section 1423 General Code. These duties are to be separate from the administrative duties under the direction of the chief warden."

The answer to your question must be derived from a construction placed upon two or three sections of the General Code as they are found in 107 O. L.

Section 1087 G. C., 107 O. L., 461, makes this provision:

> "He (the secretary of agriculture) shall appoint all heads of bureaus, experts, inspectors, wardens, clerks, stenographers and all other assistants and employes and shall fix their compensation within the limits prescribed by law."

This provision is somewhat peculiar in that it does not state that he shall appoint "all other assistants and employes" that may be necessary to enable him to perform the duties placed upon him under the act. Neither does the act anywhere else make such a provision. The act provides in other places for heads of bureaus, experts, inspectors and wardens, but it does not provide for clerks, stenographers and all other assistants and employes. But, it is my opinion that the intention of the legislature, in enacting this provision was that the secretary of agriculture should have the authority to appoint all the clerks, stenographers and all other assistants and employes that might be necessary to enable him to perform the duties which devolve upon him under the law, that is, provided he keeps their compensation within the limits prescribed by law. Of course, it must be kept in mind, in reference to this matter, that Section 1087-2 provides that all his appointments made under and by virtue of this act shall be made with the approval of the Board of Agriculture.

With this general power in mind, let us turn to the provisions of Section 1390 G. C., 107 O. L., 486. This section reads in part:

> "The secretary of agriculture shall have authority and control in all matters pertaining to the protection, preservation and propagation of song and insectivorous birds, game birds, game animals and fish within the state and in and upon the waters thereof. * * * and so far as funds are provided therefor, shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties."

Here we find language that is very broad in its terms. The secretary of agriculture has full authority and control in reference to the matter of the preservation and propagation of game birds and in performing this duty he shall adopt and carry into effect such measures as he deems necessary in the performance of his duties. Now it is quite evident that the secretary of agriculture personally cannot perform all the duties which devolve upon him under and by virtue of this act, and therefore Section 1087, above quoted, provides that he may appoint all necessary assistants and employes to enable him to carry out and perform the duties which devolve upon him under the law. These two sections taken altogether would seem clearly to authorize the secretary of agriculture to appoint or employ some skilled individual who shall devote his whole time in connection with the protection, preservation and propagation of game birds, and game preserves which may be established over the state for the purpose of preserving, protecting and propagating said birds.

The question is raised as to how this appointee could be paid. As quoted above, the secretary of agriculture has the power to appoint and fix the salary, subject to the approval of the board of agriculture, of all his appointees. The salary so fixed, of course, would have to be kept within the appropriation made by the general assembly for the uses and purposes of the secretary of agriculture and the board of agriculture.

Section 1423 G. C., 107 O. L., 488, provides for the license fees to be paid for the granting of consent to hunt and fish within the state and then further provides:

> "The moneys received as license fees, other than the amounts paid to clerks as their fees, shall be paid into the state treasury to the credit of a fund which is hereby appropriated for the use of the secretary in the preservation and protection of birds, game birds, game animals and fish."

The section proceeds further to the effect that at least fifty per cent of the money arising from all such licenses shall be expended by the secretary for the purchase and propagation of game birds and game animals. Now if it is necessary, to enable the secretary of agriculture to preserve and protect game birds, that he appoint some one skilled along this line to assist him, then I know of no provision of law which would prevent his appointing such a person and fixing his salary, subject to the appropriation made by the legislature, and subject to the approval of the board of agriculture, and paying for the same out of moneys derived from license fees and appropriated by the general assembly. It is to be noted in Section 1423 G. C. that this money is already appropriated, but an appropriation cannot last for a period longer than two years, and hence if this section is not re-enacted at the coming session of the General Assembly, it would be necessary for the legislature to appropriate the money in said fund for the uses and purposes of your department.

Of course, in making said appointment you will have to take into consideration the question as to whether the civil service laws of the state apply to the same or not.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

BOARD OF EDUCATION—CITY—REMOVAL OF MEMBER FROM DISTRICT CREATES VACANCY.

If a member of the board of education of a city school district removes from the district a vacancy is thereby caused in the board and is filled under the provisions of Section 4748 G. C.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

Bureau of Inspection and Supervision of Public Offices, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—You request my opinion on the following matter:

> "If a member of the board of education of a city school district removes from the district, does it cause a vacancy as provided in Section 4748 of the General Code of Ohio?"

The said Section 4748 G. C. reads in part as follows:

> "A vacancy in any board of education may be caused by * * * non-residence, * * * removal from the district, * * *. Any such vacancy shall be filled by the board at its next regular or special meeting, or as soon thereafter as possible, by election for the unexpired term. A majority vote of all the remaining members of the board may fill any such vacancy."

The above section is general and applies to all boards of education and the language is so clear and explicit that to attempt a construction of same would simply mean a repetition of the words used in said section.

Upon inquiry, however, I find that the doubt as to its applicability arose from the fact that Section 4704 G. C., formerly provided that:

> "Members elected at large must be electors of the city school district and members elected from sub-districts must be electors of the said sub-districts from which they are chosen, or of the territory attached to the sub-district for school purposes. A removal of a member of the board from such sub-district, territory or city district shall vacate his office."

The above quoted section was repealed in 1913 and an entirely new section was enacted in its place and which new section referred to matters other than the residence of members of boards of education.

Section 4748 was a part of the General Code at the same time Section 4704 read as above quoted, and the fact that in the two sections of the code it was provided that a removal of a member of the board from the district should vacate the office of such member would not of itself add anything to or take anything from the force of the language in either section. The best that can be said is that at the time both sections were a part of the code, boards of education in city districts would be governed by Section 4704 and boards of education in other than city districts would be governed by Section 4748. Section 4748 being a general section, applies to city boards of education just the same as to village boards and others, so that the repealing of the former Section 4704 does not in my opinion change the law in relation to a vacancy being created when a member removes from the school district.

Answering your question specifically, then, I advise you that if a member of a board of education of a city school district removes from the district, a vacancy is thereby created in the city board of education, and the same must be filled as is provided by Section 4748 of the General Code of Ohio.

Yours very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—PROCEEDS OF BONDS SOLD UNDER SECTION 6929 CANNOT BE USED FOR COUNTY'S SHARE STATE HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT, BUT MUST PASS TO SINKING FUND.

When bonds are sold under the provisions of Section 6929 G. C. by the county commissioners, the proceeds of such sale cannot be used to take care of the county's proportion of the cost and expense of said improvement, if the same be constructed under the jurisdiction of the state highway commissioner. The proceeds of said bonds issued not used for the purposes for which the bonds were sold would pass into the sinking fund, or debt fund, of the county.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

HON. J. H. MUSSER, Prosecuting Attorney, Wapakoneta, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 18, 1918, which reads as follows:

"Some time ago our county commissioners, under proceedings to improve a county road, provided for the improvement of a road in our county, the costs being assessed on the lands within one mile of either side of the said improvement, bonds were sold, a contract for the improvement let, and the assessments are now being collected, about three payments having been made. The contractor did not complete his contract, or do any work thereunder, and the time for the completion of the contract has not expired. Since the contract was let this particular road has been designated by the State Highway Commissioner as an inter-county highway.

The commissioners desire to know if there is any manner in which they can take the funds arising from the sale of bonds, which are now in the county treasury, which bonds were issued under proceedings to improve a county road, and use the same in cooperation with the state, county and townships through which this road passes, and have the road improved as a state road, by the State Highway Commissioner.

The commissioners feel that if they must proceed and improve the road as a county road, that it will be a waste of money, as the improvement was not to be one of lasting quality, and that in the course of a very few years this road will necessarily be improved under the State Highway laws."

I presume that this improvement was begun under the Cass Act, and therefore I desire to call your attention to Section 6929 of said act.

This section provides for the issuing of bonds by the county commissioners for a road improvement, and then concludes:

"The proceeds of such bonds shall be used exclusively for the payment of the costs and expenses of the improvement for which they are issued."

In an opinion rendered by me to Hon. G. O. McGonagle, prosecuting attorney, McConnelsville, Ohio, as of date June 3, 1918, I passed upon language exactly similar to that above quoted, and passed upon a state of facts which are so nearly similar to the facts which you submit that I deem it not necessary to reason at length in reference to the law which should be applied to the state of facts you submit.

I enclose you a copy of said opinion for your consideration.

From the provisions of Section 6929 G. C. just quoted, and from the opinion enclosed, it is my opinion that the county commissioners could not use the proceeds realized from the sale of said bonds to pay the proportion of the cost and expense of the road improvement under the jurisdiction of the State Highway commissioner, and that if said funds are not used for the purpose for which the bonds were sold, they would immediately pass into the sinking fund of the county for the redemption of the bonds so issued by the county .

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY COMMISSIONERS—REFUSING TO ACCEPT PERSON HAVING LEGAL RESIDENCE THEREIN FROM COUNTY TO WHICH SUCH PERSON REMOVED, ARE LIABLE FOR POOR RELIEF FURNISHED BY LATTER COUNTY IN OHIO STATE SANITORIUM.

(1) A person has a legal residence in that county in which he has continuously resided for a period of twelve consecutive months and during said period has not received any relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor.

(2) If the proper authorities of a county in which a person has a legal resi- dence refuses to accept such person from a county to which he has later removed, and said latter county furnishes necessary relief to the person, then said county has a right of action against the county in which the person has a legal residence for expenses so incurred in furnishing relief.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 6, 1919.

HON. LEWIS F. HALE, Prosecuting Attorney, Bellefontaine, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 19, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "The county commissioners of Logan county were requested to care for one Davis. Investigation showed that Davis had been in Logan county only four days when this assistance was asked; that he had been brought from Putnam county by his son, a boy only about eighteen years of age, and who found after bringing him here that he was unable to care for him, and who himself had been in Logan county only about six months.
> Said Davis had been living in Putnam county for two years prior to his being brought to this county, living with a preacher, his brother-in-law, with whom he had been staying for years; that he with the preacher had moved to Putnam county from Van Wert county, having lived there two years.
> The infirmary superintendent of Logan county warranted him back to Putnam county; Putnam county refused to receive him. Thereupon Logan county had to take charge of him; sent him to Mt. Vernon to the tuberculosis hospital. Now Logan county has a bill from said hospital for clothing and care for said Davis.
> Question 1: Where is Davis a proper county charge?
> Question 2: Has Logan county a remedy against Putnam, or any other county, for any bills which it may pay for the care of said Davis?
> Davis has not been self-sustaining, but supported by his brother-in-law, the preacher."

There are several sections of the General Code which will have to be considered carefully in order to determine the answers which should be given to your questions. Possibly the one which lies fundamentally at the basis of your questions is Section 3477 G. C., which fixes the legal settlement of persons who must be afforded relief by the public. This section reads in part as follows:

> "Each person shall be considered to have obtained a legal settlement in any county in this state in which he or she has continuously resided and supported himself or herself for twelve consecutive months, without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor, subject to the following exceptions: (then follows two exceptions)"

It will be noted in this section that a person does not obtain a legal settlement in any county in this state unless he has continuously resided therein for a period of twelve consecutive months and during those twelve months has supported himself without relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor.

The next section possibly that ought to be considered is Section 3481 G. C., wherein provision is made that when complaint is made to the township trustees or to the proper officers of the municipal corporation that a person therein requires public relief or support, investigation shall be made as to the county in the state in which the person complained of is legally settled. If it should be ascertained that his legal settlement is in some county other than the one in which he resides at the time complaint is made, then Sections 3482 and 3483 G. C. apply. These sections read as follows:

> Section 3482.—"When it has been ascertained that a person requiring relief has a legal settlement in some other county of the state, such trustees or officers shall immediately notify the infirmary directors of the county in which the person is found, who, if his health permits, shall immediately remove the person to the infirmary of the county of his legal settlement. If such person refuses to be removed, on the complaint being made by one of the infirmary directors, the probate judge of the county in which the person is found shall issue a warrant for such removal, and the county wherein the legal settlement of the person is, shall pay all expenses of such removal and the necssary charges for relief and in case of death the expense of burial if a written notice is given the infirmary directors thereof within twenty days after such legal settlement has been ascertained."
> Section 3483.—"Upon refusal or failure to pay such expenses, such infirmary directors may be compelled so to do by a civil action against them by the board of infirmary directors of the county from which such person is removed, in the court of common pleas of the county in which such removal is made. If such notice is not given within twenty days after such directors ascertain such person's residence, and within ninety days after such relief has been afforded, the directors of the infirmary where such person belongs shall not be liable for charges or expenditures accruing prior to such notice."

Of course in these sections at the present time "county coommissioners" would have to be substituted for the term "infirmary directors."

From the facts which you set out in your communication Mr. Davis, of course, had not gained a legal settlement in Logan county, inasmuch as he had resided there for a period of only four days prior to the time that application was made for relief. When this was ascertained notice was given to the proper authorities in Putnam county that Davis was residing in Logan county and was in need of assistance; the Putnam county officials refused to take any jurisdiction over the matter and the county commissioners of Logan county then furnished relief. It seems to me that under the provisions of Sections 3482 and 3483 G. C. the county of Logan would have a claim against the county of Putnam for all expenses incident to the care and support of Mr. Davis. Section 3483 specifically provides that upon refusal or failure to pay such expenses, that is, the expenses of the removal of the indigent person to his proper county, and also the necessary charges for relief, then the county commissioners may be compelled to do so by a civil action against them by the board of county commissioners of the county in which such person resides or from which such person is removed. It provides then that notice must have been given within twenty days after the fact was ascertained of such person's residence, and within ninety days after such relief has been afforded.

As I understand it these conditions have been complied with. My predecessor, Hon. Timothy S. Hogan, in an opinion rendered June 15, 1911, (Vol. II Annual Report of the Attorney General, 1912, p. 1113) laid down the following principle in placing construction on these two sections:

> "So, also, the same section provides that if the person refuses to be removed the probate judge of the county shall, upon complaint of the infirmary directors, issue a warrant for removal, etc. Having regard to the same intent above referred to, I am of the opinion that whether or not there is any proceeding to compel removal or to pay the expenses of removal, when the indigent person is willing to be removed but the infirmary directors of the county to which he belongs are unwilling to receive him, there is at least enough in the sections to fix the liability of the county to which the person belongs for expenditures made by the infirmary directors of the county by which the relief is actually extended."

Here Mr. Hogan held that in the event that the county commissioners are not willing to receive a person who is properly chargeable to their county said county is liable for the expenses made by the county commissioners of the county by which the relief is actually extended.

While these sections are somewhat uncertain in their provisions yet it is my opinion that Mr. Hogan was correct in the conclusion at which he arrived in said opinion, and I would, therefore, hold that if the provisions of Section 3482 and 3483 G. C. have been complied with by the proper authorities of Logan county, then the county of Putnam would be liable for the expenses incurred by Logan county in caring for Mr. Davis.

It might be thought that the county commissioners of Logan county would not be justified in sending Mr. Davis to the tuberculosis hospital, but if in their judgment this was the only proper way by which Mr. Davis could be treated, then it is my opinion that they would have authority to pursue such a course and that Putnam county would be liable for the expense incident thereto. If Putnam county is not desirous of paying expenses incurred by Logan county along this line, then the authorities of Putnam county should receive Mr. Davis and care for him themselves.

In this connection it might be well to call attention to Section 2544 G. C. This section reads as follows:

"In any county having an infirmary, when the trustees of a township, after making the inquiry provided by law, are of the opinion that the person complained of is entitled to admission to the county infirmary, they shall forthwith transmit a statement of the facts to the superintendent of the infirmary and if it appears that such person is legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown, and the superintendent of the infirmary is satisfied that he should become a county charge, they shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution, or otherwise, and thereupon the liability of the township shall cease. The superintendent of the infirmary shall not be liable for any relief furnished, or expenses incurred by the township trustees."

Here we find the provision that if one becomes a county charge the county commissioners "shall forthwith receive and provide for him in such institution (the county infirmary) or otherwise." The term "or otherwise" is very broad and embodies within it the matter of outdoor relief. Under this term it seems to me clearly that the county commissioners would have authority to place Mr. Davis in a tuberculosis hospital if they feel this to be the proper place for him under all the circumstances. Of course in the case submitted by you Mr. Davis did not become a county charge of Logan county. This for the reason that it did not appear that he was "legally settled in the township or has no legal settlement in this state, or that such settlement is unknown." But right here is where the provisions of Sections 3482 and 3483 G. C. and the opinion of Mr. Hogan come into play. The superintendent of the infirmary of Logan county notified the county commissioners of Putnam county of the situation, but they refused to receive Mr. Davis. Then it became the duty of the county commissioners of Logan county to take charge of him, and the expense incurred thereby became an obligation against Putnam county, and as said before, the county commissioners of Logan county in caring for him were warranted in placing him in the sanatorium at Mt. Vernon and paying the expenses incident thereto, charging the same back against Putnam county.

In connection with your questions it will be well to consider the provisions of Sections 1815-13 and 1815-14 G. C., which have to do particularly with the Ohio state sanatorium. They read as follows:

> Section 1815-13 G. C.—"It shall be the duty of the board of state charities to make collections for the support of patients at the Ohio State sanatorium. When the superintendent of the Ohio State sanatorium shall report to the board of state charities that an applicant for admission to or an inmate of that institution or any person legally responsible for his support is not financially able to pay the amount fixed by Section 2068 of the General Code, it shall be the duty of the board of state charities by its authorized agents to make a thorough investigation as is provided by law for such investigations in other institutions."
> Section 1815-14 G. C.—"If after the investigation provided in the next preceding section it shall be found that said applicant or inmate or any person legally responsible for his support is unable to pay the amount fixed by law, said board of state charities shall determine what amount, if any, said applicant or inmates or any person legally responsible for his support shall pay. The difference between the amount so determined and the amount fixed by Section 2068 of the General Code shall be paid by the county in which said applicant or patient has a legal residence. The amount so determined to be paid by the county shall be paid from the poor fund on the order of the county commissioners."

At first sight it might seem that these provisions would modify the conclusion above reached, but upon considering them carefully I do not think that they do. It must be kept in mind that Mr. Davis has become a charge of Logan county due to the fact that Putnam county has refused to take charge of him. Logan county, in a sense, is, in the first instance, legally responsible for his support. Mr. Davis did not make application for admission to the sanatorium. Logan county made application. It made application for one of its wards to whom it was furnishing outdoor relief. Logan county is, in the first instance, in my opinion, liable for the cost incident to his being placed there. The county, and not the individual, had contractual relations with the sanatorium. Hence there are no grounds whatever for reporting this case to the board of state charities. Logan county, which is responsible in the first instance for Mr. Davis' support, is financially able to pay for his care and support.

It might be thought that this bill should be presented by the sanatorium directly to Putnam county, and that Putnam county should pay the bill direct to the sanatorium, and this on account of the provision found in Section 1815-14 G. C., as follows: "Shall be paid by the county in which said applicant or patient has a legal residence." As Mr. Davis has a legal residence in Putnam county, it might be considered that Putnam county should pay the charges direct to the sanatorium. This would undoubtedly be the case if Mr. Davis had found his way into the sanatorium through his own application; but it must be remembered that he came under the charge of Logan county and is its ward; that it is responsible for his care and support and that it is instrumental in placing him in the sanatorium and that it is evidently able to pay. Hence it is my opinion that Logan county, in the first instance, should pay the bill. It would then have a legal claim against Putnam county for the amount paid as hereinbefore set out.

Of course in reaching the above conclusion I am considering that Mr. Davis has a legal settlement in Putnam county, that is, he resided in Putnam county for a period of twelve consecutive months immediately before moving to Logan county, and that during those twelve successive months he received no relief under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor. The mere fact that he received support from his brother while living in Putnam county would not bring him without the provisions of Section 3477. The support spoken of in that section must have been support furnished under the provisions of law for the relief of the poor. If I understand your questions correctly the above fully answers them:

(1) Davis is a proper charge of Putnam county; and

(2) Logan county has a right of action against Putnam county for expenses incurred by it incident to the relief furnished to Mr. Davis provided the provisions of Sections 3482 and 3483 have been complied with.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND OF TREASURER OF STATE AS CUSTODIAN OF THE STATE INSURANCE FUND.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 7, 1919.

HON. JAMES M. COX, Governor of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Hon. Rudolph W. Archer, state treasurer for the State of Ohio, elect, has submitted to me a bond in the sum of $100,000.00 conditioned for the faithful performance upon his part of the duties devolving upon him as custodian of the state insurance fund of Ohio, he becoming such custodian under and by virtue of his office as state treasurer.

I have examined the bond submitted carefully and am of the opinion that it is correct in form and in all respects complies with the laws of the State of Ohio. Inasmuch as under the statute you are to pass upon the sufficiency of the bond, and also to the effect that it is in compliance with the laws of the state, I am forwarding the same to you for your consideration, and will mail a copy of this opinion to Hon. Rudolph W. Archer.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

PROBATE COURT—MUST COMMIT PERSON FOUND INSANE AFTER INDICTMENT TO LIMA STATE HOSPITAL.

Where a person is found to be insane after indictment, and before sentenced the probate judge, when receiving a certificate to this effect, must commit such person to the Lima hospital, where he must remain until he is restored to reason.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1919.

HON. JOHN V. CAMPBELL, Prosecuting Attorney, Cincinnati, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 31, 1918, which reads as follows:

"There has arisen in this county a question which we are respectfully submitting for your consideration. A prisoner, James Tate, was indicted here on two charges of robbery. These offenses were committed by Tate and a confederate. Tate's attorney, complying with Section 13608 of the General Code, filed a certificate of a physician that Tate was suffering from epilepsy. A hearing was had as provided in this section and Section 13609 and a jury found by unanimous verdict that Tate was insane. The insanity is based entirely on the fact that Tate is an epileptic and as such is irresponsible. Probate Judge Wm. H. Lueders of this county advises us that he will dismiss Tate when the matter is submitted to him as he has no authority to order Tate's confinement in any institution in this state. This is because Tate has not been a resident of the state a year. General Code Section 2044 provides that an epileptic, whose being at large is dangerous to the community shall be confined in the Ohio hospital for epileptics and his commitment and confinement to the hospital, care and custody while there and discharge therefrom shall be determined as is provided by law for the commitment and care of the insane; however, Section 2037 provides that a residence of one year is necessary before commitment to this institution. Sections 1984 and 2003 cover the commitment of the criminal insane to the Lima state hospital. Sections 1985-4 provides for the custody, care and special treatment of insane persons indicted or found to be insane.

Please advise if it is your opinion that in all cases where persons are indicted and then found to be insane, whether epileptic or otherwise, they must under all circumstances be confined in the Lima state hospital, or if a person suffering with epilepsy and found to be insane by a jury should be committed to the Ohio hospital for epileptics. If it is your opinion that the latter step should be taken, please advise what action, in your opinion, should be taken in the case of Tate, who has not been a resident of this state for a year."

In considering your question, let us first note a provision found in Section 13614 G. C. to this effect, "If a person under indictment appears to be insane, proceedings shall be had as provided for persons not indicted because of insanity." This provision makes it necessary for us to consider Section 13577 G. C., which provides in part as follows: "If a grand jury upon investigation of a person accused of crime finds such person to be insane, it shall report such finding to the court of common pleas. Such court shall order a jury to be impaneled to try whether or not the accused is sane at the time of such impaneling, and such court and jury shall proceed in a like manner as provided by law when the question of the sanity of a person indicted for an offense is raised at any time before sentence." This provision makes it again necessary for us to turn to the provisions having to do with the trial of a person to ascertain whether he is sane or not when such person has been indicted, but has not yet been sentenced. These provisions are found in Section 13608 to Section 13610 G. C. inclusive. Section 13608 G. C. reads as follows:

"When the attorney of a person indicted for an offense suggests to the court in which such indictment is pending, and before sentence, that such person is not then sane and a certificate of a reputable physician to that effect is presented to the court, such court shall order a jury to be impaneled to try whether or not the accused is sane at the time of such impaneling. Thereupon a time shall be fixed for a trial, a jury shall be drawn from the jury box and a venire issued, unless the prosecuting at> torney or the attorney of the accused demand a struck jury, in which case such jury shall be selected and summoned as required by law. The jury shall be sworn to try the question whether the accused is or is not sane and a true verdict given according to the law and the evidence, and, on the trial, the accused shall hold the affirmative."

Section 13609 provides that three-fourths of the jurors may return a verdict as to the sanity or insanity of the person under trial. Section 13610 G. C. provides in part as follows: "If the jury finds him to be not sane, that fact shall be certified by the clerk to the probate court, and the accused, until restored to reason, shall be dealt with by such court as upon inquest had." That is, the probate court, when the clerk thereof receives a certificate to the effect that a certain person has been found not to be sane, must proceed with the matter of commitment just the same as if the probate court itself had made the inquest and found that the person being inquired about is not sane. Of course, what the probate court can do with the person in the way of committing him to some institution depends altogether upon the provisions of the statutes in reference to the particular case which he has in hand. Right here it might be well for us to notice another provision of this section, which is as follows: "If he is discharged, the bond given for his support and safe-keeping shall contain a condition that when restored to reason, he shall answer to the offense charged in the indictment, or of which he has been convicted, at the next term of the court thereafter, and abide the order of such court."

If this provision applies to the case which you have in hand, then it would appear that the probate court might commit Mr. Tate to the proper hospital for the insane, and then if the superintendent thereof should deem it for the best interests of the public, he might discharge Mr. Tate upon a bond being given as provided in said provision of Section 13610 G. C.

The matter of the discharge of an insane patient is set forth in Section 1964 G. C., which reads as follows:

> "On consent and advice of the trustees, the superintendent may discharge any patient, from a state hospital for the insane, when he deems such discharge proper and necessary. No patient who in the judgment of the superintendent has homicidal or suicidal propensities shall be discharged. If, in the opinion of the superintendent, the condition of the patient at the time of discharge justifies it, he may permit him to go to his home, or leave the institution unattended."

But in connection with this matter, we must again note the provisions of Section 13614 G. C. This section provides, in part: "If such person is found to be insane, he shall be committed to the Lima state hospital until restored to reason, when the superintendent thereof shall notify the prosecuting attorney of the proper county, who shall proceed as provided by law with the trial of such person under indictment."

It will be well for us to keep in mind that Section 13614 G. C. was originally a part of an act "to povide for the erection, organization and management of the Lima state hospital, being Section 13 of said act. This act deals exclusively with the matter of the Lima state hospital, and in this connection it will be well for us to note the provisions of Section 1985, G. C., which was originally Section 2 of said act. This section provides in part, "The Lima state hospital shall be used for the custody, care and special treatment of insane persons of the following classes:

1. * * * * * * *.
2. * * * * * * *.
3. Persons accused of crime, but not indicted because of insanity.
4. Persons indicted, but found to be insane."

* * * * * * * *.

It appears to me, that this section itself is broad enough to warrant the conclusion that whenever a person has been indicted for a crime, and before sentence is found by special trial to be insane, then the indicted person must be committed to the Lima state hospital. Of course, it might be held that even though this section provides that the Lima state hospital shall be used for certain classes of insane persons, yet the legislature did not intend that it should be the only hospital to which such persons might be committed. But I do not think the section would bear that construction. However, when we take into connection with this section, the provisions of Section 13614 G. C. above quoted, and when we remember that 1985 and 13614 both formed a part of the same act, it seems to me that the only conclusion to which one can arrive is, that if a person under indictment is found to be insane, then he must be committed to the Lima state hospital. If this conclusion is correct, then, under the provisions of 13610 G. C., the probate court would have no other course to pursue than to commit Mr. Tate to the Lima state hospital.

Further, it is quite evident that Section 13614 negatives the idea that a person committed to said hospital, under the circumstances mentioned by you, may be discharged therefrom during the time of his insanity, because this section provides that he shall be committed to the Lima state hospital "until restored to reason."

The above reasoning is all the more effective when we remember that Section 1985 G. C., and 13614 G. C. are parts of a later enactment than Section 13608 G. C. et seq..

So that I would hold that the probate judge of your county has no authority to commit Mr. Tate to the Ohio hospital for epileptics; neither has he any authority to discharge Mr. Tate. But under the provisions of Section 13610, and 13614, G. C., he must commit Mr. Tate to the Lima state hospital, there to remain until he is restored to reason.

It must be kept in mind that Mr. Tate was not found by the jury to be an epileptic. He was found by the jury to be insane. This is the only ground which would warrant the court in not proceeding with a trial in order to ascertain whether Mr. Tate is guilty of the crime charged in the indictment or not. The provisions of Section 13608 G. C., et seq., are merely for the purpose of postponing a trial until an insane person becomes again sane, so that he can intelligently consult with his counsel and make the proper defense to the charge contained in the indictment.

I note in your communication that you state that the physician filed an affidavit to the effect that Mr. Tate was suffering from epilepsy. If this is strictly the nature of the affidavit, it possibly did not comply strictly with Section 13608, because that section provides that the certificate of a reputable physician must be made to the effect that a person is not sane. But however that may be, the court evidently decided that the affidavit was sufficient, and a special jury was impaneled, and the jury brought in a verdict to the effect that Mr. Tate was insane at the time of the impaneling of the jury.

Under all these circumstances and conditions, it is my opinion that the conclusion above reached is correct.

You state in your communication that the probate judge of your county contemplates discharging Mr. Tate, for the reason that he has not been a resident of the state of Ohio for one year, and that he did not contract the disease of epilepsy while residing in this state. This idea is based on Section 2037 G. C., which makes such a provision, but this applies merely to the matter of committing persons to the Ohio hospital for epileptics at Gallipolis, and would not apply to the matter of committing persons to the Lima state hospital.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOT NO. 55 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1919.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lot of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and state of Ohio, and described as follows:

> "Being lot No. fifty-five (55) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

The facts and circumstances surrounding the title to this lot, as shown by the abstract, are of such a nature that it is difficult for one to give satisfactory advice as to what the state should do. The abstract shows that this property was sold for taxes to John Faust, Roy Ashwell, the owner, failing to pay the same.

The records show that the lot was afterwards sold to T. B. Miller, said John Faust failing to pay the taxes thereon. The records further develop the fact that T. B. Miller failed to pay the taxes upon this lot and that at the February, 1916, sale of delinquent lands no one purchased the lot for the taxes due upon it and that it was therefore forfeited to the state of Ohio. The state is now desirous of purchasing the lot.

The sections of the General Code which relate particularly to the matter in question are Sections 5744 and 5746, which read as follows:

> "Section 5744.—Every tract of land and town lot offered for sale by the treasurer, as provided in the next preceding chapter, and not sold for want of bidders, shall be forfeited to the state. Thenceforth all the right, title, claim, and interest of the former owner or owners thereof, shall be considered as transferred to, and vested in, the state, to be disposed of as the general assembly may direct."
> "Section 5746.—If the former owner of a tract of land or town lot, which has been so forfeited, at any time before the state has disposed of such land or lot, shall pay into the treausury of the county in which such land or lot is situated, or into the state treasury, all the taxes and penalties which have since accrued thereon, as ascertained and certified by the auditor, the state shall relinquish to such former owner or owners, all claim to such land or lot. The county auditor shall then re-enter such land or lot on his tax-list, with the name of the proper owner."

It will be noted that under Section 5744 G. C. when a lot is forfeited to the state of Ohio, all the right, title, claim and interest of the former owner shall be considered as transferred to the state and vested in it. So that under this section the state of Ohio now has all the right and title in and to this lot which the original owner had.

Section 5746 G. C. provides that at any time before the state has disposed of such lot the former owner of the same may redeem it by paying to the treasurer of the county all the taxes and penalties due thereon. On account of the provisions of this section, it is absolutely impossible for the state of Ohio to acquire such a title to this lot as would foreclose the right of the original owner to redeem the lot and I am informed that the whereabouts of the original owner, John Faust, are unknown, so it would be impossible to obtain a quit-claim deed from him.

Under all these circumstances, the only advice I am able to give is that the state of Ohio now has all the right, title and interest in and to this lot which the original owner had, subject, however, to the right of the original owner to redeem the same at any time prior to the time the state of Ohio may see fit to dispose of the lot. Hence it will require no deed to transfer the title to this lot to the state of Ohio. It is already in the state and if the original owner should ever demand the right to redeem the lot under the statute, the state would be compelled to secure a quit-claim deed from him or suffer him to redeem it under the provisions of Section 5746 G. C.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF ABSTRACT OF TITLE TO LOT NO. 23 OF WOOD BROWN PLACE SUBDIVISION, COLUMBUS, FRANKLIN COUNTY, OHIO.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 8, 1919.

HON. CARL E. STEEB, Secretary, Board of Trustees, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of abstract of title covering the following lot of land located in the city of Columbus, county of Franklin and state of Ohio, and described as follows:

Being lot No. twenty-three (23) of Wood Brown Place subdivision, as the same is numbered and delineated upon the recorded plat thereof, of record in plat book 5, page 196, recorder's office, Franklin county, Ohio.

I have examined said abstract and it shows that this property has been sold for non-payment of taxes; sold in the first instance to Ira H. Miller, George W. Ingham being the owner of said property at the time it was sold to Ira H. Miller for taxes.

Afterwards, this property was transferred from the name of Ira H. Miller to W. Guy Jones, by assignment of the tax certificate under date of March 13, 1906.

Further than this, the abstract shows no liens or encumbrances on said property, excepting the taxes for the year 1918, amounting to 44 cents, together with a special assessment for the improvement of Ridgview avenue, amounting to 50 cents.

Under the law, W. Guy Jones, who is now the holder of the tax certificate, is entitled to a deed from the auditor, more than two years having elapsed since the property was sold for taxes. It is my opinion that if W. Guy Jones would secure an auditor's deed for this property, he would be in a position to make a deed to the state of Ohio. I understand, however, that Mr. Jones is dead, but that his personal representatives are in a position to assign the tax certificate to the state of Ohio.

Under these circumstances possibly the best course would be to have said tax certificate assigned to the state of Ohio, upon its paying to the estate of W. Guy Jones an amount of money which may be agreed upon by the representatives of said W. Guy Jones and the state. The state would then be in a position to secure from the county auditor a tax deed and thus acquire as good a title for this property as possible under the circumstances. I realize a tax deed in this state is very unsatisfactory, but I can see no other course open, by which the state could secure title to this property, and I therefore recommend that the latter course above set out be followed.

I am returning herewith the abstract submitted by you.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

GOVERNOR AND ADJUTANT GENERAL PERSONALLY LIABLE ON BOND PROVIDED FOR BY ACT OF CONGRESS OF JUNE 14, 1917.

In the event the governor of the state or the adjutant general thereof should sign the bond provided for by the act of Congress of June 14, 1917, he would be personally liable under said bond. In no event could either of them bind the state of Ohio as a state, by signing said bond.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

HON. ROY E. LAYTON, Adjutant General, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your request for an opinion on a certain bond form submitted to me. You wish to know whether the governor or the adjutant general would be individually responsible if they signed this bond.

Before noting the provisions of the bond we will consider the provisions of law under which one of said officials is contemplating signing same. On June 14, 1917, Congress passed an act entitled:

> "An act to authorize the issue to states and territories and the District of Columbia of rifles and other property for the equipment of organizations of Home Guards."

Section 2 of said act defines the term "Home Guards," which definition must be met in order to bring them within the provisions of the act. I might say at the outset that I doubt very much whether the organizations which we have in the state are of a character such as would bring them within the purview of said definition. However, this is a matter for the federal government to decide, rather than the state of Ohio, through its departments. We will pass by this question and proceed to the consideration of whether the governor or the adjutant would be personally bound if he signed said bond.

Section 1 of the act above mentioned reads as follows:

> "That the secrtary of war during this existing emergency be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to issue from time to time to the several states and territories and the District of Columbia for the equipment of such home guards having the character of state police or constabulary as may be organized by the several states and territories and District of Columbia, and such other home guards as may be organized under the direction of the governors of the several states and territories and the commisioners of the District of Columbia or other state troops or militia, such rifles and ammunition therefor, cartridge belts, haversacks, canteens, in limited amounts as available supplies will permit, provided that the property so issued shall remain the property of the United States and shall be receipted for by the governors of the several states and territories and commissioners of the District of Columbia and accounted for by them under such regulations and upon furnishing such bonds or security as the secretary of war may prescribe, * * *."

It is to be noted in this section that the property furnished by the federal government shall be receipted for by the governors of the several states and accounted for by them, under such regulations and upon furnishing such bonds or security as the secretary of war may prescribe.

Section 4 of the act reads as follows:

> "Every application for arms and equipment must be made by the governor of the state desiring the property and submitted to the chief of ordnance, Washington, D. C., on application blank furnished by the office of the chief of ordnance."

Section 7 of the act relates to the accountability for the property issued to any state by the federal government. This section reads as follows:

> "All material issued under the above mentioned law shall remain the property of the United States. It shall be issued to and receipted for by the governors of the several states or territories or the commissioners of the District of Columbia. Before the issue of any property a bond may be required to be furnished by the governors or commissioners in favor of the United States in the penal sum of the value of the property. If a bond is required, it must be signed by the commanding officer of the Home Guard forces of the state, territory, or District of Columbia for the use of which the property is issued, and will be conditioned on the performance of the following undertakings, namely, that said equipment will be safely kept and accounted for, and will be returned at the termination of the present exisiting emergency, or when no longer needed for the purposes for which issued, or returned at any time when an exigency requires the use of the property for other purposes, in good order and condition, reasonable wear excepted, to such officer or person as the secretary of war may designate to receive them. The bond may be signed by two or more individuals who own property in excess of the penal sum named therein as sureties or by a surety company which has complied with the law and the regulations of the treasury department and has been designated by that department as acceptable surety on Federal bonds. A certified copy of the commission of the commanding officer must be attached to the bond."

It will thus be seen, from the sections above quoted, that the property must be receipted and accounted for by the governor of the state to which it is issued and that he is required to furnish a bond in favor of the United States. The state itself is not considered a party in the transaction, but the governor is specifically considered the principal, in that he receipts and accounts for the property and is responsible for it.

Section 7 further provides that the bond must be signed by the commanding officer of the Home Guard forces. It is my view that if the governor or the commanding officer of the Home Guard forces signs said bond, he is the principal thereof and is personally liable if the conditions of the bond are not fully met.

In no event could the state of Ohio, as a state, be bound by the bond. Before the governor or commanding officer of the Home Guard forces could bind the state by signing a bond, the General Assembly would have to pass the necessary legislation authorizing him to sign such bond for and on behalf of the state of Ohio and with a view to binding the state.

Inasmuch as this act does not in anywise purport to bind or deal with the state of Ohio and it clearly indicates that the governor of the state is the one who is responsible for the property furnished to the state, and inasmuch as the act specifically provides that the bond shall be signed by the commanding officer and there is no law in our state authorizing the governor or commanding officer of the Home Guards forces to bind the state, it is clearly my opinion that the governor or said commanding officer is personally liable if he signs the bond form submitted to me for consideration.

I take it that it is not necessary to set out the bond in this opinion, inasmuch as it is based strictly upon the sections of the act herein quoted and would be interpreted from the viewpoint of said sections. I might say, however, that the bond starts out on the theory that the commanding officer of the Home Guard of the state would be liable. It reads thus:

"Know all men by these presents, that we, ----------, the duly appointed commanding officer of the Home Guard of the state of Ohio, * * * and ---------- * * are held and bound unto the United States of America in the penal sum," etc.

Hence from all the above it is my opinion that the conclusion herein reached is correct.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

APPROVAL OF BOND ISSUE OF WARREN CITY SCHOOL DISTRICT, TRUMBULL COUNTY, OHIO—$89,500.00.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

Industrial Commission of Ohio, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—

In Re: Bonds of Warren City School district, Trumbull county, Ohio, in the sum of $89,500.00, for the purpoose of funding certain existing valid and binding indebtedness of said school district.

I am in receipt of a copy of a resolution adopted by you January 6, 1919, providing for the purchase of the above issue of bonds subject to the approval of this department. I have examined the transcript submitted of the proceedings of the board of education and of other officers of Warren City School district relating to said issue of bonds, and find same to be in conformity to the provisions of the General Code of Ohio relating to bond issues of this kind. Former proceedings relating to this isue of bonds purchased by you by resolution under date of October 23, 1918, were examined by me and found to comply with the provisions of law relating to the issue of funding bonds, and said proceedings were approved by me by opinion under date of November 27, 1918. Thereafter the printed bonds covering said issue were delivered at the office of the state treasurer, and in examining said bonds I found that the same were not signed in the manner required by law; that is, said bonds, although they were signed by the clerk of the board, were not signed by the president, but in lieu of the president's signature said bonds bore the signature of a member of the board of education designating himself as "president pro tem." Upon investigation I found that the board did not have a president. Upon my instructions the bonds were returned and proper proceedings had for the election of a president who would be legally authorized to sign the bonds. These proceedings necessitated a change in the resolution providing for the issue of the bonds so as to make a change both in the date of the bonds and in the maturity thereof. These changes necessitated a re-offer of the bonds both to the board of sinking fund commissioners of the school district and to your board. You accordingly rescinded the former resolution providing for the purchase of this issue and adopted a new resolution under date of January 6, 1919, providing for the purchase of the same. It is this purchase that is approved by this opinion.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS—SALARY MAY BE RAISED DURING TERM—SUCCESSOR TO MAY RECEIVE LARGER SALARY—CERTIFICATE UNDER 4744-2 MAY BE AMENDED.

The salary of a county superintendent of schools may be raised during his term of office.

Where a county superintendent has resigned the county board of education may pay a larger amount as salary to his successor from that which the county superintendent would have received had he served the remainder of his term.

The certificate of the county board to the county auditor under Section 4744-2 may be amended to cover the increased amount of said salary.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

HON. F. B. PEARSON, Superintendent of Public Instruction, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—Your request for my opinion reads:

> "A county superintendent has resigned to engage in Red Cross work in France. His successor can not be employed at the same salary the superintendent who has resigned was to receive. Can the county board of education pay an additional salary and can such additional salary for the new superintendent be distributed by the county auditor and be certified to the state auditor?"

The salary of a county superintendent is fixed by the county board of education. Provision, therefore, is made in Section 4744-1 of the General Code which reads as follows:

> "The salary of the county superintendent shall be fixed by the county board of education, to be not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, and shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. Half of such salary up to two thousand dollars shall be paid by the state and the balance by the county school district. In no case shall the amount paid by the state be more than one thousand dollars. The county board may also allow the county superintendent a sum not to exceed three hundred dollars per annum for traveling expenses and clerical help. The half paid by the county school district shall be pro-rated among the village and rural school districts in the county in proportion to the number of teachers employed in each district."

Under the provisions of the above section a minimum salary is provided, i. e., the amount of not less than twelve hundred dollars per year, but no maximum amount is set as far as the county board is concerned. There is a maximum set which the state shall pay, i. e., the one-half of two thousand dollars or, in other words, the state in no case shall pay more than one thousand dollars, and it was determined in Opinion No. 1165, found in the Annual Report of the Attorney-General for 1914, Volume II, page 1265, that simply because the statute provided that half should be paid by the state and that the one-half to be paid by the state was limited to one thousand dollars, that the fact was not sufficient reason why the county board should not pay, or contract to pay, more than two thousand dollars as an annual salary to the county superintendent. It may be considered then that if conditions warrant the same, and it is for the county board of education to determine in the first instance as to such conditions, the county board may pay as salary to the county superintendent an amount in excess of two thousand dollars per annum.

The first question perhaps for me to answer in your inquiry is, "Can the salary of a county superintendent be increased during the term for which he was employed?" In Opinion No. 295, found in Opinions of the Attorney-General for 1917, Volume I, page 742, I held that the county school superintendent is a public school officer and that as such officer his salary might be changed during his term of office and that the county board of education is the proper body to make such change. Said opinion was based on the case of State ex rel. vs. Vance, et al., 18 O. N. P. (n. s.) 198, and State ex rel. vs. Board of Education, 21 O. C. C. 785.

It may, therefore, be considered, then, that the board has a right to change the salary of a county superintendent during his term of office and if such change can be had, it would follow that a greater amount per annum could be paid to a superintendent who is employed to fill an unexpired term over the amount the original superintendent would have received had he served to the end of his term.

When the salary of the county superintendent is fixed it shall be certified to the county auditor under the provisions of Section 4744-2 of the General Code which reads as follows:

> "On or before the first day of August of each year the county board of education shall certify to the county auditor the number of teachers to be employed for the ensuing year in the various rural and village school districts within the county school district, and also the number of district superintendents employed and their compensation and the compensation of the county superintendent; and such board of education shall also certify to the county auditor the amounts to be apportioned to each district for the payment of its share of the salaries of the county and district superintendents."

That is to say, the county board of education is the hiring body of the county superintendent and in order to secure funds from which the salary of such superintendent may be paid, the amount of such salary so fixed by the county board shall be certified to the county auditor, and that the county auditor may have instructions as to the place where such salary shall be procured, the county board of education shall certify the number of teachers which are employed in the various rural and village districts under the jurisdiction of the county board and shall certify the amounts to be apportioned to each district so that when the county auditor makes his semi-annual settlements, the amount necessary to pay the salary of the county superintendent may be withheld from such districts. The amounts so withheld shall be placed in what is called the "county board of education fund," which is provided for in Section 4744-3 G. C., which reads in part:

> "The county auditor when making his semi-annual apportionment of the school funds to the various village and rural school districts shall retain the amounts necessary to pay such portion of the salaries of the county and district superintendents and for contingent expenses, as may be certified by the county board. Such moneys shall be placed in a separate fund to be known as the 'county board of education fund'." * * *.

A county board of education fund may also be replenished from fees for examinations and through transfer of the surplus from the sheep claim fund and by transfer from the city institute fund, or otherwise.

The county board of education shall also certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the salary of the county and district superintendents of such county school district "for the next six months," and upon receipt of such certificate the county auditor shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount, and the county auditor shall place said amount in the county board of education fund.

The above provision is found in the latter part of Section 4744-3 G. C., which reads:

* * * "The county board of education shall certify under oath to the state auditor the amount due from the state as its share of the county and district superintendents of such county school district for the next six months. Upon receipt by the state auditor of such certificate he shall draw his warrant upon the state treasurer in favor of the county treasurer for the required amount; which shall be placed by the county auditor in the county board of education fund."

This department has held at various times that the time mentioned, i. e., the first day of August in each year in Section 4744-2 is directory and not mandatory. That is to say, if the certificate of the county board to the county auditor was not for any reason made on or before said first day of August that the board might make such certificate at a later date. As for illustration, if a district failed to elect a district superintendent and failed to certify to the county board of education the amount of the salary of such district superintendent, the county board of education could on the first day of September elect such district superintendent and could lix the salary thereof and could at that time make the certificate to the county auditor which is required by said Section 4744-2.

The difficult question is, "Suppose the certificate is once made by the county board of education, is the same of such a nature that the acts of the board are functus officio?" Functus officio is a term applied to something which once has had life and power, but which has become of no virtue whatever. Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Volume II, page 1323, says:

"For example, a warrant of attorney on which a judgment has been entered is functus officio, and the second judgment can not be entered by virtue of its authority. When arbitrators can not agree and choose an umpire, they are said to be functi officio. If a bill of exchange be sent to the drawee and he places it to the credit of the holder, it is functus officio and can not be further negotiated. When an agent has completed the business with which he was entrusted, his agency is functus officio."

But is the action of the board in certifying the amount of salary to the county anditor of such a nature as the illustrations referred to by Bouvier? The very things which are certified may during the year be changed so that another or a different certificate should be made. I am satisfied that when the certificate has been made to the auditor and distribution is made to the various districts as provided therefor, no other and further certificate can have effect upon said distribution, but inasmuch as the distribution is made semi-annually, and inasmuch as it is specifically provided that the county board shall certify to the state auditor the amount due as its share of the salary of the county superintendent "for the next six months," that the county board should be permitted to also certify additional salary which is needed to the county auditor, provided such certificate is made on or before the time of the February semi-annual distribution and to be in addition to the certificate which is made for the August distribution.

Holding these views, then, I advise you that the salary of a county superintendent may be raised during the term for which he was employed, and that the county board of education has a right to certify an additional salary for a person who is elected to fill the place of a superintendent who has resigned.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General.

VALENTINE ANTI-TRUST LAW—ATTEMPT OF ASSOCIATION TO COMPEL DEALER TO TAKE ALL MILK OFFERED BY MEMBER AND REFUSE TO TAKE FROM NON-MEMBER MAY BE UNDER.

An attempt on the part of an association of milk producers to compel a milk dealer to accept all milk offered at any time by any member of the association, and to refuse to buy milk from any milk producer not a member of the association, evidences an unlawful combination under the Valentine anti-trust act in such degree as to justify an investigation by a grand jury.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

United States Food Administration, Chief, Law Enforcement Division, Columbus, Ohio.

GENTLEMEN:—In your letter of recent date you have submitted for my consideration a letter received from the secretary of the Federal Milk commission for Ohio and invite my opinion as to whether or not the practice dscribed by him constitutes a violation of the Ohio statutes.

The letter referred to states the following facts and question:

> "It has been stated to the Federal Milk commission for Ohio that certain producers in Seneca county have incorporated under the name of the Seneca County Dairy association. This corporation buys milk from its members as individuals and possibly buys also from others, though I am not certain of this. The association then resells the milk to milk dealers. It was stated by a Tiffin dealer that the association had endeavored to compel him to accept all milk offered at any time by any member of the association and to refuse to buy milk from any milk producer not a member of the association. No evidence of this appears in writing, but presumably the dealer would be willing to testify to the facts.
> Query: Do the facts as stated afford an apparent ground for investigation by the county prosecutor for a violation of the Valentine law?"

These facts invoke consideration of the following sections of the General Code of Ohio, constituting what is popularly known as the "Valentine Anti-Trust Law."

> Section 6391.—"A trust is a combination of capital, skill or acts by two or more persons, firms, partnerships, corporations or associations of persons, for any or all of the following purposes:
> 1. To create or carry out restrictions in trade or commerce.
> 2. To limit or reduce the production or increase, or reduce the price of merchandise or a commodity.
> 3. To prevent competition in manufacturing, making, transportation, sale or purchase of merchandise, produce or a commodity.
> 4. To fix at a standard or figure, whereby its price to the public or consumer is in any manner controlled or established, an article or commodity of merchandise, produce of commerce intended for sale, barter, use or consumption in this state.
> 5. To make, enter into, execute or carry out contracts, obligations or agreements of any kind or description, by which they bind or have bound themselves not to sell, dispose of or transport an article or commodity, or an article of trade, use, merchandise, commerce or consumption below a common standard figure or fixed value, or by which they agree in any manner to keep the price of such article, commodity or transportation at a fixed or graduated figure, or by which they shall in any manner establish or settle the price of an article, commodity or transportation between them or themselves and others, so as directly or indirectly to preclude a free and unrestricted competition among themselves, purchasers or consumers in the sale or transportation of such article or commodity, or by which they agree to pool, combine or directly or indirectly unite any interests which they have connected with the sale or transportation of such article or commodity, that its price might in any manner be affected. Such trust as is defined herein is unlawful, against public policy and void."

Section 6396.—"A violation of any or all of the provisions of this chapter is a conspiracy against trade, and a person engaged in such conspiracy or taking part therein, or aiding or advising in its commission, or, as principal, manager, director, agent, servant or employer, or in any other capacity, knowingly carrying out any of the stipulations, purposes, prices or rates, or furnishing any information to assist in carrying out such purposes, or orders thereunder, or in pursuance thereof, or in any manner violating a provision of this chapter, shall be fined not less than fifty dollars nor more than five thousand dollars or imprisoned not less than six months nor more than one year, or both. Provided, however, that when the violation of the provisions of this chapter consists of a combination to control the price or supply, or to prevent competition in the sale of bread, butter, eggs, flour, meat or vegetables or any one of said articles, the person or persons thus engaged shall upon conviction thereof be fined in any sum not less than five hundred dollars and be imprisoned in the penitentiary not less than one nor more than five years. Each day's violation of any of the provisions of this chapter shall constitute a separate offense."

Unquestionably the act of attempting to coerce milk dealers to deal only with the members of the association evidences the specific intent required by these statutes in two particulars:

(1) It manifests a purpose to create and carry out a restriction in trade or commerce, in that it aims at restricting the milk dealers in their purchases of milk from producers.

(2) It shows a purpose to prevent competition in the purchase of produce, in that it aims to secure the members of the association against the competition of non-members in their dealings with the milk dealers.

I am not able to see that any of the other specific intents mentioned in the statutes is shown by the facts as submitted.

The act denounced by the statute is that of combination, among other things, of acts. There is clearly present here a combination—an acting in concert—on the part of members of the dairy association. The only question is as to whether this combination in its relation to the intent manifested by the specific thing done is the kind of combination denounced by the statutes. To illustrate how the problem arises let it be said that it must be admitted that if the dealer who was approached by the association had agreed with the members of the association to do the things demanded of him by them, the result would clearly have been such a "trust" as is prohibited by the statute. This would be true because both parties whose cooperation might be necessary to bring about the illegal restrictions or prevention of competition would have been thereby participants. It appears, however, that as a matter of fact the effort to obtain such effective cooperation was frustrated by the refusal of the milk dealer who was approached to limit his dealings to members of the association. Does this fact change the result? In other words, is it necessary in order to constitute the kind of "combination" to which Section 6391 G. C. refers that both the purchaser and the seller shall enter it?

I am clearly of the opinion that this is not the case and the statutes have been violated in the transaction described by the secretary of the milk commission. It is well known that the anti-trust laws were aimed not at combinations of buyers and sellers, but were in point of fact primarily directed against combinations among those interested in the same line of business. To be sure, such combinations can effectively do some of the other things denounced by Section 6391, such as the reduction of production, the increase of price, the prevention of competition in manufacturing, making and selling articles, the fixing of standard prices, etc. Hence, it might be argued—and this gives rise to the only doubt in the case—that the statute was intended to apply only to cases in which the restrictions or the preventions of competition aimed at could be accomplished by a combination and agreement among members of the same class.

In the case before us the members of the dairy association have agreed to restrict their several activities in selling milk, in that they have (presumably) agreed to market their entire product through the association. This of itself, and in the absence of proof of a concerted purpose to fix the price of a product or to limit the supply, would not be wrongful. The specific intent manifested by the attempt to coerce the dealer, then, does not effect or tend to establish illegal restrictions among the members of the association themselves, but is directed toward the curtailment of the activities of others who are not members of the combination. This aim can be accomplished only through coercion or persuasion exerted upon the dealers. That is to say, the only respect in which, so far as the facts submitted to me show, the association has manifested a purpose to restrict competition illegally is by acting in a concerted manner to destroy at least one market which its competitors might otherwise have.

Now it is clear, of course, that if any one of the members of the association should attempt to persuade or coerce a milk dealer to make such an agreement with him as is described it would probably not amount to a violation of the anti-trust act. But in this case we have a concerted effort participated in by many. It is very clear that the anti-trust act embodies principles closely analogous to, if not identical with, those by which the common law offense of conspiracy is governed. It is well settled that a conspiracy is a combination of two or more to do an act lawful in itself in an unlawful manner. A combination is of the essence of the offense.

It is also perfectly clear that a conspiracy is in the nature of an attempt, i. e., an incomplete act, in the sense that the intention harbored by the conspirators need not be achieved in order to complete the offense. Thus, if A, B and C confederate to murder D, and actually kill him, the offense is not conspiracy of course, but murder; but if they stop short of killing D and yet go far enough in their preparations to constitute a conspiracy they will have committed that offense, though the steps taken might fall short in legal effect of what would constitute an attempt on the part of a single person to murder D.

Upon this reasoning, then, I arrive at the conclusion which I have expressed, which is, again, that enough is disclosed by the statement of facts submitted to me to show an illegal combination (or a conspiracy), in that the end aimed at, i. e., the stifling of competition on the part of non-members, is one of the purposes denounced by the statute; and also because if this were not so the manner in which the end aimed at was sought to be accomplished is, I gather from the letter, illegal. The language employed by the secretary of the milk commission is that "the association had endeavored to compel him (the dealer) to" do certain things. From this I infer that coercion was the method employed. We have, therefore, perfect evidence of a combination of some character; of a common intent to arrive at a result which is at the very least of dubious legality; and of a common intent to employ wrongful means in arriving at that result; though the result itself is not achieved and no success has—so far as the letter discloses—attended the efforts of the association in this particular, it is a complete conspiracy because no conspiracy needs to be successful in order to be legally complete.

Put very shortly, the enterprise would seem to be an effort to put non-members out of business in the market most convenient for the sale of their product by coercing dealers. In point of fact an enterprise which could only be successfully undertaken in combination—that is, by concert of several. Upon principle, then, I am satisfied that the facts stated by the secretary, though meager, would warrant an investigation by the proper authorities with a view to the enforcement of the criminal law applicable to the case.

On the various points involved in the reasoning in which I have indulged, the following authorities are applicable:

A mere selling agency or pool is not a monopoly, and neither the common law nor the anti-trust statutes apply to such.

> Reeves vs. Decorah Farmers Co-operative society, 44 L. R. A., n. s., 1104. Cummings vs. Union Blue Stone Co., 164 N. Y., 401.

So that the mere agreement of the members of the association as members to sell to the association, with a view to making it a common agent for the re-sale of the product to dealers, could hardly be made the predicate of a prosecution if unattended by price-fixing, etc.

Coercion as a means to an end to be reached by concerted action is of itself sufficient to establish a conspiracy.

> Reeves vs. Decorah Farmers Co-operative society, supra. Martell vs. White, 185 Mass. 265; 64 L. R. A. 260.

If the coercion implied though not described in the letter of the secretary was a threat on the part of the association not to sell any milk to the dealer unless he would take under the conditions dictated by it, the case is clear upon the authority of Eastern States Retail Lumber Dealers' Association vs. United States, 234 U. S. 600. In that case an organization of retail lumber dealers had issued and distributed among its members a document known as an "official report" in which were enumerated the names of wholesale dealers and companies selling directly to consumers. This "unfair list" was intended to invite a boycott of such wholesale dealers on the part of members of the association. Upon the authority of the Danbury Hatters case (Lowe vs. Lawler, 208 U. S. 274) and Gompers vs. Buck's Stove and Range Co., 221 U. S. 418, the supreme court of the United States in that case, per Mr. Justice Day, reached the conclusion that the mere issuance of the report without any proof of the formal agreement to boycott was sufficient evidence of a conspiracy in violation of the Sherman anti-trust act. The concluding paragraphs of his opinion are as follows, being partly quoted from the previous opinion of Mr. Justice Lurton in Grenada Lumber Co. vs. Mississippi, 217 U. S. 433:

"'* * * An act harmless when done by one may become a public wrong when done by many acting in concert, for it then takes on the form of a conspiracy, and may be prohibited or punished, if the result be hurtful to the public or to the individual against whom the concerted action is directed.'"

"When the retailer goes beyond his personal right, and, conspiring and combining with others of like purpose, seeks to obstruct the free course of interstate trade and commerce and to unduly suppress competition by placing obnoxious wholesale dealers under the coercive influence of a condemnatory report circulated among others, actual or possible customers of the offenders, he exceeds his lawful rights, * * *."

None of these cases is strictly in point. It must be admitted that the facts stated come barely within the principles which govern the offense, even giving to them such an interpretation as that which I have imagined. Fuller investigation might show that the transaction was entirely innocent. However, your question is as to whether or not the information which has come to you would warrant an investigation by the prosecuting attorney. My conclusion is that it would.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

MEMBER OF COUNTY BOARD OF EDUCATION AND COUNTY SUPERINTENDENT INCOMPATIBLE.

A member of a county board of education is not eligible to the office of county superintendent of schools, on the ground of public policy.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Posecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your communication requesting my opinion on the following questions:

"A member of the county board of education is a candidate for the office of county superintendent. He has asked me two questions:

1. Is a member of the county board of education eligible to the office of county superintendent?

2. Can a member of the county board of education vote for himself for the office of county superintendent?"

You state you have already advised the county board of education that a member of said board could not vote for himself as county superintendent of schools, which I think is entirely correct. This disposes of your second question.

As to your first question will say there is nothing in the law which would prevent a member of the board of education from being elected to the office of county superintendent of schools, but it is my opinion that it would be against public policy to do so. In the election of a county superintendent, each member of the board, and the board as a whole, is entitled to the advice and counsel of every other member thereof and this could not be given if one member of the board should be a candidate for county superintendent. Under such circumstances he could not give his advice and counsel in reference to the matter.

One of the most important duties which devolve upon the board of education is the selection of some one to act as county superintendent. The relationship between the members of a board of education, or of any other such body, is such that it seems to me it would be against public policy to hold that the electing body could select one of their own number to fill any office which they under the law are entitled to fill.

In the second edition of the American and English Encyclopedia, Volume XXIII, page 348, the following principle is laid down:

> "On the ground of public policy it has been held that the person or a member of the collective body invested with the appointing power can not be appointed."

In Kinyon vs. Duchene, 21 Mich. 498, the court lays down the following principle in the syllabus:

> "The boards of supervisors have no power to select from their own members drain commissioners which they are authorized to appoint."

In the opinion the court uses the following language:

> "At the time of their appointment as such commissioners, they were all of them members of the board of supervisors which made the appointment. Whether they voted for their own appointment does not affirmatively appear, but they had as much right to do so as the others had to vote for them."

I am of the opinion that the principles above laid down are correct and therefore advise you that a member of the county board of education is not eligible to the office of county superintendent of schools.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON—COUNTY OFFICES MAY CLOSE.

County offices may close on Saturday afternoon.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

HON. ADDISON P. MINSHALL, Prosecuting Attorney, Chillicothe, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 13, as follows:

> "The county officials of Ross county are considering the advisability of closing county offices at twelve o'clock noon, on each Saturday. Section 5978 of the General Code of Ohio, as you know, provides that each Saturday afternoon shall be a one-half legal holiday for all purposes and they have asked me to request an opinion from you as to whether or not it would be proper to close the county offices on Saturday afternoon."

Section 5978 G. C. reads:

"Every Saturday afternoon of each year shall be a one-half legal holiday for all purposes, beginning at twelve o'clock noon and ending at twelve o'clock midnight. Nothing, however, in this section or any other, or any decision of any court, shall in any manner affect the validity of or render void or voidable any check, bill of exchange, order, promissory note, due bill, mortgage or other writing obligatory made, signed, negotiated, transferred, assigned or paid by any person, persons, corporation or bank upon said half holiday, or any other transaction had thereon."

Inasmuch as Saturday is made by this section a half holiday, I can see no reason why the county offices may not be closed on Saturday afternoon, as suggested.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

DISTRICT SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS ENTITLED TO YEARLY SALARY THOUGH ENLISTS IN JULY.

A district superintendent of schools is entitled to the salary fixed for the year, even though he enlists in the navy at the beginning of July of said year, or engages in some other line of business for the months during which the schools are not in session.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

HON. HENRY W. CHERRINGTON, Posecuting Attorney, Gallipolis, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of December 27, 1918, which reads as follows:

"A district superintendent of rural schools enlisted in the United States navy in July after the county schools had been dismissed for the school year. The distrtict superintendent receives an annual salary, which is paid monthly during each month. The county auditor refused to pay the district superintendent in question any salary for the months of July and August, on the ground that the superintendent was not in Gallia county to perform the duties of his office. The county superintendent claims to have instructions from the state superintendent that the salary should be paid. The reason given is that the work had all been performed before his enlistment in the naval service. Please advise me whether or not the full year's salary should be paid."

I am of the opinion that the said district superintendent of schools is entitled to the full year's salary which his contract calls for.

Section 4741, 4742 and 4743 G. C. provide in part, as follows:

> Section 4741.—"The first election of any district superintendent shall be for a term not longer than one year, thereafter he may be elected in the same district for a period not to exceed three years." * * *.
> Section 4742.—"Not less than sixty days before the expiration of the term of any district superintendent, the presidents of the boards of education within such supervision district, or in supervision districts which contain three or less village or rural districts, the boards of education of such districts shall meet and elect his successor." * * *.
> Section 4743.—"The compensation of the district superintendent shall be fixed at the same time that the appointment is made and by the same authority which appoints him; such compensation shall be paid out of the county board of education fund on vouchers signed by the president of the county board. The salary of any district superintendent shall in no case be less than one thousand dollars per annum." * * *.

Under the provisions of law, as above set out, the compensation of the district superintendent was fixed at a yearly salary, said salary to be payable monthly. There is nothing in the law, nor under the contract of employment, which provides that the district superintendent must maintain an actual residence in his district during the year; nor that he shall devote his entire time during the whole year to the duties of his position; nor that he should hold no other position; nor that any part of his salary should be deducted for so doing. In this it must be remembered that there is no question raised that he did not perform all of the duties devolving upon him during the time the school was in session.

It is true that the school year runs from the first day of September of each year to the 31st day of August of the succeeding year. Section 7689 G. C. reads as follows:

> Section 7689.—"The school year shall begin on the first day of September of each year, and close on the thirty-first day of August of the succeeding year. A school week shall consist of five days and a school month of four school weeks.

But Section 7644 G. C. reads as follows:

> "Each board of education shall establish a sufficient number of elementary schools to provide for the free education of the youth of school age within the district under its control, at such places as will be most convenient for the attendance of the largest number thereof. Every elementary day school so established shall continue not less than thirty-two nor more than forty weeks in each school year. All the elementary schools within the same school district shall be so continued."

Thus we see that the schools of any county are in session for only a part of the school year.

The duties of the district superintendent are set out in Sections 7706, 7706-1 and 7706-2 G. C., which read as follows:

> Section 7706.—"The district superintendent shall visit the schools under his charge, direct and assist teachers in the performance of their duties, classify and control the promotion of pupils, and shall spend not less than three-fourths of his working time in actual class room supervision. He shall report to the county superintendent annually, and oftener if required, as to all matters under his supervision. He shall be the chief executive officer of all boards of education within his district and shall attend any and all meetings. He may take part in their deliberations, but shall not vote. Such time as is not spent in actual supervision shall be used for organization and administrative purposes and in the instruction of teachers. At the request of the county board of education he shall teach in teachers' training courses which may be organized in the county school district."

Section 7706-1.—"The district superintendent shall, as often as advisable, assemble the teachers of his district for the purpose of conference on the course of study, discipline, school management and other school work and for the promotion of the general good of all the schools in the district. The county superintendent shall cooperate with the different district superintendents in holding such teachers' meetings and shall attend as many of them as his other duties will permit."

Section 7706-2.—"It shall be the duty of the district superintendent to recommend to the village and rural boards of education within such district, such text books and courses of study as are most suitable for adoption."

From a careful perusal of said sections, it is quite clear that the great bulk of the duties of a district superintendent must be performed during the time the schools are in session. The duties which might run through the months in which the schools are not in session are almost negligible. I want to call particular attention to this language found in Section 7706 G. C., "and shall spend not less than three-fourths of his working time in actual class room supervision."

This would seem to indicate that the working time of the district superintendent is considered as the time during which the schools are in session.

Further, supposing a district superintendent should during July and August engage in some other line of work—for example, work on a farm, or in a factory; become a book agent, as many do, or engage in institute work, as some do. It would hardly be held that he would not be entitled to receive his salary fixed for the year merely because he would engage in work of this kind. The law makes no such provision. And unless the contract of employment should clearly indicate that the district superintendent must not engage during the entire school year in any other kind of employment, I am of the opinion that he would not be prevented from so doing. Neither in the case submitted by you do I think the district superintendent would be deprived of the full salary fixed by the authorities employing him merely from the fact that he enlisted in the United States navy and served therein during July and August. If he had resigned his position as district superintendent the end of June, a different conclusion might be reached, but he did not resign, and as I said before, there is nothing in the law, nor in the contract, which would prevent his engaging in a different line of work for the two months, or three months that the schools of the district might not be in session.

Very truly,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

ROADS AND HIGHWAYS—IF CONTRACT PROVIDES FOR TRUCKS OF NOT LESS THAN FIVE TONS CAPACITY, CONTRACTOR NOT ENTITLED TO MORE IF USES LARGER TRUCK.

Where a contract provides that a party is to receive $3.50 per hour for each motor truck used, on condition that the motor trucks shall be not less than 5 tons capacity, he is not entitled to a larger sum than $3.50 per hour, even though he furnishes trucks of a greater capacity than 5 tons.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 10, 1919.

HON. CLINTON COWEN, State Highway Commissioner, Columbus, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your communication of November 19, 1918, which reads as follows:

> "For your information, I beg to quote the following from the journal of the highway advisory board as of November 19, 1918:
> 'Morrow County—Section "F" I. C. H. No. 333—Interpretation of contract by attorney-general requested. Mr. H. W. Curry of the firm of H. W. Curry & Co., agent for the highway department in the completion of Section "F," I. C. H., No. 333, and his attorney, Mr. H. S. Atkinson, was presented, to further his request that the highway department allow payment to H. W. Curry & Co., at the rate of $4.90 per hour for the use of 7 ton trucks used in moving material on the above section. Article VI of agreement dated May 15, 1917, between the state of Ohio and H. W. Curry & Co., was read, this article being as follows:
> 'Sixth—The party of the first part agrees to pay the party of the second part, $3.50 per hour rental for every hour each motor truck is actually in use transporting materials for the road. Said motor trucks to be not less than 5 tons capacity. It is further agreed that in consideration of the foregoing rental of $3.50 per hour for each motor truck the party of the second part shall bear the entire cost of operating said motor trucks, including driver, gasoline, oil, renewals, depreciation and all other expense incident thereto, and further will maintain said motor trucks in good working condition for use at all times.'
> Assistant to Chief Engineer Darnell stated that prior to the use of 7 ton trucks on the above work of H. W. Curry & Co., trucks of less capacity than 5 tons had been used on the work and that rental for the use of these trucks had been paid on the basis of 70 cents per ton capacity.
> The claim of H. W. Curry & Co. is that since deductions were made on a pro rata basis for trucks having less than 5 ton capacity, additional allowance should be made on a similar basis for trucks having more than 7 ton capacity.
> The secretary was authorized to request the opinion of Attorney-General McGhee in the matter, and to transmit to the attorney-general copy of the claim of H. W. Curry & Co., as set forth by their attorney, H. S. Atkinson in his letter of September 30."

The part of the contract between the state highway commissioner and the firm of H. W. Curry & Co. which must be construed in order to answer your question is that which you have quoted in your communication. It is to be noted in the matter quoted that the state highway commissioner agrees to pay $3.50 per hour rental for every hour that a motor truck is actually used in transporting materials for the road; that is, the payment to be made is so much per hour per truck used in the transporting of materials. The provision then is further made that the motor trucks are not to be less than 5 tons capacity. It will be seen there is no provision made as to the maximum capacity of the trucks to be used by Mr. Curry. The only provision is that the trucks used are not to be of a less capacity than 5 tons and for such trucks he was to receive a credit of $3.50 per hour for each motor truck Mr. Curry should furnish. From this provision it is esident that Mr Curry would not be entitled to anything other than the contract price, even though he should furnish trucks of a greater capacity than five tons, and I advise you that you would not be warranted under the contract to pay Mr. Curry at a rate exceeding said sum set out in the contract.

There is some question as to whether there was a supplemental agreement that Mr. Curry should receive, for trucks of a greater capacity than 5 tons, at the rate of 70 cents per ton per hour, or, in other words, $4.90 per hour for 7 ton trucks. The parties interested not definitely agreeing as to this point, I am driven to render an opinion based strictly upon the language of the original contract itself, and in doing this can arrive at no other conclusion than as hereinabove set out.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

COUNTY AUDITOR—APPOINTMENT DEPUTY SEALER WEIGHTS AND MEASURES MANDATORY.

Section 2622 G. C. providing for the appointment of a deputy sealer of weights and measures, is mandatory and the county auditor may not refuse to make such appointment.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1919.

HON. P. A. SAYLOR, Prosecuting Attorney, Eaton, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 17, 1918, requesting my opinion as follows:

> "I write you with reference to the construction of 2622 of the General Code of Ohio, relative to the appointment of a deputy sealer of weights and measures. Is it compulsory, under this law, or is it optional with the county auditor, to make the appointment? In other words, can the county auditor himself, with the assistance that he has in his office, look after the duties imposed upon the sealer of weights and measures, without making this appointment.
> This county is a small county, has but five or six incorporated towns within the borders of the county, and all of them are villages, and it may be that it would be advisable from a business standpoint, to dispense with the appointment of a deputy sealer of weights and measures and have the work done from the auditor's office."

Section 2622 G. C. reads:

"Each county sealer of weights and measures shall appoint by writing under his hand and seal, a deputy who shall compare weights and measures wherever the same are used or maintained for use within his county, or which are brought to the office of the county sealer for that purpose, with the copies of the original standards in the possession of the county sealer, who shall receive a salary fixed by the county commissioners, to be paid by the county, which salary shall be instead of all fees or charges otherwise allowed by law. Such deputy shall also be employed by the county sealer to assist in the prosecution of all violations of laws relating to weights and measures."

In an opinion by this department rendered to Hon. George F. Crawford, under date of February 24, 1917, the following statement is found relative to the provisions of Section 2622:

"The language of Section 2622 G. C. is certain and specific in relation to the appointment of the deputy sealer; the provision, I think, in relation thereto, is mandatory and very good reasons are apparent why this should be so because the duties of the sealer in comparing weights and measures, wherever the same are used or kept for use, makes it necessary for the person performing those duties to go about the county where such weights and measures are so kept and so used and necessarily makes it impossible on account of the other duties of his office for the county auditor to perform that portion of the duties of the office of county sealer."

Following this view of the statute, I advise you that Section 2622 is mandatory and that the appointment of a deputy sealer may not be dispensed with.

Very truly yours,
JOSEPH MCGHEE,
Attorney-General.

FEES—ALLOWANCE UNDER 3019 G. C. MERELY PREVENTS ALLOWANCE IN EXCESS OF $100.00 IN ANY ONE YEAR.

Section 3019 G. C. does not aim to prohibit the allowance or payment of more than $100.00 during any one year if the excess has been earned by the officer in some previous year or years, during which no allowance, or one below the statutory limit, was made, but merely prevents an officer from being allowed more than $100.00 for services during any one year.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 11, 1919.

HON. CLARE CALDWELL, Prosecuting Attorney Warren, Ohio.

DEAR SIR:—I have your letter of December 18, 1918, as follows:

"In General Code, Section 3019, provision is made for an allowance in lieu of fees not in excess of $100.00 in any year. Quoting the last sentence, the section reads:

'Nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed to an officer exceed $100.00.'

In interpreting this section is one bound to the year when the fees are created, or to the year when the allowance is asked? In the case which I have in mind the fees were earned in the year 1916. Could an allowance be made at this time, not to exceed $100.00, for the year 1916, when no allowance was asked for during the year 1916?"

Section 3019 G. C. reads:

"In felonies wherein the state fails, and in misdemeanors wherein the defendant proves insolvent, the county commissioners, at any regular session, may make an allowance to any such officers in place of fees, but in any year the aggregate allowances to such officer shall not exceed the fees legally taxed to him in such causes, nor in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed one hundred dollars."

You will note that this section provides that the aggregate allowances to the different officers shall not exceed the fees taxed to him in such costs or in any year shall the aggregate amount allowed an officer exceed $100.00.

To my mind this statute does not aim to prohibit the allowance or payment of more than $100.00 during any one year if the excess has been earned by the officer in some previous year or years, during which no allowance, or one below the statutory limit, was made. The statute, I think, merely prevents an officer from being allowed more than $100.00 for his services during any one year, and whether or not he is paid $200.00, for instance, at one time for two years' services or $100.00 each year for two years, is immaterial. The important thing is that the rate of payment shall not exceed $100.00 per year.

It is therefore my opinion that allowance can be made in the case you refer to at this time for the year 1916.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH MCGHEE,

Attorney-General
