ATTORNEY GENERAL'S REPORT.

COLUMBUS, OHIO, January 1st, 1908.

HON. ANDREW L. HARRIS, Governor of Ohio:

SIR:—I submit herewith the annual report of the Attorney General for the calendar year 1907.

This report will contain:

First: A review of the more important work of the department for the past year, with recommendations suggested by experience in the conduct of such work.

Second: A list of all actions and prosecutions brought, pending or disposed of during the year.

Third: A statement of all collections and disbursements for the year; and Fourth: All official opinions rendered during the year.

I.

IMPORTANT WORK OF THE YEAR.

The growth of business in the law department of the state seems, after several years' experience, to have little or no relation to those causes or conditions which might well be supposed to most appreciably affect it.

Although there was no session of the general assembly during the year 1907, the increase of routine work and especially the unusual amount of pending litigation more than made up for the absence of new enactments to be reviewed and construed.

The number of opinions was about the same as in 1906. They cover every variety of questions and were rendered to all branches of the executive department, to the state institutions and to all the boards and officers of the state government entitled to the advice of the Attorney General. In addition to these there are eighty-eight prosecuting attorneys who are advised directly by this office as well as the solicitors of the seven hundred municipalities who are advised indirectly through the state bureau of inspection and supervision of public offices.

During the year there were pending or disposed of, in the various courts of the state nearly seven hundred cases in which this office appeared.

Perhaps the most important litigation of the year was the controversy between the coal carrying roads of Ohio and the shippers, which resulted in an order by the Railroad Commission of this state requiring that the railroads distributing fuel cars to coal mines in Ohio should count against the mines the so-called "foreign railway fuel cars." The Railroad Commission ultimately made a complaint to the Interstate Commerce Commission and the contention of the state of Ohio was there sustained. The result of this decision is of far reaching consequence and benefit to the shippers all over the country, for it establishes two important principles; first, that a railroad company using its own cars in carrying coal for its own consumption must count such cars in determining the number to be allotted to the mines along the line of its road; and second, that where a shipper of any commodity owns his own cars these also shall be counted against him in the distribution of his share of the railroad's equipment. A prolific source of favoritism and discrimination was stopped by this proceeding, and recently the Interstate Commerce Commission reaffirmed the doctrine laid down in the Ohio case and based upon it a number of other decisions.

Of equal, if not greater, importance, were a number of cases involving the status and obligations of foreign and domestic corporations with respect to the tax laws. One of these, that of the State v. The Covington & Cincinnati Bridge Company, determined in the lower courts a point involving a number of similar corporations to the effect that they are domestic companies in this state and liable to be taxed as such, as well as the further point that the findings heretofore made by the Secretary of State, upon which payments were made, did not bind the state.

In my last report I referred to the case of Bernard Wrede v. Charles C. Richardson, Auditor of Hamilton County, which was a suit brought in the superior court of Cincinnati for the avowed purpose of testing the validity of the Aikin law. The law was upheld in the superior court and the plaintiff prosecuted error to the supreme court which, in November, 1907, affirmed the judgment below. (77 O. S. 182.) The importance of this decision can be appreciated when it is understood that had the result been different, not only the particular act involved in the case, but almost all of the other acts passed by the first session of the 77th General Assembly would have been annulled. An extraordinary session would have been necessary and great confusion and expense would have resulted.

Other cases of importance were those of the State against A. Booth & Company, the so-called "fish trust," resulting in a judgment of ouster on the ground that the company could not exercise a multiplicity of powers in this state; and a judgment of like import against the wholesale plumbers' association.

A number of cases winding up insolvent savings and loan companies were prosecuted to conclusion, and the usual amount of litigation was conducted on behalf of the dairy and food department, fish and game commission, the board of public works in its management of the canals, the commissioner of labor statistics and others.

• It was expected when the last annual report was submitted that at this time recommendations would be made for improvements in the department work suggested by experience. The time at which this report is presented, however, as well as the unusual pressure of pending business, make it necessary to defer any detailed recommendations. It may be well, however, to again repeat what has been said in every annual report from this office during the present incumbency, to-wit, that the continuance of the innumerable ex-officio boards of which the Attorney General is a member is not only detrimental to the state but an interference with the work of this office. As heretofore pointed out, the Attorney General is now a member of fifteen or twenty boards, most of them having to do with the taxing machinery of the state. His time is so largely occupied in the performance of these duties, that neither the work of these boards nor the purely professional business he has to conduct is, or can be, as well done as it would be if his employment were not thus divided. Most of these ex-officio boards ought to be abolished. The taxing machinery of the state ought to be put in one commission.

It may be well also to repeat that experience in this office has shown the need of limiting the purposes for which corporations may be organized. With the co-operation of the Secretary of State the rule has been strictly adhered to, which was laid down by the supreme court in the case of State ex rel. v. Taylor, 55 O. S. 61, to-wit, that corporations may not exercise two or more different or unrelated powers. But another source of wrong which cannot be met without a reversal of legislative policy is the growing tendency to increase the powers of corporations to own and manage other corporations. At common law one corporation has no right either to own its own stock or that of any other corporation, nor has it the right to deal in any way in the property of other corporations. The chief source of our troubles with respect to combinations in restraint of trade comes from the liberal charters of New Jersey, which state permits corporations to own the stock of other corporations of any and every character. But even in Ohio, under our own laws, passed generally by recent sessions of the legislature, corporations may buy the property of other companies under certain restrictions and may buy the stock of kindred but non-competing corporations; while electric light, gas, coke and water companies may consolidate; gas companies and electric light companies may manufacture and supply both gas and electricity; electric street railway companies may consolidate in the same way as steam railway companies; and street railway companies may buy or lease the property of gas and electric companies and go into the gas and electric business.

Some of these things ought to be permitted since they are not harmful; but many of the powers thus conferred are in plain derogation of the public interest. The state of Ohio ought to return to the common law doctrine, that corporations cannot own or hold the stock of other corporations whether kindred or non-kindred, whether competing or non-competing, and the purposes generally for which corporations may be organized ought to be strictly limited. This would not only be beneficial to the people generally but also to the corporations, for it would make their business safer, their powers better known, their regulation simpler and their private affairs less likely to excite public concern.

The hearing by this office growing out of the complaint against the Bell Telephone Company at Marion, Ohio, developed the wholly unsatisfactory condition of the state's relation to this class of public service corporations. They constitute the only class of any importance whose rates are not fixed by law and whose service is subject to no public regulation. The consensus of opinion, not only among telephone users, but among the owners and managers of the companies, is that the subject ought to receive the careful attention of the state, to the end that the business itself may be less precarious and that the public may be better served. A suit is now pending as a result of the Marion inquiry which will determine to some extent the powers of such companies in so far as their business is affected by the anti-trust statutes or the public policy of the state against the consolidation of competing companies.

In the first report issued by this department it was shown that $28,725.00 of delinquent claims were collected under the Willis law; the second report showed $48,295.00 and the third report showed $70,325.00, while the present report will show about $100,000.00. It was predicted at first that these delinquent taxes, which are collected by this office after all other efforts have failed, would ultimately pay the entire cost of maintaining the attorney general's department. They now more than pay the cost of maintaining both the attorney general's department and that of the secretary of state.

Since the submission of the last annual report of this office the compilation of the opinions of the attorneys general from 1864 to 1904 has been completed. They comprise six volumes, including the index, and will be ready for distribution as soon as proper authority for the same is secured.

Respectfully submitted,

WADE H. ELLIS,

Attorney General.
